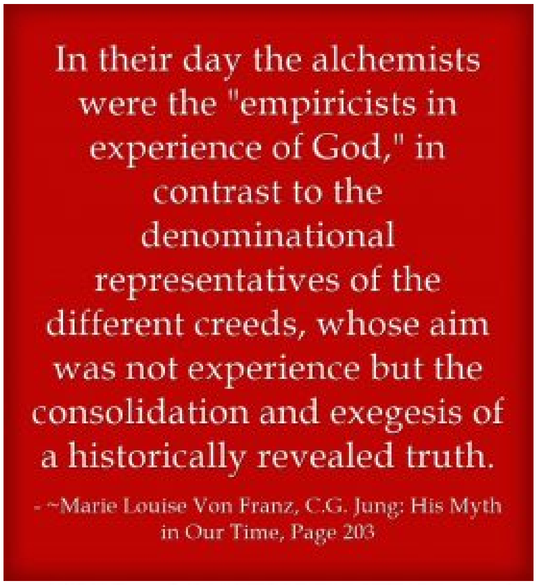
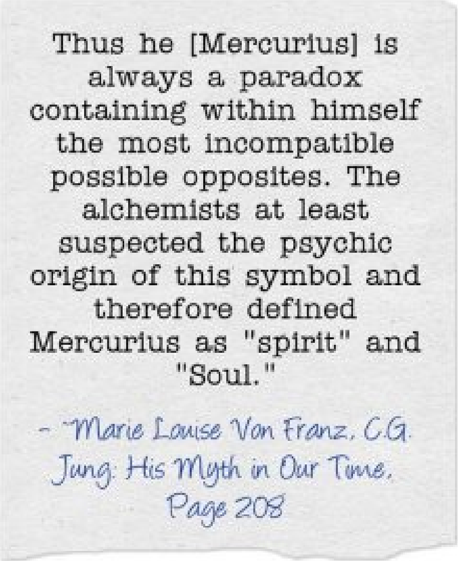
It is one of Jung's greatest achievements, the significance of which has not yet been adequately recognized, that he rediscovered the projected religious myth of alchemy and showed unmistakably where it originated and where it is still at work today: not in matter but in the objective unconscious psyche of Western man.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 201



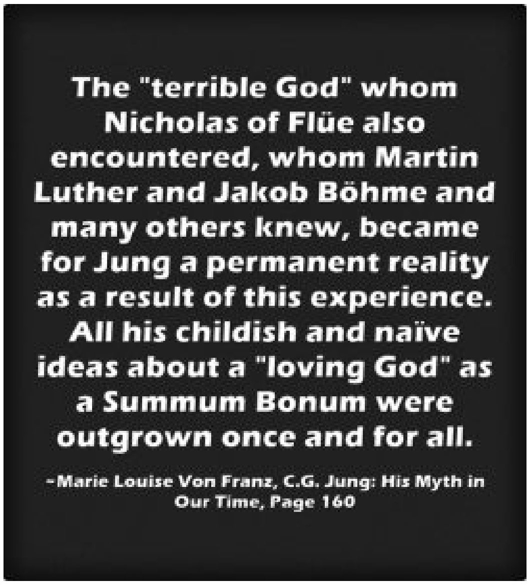
In their day the alchemists were the "empiricists in experience of God," in contrast to the denominational representatives of the different creeds, whose aim was not experience but the consolidation and exegesis of a historically revealed truth.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 203



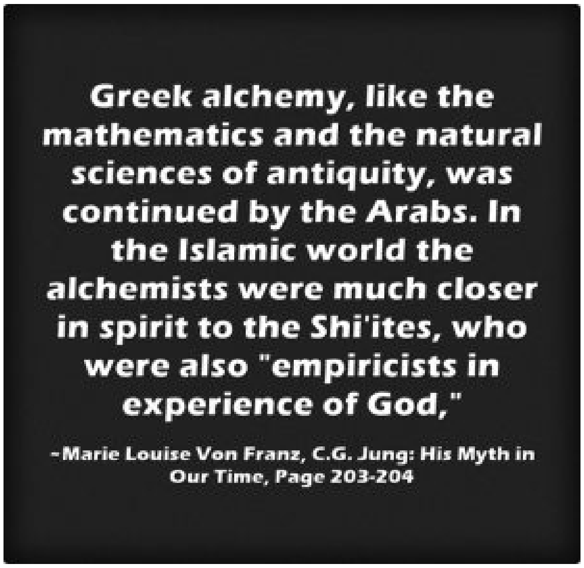
Thus he [Mercurius] is always a paradox containing within himself the most incompatible possible opposites. The alchemists at least suspected the psychic origin of this symbol and therefore defined Mercurius as "spirit" and "Soul."

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 208



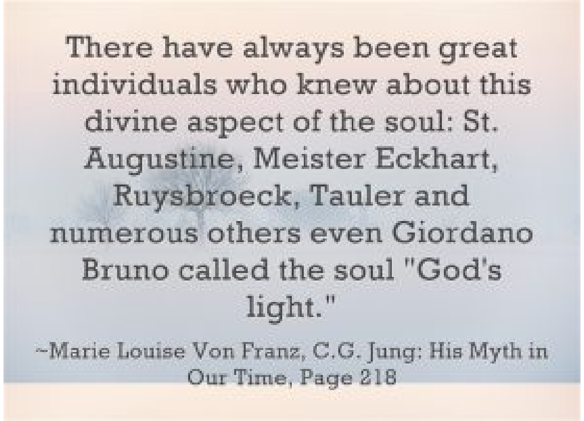
The "terrible God" whom Nicholas of Flüe also encountered, whom Martin Luther and Jakob Böhme and many others knew, became for Jung a permanent reality as a result of this experience. All his childish and naïve ideas about a "loving God" as a Summum Bonum were outgrown once and for all.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 160



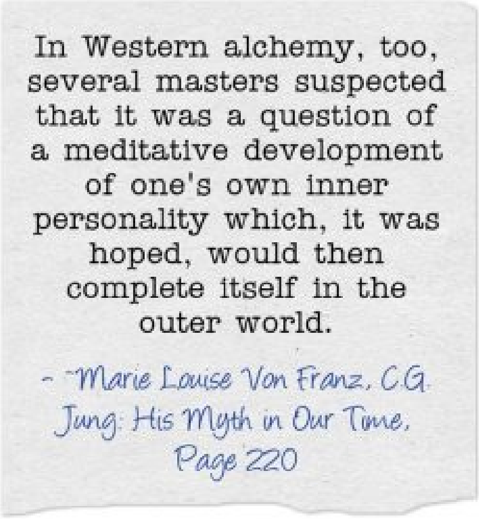
Greek alchemy, like the mathematics and the natural sciences of antiquity, was continued by the Arabs. In the Islamic world the alchemists were much closer in spirit to the Shi'ites, who were also "empiricists in experience of God,"

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 203-204



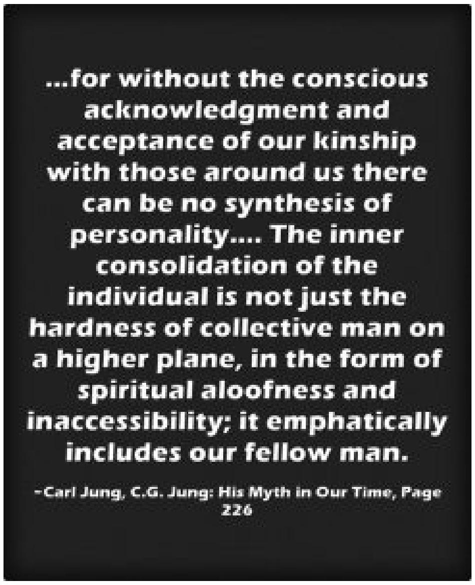
There have always been great individuals who knew about this divine aspect of the soul: St. Augustine, Meister Eckhart, Ruysbroeck, Tauler and numerous others even Giordano Bruno called the soul "God's light."

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 218



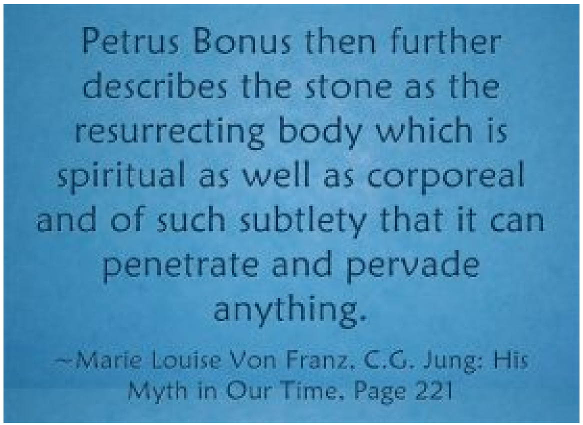
In Western alchemy, too, several masters suspected that it was a question of a meditative development of one's own inner personality which, it was hoped, would then complete itself in the outer world.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 220



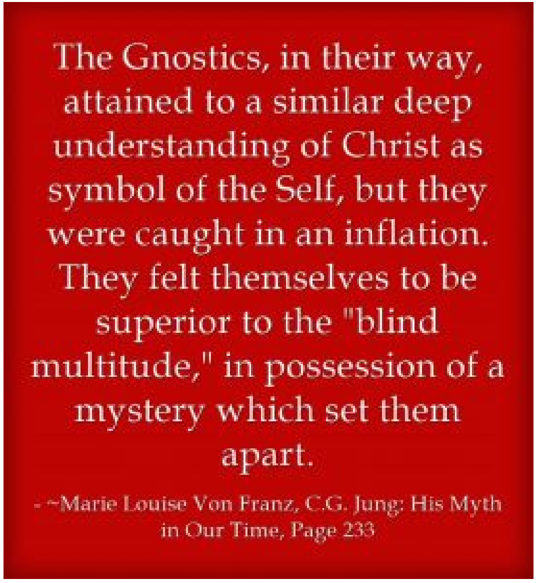
...for without the conscious acknowledgment and acceptance of our kinship with those around us there can be no synthesis of personality.... The inner consolidation of the individual is not just the hardness of collective man on a higher plane, in the form of spiritual aloofness and inaccessibility; it emphatically includes our fellow man.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 226



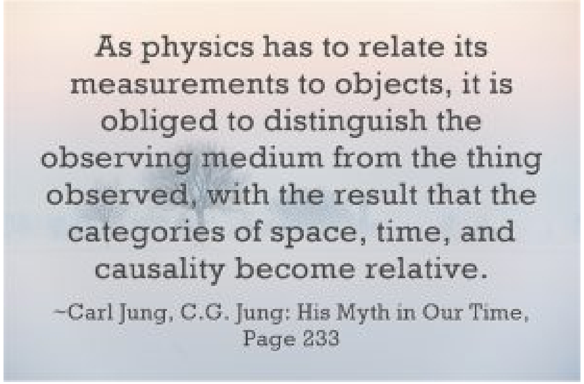
Petrus Bonus then further describes the stone as the resurrecting body which is spiritual as well as corporeal and of such subtlety that it can penetrate and pervade anything.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 221



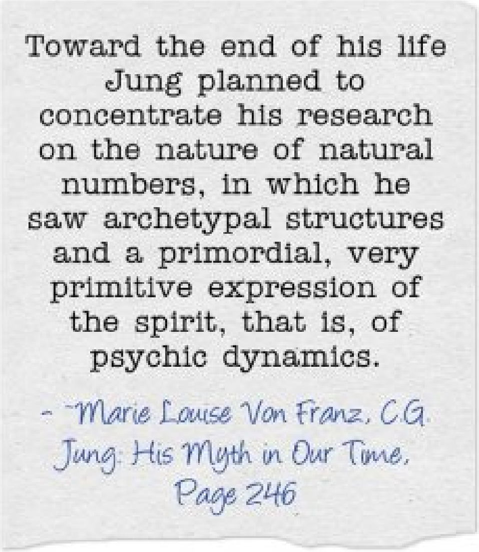
The Gnostics, in their way, attained to a similar deep understanding of Christ as symbol of the Self, but they were caught in an inflation. They felt themselves to be superior to the "blind multitude," in possession of a mystery which set them apart.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 233



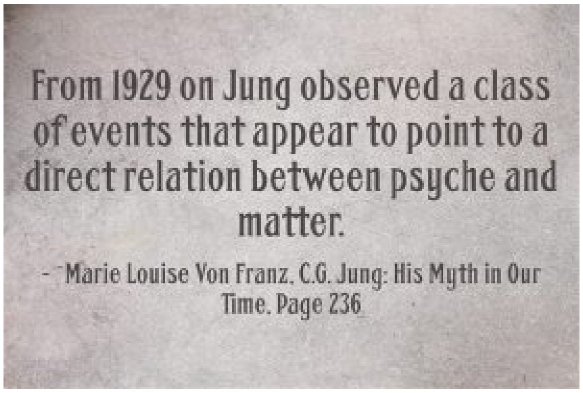
As physics has to relate its measurements to objects, it is obliged to distinguish the observing medium from the thing observed, with the result that the categories of space, time, and causality become relative.

~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 233



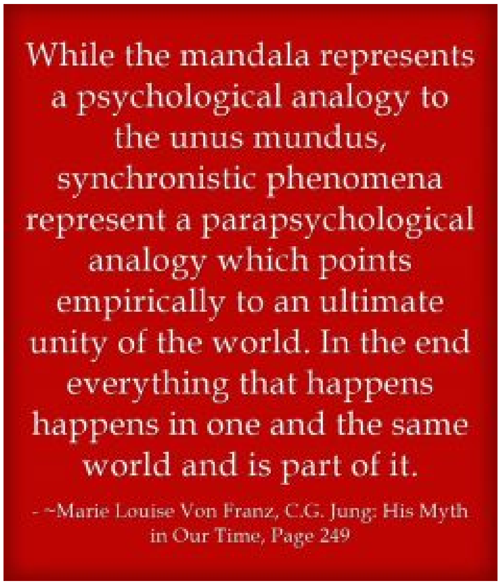
Toward the end of his life Jung planned to concentrate his research on the nature of natural numbers, in which he saw archetypal structures and a primordial, very primitive expression of the spirit, that is, of psychic dynamics.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 246



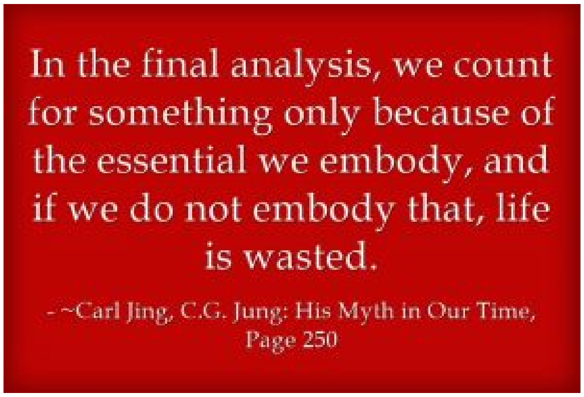
From 1929 on Jung observed a class of events that appear to point to a direct relation between psyche and matter.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 236



While the mandala represents a psychological analogy to the unus mundus, synchronistic phenomena represent a parapsychological analogy which points empirically to an ultimate unity of the world. In the end everything that happens happens in one and the same world and is part of it.

- ~Marie Louise Von Franz, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 249

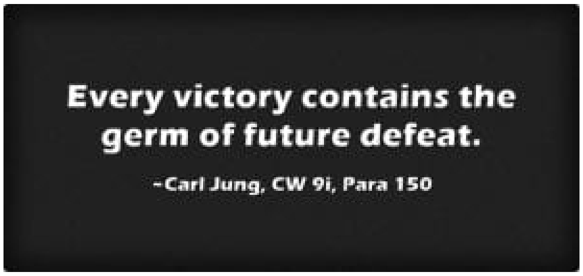


In the final analysis, we count for something only because of the essential we embody, and if we do not embody that, life is wasted.

- ~Carl Jing, C.G. Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 250

1. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Studies-Jungian-Psychology-Analysts/dp/0919123783/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=his+myth+in+our+time&qid=1574974848&sr=8-1`

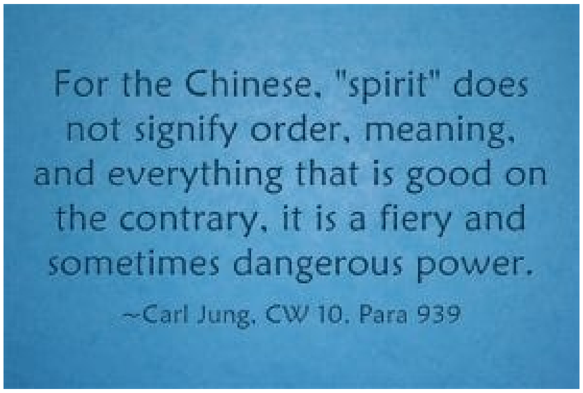
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-11-29 03:38)



Every victory contains the germ of future defeat.

-Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 150

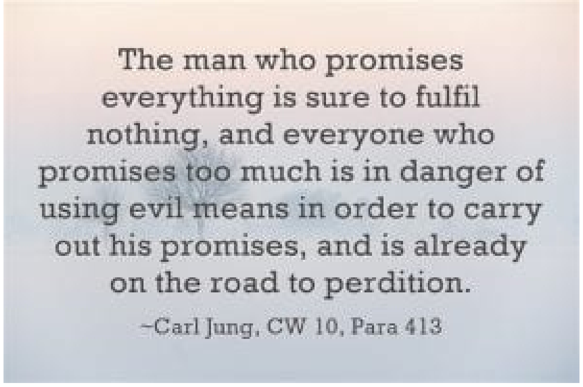
Every victory contains the germ of future defeat. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 150



For the Chinese, "spirit" does not signify order, meaning, and everything that is good on the contrary, it is a fiery and sometimes dangerous power.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 939

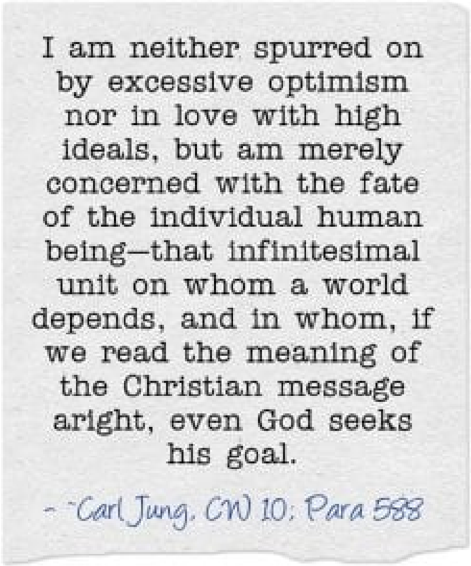
For the Chinese, "spirit" does not signify order, meaning, and everything that is good on the contrary, it is a fiery and sometimes dangerous power. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 939



The man who promises everything is sure to fulfil nothing, and everyone who promises too much is in danger of using evil means in order to carry out his promises, and is already on the road to perdition.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 413

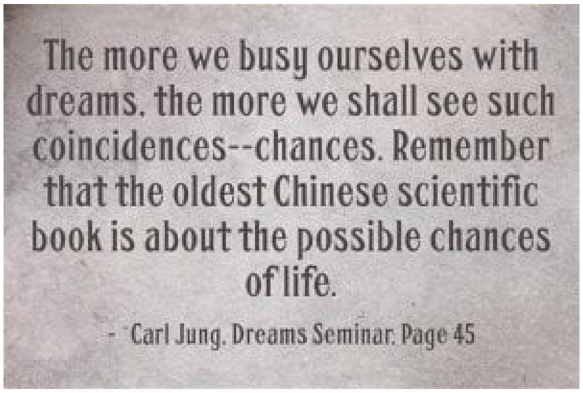
The man who promises everything is sure to fulfil nothing, and everyone who promises too much is in danger of using evil means in order to carry out his promises, and is already on the road to perdition. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para, 413



I am neither spurred on by excessive optimism nor in love with high ideals, but am merely concerned with the fate of the individual human being—that infinitesimal unit on whom a world depends, and in whom, if we read the meaning of the Christian message aright, even God seeks his goal.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 10; Para 588

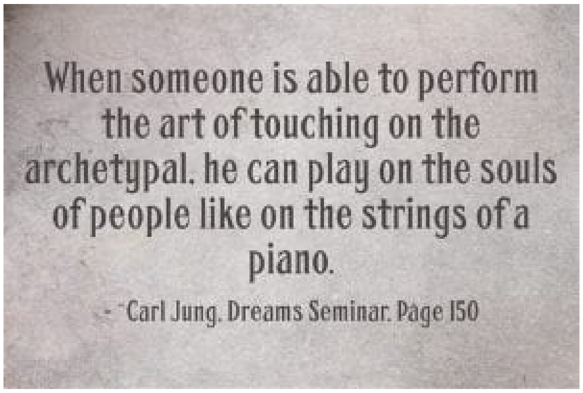
The judgment of others is not in itself a standard of value, it may be no more than a useful piece of information. The individual has a right, indeed it is his duty, to set up and apply his own standard of value. In the last resort ethics are the concern of the individual. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 912



The more we busy ourselves with dreams, the more we shall see such coincidences--chances. Remember that the oldest Chinese scientific book is about the possible chances of life.

- ~Carl Jung, Dreams Seminar, Page 45

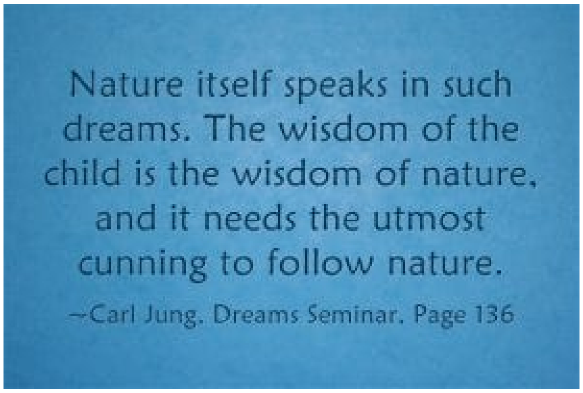
I am neither spurred on by excessive optimism nor in love with high ideals, but am merely concerned with the fate of the individual human being—that infinitesimal unit on whom a world depends, and in whom, if we read the meaning of the Christian message aright, even God seeks his goal. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 588



When someone is able to perform the art of touching on the archetypal. he can play on the souls of people like on the strings of a piano.

~ Carl Jung. Dreams Seminar. Page 150

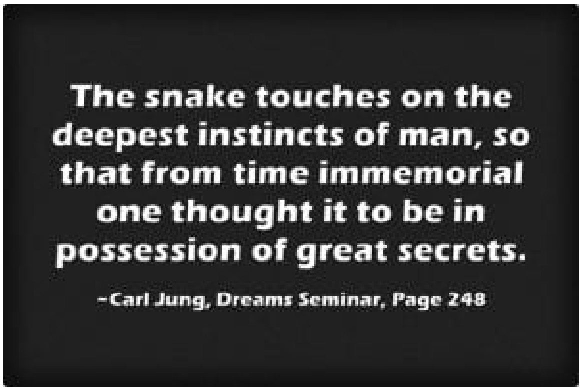
The more we busy ourselves with dreams, the more we shall see such coincidences–chances. Remember that the oldest Chinese scientific book is about the possible chances of life. Carl Jung, Dreams Seminar, Page 45



Nature itself speaks in such dreams. The wisdom of the child is the wisdom of nature, and it needs the utmost cunning to follow nature.

~Carl Jung. Dreams Seminar. Page 136

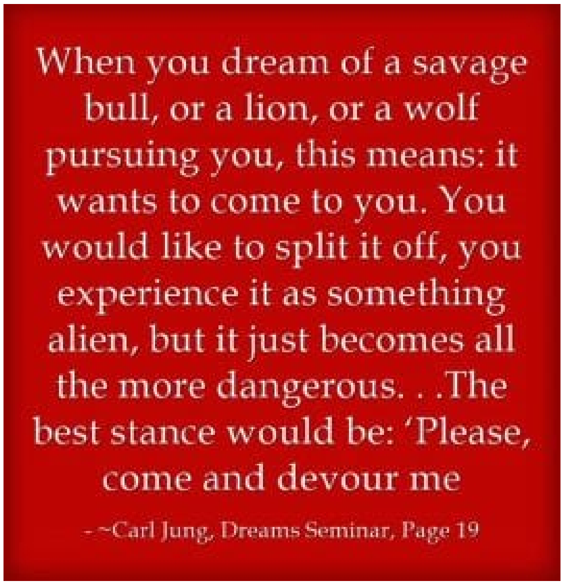
When someone is able to perform the art of touching on the archetypal, he can play on the souls of people like on the strings of a piano. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Page 150



The snake touches on the deepest instincts of man, so that from time immemorial one thought it to be in possession of great secrets.

~Carl Jung, Dreams Seminar, Page 248

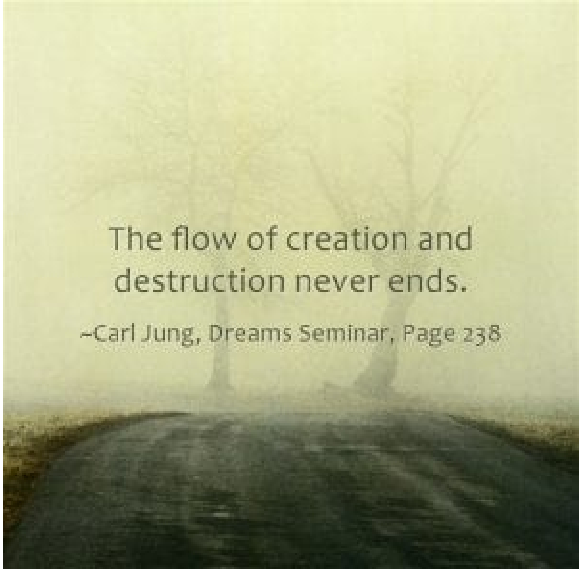
Nature itself speaks in such dreams. The wisdom of the child is the wisdom of nature, and it needs the utmost cunning to follow nature. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Page 136.



When you dream of a savage bull, or a lion, or a wolf pursuing you, this means: it wants to come to you. You would like to split it off, you experience it as something alien, but it just becomes all the more dangerous. . .The best stance would be: 'Please, come and devour me

- ~Carl Jung, Dreams Seminar, Page 19

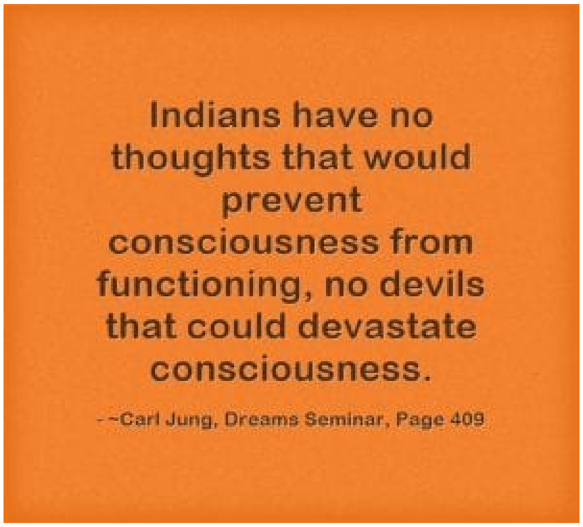
The snake touches on the deepest instincts of man, so that from time immemorial one thought it to be in possession of great secrets. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Pages 248-251.



The flow of creation and destruction never ends.

~Carl Jung, Dreams Seminar, Page 238

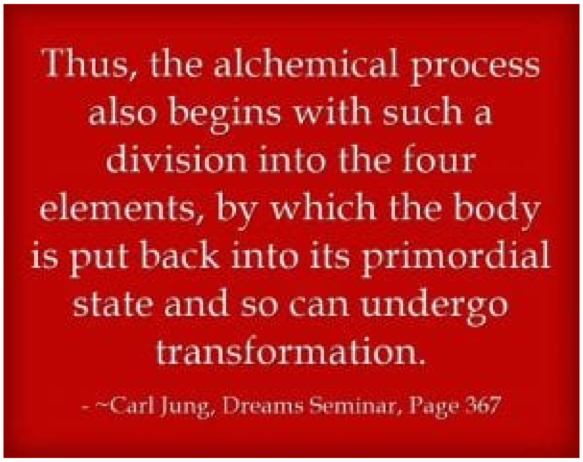
When you dream of a savage bull, or a lion, or a wolf pursuing you, this means: it wants to come to you. You would like to split it off, you experience it as something alien, but it just becomes all the more dangerous. . .The best stance would be: 'Please, come and devour me." Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 19.



Indians have no thoughts that would prevent consciousness from functioning, no devils that could devastate consciousness.

- ~Carl Jung, Dreams Seminar, Page 409

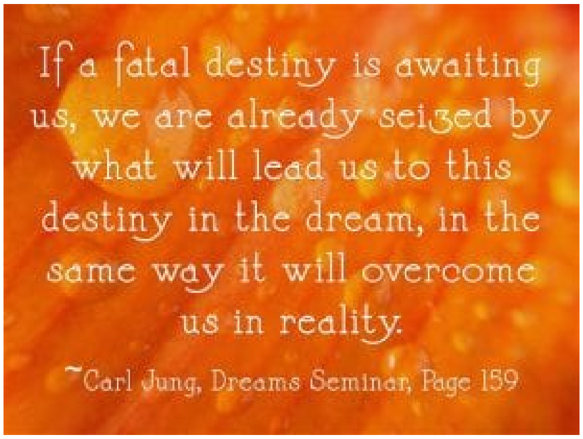
The flow of creation and destruction never ends. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 328.



Thus, the alchemical process also begins with such a division into the four elements, by which the body is put back into its primordial state and so can undergo transformation.

- ~Carl Jung, Dreams Seminar, Page 367

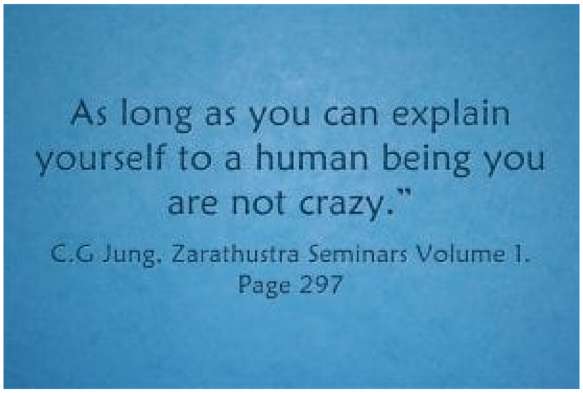
Indians have no thoughts that would prevent consciousness from functioning, no devils that could devastate consciousness. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 409.



If a fatal destiny is awaiting us, we are already seized by what will lead us to this destiny in the dream, in the same way it will overcome us in reality.

~Carl Jung, Dreams Seminar, Page 159

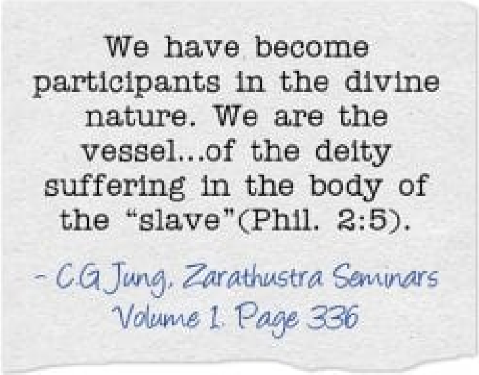
Thus, the alchemical process also begins with such a division into the four elements, by which the body is put back into its primordial state and so can undergo transformation. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams, Page 367.



As long as you can explain yourself to a human being you are not crazy."

C.G Jung, Zarathustra Seminars Volume 1. Page 297

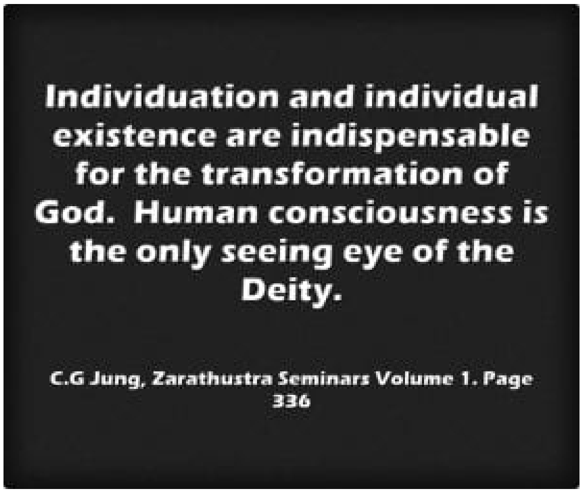
If a fatal destiny is awaiting us, we are already seized by what will lead us to this destiny in the dream, in the same way it will overcome us in reality. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams, Page 159.



We have become participants in the divine nature. We are the vessel...of the deity suffering in the body of the "slave"(Phil. 2:5).

- C.G Jung, Zarathustra Seminars Volume 1. Page 336

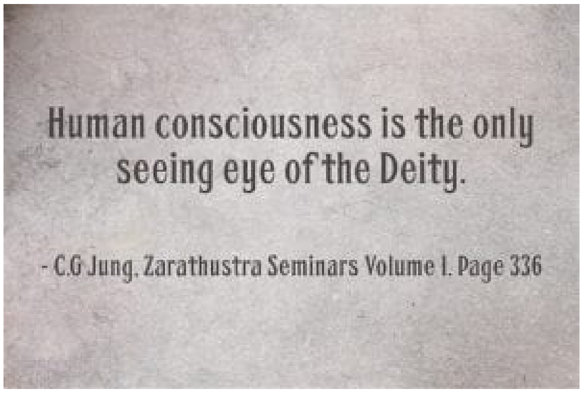
As long as you can explain yourself to a human being you are not crazy." C.G Jung, The Zarathustra Seminars Volume 1. Page 297



Individuation and individual existence are indispensable for the transformation of God. Human consciousness is the only seeing eye of the Deity.

C.G Jung, Zarathustra Seminars Volume 1. Page 336

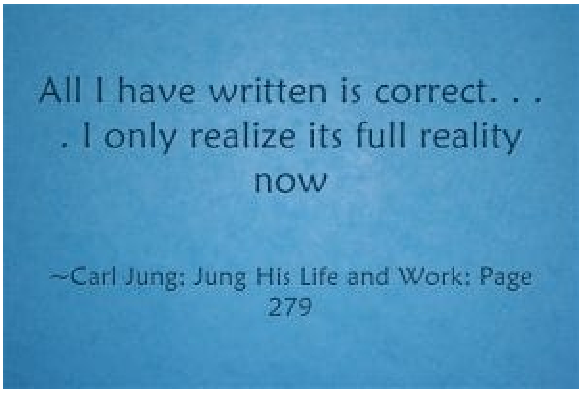
We have become participants in the divine nature. We are the vessel...of the deity suffering in the body of the "slave"(Phil. 2:5). Carl Jung, Nietzsche's Zarathustra, Page 336.



Human consciousness is the only seeing eye of the Deity.

- C.G Jung, Zarathustra Seminars Volume I, Page 336

Individuation and individual existence are indispensable for the transformation of God. Human consciousness is the only seeing eye of the Deity. Carl Jung, Nietzsche's Zarathustra, Page 336.



All I have written is correct. . . . I only realize its full reality now

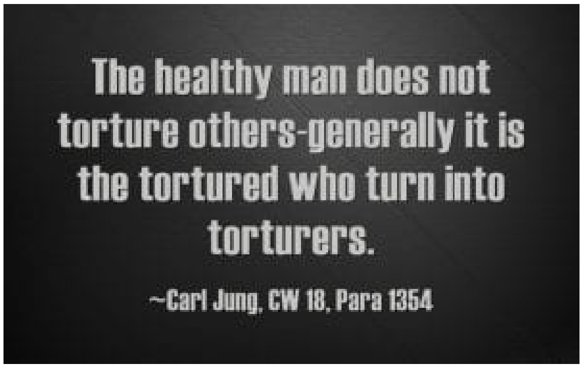
~Carl Jung: Jung His Life and Work: Page 279

Human consciousness is the only seeing eye of the Deity. Carl Jung, Nietzsche's Zarathustra, Page 336.

For there is no coming into being and dying but in time.

~Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Page 101.

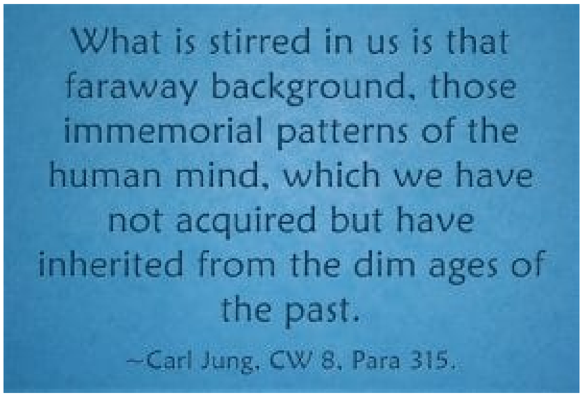
All I have written is correct. . . . I only realize its full reality now Carl Jung; Jung His Life and Work; Page 279



The healthy man does not torture others-generally it is the tortured who turn into torturers.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1354

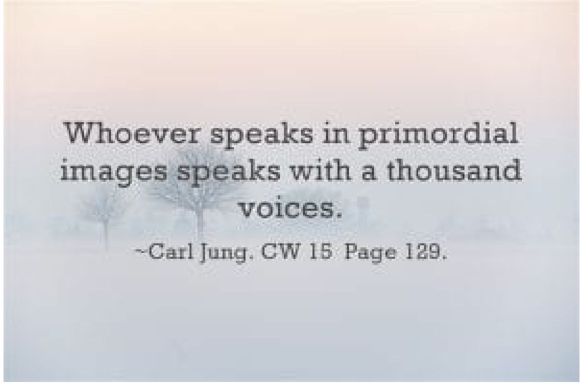
For there is no coming into being and dying but in time. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Page 101.



What is stirred in us is that faraway background, those immemorial patterns of the human mind, which we have not acquired but have inherited from the dim ages of the past.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 315.

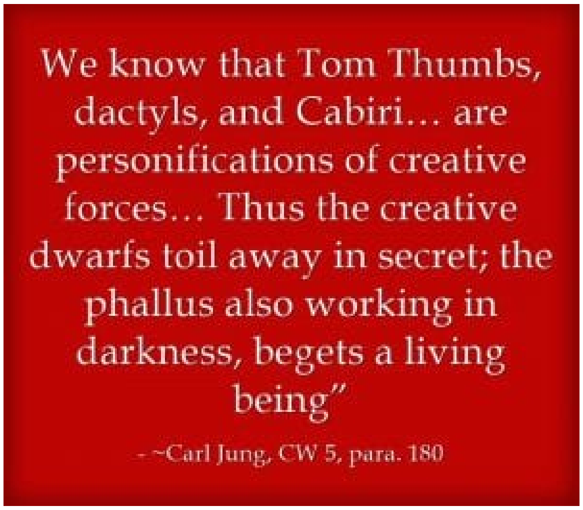
The healthy man does not torture others-generally it is the tortured who turn into torturers. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 1354.



Whoever speaks in primordial images speaks with a thousand voices.

~Carl Jung, CW 15 Page 129.

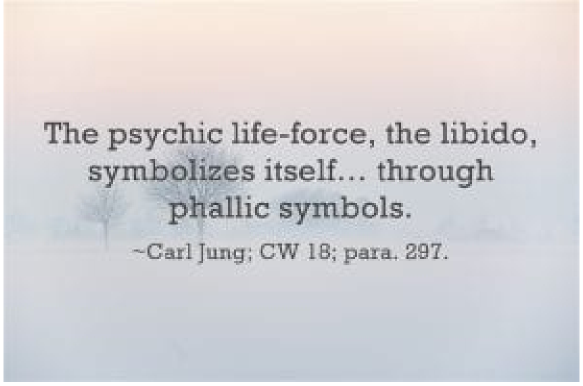
What is stirred in us is that faraway background, those immemorial patterns of the human mind, which we have not acquired but have inherited from the dim ages of the past. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 315.



We know that Tom Thumbs, dactyls, and Cabiri… are personifications of creative forces… Thus the creative dwarfs toil away in secret; the phallus also working in darkness, begets a living being”

- ~Carl Jung, CW 5, para. 180

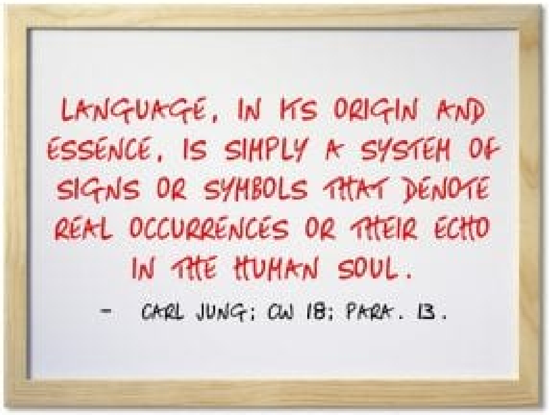
Whoever speaks in primordial images speaks with a thousand voices. Carl Jung. CW 15 Page 129.



The psychic life-force, the libido, symbolizes itself… through phallic symbols.

~Carl Jung; CW 18; para. 297.

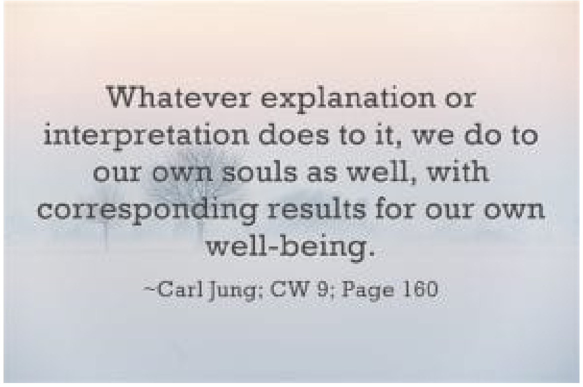
We know that Tom Thumbs, dactyls, and Cabiri… are personifications of creative forces… Thus the creative dwarfs toil away in secret; the phallus also working in darkness, begets a living being” Carl Jung, CW 5, para. 180



LANGUAGE, IN ITS ORIGIN AND ESSENCE, IS SIMPLY A SYSTEM OF SIGNS OR SYMBOLS THAT DENOTE REAL OCCURRENCES OR THEIR ECHO IN THE HUMAN SOUL.

- CARL JUNG; CW 18; PARA. 13.

The psychic life-force, the libido, symbolizes itself… through phallic symbols. Carl Jung; CW 18; para. 297.



Whatever explanation or interpretation does to it, we do to our own souls as well, with corresponding results for our own well-being.

~Carl Jung; CW 9; Page 160

Language, in its origin and essence, is simply a system of signs or symbols that denote real occurrences or their echo in the human soul. Carl Jung; CW 18; para. 13.

Carl Jung: "I will lead him into the night of the soul so that one of them at last may know what he is actually dealing with." (2019-11-29 04:15)

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Pastor Max Frischknecht

Dear Pastor Frischknecht, 17 July 1945

Thank you for your letter and essay.

I, too, think that your youth is still an encumbrance to you.

But it seems to me that certain obligations are laid even upon youth.

I have read your essay with interest.

As you yourself regard it with a critical eye, I will raise no further objections.

I am only interested to know how you come to grips with the fact that in the Old Testament Satan is one of God's angels and a member of the heavenly choir and thus part of the divine substance. (A relative separation first occurs in the Book of Job.)

I hope it has become clear to you in the meantime that the archetype, as a psychological datum, does not delineate any historical God and therefore cannot be identified with any existing ideas of God.

I can only repeat: I am not a theologian but an empiricist who can establish only the possibility, given by the archetype, of no matter what ideas of God.

I hope you will have an opportunity to make the necessary corrections, since it should be in the interests of the theologian today not to block still further the approaches to an understanding of religion by misconceptions that can so easily be removed.

I call it tragic blindness when theologians, of all people, accuse me of psychologism, or-how stupid can they get?-of worshipping the self.

The chief difficulty, it seems to me, is that the theologian preaches away just as though he had an old heathen congregation before him that had still heard nothing of the great news from Palestine.

By so doing he completely misses the mark with modern man.

He would do better to think a bit more so as to make his preaching understandable.

Why does he go on pouring new wine into old bottles?

Why is he not glad when science tenders him some help?

After all, nobody believes any more that His Reverence is filled with the Holy Ghost every Sunday morning.

And how does Luther know that the Holy Ghost is not a sceptic?

This is theological presumptuousness.

The spirit bloweth where it listeth and not where Calvin with his providentia specialis wants it to blow.

Does theology still not know the harm it does to the religious life?

Perhaps, my dear Pastor, you will allow an old man, who has had some experience of life and the world, to offer you the above points for reflection.

You still have a long stretch of the road before you, and the future will call the theologian to account as never before.

Nowadays people want to understand and not just be harangued in an edifying manner. I hear over and over again: "Well, I knew ages ago what the parson says about it, but that’s no help to me."

Why do the young complain that not a flicker of light comes from the Church?

This question cannot leave anybody cold who still has some truck with Christian civilization.

The theologian today must know a bit more about the human soul if he wants to address it.

I once told Archbishop Temple: "Send me an intelligent young theologian. I will lead him into the night of the soul so that one of them at last may know what he is actually dealing with ."

But nobody came.

Naturally they knew it all already, and much better.

That is why the light has gone out.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 372-373.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/53568-dark.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=80ZSC3LRJHVL&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575019602&sprefix=jung+let%`

Carl Jung on "Diagnosing the Dictators" (2019-11-29 04:30)

[1]

[2]C. G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters (Bollingen Series XCVII)

Diagnosing the Dictators C.G. Jung [1938] [Hitler, Stalin, Mussalini]

Hitler and Stalin

What would happen if you were to lock Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin in a room together and give them one loaf of bread and one pitcher of water to last them a week? Who would get all the food and water, or would they divide it? I doubt if they would divide it. Hitler, being a medicine man, would probably hold himself aloof and have nothing to do with the quarrel. He would be helpless because he would be without his German people. Mussolini and Stalin, being both chiefs or strong men in their own right-,- would probably dispute possession of the food and drink, and being the rougher and tougher, would probably get all of it. There were two types of strong men in, primitive society. One was the chief who was physically powerful, stronger than all his , competitors, and the other was the medicine man who was not strong in himself but was strong by reason of the power which the people _projected into him. Thus we had the emperor and the head of the religious community. The emperor was the chief, physic-day strong through his possession of soldiers; the seer was the medicine man, possessing little or no physical power but an actual power sometimes surpassing that of the emperor, because the people agreed that he possessed magic—that is, supernatural ability. He could, for example, assist or obstruct the way to a happy life after death, put a ban upon an individual, a community or a whole nation, and by excommunication cause people great discomfort or pain. Now, Mussolini is the man of physical strength When you see him you are aware of it at once. His body suggests good muscles. He is the chief by reason of the fact that he is individually stronger than any of his competitors. And it is a fact that Mussolini's mentality corresponds to his classification:he has the mind of a chief.

Stalin belongs in the same category. He is, however, not a creator. Lenin, created; Stalin is devouring the brood. He is a conquistador; he simply took what Lenin made and put his teeth into it and devoured it. He is not even creatively destructive. Lenin was that. He tore down the whole structure of feudal and bourgeois society in Russia and replaced - it wit is own creation. Stalin is destroying that. Mentally, Staliin is not so interesting as Mussolini, who resembles him in the fundamental pattern of his personality, and he is not anything like so interesting as the medicine man, the myth—Hitler. Anybody who takes command of one hundred and seventy million people as Stalin has done, is bound to be interesting, whether you like him or not. No, Stalin is just a brute—a shrewd peasant, an instinctive powerful, beast—no doubt in that way far the most powerful of all the dictators. He reminds one of a) Siberian saber-toothed tiger with that powerful neck, those sweeping mustaches, and that smile like a cat which has been eating cream. I should imagine that Genghis Khan might have been an early Stalin. I shouldn't wonder if he makes himself Czar. Hitler is entirely different. His body does not suggest strength. The outstanding characteristic of his physiognomy is its dreamy look. I was especially struck by that when I saw pictures taken of him during the Czechoslovakian crisis; there was in his eyes the look of a seer. There is no question but that Hitler belongs in the category of the truly mystic medicine man) As somebody commented about him at the last Nurnberg party congress, since the time of Mohammed nothing like it has been seen in this world. This markedly mystic characteristic of Hitler's is what makes him do things which seem to us illogical, inexplicable, curious and unreasonable. But consider—even the nomenclature of the Nazis is plainly mystic. Take the very name of the Nazi State. They call it the Third Reich. Why? Because the First Reich was the Holy Roman Empire and the second was the one founded by Bismarck and the third is Hitler's. Of course. But there is a deeper significance. Nobody called Charlemagne's kingdom the First Reich nor Wilhelm's the Second Reich.

Only the Nazis call theirs the Third Reich. Because it has a profound mystical meaning: to every German the expression "Third Reich" brings echoes who more than once has indicated he is aware of his mystic calling, appears to the devotees of the Third Reich as something more than mere man. Again, you take the widespread revival in the Third Reich of the cult of Wotan. Who was Wotan? God of wind. Take the name ’Sturmabteilung"—Storm Troops.Storm, you see—the wind. Just as the swastika is a revolving form making a vortex moving ever toward the left—which means in Buddhist symbolism sinister, unfavorable, directed toward the unconscious. And all these symbols together of a Third Reich led by its prophet under the banners of wind and storm and whirling vortices point to a mass movement which is to sweep the German people in a hurricane of unreasoning emotion on and on to a destiny which perhaps none but the seer, the prophet, the Fuehrer himself can foretell—and perhaps, not even he. But why is it that Hitler, who makes nearly every German fall down and worship him, produces next to no impression on any foreigner? Exactly. Few foreigners respond at all, yet apparently every German in Germany does. It is because Hitler is the mirror of every German’s unconscious, but of course he mirrors nothing from a non-German. He is the loudspeaker which magnifies the inaudible whispers of the German soul until they can be heard by the German’s unconscious ear. He is the first man to tell every German what he has been thinking and feeling all along in his unconscious about German fate, especially since the defeat in the World War, and the one characteristic which colors every r=eri -nan soul is the typically German inferiority complex—the complex of the younger brother, of the one who is always a bit late to the feast. Hitler’s power is not political; it is magic. What do you mean by magic? To understand this you must understand what the unconscious is. It is that part of our mental constitution over which we have little control and which is stored with all sorts of impressions and sensations; which contains thoughts and even conclusions of which we are not aware. Besides the conscious impressions which we receive, there are all sorts of impressions constantly impinging upon our sense organs of which we don’t become aware because they are too slight to attract our conscious attention. They lie beneath the threshold of consciousness. But all these subliminal impressions are recorded; nothing is lost. Someone may be speaking in a faintly audible voice in the next room while we are talking here. You pay no attention to it, but the conversation next door is being recorded in your unconscious as surely as though the latter were a dicta-phone record. While you sit here my unconscious is taking in quantities of impressions of you, although I am not aware of them and you would be surprised if I should tell you all that I have already learned unconsciously about you in this short space of time.

Now, the secret of Hitler’s power is not that Hitler has an unconscious more plentifully stored than yours or mine. Hitler’s secret is twofold: first, that his unconscious has exceptional access to his consciousness, and second, that he allows himself to be , moved by it. He is like a man who listens intently to a stream of suggestions in a whispered voice from a mysterious source and then acts upon them. In our case, even if occasionally our unconscious does reach us as through dreams, we have too much rationality, too much cerebrum to obey it. This is doubtless the case with Chamberlain, but Hitler listens and obeys. The true leader is always led. We can see it work in him. He himself has referred to his Voice. His Voice is nothing other than his own unconscious, into which the German people have projected their own selves; that is, the unconscious of seventy-eight million Germans. That is what makes him powerful. Without the German people, he would not be what he seems to be now It is literally true when he says that whatever he is able to do is only because he has the German people behind him or, as he sometimes says, because he is Germany. So, with his unconscious being the receptacle of the souls of seventy-eight million Germans, he is powerful, and with his unconscious perception of the true balance of political forces at home and in the world, he has so far been infallible. That is why he makes political judgments which turn out to be right against the opinions of all his advisers and against the opinions of all foreign observers. When this happens, it means only that the information gathered by his unconscious, and reaching his consciousness by means of his exceptional talent, has been more nearly correct than that of all the others, German or foreign, who attempted to judge the situation and who reached conclusions different from his. And of course, it also means that, having this information at hand, he is willing to act upon it. I suppose that would apply to the three really critical decisions he made, each of which involved the acute danger of war: when he marched into the Rhineland in March, 1936, and into Austria in March, 1938, and when he mobilized and forced the Allies to abandon Czechoslovakia. Because in each one of these cases we know that many of Hitler’s highest military advisers warned him against doing it, since they believed the Allies would resist, and also that if war came Germany would be bound to lose. Precisely! The fact is that Hitler was able to judge his opponents better than anyone else, and although it appeared inevitable that he would be met by force, he knew his opponents would give in without fighting. That must have been the case especially when Chamberlain came to Berchtesgaden. There for the first time Hitler met the elder British statesman. As Chamberlain proved later at Godesberg, he had come to tell him, among other things, not to go too far or Britain would fight. But Hitler's unconscious eye which so far has not failed him, read so deeply the character of the British Prime Minister that all the later ultimatums and warnings from London made no impression whatever on his unconscious: Hitler's unconscious knew—it didn't guess or feel, it knew—that Britain would not risk war. Yet Hitler's speech in the Sports Palace when he announced to the world a holy oath that he would march into Czechoslovakia October first, with or without the permission of Britain and France, indicated for the first and only time that Hitler the man, in his supremely critical moment, had fear of following Hitler the prophet.

His Voice told him to go ahead, that everything would be all right. But his human reason told him the dangers were vast and perhaps overwhelming. Hence for the first time Hitler's voice trembled; his breath failed. His speech lacked form and trailed off at the end. What human being would not be afraid in such a moment? In making that speech which fixed the destiny of perhaps hundreds ofmillions of people, he was a man doing something of which he was deathly afraid but forcing himself to do it because it was ordered by his Voice. His Voice was correct. Now who knows but that his Voice may continue to be correct? If it does, it will be very interesting to observe the history of the next few years because, as he said just after his Czech victory, Germany stands today on the threshold of her future. That means he has just begun and if his Voice tells him that the German people are destined to become the lords of Europe and perhaps of the world, and if his Voice continues always to be right, then we are in for an extremely interesting period, aren't we? Yes, it seems, that the German people are now convinced they-have found their Messiah. In a way, the position of the Germans is remarkably like that of the Jews of old. Since their defeat in the World War they have awaited a Messiah, a Savior. That is characteristic of people with an inferiority complex. The Jews got their inferiority complex from geographical and ,political factors. They lived in a part of the world which was a parade ground for conquerors from both sides, and after their return from their first exile to Babylon, when they were threatened with extinction by the Romans, they invented the solacing idea of a Messiah who was going to bring all the Jews together into a nation once more and save them. And the ,Germans got their inferiority complex from comparable causes. They came up out of the Danube valley too late, and founded the beginnings of their nation long after the French and the English were well on their way to nationhood. They got too late to the scramble-rafEblonies and for the foundation of empire. Then, when they did get together and made a. united nation, they looked around them and saw the British, the French, and others with rich colonies and all the equipment of grown-up nations, and they became jealous, resentful, like a younger brother whose older brothers have taken the lion's share of the inheritance. This was the original source of the German inferiority complex which has determined so much of their political thought and action and which is certainly decisive of their wEdle policy today. It is impossible, you see, to talk about Hitler without talking about his people, because Hitler is only the German people. It occurred to me that the last time I was in America that one could make an interesting geographical analogy about Germany. In America I noticed that somewhere on the East Coast there exists a certain class of people called "poor white trash" and I learned that they are largely descendents of early settlers, some of them bearers of fine old English names. The poor white trash were left behind when some of the people with energy and initiative climbed into their covered wagons and drove West.

Then, in the Middle West you meet the people I consider the most stable in America; I mean psychologically the best balanced. Yet in some places farther west you meet some of the least-balanced people. Now, it seems to me that, taking Europe as a whole, and including the British Isles, you have in Ireland and Wales the equivalent of your West Coast. The Celts possess colorful imaginative faculties. Then, to correspond to your sober Middle West, you have in Europe the English and the French, both of them psychologically stable peoples. But then you come to Germany, and just beyond Germany are the Slav mujiks, the poor white trash of Europe. Now, the mujiks are people who can't get up in the morning, but sleep all day. And the Germans, their next door neighbors, are people who could get up, but got up too late. Don't you remember how the Germans even today represent Germany in all their cartoons? Yes, "Sleepy Michael," a tall, lean fellow in a nightgown and nightcap. That's right, and Sleepy Michael slept through the division of the world into colonial empires, and so the Germans got their inferiority complex, which made them want to fight the World War, and of course when they lost it their feeling of inferiority grew, even worse, and developed a desire for a Messiah, and so they have their Hitler. If he is not their true Messiah, he is like one of the Old Testament prophets: his mission is to unite his people and lead them to the Promised Land. This explains why the Nazis have to combat every form of religion besides their own idolatrous brand. I have no doubt but that the campaign against the Catholic and Protestant churches will be pursued with relentless and unremitting vigor, for the very sound reason, from the Nazi point of view, that they wish to substitute the new faith of Hitlerism. Do you consider it possible that Hitlerism might become for Germany a permanent religion for the future like Mohammedanism for the Moslems? I think it highly possible. Hitler's "religion" is the nearest to Mohammedanism, realistic, earthy, promising the maximum of rewards in this life, but with a Moslem-like Valhalla into which worthy Germans may enter and continue to enjoy themselves. Like Mohammedanism, it teaches the virtue of the sword. Hitler's first idea is to make his people powerful because the spirit of the Aryan German deserves to be supported by might, by muscle and steel. Of course, it is not a spiritual religion in the sense in which we ordinarily use the term. But remember that in the early days of Christianity it was the church which made the claim to total power, both spiritual and temporal! Today the church no longer makes this claim, but the claim has been taken over by the totalitarian states which demand not only temporal but spiritual power. Incidentally, it occurs to me that the "religious" character of Hitlerism is also emphasized by the fact that German communities throughout the world, far from the political power of Berlin, have adopted Hitlerism. Look at the South American German communities, notably in Chile. (It surprised me that in this analysis of the dictators nothing had been said of the influence of the fathers and mothers of the strong men. Doctor Jung assigned them no major role.) It is a great mistake to think that a dictator becomes so on account of personal reasons, such as that he had a strong resistance to his father. There are millions of men who resisted their fathers just as strongly as, say, Mussolini or Hitler or Stalin, but who never became dictators or anything like dictators. The law to remember about dictators is: "It is the persecuted one who, persecutes." The dictators must have suffered from circumstances calculated to bring about dictatorship. Mussolini came at the moment when the country was in chaos, the workmen out of hand and a threat of Bolshevism was terrifying the people. Hitler came when the economic crisis had reduced the standard of living in Germany and increased unemployment to an intolerable level, and after the great inflation of the currency which, although stabilization had come, had impoverished the whole middle class. Both Hitler and Mussolini received their power from the people and their power cannot be withdrawn.

It is interesting that both Hitler and Mussolini base their power chiefly upon the lower middle class, workers and farmers. But to go on with the circumstances under which dictators come to power: Stalin came when the death of Lenin, unique creator of Bolshevism, had left the party and the people leaderless and the country uncertain of its future. Thus the dictators are made from human material which suffers from overwhelming needs. The three dictators in Europe differ from one another tremendously, but it is not so much they who differ as it is their peoples. Compare the way the German people think and feel about Hitler with the way the Italians think and feel about Mussolini. The Germans are highly impressionable. They go to extremes; are always a bit unbalanced. They are cosmopolitan, world citizens; easily lose their national identity; like to imitate other nations. Every German man would like to dress like an English gentleman. Not Hitler. He always has dressed in his own way, and nobody could ever accuse him of trying to look as if he got his clothes on Savile Row. Precisely. Because Hitler is saying to his Germans, "Now, bei Gott, you have got to start being Germans!" The Germans are extraordinarily sensitive to new ideas, and when they hear one which appeals to them they are likely to swallow it uncritically, and for a time to be completely dominated by it; but after a while they are equally likely to throw it violently away and adopt a newer idea, quite probably contradicting the first one entirely. This is the way they have run their political life. Italians are more stable. Their minds do not roll and wallow and leap and plunge through all the extravagant ecstasies which are the daily exercise of the German mind. So you find in Italy a spirit of balance lacking in Germany. When the Fascists took power in Italy, Mussolini did not even remove the king. Mussolini worked not with ecstasy of spirit, but with a hammer in his hand, beating Italy into the shape he wanted it, much as his blacksmith father used to make horseshoes. This Mussolini-Italian balance of temperament is borne out by the Fascist treatment of the Jews. At first they did not persecute the Jews at all, and even now, when for various reasons they have begun an anti-Semitic campaign, it has kept a certain proportion. I suppose the chief reason why Mussolini went in for anti-Semitism at all was that he became convinced that world Jewry was probably an incorrigible and effective force against Fascism—Leon Blum in France, especially, I think—and also, he wished to make his ties with Hitler more solid. So you see, while Hitler is a medicine man, a form of spiritual vessel, a demi-deity or even better, a myth, Mussolini is a man, and therefore everything in Fascist Italy has a more human shape than it has in Nazi Germany, where things are run by revelation. Hitler as a man scarcely exists. At any rate, he disappears behind his role Mussolini, on the contrary, never disappears behind his role. His role disappears behind Mussolini. I saw the Duce and the Parer together in Berlin the time Mussolini paid his formal visit; I had the good luck to beplaced only a few yards away from them, and could study them well. It was entertaining to see Mussolini's expression when they put on the goose step. If I had not seen it should have fallen into the popular delusion that his adoption of the German goose step for the Italian army was in imitation of Hitler. And that would have disappointed me, because I had discerned in Mussolini's conduct a certain style, a certain format of an original man with good taste in certain matters. I mean, for example, that it was good taste of the Duce to keep the King. And his choice of title, "Duce"—not Doge as in old Venice, nor Duca, but Duce, the plain Italian word for leader—was original and in my opinion showed good taste.

Now, as I observed Mussolini watching the first goose step he had ever seen, I could see him enjoying it with the zest of a small boy at a circus. But he enjoyed even more the stunt when the cavalry comes and the mounted drummer gallops ahead and takes his place on one side of the street while the band takes its place on the other. The drummer must gallop around the band and up to the front to take his station there, and this he does without touching the reins, guiding his horse only by pressure of the knees, since both hands are busy with the drums. On this occasion it was done magnificently and it pleased Mussolini so much he broke out laughing and clapped his hands. When he got back to Rome afterwards, he introduced the goose step and I am convinced he did it solely for his own aesthetic enjoyment. It really is a most impressive step. In comparison with Mussolini, Hitler made upon me the impression of a sort of , scaffolding, of wood covered with cloth, an automaton with a mask, like a, robot, or a mask of a robot. During the whole performance he never laughed; it was as though he were in a bad humor, sulking. He showed no human sign, His expression was that of an inhumanly single-minded purposiveness, with no sense of humor. He seemed as if he might be the double of a real person, and that Hitler the man might perhaps be hiding inside like an appendix, and deliberately so hiding in order not to disturb the mechanism. What an amazing difference there is between Hitler and Mussolini! couldn't help liking– Mussolini. His bodily energy and elasticity are warm, human, and contagious. You have the –homey feeling with Mussolini of being with a human being. With Hitler, you are scared. You know you would never be able to talk to that man; because there is nobody there. He is not a man, but a collective. He is not an individual; he is a whole nation. I take it to be literally true that he has no personal friend. How can you talk intimately with a nation? You can no more explain Hitler by the personal approach than you can explain a great work of art by examining the personality of the artist. The great work of art is a product of the time, of the whole world in which the artist is living, and of the millions of people who surround him, and of the thousands of currents of thought and the myriad streams of activity which flow around him. Thus it would be easier for Mussolini, who is only a man, to find a successor, than for Hitler. With good luck, I should think Mussolini might find someone to take his place, but I don't see how Hitler can. What if Hitler were to marry? He cannot marry. If he married, it would not be Hitler marrying. He would cease to be Hitler. But it is incredible that he should ever do so. I shouldn't wonder if it may be shown that he has sacrificed his sex life entirely to the Cause. This is not an unusual thing, especially for the type of medicine-man leader, although it is much less usual in the type of the chief. Mussolini and Stalin seem to lead entirely normal sex lives. Hitler's real passion, of course is. Germany. You could say that he has a tremendous mother complex, which means that he will be under the domination either of a woman or of an idea.

Idea is always female. Mind is female, because the head, the brain, is creative; hence like a womb, female. The unconscious of a man is always represented by a woman; that of a woman always by a man. How important a role does what we call personal ambition play in the makeup of the three dictators? I should say that it plays a very minor role in Hitler. I don't think Hitler has personal ambition beyond that of the average man. Mussolini has more than average personal ambition, but it is not sufficient to explain his force. He also feels that he coincides with the national need. Hitler does not rule Germany. He is simply the exponent of the trend of things. This makes him uncanny and psychologically fascinating. Mussolini rules Italy to a certain extent, but for the rest he is an instrument of the Italian people. With Stalin it is different. His dominant characteristic is overwhelming personal ambition. He does not identify himself with Russia. He rules Russia like any Czar. Remember, he is a Georgian anyway. But how do you explain Stalin's having taken the course he has? It seems to me that Stalin, far from being uninteresting, is also enigmatic. Here you have a person who spent the greater part of his life as a revolutionist Bolshevik. His cobbler father and pious mother sent him to a theological school. In his early years he became a revolutionary and from then on for the next twenty-five years he did nothing but fight the Czar and the Czar's police. He was put into a dozen jails and broke out of all of them. Now, how do you explain that a man who had fought the Czar's tyranny all his life should suddenly become a kind of Czar himself?

Hitler and Mussalini

That is not remarkable. It is because you always become the thing you fight the most. What undermined the armed force of Rome? Christianity did. Because when the Romans conquered the Near East, they were conquered by its religion. When you fight a thing you have to get very close to it, and it is likely to infect you. You must know Czarism very well in order to defeat it. Then, when you have driven out the Czar, you become a Czar yourself, just as a wild-animal hunter may become bestial. I know of one fellow who, after many years of big-game hunting in a proper sporting manner, had to be arrested because he took a machine gun to the animals. The man had become as blood-lustful as the panthers and lions he killed. Stalin fought so much against the Czar's bloody oppression that he is now doing exactly the same as the Czar. In my opinion, there is no difference at all now between Stalin and Ivan the Terrible. But what about the fact reported by many, and observed by myself, that the standard of living in the Soviet Union has risen considerably and is still rising from the low point of the famine of 1933? Of course. Stalin can be a good administrator at the same time that he is a Czar. It would be a miracle if anybody could keep so naturally rich a country as Russia from being prosperous. But Stalin is not very original, and it is such bad taste for him to go about turning himself into a Czar so crudely, in front of everybody, without any concealment at all! It is really proletarian! But you still have not explained to me how Stalin, the loyal Communist party man, the underground worker for what was then a highly altruistic ideal, should have changed into a power-grabber. In my opinion the change came about in Stalin during the 1918 revolution. Up to that time he had labored, unselfishly perhaps, for the good of the Cause, and probably had never thought of personal power for himself, for the very good reason that there never appeared to be the shadow of a chance that he could even aspire to anything like personal power.

The question didn't exist for him. But during the revolution Stalin saw for the first time how you acquire power. I am sure he said to himself with astonishment, "But it is so easy!" He must have watched Lenin and the others reach the full rank of complete power, and have said to himself, "So that is how it is done! Well, I can go them one better. All you have to do is to do away with the fellow in front of you." He would certainly have done away with Lenin if Lenin had lived. Nothing could have stopped him, as nothing has stopped him now. Naturally, he wants his country to prosper. The more prosperous and greater his country is, the greater he is. But he cannot devote his full energies to promoting the welfare of his country so long as his personal drive for power is not satisfied. But surely he's got fullest power now. Yes, but he's got to keep it. He is surrounded by a pack of wolves. He must keep forever on the alert. I must say that I think we owe him a debt of gratitude! Why? For the wonderful example he has given the whole world of the axiomatic truth that Communism always leads to dictatorship. But now let us leave this aside and let me tell you what my therapy is. As a physician, I have not only to analyze and diagnose, but to recommend treatment. We have been talking nearly all the while about Hitler and the Germans, because they are so incomparably the most important of the dictator phenomena at the moment. It is for this, then, that I must propose a therapy. It is extremely difficult to deal with this type of phenomenon. It is excessively dangerous. I mean the type of case of a man acting under compulsion.

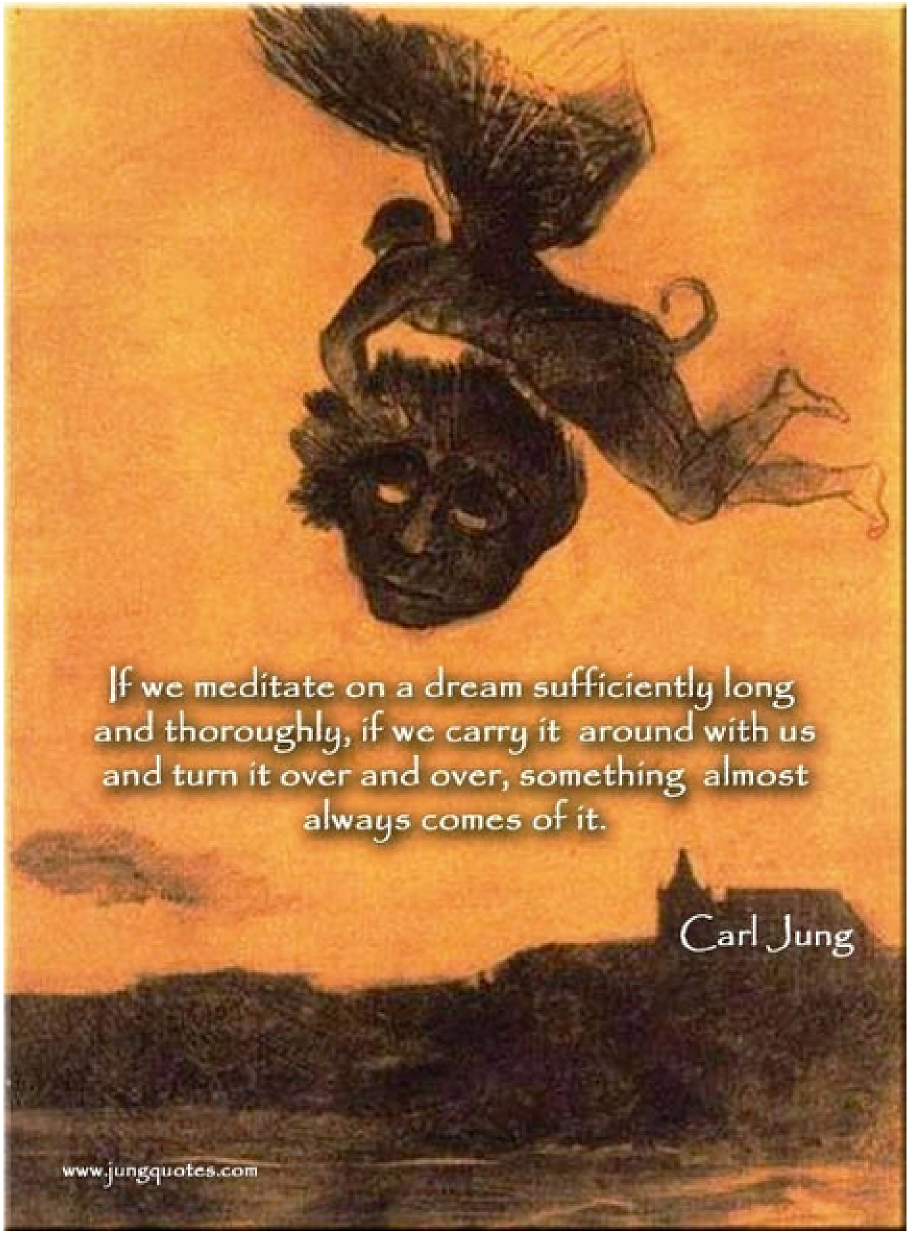
Now, when I have a patient acting under the command of a higher power, a power within him, such as Hitler's Voice, I dare not tell him to disobey his Voice. He won't do it if I do tell him. He will even act more determinedly than if I did not tell him. All I can do is attempt, by interpreting the Voice, to induce the patient to behave in a way which will be less harmful to himself and to society than if he obeyed the Voice immediately without interpretation. So I say, in this situation, the only way to save Democracy in the West—and by the West I mean America too—is not to try to stop Hitler. You may try to divert him, but to stop him will be impossible without the Great Catastrophe for all. His 'Voice tells him to unite the German people and to lead them toward a better future, a bigger place on the earth, a position of glory and richness. You cannot stop him from trying to do that. You can only hope to influence the direction of his expansion. I say let him go East. Turn his attention away from the West, or rather, encourage him to keep it turned away. –Let him go to Russia. That is the logical cure for Hitler. I don't think Germany will be satisfied with a bit of Africa, big or small. Germany looks at Britain and at France with their magnificent colonial empires, and even at Italy with her Libya and Ethiopia, and thinks of her own size, seventy-eight million Germans as against forty-five million British in the British Isles and forty-two million French and forty-two million Italians and she is bound to think that she ought to have a place in the world not merely as large as that occupied by any one of the other three Western Great Powers, but much larger. How is she going to get that in the West without destroying one or more of the nations which now occupy the West? There is only one field for her to operate in, and that is Russia. And what will happen to Germany when she tries accounts with Russia?

Ah, that's her own business. Our interest in it is simply that it will save the West. Nobody has ever bitten into Russia without regretting it. It's not very palatable food. It might-take -the Germans a hundred years to finish that meal. Meanwhile we .should be safe, and by we, I mean all of Western civilization. Instinct should tell the Western statesmen not to touch Germany in her present mood. She is much too dangerous. Stalin's instinct was correct when it told him to let the Western nations have a war and destroy one another, while he waited to pick the bones. That would have saved the Soviet Union. I don't believe he ever would have entered the war on the side of Czechoslovakia and France, unless it were at the very end, to profit from the exhaustion of both sides. So I say, studying Germany as I would a patient, and Europe as I would a patient's family and neighbors, let her go into Russia. There is plenty of land there—one sixth of the surface of the earth. It wouldn't matter to Russia if somebody took a bite, and as I said, nobody has ever prospered who did. How to save your democratic U.S.A.? It must, of course, be saved, else we all go under. You must keep away from the craze, avoid the infection. Keep your army and navy large, but save them. If war comes, wait. America must keep big armed forces to help keep the world at peace, or to decide the war if it comes. You are the last resort of Western democracy. But how is the peace of Western Europe going to be preserved by letting Germany "go East," as you put it, since England and France have now formally guaranteed the frontiers of the new rump state of Czechoslovakia? Won't there then be war anyway if Germany attempts to incorporate the rump state in her administrative system? England and France will not honor their new guarantee to Czechoslovakia any more than France honored her previous pledge to Czechoslovakia. No nation - keeps its word.

A nation is a big, blind worm, following what? Fate, perhaps. A nation has no honor; it has no word to keep. That is the reason why, in the old days, they tried to have kings who did possess personal honor and a word. Don't you know that if you choose one hundred of the most intelligent people in the world and get them all together, they are a stupid mob? Ten thousand of them together would have the collective intelligence of an alligator. Haven't you noticed that at a dinner party the more people you invite the more stupid the conversation? In a crowd, the qualities which everybody possesses multiply, pile up, and become the dominant characteristics of the whole crowd. Not everybody has virtues, but everybody has the low animal instincts, the basic primitive caveman suggestibility, the suspicions and vicious traits of the savage. The result is that when you get a nation of many millions of people, it is not even human. It is a lizard or a crocodile or a wolf. Its statesmen cannot have a higher morality than the animal like mass morality of the nation, although individual statesmen of the democratic states may attempt to behave a little better. For Hitler, however, more than for any other statesman in the modern world, it would be impossible to expect that he should keep the word of Germany against her interest, in any international bargain, agreement or treaty. Because Hitler is himself the nation. That, incidentally, is why Hitler always has to talk so loud, even in private onversation—because he is speaking with seventy-eight million voices. That's what a nation is: a monster. Everybody ought to fear a nation. It is a horrible thing. How can such a thing have honor or a word? That's why I am for small nations. Small nations mean small catastrophes. Big nations mean big catastrophes. The telephone rang. In the stillness of the study and a windless day without, I could hear a patient cry that a hurricane in his bedroom was about to sweep him of his feet. "Lie down on the floor and you will be safe," advised the doctor. It is the same advice the sage physician now gives to Europe and America, as the high wind of Dictatorship rages at the foundations of Democracy. Carl Jung interview with H.R. Knickerbocker in Cosmopolitan [1938] See: C.G. Jung Speaks; Pages 115-135

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/11/36ec4-12bstalin.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-Speaking-Interviews-Encounters-Bollingen/dp/B000MDINT0/ref=sr_1_12?keywords=william+mcguire+jung&qid=1575020167&sr=8-12`

Carl Jung: “This is the secret of dreams—that we do not dream, but rather we are dreamt.” (2019-11-29 04:53)



If we meditate on a dream sufficiently long and thoroughly, if we carry it around with us and turn it over and over, something almost always comes of it.
Carl Jung
www.jungquotes.com

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

Participant: What sense does it make to dream dreams of a purely catastrophic nature?

Professor Jung:

This is the secret of dreams—that we do not dream, but rather we are dreamt.

We are the object of the dream, not its maker.

The French say: “To make dream.”

This is wrong.

The dream is dreamed to us.

We are the objects.

We simply find ourselves put into a situation.

If a fatal destiny is awaiting us, we are already seized by what will lead us to this destiny in the dream, in the same way it will overcome us in reality.

One of my friends, who was attacked by a mamba (cobra) in Africa, dreamed of this event two months in advance in Zurich.

The snake attacked him in the dream exactly in the way it later did in reality.

Such a dream is anticipated fate.

Participant:

So we cannot always assume that the dream wants to make something conscious?

Professor Jung:

No, not at all.

This is anthropomorphic thinking.

We can only try to understand what the dream offers.

If we are wise, we can put it to use.

We must not think that dreams necessarily have a benevolent intention.

Nature is kind and generous, but also absolutely cruel.

That is its characteristic.

Think of children.

There is nothing more cruel than children, and yet they are so lovely.

If I had such a dream, I would naturally react differently from the woman in question.

But as I am a different person, I also have a different dream.

So that’s not how we should think. We can only compare.

The hopeless case has the hopeless dream, the hopeful one has the hopeful dream.

Participant:

Is it possible to understand all dreams? Isn't it already in the nature of such a dream that it cannot be understood?

Professor Jung:

If the dreamer had had it in her to understand this dream at some point later on, there probably would have been a suffix of hope added to it.

There would be a ray of light at the end, which would give the doctor a hint.

He could then say: "You have had a very alarming dream."

And the patient would perhaps understand him. If she understands the dream, she will be on her way to integrate the pathological part.

With this patient, I had talked about dreams. Interestingly, she did not mention these dreams.

But when she was gone, they came to her as an esprit d'escalier.

She then told me about them in a letter.

If the dreamer had actually told them, I would have been even more scared.

I had seen her a couple of times, but had not come far enough to identify the content of her peculiar disturbance.

She did not come into a mental institution, but hovers above the ground as a shadow.

Right before she came to me, she had undergone a psychotic phase.

She came to me during the downhill phase of a psychotic interval.

You can see which fate the two dreams from childhood have anticipated.

Participant: Couldn't there come positive dreams again later on, which would lessen the uncanny aspect?

Professor Jung:

Positive dreams may well follow, but none of them have the importance of the childhood dreams, because the child is much nearer the collective unconscious than the adults.

Children still live directly in the great images.

There are high points in life—puberty, midlife—when the great dreams appear again, those dreamed out of the depth of the personality.

In the life of the adult, dreams mostly refer to personal life.

Then the persona is in the foreground, what is essential in their personality has long emigrated, is long gone, perhaps never to be reached again. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 159-160.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/27abd-dream.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+childrens+dreams&qid=1575022128&sr=8-1`

Anneliese Aumuller Personal Stimulus of Jung (2019-11-29 06:03)

SPRING
NINETEEN FIFTY

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

To be asked to write about the personal stimulus and effect Jung has had on my life seemed at first a very easy request to fulfill.

The more I think about it the more difficult it becomes; what should I select?

Jung's influence has many dimensions-from the spoken word to the tremendous, subtle effectiveness which radiated from his great personality-even if oceans, and years, prevented a personal encounter.

Thinking back at least thirty years, as a young student spending a few weeks in Zurich, I was invited to a social gathering.

There, by chance, Jung was present. By chance?

Well, Jean Gebser has something to say to this: ’People who believe that there is pure coincidence lose their lives to meaninglessness.

Each so-called coincidence adds to the exhilarating meaningfulness and inexhaustible richness of our lives, by making it more obvious that we are participants in the whole.’

So Jung was present; but at that time my knowledge of psychology and its great representatives was hardly more than that Jung had been a disciple of Freud’s and had parted company in order to follow his own discoveries.

There were about twenty people in the room, but it was Jung’s wonderful forehead that caught my eye.

And then he spoke-not about psychology, not at all about any deep science.

He talked about his experiences in Africa, his encounters with natives of practically every part of the world.

It was as if the walls of the room opened into the limitless horizon where everything could be possible. His voice seemed to belong to an ancient Chinese storyteller.

I found myself walking through the jungle with many new eyes open to the beauty of the early sunrise, the diamond glittering of the night’s dew.

I had numerous ears in order to hear the song and jubilation of strange, beautiful birds.

I could suddenly perceive the world with senses of whose existence I had never known before. Jung talked about superstition which, seen in this light, was great intuition; about instincts and phenomena far beyond all our school and book knowledge.

I got my first faint idea about symbolism, transcendence, and synchronicity without any one of those words even being mentioned.

It was my first encounter with Jung, and it opened doors for me which never closed again.

I did not immediately change my studies or plans, but a seed was planted that night which in due time made me become a Jungian analyst.

It was years before I saw Jung again.

The catastrophe of the Nazis and the second world war overshadowed the world.

People had to leave their countries, to change their professions; barriers were put up between states, countries, and families.

My task as an analyst seemed to take on a greater urgency-a need to help, to be active, to solve immediate difficulties.

So I thought!

Brimful of problems and, to me, important dreams, I went to Zurich.

Jung did not ask for my dreams, nor did he seem to have any idea how desperately I wanted to talk with him.

He just glanced at me, and then looked out of the window into his garden and started to tell me quiet little stories: about the long preparations the Bushmen took the evening before a hunt; of how many years of learning it took a disciple of Zen Buddhism before he dared to try to hit the target.

He also said something about the pitch-black darkness of a tower where there is no chance of any light, and what fertile ground that was for the unconscious to enfold.

I was rather close to despair when I left Jung and did not understand at all what he meant. That night I had the following dream:

I had a small, very dirty, iron ball, and my task was to polish it so that it would shine. I did my utmost.

I tried everything because it seemed terribly important to succeed.

The ball stayed dirty and dull.

Full of anger, I threw it in a comer.

After a while I heard a cat playing with something. Looking closer I saw a kitten circling around my ball and warming it with its soft fur. The ball shone like pure gold !

Next morning Jung greeted me with a little sarcastic smile saying, ’You were quite unhappy last night, and thought me a nasty un-understanding man, didn’t you?’

I had to admit at least the latter.

Then Jung went on and told me very seriously that in our Western civilization we had very little idea about letting things happen.

He told me about the Chinese Wu-Wei, the balance or middle between activity and passivity.

1. Wilhelm and E. Rousselle translated this Wu-Wei as: 'Doing nothing, but also not doing nothing'; hard to understand-and terribly important for analytical practice.

When I went back to war-terror and fear, I had learnt not to jump immediately in medias res.

I no longer wanted to solve the problem or complex, but was able to smell the climate a little more-and to let things happen; even to let the patient leave in despair in order to give the unconscious a chance to say what it thought to be good.

I had gained the absolute conviction that the unconscious always knew better.

It was an entry into another dimension which Jung had let me experience.

Jung has so often emphasized that the analyst has to learn as 1 ,1 1 t 1 11 r .

much as possible \ too much, really, for most normal human beings). Psychology, philosophy, religion, mythology, anthropology, the knowledge of fairy tales of many countries, the rituals and ceremonies of different tribes-these he thought to be only the basic background for becoming an analyst.

But the life experience, the risk, the daring to explore he found the most important tools. He once said, scathingly:

'It is easy to say "No", to be cautious; even to say "No" to a much desired and tempting situation is much easier than to say "Yes" and take the full consequences.

Only that makes a fully mature human being-and that you must be if you want to become an analyst.'

One single encounter with Jung was so much more important than years of studying.

I want to add a third situation where a few short sentences from Jung gave me an entirely fresh, new, life orientation.

It was not so long ago that I found myself with a decision to make which seemed vital to me.

Working as an analyst in the United States, I wondered ifI should not go back to my own country and work there. We all know those situations where we try hard to solve something with our brains, and we become dry and virtually sterile because we act against the inner fl.ow of life, instead of listening to the possibility which is lodged in the deep womb of the unconscious.

This time it was not even a personal session I had with Jung.

It was his birthday party and many people were around.

He was speaking a few words with each one.

When I greeted him, he said: 'Oh, the bridge-builder! I have heard that in America they now do the same thing that the natives in Africa did; they start to build a bridge from two sides and meet in the middle.'

And, with a twinkle in his eyes, he went on to say: ’It is not so important on which side of the bridge one stands-only to do good work.’

I had not mentioned a word of my private problem, but I got the answer-right to the point-out of Jung’s tremendous intuition.

We have Jung’s work; we have his books, his seminars, even a few films.

His enormous knowledge and wisdom are put down in those volumes, and we have to be very grateful for them.

But we have lost with his death the twinkle of his eyes-his laughter coming from the depth of his being.

There will be no more immediate reaction in joy or anger. His unique, and overwhelming, intuition is quiet.

And the world-those who knew him personally and those who knew about him-has lost one of the true wardens of conscience and responsibility. Anneliese Aumuller, Contact with Jung, Pages 190-193

To be asked to write about the personal stimulus and effect Jung has had on my life seemed at first a very easy request to fulfill.

The more I think about it the more difficult it becomes; what should I select?

Jung’s influence has many dimensions-from the spoken word to the tremendous, subtle effectiveness which radiated from his great personality-even if oceans, and years, prevented a personal encounter.

Thinking back at least thirty years, as a young student spending a few weeks in Zurich, I was invited to a social gathering.

There, by chance, Jung was present. By chance?

Well, Jean Gebser has something to say to this: ’People who believe that there is pure coincidence lose their lives to meaninglessness.

Each so-called coincidence adds to the exhilarating meaningfulness and inexhaustible richness of our lives, by making it more obvious that we are participants in the whole.’

So Jung was present; but at that time my knowledge of psychology and its great representatives was hardly more than that Jung had been a disciple of Freud’s and had parted company in order to follow his own discoveries.

There were about twenty people in the room, but it was Jung’s wonderful forehead that caught my eye.

And then he spoke-not about psychology, not at all about any deep science.

He talked about his experiences in Africa, his encounters with natives of practically every part of the world.

It was as if the walls of the room opened into the limitless horizon where everything could be possible. His voice seemed to belong to an ancient Chinese storyteller.

I found myself walking through the jungle with many new eyes open to the beauty of the early sunrise, the diamond glittering of the night’s dew.

I had numerous ears in order to hear the song and jubilation of strange, beautiful birds.

I could suddenly perceive the world with senses of whose existence I had never known before. Jung talked about superstition which, seen in this light, was great intuition; about instincts and phenomena far beyond all our school and book knowledge.

I got my first faint idea about symbolism, transcendence, and synchronicity without any one of those words even being mentioned.

It was my first encounter with Jung, and it opened doors for me which never closed again.

I did not immediately change my studies or plans, but a seed was planted that night which in due time made me become a Jungian analyst.

It was years before I saw Jung again.

The catastrophe of the Nazis and the second world war overshadowed the world.

People had to leave their countries, to change their professions; barriers were put up between states, countries, and families.

My task as an analyst seemed to take on a greater urgency-a need to help, to be active, to solve immediate difficulties.

So I thought!

Brimful of problems and, to me, important dreams, I went to Zurich.

Jung did not ask for my dreams, nor did he seem to have any idea how desperately I wanted to talk with him.

He just glanced at me, and then looked out of the window into his garden and started to tell me quiet little stories: about the long preparations the Bushmen took the evening before a hunt; of how many years of learning it took a disciple of Zen Buddhism before he dared to try to hit the target.

He also said something about the pitch-black darkness of a tower where there is no chance of any light, and what fertile ground that was for the unconscious to enfold.

I was rather close to despair when I left Jung and did not understand at all what he meant. That night I had the following dream:

I had a small, very dirty, iron ball, and my task was to polish it so that it would shine. I did my utmost.

I tried everything because it seemed terribly important to succeed.

The ball stayed dirty and dull.

Full of anger, I threw it in a comer.

After a while I heard a cat playing with something. Looking closer I saw a kitten circling around my ball and warming it with its soft fur. The ball shone like pure gold !

Next morning Jung greeted me with a little sarcastic smile saying, 'You were quite unhappy last night, and thought me a nasty un-understanding man, didn't you?'

I had to admit at least the latter.

Then Jung went on and told me very seriously that in our Western civilization we had very little idea about letting things happen.

He told me about the Chinese Wu-Wei, the balance or middle between activity and passivity.

1. Wilhelm and E. Rousselle translated this Wu-Wei as: 'Doing nothing, but also not doing nothing'; hard to understand-and terribly important for analytical practice.

When I went back to war-terror and fear, I had learnt not to jump immediately in medias res.

I no longer wanted to solve the problem or complex, but was able to smell the climate a little more-and to let things happen; even to let the patient leave in despair in order to give the unconscious a chance to say what it thought to be good.

I had gained the absolute conviction that the unconscious always knew better.

It was an entry into another dimension which Jung had let me experience.

Jung has so often emphasized that the analyst has to learn as 1 ,1 1 t 1 11 r .

much as possible \ too much, really, for most normal human beings). Psychology, philosophy, religion, mythology, anthropology, the knowledge of fairy tales of many countries, the rituals and ceremonies of different tribes-these he thought to be only the basic background for becoming an analyst.

But the life experience, the risk, the daring to explore he found the most important tools. He once said, scathingly:

'It is easy to say "No", to be cautious; even to say "No" to a much desired and tempting situation is much easier than to say "Yes" and take the full consequences.

Only that makes a fully mature human being-and that you must be if you want to become an analyst.’

One single encounter with Jung was so much more important than years of studying.

I want to add a third situation where a few short sentences from Jung gave me an entirely fresh, new, life orientation.

It was not so long ago that I found myself with a decision to make which seemed vital to me.

Working as an analyst in the United States, I wondered ifI should not go back to my own country and work there. We all know those situations where we try hard to solve something with our brains, and we become dry and virtually sterile because we act against the inner fl.ow of life, instead of listening to the possibility which is lodged in the deep womb of the unconscious.

This time it was not even a personal session I had with Jung.

It was his birthday party and many people were around.

He was speaking a few words with each one.

When I greeted him, he said: ’Oh, the bridge-builder! I have heard that in America they now do the same thing that the natives in Africa did; they start to build a bridge from two sides and meet in the middle.’

And, with a twinkle in his eyes, he went on to say: ’It is not so important on which side of the bridge one stands-only to do good work.’

I had not mentioned a word of my private problem, but I got the answer-right to the point-out of Jung's tremendous intuition.

We have Jung's work; we have his books, his seminars, even a few films.

His enormous knowledge and wisdom are put down in those volumes, and we have to be very grateful for them.

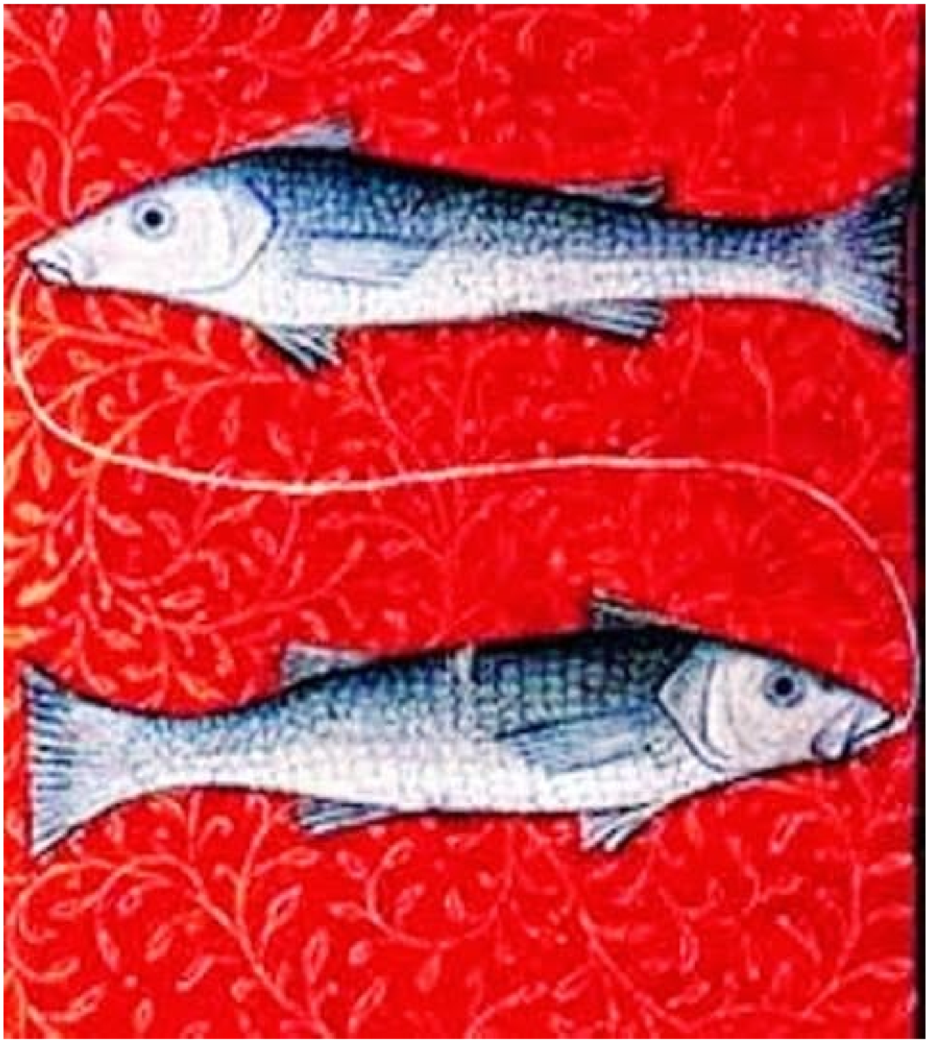
But we have lost with his death the twinkle of his eyes-his laughter coming from the depth of his being.

There will be no more immediate reaction in joy or anger. His unique, and overwhelming, intuition is quiet.

And the world-those who knew him personally and those who knew about him-has lost one of the true wardens of conscience and responsibility. Anneliese Aumuller, Contact with Jung, Pages 190-193

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+fordham+contact&qid=1575039723&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: "The comparison of the fishes with a yoke of oxen ploughing merits special attention." (2019-11-29 06:18)



[2]Aion (Collected Works of C.G. Jung)

The comparison of the fishes with a yoke of oxen ploughing merits special attention.

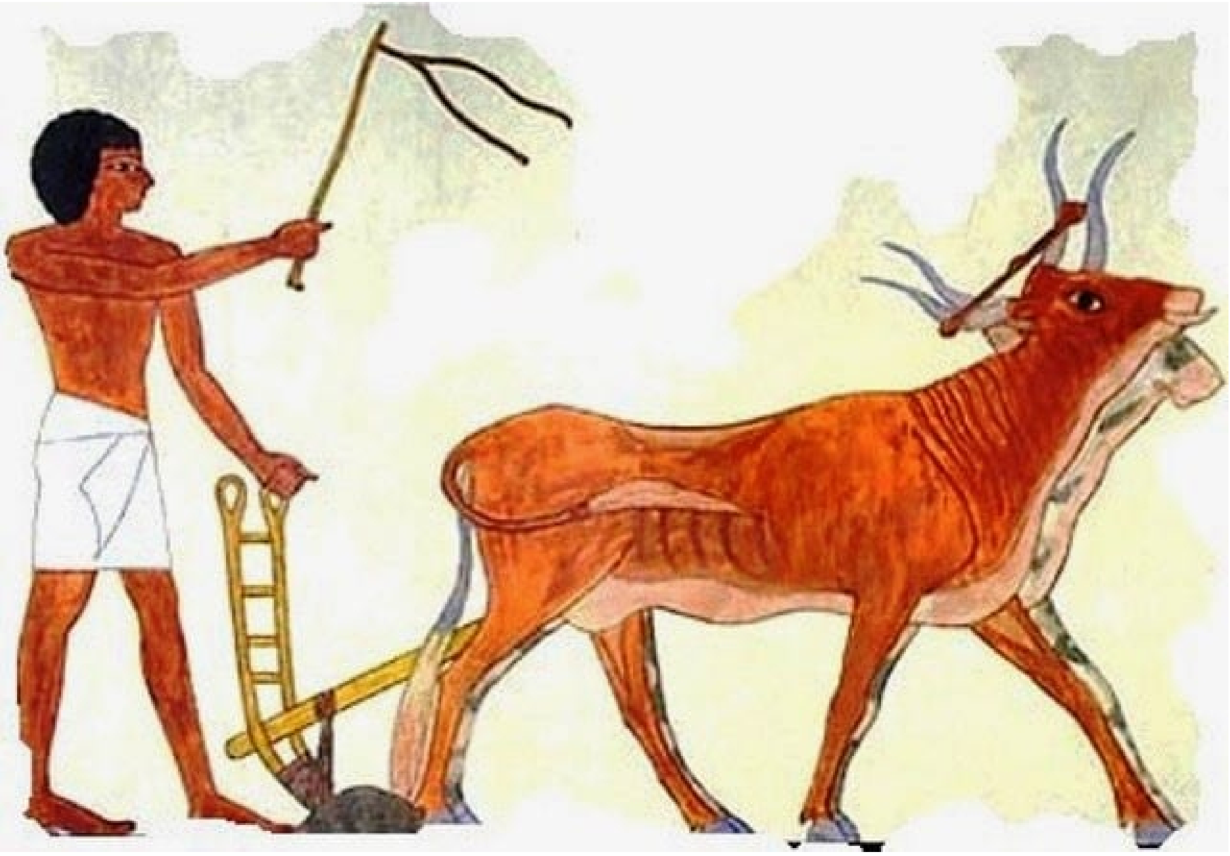
Oxen stand for the motive power of the plough. In the same way, the fishes represent the driving forces of the coming world of consciousness.

Since olden times the plough has stood for man's mastery over the earth: wherever man ploughs, he has wrested a patch of soil from the primal state and put it to his own use.

That is to say: the fishes will rule this world and subdue it by working astrologically through man and moulding his consciousness.

Oddly enough, the ploughing does not begin, like all other things, in the east, but in the west.

[3]



This motif turns up again in alchemy.

"Know," says Ripley, "that your beginning should be made towards sunset, and from there you should turn towards midnight, when the lights cease altogether to shine, and you should remain ninety nights in the dark fire of purgatory without light.

Then turn your course towards the east, and you will pass through many different colours," etc."

The alchemical work starts with the descent into darkness (nigredo), i.e., the unconscious.

The ploughing or mastery of the earth is undertaken "at the command of the Father."

[4]

The "fish" was used as a name for the God
who became a man.
C.G.Jung
Aion
www.jungcurrents.com
Image: Duccio di Buoninsegna

Thus God not only foresaw the enantiodromia that began in the year 1000, but also intended it.

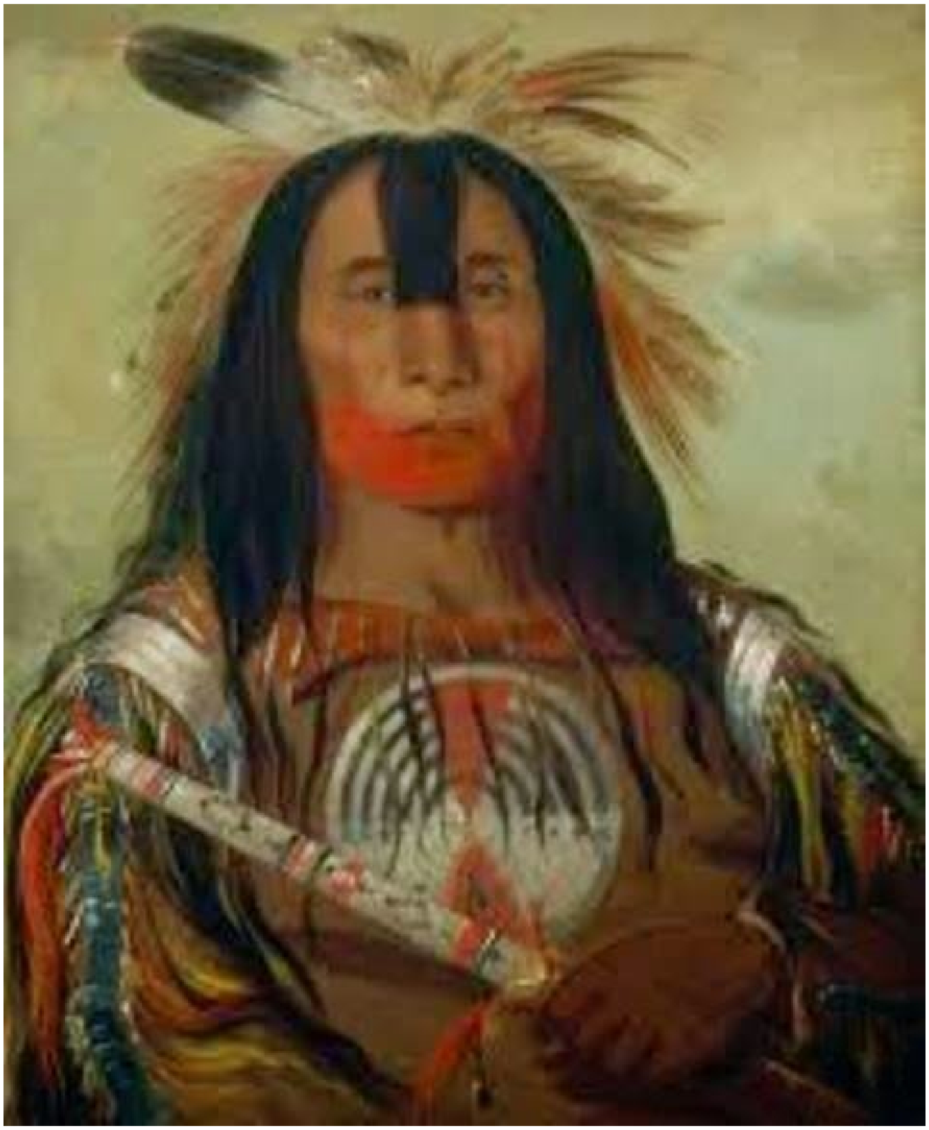
The Platonic month of the Fishes is to be ruled by two principles.

The fishes in our text are parallel, like the oxen, and point to the same goal, although one is Christ and the other the Antichrist. Carl Jung, Aion, Page 149, Para 231.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/10/b58ad-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/0415064767/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+aion&qid=1575039568&sr=8-2`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/10/ee350-3.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/10/90dc5-2.jpg`

Carl Jung on the “Chief” and the “Medicine Man.” (2019-11-30 03:57)

[1]



[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

Professor Jung:

In the life of a primitive tribe, these two personalities are really the decisive authorities.

The chief is violent; he is the strongest man of the tribe.

The moment he is no longer strong, he is killed on the spot.

In the New Testament there is also an example of the slaying of the former king: Christ is sacrificed, and Barabbas is set free.

This referred to an old custom, namely, that a criminal was allowed, on a certain day of the year, to freely walk around the town.

He could rob everything—provided that he was not caught after sunset, in which case he was killed.

He was a king, and had royal power.

This custom stemmed from the fact that the king has absolute authority as long as he is in power.

The moment he shows a slight weakness, he is finished.

Another example is the Nordic kings.

They were allowed to rule as long as the harvests were good.

If the harvest was bad, however, they were killed, because in that case they had not fertilized the country well.

It was uncomfortable to have been king of the primitives.

The counterpart of the powerful man is the medicine man; most often he is the intelligent one of the tribe.

I myself was able to notice that either he is the crazy one of the tribe, or a man of superior shrewdness, simply more intelligent than the others, or dangerous because of his cunning.

He has contact with the spirits and receives their revelations.

He can even rule the tribe, over the chief 's head, through divine revelation.

There is a wonderful example in the book of Rasmussen on the Polar Eskimos: There is a story told about a medicine man who, when his tribe suffered great hardship because of a lack of food, had a vision of a land offering food.

He persuaded his tribe to go with him over the ice of Baffin Bay.

They came to the shores of North America, where they found plenty of food.

One half of the tribe turned back before that, and perished.

The other half went with him, and was able to be saved by him.

He had the inner certainty of a sleepwalker, with the help of which he led his people to the right place.

This is what the medicine man can do. It need not always be cunning; the idea that will save the situation can also come from the heart, as in this case.

The prophets in the Old Testament also were such medicine men.

There often is a conflict between the chief and the medicine man.

The chief is often afraid of the medicine man.

I have experienced such a situation myself.

A chief wanted to tell me something about the medicine man.

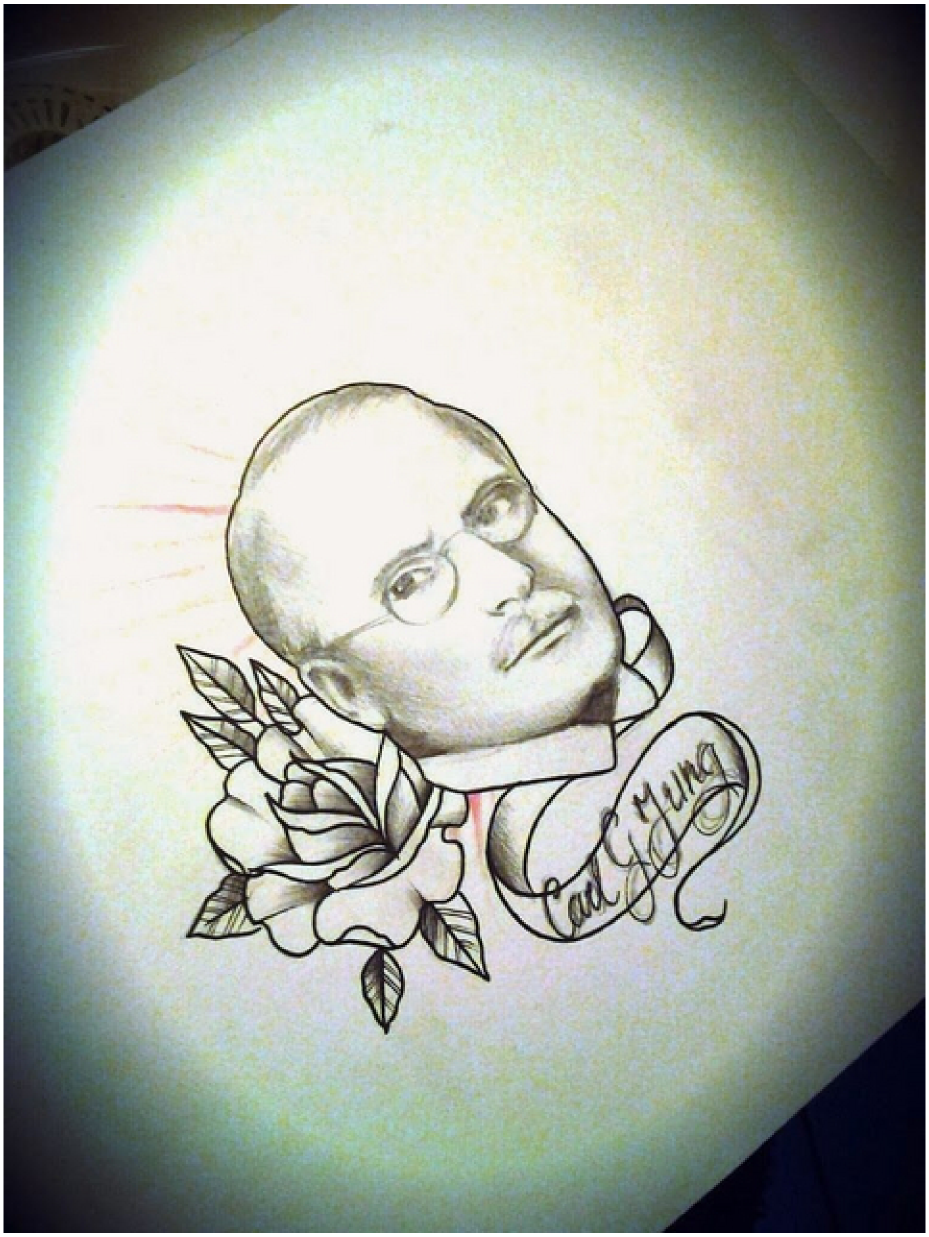
Out of fear he took me into the bush with him and posted sentinels.

He only whispered—when I asked him why he talked in such a low voice, he answered: “If the medicine man knew, he would poison me at once.” Carl Jung, Children’s Dreams Seminar, Pages 141-143.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d5f84-chief.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1575104296&sr=8-2`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/57656-medicine.jpg`

The Unconscious is not identical with God.... (2019-11-30 04:10)

[1]



Carl G Jung

[2]The Undiscovered Self: With Symbols and the Interpretation of Dreams

This is certainly not to say that what we call the unconscious is identical with God or is set up in his place.

It is the medium from which the religious experience seems to flow.

As to what the further cause of such an experience may be, the answer to this lies beyond the range of human knowledge. Knowledge of God is a transcendental problem. Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/4b72d-carls.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Undiscovered-Self-Symbols-Interpretation-Extracts/dp/0691150516/ref=tmm_pap_swatch_0?_encoding=UTF8&qid=1575105643&sr=1-1`

That religious experiences exist no longer needs proof. (2019-11-30 04:16)

[1]

[2]The Undiscovered Self: With Symbols and the Interpretation of Dreams

That religious experiences exist no longer needs proof.

But it will always remain doubtful whether what metaphysics and theology call God and the gods is the real ground of these experiences.

The question is idle, actually, and answers itself by reason of the subjectively overwhelming numinosity of the experience.

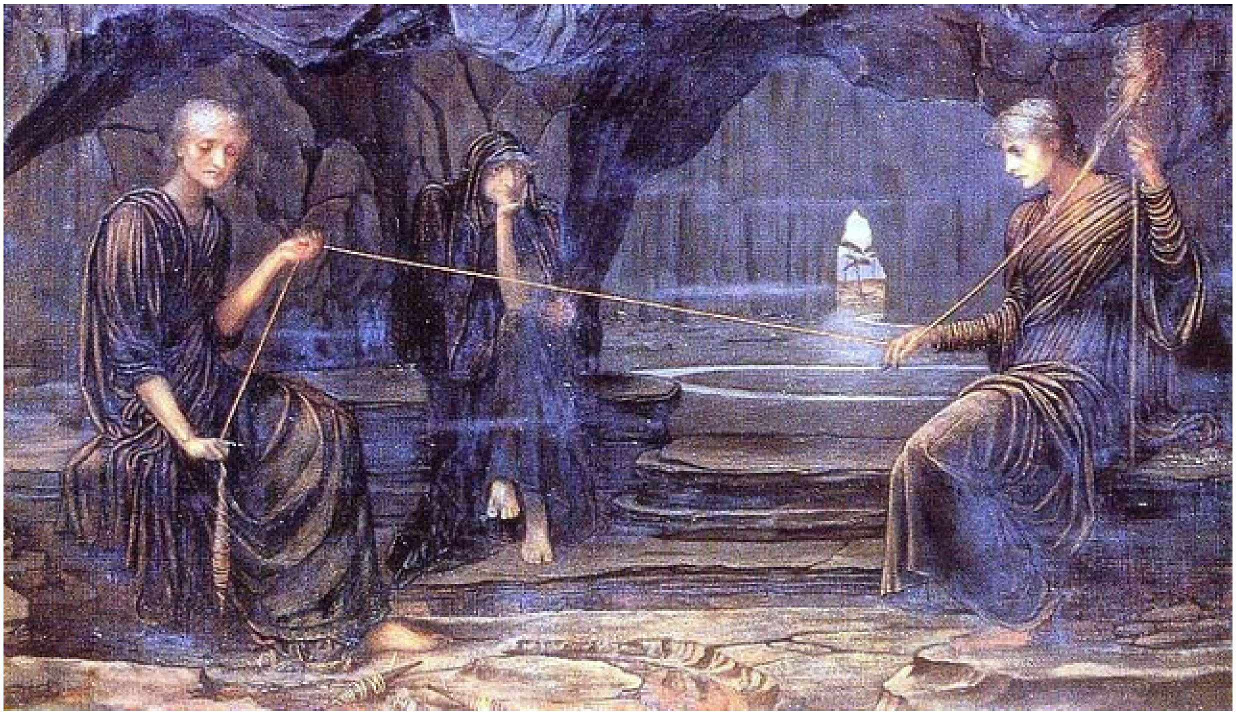
Anyone who has had it is seized by it and therefore not in a position to indulge in fruitless metaphysical or epistemological speculations.

Absolute certainty brings its own evidence and has no need of anthropomorphic proofs. Carl Jung, The Undiscovered Self.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/11/96c9a-souls.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Undiscovered-Self-Symbols-Interpretation-Extracts/dp/0691150516/ref=tmm_pap_swatch_0?_encoding=UTF8&qid=1575105643&sr=1-1`

Carl Jung on "Three" and "Time." (2019-11-30 04:30)

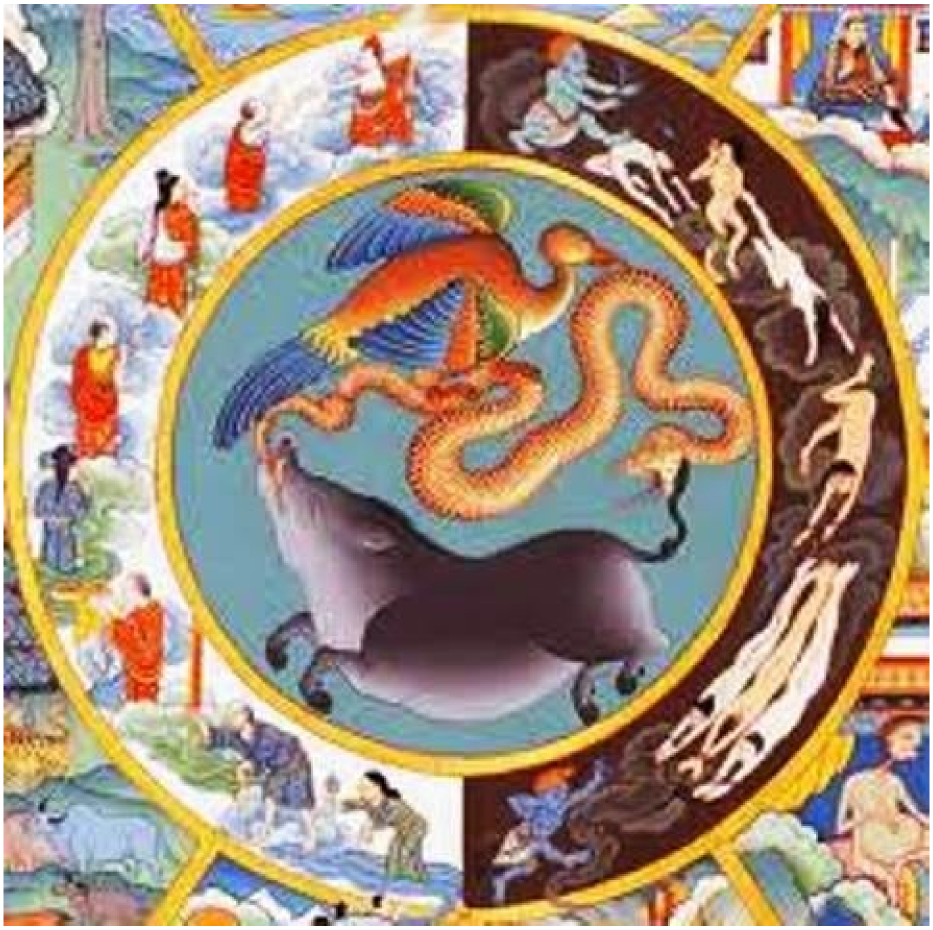
[1]



Participant: The three Fates represent the coming into being and the fading away of what happens.

Professor Jung: In Mahayana Buddhism, you will find the Three as the center of the carnal world: a cock, a snake, and a pig.

The cock is lust, the snake envy, and the pig ignorance.



These three are the roots of the world, these are the three causes of what happens in the world.

This can be found in the so-called Kilkor Mandala, which has these three figures at its center.

At Friday's lecture you heard about the visions of Mahasukha, and that he had three eyes to see the past, the present, and the future.

This shows that the Three stands in connection with time.

The Three is time, and time is always identical with the flow of energy.

We can conceive time only on the basis of movement.

There must be change to make time possible.

Proclus says: “Wherever there is creation, there is also time.”

The Neoplatonic god of creation is Chronos, that is, time.

This is the original form of Bergson’s idea of the durée créatrice.

Time has these two aspects: that which lies behind us, and that which lies ahead. Certain [American] Indians have only one word for time: day.

Pointing forward means tomorrow, pointing backward yesterday, and a movement downward today.

Threeness designates the course things take.

Time is identical with the course things take.

Time, as such, does not exist at all.

There is only the course things take, which we measure with the notion of time.

For primitive man, who is close to nature, the course of time is no abstraction.

For him there is only a then, a now, and a before.

He doesn't have a watch, does he, on whose numbers he could read the time.

He completely exists in that stream of events, which is permanently flowing into a dark hole, which comes to us from a dark future, which flows through us, and sinks into eternal darkness behind us.

Primitive man has no history; there is no history before the grandfather, prehistory lies only about three generations back.

The primitive is most deeply impressed by this strange stream of events, however, coming from the tomorrow, flowing through the today, and sinking into the yesterday.

For him this is a directly experienced fact of life.

This continuity of events is also at the basis of the Chinese concept of nature, according to which everything happening at a given moment is happening exactly as it has to.

You will find this idea in the Book of Changes, the I Ching.

When I throw a handful of peas, they will roll in all directions.

Try to interpret this, and you will understand the importance of the moment.

If you practice such a method to some extent, you will see how remarkably well the meaning of the I Ching matches the psychological situation.

It is more than a façon de parler.

It is a highly remarkable fact that can also be proven by data from astrology—which is not just superstition, provided you have the necessary experience.

Astrology has to do with stars only insofar as the course of events is measured with the help of them.

Telepathic experiences also belong here.

Some smart alecks say it's all nonsense, but most often they have never heard of such experiences, simply because this does not fit into their worldview.

All these phenomena of synchronicity—which are really striking once we pay attention to them—only mean that corresponding things are happening at the same moment.

This points to the substantiality of events in time.

It is an archaic experience such as that of expanded space.

We have seen that time has three aspects: past, present, and future.

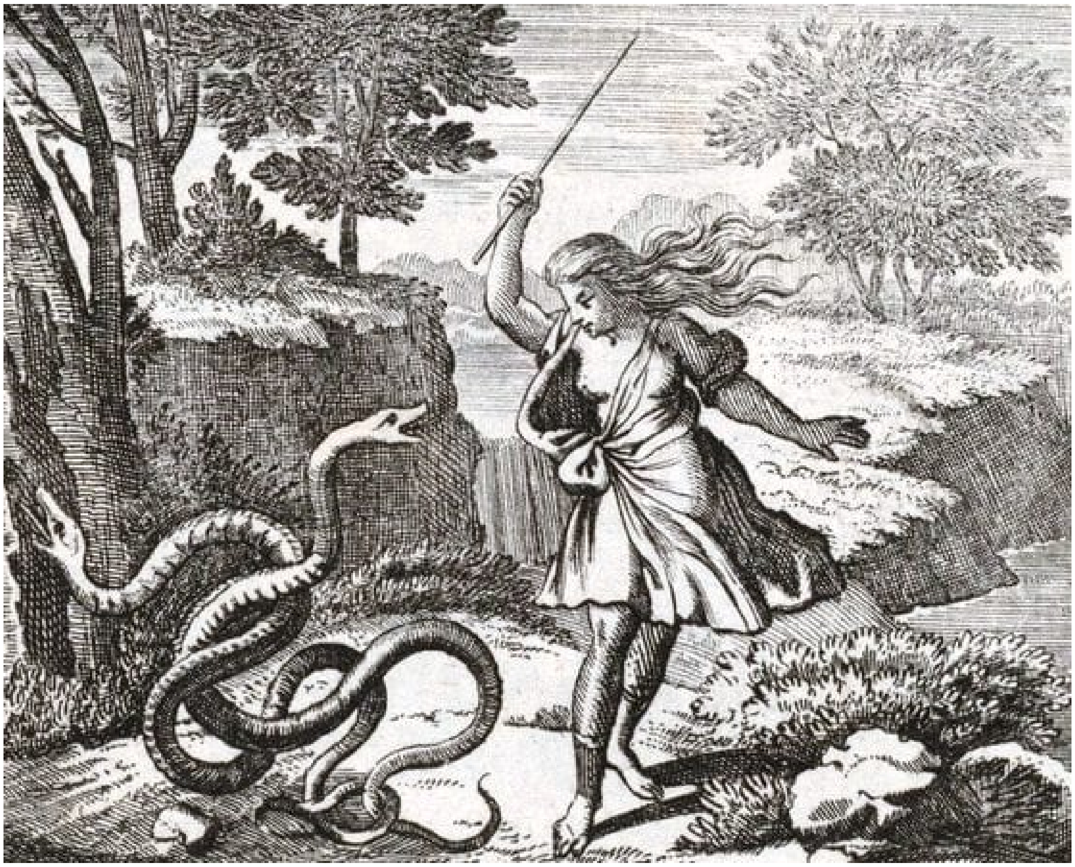
The three snakes in our dream are probably a reference to time.

Originally time itself was depicted as a snake, as in the Zodiacal snake.

Religious heroes were often portrayed in connection with time.

In the Upanishads, too, Prajapati is the year, is Chronos, the creator of the world.

[5]



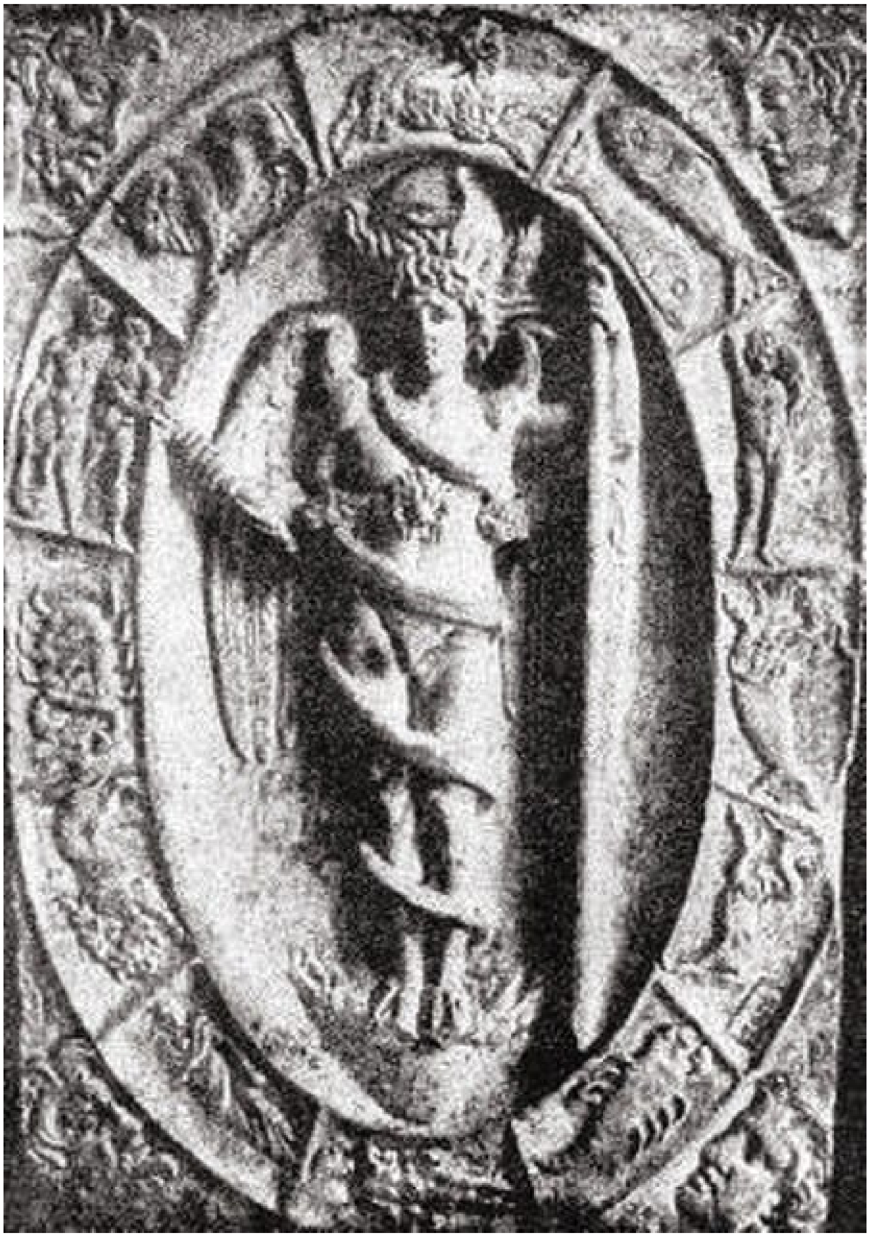
Christ is also the ecclesiastical year; in certain early Christian drawings he was depicted as a snake carrying the stars on its back—twelve stars representing the twelve disciples.

It is the time, the year with its twelve months.

Time symbolism also played a great role in the Mithras cult.

The figure of Aion usually stood at the main altar of the Mithras cult—he is a man with a lion's head, enveloped by the Zodiacal snake, Zrvan akarana, meaning "boundless time."

[6]



As you can see, there is ample evidence for the snake as a symbol of the passing of time.

In our dream, the child is told to go into this circle of snakes to transform herself.

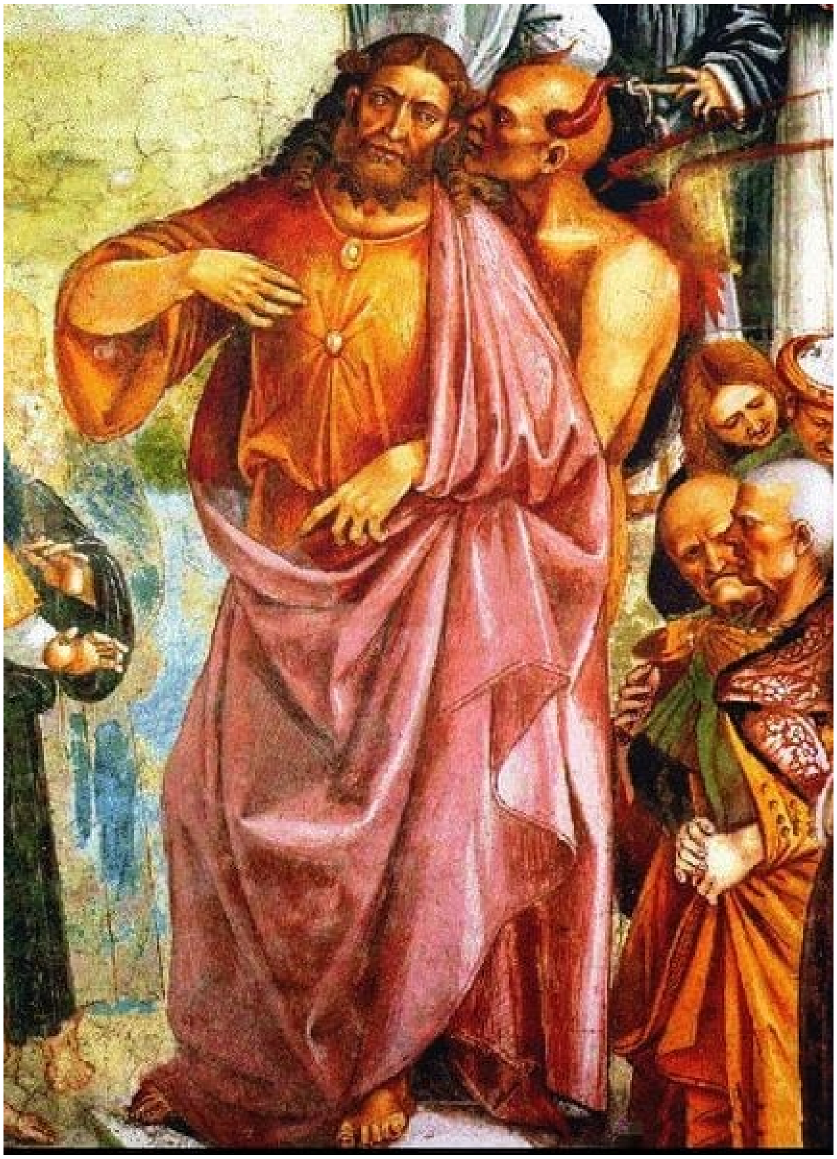
The transformation is inevitable because she is stepping into the fire with the corruptible body.

In our rational thinking this would equal self-destruction, but the irrational meaning is: transformation to immortality. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Pages 203-207.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/d4380-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+children&qid=1575123367&sr=8-2`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/bcd56-2.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/a4b7e-3.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/84b4c-5.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/cc733-4.jpg`

Carl Jung on the "Dechristianlzation" of our world... (2019-11-30 04:58)

[1]



[2]Aion: Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 2)

The dechristianlzation of our world, the Luciferian development of science and technology, and the frightful material and moral destruction left behind by the second World War have been compared more than once with the eschatological events foretold in the New Testament. These, as we know, are concerned with the coming of the Antichrist:

"This is Antichrist, who denieth the Father and the Son." 1 John 2:22

"Every spirit that dissolveth Jesus . . . is Antichrist ... of whom you have heard that he cometh." 1 John 4:4

The Apocalypse is full of expectations of terrible things that will take place at the end of time, before the marriage of the Lamb. This shows plainly that the “anima Christiana” has a sure knowledge not only of the existence of an adversary but also of his future usurpation of power.

Why my reader will ask do I discourse here upon Christ and his adversary, the Antichrist? Our discourse necessarily brings us to Christ, because he is the still living myth of our culture.

He is our culture hero, who, regardless of his historical existence, embodies the myth of the divine Primordial Man, the mystic Adam.

It is he who occupies the center of the Christian mandala, who is the Lord of the Tetramorph, i.e., the four symbols of the evangelists, which are like the four columns of his throne. He is in us and we in him.

His kingdom is the pearl of great price, the treasure buried in the field, the grain of mustard seed which will become a great tree, and the heavenly.

These few, familiar references should be sufficient to make the psychological position of the Christ symbol quite clear. Christ exemplifies the archetype of the self. Carl Jung, Aion, Christ, A Symbol of the Self, Pages 36-37.

Footnote 2: I John 4:3 (DV). The traditional view of the Church is based on II Thessalonians 2: which speaks of the apostasy, of the (man of lawlessness) and the (son of perdition) who herald the coming of the Lord.

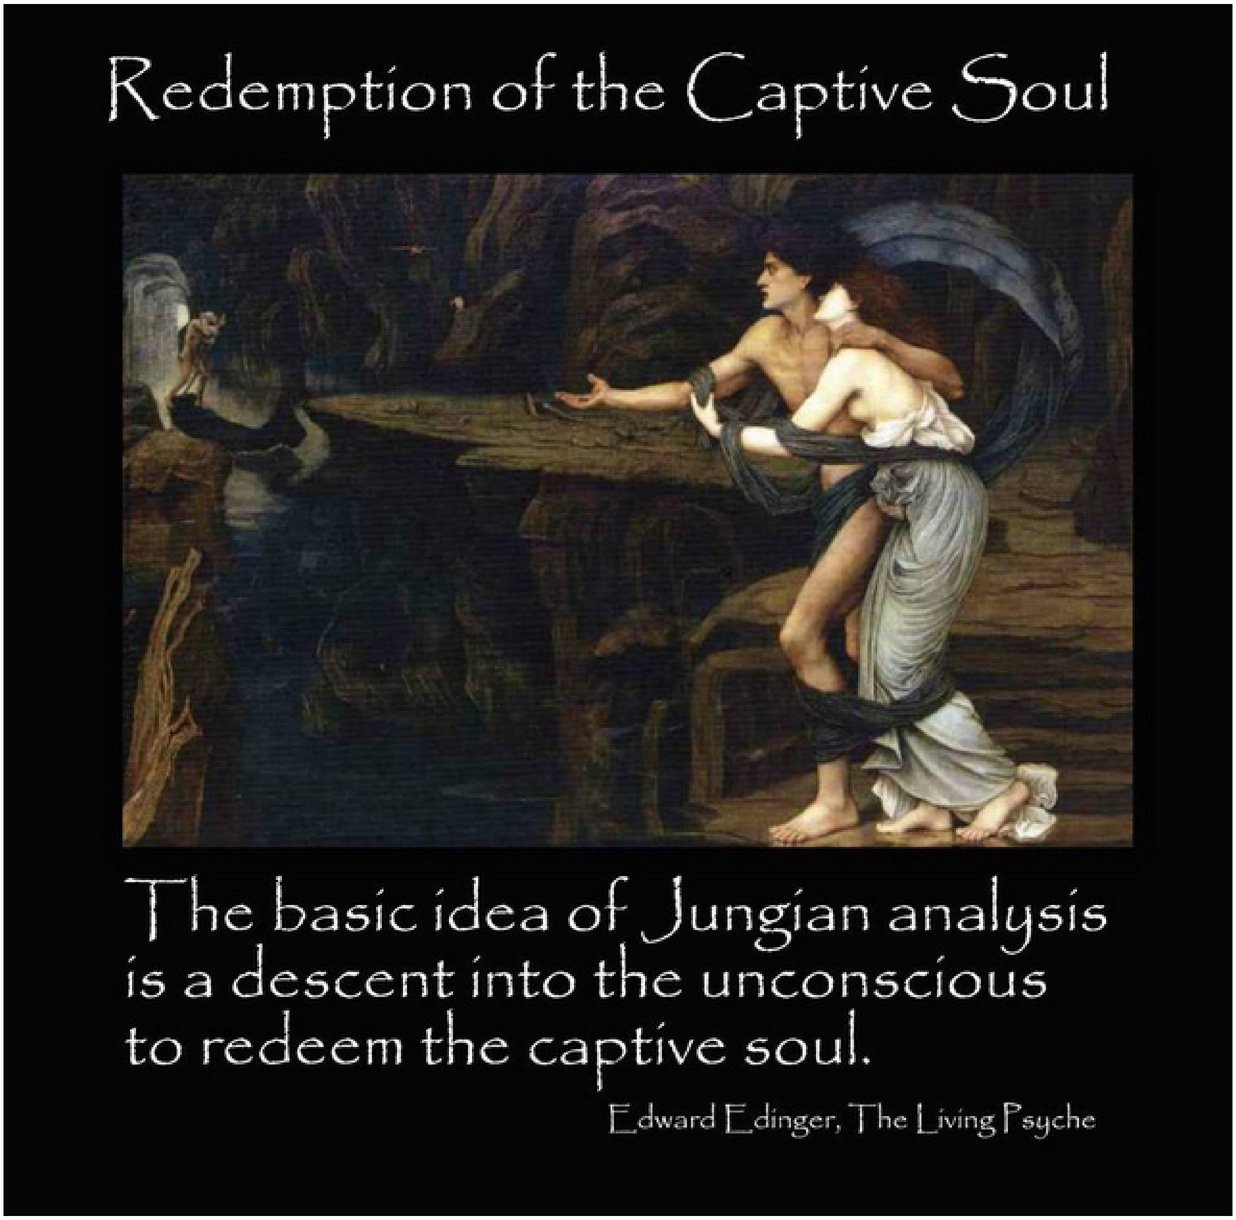
This "lawless one" will set himself up in the place of God, but will finally be slain by the Lord Jesus "with the breath of his mouth." He will work wonders (according to the working of Satan).

Above all, he will reveal himself by his lying and deceitfulness. Daniel 11: is regarded as a prototype.

Image: Antichrist and the Devil. From the Deeds of the Antichrist, fresco by Luca Signorelli, c. 1501

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/10/5528a-anti.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/069101826X/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+aion&qid=1575123200&sr=8-1`

Edward F. Edinger: "Redemption of the Captive Soul." (2019-11-30 05:16)



Redemption of the Captive Soul
The basic idea of Jungian analysis is a descent into the unconscious to redeem the captive soul.
Edward Edinger, The Living Psyche

[2]Living Psyche: A Jungian Analysis in Pictures Psychotherapy

The Awakening in the Whore House

Description: (from a dream) I descend to the basement of a whore house run by a brutal man.

I discover a bruised and battered young woman who nevertheless had a glowing beauty.

I kiss her and awaken her.

I am overcome momentarily with a sense of compassion for her, for me, for the pathos of the human condition.

The tough owner stands at the top of the staircase.

Comment: This image expresses the basic idea of analysis-descent into the unconscious to redeem the captive soul.

There are many examples-the fairy tale of "Sleeping Beauty," Orpheus and Eurydice and, most profound of all, the Gnostic myth of Sophia caught in the dark embrace of matter. [48]

In the Pistis Sophia we read that Sophia looked down from her world of light onto the dark world and saw light in it.

She thought it to be part of the higher heavenly light but actually it came from the "Self-willed," the rebellious one.

So she was seduced

“and came into the regions of the chaos and drew nigh to that lion-faced light-power to devour it.

But all the material emanations of Self-willed surrounded her, and the great lion-faced light-power devoured all the light-powers in Sophia . . . and her matter was thrust into chaos. . . .”

And Pistis Sophia cried out most exceedingly, she cried to the Light of Lights which she had seen from the beginning. . . . "Save me, O Light, for evil thoughts have entered into me." [49] Edward F. Edinger, The Living Psyche, Page 91.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/10/e02f8-1captive.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Living-Psyche-Analysis-Pictures-Psychotherapy/dp/1630510815/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=edinger+living+psyche&qid=1575123046&sr=8-1`

Cary F. Baynes Quotations in the 1925 Seminar (2019-11-30 05:19)

Introduction to Jungian
Psychology
Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925
C.G.
JUNG
Revised with a new introduction and updates by
SONU SHAMDASANI, editor of THE RED BOOK
Original edition edited by WILLIAM McGUIRE

[1]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925

So then you said I was to copy down the contents of the Red Book—once before you had had it copied, but you had since then added a great deal of material, so you wanted it done again and you would explain things to me as I went along, for you understood nearly everything in it you said.

In this way we could come to discuss many things which never came up in my analysis and I could understand your ideas from the foundation. Cary F. Baynes, The Red Book, Page 213.

When I asked Baynes if he would not like a seminar on the Red Book I had nothing other in mind than what you were doing with him.

Since I began to read it I have thought it would be a very fine thing, if instead of your discussing it with me as you said you would, Mona Lisa should be included too.

Perhaps she knows all that is in it so well, and understands it so completely that this would not appeal to her, but I thought it would . . . he [Peter Baynes] asked me . . .why it was such a problem with me about publishing the Red Book.

I could have slapped him sharply by saying it was a problem to me because you had so presented it . . . then you told him your own idea about it, and he was thoroughly non-plussed.

. . . When I said I wanted to hear you speak of the Red Book out of doors and you willed to think I had in mind a pink tea, I struck back at you in kind, and said that if the Red Book was not big enough to be talked about out of doors, then you would have to do something about it. Cary F. Baynes Diary, June 5, 1924.

After talking with Emma about the notes and finding that her reaction to the printing of them is just what my own was, all my resistances to that idea have now come back upon me very strongly, and I would like to put the matter before you once more.

I think those lectures you gave last spring are the most important thing that has happened in psychology in this century, because in them you give the passage of an idea from its place in nature as an archetype, to the position of an abstraction, or a concept, the last refinement of human ingenuity, you might say.

Such a thing has never ever even been dreamed of in the world before, much less done, and therefore I think those lectures ought to be treated in a way that befits the importance of their content.

But you will say, what better way is there of treating them than having them printed?

But I think the printing of them just exactly falsifies them in a very painful way.

It is generally accepted that when a thing is printed it is to be looked upon as in a more or less permanent form, but those notes are in no form at all, they could not be, and do not profess to be more than a schematic rehearsal of what you said.

They partake of the nature of the sculptor's ébauche [mock up] in clay, and as such they have magic, but as soon as they are forced into something they are not, the magic goes out of them and they go flat.

Moreover, when you make something with spoken words, you can build extraordinary structures in a short space of time, but when it comes to the written or rather the printed word, the structures have to have visible foundations under them if they are to carry, that is in the field of science.

Now all three series of lectures, Swanage, those here, and Cornwall, are filled with fugitive thoughts that flew with sureness when you spoke them, but go limping across the pages of the notes with only half a wing-power.

If you wrote them they would fly again, but as notes they won't, and so it is another reason I think they ought not to be presented with the formality that printing gives them.

They should be kept just as they are, rough laboratory material, until such time as you will work up the ideas in them into a book which you will undoubtedly do in the course of time.

The best way to keep them in their place seems to be to have them mimeographed and given only to members of the class with a half a dozen exceptions such as Baynes, Shaw and a few others like that. . .

Last spring when I talked to you about it, you would look at it only as a harmless phantasy of Ward's, this printing idea.

I have no doubt you thought the same thing when Hinkle proposed translating the Wandlung [Transformations and Symbols of the Libido], but look how far from harmless that phantasy proved to be! Cary F. Baynes Diary, September 26, 1925

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+1925&qid=1575122930&sr=8-1`

Margit Van Leight Frank Reflections on Spirit and Pseudo-Spirit (2019-11-30 05:38)

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

When I was asked to contribute to this volume with a description of what constituted for me the greatest stimulus in Jung's thought, I did not have a moment's hesitation, because I felt the same enthusiasm which I felt when I first encountered Jung's writing.

What came to mind immediately was the word 'spirit', and I recalled the opening up of a new world by learning to consider the psyche not as an epiphenomenon but as existing in its own right and being of vital importance.

There are, of course, numerous other impressive and important ideas of Jung's; new ideas, some daring, some grossly misunderstood, which had and still have their impact.

His theory embracing concepts concerning the depths and heights of human nature, spreading like an intricate net 'downwards' and 'upwards' on the psychic scale, into the prehistoric roots of mankind to the supra-personal realm of the spirit-is, in spite of its complexity, of sound dynamic wholeness.

It is knit together organically just as it has grown empirically. It is generally recognized that the richness of Jung's contributions is such that it will probably take generations to work out their full implications.

Jung did not systematize his work.

He stood firmly in the stream of life and refused to live in an ivory tower of abstract thought, divorced from reality.

Life, in the last analysis, is not completely comprehensible in the sense that our intellect can fit its varied ramifications into a rational system.

Similarly, the human psyche in its depths and what pertains to it cannot be captured in a system. It holds life's essence; and the psychic function in relation to consciousness is in the service of existence.

The greatest stimulus for me, in terms of enthusiasm and release of energy, was no doubt the fact that Jung related spirit, Geist, to depth psychology, and that his wide vision was marked by a deep reverence for the psyche.

The development and integration (individuation) of personality are seen by Jung as a task beyond the 'natural' order, a task vital not only for the individual but for mankind, in fact the most urgent task for contemporary man.

The recognition of the implications struck me like lightning, illuminating a landscape which had been dark.

The darkness fell over it again-but it was never the same: there had been light, the landscape had been seen, though it had been a glimpse only.

For a brief moment I had perceived a totality with intuitive certainty; now it remained to acquire the light, as a condition of seeing and developing the potential to use the full range of vision, and to focus properly.

It was not only an exciting experience; it was exhilarating to feel oneself in this world whose added dimension I had glimpsed.

The trivialities of life fell into place; values had been found; a choice could now be made.

My personal encounter with Jung occurred in the middle ’thirties when he had already worked out most of his theories, and it was unforgettable.

He was steady and calm like a rock, relaxed like a reed, jovial like a benevolent father, radiating vitality of thought, soul, and body like a man.

He conveyed in tangible form in his own person and in life the reality of what it is to be centered.

There was nothing forced about him, nothing calculated to impress, there was no false note.

What vibrated forth was a certainty of value and strength rooted in that knowledge.

Most outstanding was his non-intellectual approach to life and its problems.

He was wide open to meet all experience with direct spontaneity of response, and unbiased by what he termed collective consciousness towards whatever was presented to him in matters concerning the psyche.

It is difficult to describe the intensity of his being-present when one faced him.

It was good to feel, though, and a spark of it kindled one’s life-force. To me, as to many others whose life-van force was low, whose world was at that time dimly lit and vaguely responded to, the simple directness of this impact was overwhelming.

One wished almost never to have met Jung, yet one would not forget it ever.

In contrast to what Jung represented what man can aim at, what possibilities he has, and what still remained to be approximated-one’s present wretchedness stood naked before one.

The urge arose simply to die-or, to live towards and for what is incorruptible.

Perhaps this ambivalence meant symbolically not an either/or, but both.

The incorruptible value was gradually revealed to me as exactly what had so deeply impressed me as a concept.

But here it was: a reality to be found within every psyche and to be in reach of every man if he ceases to judge it as the most ’insignificant subject’ just because it is intangible.

It became empirically true that spirit is the function that makes man truly human.

I am using ’spirit’ here according to Jung (1948, C. W., pp. 208 ff.), as antithesis to stasis and inertia (the classical concept of matter), opposite to nature in the sense of the instinctual and biological sphere of the psyche.

I consider it also as an ’immaterial substance’ seen as the vehicle of psychic phenomena, of life itself I include the sum total of all the phenomena of rational thought, or of h,tel1ert, including will, memory, imaginatioin, pmver, and inspiration motivated by ideals.

I will omit here any reflection upon the strictly religious aspect of spirit.

Now I will touch briefly upon an aspect of my theme which always was a concern of Jung’s (since I have known him) and the implications of which have become a universal concern in our time.

It is the apparently two-faced and paradoxical quality of the spirit.

Seen from the standpoint of depth psychology, spirit is incorruptible because as a ’psychic dominant’ or archetype it always was and simply is; as it is rooted, like all archetypes, in the objective (collective) unconscious.

It acts as a functional complex whose dynamic effects manifest themselves in consciousness in one way or another depending, most decisively, upon the individual’s attitude; that is, upon the degree of consciousness and his relation to his unconscious.

As such, nobody can deny the spirit’s reality or try to negate it in his own existence without serious psychological consequences.

Reflections on Spirit and Pseudo-spirit Its dynamic presses towards expression in consciousness.

If not allowed authentic expression, its energy value becomes displaced and the person becomes addicted to ’spirit-substitutes’ including ’isms’ of all sorts.

I caruiot here go into the involved dynamic equilibrium the spirit serves to maintain in the unconscious, nor its transformative effect.

I will confine my reflections to certain outward manifestations and indicate their relation to the ’pseudo-spirit’.

One basic fact has to be stressed: that the inner life, the life of the spirit, unfolds according to definite laws and that it follows its own order.

Jung’s work bears evidence that the psyche is not a chaos made up of random whims and accidents, but is an objective reality: ’The elusiveness, capriciousness, haziness, and uniqueness that the lay mind always associates with the idea of the psyche applies only to consciousness, and not to the absolute unconscious .... ’ (r954, C. W., p. 230).

We cannot rely, therefore, upon the supremacy of an exclusively conscious, rational order based upon an undifferentiated consciousness.

It is the psyche which is ’the world’s pivot’. It is the psyche which brings about ’ . . . an intervention in the existing natural order’ of which ’no one can say with certainty where this intervention will finally end’ (ibid., p. 2r7).

The reality of the psyche stands over against ’common sense’, which tends to blunt the spirit and lull man into security.

In the historical development of the image of our world and the universe, common sense had been wrong, and physics had, every now and then, to correct it.

It does so up to this day when the fastest revolutionary adaptation known so far has to be made: to a new concept of time and space, and to the manifold possibilities man has at present.

Progress in all fields of natural science and technology is of such magnitude that it has more than a pragmatic bearing.

It represents an expansion of life which can be thought of as equivalent to a step in evolution.

Man’s voice and image can be carried over space and time, penetrating ’matter’.

He can communicate with others while they are projected into the orbit of this earth and moving with the necessary speed.

He can observe such a living being, listen to his heart-beat, follow the course of his physiological functions.

He can observe and register almost whatever he chooses.

Those abilities, to mention only a few, reason refused to grant even to a god.

A great deal of what had been intangible for the range of our senses has become tangible reality by means of more sensitive instruments created by the ingenuity of man, that is to say, by his reflection and creative intuition which are qualities of the spirit.

At present, we have to face the fact that it depends upon man's psychic condition whether he will use the results of science in the service of progression or of regression.

Not only does he gain power to explore outer space and use atomic energy, but also the world of the infinitesimal is opening up in similar dimensions.

He will, most likely, in the near future be able to influence and plan his own evolution by directed effects upon the genes.

It is true: 'Unconsciousness (for contemporary man) is a sort of ontological inferiority or evil ... ' (Chardin, 1959, p. 248).

Our materialistic outlook seduces us to ignore the fact that while ' . . . physics . . . is in a position to detonate mathematical formulae, [the latter still are] the product of pure psychic activity.'

Jung reminds us, however, that man ' ... himself did not create the spirit, rather the spirit makes him creative . . . ' Nor does man have the spirit.

'In reality it has him . . . it possesses him in exactly the same way that his physical world appears to be the willing object of his designs and yet in reality turns into an obsessive idee force . . . Spirit threatens the naive-minded man with inflation . . . The danger becomes all the greater the more our interest fastens upon external objects and the more we forget that the differentiation of our relation to nature should go hand in hand with a correspondingly differentiated relation to the spirit .... If the outer object is not offset by an inner, unbridled materialism results, coupled with maniacal arrogance or else the extinction of the autonomous personality, which is in any case the ideal of the totalitarian mass state' (cf. Jung, 1948, C. W., p. 213).

The spirit is thus ’a great help and equally great danger.

It seems as if man were destined to play a decisive role in solving [its twofaced and paradoxical quality] ... by virtue of his consciousness .... ’ (Jung, 1954, C. W., p. 222).

Reflections on Spirit and Pseudo-spirit As long as we have not done this, we should not be surprised to find the cultural vehicle, in which we expect to zoom ahead, in reverse gear.

But most of us are perplexed: in spite of our expectation of greater closeness with and understanding of human beings, we find ourselves more separated and estranged by all sorts of ’isms’.

Instead of abundant enthusiasm of consciousness and reflective perception, we find mechanization engulfing the spirit in a mass-psyche.

No doubt, these are manifestations of pseudo-spirit since: ’The archetype is spirit or pseudo-spirit :1 what it ultimately proves to be depends on the attitude of the human mind’ (Jung, 1954, CW p. 206).

An attitude depends, of course, upon the degree and quality of consciousness: the more consciousness is developed, the more differentiated it becomes and the more it can differentiate in turn.

In contrast, as long as man is ’absorbed by the opinions and tendencies of collective consciousness’ he is the ’ever-ready victim of some wretched "isms"’ and of the pseudo-spirit.

This is so because all ’isms’ are ’sophisticated spirit-substitutes’, that is, substitutes for the lost link with psychic reality.

But instead of establishing the missing link with psychic reality, spirit substitutes destroy the meaning of the individual and culture in general.

An addict of any ’ism’ is dangerous to himself and others like a primitive man living in a technically highly developed society.

Since this is being written with the deepest appreciation of Jung, the creative thinker, physician of the mind, and teacher, I am closing with words of his, relevant to the above:

’True, the archetype of the spirit is capable of working for good as well as for evil, but it depends upon man’s free-i.e. conscious decision whether the good also will be perverted into something satanic.

Man’s worst sin is unconsciousness, but it is indulged in with the greatest piety even by those who should serve mankind as teachers and examples.

When shall we stop taking man for granted in this barbarous manner, and in all seriousness seek ways and means to exorcize him, to rescue him from possession and unconsciousness, and make this the most vital task of civilization?

Can we not understand that all the outward tinkerings and improvements do not touch man’s inner nature, and that everything ultimately depends upon whether the man who wields the science and the technics is capable of responsibility or not?’ (Jung, 1948, C.W., p. 48). Margit Van Leight Frank, Contact with Jung, Pages 194-200

[2]https://www.nytimes.com/1989/02/11/obituaries/margit-van-leight-frank- 91-psychologist.html

When I was asked to contribute to this volume with a description of what constituted for me the greatest stimulus in Jung’s thought, I did not have a moment’s hesitation, because I felt the same enthusiasm which I felt when I first encountered Jung’s writing.

What came to mind immediately was the word ’spirit’, and I recalled the opening up of a new world by learning to consider the psyche not as an epiphenomenon but as existing in its own right and being of vital importance.

There are, of course, numerous other impressive and important ideas of Jung's; new ideas, some daring, some grossly misunderstood, which had and still have their impact.

His theory embracing concepts concerning the depths and heights of human nature, spreading like an intricate net 'downwards' and 'upwards' on the psychic scale, into the prehistoric roots of mankind to the supra-personal realm of the spirit-is, in spite of its complexity, of sound dynamic wholeness.

It is knit together organically just as it has grown empirically. It is generally recognized that the richness of Jung's contributions is such that it will probably take generations to work out their full implications.

Jung did not systematize his work.

He stood firmly in the stream of life and refused to live in an ivory tower of abstract thought, divorced from reality.

Life, in the last analysis, is not completely comprehensible in the sense that our intellect can fit its varied ramifications into a rational system.

Similarly, the human psyche in its depths and what pertains to it cannot be captured in a system. It holds life's essence; and the psychic function in relation to consciousness is in the service of existence.

The greatest stimulus for me, in terms of enthusiasm and release of energy, was no doubt the fact that Jung related spirit, Geist, to depth psychology, and that his wide vision was marked by a deep reverence for the psyche.

The development and integration (individuation) of personality are seen by Jung as a task beyond the 'natural' order, a task vital not only for the individual but for mankind, in fact the most urgent task for contemporary man.

The recognition of the implications struck me like lightning, illuminating a landscape which had been dark.

The darkness fell over it again-but it was never the same: there had been light, the landscape had been seen, though it had been a glimpse only.

For a brief moment I had perceived a totality with intuitive certainty; now it remained to acquire the light, as a condition of seeing and developing the potential to use the full range of vision, and to focus properly.

It was not only an exciting experience; it was exhilarating to feel oneself in this world whose added dimension I had glimpsed.

The trivialities of life fell into place; values had been found; a choice could now be made.

My personal encounter with Jung occurred in the middle ’thirties when he had already worked out most of his theories, and it was unforgettable.

He was steady and calm like a rock, relaxed like a reed, jovial like a benevolent father, radiating vitality of thought, soul, and body like a man.

He conveyed in tangible form in his own person and in life the reality of what it is to be centered.

There was nothing forced about him, nothing calculated to impress, there was no false note.

What vibrated forth was a certainty of value and strength rooted in that knowledge.

Most outstanding was his non-intellectual approach to life and its problems.

He was wide open to meet all experience with direct spontaneity of response, and unbiased by what he termed collective consciousness towards whatever was presented to him in matters concerning the psyche.

It is difficult to describe the intensity of his being-present when one faced him.

It was good to feel, though, and a spark of it kindled one's life-force. To me, as to many others whose life-van force was low, whose world was at that time dimly lit and vaguely responded to, the simple directness of this impact was overwhelming.

One wished almost never to have met Jung, yet one would not forget it ever.

In contrast to what Jung represented what man can aim at, what possibilities he has, and what still remained to be approximated-one's present wretchedness stood naked before one.

The urge arose simply to die-or, to live towards and for what is incorruptible.

Perhaps this ambivalence meant symbolically not an either/or, but both.

The incorruptible value was gradually revealed to me as exactly what had so deeply impressed me as a concept.

But here it was: a reality to be found within every psyche and to be in reach of every man if he ceases to judge it as the most 'insignificant subject' just because it is intangible.

It became empirically true that spirit is the function that makes man truly human.

I am using 'spirit' here according to Jung (1948, C. W., pp. 208 ff.), as antithesis to stasis and inertia (the classical concept of matter), opposite to nature in the sense of the instinctual and biological sphere of the psyche.

I consider it also as an 'immaterial substance' seen as the vehicle of psychic phenomena, of life itself I include the sum total of all the phenomena of rational thought, or of h,tel1ert, including will, memory, imaginatioin, pmver, and inspiration motivated by ideals.

I will omit here any reflection upon the strictly religious aspect of spirit.

Now I will touch briefly upon an aspect of my theme which always was a concern of Jung’s (since I have known him) and the implications of which have become a universal concern in our time.

It is the apparently two-faced and paradoxical quality of the spirit.

Seen from the standpoint of depth psychology, spirit is incorruptible because as a ’psychic dominant’ or archetype it always was and simply is; as it is rooted, like all archetypes, in the objective (collective) unconscious.

It acts as a functional complex whose dynamic effects manifest themselves in consciousness in one way or another depending, most decisively, upon the individual’s attitude; that is, upon the degree of consciousness and his relation to his unconscious.

As such, nobody can deny the spirit’s reality or try to negate it in his own existence without serious psychological consequences.

Reflections on Spirit and Pseudo-spirit Its dynamic presses towards expression in consciousness.

If not allowed authentic expression, its energy value becomes displaced and the person becomes addicted to ’spirit-substitutes’ including ’isms’ of all sorts.

I caruiot here go into the involved dynamic equilibrium the spirit serves to maintain in the unconscious, nor its transformative effect.

I will confine my reflections to certain outward manifestations and indicate their relation to the ’pseudo-spirit’.

One basic fact has to be stressed: that the inner life, the life of the spirit, unfolds according to definite laws and that it follows its own order.

Jung's work bears evidence that the psyche is not a chaos made up of random whims and accidents, but is an objective reality: 'The elusiveness, capriciousness, haziness, and uniqueness that the lay mind always associates with the idea of the psyche applies only to consciousness, and not to the absolute unconscious .... ' (r954, C. W., p. 230).

We cannot rely, therefore, upon the supremacy of an exclusively conscious, rational order based upon an undifferentiated consciousness.

It is the psyche which is 'the world's pivot'. It is the psyche which brings about ' . . . an intervention in the existing natural order' of which 'no one can say with certainty where this intervention will finally end' (ibid., p. 2r7).

The reality of the psyche stands over against 'common sense', which tends to blunt the spirit and lull man into security.

In the historical development of the image of our world and the universe, common sense had been wrong, and physics had, every now and then, to correct it.

It does so up to this day when the fastest revolutionary adaptation known so far has to be made: to a new concept of time and space, and to the manifold possibilities man has at present.

Progress in all fields of natural science and technology is of such magnitude that it has more than a pragmatic bearing.

It represents an expansion of life which can be thought of as equivalent to a step in evolution.

Man's voice and image can be carried over space and time, penetrating 'matter'.

He can communicate with others while they are projected into the orbit of this earth and moving with the necessary speed.

He can observe such a living being, listen to his heart-beat, follow the course of his physiological functions.

He can observe and register almost whatever he chooses.

Those abilities, to mention only a few, reason refused to grant even to a god.

A great deal of what had been intangible for the range of our senses has become tangible reality by means of more sensitive instruments created by the ingenuity of man, that is to say, by his reflection and creative intuition which are qualities of the spirit.

At present, we have to face the fact that it depends upon man's psychic condition whether he will use the results of science in the service of progression or of regression.

Not only does he gain power to explore outer space and use atomic energy, but also the world of the infinitesimal is opening up in similar dimensions.

He will, most likely, in the near future be able to influence and plan his own evolution by directed effects upon the genes.

It is true: 'Unconsciousness (for contemporary man) is a sort of ontological inferiority or evil ... ' (Chardin, 1959, p. 248).

Our materialistic outlook seduces us to ignore the fact that while ' . . . physics . . . is in a position to detonate mathematical formulae, [the latter still are] the product of pure psychic activity.'

Jung reminds us, however, that man ' ... himself did not create the spirit, rather the spirit makes him creative . . . ' Nor does man have the spirit.

'In reality it has him . . . it possesses him in exactly the same way that his physical world appears to be the willing object of his designs and yet in reality turns into an obsessive idee force . . . Spirit threatens the naive-minded man with inflation . . . The danger becomes all the greater the more our interest fastens upon external objects and the more we forget that the differentiation of our relation to nature should go hand in hand with a correspondingly differentiated relation to the spirit .... If the outer object is not offset by an inner, unbridled materialism results, coupled with maniacal arrogance or else the extinction of the autonomous personality, which is in any case the ideal of the totalitarian mass state' (cf. Jung, 1948, C. W., p. 213).

The spirit is thus 'a great help and equally great danger.

It seems as if man were destined to play a decisive role in solving [its twofaced and paradoxical quality] ... by virtue of his consciousness .... ' (Jung, 1954, C. W., p. 222).

Reflections on Spirit and Pseudo-spirit As long as we have not done this, we should not be surprised to find the cultural vehicle, in which we expect to zoom ahead, in reverse gear.

But most of us are perplexed: in spite of our expectation of greater closeness with and understanding of human beings, we find ourselves more separated and estranged by all sorts of 'isms'.

Instead of abundant enthusiasm of consciousness and reflective perception, we find mechanization engulfing the spirit in a mass-psyche.

No doubt, these are manifestations of pseudo-spirit since: 'The archetype is spirit or pseudo-spirit :1 what it ultimately proves to be depends on the attitude of the human mind' (Jung, 1954, CW p. 206).

An attitude depends, of course, upon the degree and quality of consciousness: the more consciousness is developed, the more differentiated it becomes and the more it can differentiate in turn.

In contrast, as long as man is ’absorbed by the opinions and tendencies of collective consciousness’ he is the ’ever-ready victim of some wretched "isms"’ and of the pseudo-spirit.

This is so because all ’isms’ are ’sophisticated spirit-substitutes’, that is, substitutes for the lost link with psychic reality.

But instead of establishing the missing link with psychic reality, spirit substitutes destroy the meaning of the individual and culture in general.

An addict of any ’ism’ is dangerous to himself and others like a primitive man living in a technically highly developed society.

Since this is being written with the deepest appreciation of Jung, the creative thinker, physician of the mind, and teacher, I am closing with words of his, relevant to the above:

’True, the archetype of the spirit is capable of working for good as well as for evil, but it depends upon man’s free-i.e. conscious decision whether the good also will be perverted into something satanic.

Man’s worst sin is unconsciousness, but it is indulged in with the greatest piety even by those who should serve mankind as teachers and examples.

When shall we stop taking man for granted in this barbarous manner, and in all seriousness seek ways and means to exorcize him, to rescue him from possession and unconsciousness, and make this the most vital task of civilization?

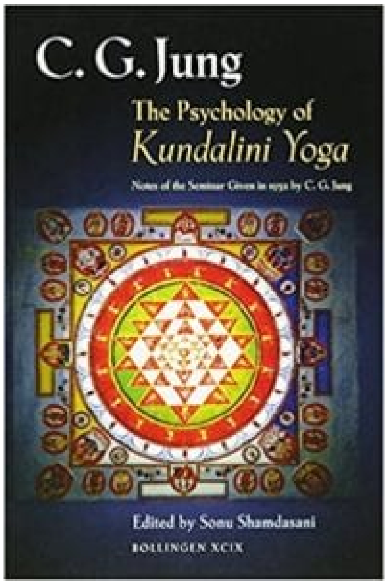
Can we not understand that all the outward tinkerings and improvements do not touch man’s inner nature, and that everything ultimately depends upon whether the man who wields the science and the technics is capable of responsibility or not?’ (Jung, 1948, C.W., p. 48). Margit Van Leight Frank, Contact with Jung, Pages 194-200

[3]Margit Obituary

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+contact+with+fordham&qid=1575122744&sr=8-1`
2. `https://www.nytimes.com/1989/02/11/obituaries/margit-van-leight-frank-91-psychologist.html`
3. `https://www.nytimes.com/1989/02/11/obituaries/margit-van-leight-frank-91-psychologist.html`

Carl Jung Quotations from Introduction to Kundalini Yoga Seminar (2019-11-30 05:44)



C. G. Jung
The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga
Notes of the Seminar Given in 1932 by C. G. Jung
Edited by Sonu Shamdasani
BOLLINGEN XCIX

[1]The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga

Munich, 30 May 1930. At a memorial for his deceased colleague, the sinologist Richard Wilhelm, Jung echoed these dramatic events:

If we look to the East: an overwhelming destiny is fulfilling itself. . . .

We have conquered the East politically.

Do you know what happened, when Rome subjugated the near East politically?

The spirit of the East entered Rome. Mithras became the Roman military god. . . .

Would it be unthinkable that the same thing happened today and we would be just as blind as the cultured

Romans, who marvelled at the superstitions of the Christians? . . .

I know that our unconscious is crammed with Eastern symbolism.

The spirit of the East is really ante portas. . . .

I consider the fact that Wilhelm and the Indologist Hauer were invited to lecture on yoga at this year's congress of German psychotherapists, as an extremely significant sign of the times.

Consider what it means, when the practising doctor, having to deal directly with suffering and therefore susceptible people, establishes contact with an Eastern system of healing! Carl Jung, Kundalini Seminars, Pages xvii-xviii

Inasmuch as I regard the psychoanalytical and psycho-synthetic methods likewise as means of self-improvement, your comparison with the yoga method seems thoroughly plausible to me.

It appears to me, however, as one must emphasize, that it is merely an analogy which is involved, since nowadays far too many Europeans are inclined to carry Eastern ideas and methods over unexamined into our occidental mentality.

This happens, in my opinion, neither to our advantage nor to the advantage of those ideas.

For what has emerged from the Eastern spirit is based upon the peculiar history of that mentality, which is most fundamentally different from ours. Carl Jung, Kundalini Seminars, Page xxi.

Jung specified his psychological understanding of tantric yoga as follows:

Indian philosophy is namely the interpretation given to the precise condition of the non-ego, which affects our personal psychology, however independent from us it remains.

It sees the aim of human development as bringing about an approach to and connection between the specific nature of the non-ego and the conscious ego.

Tantra yoga then gives a representation of the condition and the developmental phases of this impersonality, as it itself in its own way produces the light of a higher supra-personal consciousness. Carl Jung, Kundalini Seminars, Page xxiii

Fowler McCormick, who accompanied Jung on this trip, recalled an experience of Jung's that had tantric overtones:

As we would go through temples of Kali, which were numerous at almost every Hindu city, we saw the evidences of animal sacrifice: the places were filthy dirty—dried blood on the floor and lots of remains of red betelnut all around, so that the colour red was associated with destructiveness.

Concurrently in Calcutta Jung began to have a series of dreams in which the colour red was stressed.

It wasn't long before dysentery overcame Dr. Jung and I had to take him to the English hospital at Calcutta. . . .

A more lasting effect of this impression of the destructiveness of Kali was the emotional foundation it gave him for the conviction that evil was not a negative thing but a positive thing. . . . The influence of that experience in India, to my mind, was very great on Jung in his later years. Fowler McCormick, Kundalini Seminars, Page xxviii.

I will be silent on the meaning of yoga for India, because I cannot presume to pass judgment on something I do not know from personal experience.

I can, however, say something about what it means for the West.

Our lack of direction borders on psychic anarchy.

Therefore any religious or philosophical practice amounts to a psychological discipline, and therefore a method of psychic hygiene. Carl Jung, Kundalini Seminars, Page xxviii.

The Indian concepts are alien to us Westerners; most people are incapable—it is just the theosophists who prove this—of acquiring an inner relation to them.

Moreover, physiologically we are all Christians, whether our consciousness recognizes this or not.

Thus every doctrine which continues in the Christian spirit has a better chance of taking hold of our inner-most being than the profoundest doctrine of foreign origin. Carl Jung, Kundalini Seminars, Page xxxi.

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Kundalini-Yoga-C-Jung/dp/0691006768/ref=sr_1_1?crid=MRWUYZRNR4NN&keywords=jung+kundalini+yoga&qid=1575122614&sprefix=jung+kun%`

Our World has become Dehumanized (2019-11-30 06:20)

[1]

[2]The collected works of C. G. Jung Volume 18 - The Symbolic Life

"Through scientific understanding, our world has become dehumanized. Man feels himself isolated in the cosmos. He is no longer involved in nature and has lost his emotional participation in natural events, which hitherto had a symbolic meaning for him. Thunder is no longer the voice of a god, nor is lightning his avenging missile. No river contains a spirit, no tree makes a mans's life, no snake is the embodiment of wisdom and no mountain still harbors a great demon. Neither do things speak to him nor can he speak to things, like stones, springs, plants and animals." - Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 585

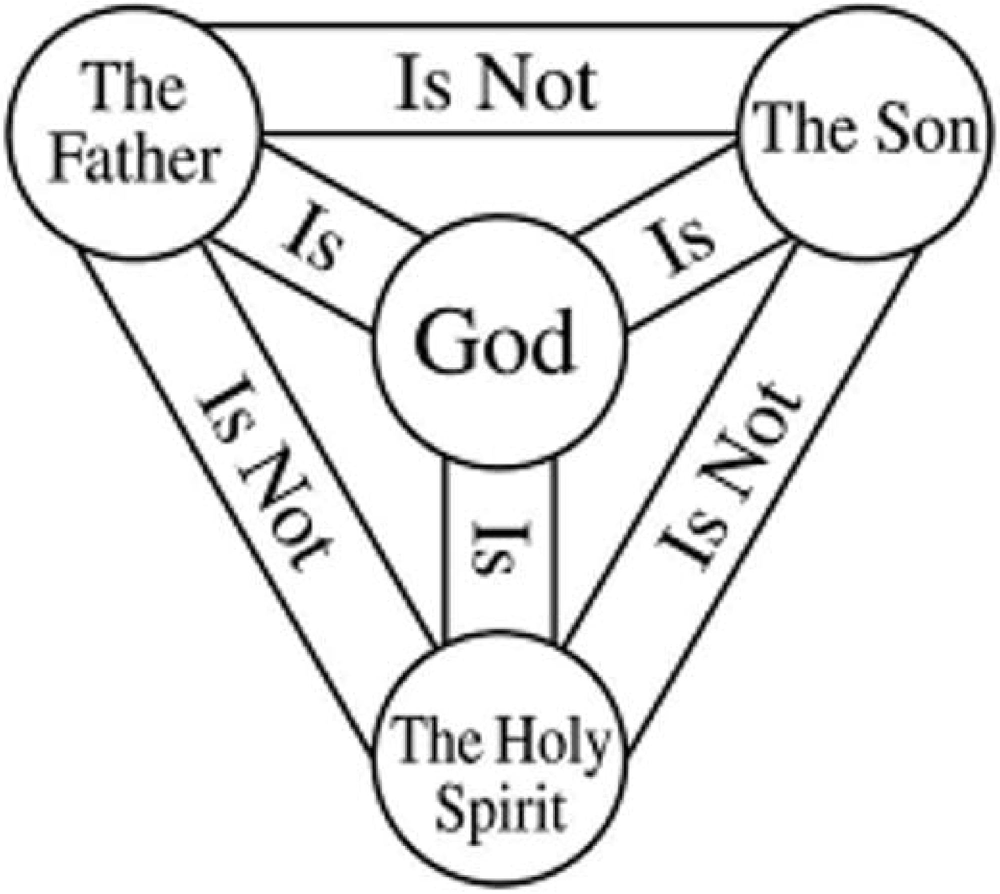
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/10/2b418-gaia.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/collected-works-C-G-Jung/dp/9333488340/ref=sr_1_2?crid=2B36YG4Q5KECC&keywords=jung+symbolic+life&qid=1575122414&sprefix=jung+symboli%2Cap`

1.3 December

Carl Jung: Christ was illegitimate and born virtually on a dunghill, yet the Son of God. (2019-12-01 03:30)

[1]



The Father
Is Not
The Son
Is Is God
Is Not
Is
Is Not
The Holy Spirit

[2]What Jung really said

Küsnacht, 3rd June 1946

Talk with C.G.

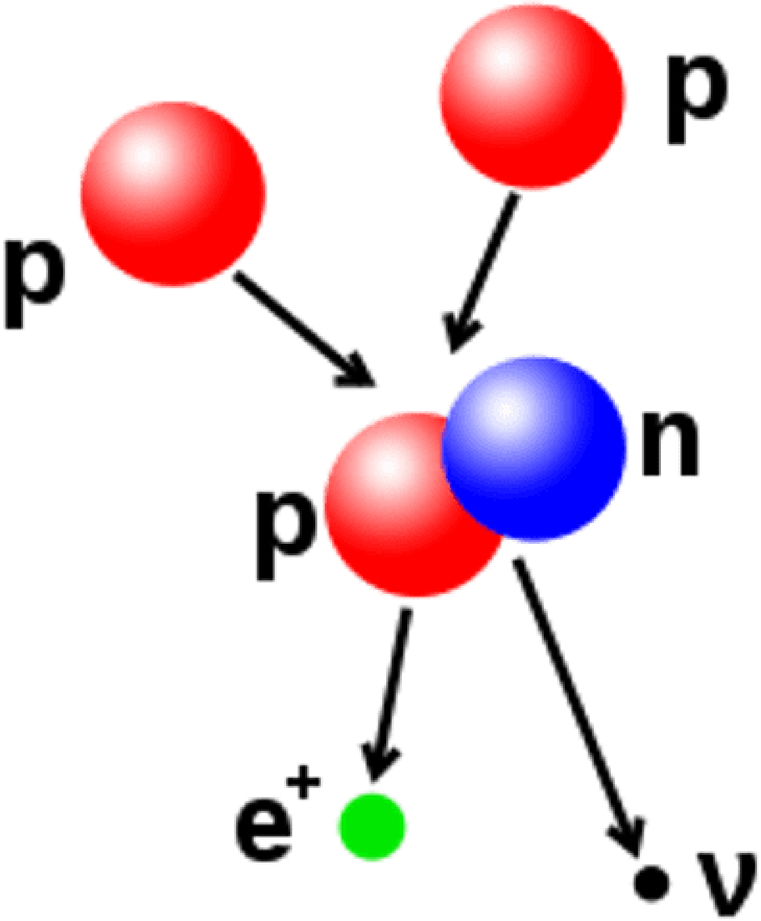
We must descend if we are to ascend (St. Augustine).

About parables: the parable of the unjust steward – he must save his face, that’s the bug.

Parables are marvelous when read psychologically; burying the talent – not using what we have because of laziness or shyness, or lack of knowledge.

Then on to the doctrine of the trinity as mirrored in atomic physics; the atom is invisible, like the invisible things of the psyche, of the unconscious.

He is working on the relationship of atomic physics and the unconscious.



Of the Virgin Birth: God is born in the soul of man.

Christ was illegitimate and born virtually on a dunghill, yet the Son of God.

When you show people the myth it is therapeutic – they see the link with a wider experience, that they are not alone.

His illness was the result of working too hard and having two things, his patients and his writing.

Many tasks worried him because they were unfinished; then working at them he would be interrupted by the claims of patients.

The disorder lasted only about a week; but yesterday he was not well and could not see me.

He told me of a student who asked his professor, ‘How do you know there is a God?’

The professor had no answer and came and asked Jung!

This man is a great preacher, yet it’s all words, no real knowledge.

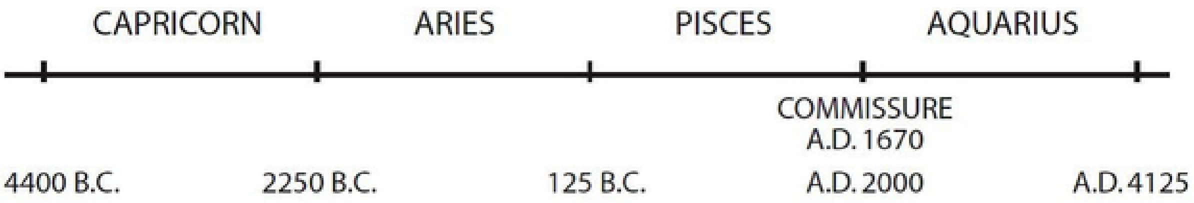
C.G. said, ‘I would have loved that question – there you have a student who can learn something.’ E.A. Bennet, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 39

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/147b2-12btrinity.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/What-Jung-really-said-they/dp/B0006BPBYS/ref=sr_1_fkmr0_1?keywords=jung+E.A.+Benet&qid=1575192476&sr=8-1-fkmr0`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/1c423-12batom.png`

Carl Jung on the zodiacal signs through which the point of the vernal equinox went in historical times.

(2019-12-01 04:03)

[1]



[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

Here we have a portrayal of the zodiacal signs through which the point of the vernal equinox went in historical times.

As you can see, from the fourth to the second millennium b.c. the point of the vernal equinox went through the sign of Taurus, and then entered the age of Aries.

About from 600 to 350 b.c. there were the light stars of the head of Aries.

It is the age of the great philosophers all over the world: Heraclitus, Empedocles, Thales, Buddha, Lao Tse, and Confucius.

Around 125 b.c., the age of Pisces began, coinciding with the beginnings of Christianity.

As early as the first century, the concept of the Antichrist also came into being, referring to the second fish.

Our age falls in the era of the second fish, it is the anti-Christian age.

The time of the French Enlightenment coincides with the beginning of the second fish. Voltaire's écrasez l'infâm is characteristic of that time. Between these, there is the so-called commissure.

The Renaissance falls into that transitory period, the expansion of the conception of the earth, the discovery of the earth.

America is discovered, a Reformation is made, the power of the Church is shaken by the great schism.

This is the first blow to the specifically Catholic attitude, although that era is still under the imprint of Christianity until the Enlightenment.

From the Enlightenment onward, the erosion of Christianity as such starts, and the goddess of reason is enthroned.

Now the Antichrist threatens to invade the cultural world.

These zodiacal signs are symbols that have been projected onto the sky from times immemorial, and probably reflect the structure of the unconscious.

The saga of Gilgamesh still stems from the end of the Taurus age, and was only later cast into a literary form.

It was found in the library of Sardanapal, or Ashurbanipal (668–627 or 626 b.c.),125 written on brick slabs.

It is the myth of the natural hero who takes the path of the sun to unearth the secret of immortality.

He goes through the columns of Heraclitus, and in the land of the West finds the old ferryman Utnapishtim, who had traveled the waters of death, and, therefore, came to live among the immortals.

He tells Gilgamesh the secret.

He says:

"Gilgamesh, you have struggled hard and suffered many a hardship. What can I give you so that you can return to your land? I will tell you a secret, of a hidden magic herb I will talk to you. The herb looks like boxthorn and grows deep down in the sea, its thorn is like the spine of a porcupine, it blossoms in the freshwater sea far away. If you can lay your hands on this herb and eat of it, you will find eternal youth and life."

This is a wonderful description from ancient times.

So here you have the magic herb.

It is an herb with healing powers, a power that will heal forever. It is the so-called panacea, a cure-all, the elixir vitae, the quinta essentia.

At the same time it is also the herb that helps the adept to produce the lapis philosophorum.

The herb is called lunaria or lunatica; it grows on the mountain Mambracus or Mambraces, like the stone for which one should also always look on high mountains.

Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 219-220

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/1d462-astro.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+children&qid=1575192319&sr=8-2`

Carl Jung on "Animals." - Quotations; Anthology (2019-12-01 04:20)

[1]

The Animals. We appreciate them much more. We think of the psychology of animals.

In the 19th century they made laws for their protection, and began to treat them more decently, but it is only in recent years that we begin to think of a few animals as our brothers. Carl Jung, Cornwall Seminar, Page 21.

There is so much that fills me: plants, animals, clouds, day and night, and the eternal in man.

The more uncertain I have felt about myself, the more there has grown up in me a feeling of kinship with all things. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 359.

At times I feel as if I am spread out over the landscape and inside things, and am myself living in every tree, in the splashing of the waves, in the clouds and the animals that come and go, in the procession of the seasons. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Chapter 8.

Because they are so closely akin to us and share our unknowingness, I loved all warm-blooded animals who have souls like ourselves and with whom, so I thought, we have an instinctive understanding. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 67.

This is old age, and a limitation.

Yet there is so much that fills me: plants, animals, clouds, day and night, and the eternal in man.

The more uncertain I have felt about myself, the more there has grown up in me a feeling of kinship with all things.

In fact it seems to me as if that alienation which so long separated me from the world has become transferred into my own inner world, and has revealed to me an unexpected unfamiliarity with myself. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Page 359.

Even domestic animals, to whom we erroneously deny a conscience, have complexes and moral reactions. Carl Jung, Civilization in Transition, Page 446.

Emotional manifestations are based on similar patterns, and are recognizably the same all over the earth. We understand them even in animals, and the animals themselves understand each other in this respect, even if they belong to different species. Carl Jung, Symbols of Transformation, Page 234.

The most pronounced intuitives have what the Scotch call second sight, they can, for instance, foretell the weather, many animals also have this last power. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 100.

Often when people behave in an exceedingly unexpected manner the appearance of an archetype is the explanation ; archetypes go back not only through human history, but to our ancestors the animals, that is why we are able to understand animals so well and make friends with them. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 177.

Primitives are re ally human animals living on the lap of the earth and from its sap. We are merely enlightened! Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 200.

In these days, on the other hand, we are becoming very sentimental about animals, every kind of society for the prevention of cruelty to animals exists, which shows that we are getting more friendly towards our instincts. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 220.

One of the aims of some kinds of Yoga is to understand the voice of all animals, but we are not convinced in the West that horses and dogs have such important thoughts. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 17.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/d7070-animals.jpg`

Carl Jung: The fish was the symbol of the unconscious life, like the Christ. (2019-12-01 04:30)

[1]

The "fish" was used as a name for the God
who became a man.
C.G.Jung
Aion
www.jungcurrents. com
Image: Duccio di Buoninsegna

[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Bollingen, 25th July 1949

It was here, on this day, that I first met Victor White.

He was bathing in the lake when I arrived and I also had a bathe, so we met in the water.

After tea we sat at a table in the front garden with C.G. and Mrs. Jung, a grand-daughter of theirs, and Father Victor White.

C.G. and I had a talk for over two hours sitting by the edge of the lake.

White had seen a snake in the water and as we talked we saw the snake twice; it swam along rather beautifully, about a yard long.

I spoke to C.G. of a dream a patient had told me: he had a basin filled with golden-coloured water and in it were some golden fish; he had to drink some of the water.

A fish fell out and he replaced it.

C.G. said it meant that some of the unconscious was within reach and that he could take from it.

The fish was the symbol of the unconscious life, like the Christ.

27th July 1949

I arrived at Bollingen at three o'clock and had a bathe.

The Jung's were there with Father White and their grandchild Sybil.

Lovely bathe.

Sybil had a kettle being boiled on twigs.

Then a chat with C.G.

He spoke of the stages of life, for I had mentioned the importance to the younger generation of having grandparents.

He had not known his; he said his grandmother died in 1864.

He went on to speak of obsessional people as always fearing death; they want to remain adolescent and never grow up.

Some patients (he cited a case) may even decline to shake hands with the doctor, who has to do with death.

Adolescents have everything ahead of them; their decisions will be taken in the future.

And the obsessional person is reluctant to decide anything.

Nothing must be fixed for that would mean life was getting on, so there is hesitation over any decision, it must be possible to alter it, undo it – it is always reversible.

Through their symptoms they retain an immature attitude and neglect their work, their duties in life.

He mentioned the case of a woman who felt compelled to play incessantly on the piano, and to play a Different tune with each hand; this she did until she fainted and then she would start again.

She came to him pleading for help.

He told her that she did not want to get well, and he would show her this and see how she would then react.

He asked her to carry out an experiment: for one day to do all the things a wife should do – get her husband's breakfast, attend to his clothes and her household duties – just for one day.

She returned still asking for help.

'What about our experiment?' he asked, 'Did you do it?'

'Yes,' she said.

'And did you have any symptoms?'

'No, none at all.'

‘Well there it is!’ he said.

Her reply was, But it was so boring!’

He also referred to the case of a man with an obsessional neurosis who had lived self-indulgently for years, drawing on the financial support of a schoolteacher who loved him though he knew his expenses were beyond her means (cited in Modern Man, I think).

He had had a long Freudian analysis.

This man blamed C.G. for moralizing when he told him, ‘There is your moral fault’, for we all have a moral side.

He went on to speak of Freud and mentioned the importance to him of his dogmas.

After many years without neurosis people can find themselves confronted with problems.

In psychoanalysis they go back to early childhood things and in so doing escape from the real immediate situation.

It’s like a river: in the early stages there are the little tributaries, and as it flows on, the channel deepens and the side streams dry up.

But if the river is blocked in its course the water rises and flows back into the old disused channels again.

But they are not the cause of the situation; the cause is the block in the river.

And of course patients love to go back and back for this leads away from their problem, and there are always the endless things of childhood to talk of.

But in this both analyst and patient are blinded to the present problem.

I asked, ‘What cures?’ and he said, ‘You can cure with anything if you believe in it; you can cure neuroses with hypnotism, or with a walking stick, if that is what you believe in.

Freud was kind to people and gave them his interest, that was what cured and that is what always cures – the human contact.

What you believe in is what cures.’

He talked of absolute knowledge – ‘What a term, absolute!’

He meant by it the real truth that we touch on now and then.

We are related to everything – ‘to that tree’ – for we are all part of nature, and it makes a pattern.

We cling to our consciousness as something big; but beyond it we can get into the stream of nature, the real unconscious.

Perhaps we cannot understand a patient – we are completely stuck; then we may get a hint from an unexpected source, for instance from astrology: ‘I don’t care whether it’s “true” or not, I’m interested only in the fact that it can, and does, give us a hint.’

He mentioned also the I Ching, and an intuitive mediaeval system he had come across recently.

He added that one could test these things only with discrimination; ‘But one can see at times if they work,’ he said, ‘and when they do it’s a help; we must get beyond our heads.’

12th August 1949

To Bollingen again.

After tea we sat in the tower room.

Later I had a talk with C.G. in the study upstairs.

He spoke of unmindful coincidences, that is, coincidences which could not have been anticipated.

He gave an example of a dream he had recently of Churchill, and next day he read that Churchill had just passed through Switzerland.

He added that on two previous occasions he had dreamt of Churchill and each time he had read the following day that Churchill had been in Switzerland at the time, or passing through; once was in 1944, when Churchill had alighted to refuel at Geneva on his way to Greece.

In this context of synchronicity he mentioned the old notion of Correspondence (Swedenborg).

He said the fundamental concept in physics was space, time and causation; when you had these three you had all that was needed.

But there is more, namely that things happen together at a certain time.

He alluded by way of illustration to the decay of radium, that after about 1400 years the granule of radium had gone.

It diminishes at a certain rate; space, time and causation do not account for this.

The comparison he gave was as if, say, sixty men sit down to dinner and each has a card with a time on it at which he must rise and go.

One gets up, perhaps at two minutes past four, and another at four minutes past, and so on, irregularly, and seemingly at random.

Gradually the room becomes empty.

So it is with radium, it just ‘fades away’.

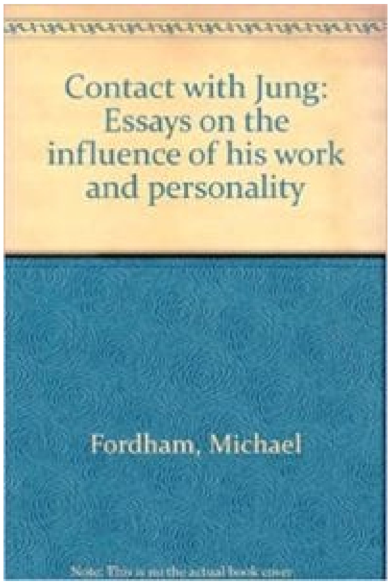
Or the ice crystals which form on the window; no one sees two alike.

Each atom knows its place; previously all were water, then there is the ice crystal with its axial pattern, quite perfect, and unpremeditated (by us).

It seems, like radium, to follow laws of which we know nothing, as though there was some ‘absolute knowledge’ in nature. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Pages 43-51

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/93b9f-362bbennet.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+E.A.+Bennet+conversations&qid=1575192871&sr=8-1`

A Tribute to C.G. Jung by A. I. Allenby (2019-12-01 04:55)



Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

Fordham, Michael

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

A Tribute to C.G. Jung by A. I. Allenby

I first got in touch with Jung after the end of the second world war. I then wrote to him, and told him who I was and what I was doing, which included writing a thesis on the psychology of religion.

With his reply Jung sent the manuscript of his article on the Trinity-a new version which had not yet appeared in print.

This was generous indeed, and an endearing token of encouragement for the complete stranger that I was to him then.

Only about a month before his death I again received a letter from Jung, in reply to one of mine, in which he went with great care into all the questions I had raised.

It ended with these words: ’My best wishes for any further discoveries you may make.’

This is the first characteristic one encountered in Jung: his respect for the other person, whoever he or she might be, and his concern for the individual value in anyone.

When I first went to visit him at Kusnacht, I was full of apprehension as to how I should fare in meeting the great man-but the moment I entered his intimate little study I felt completely at ease.

All the people I know who have met Jung have told me the same.

Throughout these years I have spent many an hour with Jung in his study, discussing various matters which were of importance for me at the time; and he always gave the same lively attention to whatever I had come to consult him about.

The man who has left us the fruits of an incredible amount of work and thought never seemed to be hurried when one was with him.

When I came to him with dreams whose apparent obscurity puzzled me, he would search his bookcases for ancient documents, read them out, and talk of corresponding experiences of his own-and one felt that one was searching together with him for the meaning of it all.

And something else stands out for me.

Jung would always discuss the personal in a framework of wider reference, and so give it back with new values added to it.

I felt this very strongly in his later years.

It seemed to me as if his capacity to listen and to absorb every detail did not diminish in old age but, on the contrary, increased.

The small as well as the larger issues seemed to assume in his mind-just as in the late paintings of the great masters-the quality of glowing but transparent colours, reflecting a light not their own, on a broad canvas.

But it must not be thought that Jung was always solemn.

He would tell the funniest stories in illustration of a point he wanted to make, and laugh uproariously himself.

Once he wanted me to understand that one should not feel guilty about events which happen on their own account. ’

They are just like acts of God,’ he said.

’Think of it as if a building had been hit by lightning; that, also, is an act of God.

There was a church in a Swiss village which had been damaged by lightning, and the pastor went round the village to collect money for the repairs, and one shrewd old peasant said to him:

"What-you are not going to make me give you anything, if he destroys his own house!" That man had got it right,’ Jung said and laughed.

On another occasion Jung explained to me what happens when one mistrusts one’s feelings and refuses to act on them.

’You can see from the window my boathouse down by the lake,’ he said.

’Some time ago I went for a swim and then lay on the balcony of the boathouse to sun myself.

The level of the lake was so high that the boathouse was surrounded by water.

There came my dog in search of me.

He could not see me, and was not sure whether I was there.

Being of a somewhat cowardly disposition and not very fond of the wet, the dog first put one paw into the water, then withdrew it, and then another paw and withdrew it, too.

And this went on for some time.

Eventually I made the faintest little noise, and the dog shot through the water and up the steps of the boathouse in one jump.

The dog is conditioned by instinct and has no will-power of his own, except when a little noise from his master releases it.’

Jung, of course, wanted to convey to me, although he left it to me to draw the conclusion, that a person who mistrusts his own feelings or thoughts and does not utilize his will to put them to the test is hardly distinguishable from an animal; as a conscious human being he hardly exists.

Another time Jung reverted to the problem of self-doubt, using a further example by way of illustration. ’Our needs and desires are always active,’ he said. ’

Trouble occurs only if they are active in the unconscious, if we do not take them consciously in hand so as to give them a definite form and direction.

If we refuse to do this we are dragged along by them and become their victim.

Then they are like a sledge rushing downhill in the snow, with no one at the steering-ropes.

You must place yourself firmly at the steering-ropes, not hang on at the back or, worse, be unwilling to take the ride at all-that only lands you in panic.

Our unconscious energies give momentum to our journey through life and, if we direct their course, our actions will have strength; we may even sense that God is behind us.’

This sounds like a very simple prescription for wholesome living.

Jung would have been the last to say that it is, in fact, simple, for he was deeply concerned with the duality of human nature.

If we learn to accept, and thereby in some measure to control, what drives us anyhow, we cannot but come face to face with what is inferior or evil in us.

But only in facing it do we give it a chance to be transmuted. Jung could be scathing about people who are so intent on doing good that they never ask themselves who the person is who wants to obliterate himself in good works.

He told me that he once met a distinguished man, a Quaker, who could not imagine that he had ever done anything wrong in his life.

'And do you know what happened to his children?' Jung asked.

'The son became a thief, and the daughter a prostitute.

Because the father would not take on his shadow, his share in the imperfection of human nature, his children were compelled to live out the dark side which he had ignored.'

At bottom, Jung was, perhaps, a passionate moralist.

His morality is different from that in which most of us have been brought up; it is at the same time more permissive and more exacting.

It is, above all, a morality deeply rooted in faith-faith in the value of the individual, and faith in the creative potentiality of the unconscious.

For instance, I remember Jung stating on one occasion: 'Every human being is inherently a unique and individual form of life. He is made like that.

But there is something which man can do over and above the given material of his nature, and that is he can become conscious of what makes him the person he is, and he can work consciously towards relating what is himself to the world around him.

And,' Jung added reflectively, 'this is perhaps all we can do.'

Another time he said to me, as if he were speaking to himself:

'This is how you must live-without reservation, whether in giving or withholding, according to what the circumstances require.

Then you will get through.

After all, if you should still get stuck, there is always the enantiodromia from the unconscious, which opens new avenues when conscious will and vision are failing.'

Jung himself was, of course, an outstanding example of his own philosophy.

Even if we cannot compare ourselves with a man of genius, who stands out like a mountain peak above the lowly foothills, we may yet take courage from his example.

Such rich equipment went into the making of Jung's nature: passionate impulses, a powerful intellect able to profit from centuries of human thought, as well as the capacity to wonder and take nothing for granted, and thus strike fresh sparks from what the average person would not even have noticed.

All this, and more, was apparent in the exceptional degree of consciousness Jung achieved.

This enabled him to endure the inevitable isolation of his stature, but it also enabled him to spend himself unsparingly, on his work, his patients, his family and friends, and on many troubled issues of our time.

A consciousness thus illumined becomes a new point of departure, in that the spiritual energies of the age take on a new direction, whether people know it or not.

It is, perhaps, the ultimate function of rare great men, like Jung, that in seeing what they have done we realize what the spirit in man is capable of achieving, and to what end it is given him and it fills our hearts with hope. A.I. Allenby, Contact with Jung, Pages 68-70

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+fordham+contact&qid=1575195775&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: Then you need the message of the old tamer of chaos. (2019-12-02 04:00)

[2]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition (Philemon)

If you remain within arbitrary and artificially created boundaries, you will walk as between two high walls: you do not see the immensity of the world.

But if you break down the walls that confine your view, and if the immensity and its endless uncertainty inspire you with fear, then the ancient sleeper awakens in you, whose messenger is the white bird.

Then you need the message of the old tamer of chaos.

There in the whirl of chaos dwells eternal wonder.

Your world begins to become wonderful.

Man belongs not only to an ordered world, he also belongs in the wonder-world of his soul.

Consequently you must make your ordered world horrible, so that you are put off by being too much outside yourself.

Your soul is in great need, because drought weighs on its world.

If you look outside yourselves, you see the far-off forest and mountains, and above them your vision climbs to the realms of the stars.

And if you look into yourselves, you will see on the other hand the nearby as far-off and infinite, since the world of the inner is as infinite as the world of the outer.

Just as you become a part of the manifold essence of the world through your bodies, so you become a part of the manifold essence of the inner world through your soul.

This inner world is truly infinite, in no way poorer than the outer one.

Man lives in two worlds.

A fool lives here or there, but never here and there.

Perhaps you think that a man who consecrates his life to research leads a spiritual life and that his soul lives in / larger measure than anyone else's.

But such a life is also external, just as external as the life of a man who lives for outer things.

To be sure, such a scholar does not live for outer things but for outer thoughts-not for himself but for his object.

If you say of a man that he has totally lost himself to the outer and wasted his years in excess, you must also say the same of this old man.
He has thrown himself away in all the books and thoughts of others.

Consequently his soul is in great need, it must humiliate itself and run into every stranger's room to beg for the recognition that he fails to give her. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 264.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/c0c24-1castke.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=35ANLVD16U9EZ&keywords=jung+redbook&qid=1575279713&sprefix=jung+re%2Caps%2C144&sr`

Carl Jung on the Symbol of the "Diamond." (2019-12-02 04:07)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (

Professor Jung:

As a matter of fact, it does have something to do with consciousness. Could you give more details about it?

Participant:

The transparent stone refers to the diamond. It is refined earth, the epitome of refined earth.

The earth is dark, gloomy, nontransparent, and starts to become transparent in the stone.

Although the stone is earth, hardest earth, it assumes the character of transparent water.

We speak of a diamond “of the first water.”

Because of its transparency, the philosopher’s stone is also called vitrum aureum (the golden glass) or vitrum malleabile (the malleable glass).

In the Book of Revelation it says that the streets of the new Jerusalem were like golden glass

Professor Jung:

So it is the same idea as in alchemy—that the earth had been transformed into a transparent, waterlike, yet hard and imperishable, incorruptible structure.

Therefore, the philosopher's stone is the expression of the highest perfection of the earthly body, and, therefore, you also find the idea that the lapis philosophorum is man himself, that is, his corpus glorificatum, his body at the Resurrection.

This immortal body is the subtle body that had left the physical body and is beyond corruption.

The diamond, the hardest mineral, is synonymous with the lapis philosophorum.

This is ancient metaphysics, old speculation in symbolic form.

What does this mean psychologically?

It was mentioned that the diaphanitas and the stoniness, the inelasticity, could have to do with the nature of consciousness.

You can find this connection in the old texts of alchemy, the idea, that is, that the stone is the product of a mental operation, the equivalent, so to speak, of enlightenment.

Therefore the stone says in a Hermetic text: "I create the light, the light that is greater than all other lights in the world."

So what is actually meant is a phenomenon of consciousness, a product of human effort, and at the same time a donum gratiae, a gift of God's grace.

It is always stressed that it is impossible to do it on one's own, it can only be given per gratiam dei, but man still has to make the effort to make this structure.

It originally was a head, that is, a consciousness that was in the head.

It is symbolized as the head of Osiris that was washed ashore from the sea and venerated by the women of Byblos.

This severed head, the so-called round element, is the epitome of perfection.

A consciousness has crystallized that is imperturbable, a detached consciousness, characterized by wholeness (represented by roundness).

Participant:

In the legend of Perseus, too, we find this idea, in the severed head of the Gorgon.

Here, roundness is linked to the mortification of the mother.

Professor Jung:

Yes, quite right. In the stars you find the constellation of Perseus with the Gorgon’s head above the sign of Taurus.

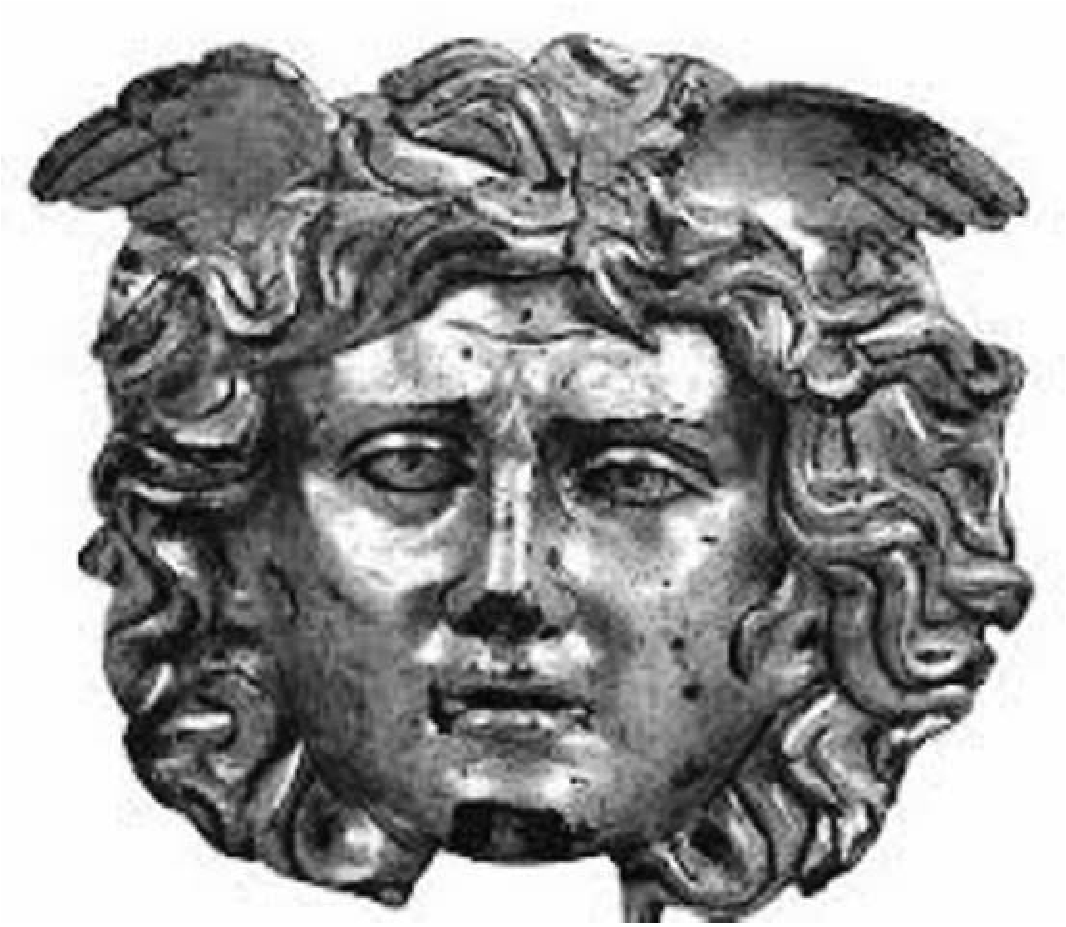
The great Gorgon’s head is the horrible face entwined by snakes; it is the face of the past in front of which we are petrified.

The fear it provokes can be traced back to the fear of the devouring mother, the horror of this; for this face can turn you into dead earth again.

This danger was averted by Perseus by cutting the Gorgon’s throat with a fiery sword, a diamond sword.

[4]



This would mean that the danger is averted by the intervention of consciousness, of thinking; because it was an act of consciousness that detached him from that horror.

When the flood of blackness is later inundating him again, he can free himself from it, because he cut the head of the horrible mother.

You find a similar standpoint in the philosophy of the Upanishads; the knowledge about Atman liberates from the law of the earth.

So the head is that round thing, originally hidden in matter, that Zosimos called the Omega element.

That's why the ancient philosophers called themselves "children of the golden head."

This was the opposite of the caput mortuum or caput corvi,which is the sediment that precipitates, or the opposite of nigredo.

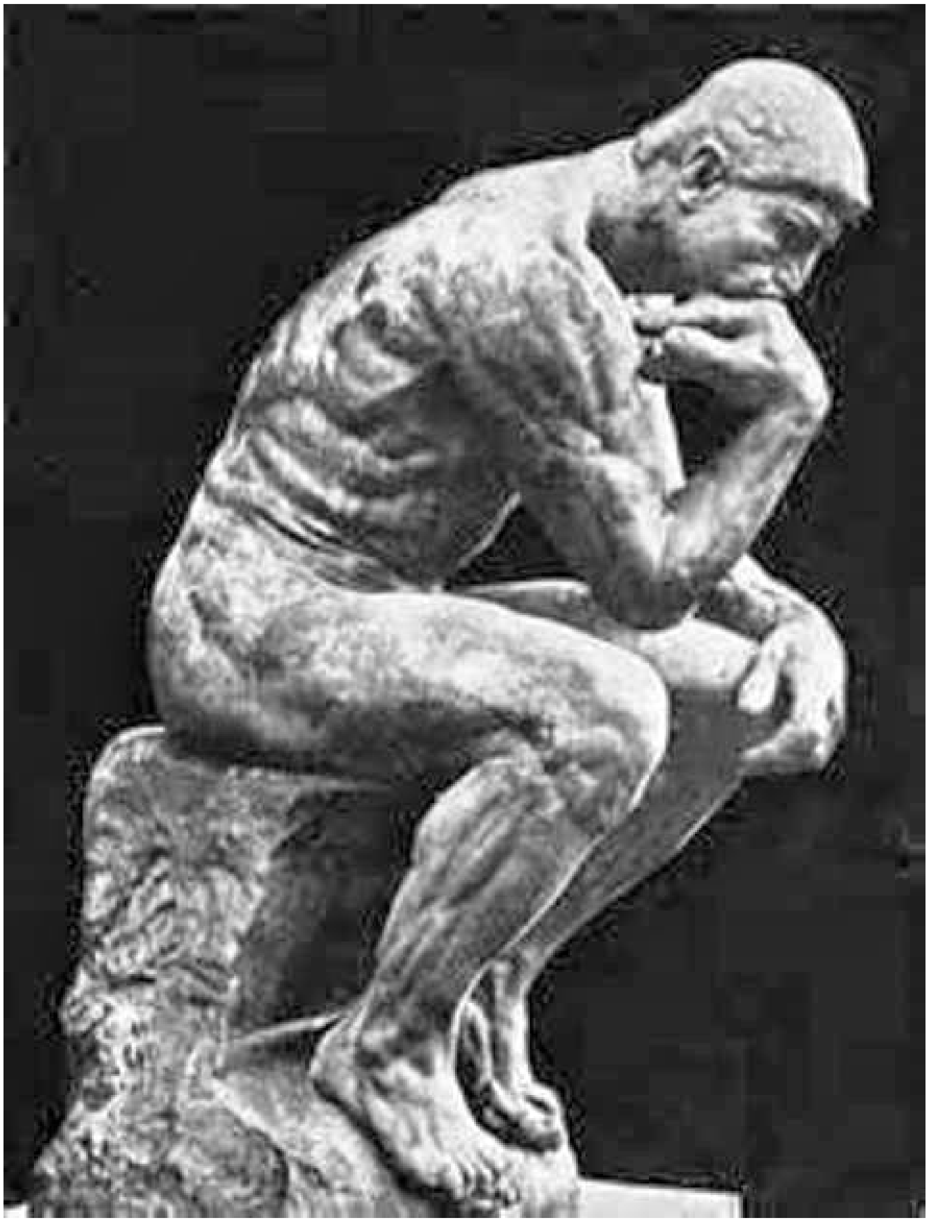
This caput aureum, however, is the end product of the process.

It is also round, it is the wholeness, and it is a transparent stone.   Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 221-223.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/0d9e0-2.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+children+dream&qid=1575280118&sr=8-1`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/21cd0-3.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/7fd31-4.jpg`

If the Creator were conscious of Himself... (2019-12-02 04:18)

[1]



[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

If the Creator were conscious of Himself, He would not need conscious creatures; nor is it probable that the extremely indirect methods of creation, which squander millions of years upon the development of countless species and creatures, are the outcome of purposeful intention.

Natural history tells us of a haphazard and casual transformation of species over hundreds of millions of years of devouring and being devoured.

The biological and political history of man is an elaborate repetition of the same thing. But the history of the mind offers a different picture.

Here the miracle of reflecting consciousness intervenes – the second cosmogony

The importance of consciousness is so great that one cannot help suspecting the element of meaning to be concealed somewhere within all the monstrous, apparently senseless biological turmoil, and that the road to its manifestation was ultimately found on the level of warm-blooded vertebrates possessed of a differentiated brain – found as if by chance, unintended and unforeseen, and yet somehow sensed, felt and groped for out of some dark urge. Carl Jung, Memories, Dreams and Reflections, Page 339.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/de592-idea.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Ukemi-Audiobooks-Memories-Dreams-Reflections/dp/B01BW37JXE/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3AXS3ANWP6XQA&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=15`

Individuation as a vocation... (2019-12-02 04:22)

[1]

"What is it, in the end, that induces a man
to go his own way
and to rise
out of unconscious identity with the mass
as out of a swathing mist?"
C. G. Jung

[2]Jung Currents

Individuation as a vocation, as "addressed by a voice":

"What is it, in the end, that induces a man to go his own way and to rise out of unconscious identity with the mass as out of a swathing mist? Not necessity, for necessity comes to many, and they all take refuge in convention. Not moral decision, for nine times out of ten we decide for convention likewise.

What is it, then, that inexorably tips the scales in favour of the extra-ordinary? It is what is commonly called vocation: an irrational factor that destines a man to emancipate himself from the herd and from it's well-worn paths. True personality is always a vocation and puts its trust in it as God, despite its being, as the ordinary man would say, only a personal feeling. But vocation acts like a law of God from which there is no escape. The fact that many a man who goes his own way ends in ruin means nothing to one who has a vocation. He must obey his own law, as if it were a daemon whispering to him of new and wonderful paths. Anyone with a vocation hears the voice of the inner man: he is called....

The original meaning of "to have a vocation" is "to be addressed by a voice." The clearest examples of this are to be found in the avowels of the Old Testament prophets. That it is not just a quaint old-fashioned way of speaking is proved by the confessions of historical personalities such as Goethe and Napoleon, to mention only two familiar examples, who made no secret of their feeling of vocation." Carl Jung, Collected Works Volume 17, The Development of the Personality.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/2e79a-end.jpg`
2. `http://jungcurrents.com/individuation-vocation/`

Carl Jung on "White Animals." (2019-12-02 04:27)

[1]

[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

[Carl Jung on "White Animals."]

Participant: White animals are those animals that don't live in the daylight, that are always underground. This clearly points toward the unconscious.

Professor Jung: Which animals are white?

Participant: The white horse in folklore, fairy tales, and myths. It also appears in a book by Kubin, Die andere Seite.

Professor Jung:

Kubin's book is actually quite silly.

It was written by a modern artist keen not to think anything, in contrast with the artists of the Renaissance.

He gives a description of the unconscious tel quel [as it is], pure raw material, a reproduction.

It features a crazy horse that thunders through the vaults of the underworld.

So this is such a white animal, but in this case it is a mythological one.

Such animals also exist in reality.

The Proteus in the karst caves is white, for example, because it needs no color.

Participant: Worms and cockchafer grubs are white, too.

Professor Jung: Yes, all intestinal worms, tapeworms, and the like, and in general many animals that live in the dark, are white.

These are animals that symbolize the unconscious, the source just coming out of the womb of the earth.

This is one of the reasons why the boa in our dream is white.

But then it is not completely white, but has black crosses.

This indicates that it is not just a cave tapeworm, but that its white color has still another meaning, derived from the contrast with black.

What does “white snake” mean in a positive sense? Where does it appear?

Participant: In fairy tales.

Professor Jung: How does it appear in fairy tales?

Participant: Doesn’t it have something to do with divination and premonition?

Professor Jung:

It is, of course, the magic serpent; it reveals a secret, and usually appears with a little golden crown on her head to indicate that it is the queen serpent—a doctor snake. It brings wisdom and revelation, it knows about the secret treasure and the secret path.

It is a helpful animal.

Thus the white color is also a favorable color, obviously a color of enlightenment.

Participant: In old dream books, white animals are also favorable.

Professor Jung:

Which corresponds with the fact that black animals are unfavorable.

Now there are black crosses on the snake. What does that mean?

Participant: The unification of the opposites, of white and black.

Professor Jung:

So the snake is of a contradictory nature: white on the one hand, black on the other.

If we call to mind that the snake represents the cerebrospinal nervous system, it follows that a symbol of this other, uncanny, contradiction and strangeness is expressed by this image.

A psychical content is expressed through it.

The snake is not just a natural animal, but also a mythological animal.

It not only stands for instinct, but also has a symbolic quality.

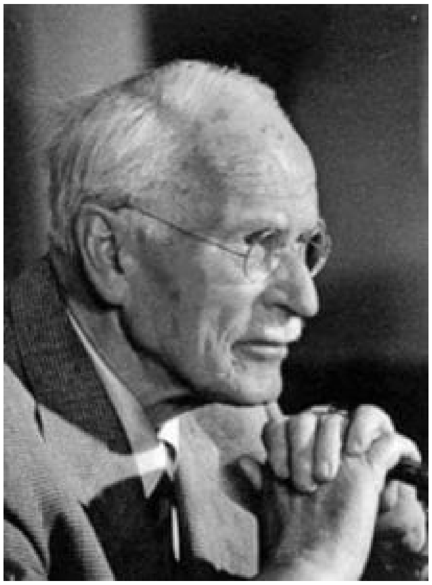
We must not forget that sexuality is not just sexuality, but also a psychical experience.

It has a psychical quality; it is somehow symbolic and magic.

It never appears in its essence as such, therefore, but is always also a strange psychical state at the same time. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 214-215.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/7f147-snake.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+children+dream&qid=1575280118&sr=8-1`

A Personal Recollection of C.G. Jung by Ruth Strauss (2019-12-02 04:53)



[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

A Personal Recollection by Ruth Strauss

There is a special memory of a meeting with Jung which I want to recall on this occasion.

While on a holiday in the Swiss mountains I tried to get an interview with Jung; but, to my disappointment, his secretary informed me that Jung could not see me this time, since he was away from Kusnacht.

However, a couple of days later, I received a telegram asking me to come out to Bollingen.

This was the first time that I met Jung in his Turmhaus, of which I had heard so much and which had been his refuge from the formal world.

Those who have been there know what a solitary place it is-it takes a long walk over the fields, coming from the railway station, to get there.

Jung met me outside the cottage to take me up the tower into his study.

He was as alive and somehow mischievous as he could be when in an easy mood.

I hardly noticed that the whole of the morning had gone when I thanked him for having been so good to me as to make this meeting possible.

By this I had unwittingly touched upon a problem that had been Jung’s concern throughout his life.

He was looking at me seriously with a twinkle in his eye-’Being good,’ he said, ’must happen to you in the same way as it happens to you being bad. If you set out to be good it almost gives me the creeps.

It makes me see the devil rising up behind your chair.' Ruth Strauss, Contact with Jung, Page 74

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+contact+fordham&qid=1575280693&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung on how to "apply a structure to the dream." (2019-12-03 04:18)

[1]

"Dreams ... are invariably seeking to express something that the ego does not know and does not understand." – Carl Jung, CW17, Par
"Dreams ... are invariably seeking to express something that the ego does not know and does not understand."
– Carl Jung, CW17, Par. 187
FrithLuton.com

Professor Jung:

This year I would like to forgo a longer introduction to the technique of dream analysis, and just briefly address a few general questions.

As you know, we apply a structure to the dream, that corresponds to the pattern of a drama.

We distinguish four elements: the introduction often specifies place and time, as well as the actors (dramatis personae) of the dream action.

There follows the exposition, which unfolds the problem of the dream.

It contains, so to speak, the theme, or maybe the question posed by the unconscious.

From this arises the peripateia: the dream action leads to increasing complexity, until it reaches a climax and changes—sometimes in the form of a catastrophe.

Finally, the lysis gives a solution or the result of the dream.

As you know, in every interpretation of a dream we first of all ask: How does such a dream come into being? What caused it? What are the experiences of the previous day? What happened? Is there a remarkable situation?

An important additional question is also whether the dreamer is conscious of anything about it; this must by no means be taken for granted.

In the case of children's dreams as remembered by adults, we are only exceptionally able to ascertain the situation out of which they arose.

And yet we have to try by all means to search for it, and to keep in view the question of causality, even if we cannot answer it empirically for the time being. We have to reach a point where we can deduce the preceding situation from the dream itself.

Our dream analysis is of value only if we can subsequently detect, from the interpretation, what caused the dream.

Naturally this has to be done with the necessary care, because one can go considerably astray.

In addition, we subject each detail of the dream, its symbolic figures, and the sequence of the actions to a careful examination.

Whenever possible, we take note of the context of each idea or image.

By context, I mean the association material in which the idea is embedded.

When someone says, for example: "I dreamed of a glass," do we then understand what this means?

We don’t understand anything yet. It could be a wine glass, a beer glass, a test-tube, a bottle, or a window pane.

First we have to know in which context the image “glass” is situated. So we can’t avoid asking about it, and then, sure enough, we may often hear the most astonishing answers.

In the case of banal ideas—as they so frequently occur in dreams—it perhaps suffices to confine ourselves to taking note of the context; this will not always be sufficient in the case of more complicated ideas, because often precisely the very important things are held back, as the complexes prevent the person from making the statement.

We also know this from the association experiment.

In these cases, we are forced to delve deeper into gathering information on the context, which I have called amplification.

In the interpretation of children’s dreams, too, we will have to revert to this method.

As I explained last winter, we have always to reckon with the fact that the child cannot provide any associations to the dream.

In addition, precisely the most important children’s dreams are frequently told only much later, so there is no possibility of getting information on the context.

This method of amplification is an expansion, a conscious enrichment.

I make the dreamer focus his interest on the image, and to bring up all associations linked to the image.

This must not be confounded with free association, in which we glide from one association to another, without regard to the initial idea.

In doing so, however, we lose the certainty that the final element still has a relation to the initial one.

Of course we encounter complexes, but for that we need no dream, and moreover we don’t want to discover complexes anyway; instead, we want to know what the dream says.

Freud adhered to this method of free association, and he could do that because for him the dream is not the essential thing, whereas for me it is.

For him, it is the façade, for me, the essence.

In this I rely on a Jewish authority, the Talmud, where it says: “The dream is its own interpretation,” meaning that we have to take the dream for what it is.

We should not see in the dream something different from what it expresses, but we actually have to learn to see differently—that’s the difficulty.

When I analyzed an Asian, I noticed the difference: he had an amazing ability to “smell” his context.

Unabashedly, he said out loud what we ourselves would have noticed only with great difficulty.

The natural faculties Asian people show in this respect are astonishing.

They are helped, however, by their language, with its richness of images, in which everything is already given.

On the other hand, they are not used to designating something precisely.

Tell an Asian man, "Please, bring me a blade of grass," and he will bring you the whole meadow.

We have lost the larger context, because we see only the separate details; Asians, however, always have an overall picture.

William McDougall has something characteristic to say about this.

He had the typical Western mind, stuck on details.

He was interested in Chinese philosophy, and had trouble understanding the notion of Tao.

So he asked a Chinese—his pupil—about the meaning of Tao, but did not understand anything of what the Chinese explained to him.

So the latter grew impatient, dragged the professor to the window and asked him: "What do you see?" "Houses, cars, people; and also trees, clouds; it is raining and the wind is blowing."

And the Chinese said: "Well, you see, this is Tao."

We have to try to gain such an overall picture with the help of amplification, even in the case of very simple dream images.

So, for instance, what does it mean if someone dreams of a rabbit?

Then we must not look at it separately, by itself, but we have to see it in the field, notice how its fur matches the earth; we must also feel that the hunter belongs in this context, and the dog, the corn in the field, and the flowers.

Only then will we know what a rabbit is.

In interpreting the single dream elements, I proceed in this complementary way.

Only from this general view do I realize the meaning, and I've had quite a few surprises.

If someone dreams of a bicycle, for example, I will ask: "How would you describe it if I had never seen a bicycle before?"

The dreamer has to create an image for me, to write an elementary school composition, so to speak, so that I will know how he sees it.

A downright "myth" of the bicycle can result from such a description.

Perhaps we discover that it is a sun wagon, in which a ghost journey is made.

The primitive mythology of the European may come to light on such an occasion.

In using this method, we are not necessarily bound to the concrete statement of the dreamer, but can amplify the dream images ourselves.

In this, we have to revert to those images we all have in common, namely, the archetypal images of the collective unconscious, as they are found in language, myths, and so on.

So we explain a dream by amplifying the range of the image for each single element, in using all our knowledge.

To verify an interpretation, we must have a look not only at the dream by itself, but maybe also in the context of a whole series.

Then we will often discover that the dreamer had a dream right before or afterward, in which our interpretation is already contained.

In a series we can compare dreams with one another and thus eliminate errors.

Let me give you an example for such a verification: I was told a dream in which the patient's father holds a globe, trying to divide it into two halves, such that there would be exactly the same number of people in the East as in the West.

The dream reminded me of the history of creation in Genesis, in which God also makes a division, when on the second day

He divided the waters that were under the firmament from the waters that were above the firmament.

From this I concluded that a process of growing consciousness had occurred in the dreamer, that he had started to think consciously and autonomously.

This hypothesis could later be verified.

This person had already dreamed of the act of creation the night before; he had dreamed that God had created a world with lightning and thunder.

Of this dream, however, I knew nothing.

You see how we can retrospectively verify the interpretation of a single dream image in the context of a dream series.
Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 236-240.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/d93cd-dreams.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_2?crid=169DUTPL3ACES&keywords=jung+children&qid=1575365110&sprefix=jun`

Carl Jung: I don’t know whether you will be irritated by this attempt. (2019-12-03 04:20)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To J. Wilhelm Hauer

Dear Professor Hauer, February 1936

By the same post I am sending you an offprint of my last year’s Eranos lecture.

This is not intended as a captatio but rather an anticipatio benevolentiae, since a little later I shall send you an essay in which I have included you as a symptom, this time without mentioning your humanity which I know very well.

We in Switzerland are near enough to Germany and also far away enough to have to come to terms with the spiritual events there and perhaps we can.

But if we embark on this venture we must look beyond the personal and regard the German Faith Movement, including yourself, as a symptomatic occurrence connected with the hidden history of the German mind.

I don’t know whether you will be irritated by this attempt.

At any rate I have refrained from value judgments and have been content with pure observation of the facts.

I am deeply convinced that historical events cannot be evaluated but at best interpreted.

I know from experience that being interpreted is not the pleasantest of things even when it is done to the best of our knowledge and conscience.

It is precisely then that it very often is not!

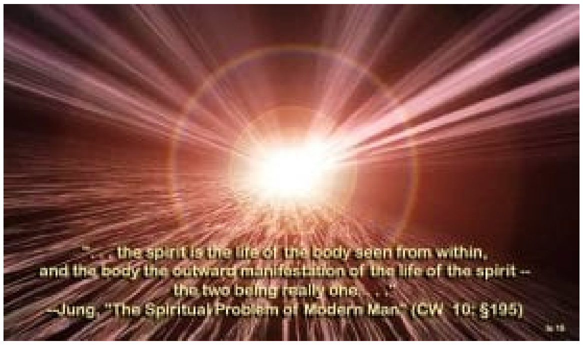
Meanwhile, with best regards and wishes,

Yours ever,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 209

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/49ed4-1hauer.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3KRE9GH27KBD7&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575364924&sprefix=jung+le%`

Language and Archetypes by L. Stein (2019-12-03 04:25)



". . . the spirit is the life of the body seen from within, and the body the outward manifestation of the life of the spirit -- the two being really one. . . ."
--Jung, "The Spiritual Problem of Modern Man" (CW 10; §195)

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

Language and Archetypes by L. Stein

Any attempt to assess the value of Jung's work by one who has used his ideas in his own professional life, and to a considerable extent based his professional outlook upon them, must consist in a revelation of the points at which Jung's discoveries converged upon and illuminated certain professional questions, which ultimately can, of course, be traced back to personal problems.

Any appraisal, therefore, is bound to be fundamentally a subjective one, perhaps more obviously so in the case of one who, like myself, approached psychology from a distance and, originally, in the interests of a search for knowledge in a sphere which did not seem to be purely psychological.

As a student of comparative philology, my interests centred on the phonetic and semantic laws governing the changes in language in space and time, and on an attempt to discover the reasons for these changes.

Philology can only establish correspondences between linguistic patterns and draw conclusions as to the relationship between them.

It cannot and does not mean to derive from them any universal laws.

Physiological studies of normal and abnormal cases also failed to provide a satisfactory answer.

It seemed, then, that the key to the problem must lie in psychology.

A study of academic and experimental psychology brought me no nearer to the solution.

There followed an intensive study of the writings of St. Ignatius of Loyola, based on personal experience of his Spiritual Exercises.

Their procedure consists, to some extent, in the reexperiencing and balancing of both the sufferings and joys of Christ and other contrasting :figures, such as Christ and Lucifer.

In meditation, it is stipulated, both the body and the mind must experience as vividly as possible the various emotional attitudes; inner and outer vision must come into play.

In this way I arrived at a first idea of what consciousness is.

It also brought home to me the necessity for a psychosomatic approach to the human problem, and the conviction of there being no hard-and-fast division between physical (outer) reality and psychic (inner) reality; they are two aspects of one and the same entity which we tend to experience separately.

What St. Ignatius expresses in the Christian framework, Jung made more real to me through his concept of archetypes, their dynamism, and his emphasis on the need for the integration of opposed patterns in order to produce a new whole.

I had already, as a speech therapist, come to understand the basic pattern of stammering, that is, the rhythmical reiteration of syllables, as a regression to the primeval pattern of babbling, which is the result of the integration of the two yet more primitive emotional patterns of action, viz. sucking and crying.

Jung’s concept of the integration of opposites enabled me to recognize babbling-this combination of sucking, an expression of tender love, and crying, an expression of aggression -as a successful union of opposites.

If babbling is valued as a reaffirmation of this union by both patient and therapist, it leads to further development in the sense of reaching higher levels of integration (Stein, 1949).

The symbolism of the spiral enabled me to take over into the psychological field what I had learned from the writings of J. Hughlings Jackson.

The very theme of the union of love and aggression (female and male) was also the key to my real understanding of archetypes, particularly through their expression in mythological motifs.

I was especially impressed by the story of the relationship between Aphrodite and Ares, the archetypal images of love and aggression, which, significantly, led to the birth of Harmonia.

The first syllable of the girl's name is based on the root ar, 'to join', which also appears as the first syllable of the word 'articulate'.

On the basis of the symbolism of 'harmony', I constructed a space-time framework for the evolution and integration of language as a symbolic process.

The more I have studied Jung's work, the more I have come to see that the essence of his greatness lies in this concept of archetypes with their contrasting and complementary meanings.

The 'existence' or 'reality' of these entities is, be it noted .not deduced from psychological data. Rather, they are, like Newton's gravity, 'invented' and stipulated as agents responsible for the observed phenomena.

Jung himself, while claiming for analytical psychology the status of an empirical science, does not seem to appreciate the fact that the existence of his archetypes need not be proved, since it is the inquirer himself who puts them there so that the job can be done (Stein, 1958).

Curiously enough (or not so curiously), research carried out independently by communication theorists and linguists has revealed that linguistic patterns are 'binary coded' ; that is, they convey meaning in so far as the complementary or contrasting aspect, characteristic of the archetypes, is inherent in them.

What we are nowadays concerned with is not so much the actual linguistic form as what it is that people are trying to say and how they are trying to convey it.

This is in direct line with Jung's attitude to psychological phenomena.

A concept of my own, directly inspired by that of Jung's archetypes, and as yet by no means fully investigated, may help to explain the collective character of language (as distinct from that of any particular national language) and hence account for language behaviour in terms of 'factors', that is, innate patterns of action or archetypes.

Verbal statements made under the guidance of archetypal images are truly operational, inasmuch as they involve activities which the recipient of the communication, notably the patient, can carry out without having been explicitly told or taught.

In the linguistic system used by the partners in true communication, certain archetypal entities are encoded and decoded.

The code contains themes into which the archetypes are metamorphosed or transformed.

One such theme known to linguists as the 'phoneme' (the minimum feature of the linguistic system by which one thing that may be said is distinguished from another which might have been said) (Gleason, 1955) is analogous to the mythologem. According to Trubetzkoy (1936) and Martinet (1949), the phonemes can be accounted for by a primary theoretical entity called the 'archephoneme'.

This can realize itself in two linguistic patterns which fulfil a complementary, contrasting function; or the two opposites can remain fused or be ’neutralized’.

Here we find a link with analytical psychology, which operates with archetypes characterized by their bipolarity.

The investigation of certain language disorders has led me to amalgamate the linguistic and the analytical concepts into one.

For the phenomenological aspect of language, or what is being said about primary existent things and how it is said, Plato, and Aristotle after him, used the term rhema (from ereo, ’I say’; it refers to actual form and structure).

The ancient Indian linguists distinguished the observable form from a kind of prototype called sphota, which literally means ’a bursting’, ’a splitting open’, ’that from which the meaning bursts forth’.

It is the ’eternal sound’ or ’abiding word’ conveying the meaning (Brough, 1951).

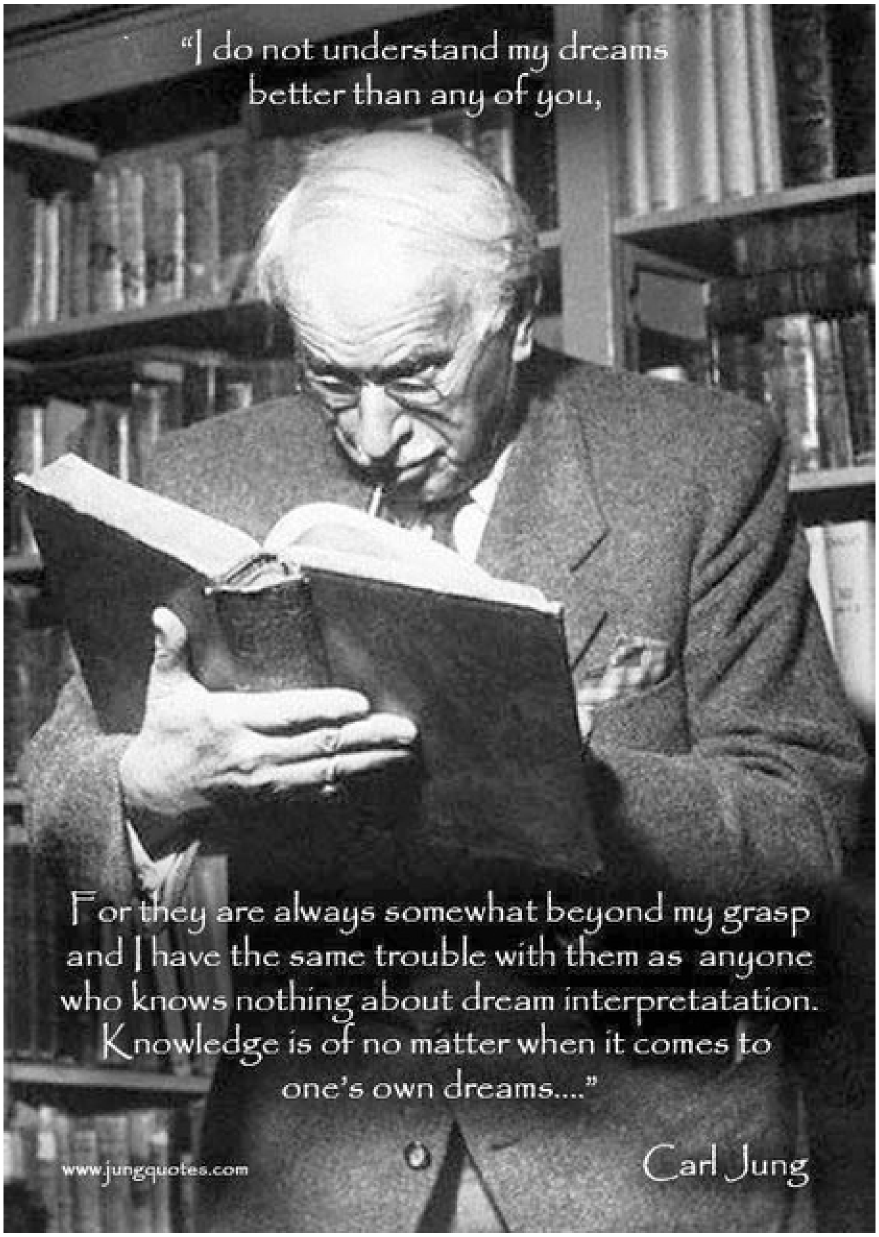
As a substratum of expression or pre-linguistic event it is not observable or describable; it is a theoretical entity which I have named archerhememe (Stein, 1963)..

Thus my two loves, analytical psychology and linguistics, have joined together through the ubiquity of the archetype which, since Jung ’invented’ it, has insinuated itself into divers fields. L. Stein, Contact with Jung, Pages 75-78

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+contact+fordham&qid=1575365295&sr=8-1`

Some Carl Jung Quotations [XI] (2019-12-03 04:26)

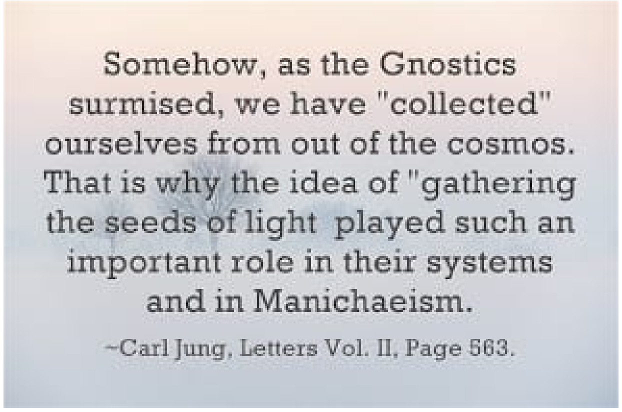


"I do not understand my dreams better than any of you,

For they are always somewhat beyond my grasp and I have the same trouble with them as anyone who knows nothing about dream interpretatation. Knowledge is of no matter when it comes to one's own dreams...."

Carl Jung

[2]



Somehow, as the Gnostics surmised, we have "collected" ourselves from out of the cosmos. That is why the idea of "gathering the seeds of light played such an important role in their systems and in Manichaeism.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563.

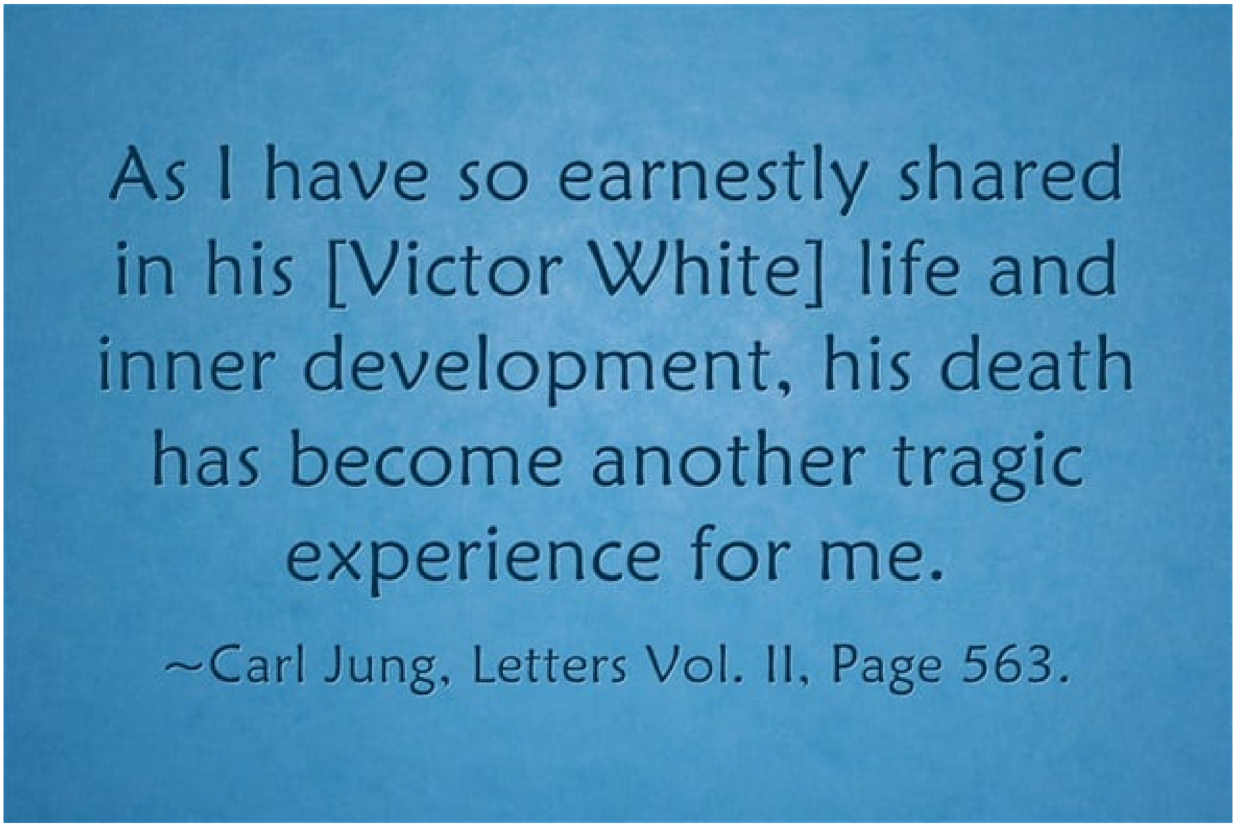
Somehow, as the Gnostics surmised, we have "collected" ourselves from out of the cosmos. That is why the idea of "gathering the seeds of light played such an important role in their systems and in Manichaeism. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563.

[3]
With the feeling, however, that it would not be granted me to pierce through to his [Victor White] understanding. It was then that I sinned against my better insight, but at least it served as a pretext for my asking his forgiveness and offering him a touch of human feeling in the hope that this would afford him some small relief.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563.

With the feeling, however, that it would not be granted me to pierce through to his [Victor White] understanding. It was then that I sinned against my better insight, but at least it served as a pretext for my asking his forgiveness and offering him a touch of human feeling in the hope that this would afford him some small relief. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563

[4]



As I have so earnestly shared in his [Victor White] life and inner development, his death has become another tragic experience for me.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563.

As I have so earnestly shared in his [Victor White] life and inner development, his death has become another tragic experience for me. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563

It was always my fear that he would have to spend his last days in the professional chill of a hospital or in the atmosphere of a monastery cell. Thank God that was spared him.

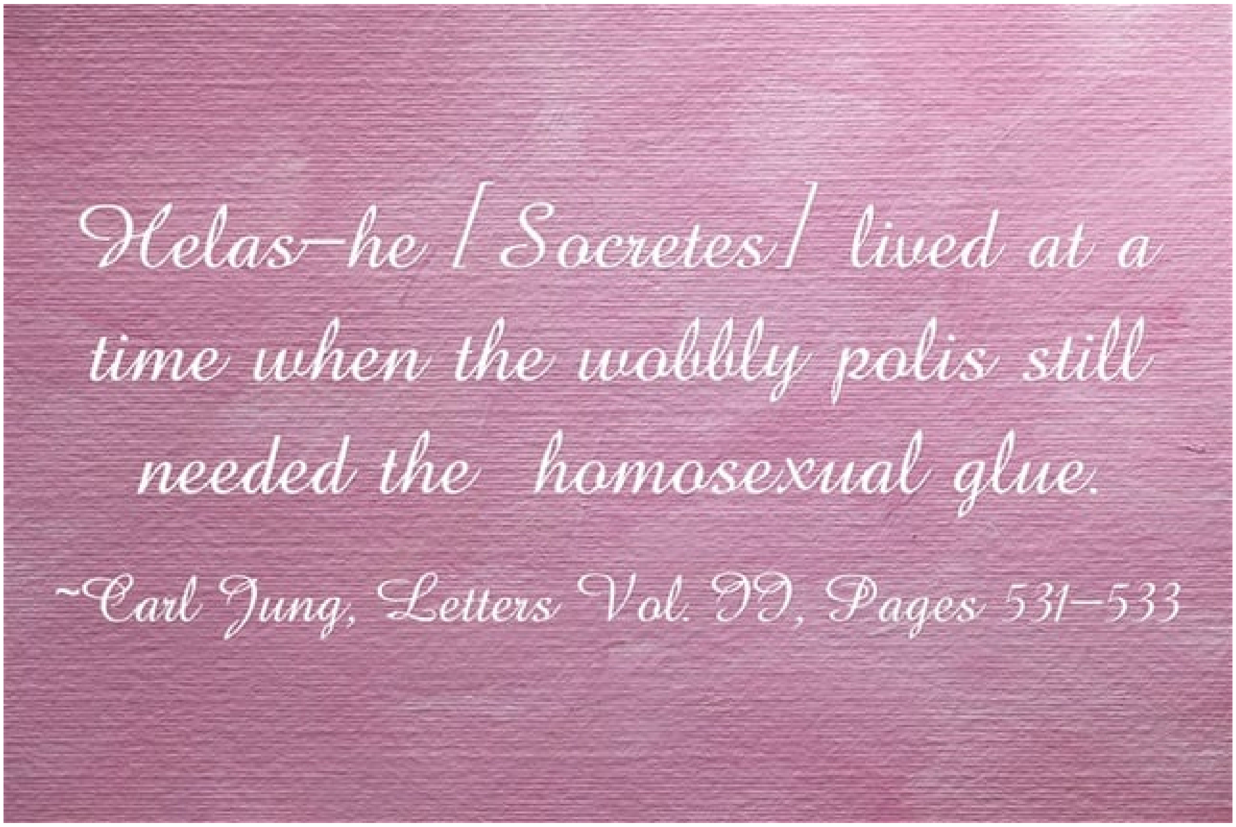
- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II,
Page 563.

It was always my fear that he would have to spend his last days in the professional chill of a hospital or in the atmosphere of a monastery cell. Thank God that was spared him. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 563



Helas–he [Socretes] lived at a time when the wobbly polis still needed the homosexual glue.

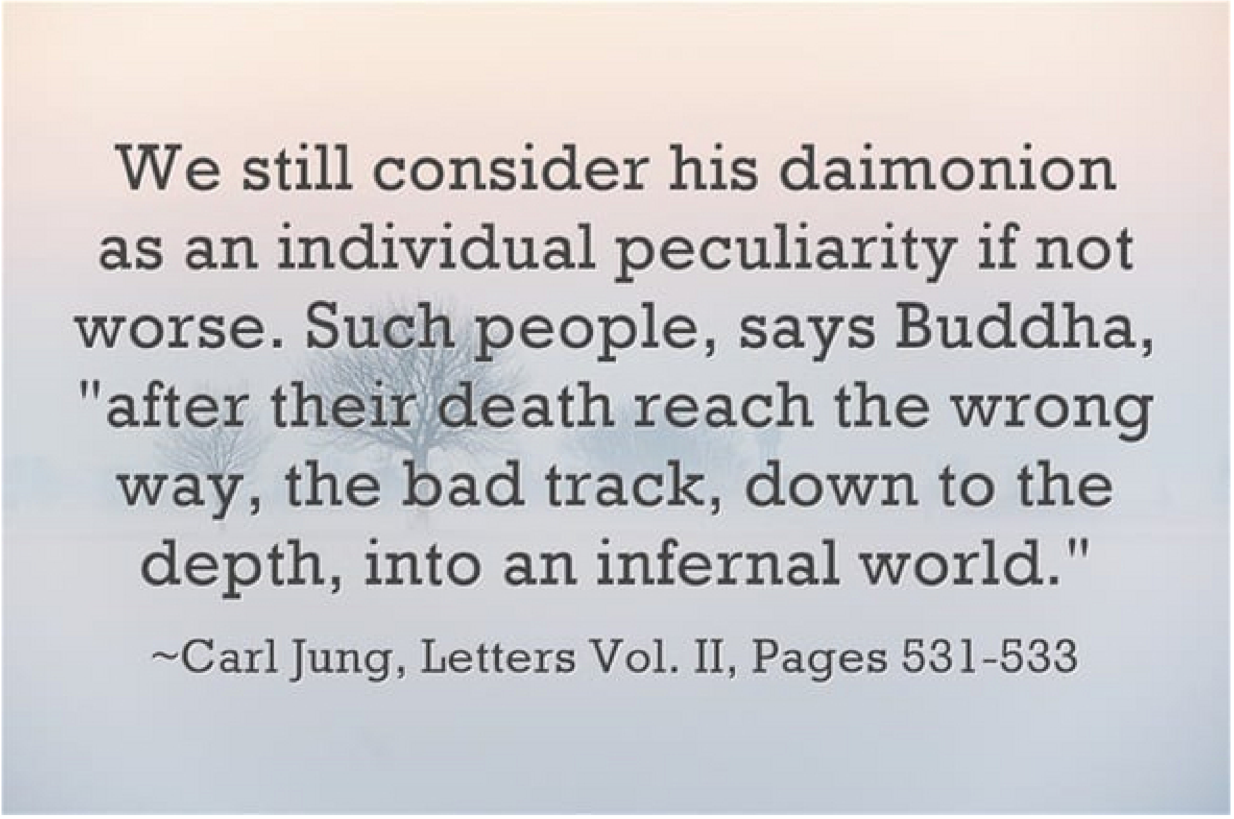
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531–533

Helas-he [Socretes] lived at a time when the wobbly polis still needed the homosexual glue. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533

Socrates' "naivete" is his greatness, still greater than ours. His humbleness is the ideal we have not reached yet.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533

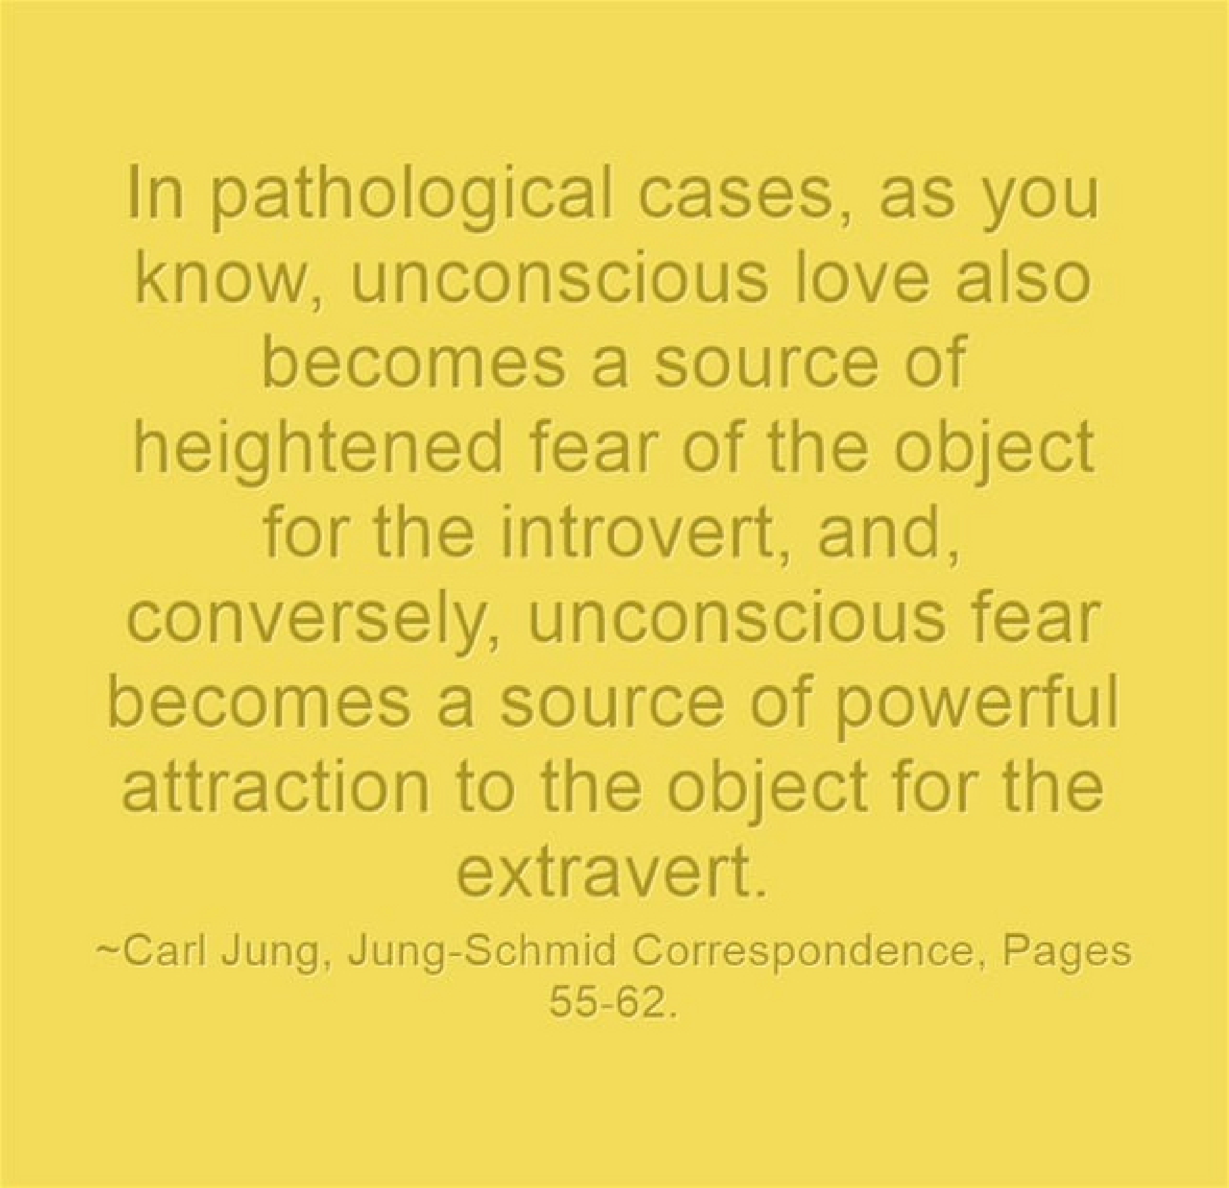
Socrates’ "naivete" is his greatness, still greater than ours. His humbleness is the ideal we have not reached yet.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533



We still consider his daimonion as an individual peculiarity if not worse. Such people, says Buddha, "after their death reach the wrong way, the bad track, down to the depth, into an infernal world."

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533

We still consider his [Socrates] daimonion as an individual peculiarity if not worse. Such people, says Buddha, "after their death reach the wrong way, the bad track, down to the depth, into an infernal world." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533



In pathological cases, as you know, unconscious love also becomes a source of heightened fear of the object for the introvert, and, conversely, unconscious fear becomes a source of powerful attraction to the object for the extravert.

~Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

pathological cases, as you know, unconscious love also becomes a source of heightened fear of the object for the introvert, and, conversely, unconscious fear becomes a source of powerful attraction to the object for the extravert. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

THE INTROVERT DOES FEEL, TOO, AND VERY INTENSELY SO, ONLY IN A DIFFERENT WAY THAN THE EXTRAVERT DOES.
- CARL JUNG, JUNG-SCHMID CORRESPONDENCE, PAGES 55-62.

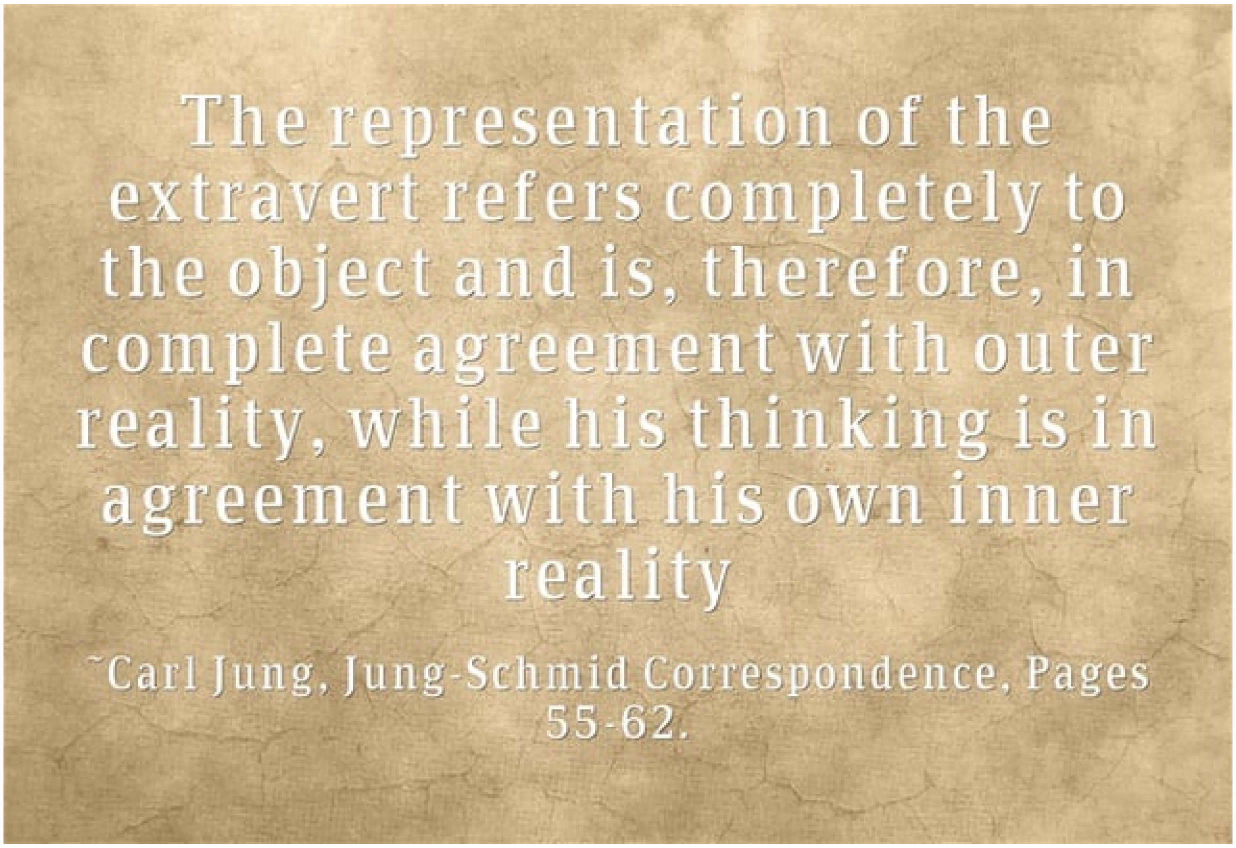
The introvert does feel, too, and very intensely so, only in a different way than the extravert does. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

[11]
Whereas the extravert needs the object to bring his type to perfection and to cleanse his feeling, the introvert experiences this as a horrible violation and disrespect of his personality, because he absolutely refuses to be, so to speak, the chemical dry cleaner for the feelings of extraverts.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

Whereas the extravert needs the object to bring his type to perfection and to cleanse his feeling, the introvert experiences this as a horrible violation and disrespect of his personality, because he absolutely refuses to be, so to speak, the chemical dry cleaner for the feelings of extraverts. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

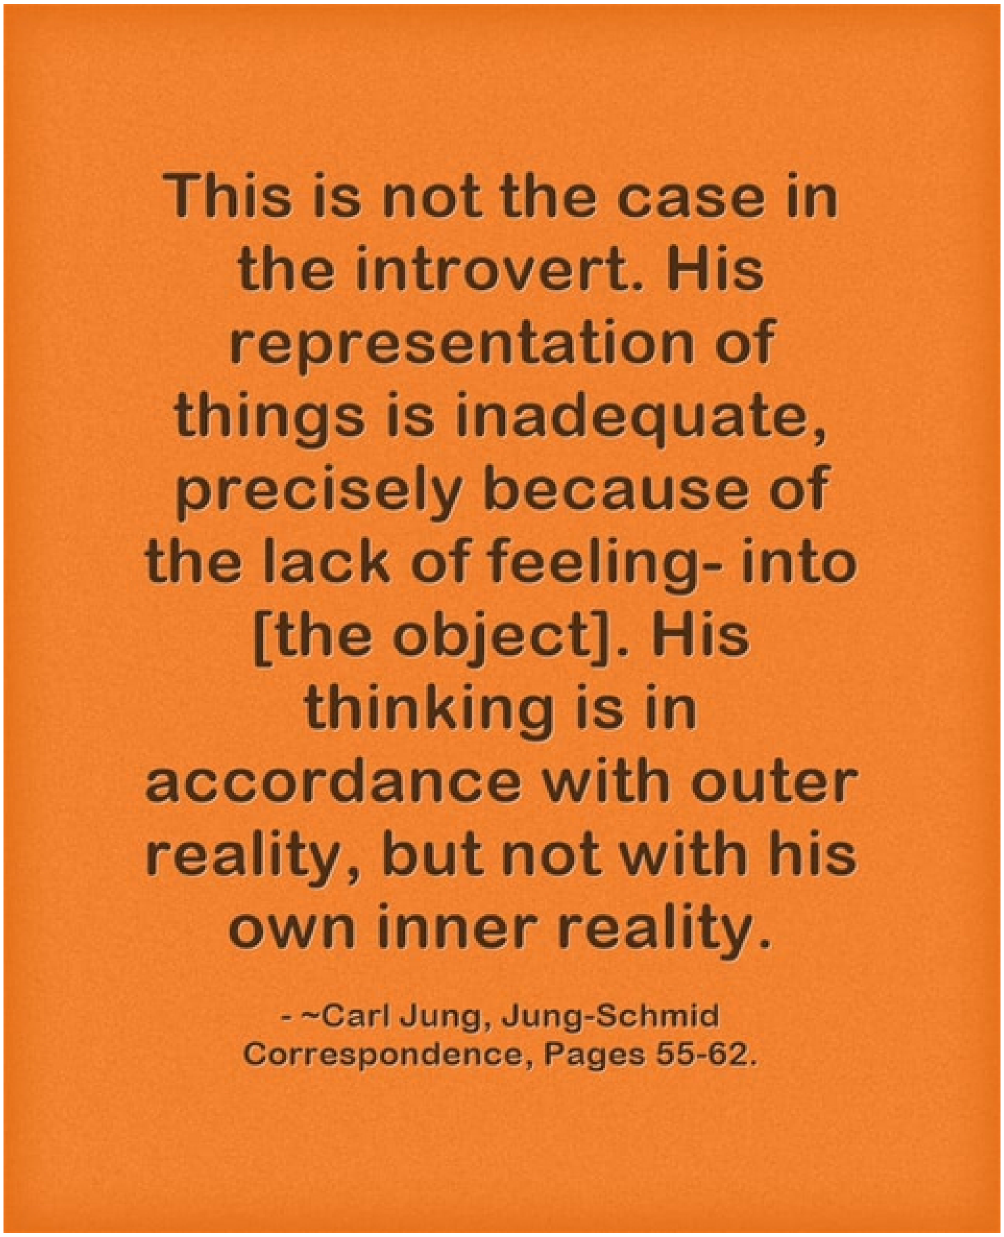
[12]



The representation of the extravert refers completely to the object and is, therefore, in complete agreement with outer reality, while his thinking is in agreement with his own inner reality

~Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

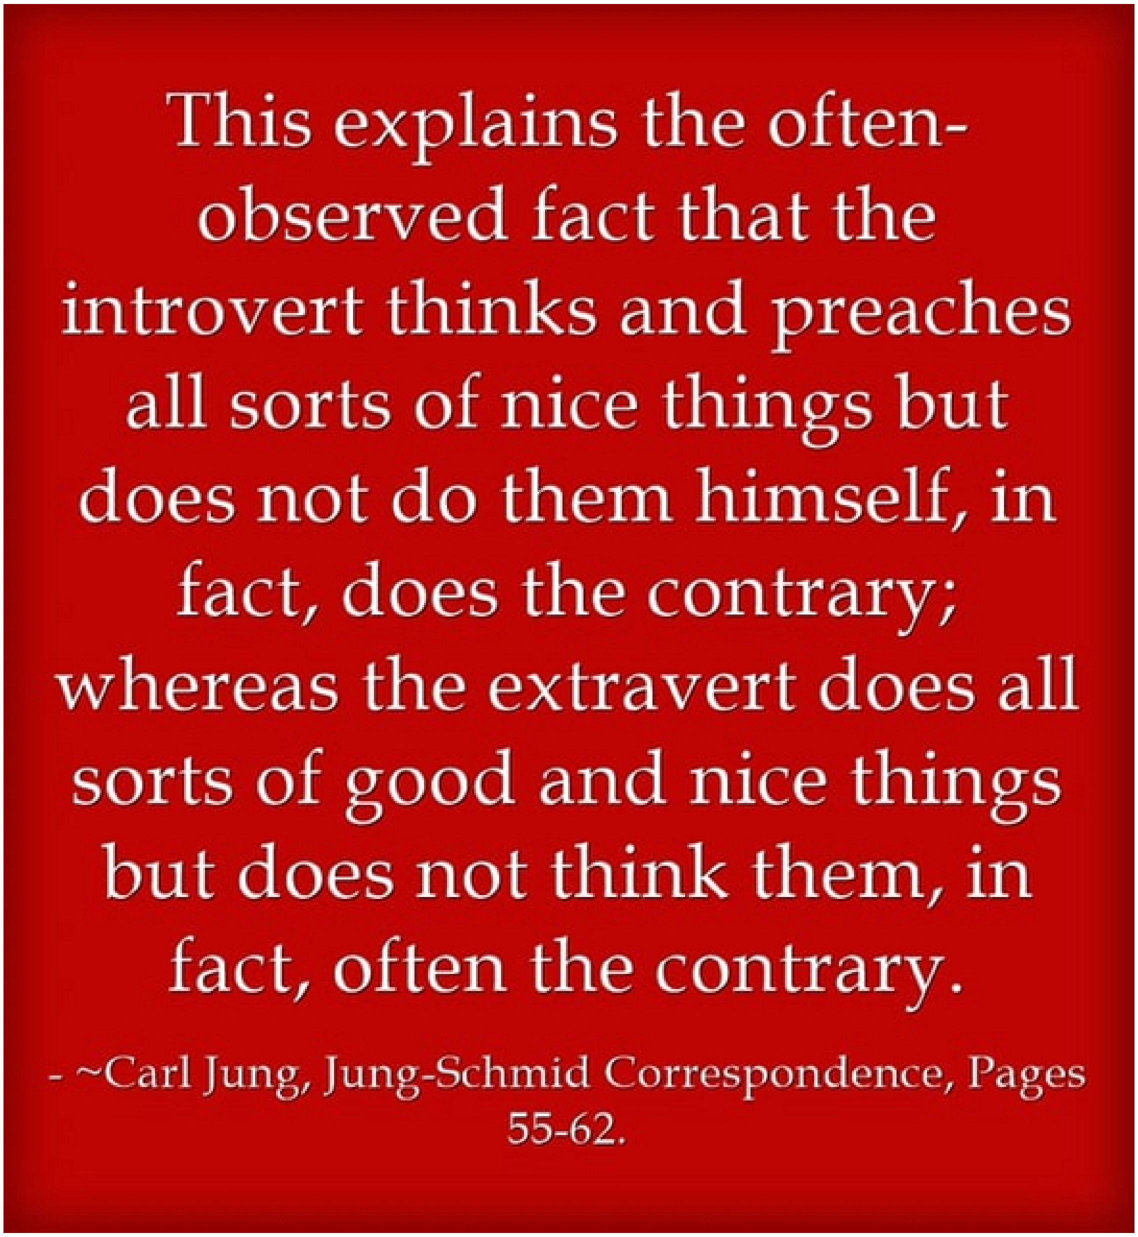
The representation of the extravert refers completely to the object and is, therefore, in complete agreement with outer reality, while his thinking is in agreement with his own inner reality. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.



This is not the case in the introvert. His representation of things is inadequate, precisely because of the lack of feeling- into [the object]. His thinking is in accordance with outer reality, but not with his own inner reality.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

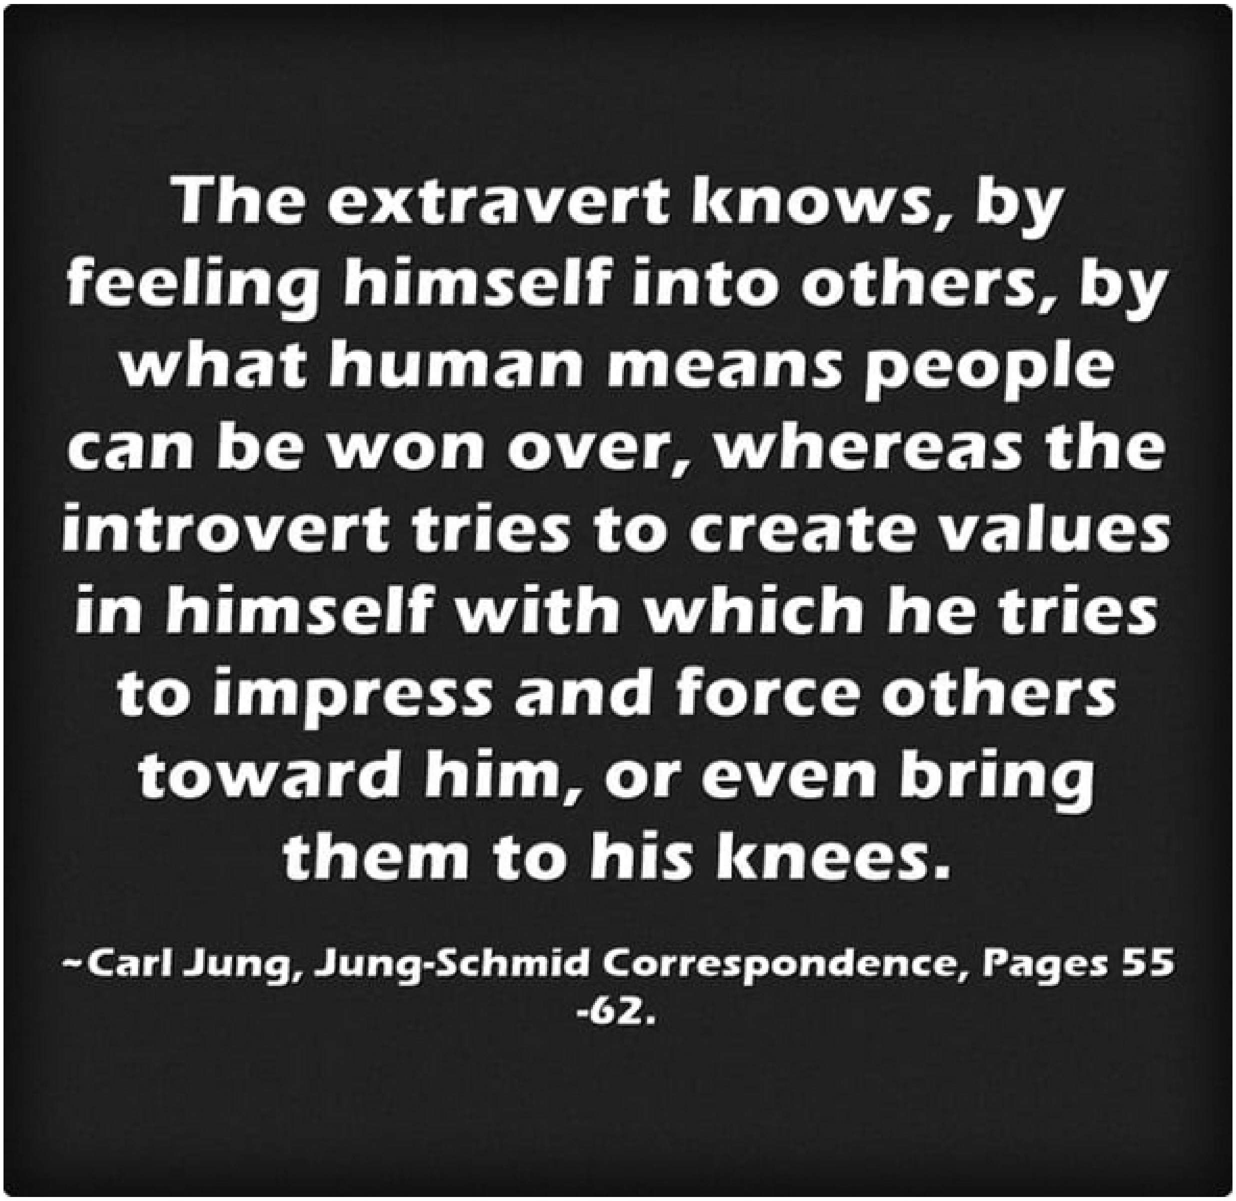
This is not the case in the introvert. His representation of things is inadequate, precisely because of the lack of feeling- into [the object]. His thinking is in accordance with outer reality, but not with his own inner reality. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.



This explains the often-observed fact that the introvert thinks and preaches all sorts of nice things but does not do them himself, in fact, does the contrary; whereas the extravert does all sorts of good and nice things but does not think them, in fact, often the contrary.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

This explains the often- observed fact that the introvert thinks and preaches all sorts of nice things but does not do them himself, in fact, does the contrary; whereas the extravert does all sorts of good and nice things but does not think them, in fact, often the contrary. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.



The extravert knows, by feeling himself into others, by what human means people can be won over, whereas the introvert tries to create values in himself with which he tries to impress and force others toward him, or even bring them to his knees.

~Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55 -62.

The extravert knows, by feeling himself into others, by what human means people can be won over, whereas the introvert tries to create values in himself with which he tries to impress and force others toward him, or even bring them to his knees. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

[16]
Conversely, the introvert strains the pleasure-unpleasure mechanism in his unconscious by the conscious, idealistic desire to create the highest values proper to force others to come to him, thus degrading people to objects of his desire. Conversely, the introvert strains the pleasure-unpleasure mechanism in his unconscious by the conscious, idealistic desire to create the highest values proper to force others to come to him, thus degrading people to objects of his desire. ~Carl Jung, Jung -Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

- Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

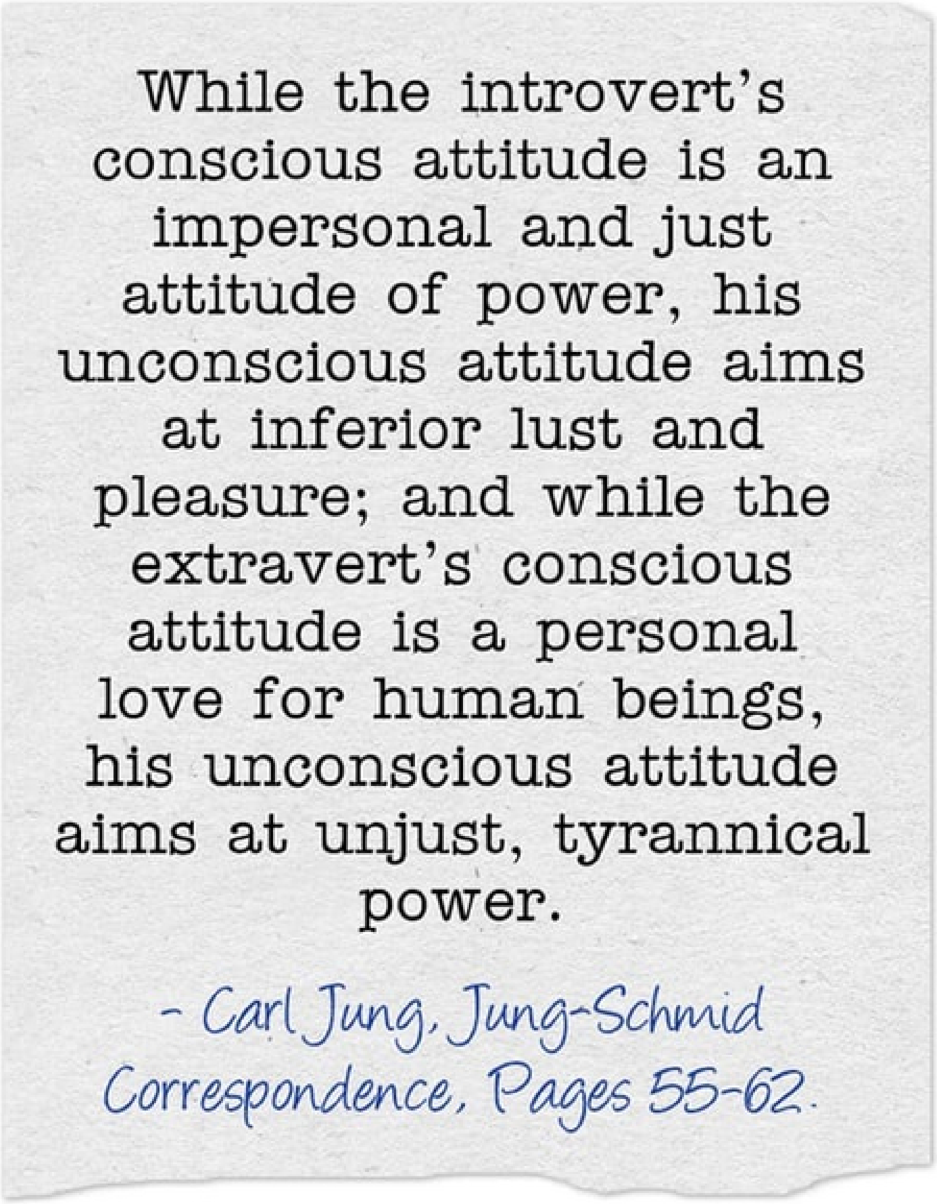
Conversely, the introvert strains the pleasure- unpleasure mechanism in his unconscious by the conscious, idealistic desire to create the highest values proper to force others to come to him, thus degrading people to objects of his desire. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

[17]
The ideally oriented introverted person is faced with the fact that he scares away from himself precisely the human love and joy that he is really trying to find behind all his desire to impress and to be superior, and that he keeps and chains to himself only those inferior persons who know best how to cater to his desire.

- Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

The ideally oriented introverted person is faced with the fact that he scares away from himself precisely the human love and joy that he is really trying to find behind all his desire to impress and to be superior, and that he keeps and chains to himself only those inferior persons who know best how to cater to his desire. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

[18]



While the introvert’s conscious attitude is an impersonal and just attitude of power, his unconscious attitude aims at inferior lust and pleasure; and while the extravert’s conscious attitude is a personal love for human beings, his unconscious attitude aims at unjust, tyrannical power.

- Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

While the introvert’s conscious attitude is an impersonal and just attitude of power, his unconscious attitude aims at inferior lust and pleasure; and while the extravert’s conscious attitude is a personal love for human beings, his unconscious attitude aims at unjust, tyrannical power. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

[19]
Introversion: I have to realize that my object, apart from its reality, is also a symbol of my pleasure, which I unconsciously try to gratify with its help.

Extraversion: I have to realize that my object, apart from its reality, is also a symbol of my power, the approval of which I try to obtain from it.

Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

Introversion: I have to realize that my object, apart from its reality, is also a symbol of my pleasure, which I unconsciously try to gratify with its help.
Extraversion: I have to realize that my object, apart from its reality, is also a symbol of my power, the approval of which I try to obtain from it. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

[20]
I would say: the introvert also tries, through the hypothesis of abstraction, to reach the object, actually reality, which seems to him chaotic only because of the projection of his unused and therefore undeveloped feeling. He tries to conquer the object by thinking. But he wants to reach the object quite as much as the extravert.

Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

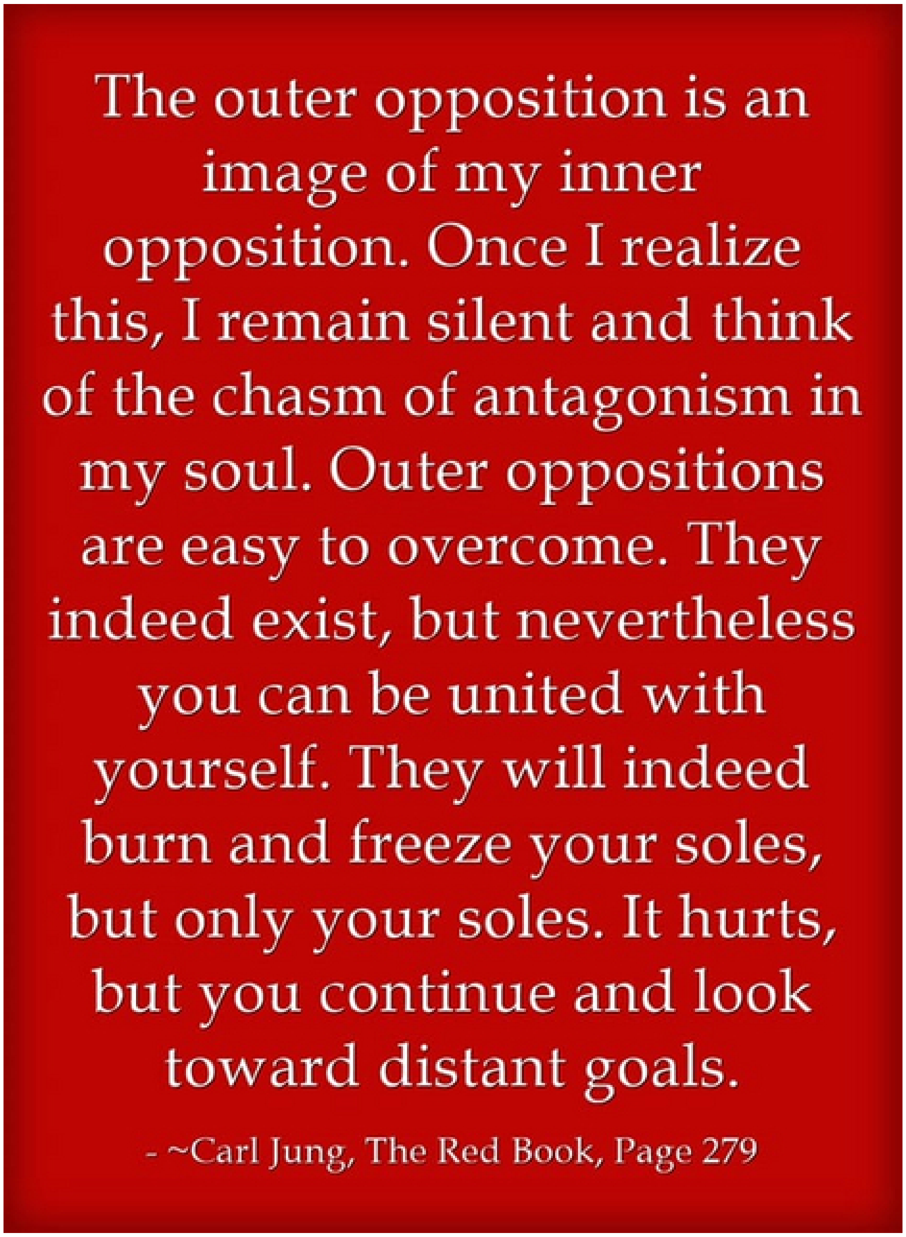
I would say: the introvert also tries, through the hypothesis of abstraction, to reach the object, actually reality, which seems to him chaotic only because of the projection of his unused and therefore undeveloped feeling. He tries to conquer the object by thinking. But he wants to reach the object quite as much as the extravert. Carl Jung, Jung-Schmid Correspondence, Pages 55-62.

[21]
Good and bad must always be united first if the symbol is to be created. The symbol can neither be thought up nor found; it becomes. It's becoming is like the becoming of human life in the womb. Pregnancy comes about through voluntary copulation. It goes on through willing attention. But if the depths have conceived, then the symbol grows out of itself and is born from the mind, as befits a God.

--Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 311

Good and bad must always be united first if the symbol is to be created. The symbol can neither be thought up nor found; it becomes. Its becoming is like the becoming of human life in the womb. Pregnancy comes about through voluntary copulation. It goes on through willing attention. But if the depths have conceived, then the symbol grows out of itself and is born from the mind, as befits a God. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 311.

[22]



The outer opposition is an image of my inner opposition. Once I realize this, I remain silent and think of the chasm of antagonism in my soul. Outer oppositions are easy to overcome. They indeed exist, but nevertheless you can be united with yourself. They will indeed burn and freeze your soles, but only your soles. It hurts, but you continue and look toward distant goals.

- ~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 279

The outer opposition is an image of my inner opposition. Once I realize this, I remain silent and think of the chasm of antagonism in my soul. Outer oppositions are easy to overcome. They indeed exist, but nevertheless you can be united with yourself. They will indeed burn and freeze your soles, but only your soles. It hurts, but you continue and look toward distant goals. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 279.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/f51d3-1dreams.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/e42bf-aaa.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d536e-bbb.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/aee75-ccc.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/da5f7-ddd.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/887e2-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/66b1a-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/a52e3-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/54cc9-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/bcd60-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/9fdd7-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/1d8e9-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/cab99-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/df3eb-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/bfdb0-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/f5358-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/5ff9f-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/ca67b-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/94982-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/1bd6d-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/bdc3b-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/ffaa6-vvv.jpg`

I guarded them like precious pearls…. (2019-12-03 04:38)

[1]

"My mandalas were cryptograms concerning the state of the self which was presented to me anew each day…

It became increasingly plain to me that the mandala is the center.
It is the exponent of all paths.
It is the path to the center, to individuation."

C.G. Jung

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflection

"My mandalas were cryptograms concerning the state of the self which was presented to me anew each day…

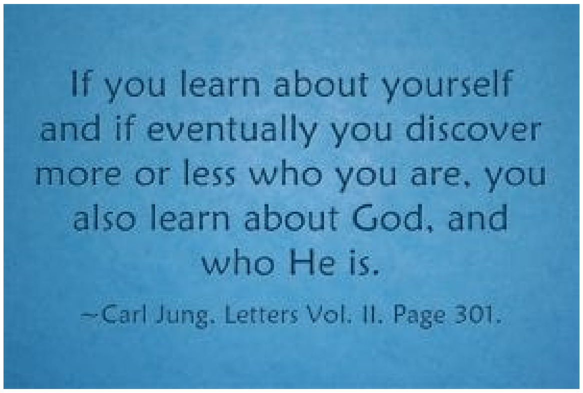
I guarded them like precious pearls....

It became increasingly plain to me that the mandala is the center. It is the exponent of all paths. It is the path to the center, to individuation. " Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

http://jungcurrents.com/jung-individuation-mandala/

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/fd5ad-mandala.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-C-Jung/dp/039443580X/ref=tmm_hrd_swatch_0?_encoding=UTF8&qid=1575366725&sr=8-1

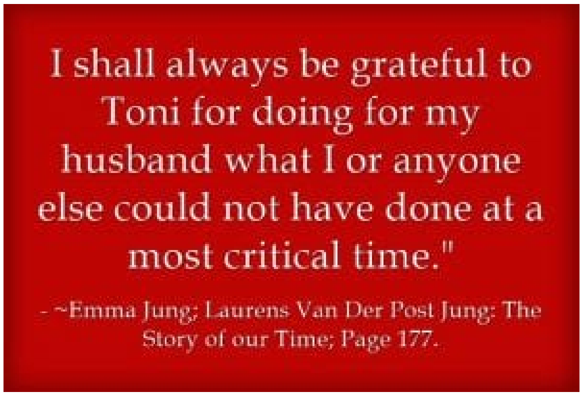
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-03 04:44)



If you learn about yourself and if eventually you discover more or less who you are, you also learn about God, and who He is.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 301.

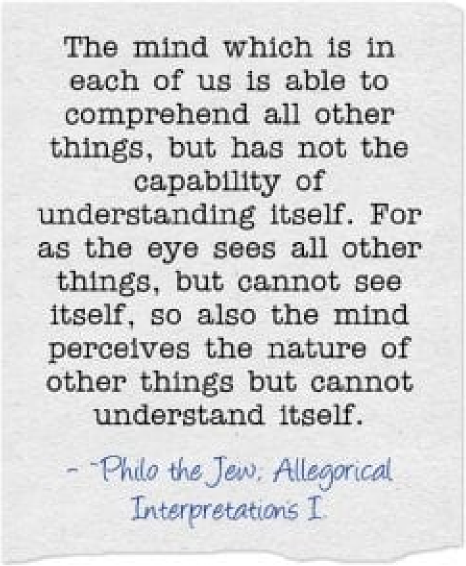
If you learn about yourself and if eventually you discover more or less who you are, you also learn about God, and who He is. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 301.



I shall always be grateful to Toni for doing for my husband what I or anyone else could not have done at a most critical time."

- ~Emma Jung; Laurens Van Der Post Jung: The Story of our Time; Page 177.

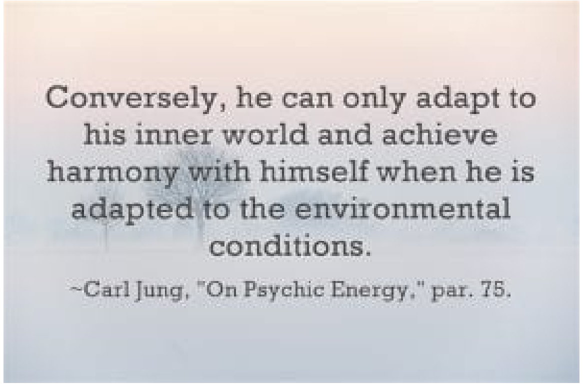
I shall always be grateful to Toni for doing for my husband what I or anyone else could not have done at a most critical time. Emma Jung; Laurens Van Der Post Jung: The Story of our Time; Page 177.



The mind which is in each of us is able to comprehend all other things, but has not the capability of understanding itself. For as the eye sees all other things, but cannot see itself, so also the mind perceives the nature of other things but cannot understand itself.

- ~Philo the Jew; Allegorical Interpretations I.

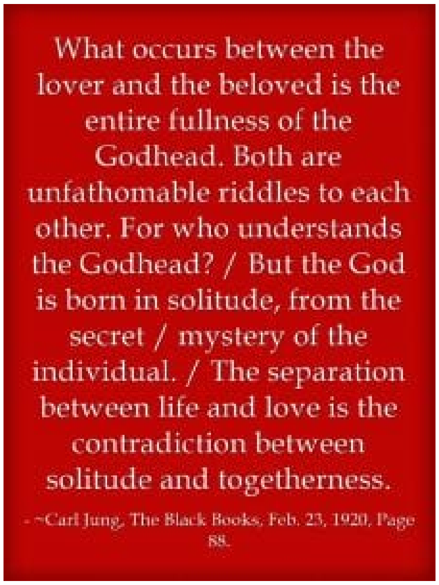
The mind which is in each of us is able to comprehend all other things, but has not the capability of understanding itself. For as the eye sees all other things, but cannot see itself, so also the mind perceives the nature of other things but cannot understand itself. Philo the Jew; Allegorical Interpretations I.



Conversely, he can only adapt to his inner world and achieve harmony with himself when he is adapted to the environmental conditions.

~Carl Jung, "On Psychic Energy," par. 75.

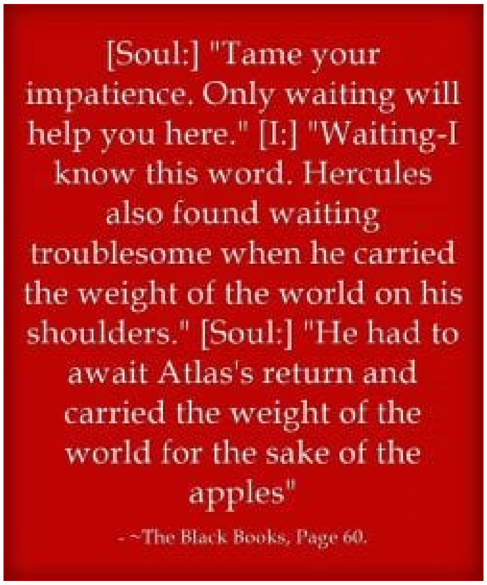
Conversely, he can only adapt to his inner world and achieve harmony with himself when he is adapted to the environmental conditions. Carl Jung, "On Psychic Energy," par. 75.



What occurs between the lover and the beloved is the entire fullness of the Godhead. Both are unfathomable riddles to each other. For who understands the Godhead? / But the God is born in solitude, from the secret / mystery of the individual. / The separation between life and love is the contradiction between solitude and togetherness.

- ~Carl Jung, The Black Books, Feb. 23, 1920, Page 88.

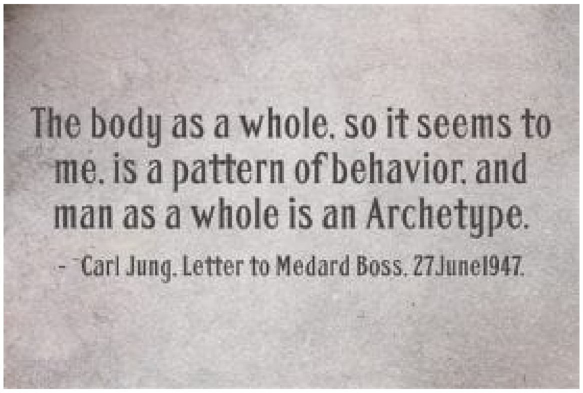
What occurs between the lover and the beloved is the entire fullness of the Godhead. Both are unfathomable riddles to each other. For who understands the Godhead? / But the God is born in solitude, from the secret / mystery of the individual. / The separation between life and love is the contradiction between solitude and togetherness. Carl Jung, The Black Books, Feb. 23, 1920, Page 88.



[Soul:] "Tame your impatience. Only waiting will help you here." [I:] "Waiting-I know this word. Hercules also found waiting troublesome when he carried the weight of the world on his shoulders." [Soul:] "He had to await Atlas's return and carried the weight of the world for the sake of the apples"

- ~The Black Books, Page 60.

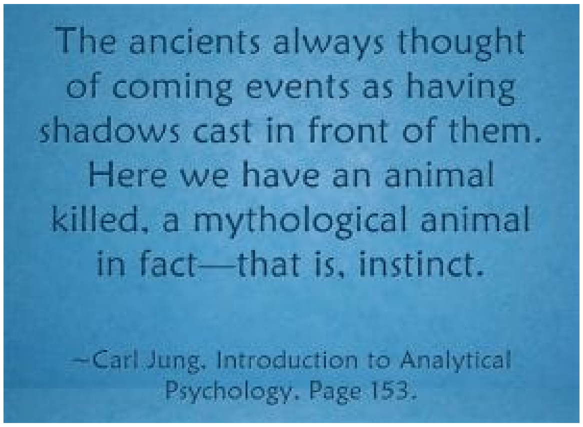
[Soul:] "Tame your impatience. Only waiting will help you here." [I:] "Waiting-I know this word. Hercules also found waiting troublesome when he carried the weight of the world on his shoulders." [Soul:] "He had to await Atlas's return and carried the weight of the world for the sake of the apples" The Black Books, Page 60.



The body as a whole. so it seems to me. is a pattern of behavior. and man as a whole is an Archetype.

- Carl Jung. Letter to Medard Boss. 27June1947.

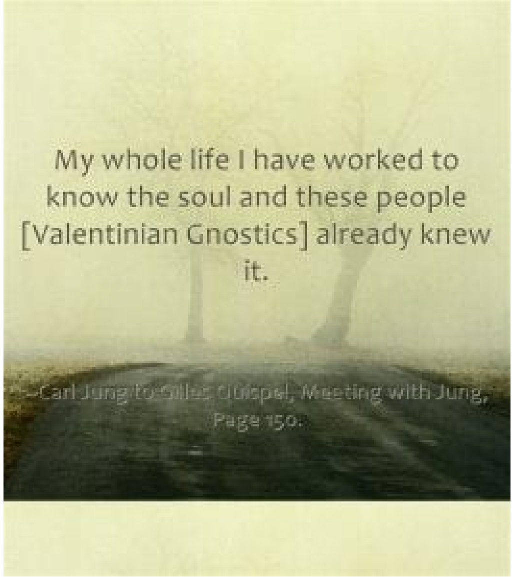
The body as a whole, so it seems to me, is a pattern of behavior, and man as a whole is an Archetype. Carl Jung, Letter to Medard Boss, 27June1947.



The ancients always thought of coming events as having shadows cast in front of them. Here we have an animal killed, a mythological animal in fact—that is, instinct.

—Carl Jung. Introduction to Analytical Psychology. Page 153.

The ancients always thought of coming events as having shadows cast in front of them. Here we have an animal killed, a mythological animal in fact—that is, instinct. Carl Jung, Introduction to Analytical Psychology, Page 153.



My whole life I have worked to know the soul and these people [Valentinian Gnostics] already knew it.

—Carl Jung to Gilles Quispel, Meeting with Jung, Page 150.

My whole life I have worked to know the soul and these people [Valentinian Gnostics] already knew it. Carl Jung to Gilles Quispel, Meeting with Jung, Page 150.

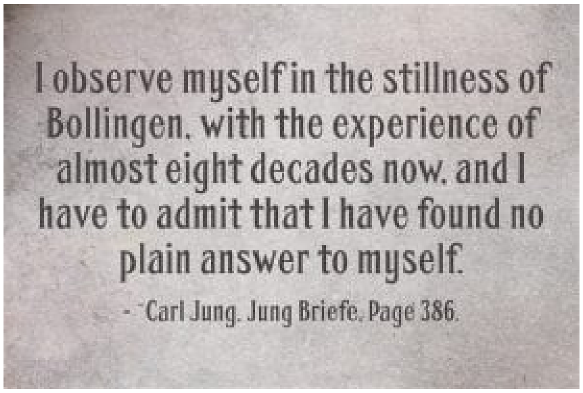
Taking it in its deepest sense, the shadow is the invisible saurian tail that man still drags behind him. Carefully amputated, it becomes the healing serpent of the mysteries. Only monkeys parade with it.

~Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality.

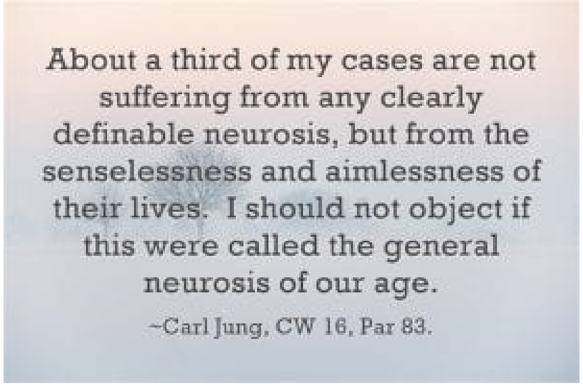
Taking it in its deepest sense, the shadow is the invisible saurian tail that man still drags behind him. Carefully amputated, it becomes the healing serpent of the mysteries. Only monkeys parade with it. Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality.



I observe myself in the stillness of Bollingen. with the experience of almost eight decades now. and I have to admit that I have found no plain answer to myself.

- Carl Jung. Jung Briefe, Page 386.

I observe myself in the stillness of Bollingen, with the experience of almost eight decades now, and I have to admit that I have found no plain answer to myself. Carl Jung, Jung Briefe, Page 386.



About a third of my cases are not suffering from any clearly definable neurosis, but from the senselessness and aimlessness of their lives. I should not object if this were called the general neurosis of our age.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Par 83.

About a third of my cases are not suffering from any clearly definable neurosis, but from the senselessness and aimlessness of their lives. I should not object if this were called the general neurosis of our age. Carl Jung, CW 16, Par 83.

Because of some obstacle - a constitutional weakness or defect.
wrong education. bad experiences.
an unsuitable attitude. etc. - one shrinks from the difficulties which life brings...

- ~Carl Jung. CW 13. Par 472.

Because of some obstacle - a constitutional weakness or defect, wrong education, bad experiences, an unsuitable attitude, etc. - one shrinks from the difficulties which life brings... Carl Jung, CW 13, Par 472.

Conformity is one side of a man, uniqueness is another.
~Carl Jung, CW 6, Par 895.

Conformity is one side of a man, uniqueness is another. Carl Jung, CW 6, Par 895.

Individuation is an expression of that biological process - simple or complicated as the case may be - by which every living thing becomes what it was destined to become from the beginning.

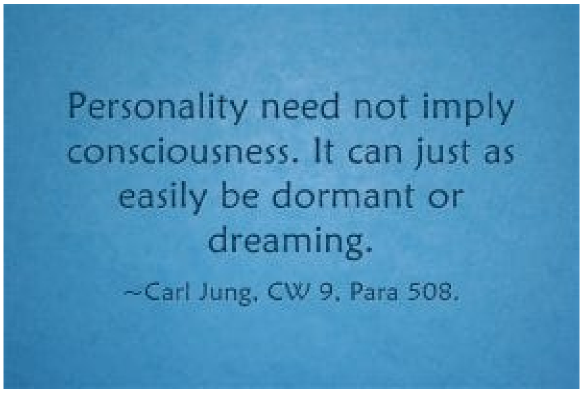
- ~Carl Jung. CW 11. Para 144.

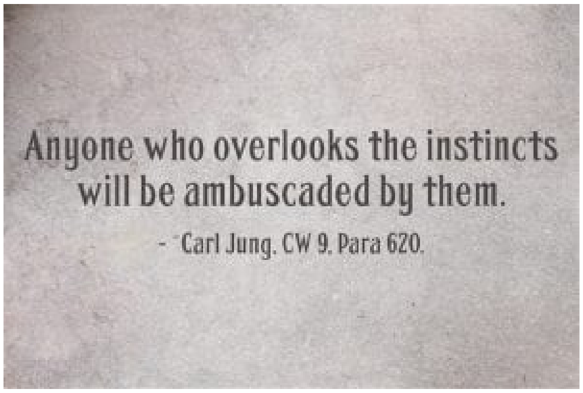
Individuation is an expression of that biological process - simple or complicated as the case may be - by which every living thing becomes what it was destined to become from the beginning. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 144.



Personality need not imply consciousness. It can just as easily be dormant or dreaming.

~Carl Jung, CW 9, Para 508.

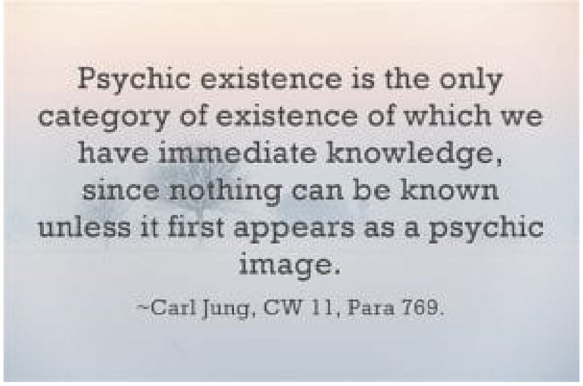
Personality need not imply consciousness. It can just as easily be dormant or dreaming. Carl Jung, CW 9, Para 508.



Anyone who overlooks the instincts will be ambuscaded by them.

- Carl Jung, CW 9, Para 620.

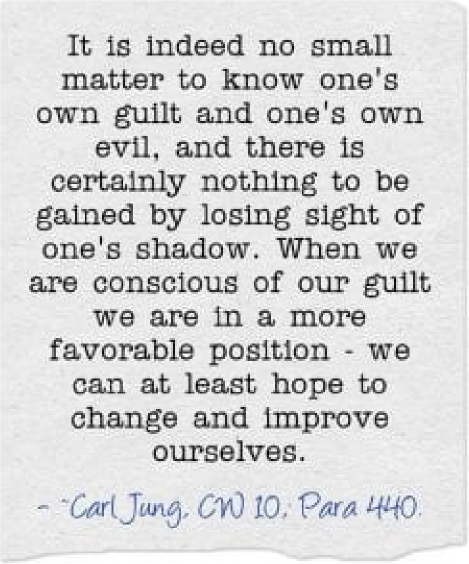
Anyone who overlooks the instincts will be ambuscaded by them. Carl Jung, CW 9, Para 620.



Psychic existence is the only category of existence of which we have immediate knowledge, since nothing can be known unless it first appears as a psychic image.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 769.

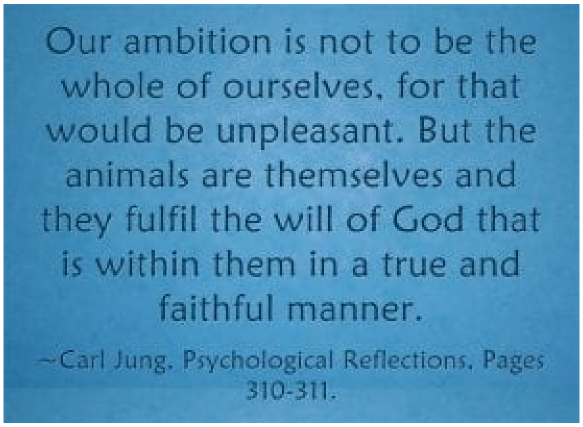
Psychic existence is the only category of existence of which we have immediate knowledge, since nothing can be known unless it first appears as a psychic image. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 769.



It is indeed no small matter to know one's own guilt and one's own evil, and there is certainly nothing to be gained by losing sight of one's shadow. When we are conscious of our guilt we are in a more favorable position - we can at least hope to change and improve ourselves.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 440.

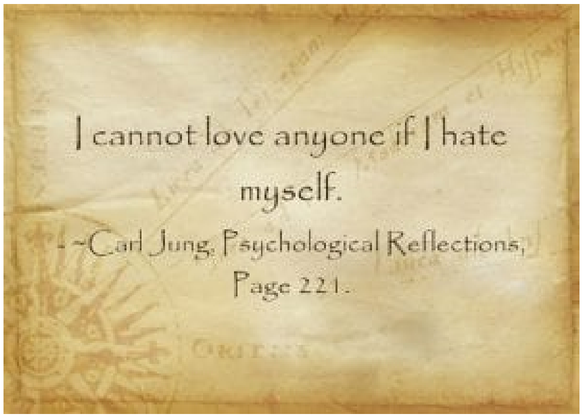
It is indeed no small matter to know one's own guilt and one's own evil, and there is certainly nothing to be gained by losing sight of one's shadow. When we are conscious of our guilt we are in a more favorable position - we can at least hope to change and improve ourselves. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 440.



Our ambition is not to be the whole of ourselves, for that would be unpleasant. But the animals are themselves and they fulfil the will of God that is within them in a true and faithful manner.

~Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, Pages 310-311.

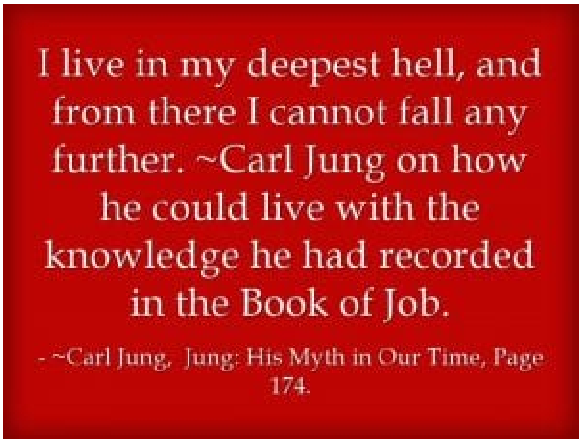
Our ambition is not to be the whole of ourselves, for that would be unpleasant. But the animals are themselves and they fulfil the will of God that is within them in a true and faithful manner. Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, Pages 310-311.



I cannot love anyone if I hate myself.

~Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, Page 221.

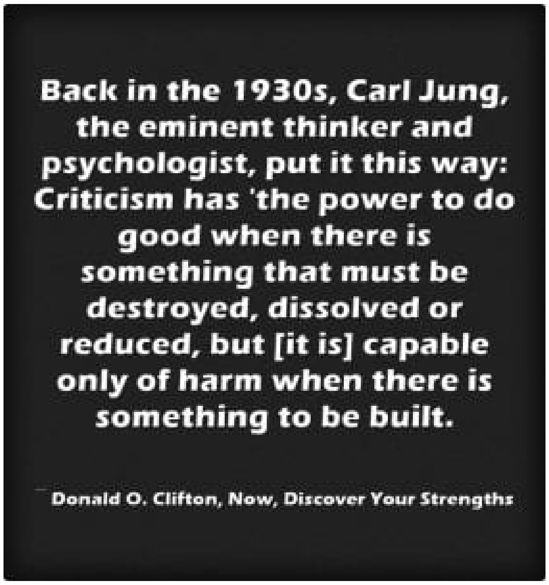
I cannot love anyone if I hate myself. Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, Page 221.



I live in my deepest hell, and from there I cannot fall any further. ~Carl Jung on how he could live with the knowledge he had recorded in the Book of Job.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 174.

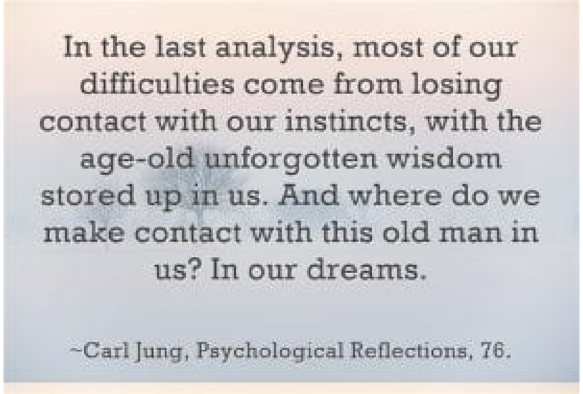
I live in my deepest hell, and from there I cannot fall any further. Carl Jung on how he could live with the knowledge he had recorded in the Book of Job, Jung: His Myth in Our Time, Page 174.



Back in the 1930s, Carl Jung, the eminent thinker and psychologist, put it this way: Criticism has 'the power to do good when there is something that must be destroyed, dissolved or reduced, but [it is] capable only of harm when there is something to be built.

– Donald O. Clifton, Now, Discover Your Strengths

Back in the 1930s, Carl Jung, the eminent thinker and psychologist, put it this way: Criticism has 'the power to do good when there is something that must be destroyed, dissolved or reduced, but [it is] capable only of harm when there is something to be built. — Donald O. Clifton, Now, Discover Your Strengths



In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us. And where do we make contact with this old man in us? In our dreams.

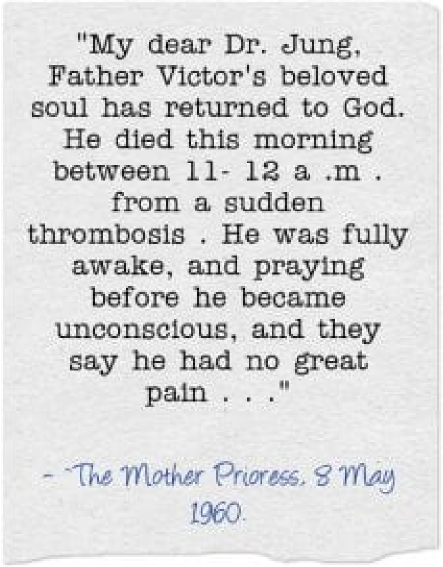
~Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, 76.

In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us. And where do we make contact with this old man in us? In our dreams. Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, 76.

He who cannot love can never transform the serpent, and then nothing is changed.

~Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, Page 249.

He who cannot love can never transform the serpent, and then nothing is changed. Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, Page 249.



"My dear Dr. Jung,
Father Victor's beloved soul has returned to God.
He died this morning between 11- 12 a .m .
from a sudden thrombosis . He was fully awake, and praying before he became unconscious, and they say he had no great pain . . ."

- The Mother Prioress, 8 May 1960.

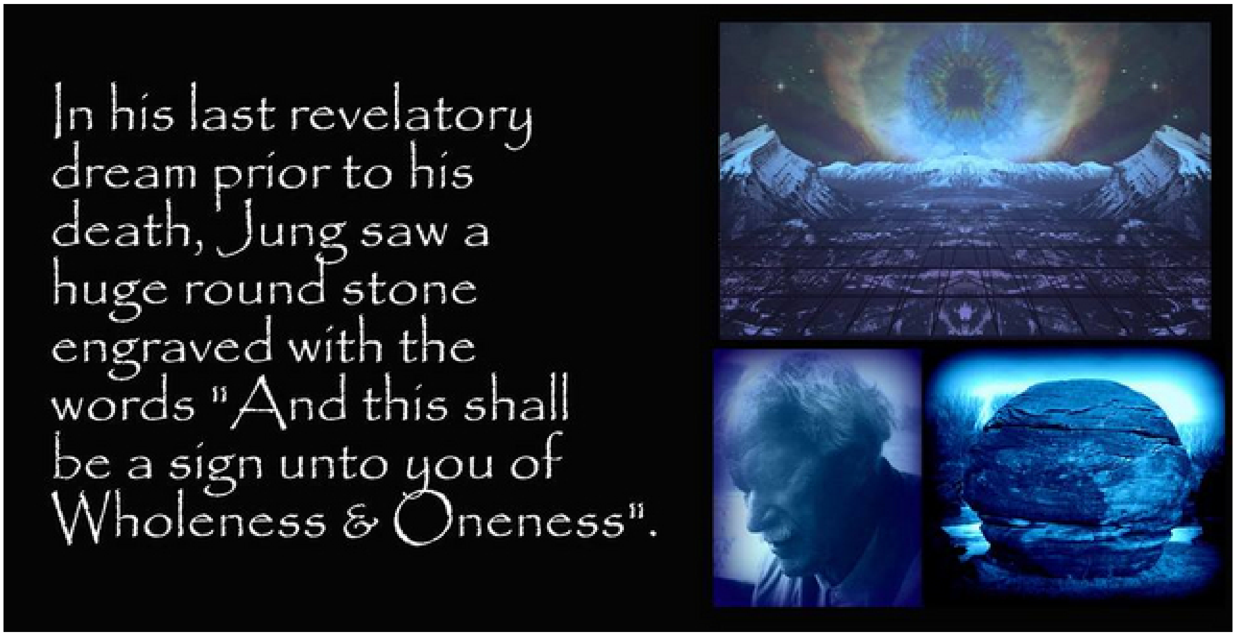
"My dear Dr. Jung, Father Victor's beloved soul has returned to God. He died this morning between 11- 12 a .m . from a sudden thrombosis . He was fully awake, and praying before he became unconscious, and they say he had no great pain . . ." The Mother Prioress, 8 May 1960.

Also after that he [Carl Jung] had a wonderful dream which he told me in the night. (2019-12-03 04:54)



In his last revelatory dream prior to his death, Jung saw a huge round stone engraved with the words "And this shall be a sign unto you of Wholeness & Oneness".

[2]C.G. Jung & Hermann Hesse

For two days before he died he was away in some far country and he saw wonderful and beautiful things, .I am sure of that.

He smiled often and was happy. . . . he told me of the wonderful dream he had had; he said: "Now I know the truth but there is a small piece not filled in and when I know that I shall be dead."

Also after that he had a wonderful dream which he told me in the night.

He saw a huge round block of stone sitting on a high plateau and at the foot of the stone was engraved these words:

"And this shall be a sign unto you of Wholeness and Oneness." Ruth Bailey, Two Friendships, Page 104.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/aa78b-1stone.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Hermann-Hesse-Miguel-Serrano/dp/3856305580/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+two+friendship&qid=1575370371&sr=8-1`

The Most Significant Stimulus Derived From C.G. Jung by Barbara Hannah (2019-12-03 04:54)

Toni Wolff, C.G. Jung and Barbara Hannah at Eranos, 1939

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

The Most Significant Stimulus Derived From C.G. Jung by Barbara Hannah

As has been repeatedly pointed out in the press since the death of C. G. Jung, the most striking thing about him was that he was never content to leave any idea as a mere idea, but always tried it out in his own life, so that he himself was his own living psychology.

Therefore every contact with him was a challenge and a stimulus which revealed one-often very painfully-to oneself.

Nevertheless, I welcomed the question: 'What is the most significant stimulus that each contributor has derived from C. G. Jung?' for it forced one to reflect on these stimuli and on where they had had the most far-reaching effect.

Looking back, I see the strongest stimulus for myself in something he said in a lecture in 1938.

Jung was speaking on a Tibetan text, 'Shri-Chakra-Sambhara Tantra', where, after the Yogin' s statement: 'I am Buddha' (meant, as Jung pointed out, in the sense of: 'I as the Eternal Being am Buddha'), the senses and emotions rise up to contradict the Yogin angrily.

The Yogin must meditate on these as five male Devatas: delusion, anger, greed, miserliness, and jealousy.

Jung showed several pictures where such situations are depicted in the form of small figures coming out of the Yogin' s head.

He then pointed out what a high degree of culture such a picture revealed: the ability to objectify and personify the chaotic emotions in a form where it was then possible to have it out, and even to come to terms, with them.

He added that this culture was entirely unknown in the West.

Back in 1930, Mrs. Jung had drawn my attention to the fact that it was possible to come to terms with negative emotions and to find a value in them.

They should not be repressed but rather related to and given a voice, in order that we should learn what it was they really wanted (cf. Jung, 1916).

I realized the importance of this point of view and tried-without much success-to apply it.

But when Jung spoke of this Eastern culture, I felt that it rang a bell which was heard by all the different parts of my psyche, and that now a conscious effort, to find a Western equivalent to this Eastern culture, might meet with co-operation, instead of as before with opposition, from the unconscious.

Of course, Jung had already found a Western equivalent in the method of active imagination; however, just as he was never content to leave an idea in the head without integrating it in his life, we cannot afford to take over his ideas ready-made, but must experiment with and suffer from them until we find a form to which our own unconscious will respond.

I had already done a lot of active imagination before this far-reaching stimulus occurred, but evidently in too imitative a way, for, though it had made a lot of sense on the upper levels, so to speak, it had left the foundation such basic unruly things as rage, resentment, ambition, and jealousy-untouched.

They had just moved their quarters, as it were, and gone into new hiding-places, but fundamentally they were quite unmoved.

It was the idea that the East had actually built up a culture on the objectivation of those negative inner emotions and senses, which Christianity dismissed as unworthy and sinful, that opened up a new possibility to me.

I knew it was no longer effective in the East-except in a few exceptional individuals-just as the Christian method of resisting sin is no longer effective in the West.

I had long since despaired of the latter being in any sense my way; but what if one tried the former?

Not indeed as the East did-for its dogma is always too far from our Western make-up-but subjectively, encouraged by the fact that the East had found this way of dealing with the negative so effective that it had founded a kind of dogma on it.

This felt much more hopeful than the Western denial of sin, and the fact that I knew I could not imitate the East encouraged me to have it out with my own unconscious and to search for an individual form of active imagination which would appeal to the negative as well as the positive side of my unconscious.

The original stimulus in 1938 was greatly strengthened about ten years later by something which Jung said in a discussion at the Psychological Club in Zurich.

He was asked if he thought that the atom bomb would be used, and replied that he thought it would depend on how many people could stand the tension of the opposites in themselves.

If enough could stand this tension, he thought atomic war might just be avoided (on the principle of the rainmaker of Kiaochow (cf. Read, 1960)).

But if that were not the case and the atom bomb were to be used on a large scale, he had little doubt that our culture would be entirely destroyed.

It is obvious that, to stand the tension of the opposites, it is necessary to know both of them in ourselves, and, because of nearly 2,000 years of the Christian point of view towards evil (which is written in our blood, however much or little Christian teaching we may have received in our youth), the negative pole usually seems the most difficult to realize.

Ever and again it projects itself beyond the Iron Curtain and we see ourselves merely as its helpless victims. But as Jung says in the Psychology of the Transference (1946, C.W.,16, p.302): 'Can we ever really endure ourselves? "Do unto others ... "-this is as true of evil as of good.'

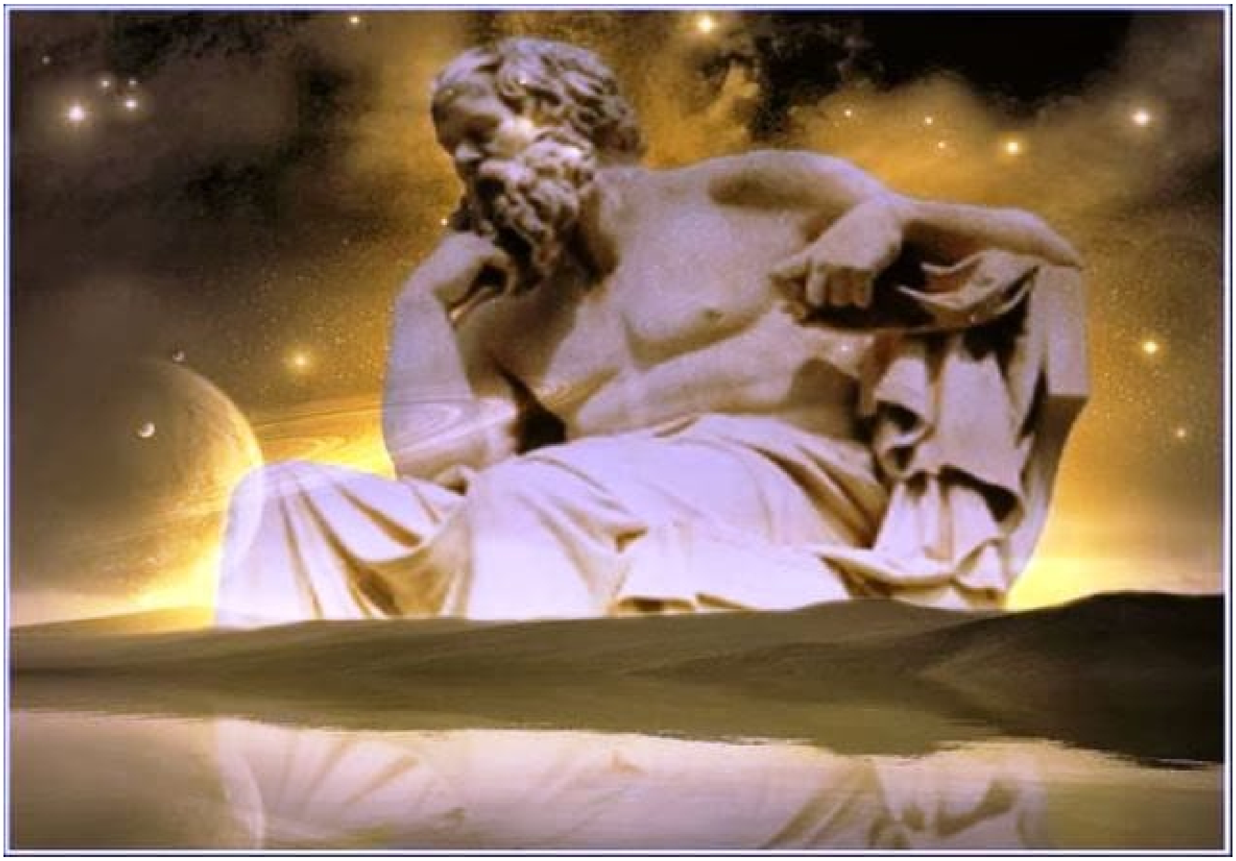
The threat of atomic war is far more acute today than it was in the late 'forties, and outwardly most of us are only able to wait passively to see what happens.

But Jung's suggestion, that if enough of us can stand the tension of the opposites in ourselves the situation might yet be saved, gives us an impetus and a chance to lay 'an infinitesimal grain in the scales of humanity's soul', as Jung himself expressed it in another connection (Jung, 1946, C.W., 16, p. 234). Barbara Hannah, Contact with Jung, 129-130

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+fordham+contact&qid=1575370534&sr=8-1`

The question of karma is obscure to me... (2019-12-03 05:23)

[1]



[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

"The question of karma is obscure to me, as is also the problem of personal rebirth or of the transmigration of souls. "With a free and open mind" I listen attentively to the Indian doctrine of rebirth, and look around in the world of my own experience to see whether somewhere and somehow there is some authentic sign pointing toward reincarnation.

Naturally, I do not count the relatively numerous testimonies, here in the West, to the belief in reincarnation. A belief proves to me only the phenomenon of belief, not the content of the belief. This I must see revealed empirically in order to accept it. Until a few years ago I could not discover anything convincing in this respect, although I kept a sharp lookout for any such signs.

Recently, however, I observed in myself a series of dreams which would seem to describe the process of reincarnation in a deceased person of my acquaintance. But I have never come across any such dreams in other persons, and therefore have no basis for comparison.

Since this observation is subjective and unique, I prefer only to mention its existence and not to go into it any further. I must confess, however, that after this experience I view the problem of reincarnation with somewhat different eyes, though without being in a position to assert a definite opinion.

If we assume that life continues "there," we cannot conceive of any other form of existence except a psychic one; for the life of the psyche requires no space and no time. Psychic existence, and above all the inner images with which we are here concerned, supply the material for all mythic speculations about a life in the hereafter, and I imagine that life as a continuance in the world of images. Thus the psyche might be that existence in which the hereafter or the land of the dead is located.

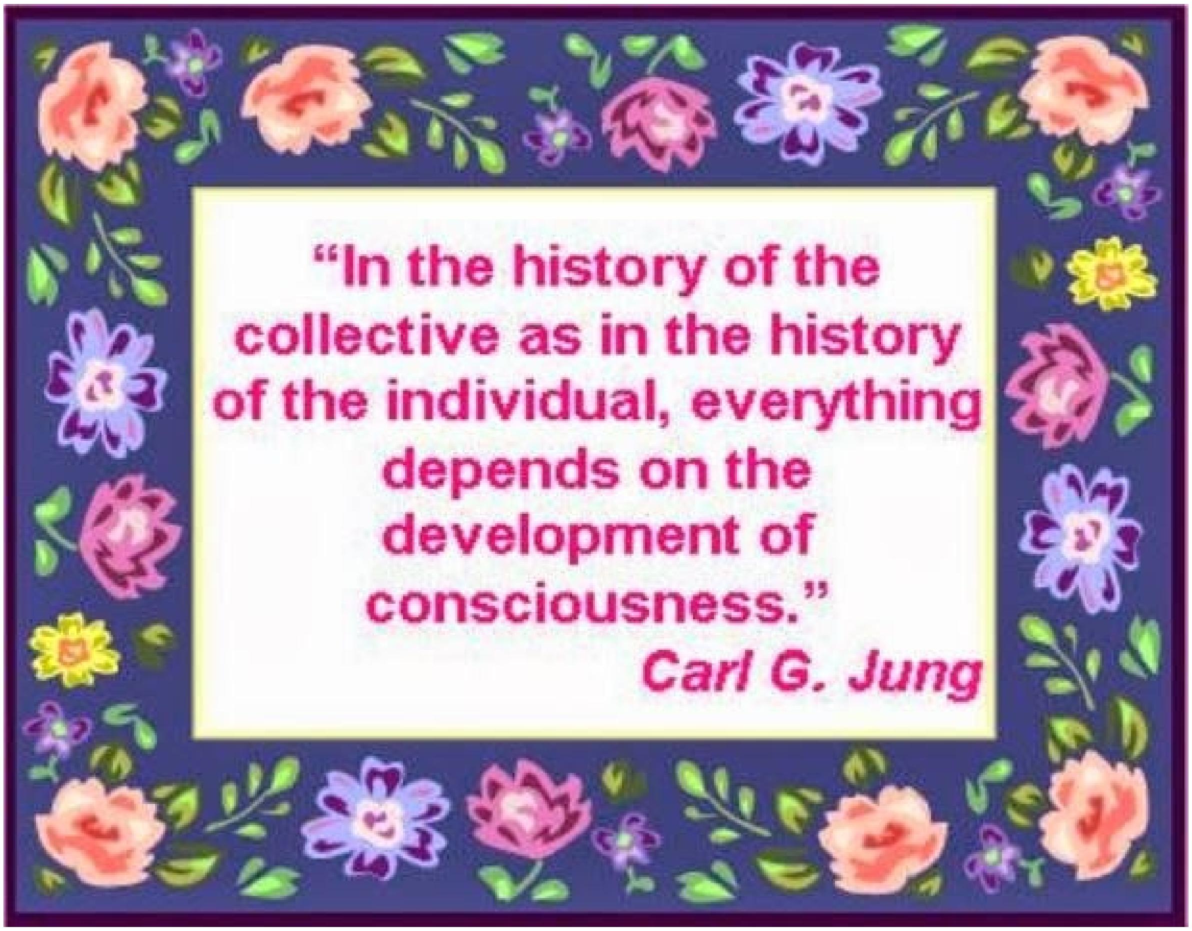
From the psychological point of view, life in the hereafter would seem to be a logical continuation of the psychic life of old age. With increasing age, contemplation, and reflection, the inner images naturally play an ever greater part in man's life. "Your old men shall dream dreams."

That, to be sure, presupposes that the psyches of the old men have not become wooden, or entirely petrified. In old age, one begins to let memories unroll before the mind's eye and, musing, to recognize oneself in the inner and outer images of the past. This is like a preparation for an existence in the hereafter, just as, in Plato's view, philosophy is a preparation for death." — Carl Gustav Jung, On Life After Death

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/e3341-karma.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-Publisher-Vintage/dp/B004X19L3E/ref=sr_1_2?crid=34QRGUGH5SKNW&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=1`

Without consciousness there would, practically speaking, be no world... (2019-12-03 05:30)

[1]



“In the history of the collective as in the history of the individual, everything depends on the development of consciousness.”
Carl G. Jung

[2]Civilization in Transition (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 10)

Without consciousness there would, practically speaking, be no world, for the world exists for us only in so far as it is consciously reflected by a psyche. Consciousness is a precondition of being.

Thus the psyche is endowed with the dignity of a cosmic principle, which philosophically and in fact gives it a position co-equal with the principle of physical being.

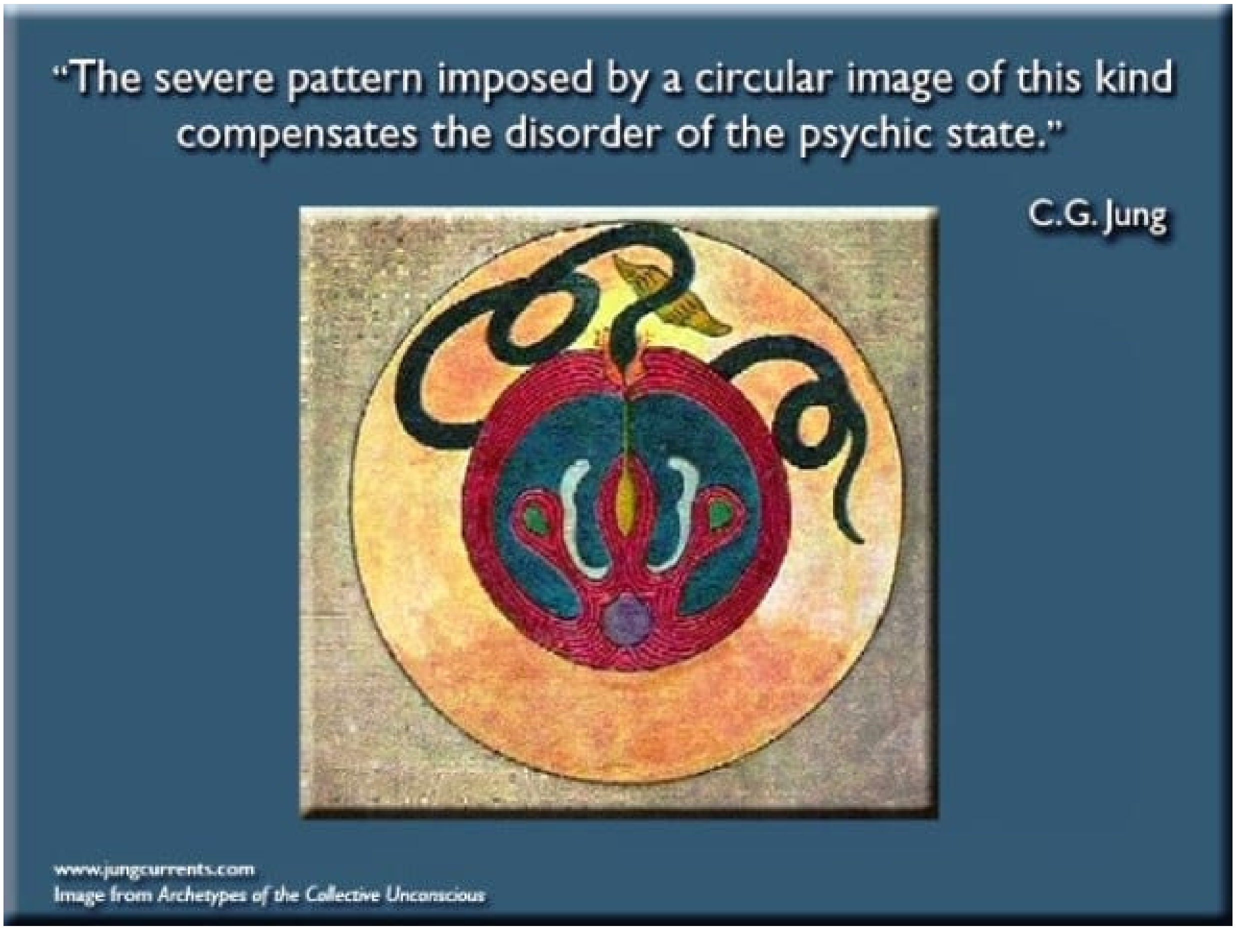
The carrier of this consciousness is the individual, who does not produce the psyche of his own volition but is, on the contrary, performed by it and nourished by the gradual awakening of consciousness during childhood.

If therefore the psyche is of overriding empirical importance, so also is the individual, who is the only immediate manifestation of the psyche. "The Undiscovered Self" (1957). In CW 10: Civilization in Transition. P. 528

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/03c0c-collective.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Civilization-Transition-Collected-Works-Jung/dp/0691097623/ref=sr_1_1?crid=XM2AXJRDLHCS&keywords=jung+civilization+in+transition&qid=1575`

This is evidently an attempt at self-healing on the part of Nature... (2019-12-03 05:35)

[1]



"The severe pattern imposed by a circular image of this kind compensates the disorder of the psychic state."

C.G. Jung

www.jungcurrents.com
Image from Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious

[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

“In such cases it is easy to see how the severe pattern imposed by a circular image of this kind compensates the disorder of the psychic state– namely through a the construction of a central point to which everything is related, or by a concentric arrangement of the disordered multiplicity of contradictory and irreconcilable elements.

This is evidently an attempt at self-healing on the part of Nature, which does not spring from conscious reflection but from an instinctive impulse.” Carl Jung, Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious. Page 388.

http://jungcurrents.com/jung-mandala-compensation/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/f45a5-mandalas.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=PN9B5TVDZNEW&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+collec`

Carl Jung and “Actually you shouldn’t want to have visions…” (2019-12-03 05:59)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

Dear Frau N., 10 December 1932

Best thanks for kindly sending me your book of visions!

I shall read it as soon as my time allows and then tell you something of my impressions.

Wanting to know the truth is also a striving for power and pleasure.

Actually you shouldn't want to have visions, they should just come to ""May it be good, happy, favorable, and propitious."

My patients, for instance, have to seek visions as a punishment, and not in order to discover some kind of truth but rather to see their own errors.

The secrets of the world's depths reveal themselves when they want and not when we want.

I hope to find in your book something of the eternal images if it is the genuine article.

Hang it, that affair of the madwoman-why did it have to happen to you?

Excuse the interjectory character of my thought!

Meanwhile with best regards and sincere thanks,

Yours sincerely,

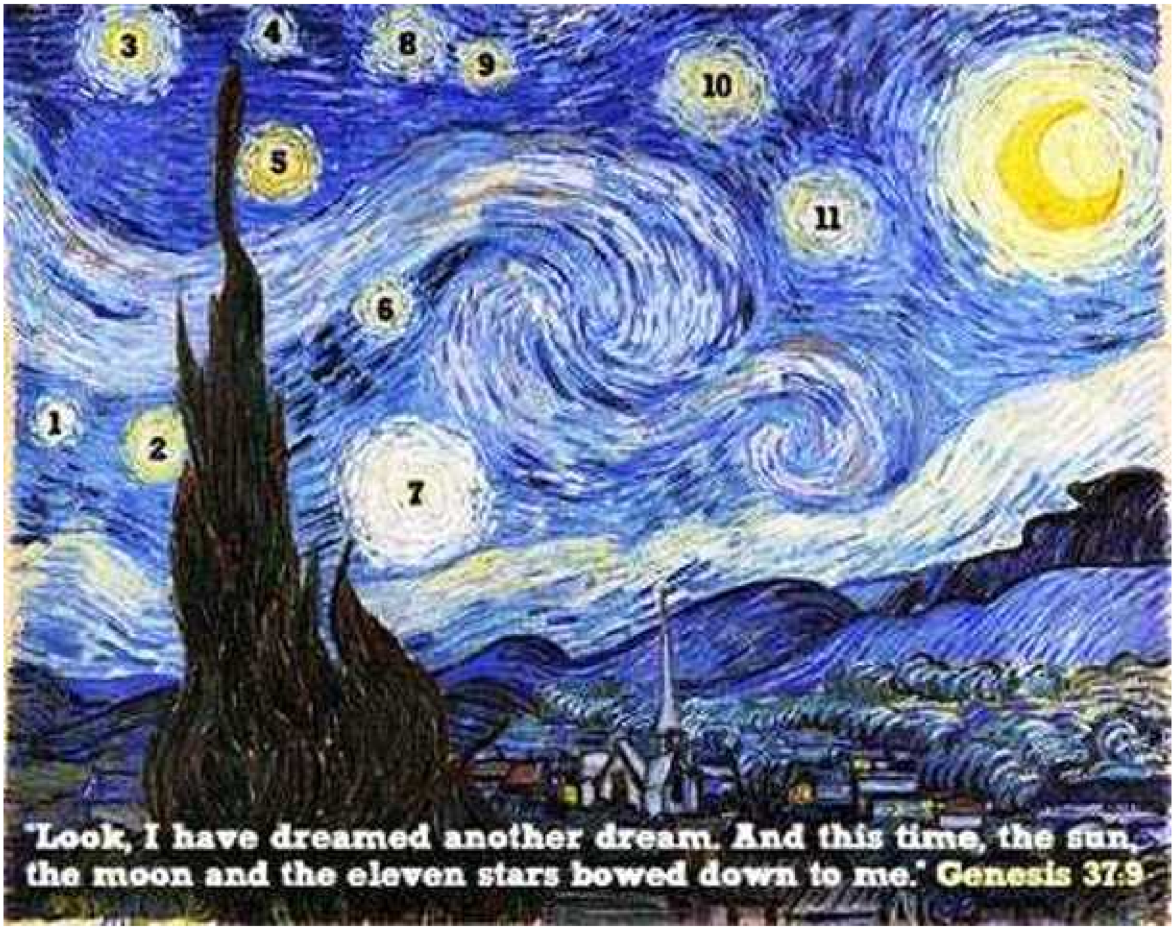
C.G. Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 111.

Image: Illumination from Liber Scivias, showing Hildegard of Bingen receiving a vision, dictating to her scribe and sketching on a wax tablet.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/0ac15-bingen.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_2?crid=17L8AHT1YH5Y7&keywords=carl+jung+letters&qid=1575371171&sprefix=carl+jung+le`

Carl Jung: The starry vault of heaven is in truth the open book of cosmic projection... (2019-12-03 11:23)

[1]



3
4
8
9
10
5
11
6
1
2
7
"Look, I have dreamed another dream. And this time, the sun, the moon and the eleven stars bowed down to me." Genesis 37:9

[2]The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche (Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Volume 8)

"I have allowed myself to dwell at some length on Paracelsus and to cite a number of authentic texts, because I wanted to give the reader a rough idea of the way in which this author conceives the lumen naturae.

It strikes me as significant, particularly in regard to our hypothesis of a multiple consciousness and its phenomena, that the characteristic alchemical vision of sparks scintillating in the blackness of the arcane substance should, for Paracelsus, change into the spectacle of the "interior firmament" and its stars.

He beholds the darksome psyche as a star-strewn night sky, whose planets and . fixed constellations represent the archetypes in all their luminosity and numinosity.

The starry vault of heaven is in truth the open book of cosmic projection, in which are reflected the mythologems, i.e., the archetypes. In this vision astrology and alchemy, the two classical functionaries of the psychology of the collective unconscious, join hands. Carl Jung, CW 8, The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche, Page 195, Para 392.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/5bde5-1starry.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Structure-Dynamics-Psyche-Collected-Works/dp/0691097747/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2PL9XTFKYNZFF&keywords=structure+and+dynamics+of+the+psyche+jung&`

The Early Days by M. Esther Harding (2019-12-03 11:42)

M. Esther Harding

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

The Early Days by M. Esther Harding

That C. G. Jung was a giant among men must be obvious to all who have had even a slight acquaintance with the man or his writings, but for many today the beginnings of his work, reaching back to the turn of the century, must seem to grow out of a dim past.

His work breaks upon them fully developed; for them it is almost impossible to conceive of a world where the concepts he elaborated were still lying dormant in the unconscious waiting for the creative mind of a genius to discover.

Jung's early papers on word association tests will soon be republished in the Collected Works; his writings on dementia praecox and other case studies have already appeared.

These are readily available to the student.

Although his laboratory experiments confirmed the results of earlier observers, Jung's chief interest was caught by reactions that did not conform to the general rule.

These, although they had been discarded by statistically minded observers, aroused his lively curiosity.

For throughout his life he was always interested in exceptions and anomalies and border-line phenomena, and it was in these neglected fields that he found his greatest treasures.

Jung was a younger man than most of the group that gathered round Freud, and he outlived most if not all of them.

Freud’s influence, great as it undoubtedly was, affected him less than the others.

And, as he lived in Switzerland, his work was done much more independently than theirs, a fact that is evidenced by the striking originality of his early papers on psychological subjects.

In 1909 he attended the Conference on Psycho-analysis at Clark University, Worcester, U.S.A., where both he and Freud read papers.

They spent eight weeks together and discussed many things, including their own dreams.

But Freud insisted on interpreting the collective images in Jung’s dreams reductively, which Jung felt to be both inadequate and wrong.

Jung again visited America in 1912, when he gave his well-known lectures on The Theory of Psychoanalysis at Fordham University.

Already his ideas were going beyond the rather rigid framework of Freud’s theory, and in his preface to the published lectures he wrote:

’To me it seems that psychoanalysis stands in need of this weighing-up from inside . . . my criticism does not proceed from academic arguments, but from experiences which have forced themselves on me during the ten years of serious work in this field . . . it seems to me that certain of my formulations do express the observed facts more suitably than Freud’s version of them.’

One cannot but be impressed with the restraint and tolerance of these words in contrast to the bitterness of Freud’s attacks on Jung after the publication of his book, Symbols of Transformation, with its revolutionary ideas in regard to the unconscious.

But Freud could not accept book, for it that the unconscious, far from being merely the repository of repressed and unacceptable memories and wishes, was actually the creative source of psychic life itself.

He took its publication as a direct affront to his authority and, as Jung maintained his position, a conflict arose that led to a permanent breach between the two men.

Jung continued to work alone for some years, and mostly in silence.

It was not until 1920 that he began, rather tentatively at first, to teach a small group of students.

His lectures were given in English, for the English had shown themselves more receptive to his ideas than had the German-speaking people, who were more closely identified with Freud and his group.

In 1920 he met with a small number of students-about six-for regular discussions, in his home in Kusnacht. H. G. Baynes and Eleanor Bertine were present at these gatherings and, in the September of that year, Jung was invited to go to England to teach a small group of student analysts and analysands, who gathered at Sennen Cove, in Cornwall, for an unforgettable two weeks.

Jung took as his theme a book entitled Authentic Dreams of Peter Blobbs, and, using these reputed dreams as his theme, he discussed the method of dream analysis that he was beginning to develop.

In contrast to Freud, Jung was already using controlled, instead of unlimited, free associations.

These he supplemented with relevant material from myth and religious symbolism, to fill out and elucidate the dream content, though the term amplification was not then in use.

For at this time the major concepts of analytical psychology remained unformulated and largely unrecognized.

As Jung once said in speaking of the anima and animus: ’They had not been born yet.’

On his return to London, Jung continued to meet with some of the group.

Psychological Types was nearing completion and parts of the first draft were read in translation.

Jung walked up and down the room, smoking his pipe, and looking anything but pleased.

Finally he was heard to mutter: ’But this is difficult!’

Three years later, in 1923, the experiment of a convention or seminar, as these gatherings came to be called, was held, again in Cornwall, at Polzeath.

This conference was arranged by Baynes and the present writer, and about thirty people gathered at that remote little seaside place.

They all stayed at the only hotel and met daily for lectures in the village. hall.

The group consisted mostly of English people, but a few came from America, while Mrs. Jung, Miss Wolff, and one or two others arrived with Jung from Switzerland.

Of the seven analysts present at that gathering, only Eleanor Bertine and myself are still alive.

In the summer of 1925 a third seminar was held, at Swanage, England. There was a rather larger group this time, about fifty.

Jung lectured for two hours each day.

The weather was atrocious and, since the meetings were held in a tent in the middle of a hayfield, Jung’s voice was accompanied by a constant pat-pat of rain on the canvas roof.

Unfortunately, there is no official report of the three early seminars, but I took rather full notes of the last two and I must rely on them for a brief report.

No one could attend a conference by Jung without being deeply impressed, not only by the content of his lectures, but, perhaps even more, by the man himself

In those early days one was particularly impressed by his vigor, his originality, his versatility and erudition, as well as by his command of English.

Although at that time this was not as perfect as in later years, even then it was fluent, vigorous, full of humor, and often spiced with both English and American slang.

When a game involving a wide knowledge of English was played by the entire group, it was Jung who came out as winner even over those whose native language it was.

This incident had occurred at Sennen Cove in 1920.

By 1923, when he began the seminar at Polzeath, not only had his English become more fluent but his ideas, too, had developed enormously, so that now he spoke with authority.

He was no longer under Freud's shadow, but had begun to realize his unique genius.

The subject he chose was 'The Technique of Analysis'.

Although much of the content of these lectures appeared subsequently, scattered through his later writings, the material as a whole has never been published.

He began by differentiating between the 'free association' employed by Freud, that inevitably leads back to one of the basic instincts, sexuality or power, and 'controlled association', the method he had devised, by which the symbol is enriched, so revealing its particular meaning in the context of the dream.

In this way a compensation for the one-sidedness of the conscious attitude is disclosed.

Jung went on to discuss the transference and its contents personal and collective-with their emotional values, the meaning of projection; the negative aspect of transference 'which brings up all the dirty, perverted, and repressed material' of the unconscious.

He pointed out that the analyst should react to the patient and differentiate him from his material; and went on to discuss the handling of the transference, showing that the analyst must allow himself to become involved to a certain extent in the process and give his own real reactions to the patient's material.

When collective elements begin to enter the transference situation it means that the patient's Weltanschauung is too limited, the old collective ideas under which he has lived are outworn and must be replaced by a new ruling principle.

In this context he discussed the dream of the Black and the White Magicians, to which frequent reference has been made in his various books.

But here he gave a considerably fuller interpretation than any appearing subsequently, showing how the dream foretells the imminent death of the ruling principle, the king, a fact that releases the anima in her black, instinctual aspect.

Only the Black Magician was wise enough to follow her and find the key to the new country-the key to paradise.

But he could not unlock the gates.

The White Magician was needed for this.

Jung implied, very clearly, that he considered that this dream not only pointed to a revolution in the ideas of one young man, but that it also indicated a far-reaching change of world ideas, immanent in the historical moment when it was dreamed.

And, indeed, the events of subsequent years have substantiated his interpretation of the meaning of the dream.

Jung ended the seminar by a brief account of the method of active imagination, though that term was not then in use.

He spoke of how, by concentrating on the images of fantasy or dream, the contents of the collective unconscious could be activated and made conscious; and if the ego could establish a relation to them, the process of individuation was initiated, though this term had not been coined as yet, either.

In 1925 the third conference was held at Swanage.

The title of this series of lectures was 'Dreams and Symbolism'.

Jung started by giving an account of the history of dream interpretation.

He cited a number of dreams recorded from ancient times and pointed out that they were all deep dreams, full of representations collectives.

These, of course, correspond to archetypal images, but Jung had not at that time begun to use this term.

He quoted Pythagoras as saying that dreams came from the all-pervading divine mind, putting this statement side by side with his own ideas of the collective unconscious.

He then proceeded to compare the interpretation given by the old writers of some of these dreams with his own interpretation of them.

But the art of dream interpretation was lost, he said, after the antique period, until Freud rediscovered it.

In order to demonstrate his own method, Jung proceeded to discuss two long series of dreams, the first those of a middle-aged woman, the second of a young man.

In the woman's case the dreams were personal in character, whereas the young man's were collective, i.e. archetypal.

The contrast between the two series was brought out in the most striking manner.

In summing up Jung said: 'To have a great dream is a revelation of the new aspect of the world, but it is dangerous.

To have trivial dreams is more norm.al, more ordinary; but where triviality is the disease (as it was with the woman patient) it would be an advantage to have deep dreams.'

It is most instructive to observe how many of the basic concepts of analytical psychology were already in process of formulation at this early conference.

It is true that they underwent considerable further elaboration in subsequent years, and many of them were renamed, while others of equal importance were added, but in these first seminars Jung was able to make a sketch map of the new territory he was destined to explore so fully during subsequent decades.

And it is really amazing to see how little these early formulations have needed revision.

Jung's work was so thorough, so honest, that it has stood the test of the years.

On the foundation he laid, nearly forty years ago, the massive structure of his later work stands secure.

This fact shows the calibre of the man, more, perhaps, than almost anything else.

The flowering of his genius, that began so early, ripened into a harvest that will satisfy the spiritual hunger of mankind in the years to come, but it will take the work of many succeeding generations to garner all the wealth of meaning Jung discovered in his long and fruitful life. M. Esther Harding, Contact with Jung, Pages 179-184

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+fordham+contact&qid=1575402443&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung on the "Ego" and "Super-Consciousness." (2019-12-03 16:39)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

[Carl Jung on the “Ego” and “Super-Consciousness.”]

To W. Y. Evans-Wentz

My dear Mr. Evans-Wentz, 9 February 1939

Thank you very much for kindly sending me Mr. Sturdy’s letter.

I can appreciate his standpoint and I quite agree with him that there are states of intensified consciousness which deserve the name "super-consciousness."

No matter how far that "super-consciousness" reaches, I'm unable to imagine a condition where it would be completely all embracing, i.e., where there would not be something unconscious left over.

To assume something which is beyond human grasp is a prerogative of faith .

It belongs to metaphysics and not to science, as it is beyond proof and experience.

The question of a highly intensified consciousness however is not the important question.

The point at issue is rather the question of the ego.

The ego in psychology is the cognizing subject designated as "I."

Thus Mr. Sturdy correctly quotes St. Paul's saying: "I have seen things . . .. "

So even in his ekstasis Paul himself assures us that an "I" has seen.

Now, if his ego had been completely dissolved and abolished, he never could have said "I have seen," he might have said "God has seen," or rather he would not have been able to tell us even about the fact that something had been seen at all.

So no matter how far an ekstasis goes or how far consciousness can be extended, there is still the continuity of the apperceiving ego which is essential to all forms of consciousness.

It is quite true that we can be oblivious even of our body (being a doctor, I know this only too well) but that does not mean that the psychological ego does not exist anymore.

As a matter of fact, I am going on talking as if I were fully conscious of my ego .

I form my sentences with "I" just as before and if anybody should say to me: "What you are experiencing is not your experience at all, it belongs to somebody else!"

I would certainly reject such a statement.

By such a rejection I would confirm the fact that it was my ego that has apperceived.

When I say that anything psychic beyond consciousness is "dark," it is quite certainly dark to me because I don't know it, but I cannot decide whether it is dark or bright in itself, simply because I don't know it.

And I know no way to ascertain the existence of consciousness for instance in a caterpillar.

One can only believe that psychic existence beyond consciousness is dark or bright.

The so-called "psychic" reactions of lower organisms are very well known to me, but there is no proof at all that these psychic reactions are conscious to an ego, they can be merely psychic.

Psyche is (as is generally known) by no means identical with consciousness, since we know that there are plenty of reactions in man of which he is completely unconscious.

Such reactions can be experimentally produced, observed, and measured, and it is a fact established by thousands of experiments that the individual himself is completely unconscious of them.

One could of course hold that man habitually suffers from double consciousness (double personality), but there is absolutely no evidence for such an assumption.

I cannot see why it is a mystery how the unconscious can ever become known to consciousness.

It is a fact of everyday experience that formerly unconscious contents more or less suddenly emerge into consciousness.

As a matter of fact our consciousness couldn't function if the unconscious psychic process didn't support it by providing it with the necessary material.

For instance, if you have forgotten a name and the unconscious obstinately retains it, then you depend almost entirely upon the good will of the unconscious that it allows you to recall it.

It happens very often that your memory fails you in an almost diabolical way.

I don't know what Mr. Sturdy means by "being able to control one's dreams."

Can he produce dreams at will? For instance, can he say " today I'm going to dream such and such a dream"?

I have never heard of such a thing.

That you can learn to remember your dreams has nothing to do with "to control one's dreams."

There is not one word about control of dreams in Dunne's book.

Inasmuch as you can remember your dreams at all, it is evident that your consciousness continues at least in a dim way through sleep, otherwise you couldn't dream and you couldn't remember the dream.

"As long as Sunyata is cognized by a subject it remains object."

But when the subject enters Sunyata and becomes identical with it, the subject itself is Sunyata, namely void.

And when the void is really void, there is not even a cognizing subject in it.

The subject has vanished and there cannot be a consciousness of this fact, because there is nothing left any more.

There can also be no memory of it, because there was nothing.

I don't know what Mr. Sturdy means when he says that telepathy and psychometry etc. ought to be considered.

What is their connection with the fact that there is no consciousness without an ego that is conscious of something?

Surely telepathy widens out our consciousness, but there is always an ego conscious of something.

Mr. Sturdy seems to forget that I'm a psychologist who is a scientist whose duty it is to explore knowable things.

The scientist sees no merit in preaching certain metaphysical convictions.

Thus I accept the fact that there are people who are convinced of the existence of a personal God, or who are convinced that the psychic material which is unconscious to me is conscious to the "I" of God .

I can accept that there is a belief in the Virgin Birth, the immaculate conception, in Parvarti being the wife of Siva, or anything under the sun, but I surely cannot suggest that this is absolute truth, because I simply have no evidence for it.

I want to know what there is to be known, but I don't want to make assumptions about things of which I know that one cannot know them.

Thus it is absolutely impossible to know what I would experience when that'I" which could experience didn't exist anymore.

One calls this a contradictio in adjecto.

To experience Sunyata is therefore an impossible experience by definition, as I explained above, and it is also impossible to experience consciousness in a field of which I know nothing.

You can expand your consciousness so that you even cover a field that had been unconscious to you before, but then it is your ego that is conscious of this new acquisition, and there is absolutely no reason to believe then that there is not a million times more unconscious material beyond that little bit of a new acquisition.

Thus agnosticism is my duty as a scientist.

I don't compete with confessions of religious creeds.

I never claimed to be a metaphysician and I do not sympathize with the preaching of more metaphysical convictions.

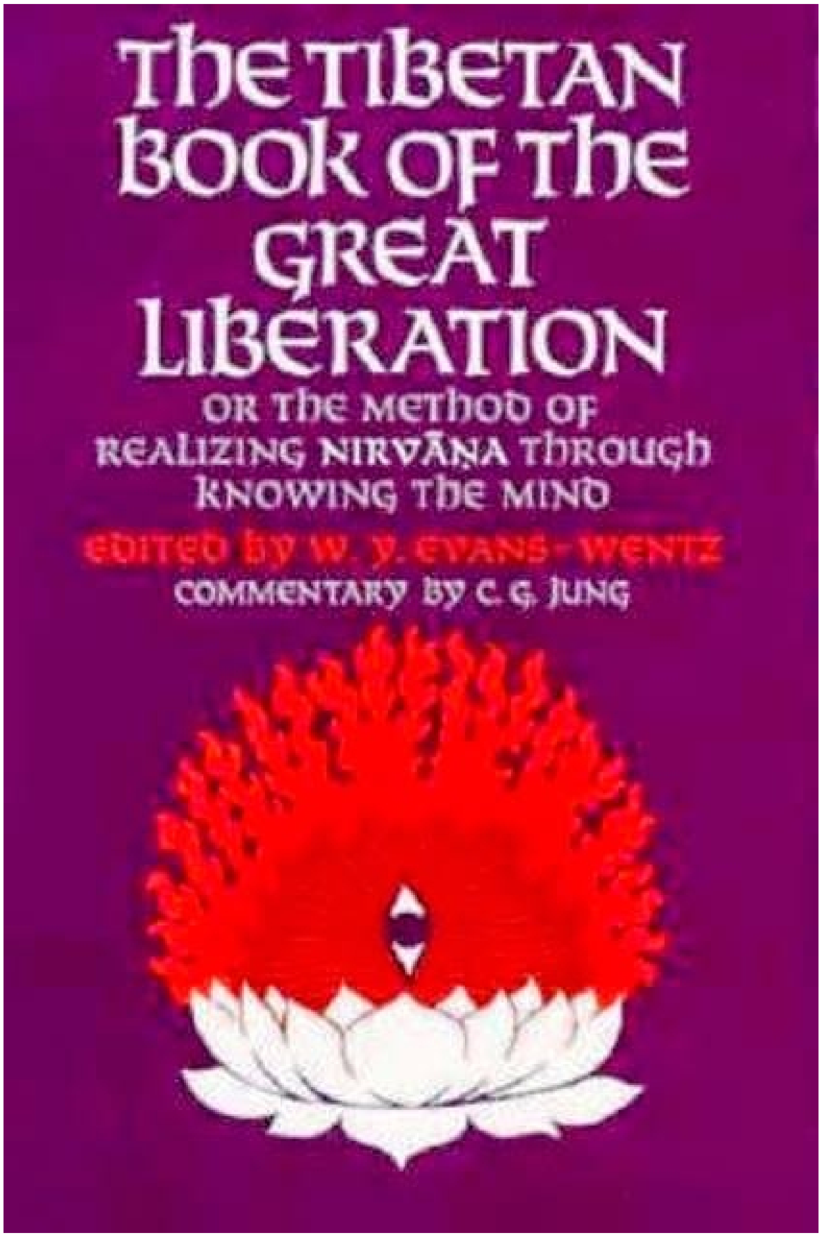
We have too many of them already and too few that are really believed.

I am sure you will have a wonderful time in Heluan.

I often think of the splendor of the Egyptian sun in our misty "Niflheim" (home of the mists).

Though I'm thinking furiously about the fundamental psychological problems of the East,

I haven't done much yet in the way of commenting on the Great Liberation.



THE TIBETAN BOOK OF THE GREAT LIBERATION
OR THE METHOD OF REALIZING NIRVĀṆA THROUGH KNOWING THE MIND
EDITED BY W. Y. EVANS-WENTZ
COMMENTARY BY C. G. JUNG

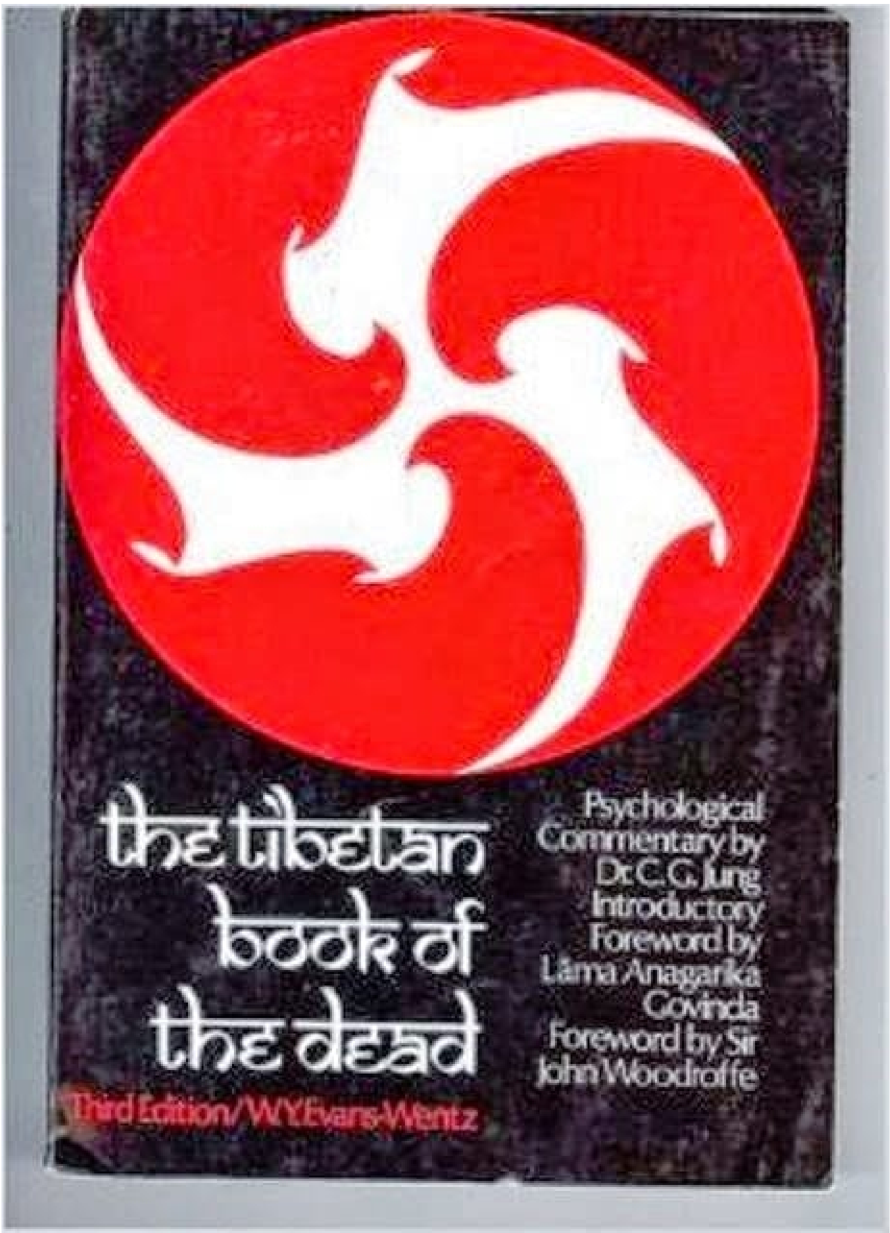
The time for it will be April when I shall have the necessary time.

I hope that you will get my Ms. by May.

I enclose [Mr. Sturdy's] two letters.

Sincerely yours,

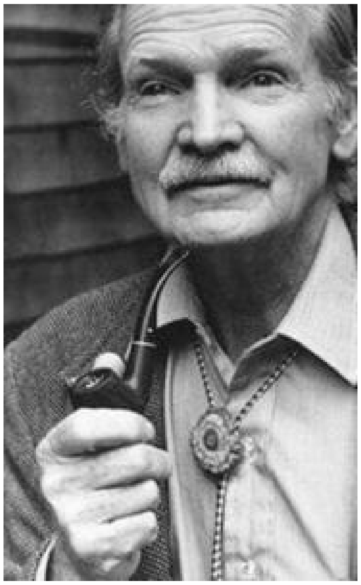
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 261-264.



the tibetan book of the dead
Third Edition/W.Y. Evans-Wentz
Psychological Commentary by Dr. C. G. Jung
Introductory Foreword by Lama Anagarika Govinda
Foreword by Sir John Woodroffe

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/79ed1-12bevans.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2BLFCFZI0F34X&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575448981&sprefix=jung+let
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/3795d-2evans.jpg
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/28848-3evans.jpg

Jung’s Influence on My Life and Work by John W. Perry (2019-12-04 03:54)



[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

Jung’s Influence on My Life and Work by John W. Perry

My first encounter with Jung arose out of one of those auspicious blendings of circumstance which seem so often to mark the turning-points in one’s psychic life.

On behalf of my intent to embark upon the field of psychology and religion, my father arranged to meet Jung when in Zurich, and persuaded him to return the visit when attending the Harvard Tercentenary.

Since I was seeking a new and revitalized experience of religion, and my parent was a bishop, 1 can imagine this crisis in in father figures might have appealed to Jung.

However, the occasion found me young and innocent of the world, especially of the psychic one, and he did the only thing he could for my benefit-he talked almost steadily for two days, filling my head with a rich flow of psychic nourishment that took me several years to incorporate and digest.

Many of my Boston acquaintances were far better equipped than I to benefit by such a colloquy, and it bore heavily on me; only in retrospect can I look upon those days and feel justification in knowing that not many could have been so touched in the wordless deeps as to find the rest of their lives given shape by them.

I could not assent at the time to what Jung was telling me, though I found it strangely fascinating; the psyche I had been studying in classes and books had quite a different cast, and I felt an obligation to cleave to the scientific view and not wander away into what seemed to me to be bucolic pastures of European scholarship and erudition.

My analytic reading began shortly after with Freud’s works, which I devoured with avid enthusiasm and in which I thought I was finding the answer to all things human; I set about applying it all mercilessly to family and friends.

It was so satisfying to have an explanation for hidden things!

Dutifully I moved ahead in my reading program over the years, toward Jung and Adler and the rest.

The Psychology of the Unconscious, which I had already glanced through like a college text as a measure to 'brush up on Jung' before seeing him, and had taken as a sort of code of symbols, I now greeted with different eyes, perhaps because by this time I had been in love and was no longer all closed up inside.

This new encounter with Jung was like emerging out of a tunnel into a broad and noble terrain, a real world, one of heights and depths, of living beings with an historical heritage and a future to strive toward.

The Secret of the Golden Flower lit up little flames in the interior recesses which have been glowing ever since.

The Jung of those earlier days in Providence came to life again and began to speak to my condition, and I began to sense that peculiar gratitude to him which most of us know so well.

During the war I received a second infusion of psychic nourishment which I could not fully digest, a rich inpouring of ways and views of the other side of the world, the Chinese Interior, and more than ever felt the need to find the way to assimilate it; for I was tempted, as happens with large experiences, to find my life in it rather than the harder alternative of finding it in my life.

Of several foundations I requested to send me to Zurich to prepare for the field of psychology and religion, the Rockefeller wrote back with alacrity to say they had for some while been wanting such a request and had been holding a special nest egg for the purpose.

At Zurich I had the good fortune to see the first beginnings of the germinating Institute, which was starting to embody the differentiation of one man's vision into its many facets to be developed by many individuals with their special gifts; it was heroic work on the part of that Curatorium to meet the many tribulations and establish a workable order.

I have since realized what a piece of good fortune it is to be able to immerse oneself in that psychic world for a solid block of time, which in the usual course of training in other areas one cannot do.

The heart that pulsed through that organism, of course, was Jung himself; for me his helping hand slipped into the opus from point to point to steer it on its course.

In the many talks we had on religion, while I was still na:ive enough, all that I heard seemed natural and more or less understandable, lighting up those obscure levels bit by bit.

What really hit me amidships and shook my timbers was a thrust in the other direction. I was having that upside-down kind of growth that begins somewhere down in the psychic basement and reaches for the light of day.

I found that what I really wanted to hear, because it threw me into a new dimension of experience, was his comment on how and where religious content connects with everyday life.

Perhaps it was made particularly moving by the circumstance that he, in his late age v.: 1th its inward turning and its appetite for exploring the depths in their historical perspective, was reaching over that long span to my predicament of young years and was striking the keynote to which I could resonate.

When with his penetrating intuition Jung would point out these principles, he flung doors open to right and left for me, and with great intensity I retraced my way through the imagery of my dreams and discovered anew the vital connections between them and the emotional episodes which had been bearing me along as on a mountain torrent.

Here my quite active religious psyche was implanting itself in events and relationships, and, though it required struggling to reclaim it, at least it then came clothed in the warm colors of experience.

It was what I wanted of a religion, one that I had known at first hand in China, that sprang out of depths, but that entered into the life of everyday, into love, work, social issues, and concerns.

My efforts since then have been directed toward exploring the vital point of connection between the religious dynamisms and the outward life, where the archetype slips into the emotional setting, and thus where the supra-personal is one with the personal.

There has been no break in this as a religious quest, but I have felt it to be turned onto its course more than once by the hand of this man who was so well acquainted with the uncharted waters; yet it has come full circle around into psychiatry proper, where I can explore in mental disturbances that vital point of articulation (of joining) and learn how to restore to persons the personalness of their psychic life.

I need hardly enlarge on the point of this impression of Jung.

The vastness of his mind and vision, the dimensions illuminated by him, were for me gentle and serene in quality as :flooding sunlight; but what moved me like the grandeur of a storm was the genius of his hold on life and of his seeing into life, for perceiving the deepest operations of the psyche equally in the slumbering world of the night and the turbulence of the welter of the life of the day. John W. Perry, Contact with Jung, Pages 214-217

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+fordham+contact&qid=1575450987&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung Defends Erich Neumann (2019-12-04 04:03)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

[Carl Jung's defense of Erich Neumann.]

To Jilrg Fierz.

Dear Dr. Fierz, 13 January 1949

Above all you must realize that I am not in the habit of interfering with my pupils.

I have neither the right nor the might to do that.

They can draw such conclusions as seem right to them and must accept full responsibility for it.

There have been so many pupils of mine who have fabricated every sort of rubbish from what they took over from .me.

I have never said that I stand "uncompromisingly" behind Neumann.

There is naturally no question of that.

It should be obvious that I have my reservations.

If you want to understand Neumann properly you must realize that he is writing in the spiritual vacuum of Tel-Aviv.

Nothing can come out of that place for the moment except a monologue.

He writes as he fancies. No doubt this is provocative, but I have found that provocative books are by no means the worst.

The get people’s goat only because such people cannot be reached in any other way.

If people want to know what I think about these things they have my books, and everyone is free to listen to my views.

They could just as well read my books instead of getting worked up about Neumann.

If I recommend his book it is chiefly because it shows the sort of conclusions you come to when you ruthlessly think out ethical problems to the end.

One must also remember that Neumann is a Jew and consequently knows Christianity only from the outside; and further, that it has been drastically demonstrated to the Jews that evil is continually projected.

For the rest-where confession is concerned-it is indeed the case that if a person does not regard something as a sin he has no need to confess it.

If Neumann recommends the "inner voice" as the criterion of ethical behaviour instead of the Christian conscience, this is in complete agreement with the Eastern view that in everybody’s heart there dwells a judge who knows all his evil thoughts.

In this respect Neumann also stands on the best footing with very many Christian mystics.

If the mentally insane assert the same thing, that has always been so, only one should know that the voices of the insane are somewhat different from what Neumann calls the inner voice.

Many insane people play themselves up as ethicists par excellence with no encouragement from Neumann.

There is of course no external justification for the inner voice, for the simple reason that nobody knows what is good and what evil.

It would all be terribly simple if we could go by the decalogue or the penal code or any other moral codex, since all the sins catalogued there are obviously so pointless or morbid that no reasonable person could fail to see how fatuous they are.

Ethical decision is concerned with very much more complicated things, namely conflicts of duty, the most diabolical things ever invented and at the same time the loneliest ever dreamt of by the loneliest of all, the Creator of the world.

In conflicts of duty one codex says Whoa there! and the other says Get up! and you are none the wiser for it.

It is an actual fact that what is good to one appears evil to the other.

You have only to think of the careworn mother who meddles in all her son's doings-from the most selfless solicitude of course-but in reality with murderous effect.

For the mother it is naturally a good thing if the son does not do this and does not do that, and for the son it is simply moral and physical ruin-so scarcely a good thing.

You are quite right when you say that Neumann's individual ethic makes far heavier demands on us than the Christian ethic does.

The only mistake Neumann commits here is a tactical one: he says out loud, imprudently, what was always true.

As soon as an ethic is set up as an absolute it is a catastrophe.

It can only be taken relatively, just as Neumann can only be understood relatively, that is, as a religious Jew of German extraction living in Tel-Aviv.

If one imagines one can simply make a clean sweep of all views of the world, one is deceiving oneself: views of the world are grounded in archetypes, which cannot be tackled so easily.

What Neumann offers us is the outcome of an intellectual operation which he had to accomplish for himself in order to gain a new basis for his ethic.

As a doctor he is profoundly impressed by the moral chaos and feels himself in the highest degree responsible.

Because of this responsibility he is trying to set the ethical problem to rights, not in order to give out a legal ukase but to clarify his ethical reflections, naturally in the expectation of doing this also for the world around him.

In reading such a book you must also consider what sort of a world we are living in.

You know, perhaps, that today Christianity is relativized by the splitting of the Church into so-and-so many million Catholics and so-and-so many million Protestants and that Bolshevism reigns supreme from Thuiringen to Vladivostok-and on top of this there is an East with several billion non-Christians who have their views of the world too.

Since this world is one world we are faced with the question: How do we come to grips with it?

We cannot simply restrict ourselves to our view of the world, but must perforce find a standpoint from which a view will be possible that goes a little step beyond the Christian as well as the Buddhist, etc.

As a Christian you must exert yourself and make it your daily preoccupation to bridge the woeful conflict in the Church by finding a mediating position .

One cannot be simply Protestant or Catholic.

That is much too facile, for in the end the one is the other's brother and this cannot be got rid of simply by declaring one of them invalid.

Neumann postulates a position which in the deepest sense is valid for everyone.

If there is an inner deciding factor it must be valid for all men.

The question is only: is there an inner voice, i .e., a vocation?

Undoubtedly there isn't for 99 % of humanity, just as a whole lot of things don't exist for this vast majority for the simple reason that they don't know about them.

There isn't even a quite ordinary hygiene which would be valid for more than about 90 % of humanity, let alone a corresponding moral code.

If ethical decision is not in the last resort somehow inherent in human nature, then the case is completely hopeless, for no book of laws has lasted in the long run.

Subjectively I am absolutely convinced of the inner deciding factor and my practical work with patients aims exclusively at bringing it to consciousness.

What you can learn from moral codes and manuals of morality and penal codes are practicalities which no intelligent person will overlook.

But no book of laws has ever been written for conflicts of duty and there alone does the real ethical problem begin.

There alone will you learn ethical responsibility.

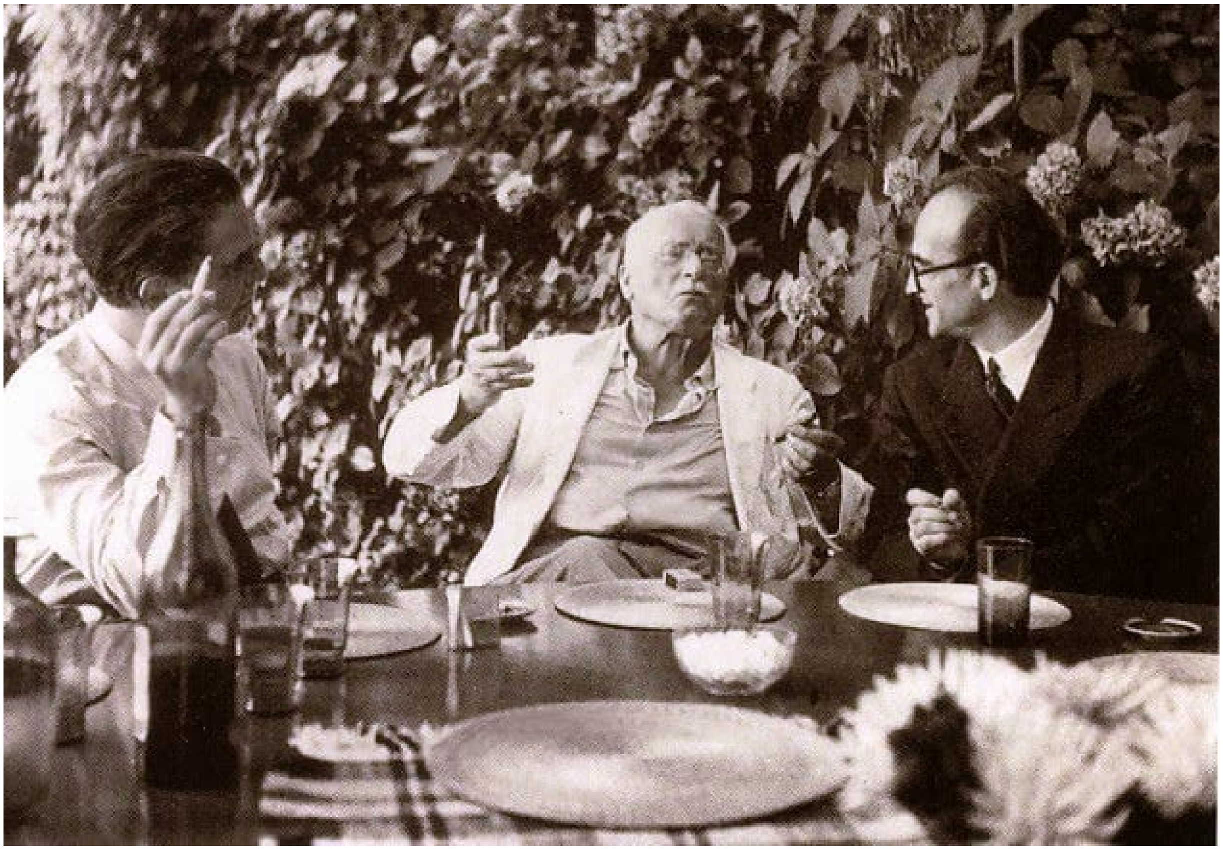
Everything else is settled by adaptation and plain horse sense.

I do not regard it for a moment as particularly meritorious morally for a person to avoid everything that is customarily considered a sin.

Ethical value attaches only to those decisions which are reached in situations of supreme doubt.

That is the question that burns Neumann's soul and in this he has my support, no matter whether my position is relativized or not. I am no opportunist, but I observe in this respect certain fundamental ethical principles and not utilitarian ones.

[3]



If I were to write about ethics I would naturally not express myself like Neumann.

But neither am I the Neumann who has been pushed by an atrocious fate into a militant counter-position.

If he has confronted the world with a difficulty which so-and-so many people have to torment themselves with, it does not surprise me in the least and I shall not fault him for that.

Nor can I regret it if these so-called Christians are tormented a bit.

They have richly deserved it.

They are always gabbling about Christian morality and I would just like to see someone for once who really follows it.

They can’t muster even the slightest understanding for Neumann, let alone brotherly love.

I only wish the Christians of today could see for once that what they stand for is not Christianity at all but a god-awful legalistic religion from which the founder himself tried to free them by following his voice and his vocation to the bitter end.

Had he not done so there would never have been a Christianity.

It is quite certain that the "community" will be outraged by this problem of an individual ethic, but that must be so for the question nowadays is: Community of whom or with whom? Not community as such, for we have always had that and what was the result?

The "people's community" in Germany and suchlike.

It is high time people reflected how they are constituted or what is the constitution of the thing they want to introduce into a community.

A bad cause is not made better by multiplying it by 10,000 and 100 rapscallions do not add up to a single decent man.

As a first rule for book-reading I would recommend you always to consider who the author is.

We should have learnt by now that thoughts expressed by words never represent anything absolute, and that only the clueless make themselves new garments out of the rags of thought.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 518-522.

Image: Erich Neumann
Image: Erich Neumann, Carl Jung, Mircea Eliade

Depth Psychology and a New Ethic by Erich Neumann http://www.amazon.com/dp/0877735719/ref=cm _sw _r _pi _dp _DedGub1597JN8

---

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/902f4-1neumann.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2OCED73IO091L&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575451093&sprefix=jung+let
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/d803d-neumann.jpg

C. G. Jung: A Personal Memoir by Elizabeth Osterman (2019-12-04 04:16)

[1]Contact with Jung: Essays on the influence of his work and personality

C. G. Jung: A Personal Memoir by Elizabeth Osterman

The heavy wooden door on which I had just knocked was set in a thick stone wall which seemed solidly part of the earth.

This was the entryway to the medieval-looking, secluded country place which Jung had built by hand through the years at Bollingen on the shore of Lake Zurich.

On my way to the Aegean Islands on this first trip away from the western United States, I had stopped in Switzerland for this visit.

Leaving the highway some distance from the town of Rapperswill, I had traversed a footpath which skirted a dense wood at the rear of a complex of walls and stone towers.

A few feet away to my left the lake water lapped among the reeds.

The July sun warmed the rain-dampened earth, and a soft haze covered the distant mountains.

As I stood waiting before the door I was somewhat nervous, but was reassured by sounds of wood-chopping coming from behind the wall.

I was trying to accustom myself to the fact that I was actually going to meet this man who indirectly had influenced my adult life so profoundly, who, in fact, had changed its entire course and had made possible for me personally and professionally an unbelievable sense of rootedness and potential self-realization.

Ten years previously, when working through a deep analysis with one of his students in San Francisco, I had had a 'big dream'.

Its effect had been numinous, powerful, and lasting.

Before the dream I had been studying to be a specialist in internal medicine; afterwards, there was no question.

The M.D. degree would be used instead as requisite background for becoming a depth psychologist .

Jung had shown the way for a doctor to do this, that is, not only to study psychiatry but to plumb with help the depths of his own inner world, to discover the roots of his being, to live close to his own nature; in other words, to integrate the unconscious to the extent possible.

I had been busy at this for several years now, and the trip was part of the process. I had not thought of trying to see Jung.

Why should I claim some of his precious time?

Perhaps not much more of it was left to him. But a wise friend had insisted and had made arrangements.

Now the door opened, and I was invited into the inner garden by his household companion.

There, beyond a second doorway, was the strong-bodied, white-haired, eighty-three-year-old man in his green workman's apron, seated before the chopping block.

Behind him was a large square stone carved by him in earlier years when he was attempting to give form to his emerging realizations.

I felt as though I had stepped out of time and had entered into an inner world where everything was relevant, unhurried, natural.

At the water's edge we settled into comfortable chairs, and through that afternoon the conversation wandered back into the prehistory of the earth, into the depths of the psyche, into the wonders of nature around us.

Once I looked at my watch and he said, 'Never mind a watch; I'll tell you.'

He returned frequently to the theme of what man is doing to himself by living in a fast and meaningless way, how he has become estranged from himself.

With immediacy and great simplicity he said: 'We must give time to nature so that she may be a mother to us.

I have found the way to live here as part of nature, to live in my own time.

People in the modern world are always living so that something better is to happen tomorrow, always in the future, so they don't think to live their lives.

They are up in the head.

When a man begins to know himself, to discover the roots of his past in himself, it is a new way of life.'

The force that emanated from this man sitting beside me was amazing. He seemed at once powerful and simple; real, the way the sky and rocks and trees and water around him were real.

He seemed to be all there in his own nature, but what made it so exciting was his awareness of it.

A knock on the door broke into the conversation; the taximan had arrived. Jung remarked, ’That says it.’

It was time to leave.

With much warmth I wished him health, fulfillment in a personal sense, peace.

I closed the door and stood feeling bereft of the vital connection I had experienced.

As I walked away on the path, I began to recall the dream I had dreamt ten years before.

In part, it was that I was working at a drug counter dispensing pills (I was working in a medical clinic at the time).

Out in the street I saw a procession of a dozen or so men and women in simple dark robes.

They were bearing a coffin which contained the body of a seer, a great wise man.

He was associated in my mind with Jung.

I joined them as they proceeded down the street into a square, ground-floor room.

They opened the coffin lid so that he would be with them.

There was an inward sense of common humanity in those present, a feeling of reverence and profound concern.

My analyst was conducting the rites, partly from a natural memory of how they went, and partly from an outline on the folder which he held in his hands.

This was an illuminated medieval manuscript on which the seer who had died had written a condensation of what he had come to know about man’s nature, temperament, needs, longings.

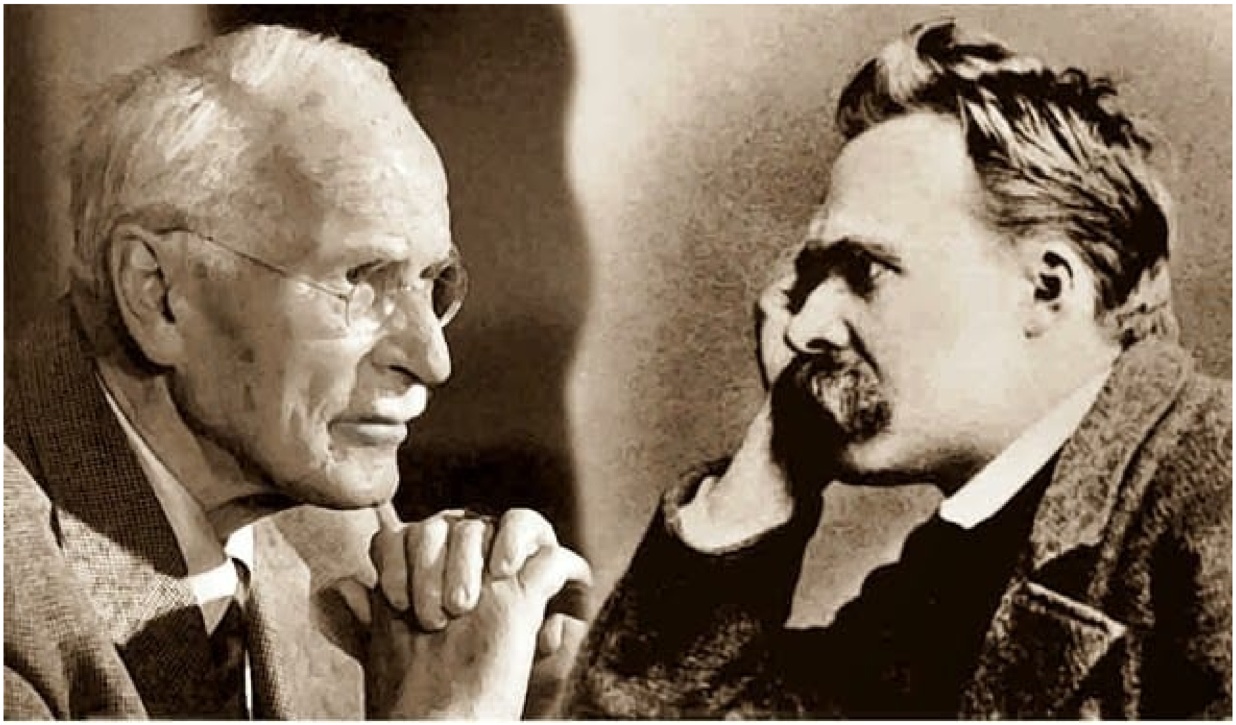
My analyst finished reading the words in the main body of the manuscript, then he handed the folder to me to read the words inscribed on three sides around the border in the illumination.

These, the last he had written, were: ’And all of these things each man must find in his own nature.’ Elizabeth Osterman, Contact with Jung, Pages 217-220.

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Contact-Jung-Essays-influence-personality/dp/B0000CLPU0/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+fordham+contact&qid=1575450987&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung on Nietzsche, Zarathustra and the “Will to Truth.” (2019-12-04 05:30)

[1]



[2]Jung’s Seminar on Nietzsche’s Zarathustra

Professor Jung:

I hope you realize that "The Happy Isles," is a very intricate chapter, difficult and profound.

It contains problems of the greatest importance, and I must confess I feel a bit hesitant in commenting upon it because it leads us into depths which are difficult to deal with.

You remember we got as far as that paragraph where he speaks of the possibility of our being at least the great grandfathers of the Superman.

He [Neitzche] continues,

God is a conjecture: but I should like your conjecturing restricted to the conceivable. Could ye conceive a God?-But let this mean Will to Truth unto you, that everything be transformed into the humanly conceivable, the humanly visible, the humanly sensible! Your own discernment shall ye follow out to the end!

We are already acquainted with the fact that Nietzsche takes God as a human conjecture that is not even very commendable, and he also declares God to be dead.

Here we see a deeper reason for this particular attitude.

It is less a concession to the spirit of his age than a concession, one could say, to his own honesty; he doesn't care to make a conjecture which goes beyond the reach of man.

This attitude was prepared by Kant; as you know, Kant has shown in an irrefutable way that one cannot make metaphysical assumptions.

The spirit of the age influenced Nietzsche to a great extent nevertheless in his assumption that God was a human conjecture; one could hold just as well that he was an experience. Kant left it open: he clearly saw that his intellectual or philosophical criticism was just philosophical criticism and he did not touch upon the field of experience, particularly the experience of things which cannot be submitted to theological criticism.

You see, he lived at a time when to assume or even to explain the world through the existence of God was taken for granted. It was the truth.

It was considered quite reasonable then to think in such a way.

As late as the 18th century practically every scientific book began with the creation of the world by God, the six days' work.

It was absolutely certain, with no discussion, that God had created the world and still maintained the functioning of the world.

But in the time of Nietzsche that former immediate certainty was lost sight of, so Nietzsche's saying that God is a conjecture is not only a concession to the spirit of his time, but is also the conscientiousness of the critical philosopher which does not allow him to assume more than he can prove, or more than is within the human scope.

To assume, like the dogmatic Christian formulation, that God is the infinite or eternal one, or that he has any such quality, is an absolutely man-made assumption, and an honest man will never make any statement which reaches beyond the limits of the human mind.

It is as if you promised to pay somebody one million francs after two hundred years; naturally in two hundred years you will no longer exist, and moreover you never will have such a sum at your disposal, so you have overreached yourself.

An honest and responsible thinker therefore will restrain himself and refrain from making such assumptions.

The fallacy is of course the assumption that God is only a conjecture, for he might be an experience, but the recognition of that possibility had completely disappeared, certainly from the field of Nietzsche's vision.

You see, the assumption that the conception of God is really man-made is, as an assumption, perfectly all right-nobody can contradict it, just as a blind belief in the dogma cannot be discussed philosophically.

So he asks, "Could ye conceive a God?"

No, you cannot; you cannot conceive of something that is outside of human reach.

By saying a thing is infinite you have not created infinity, but have created a mere word.

Therefore Nietzsche says that it is the will to truth in man which forbids him to invent something which is not humanly conceivable, and that this attitude should be the regulation of one's thought, in order that one may never assume more.

Also concerning the nature of the world you must not make any assumptions that overreach human limits; you must have the courage to create a world which is admittedly man-made and anthropomorphous.

In other words you must admit the anthropomorphous quality of all conceptions.

Now, this is an attitude which we meet every day, because we are still inclined to assume that our scientific truth is something more than man-made, that it has a certain objectivity, and is not relative only.

But as a matter of fact, whatever we touch or experience is within the scope of our psychology.

If I should say such a thing to a professor of philosophy he would kill me on the spot, because that means doing away with his assumption that his thinking is beyond psychology.

But the universal image of the world is a psychological fact or feature, though it is influenced, I admit, by something beyond our psychology.

What that is we don't know.

There the physicist has the last word: he will inform us that it consists of atoms and peculiar things within the atoms, but that hypothesis is constantly changing, and there we have clearly come to a certain end.

If he goes a bit further he begins to speculate, then he falls into the mind, and presumably he falls right into the collective unconscious, where he discovers the psychologist already at work.

The speculative modern physicist will surely come into very close contact with the psychologist, and as a matter of fact he already has.

Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 926-928. [Dr. Jung discusses “Will to Truth” on Pages 926-928 and Pages 1119-1121.]

[Nietzche] Your people would ye justify in their reverence: that called ye "Will to Truth," ye famous wise ones!

[Dr. Jung] That is also quite obvious.

[Nietzche] And your heart hath always said to itself: "From the people have I come: from thence came to me also the voice of God."

[Dr. Jung] Now this is a bit more serious-this is a terrifying truth really.

We have all come from the people-we are the people-and if the majority say; "I am the voice of God," well then, this is a truth because it works.

The majority of the people establish it, and the greater part of myself is collective, made of entirely collective stuff.

The molecules of my body are chemically in no way different from the molecules of anybody else.

The making of my mind is absolutely the same as everybody else's.

There is only a peculiar variation of the composition, the element in myself that accounts for my so-called individuality.

So to begin with, we are 99•99999 percent collective, and just a bit of unaccountable something is individual.

But that is the thumbling which is the maker of things, or the grain of mustard that becomes the whole kingdom of heaven.

This is a funny fact but it is so.

You see, there is a definite valid stand point that vox populi est vox Dei, "that the voice of the people is the voice of God."

For instance, if you are convinced that humanity is a manifestation of the divine will, you must assume that the voice of humanity is a manifestation of the divine voice, and so you must own that the consensus gentium, the consent of the majority of human beings, establishes the truth.

And it is really so: a truth is a truth as long as it works.

We have no other criterion except in cases where we can experiment, but they are very few.

We cannot experiment with history or geology or astronomy for example.

There are few natural sciences in which we can experiment.

So this standpoint that the people's voice is the voice of God, a superior overwhelming voice, is a very important psychological truth which has to be taken into consideration in every case.

You see, Nietzsche preaches that truth, but of course in an unconscious sense.

He blames them for having such a view, but it would be a redeeming truth to himself if he could only accept it.

For he is just the one who says that the voice of the people is nonsense, that there is only one truth and that an individual truth.

He believes that his truth is the only truth. But how can anyone say his truth is the only one?

Yet, that is the individualistic point of view, which leads people far afield and very often quite astray.

Of course it is necessary that a person should have his own individual point of view, but he should know that he is then in terrible conflict with the vox populi in himself and that is what we always forget.

We must never forget that our individual conviction is a sort of Promethean sin, a violence against the laws of nature that we are all fishes in one shoal and in one river; and if we are not, it is a presumption, a rebellion.

And that conflict is in ourselves.

But the individual thinks that the conflict is by no means in himself, and whatever individual feeling he has on account of an individual conception, he projects into others: they are against me because I have such a conception-entirely forgetting that he is against himself.

If ever you discover an individual truth, you will find that you are in a conflict about it.

You are contradicted by yourself and at every turn you meet an obstacle which you think other people have put in your way.

Inasmuch as you make individual opinions public naturally you will meet obstacles, and then you take it as a truth that you are persecuted; you develop a sort of paranoia.

Therefore whoever discovers an individual truth should discover at the same time that he is the first enemy of himself, that he is the one who has the strongest objection to his truth, and he should be careful not to project it or he will develop a paranoia. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Pages 1119-1121.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/a4a23-carl.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jungs-Seminar-Nietzsches-Zarathustra-Jarrett/dp/0691017387/ref=sr_1_2?crid=GDG1BKE5MWPQ&keywords=jung+zarathustra+seminars&qid=1575458549`

Carl Jung: We knew that our mortal enemy was coming. (2019-12-04 17:43)

[1]

“I was with a youth in high mountains.

It was before daybreak, the Eastern sky was already light.

Then Siegfried’s horn resounded over the mountains with a jubilant sound.

We knew that our mortal enemy was coming.

We were armed and lurked beside a narrow rocky path to murder him.

Then we saw him coming high across the mountains on a chariot made of the bones of the dead.

He drove boldly and magnificently over the steep rocks and arrived at the narrow path where we waited in hiding.

As he came around the turn ahead of us, we fired at the same time and he fell slain.

Thereupon I turned to flee, and a terrible rain swept down.

But after this I went through a torment unto death and I felt certain that I must kill myself, if I could not solve the riddle of the murder of the hero” Carl Jung, Liber Primus, chapter 7, “Murder of the Hero,” Pages 241–242.

In Liber Novus, Jung wrote that Siegfried “had everything in himself that I treasured as the greater and more beautiful; he was my power, my boldness, my pride” Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 242.

“The rain is the great stream of tears that will come over the peoples, the tearful flood of released tension after the constriction of death had encumbered the peoples with horrific force.

It is the mourning of the dead in me, which precedes burial and rebirth.

The rain is the fructifying of the earth, it begets the new wheat, the young, germinating God” Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 242.

I had killed my intellect, helped on to the deed by a personification of the collective unconscious, the little brown man with me. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 62.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

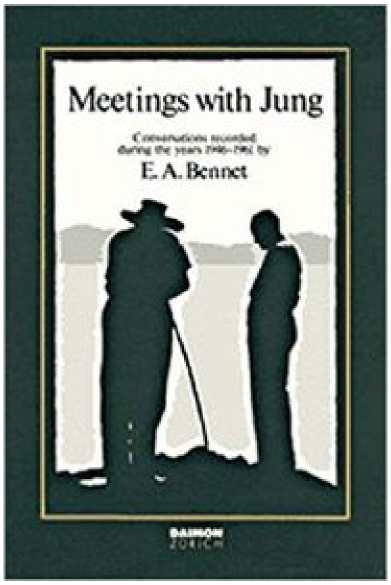
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/0e739-1siegfried.jpg`

Carl Jung: So we wait and the instincts guide us. (2019-12-05 04:30)



Meetings with Jung
Conversations recorded during the years 1946-1961 by
E. A. Bennet
DAIMON
ZÜRICH

[1]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Bollingen, 12th September 1950

Sitting by the lake, C.G. spoke of the need for knowledge; we have to know a lot, for example about symbols, and the contents of the unconscious.

When people are confronted with strange or overwhelming inner experiences they may wonder if they are mad, or think they are ‘different’, separate.

But when the significance of the experience is shown to them, and its content understood – for instance parts of a dream, or a picture – their anxiety is relieved and they feel less isolated.

We must know these things and impart the knowledge.

We spoke of the shadow and I said it puzzled some people.

He said it was very simple: in analysis it is the first thing constellated by the unconscious; behind it, further from consciousness, is the anima (or animus) and other collective material.

The shadow can represent the whole of the unconscious – that is both personal and archetypal contents – or just the personal material which was in the background and not recognised, not wanted.

But it has to come forward and be assimilated into consciousness, it is essential.

He said he had learned never to start an interview beyond a few pleasantries – 'How are you?' – but to wait for the patient, because the instincts, the archetypes, lie in between and we don't know what may be there.

But at times in conversation some topic occurs to him for no apparent reason, and he talks about it and finds it is just the right thing.

For instance the other day he began talking to a woman doctor about his African tour and snakes, and wondered why he was telling her all this; then it turned out to be absolutely relevant for he discovered that she was deeply interested in these things.

So we wait and the instincts guide us.

Commenting on a patient's dream he said that when people become too introverted it can happen that they think too much of the past.

'People do this and don't expect much of the future; they need to develop expectancy –something fresh can happen.'

C.G. looks very well.

After talking to him I had a chat with Toni Wolff on the terrace.

Before I left she got me some lunch.

We lit a fire in the grate and heated some coffee and I carried it to the terrace with some bread and cheese.

The place has a very restful recreative atmosphere.

As I left I passed C.G. and said goodbye.

He was lying on a chaiselongue reading in the place where we had been talking.

I write this now in glorious sunshine sitting on the bank by the side of the road just above the Tower, still, as it were, in the restful unhurried atmosphere of it all.

14th September 1950

We spoke of Korea, and also of Communism.

This, C.G. thought, had arisen because of the failure of the Church.

The Church has had its gestapo – the Inquisition – and its domination; worldly power it always used badly, kept people down and poor.

Hence the new Roman dogma, the deification of matter, materia.

This is the point, and it is the quaternity, and the feminine principle.

We talked again of the shadow.

He said, ‘Yes, it represents everything that is obscure, and it can be personal or collective, we just have to observe it and see.’

He spoke of it as all that was not realised; it could be good or bad.

He spoke also of a multiplicity of women in dreams, a plurality of animas, because man’s attitude could be collective in this.

I asked about the origin of his work on types and he said this began entirely by studying Freud and Adler; the one was rather extraverted (Freud) and the other rather introverted (Adler).

At this time he (Jung) abandoned all desire for a career; it was possible for him to do this economically, and he decided to find out what we were really dealing with in the mind.

He came to see Freud and Adler as having entirely different approaches.

15th September 1950

I asked C.G. about the Christmas tree; he said it was a great symbol because it was the life growing in winter, the winter solstice, and that is what Christ is, the light in the darkness.

But the tree can be many things – phallic, or the unconscious.

I asked what a blind person’s conception of archetypal ideas would be.

He said he had no experience of this; certainly blind people would need to express the archetypes but it was difficult to know in what form – for example the horse or the ford; it was hard to say how these would be experienced without vision.

We spoke of Kant.

He said he had quoted Kant, who had a notion of the unconscious and of the obscurity of what things were – Ding an sich – we just don’t know what things really are in themselves, we have only our impressions of them.

We talked sitting under a canvas roof he had rigged up on the terrace.

16th September 1950

Cold, so we sat in the upper room.

He spoke of his house.

He had on the table the little oil lamp he used when he wrote about the association tests, and always used here – a very soft light.

He would not have electric light installed, or the telephone.

He had built the house like those of mediaeval times with thick stone walls and small windows, so when you are inside you are contained; if you want to see more you can go out.

He spoke with much feeling of all these old things and I wondered about more recent times.

He said we need a certain distance between us and events.

He found it difficult to keep fully in touch with the implications of what was happening now, for instance the atom bomb; hence the need to get apart, get quiet, in this place.

He values the things he has to do here, the necessary things, little jobs; they are not a waste of time.

We get emptied by too much work and these trivial things restore us.

People are too busy to live, but what do they do with their time, the time they save?

It is better to live and be someone and not get absorbed in activity all the time.

I referred to Heraclitus, and he said Heraclitus knew a lot and he had got the notion of enantiodromia from him.

It was important to have a philosophic background and to know the theories of cognition.

He spoke also of Descartes, and of Descartes' dream, which compensated for his one-sided attitude.

This is mentioned in a book he has written on synchronicity.

A physicist in Zürich is writing on this with him, from the physicist's point of view.

They are having difficulty in getting photocopies of some manuscript which is in the British Museum.

He said this work with the physicist on synchronicity was the last of such writing he would do; it required tremendous concentration and took too much out of him.

He had decided to do no work for a year, except what he wanted.

He told me his wife had started to learn Latin, and also some natural science, after her fifth child went to school.

Now she can read all the mediaeval Latin texts.

He used to wonder how he would ever read all the books he had: 'I didn't know I would have so long, and now I can read.'

He mentioned a doctor who never read anything but medical journals; then he retired, and there was nothing to live for – life was empty, had come to an end, and he died.

Of archetypes: they are the way instinct shows itself.

It was ridiculous for Freud to say there was only one kind of energy, we don't know what energy is.

So he himself hesitated to use the word and used 'libido' instead.

We see only the manifestations of energy.

It was rubbish to think sex could be the only drive; those who said that were just ignorant, knew nothing.

He referred to the comfort a patient got from the idea that his illness was because of something in the past, in the parents perhaps.

But he has the illness now.

If a man has a bullet in his leg he may find out who shot the bullet, but he has it in his leg and it is this which must be dealt with.

We cannot help simply by showing him that someone shot at him; we are driven to think of the present problem and to deal with it.

The patient has the neurosis now, the parents haven't got it.

Speaking of astrology, C.G. said he did not concern himself in the least with whether it was true or false.

All that he found of value was that it could give a hint, some indication of things he did not know.

And so it was with graphology.

He spoke of his concepts as purely hypothetical, only hypotheses, and if better ones came along he would accept them.

As to what things really were we just didn't know, we could only try to find out as far as was possible.

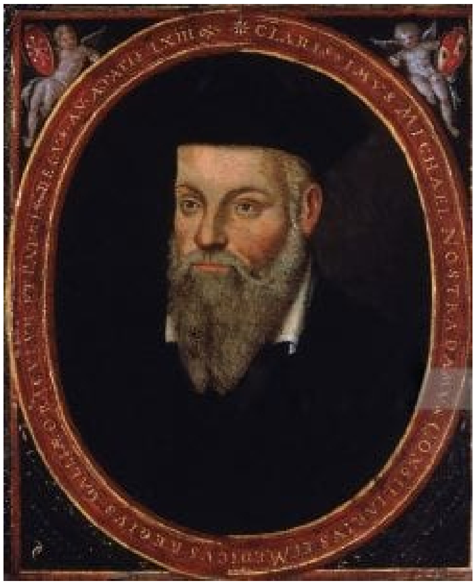
He was wearing drill trousers (old) and jack boots, or rather high laced boots, very thick and tough looking, and a wind jacket, plus his green apron.

Just going out to work in his garden I think, but he sat and smoked and talked. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 54-65

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+bennet&qid=1575538377&sr=8-1`

The Prophecies of Nostradamus by Barbara Hannah (2019-12-05 05:36)



[1]Lectures on Jung’s Aion

The Prophecies of Nostradamus

Jung says that the course of our religious history and an essential part of our psychic development could have been more or less accurately predicted - as regards time and content - from the precession of the equinoxes through the constellation of the Fishes.

An enantiodromia set in from the vertical Gothic striving toward the heights to a horizontal movement outwards, ushered in by the voyages of discovery and the rapidly increasing "conquest of nature."

The vertical was cut across by the horizontal (one remembers that in many of the old representations of Pisces, one fish is vertical and the other horizontal), and man’s spiritual development moved in what became increasingly obvious was an anti-Christian direction, leading to the present-day crisis whose outcome is still very dubious (par. 150).

With this background in mind, Jung then turns to Nostradamus.

I shall only summarize this very briefly, partly for the reasons already mentioned and partly because although I have tried more than once to study Nostradamus, we two somehow do not click!

Yet one must admit it is exceedingly interesting that, in a letter to Henry II of France, dated June 27, 1558, he prophesies that, founded on astrological basis, the year 1792, more than two hundred years later, will see a greater persecution of the Christian Church than there ever was in Africa, though at the time "everyone will think it a renovation of the age" (par. 151).

Nostradamus may have based his own calculations on earlier authorities, but it is certainly strikng that whereas an earlier prophecy said "1789" and Nostradamus said "1792," that both dates fall in the time of the French Revolution.

The enthronement of the Goddess of Reason in Notre Dame de Paris was indeed (as Jung has often also elsewhere pointed out) a dramatic event which proved to be an anticipation of an increasingly anti-Christian trend and yet was hailed at the time by many as a "renovation of the age," exactly as Nostradamus prophesied two hundred and thirty years before.

There was even a revolutionary calendar with a new system of dating - begun in September 1792 (par. 156).

Great stress is laid on the north, both by Nostradamus and the earlier authorities.

They would have been familiar with the idea ...... of the north as the abode of the devil.

This ideology goes right back to the Old Testament where Jeremiah says: "From the north shall an evil wind break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land" (J er. 1: 14), and Isiah speaks of Lucifer as intending to exalt his throne above the stars of God and to sit on the mount of assembly in the far north (Isa. 14:12) (par. 157).

The Benedictine monk, Rhabanus Maurus (ninth century) says that the "north wind is the harshness of persecution" and "a figure of the old enemy."

He adds that it is obvious that the north signifies the devil because it is said in Job: "He stretcheth out the north, over the empty space, and hangeth the earth upon nothing" (Job 26:7).

Rhabanus Maurus interprets this as meaning that "God allows the devil to rule the minds of those who are empty of his grace" (par. 157).

Jung quotes St. Augustine and several other authorities who identify the north and the devil and adds that it is hardly surprising that Nostradamus and his predecessors warn us concerning "a usurper from the north" when they prophesy the coming of the Antichrist. Luther had promptly been greeted as the Antichrist, which is probably why Nostradamus speaks of "the second Antichrist" who is to appear after the year 1792.

Jung just mentions that we should not forget how much capital the Nazis tried to make out of the idea that Hitler was completely the work of reformation which Luther left incomplete. (As Jung has often pointed out elsewhere, Nazi Germany was an example par excellence of the process of individuation happening unconsciously and automatically and therefore negatively.) (par. 159)

Jung ends the chapter by saying that, given the existing astrological data and the possibilities then extant of interpreting them, it was not difficult for Nostradamus to predict the imminent enantiodromia of the Christian eon; but by doing so he already stood himself in the anti-Christian phase and served as its mouthpiece.

[The German is stand er selber schon in der antichristlichen Phase drin - literally translated, he thus stood already in the anti-Christian phase. The English translation "placed himself firmly" is misleading here, as it sounds as though Nostradamus did this consciously which was, of course, not the case. Now this is a very common intellectual error that arises from the prejudice that there is no unconscious which has a genuine effect upon us, but that we do everything consciously.]

[We can see this same process as one sees here in Nostradamus in ourselves if we look back on the time when we first came into contact with Jungian psychology. Our dreams then will show us how much our unconscious standpoint was changed, though our conscious lagged behind. It is often particularly clear in the transference, which can be in full bloom years before we realize it.] Barbara Hannah, Aion, Lectures on Aion, Pages 47-49

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Lectures-Jungs-Aion-Barbara-Hannah/dp/1630513474/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=barbara+hannah+aion&qid=1575542579&sr=8-1`

Dream of a Ten-Year-Old Girl of a Snake with Eyes Sparkling Like Diamonds (2019-12-05 06:13)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

Dream of a Ten-Year-Old Girl of a Snake with Eyes Sparkling Like Diamonds Presented by Marie-Louise von Franz

Text:

A snake with eyes sparkling like diamonds chases me in a forest or in my bedroom.

This dream frightens me so much that I no longer dare move in the bed, because even when awake, everywhere in the room I see the glowing eyes of the snake that wants to bite me.

Ms. von Franz:

As is evident from the text, the dream has often recurred.

When a dream appears with such forcefulness, we have to conclude that it will be of central importance for the dreamer’s psychology, indeed, that the situation here depicted will perhaps govern her whole life.

Already among the primitives, recurrent dreams are accorded a very special importance.

Now, the difficulty in the interpretation of this dream lies in the fact that it does not really have a plot or activity, but only contains one single image; therefore, we are not able to apply the usual dramatic schema (exposition, statement of the problem, peripateia, lysis or catastrophe).

In fact, the dream takes the form of a vision, of an apparition, which is also confirmed by the fact that the dreamer still sees the snake “even when awake”—we would say half-asleep.

She does not dare move in the bed, “because even when awake, everywhere in the room I still see the glowing eyes of the snake that wants to bite me.”

Thus, the image appears so intensely that, like a vision in the waking state, it is even able to interrupt the continuity of waking consciousness.

So we have only the image of the snake by which to orient ourselves, an image which, as you know, is so enormously widespread in all religions and myths of the world that, frankly speaking, I was able to draw only very general conclusions regarding the situation of the dreamer.

A few details of the description, however, may perhaps show the path to the particular way in which the dreamer reacted—that is, the emphasis on the gaze of the snake, the eyes, described first as sparkling like diamonds, then, in a gradual increase of its evil character, as glowing, and, by the final sentence, that the snake “wants to bite her.”

As far as the snake in general is concerned, it nearly always belongs to the chthonic-female element of religions, indeed it very often is its embodiment proper.

In dualistically oriented systems, therefore, it often stands in opposition to a bright, male, spiritual world, from whose perspective it represents the demonic-evil.

Through the story of Paradise, the snake has, as it were, taken this meaning for the whole Christian world.

Philo of Alexandria in particular, probably under Persian influence, contributed to this snake symbolism and to the development of the devil concept.

For him, however, it is at the same time also the most spiritual animal, of a fiery nature and of great velocity.

Through its ability to shed its skin, it is even immortal.

But in other cultures, too, the snake plays the role of the primal enemy of the upper world of the gods: the Midgard snake, together with the Fenris wolf, threatens the gods in Asgard by creating a flood.

In Greece it is Gaia, the earth goddess, who creates half-snakes, the Titans, who storm Olympus and wrestle with Zeus.

Simultaneously, she is the mother of Echidna (snake), of the Sphinx, Cerberus, and others.

Leviathan, too, the antagonist of Jehovah, is a snake, a dragon at the bottom of the sea.

In the Mithras cult, the snake is the animal opposed to life that, together with the scorpion and the ant, absorbs the life-giving effect of the bull sacrifice.

It is the antagonist of the lion, the damp, cold, dark animal in contrast to the animal of the heat of the sun.

It devours the vital force of the sacrificed bull, or it wraps itself around a Kratér (vessel), with the lion facing her.

It stands in a similar opposition to the lion as it does to the eagle, which is the sun-bird and spiritual principle.

Thus, an eagle sits on top of the Germanic world tree, but a dragon dwells below, while the squirrel Ratatwiskr (bearer of discord) transmits mutual insults.

In Indian mythology and in fairy tales, the races of the snakes and eagles are eternal enemies, and seek to destroy each other.

Once, the snakes outwitted the eagles, which then had to serve them, but the eagle Garuda, Vishnu’s mount, stole the soma, the drink of immortality that he was supposed to obtain for them.

A North American fairy tale recounts that a child-stealing witch seizes the hero Tsoavits, but an eagle leads him back again.

At this, the witch seeks help from her grandfather, the giant snake, but is devoured by him on the spot. “Ever since all witches have been snakelike."

The snake is also closely related to the basilisk or dragon, whose defeat signals the beginning of nearly every heroic legend.

I will mention only Heracles and the lernaic snake, and Siegfried and the Christian St. George, both modeled after him.

In wanting to help the bright upper world to achieve victory, indeed by embodying the new sun himself, the hero stands in opposition to the snake.

It is because of this that two snakes—sent by Hera, the evil Great Mother—already threaten Heracles in his crib; later she sends him fits of madness, during which he even kills his own children.

A snake also steals the herb of immortality, obtained with great difficulty, from Gilgamesh, while he is inattentively bathing in a pond.

The hero Philoctetes, too, a figure identical with Heracles, is bitten by a snake in the foot because of the curse from the nymph Chryse, whose love he did not requite; he slowly wastes away from the wound.

In a very similar way, the son god Re is poisoned, according to an Egyptian hymn, by a venerable worm, formed out of his own saliva and laid in his way by Isis, who is enraged at him.

She then heals him only after he discloses his name to her, but his power remains broken.

Apollo also had to first conquer the python in Delphi before he could create his oracles there.

Strangely enough, such prophetic abilities often arise out of defeating a dragon, just as Siegfried understands the voices of the birds after having eaten Fafner's flesh.

As far as the especially numerous snake and dragon fights in Greek mythology are concerned, it should be pointed out that matriarchy had ruled in the Aegean culture before the Indo-Germanic populations of the Greeks invaded it about 2,000 b.c., and that the cults of the Great Mother, later worshipped as Cybele, Agdistis, Mountain Mother, Artemis of Ephesus, and so on, stem from this time. (As a matter of fact, we know about the free status of women in Crete.)

This Great Mother was often depicted together with a snake.

The shield goddess Athena, too, is pre-Greek, and often the snake is her companion (compare Phidias's depiction).

Hence, for the Greeks, overcoming the snake means at the same time overcoming the goddess of the ground, overcoming the unconscious reemergence of the pre-Greek layer, which in the postclassical period broke through again in the mysteries of Cybele, Sabazio, the Phrygian Mother goddess, and others, and which has inundated the whole spectrum of Mediterranean culture.

It is quite clear from this compilation of images that the snake symbolizes the vital, instinctual, and drive stirrings in man, his unconscious dark side in contrast to brightness, to the conscious side of his nature.

Scientifically speaking, the snake has only a cerebrospinal nervous system, and so represents all the stirrings originating in this sphere.

In various Gnostic systems it is identified with the human spinal cord, proof that already then one was aware of these correspondences.

This is a direct parallel to the Indian Kundalini snake in Kundalini yoga, climbing up and down in the spinal cord.

In the contexts previously described, the snake plays the role of an evil demon, hostile to light, and represents a dark, ambiguous deity of the depths.

But this is only one side of its being; at the same time it is also a god of healing and salvation.

In the mysteries of Sabazios it represented the highest deity: according to the testimony of Clement of Alexandria, a snake was pulled through the abdomen of mystics.

Arnobius also testifies that a golden snake was drawn through the clothing of the initiated.

The snake ritual signifies the mystical unification with the deity, toward whom the mystic is in a feminine position.

Similarly, the snake is the animal accompanying and, in earlier stages, personifying Asklepios; according to Artemidorus, its appearance in dreams of the sick signals healing and the return of vital power.

A Grimm fairy tale shows particularly well how strongly it is associated with the mysterious vital power of a human being: a child who eats with a snake thrives until his mother slays the snake.

From this moment on the child, too, loses weight and wastes away until he finally dies.

Likewise, Porphyry writes in the biography of his revered teacher, Plotinus, that the latter's disciples had observed by his bedside, a few days before his death, how a snake came out of Plotinus's mouth and left; the master died shortly thereafter.

For these reasons the appearance of a snake at the sickbed can also mean death.

It was also generally assumed that the souls of the dead would live on as chthonic snake gods, as inhabitants of the underworld where they became guardians of a treasure.

Thus, snakes were ritualistically worshipped in holes and crevices in the ground in the Asklepieias of Ptolemy and Hygieia.

At the so-called Arrhetophorias, obols and cakes in the form of a snake or phallus were sacrificed in crevices in the ground.

An erect snake made of granite was found in the pits.

Thus the snake becomes the guardian of the secret treasure, and very often also the possessor of the herb of life (compare the Indian fairy tale in which it wants to have the soma potion) with which it can reawaken the dead.

A Greek saga recounts that the hero Glaucus, sitting next to the corpse of his murdered friend Polyeides, catches sight of a snake, which he slays.

Thereafter a second snake appears, fetches an herb, returns, and reanimates its dead friend.

At this they disappear together and leave the herb for Glaucus, who revives his friend Polyeides with it.

This motif emerges in identical form in the Grimm fairy tale “The Three Snake Leaves,” and in numerous other fairy tales.

When the snake, as I mentioned in the beginning, steals the herb of life from Gilgamesh in a moment of inattention or unconsciousness, this somehow belongs to this same sphere.

The snake arrives there, attracted by the scent of the flower that Gilgamesh had fished up from the bottom of the sea along with the herb, and, one is almost tempted to say, takes back what is hers.

Perhaps you recall the dream series that was discussed at the end of last winter, in which a boy dreams that he is searching for a transparent stone and that a lion, also wanting the lapis, appears at that moment—similarly, the snake is also a lover of stone or the herb of life. (Incidentally, in that series, a white snake with black crosses on its back appears in a dream directlypreceding the former, a symbolically depicted soter snake, the serpens mercurii, which dwells in the earth.

And earlier still, it was the spring, the water of life, with which it is identical.)

The snake is not only the guardian of the stone or herb, however; it is essentially identical with it, or contains it in itself.

The Indians believe that the cobra carries a diamond in its head; and an Indian fairy tale recounts that a snake daily brings a scholar a gold piece for reading to it from spiritual works in a garden, until the old man’s greedy son hits the snake on the head and breaks the jewel inside; the snake kills the son in revenge and disappears, lamenting: “Woe, who has shattered my jewel?”

The particular reason why I presented this fairy tale is because such an association may resonate in the expression of our dream text: “eyes sparkling like diamonds.”

As already suggested, the snake and its relation to the lapis play an essential role in alchemy.

Thus, a text from the Musaeum Hermeticum says: “A terrifying dragon lives in the forest who lacks nothing; when it sees the sun’s rays, it forgets its poison and flies so dreadfully that no living animal can resist and not even the basilisk is its equal. Whoever knows how to kill it wisely . . . will escape all dangers . . . and its poison turns into the ultimate medicina.

Suddenly it swallows its own poison by eating its own poisonous tail.

It is forced to complete all that within itself.

Then a magnificent balsam will flow forth from it.”

A thought parallel to this is that the gold is already present in the initial situation, but that it is either old and sterile or compositum; this gold is dissolved in a type of aqua fortis, which corresponds to the snake.

Yet, the whole process is something taking its course within itself, which is why it is also said that a punctum igneitatis exists in Mercury himself through which that (immanent) dissolution happens.

I do not want to go into this alchemical problem here any longer, but to address instead a source of alchemical symbolism, the concepts of the Gnostic sects of the Ophites and Naassenes.

Ophis is Greek for snake.

Likewise, Naas is the Hebrew word for snake.

The Gnostics gave themselves these names in saying "that they alone could grasp the depths of God."

Thus the snake is the deus absconditus, the dark, deep, incomprehensible side of God.

The so-called Perates, too, especially elaborated on the theory of the snake.

"The primeval power originating from the father, the logos, is a snake; so are the stars, but they are the evil snakes. This is why Moses shows the perfect snake to the children of Israel. . . . Whoever sets his hopes on it will not be destroyed by the snakes of the desert, that is, the gods of creation. This all-encompassing snake is the wise logos of Eva, this is the mystery of Eden, this is the river that flows out of Eden."

This explains the meaning of the words "and as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up."

The snake is the "great beginning," of which it is said:

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made."

What is made by it is life.

The snake stands for vital power, as we have seen.

Eve originated through it; Eve is life.

This Eve is the mother of anything alive.

The evil materia, however, in contrast to the logos, is also, in the final analysis, a snake.

At first, it is the water to the Perates, flowing around the world as in a ring; it is Kronos.

They say of it: "It is a power bright as water, and no creature can escape this power, Chronos; it is the reason why each creature is doomed to perish; it is the water of Styx."

One can view the battle of these two snakes in the sky: "The logos is the constellation of the dragon; to the right and left of it are the crown and lyre. In front of the dragon kneels that pitiable man, Heracles. Behind his back the evil master of this world, the constellation of the snake, draws nearer so as to steal the crown from him. The bearer of the snake, however, keeps them together and prevents it from touching the crown."

Here again, the snake is aiming at what is most valuable.

The main ritual of the Perates, the evening meal, proceeded as follows: they piled loaves of bread on the table and summoned the snake that, as a holy animal, was cared for in a container box.

The snake came near and slithered on top of the loaves.

Through this the breads were consecrated.

Each member kissed the snake on the mouth and prostrated himself before it.

Thus logos is present in the form of the snake at the Lord's Supper.

It is Christ both as logos and as snake.

The rituals of the Sabazios mysteries, mentioned earlier, also belong to this area; they are the coniunctio with the divine logos.

But in other cultures as well, the snake is the savior of the logos: Quetzalcoatl, the god of the Toltecs, is a winged snake, the son of the "cloud snake," who appears as the bearer of culture and savior.

Upon Tollan's fall, he again disappears in a lake in the form of a snake.

According to the Gnostics, the evil snake, too, was not evil originally, but became so as follows: Justinos recounts that on his journey west, Heracles had united with a virgin, half snake, half human (cf. Herodotus), in order to regain his stolen horse.

Elohim likewise is said to have united with a virgin half-snake and half-human, called Eden or Israel, and to have procreated with her twelve paternal angels and twelve maternal ones.

He then leaves her and returns to the upper, good god.

Out of her sorrow at having been left, she then becomes that evil power, hostile toward God.

Her servant, the angel Naas (snake), later brings about the crucifixion of Christ; Christ, however, left Eden his body on the cross, with the words: "Woman, behold thy son!"28

But these are the very words Christ spoke to Mary when he entrusted John to her.

So John is, as it were, the body, the mortal part of Christ! Strangely enough, in medieval art John, too, has the characteristics of a snake. In a picture of Quentin Matsys, he holds a communion cup containing a small dragon, which he consecrates.

In the great division of the cosmos, shared by nearly all Gnostic sects, there are three realms, and always right at the bottom there is the snake leviathan,the ouroboros, reappearing in alchemy.

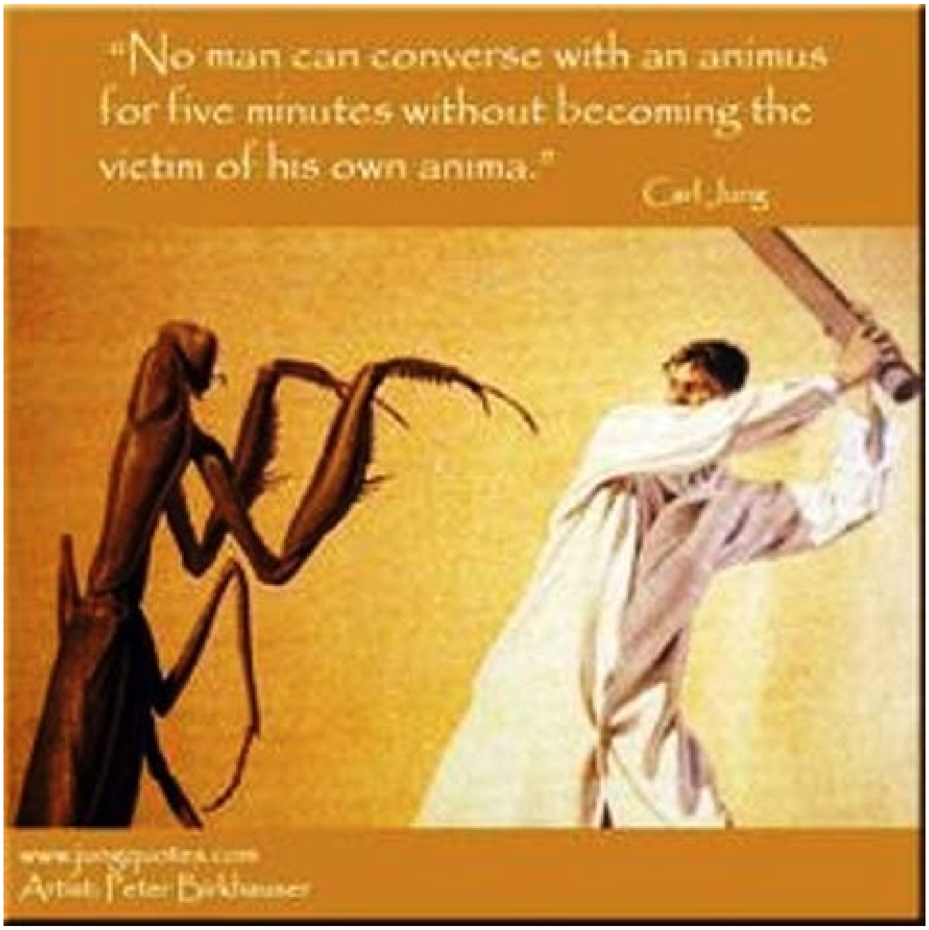
But the latter is Eve, that is, life. Leviathan is the master of this world, of whom it is said in Isaiah 27:1: "In that day the LORD with his sore and great and strong sword shall punish leviathan the piercing serpent, even leviathan that crooked serpent; and he shall slay the dragon that is in the sea."

Alchemy also knows—besides the tail-eater who unites the opposites in itself—the image of two snakes uniting, a fleeing and a wingless one (see also the contrast eagle—snake). Marie Louise Von Franz, Children's Dreams, Pages 240-248.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/7e40d-diamond.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+childrens+dreams&qid=1575553070&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung on how he discovered the Animus (2019-12-05 06:41)

[1]



"No man can converse with an animus for five minutes without becoming the victim of his own anima."
Carl Jung
www.jungquotes.com
Artist: Peter Birkhauser

[2]Aion: Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 2)

Lecture 7

Questions and Discussion

Mrs. Zinno's question: "If the technique of introversion which you described be used before the pairs of opposites have been stretched to the uttermost in conflict, will the collective unconscious be constellated instead of the releasing symbol?"

Dr. Jung: It must not by any means be supposed that the technique described is suitable for general use or imitation.

That would indeed be disastrous.

It is something applicable to a particular case under particular circumstances, and is only applicable when the unconscious is animated, and when the unconscious content is necessary for further progress.

There are very many cases in which the conscious material is in need of being digested, and in those cases it would be quite futile to call up the unconscious content.

I can call to mind now a case where the analyst released the unconscious under wrong conditions, and with the most unfortunate results.

In my own case the release of the unconscious was demanded.

The conscious had become practically a tabula rasa, and the contents underneath had to be freed.

Dr. Mann: In speaking of the animus, one always does so in a derogatory way. I should like to hear a discussion of its positive value, but no doubt you will speak further about the animus later on.

Dr. Jung: Yes, on the whole I would rather defer this, but as a partial answer here I can say that the animus, being discovered as he usually is under the most unpleasant circumstances, suffers from the fact.

Most psychological things are discovered that way because as long as things are running smoothly, no one thinks of trying to understand them.

It is only when problems arise that we are forced into a conscious attitude toward our psychical processes.

By being discovered chiefly under disagreeable circumstances, the animus comes into ill repute, though of course it has a tremendously important positive function as presenting the relationship to the unconscious.

Similarly, "persona" has come into a bad name.

No one can imagine getting along without a persona—that is, a relationship to the outside world—but when one identifies with the persona, its valuable side disappears in its abuse.

So when one is all animus, one loses sight of the service the animus performs when it is held within its proper functioning limits.

Mrs. Zinno: In my question I had especially in mind the phenomenon one can see going on today in modern art—that is, the artist pumps his unconscious for the sake of the images he can find there and not for a psychological need, and so he brings out a lot of embryonic stuff instead of the releasing symbol.

Dr. Jung: This brings us into the problem of the significance of modern art.

I'm not at all sure that all those present would agree modern art brought out embryonic material from the unconscious.

What would you say to that, Mr. Aldrich?

Mr. Aldrich: I think modern art is too big a term for satisfactory discussion.

Dr. Jung: Limit it then to painting.

Mr. Aldrich: Some modern art has for me a really magic spell.

For example, not long ago I saw in Lugano a painting of a bull and a man struggling with it.

The background was flat blue, with six points of light set in it—six stars or planets, so that the man and the bull seemed to suggest that they were the seventh.

The bull was not like any bull that exists on the earth today; he was antique; he was not just a bull, he was The Bull.

So too with the human figure: there was no effort at portraiture or photographic rendering of a man—he was more than any one man, he was Man.

There was a sense of tremendous power and space.

The Bull swept past the stars dragging with him Man who strove to dominate him.

The artist—I questioned him—had never even heard of Mithras and the bull: the picture was pure fantasy that had come up from the unconscious.

Another example is a painting that was in the Kunsthaus here, a great black horse rearing up, wild with demoniac energy.

On his back sat a heroic figure of a man armed with a spear, nude except for a helmet, who seemed to look intently ahead into the far distance.

He was undisturbed by the ferocity of his horse.

This horse, like The Bull, was no particular animal—rather, he was The Horse.

Both these pictures stirred me greatly.

Dr. Jung: Why did they stir you?

If you could answer that it would explain the appeal of modern art.

Mr. Aldrich: I think they were libido symbols, and that the struggle with the bull, for instance, pictured the conflict in man's soul.

Dr. Jung: Was there any difference between those pictures and one painted 150 or 200 years ago?

Mr. Aldrich: Yes, a very great difference.

I could see a picture of a peasant's horse painted in the old way, and while I would know it to be an excellent painting, it would not stir me.

Dr. Jung: That is just it.

The criterion of art is that it grips you.

Constable no longer does this to us, but undoubtedly he did stir the people of his time.

Most probably the art produced now would be anathema to our ancestors.

It would have no value for them.

One has to assume, I think, that the artist adapts to the change of attitude.

Now I should be most interested to hear the views of the classon this theme of art.

One can take art as a form of dream.

Just as the dream seeks to maintain a psychological balance by filling out the daytime conscious attitude by the unconscious elements, so art balances the general public tendency of a given time.

What do you think about art from that viewpoint?

Mrs. Zinno: Is not the characteristic thing of modern art that it is subjective?

Dr. Jung: But if you say that, you must be very careful to define what you mean by subjective.

Very often it is assumed that an experience is subjective because it takes place within the mind of a subject, but it is not then necessarily in opposition to objective, because the images of the collective unconscious, from their collective character, are just as truly objects as things outside the psyche.

Now, I think modern art tends to be subjective in the sense that the artist is concerned with his individual connection with the object, rather than with the object per se.

It is perfectly true that modern art also tends toward an increased interest in the inner object, but that does not in itself, as I have just said, constitute subjectivity.

In modern art one feels decidedly the predomination of the internal processes.

To take the examples Mr. Aldrich gave, we could say that these artists were more interested in the image of the horse or bull than in any actual animals, and still more interested in their relation to those images.

But what then is the aim of art?

An artist would instantly resent that question and would say that art is just art when it has no aim.

Miss Baynes: Is it not the aim of art to counteract the effects of machinery on modern life?

Mr. Bacon: Does it not do something for the artist?

Dr. Jung: Undoubtedly both of these points of view are true, but then there must be something over and above that.

Dr. de Angulo: I think modern art is a misplaced effort to balance the extreme to which scientific thought has forced modern man.

I say misplaced because the artist is almost driven into a morbid extreme, and “puts it up” to his public to make the connection between his product and the conscious viewpoint.

Dr. Jung: Many would certainly contest the point that modern art is morbid.

Mr. Aldrich: It seems to me that a characteristic thing of modern art is that it no longer concerns itself with being merely beautiful.

It has passed through and beyond mere conventional beauty, and in this it reflects our changed views of life.

Before the war we lived in a beautiful world—or perhaps I would better say in a world that was merely sweet and pretty, a world of sticky sentimentality in which nothing brutal nor ugly was given place.

Modern art certainly cares nothing for prettiness; in fact, it would rather have the ugly than the pretty; and sometimes, I think, it seeks a new realization of beauty beyond the pale of what was formerly considered possible—in ugliness itself, even.

(There followed here some discussion in the class as to whether modern art had really freed us from sentimentalism, or merely shifted the kind of sentimentalism a little.)

Dr. Jung: There is no doubt that sentimentalism catches the public and blinds it to its own sensuality and brutality.

Thus in the time of Louis XVI, one had all those beautiful shepherdesses and idylls of one sort or another in France, and then followed the Revolution.

Or again, we can see the raw hell of war coming after the purity and exaggerated delicacy of feeling of the Victorian age, when a lady and a gentleman neither spoke nor thought anything evil.

All through history one can see periods of pronounced brutality directly predicted by the sentimentality of the art preceding them.

And the same thing, of course, goes on in the case of the individual artist—that is, he uses sentimentality to cloak brutality.

These two seem to be opposites between which an enantiodromia works.

Mrs. Zinno: Is not the best expression of modern art to be found in sculpture?

Dr. Jung: No, because sculpture demands form, and form [demands] an idea, while painting can dispense with form.

The cubistic sculpture seems to say all of nothing.

But in painting one can find the thread of development.

For example, I once followed very carefully the course of Picasso's painting.

All of a sudden he was struck by the triangular shadow thrown by the nose on the cheek.

Later on the cheek itself became a four-sided shadow, and so it went.

These triangles and squares became nuclei with independent values of their own, and the human figure gradually disappeared, or became dissolved in space.

There was once exhibited in New York a painting called the Nude Descending the Stairs.

This might be said to present a double dissolution of the object, that is in time and space, for not only have the figure and the stairs gone over into the triangles and squares, but the figure is up and down the stairs at the same time, and it is only by moving the picture that one can get the figure to come out as it would in an ordinary painting where the artist preserved the integrity of the figure in space and time.

The essence of this process is the depreciation of the object.

It is a somewhat similar performance such as that we go through when we cast aside the reality of a living man and reduce him to his infantile misdeeds.

The artist takes the object away from our eyes, and substitutes a partial derivative.

It is no longer a nose but its shadow we are shown.

Or, to put it another way, he shifts the emphasis from the essential to the unessential.

It is a little bit as though you explained a thing by a bon mot, a fugitive exhalation of the thing.

This process inevitably drives the interest away from the object to the subject, and instead of the real object, the internal object becomes the carrier of the values.

It is Plato's conception of the eidolon coming again to the fore.

Thus, when the artist paints such a bull as that described by Mr. Aldrich, it is the bull he has painted, it is yours or mine—God's bull, you might say.

The Bull-Tamer is a collective idea of tremendous power gathered into an image.

It speaks of discipline—only a man of heroic attributes overcomes the bull.

So modern art leads us away from the too great scattering of the libido on the external object, back to the creative source within us, back to the inner values.

In other words, it leads us by the same path analysis tries to lead us, only it is not a conscious leadership on the part of the artist.

We have analysis for exactly the purpose of getting us back to those inner values so little understood by the modern man.

Analysis would have been unthinkable in the Middle Ages, because those men were freely expressing those values from which we have cut ourselves off today.

Catholics today have no need of analysis because the unconscious in them is not constellated—it is kept perpetually drained through their ritual.

The unconscious of a Catholic is empty.

I once made a collection of portraits carrying back through the Middle Ages, in order to trace the change in psychological attitude between the medieval man and ourselves.

Down to the middle of the sixteenth century or thereabouts, these portraits are my relatives.

I understand these men and women in the same sense that I understand my contemporaries.

But in the middle of the sixteenth century a change begins and the Gothic man, the pre-Reformation man, comes on the scene, and he is a stranger to us.

There is a very peculiar look about him, his eyes are stone-like and inexpressive; none of the vivacity to be seen in our eyes is in them.

Sometimes one sees this face reproduced in modern times among peasants and people of the ignorant classes who have not awakened to modern life.

Thus the cook of my mother-in-law has a perfect Gothic face, the arched eyebrows and pointed smile of the Madonna.

If you notice Luther's face you can find that he is not quite modern, but belonged to the time before the Reformation also.

He has still in a way the Gothic look and the Gothic mouth.

There is combined in this smile the paranoid's idea of persecution, of martyrdom, and the sardonic smile of catatonia.

It is also the smile of Mona Lisa.

is connected, too, with the antique smile as one sees it on the Aegina marbles, those men who are enduring death with a smile.

The Gothic smile is almost like the beginning of a kiss—full of tenderness, like a mother.

Or it is the smile of a man who meets on the street the woman with whom he has a secret liaison.

There is understanding in the smile—"We know," it seems to say.

I think these peculiarities of the Gothic attitude are to be explained by the fact that at one time there was one language, one belief, from north to south.

The smile bespoke the complete conviction that excluded all doubt, therefore the kinship with the paranoid.

All this disappeared with the advent of the modern viewpoint.

The world broke into diversified faiths, and the inner unit and quietude gave place to the materialistic urge toward conquest of the outer world.

Through science values became exteriorized.

Modern art, then, began first by depreciating these external values, by dissolving the object, and then sought the basic thing, the internal image back of the object—the eidolon.

We can hardly predict today what the artist is going to bring forth, but always a great religion has gone hand in hand with a great art.

Lecture:

At the last lecture I told you of my descent into the cavern.

After that came a dream in which I had to kill Siegfried.

Siegfried was not an especially sympathetic figure to me, and I don't know why my unconscious got engrossed in him.

Wagner's Siegfried, especially, is exaggeratedly extraverted and at times actually ridiculous.

I never liked him.

Nevertheless my dream showed him to be my hero. I could not understand the strong emotion I had with the dream.

I can tell it here appropriately because it connects with the theme we have been discussing with respect to art, that is, with the change of values.

This was the dream:

I was in the Alps, not alone, but with another man, a curious shortish man with brown skin.

Both of us carried rifles.

It was just before dawn, when the stars were disappearing from the sky, and we were climbing up the mountain together.

Suddenly I heard Siegfried's horn sound out from above, and I knew that it was he we were to shoot.

The next minute he appeared high above us, lit up by a shaft of sunlight from the rising sun.

He came plunging down the mountainside in a chariot made of bones.

I thought to myself, "Only Siegfried could do that."

Presently, around a bend in the trail, he came upon us, and we fired full into his breast.

Then I was filled with horror and disgust at myself for the cowardice of what we had done.

The little man with me went forward, and I knew he was going to drive the knife into Siegfried's heart, but that was just a little too much for me, and I turned and fled.

I had the idea of getting away as fast as I could to a place where "they" could not find me.

I had the choice of going down into the valley or further up the mountains by a faint trail.

I chose the latter, and as I ran there broke upon me a perfect deluge of rain.

Then I awoke with a sense of great relief.

The hero, as I told you, is the symbol of the greatest value recognized by us.

Christ has been our hero when we accept the principles of his life as our own principles.

Or Herakles or Mithras becomes my hero when I am determined to be as disciplined as they were.

So it appeared as if Siegfried were my hero.

I felt an enormous pity for him, as though I myself had been shot.

I must then have had a hero I did not appreciate, and it was my ideal of force and efficiency I had killed.

I had killed my intellect, helped on to the deed by a personification of the collective unconscious, the little brown man with me.

In other words, I deposed my superior function.

The same thing is going on in art, that is, the killing of one function in order to release another.

The rain that fell is a symbol of the release of tension; that is, the forces of the unconscious are loosed.

When this happens, the feeling of relief is engendered.

The crime is expiated because, as soon as the main function is deposed, there is a chance for other sides of the personality to be born into life. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Chapter 7, Pages 55 - 62

. . . no man can converse with an animus for five minutes without becoming the victim of his own anima. Anyone who still had enough sense of humour to listen objectively to the ensuing dialogue would be staggered by the vast number of commonplaces, misapplied truisms, clichés from newspapers and novels, shop-soiled platitudes of every description interspersed with vulgar abuse and brain-splitting lack of logic. It is a dialogue which, irrespective of its participants, is repeated millions and millions of times in all languages of the world and always remains essentially the same. Carl Jung, Aion, CW 9, ii, Page 15

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/18a9d-1animus.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/069101826X/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+aion&qid=1575553194&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung answers questions of J.B. Rhine (2019-12-05 06:43)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Answers to Rhine’s Questions November 1945

As suggested by Jung (Rhine, 18 Sept.1945) R. submitted the following questions:

1. What do you think is the proper relation of parapsychology to the general science of psychology?
2. What is your view of the mind-body relation, and to what extent is parapsychology of help on this question? 3• What, in your judgment, has parapsychology taught us regarding the character of the human psyche? 4• To what extent do you see a useful reiation between parapsychology and psychiatry? 5• Can you interpret the experimental findings of parapsychology in extra•sensory perception and its apparent reach beyond the limits of space and time as we think of them, in terms of your views of the human personality?

1) I consider parapsychology as a branch or discipline of general psychology, more especially of the psychology of the unconscious.

2) The psychology of the unconscious has much to say about the mind-body relation (psychogenic disturbances of the physiological functions). Parapsychology is apt to demonstrate the existence of phenomena of a psychic nature, which influence material objects or create physical bodies in a place where no such or similar matter was before. Thus parapsychology may elucidate the problem of how the living is shaped and continuously reshaped through the unconscious psyche.

3) Parapsychology has shown above all that the psyche has an aspect of a relative-temporal and relative-spatial character. It has shown, moreover, that the unconscious psyche has a faculty to influence matter detached from bodily contact and to assemble matter beyond the reach of the body to such a degree that it appears as a physical body perceptible to our senses as well as to the photographic plate.

4) I see, for the time being at least, no "useful" connection between parapsychology and psychiatry. It is as yet a merely scientific problem, but as such of the highest importance. Parapsychological phenomena appear not infrequently in the beginning of psychoses, perhaps less frequently during the course of such diseases.

5) I can explain extra-sensory perception only through the working hypothesis of the relativity of time and space. They seem to be psychically relative, i.e., what one calls absolute space, for instance, only exists in the world of macrophysical aspects. In the microphysical world the relativity of space and time is an established fact. The psyche, inasmuch as it produces phenomena of a. non-spatial or a non-temporal character, seems to belong to the microphysical world. This would also explain the obvious non-spatial nature of psychic existences such as thought etc. and the fact of precognition. In so far as the psyche is an energic phenomenon, it has mass, but mass of microphysical extension or weight. From this fact we can derive material effects of the psyche.

As the relativity of time and space includes the relativity of causality, and as the psyche partakes of relative time-space, it also relativizes causality and therefore enjoys, in so far as it is microphysical, an at least relative independence of absolute causality. (Chinese philosophy says that as long as things are in the North-East, i.e., before they have risen, they can be altered. When they have entered the East, they take their unalterable course.)

The fact that the future can be occasionally foreseen does not exclude freedom in general, but only in this particular case.

Freedom could become doubtful only if everything could be foreseen .

Viewed from the psychological standpoint, extra-sensory perception appears as a manifestation of the collective unconscious.

This particular psyche behaves as if it were one and not as if it were split up into many individuals. It is non-personal. (I call it the "objective psyche.")

It is the same everywhere and at all times. (If it were not so, comparative psychology would be impossible.)

As it is not limited to the person, it is also not limited to the body.

It manifests itself therefore not only in human beings but also at the same time in animals and even in physical circumstances. (Cf. the oracle technique of the I Ching and character horoscopes.)

I call these latter phenomena the synchronicity of archetypal events.

For instance, I walk with a woman patient in a wood. She tells me about the first dream in her life that had made an everlasting impression upon her.

She had seen a spectral fox coming down the stairs in her parental home.

At this moment a real fox comes out of the trees not 40 yards away and walks quietly on the path ahead of us for several minutes .

The animal behaves as if it were a partner in the human situation.

(One fact is no fact, but when you have seen many, you begin to sit up.)

The bread-knife is still in my possession.1 The table is gone.

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 363-364.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/8b81c-rhine.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1APQ4L63FJ67H&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575553306&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung and “A renewal of religious beliefs has no form at present…" (2019-12-05 18:14)

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Wilhelm Laiblin

Dear Herr Laiblin, 19 March 1934

Best thanks for your letter, which interested me very much.

Also for your two open letters to the bishop.

As to your dream, I entirely agree with you that the falling stars and moons refer to the collapse of a whole world of ideas that has become obsolescent.

I think we may also hazard the conjecture that the three moons refer to the Trinity concept.

The second part of the dream unquestionably refers to the anima, who offers you food and drink at an exorbitant price.

There is nothing in the dream to indicate that there is any necessity, or a personal reason, to take up an attitude in public.

The stars are falling anyway, one cannot and need not accelerate their fall.

I think I can understand why the bishop has not replied to your letters.

Anyone who has to run a church under these circumstances cannot concern himself with problems that cast doubt on the validity of this same church.

The meaning of the dream is only that when the churches keep silent the psyche gives you food and drink.

I certainly understand that in the present atmosphere, which strives for collective solutions, it was obvious that you should speak out for yourself.

We are in fact not absolutely dependent on the unconscious but can and should on occasion act on our environment at our own discretion.

For my part I would have looked at the dream in another light.

It would have occurred to me that the unconscious, in a very unchristian manner, was urging me to go home and nourish myself in silence and bear the costs of such an undertaking.

So long as the Church does not practice restraint of conscience, it can safely be kept alive for all those, the weak ones, to whom no offence should be given.

I am therefore extremely conservative and reserved in these matters, for I am convinced that the Catholic as well as the Protestant form of faith have not by any means lost their raison d’etre.

A renewal of religious beliefs has no form at present, so that the weak and those who are dependent on forms should not be prematurely precipitated into formlessness.

I am naturally in complete agreement with the content of your letters.

If one says it at all, then one has to say it like that.

I only ask myself whether it is the right time to say such things now.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 153-154.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/09630-falling.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=16VH4EF4PQ5UY&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575621367&sprefix=jung+let`

Dr. Jung’s writings do not constitute the creation of new religious truths… (2019-12-06 04:02)

[1]

[Dr. Jung wrote that “Answer to Job” was the one work he would not rewrite and that “The Red Book” was his most important work but in no wise intended for his work or any aspect of Psychology to constitute the construction of new religious truths.]

"Another equally serious misunderstanding lies in imputing to psychology the wish to be a new and possibly heretical doctrine.

If a blind man can gradually be helped to see it is not to be expected that he will at once discern new truths with an eagle eye.

One must be glad if he sees anything at all, and if he begins to understand what he sees.

Psychology is concerned with the act of seeing and not with the construction of new religious truths, when even the existing teachings have not yet been perceived and understood.

In religious matters it is a well-known fact that we cannot understand a thing until we have experienced it inwardly, for it is the inward experience that the connection between the psyche and the outward image or creed is first revealed as a relationship or correspondence like that of sponsus and sponsa." Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 14, Paragraph 15.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/dbeec-carl.jpg's+image.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Fear of Snakes (2019-12-06 04:04)

[1]

CANADA
POSTAGE PAID PORT PAYÉ
蛇年
YEAR OF THE SNAKE
2013
ANNÉE DU SERPENT

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Professor Jung:

This, too, would follow from the parents’ psychology.

In addition, the fear of the snake cannot be readily explained in the context of inheritance; it is simply there.

Either you fear a snake, or you don’t.

There are individuals for whom a stay in the tropics becomes a perfect hell because of their constant fear of running into a snake.

After all, it is very inconvenient to suddenly discover a snake in your bed, or in your shoes, in your trousers, in the cupboard, or in all sorts of impossible places.

Snakes are always where you don't suspect them.

The uncanny thing with these animals is that they are completely inhuman; they aren't in any rapport with human beings.

The snake wardens in the zoos know this.

For some time, the snakes let one do anything with them, and one day they wind themselves around the warden with lightning speed, trying to squeeze him to death.

You can make contact with nearly all animals, but there seems to be no possible psychic bridge to the cold-blooded animals any longer, although they let themselves be hypnotized, as we know.

No "niceties" any longer here. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams, Pages 252-253.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/84b47-fear.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+dreams+children&qid=1575624764&s=books&sr=1-1`

Carl Jung on Pascual Jordan, Time, Space and the Unconscious. (2019-12-06 04:07)

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Wolfgang Pauli

Dear Professor Pauli, 29 October 1934

Best thanks for kindly sending me Jordan’s paper.

I think this paper should be published, as it is concerned with the actual change over of the physicist’s mode of observation to the psychological field.

This paper was inevitable.

Having come to the conclusion that the observed is also a disturbance by the observer, the consistent investigator of the unknown interior of the atom could not help seeing that the nature of the observing process becomes perceptible in the disturbance caused by the observation.

To put it more simply, if you look long enough into a dark hole you perceive what is looking in is also the principle of cognition in yoga, which derives all cognition from the absolute emptiness of consciousness.

This method of cognition is thus a special instance of the introspective investigation of the psyche in general.

With regard to Jordan's reference to para-psychological phenomena, clairvoyance in space is of course one of the most obvious phenomena that demonstrate the relative non-existence of our empirical space picture.

In order to supplement this argument, he would also have to adduce clairvoyance in time, which would demonstrate the relativity of our time picture.

Jordan naturally sees these phenomena from the standpoint of the physicist, whereas I start from that of the psychologist, namely, from the fact of the collective unconscious as you. have so rightly noted, which represents a layer of the psyche in which individual differences of consciousness are more or less obliterated.

But if individual consciousnesses are blotted out in the unconscious, then all perception in the unconscious takes place as though a single person.

Jordan says that senders and receivers in the same conscious space simultaneously observe the same object.

One could invert this proposition and say that in unconscious "space” senders and receivers are the same perceiving subject.

As you see, I as a. psychologist would speak from the standpoint of the perceiving subject, whereas the physicist speaks from the standpoint of the common space in which two or more observers are present.

Jordan’s View, earned to its log1cal conclusion, would lead to the assumption of an absolutely unconscious space in which an infinity of observers observe the same object.

The psychological version would be: in the unconscious there is only one observer who observes an infinity of objects.

If you should draw Jordan’s attention to my writings, perhaps I may reccomend you to mention-besides the essay already cited by you - Basic Postulates of Analytical Psychology” in the same volume.

As regards the collective unconscious, there is in an earlier volume, Seelenprobleme der Gegenwart, an essay where I treat this theme in greater detail, namely "The Structure of the Psyche."

I would be grateful if I could keep Jordan’s paper a while longer.

It has just occurred to me that with regard to the relativity of time there is a book by one of Eddington’s pupils, Dunne, An Experiment with Time, in which he treats clairvoyance in time in the same way as Jordan treats clairvoyance in space.

He postulates an infinite number of time dimensions roughly corresponding to Jordan’s "intermediate stages."

It would interest me very much to hear what your attitude is to Dunne’s arguments.

I also thank you for your personal news and wish you further progress.

With kindest regards,
.
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 174-176.

Images:

Wolfgang Pauli
Pascual Jordan

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/8b9cc-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/gp/product/0691098956?pf_rd_p=ab873d20-a0ca-439b-ac45-cd78f07a84d8&pf_rd_r=EWHWZATBKQFYQZG3SY6J`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/d360d-pascual.jpg`

Some Carl Jung Quotations LV (2019-12-06 04:20)

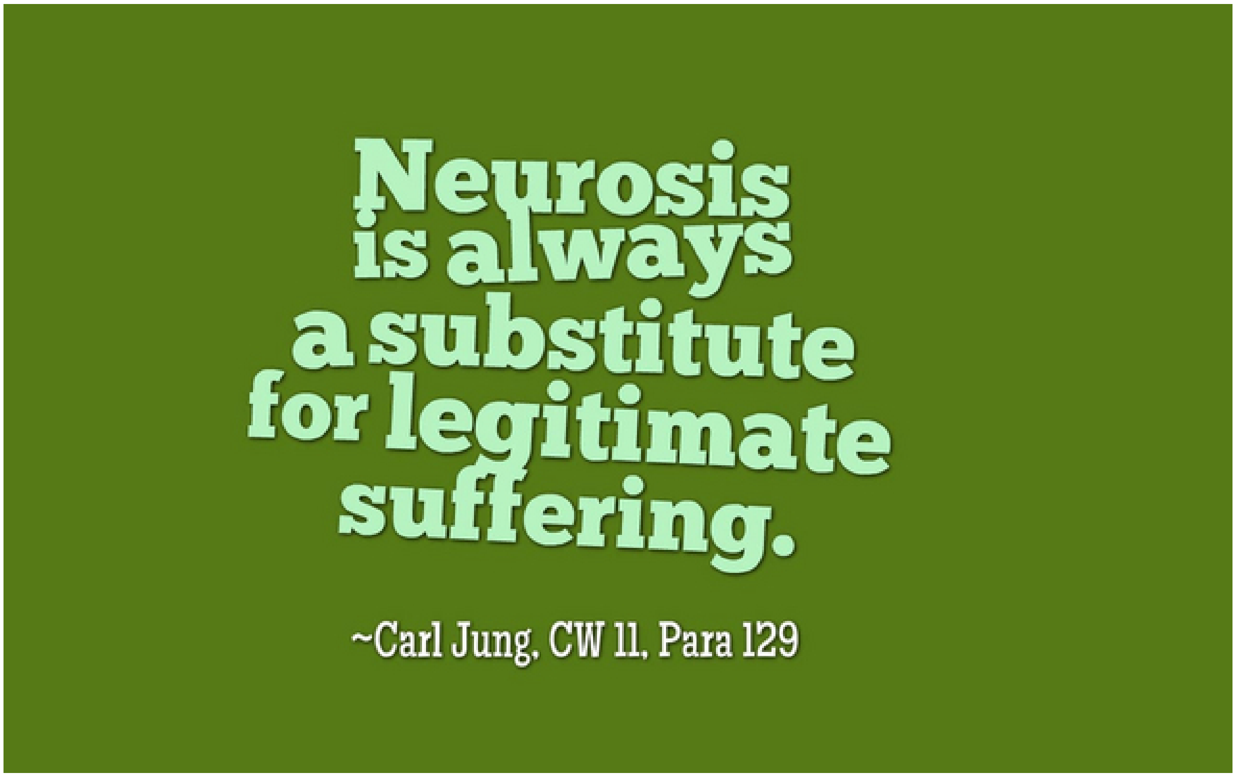
[1]

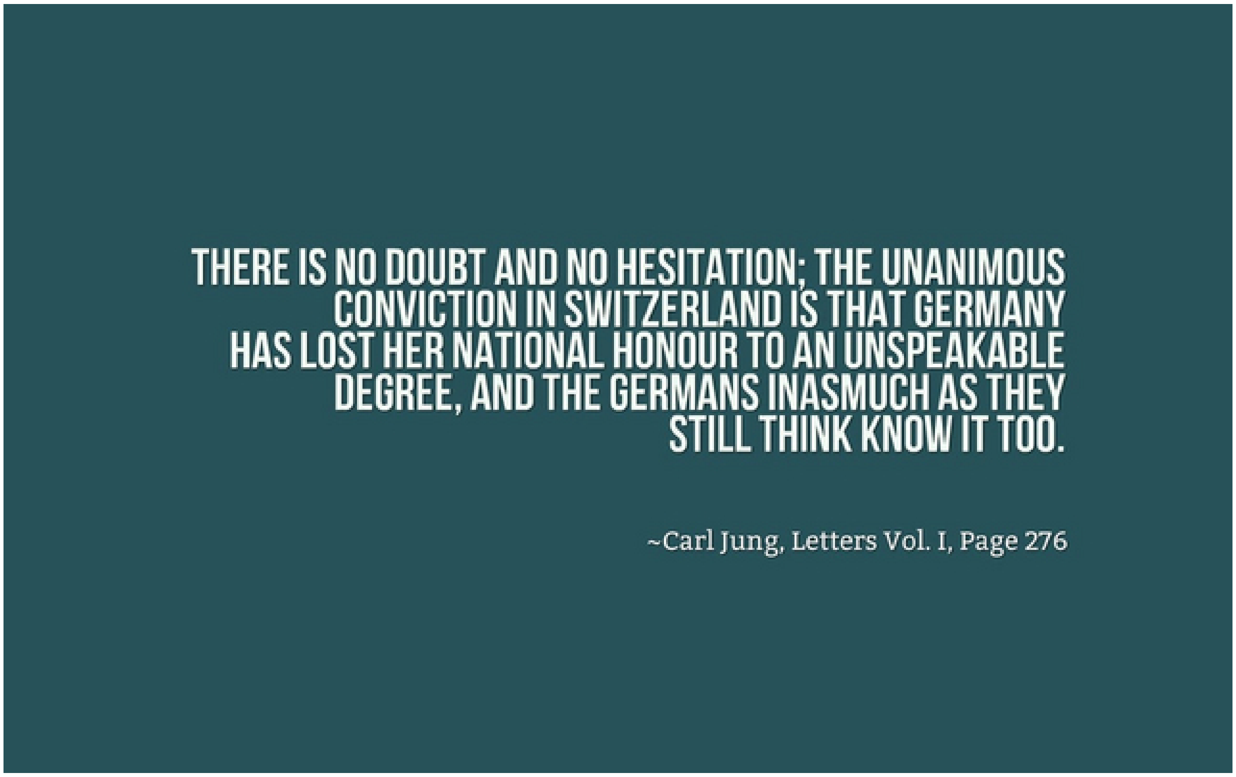


Neurosis is always a substitute for legitimate suffering.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 129

Neurosis is always a substitute for legitimate suffering. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 129

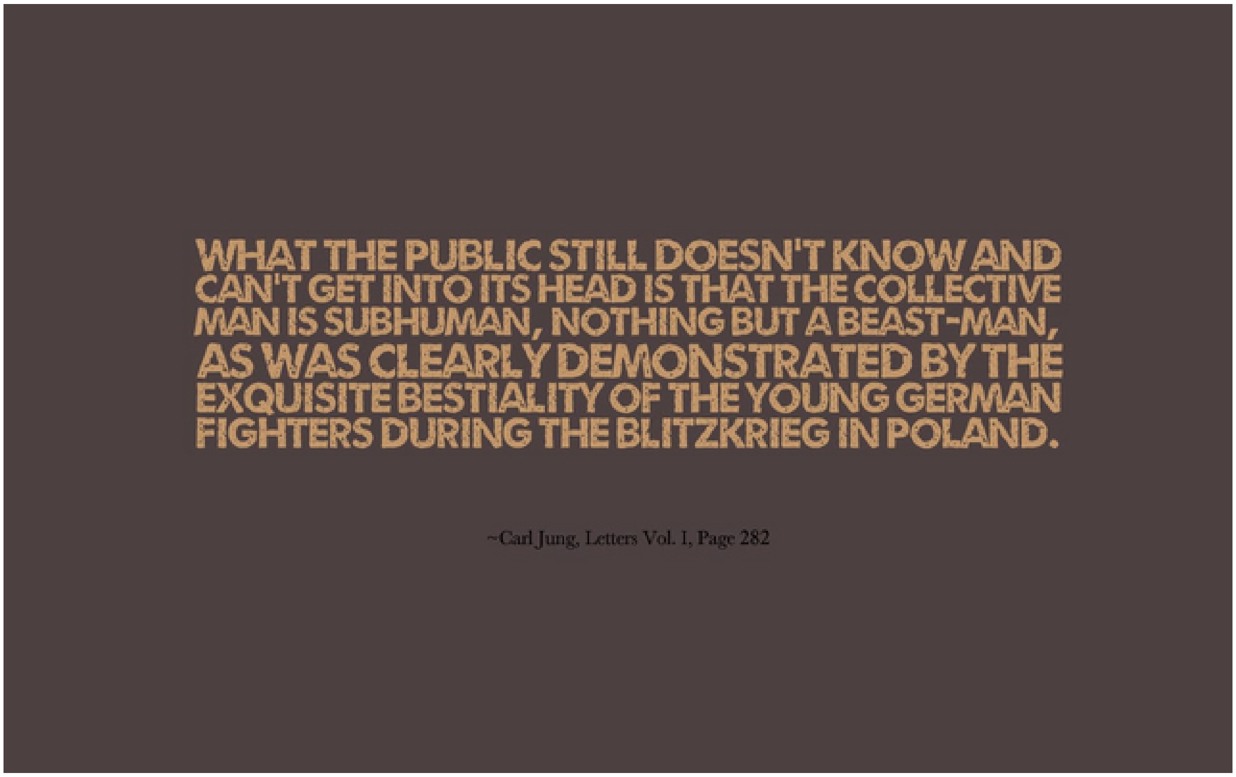
[2]



THERE IS NO DOUBT AND NO HESITATION; THE UNANIMOUS CONVICTION IN SWITZERLAND IS THAT GERMANY HAS LOST HER NATIONAL HONOUR TO AN UNSPEAKABLE DEGREE, AND THE GERMANS INASMUCH AS THEY STILL THINK KNOW IT TOO.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 276

There is no doubt and no hesitation; the unanimous conviction in Switzerland is that Germany has lost her national honour to an unspeakable degree, and the Germans inasmuch as they still think know it too. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 276



WHAT THE PUBLIC STILL DOESN'T KNOW AND CAN'T GET INTO ITS HEAD IS THAT THE COLLECTIVE MAN IS SUBHUMAN, NOTHING BUT A BEAST-MAN, AS WAS CLEARLY DEMONSTRATED BY THE EXQUISITE BESTIALITY OF THE YOUNG GERMAN FIGHTERS DURING THE BLITZKRIEG IN POLAND.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 282

What the public still doesn’t know and can’t get into its head is that the collective man is subhuman, nothing but a beast-man, as was clearly demonstrated by the exquisite bestiality of the young German fighters during the Blitzkrieg in Poland. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 282

Any organization in which the voice of the individual is no longer heard is in danger of degenerating into a subhuman monster.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 282

Any organization in which the voice of the individual is no longer heard is in danger of degenerating into a subhuman monster. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 282

You notice that the meditation is not on the spirit of the Buddha, but on the Body of the Buddha; the highest truth grows from the deepest roots of the body and not from the spirit.

-Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3rd March 1939

You notice that the meditation is not on the spirit of the Buddha, but on the Body of the Buddha; the highest truth grows from the deepest roots of the body and not from the spirit. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 28

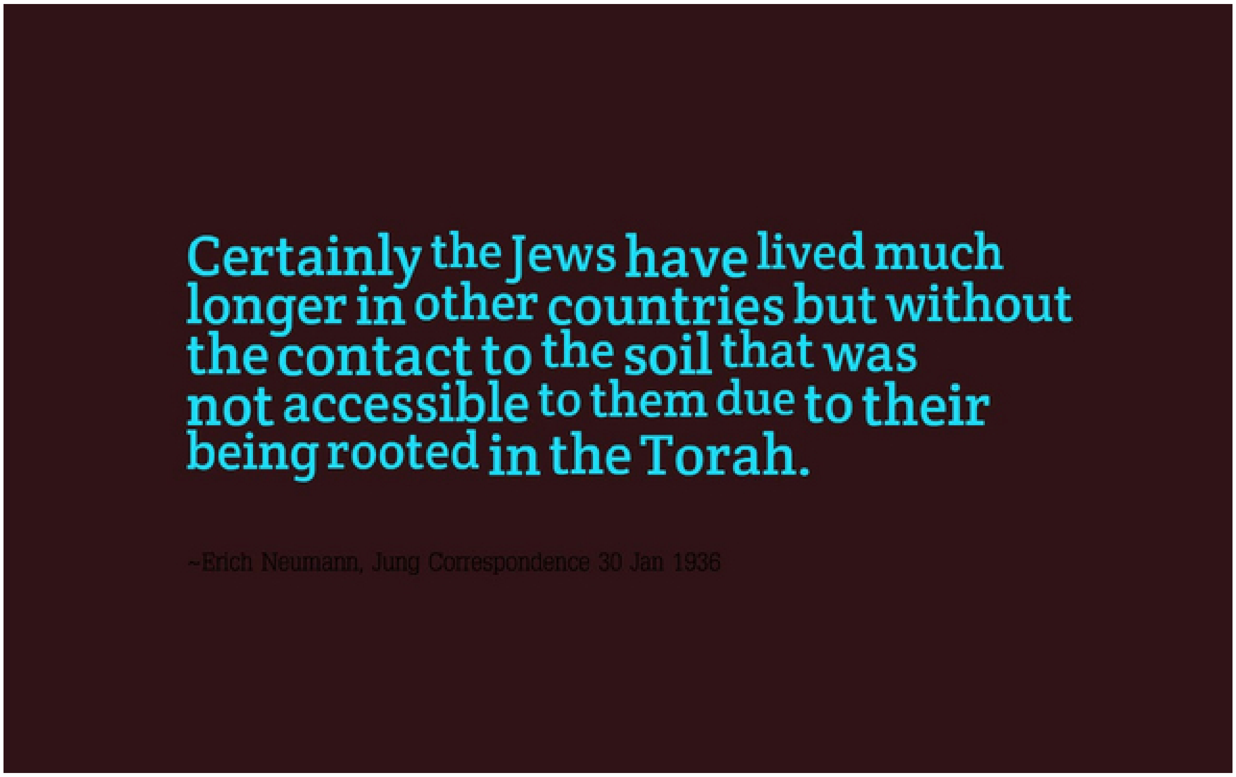
So for the time being we need not worry about future congresses, delegate meetings, translators, etc. Hitler is reaching his climax and with him the German psychosis.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 275-276

So for the time being we need not worry about future congresses, delegate meetings, translators, etc. Hitler is reaching his climax and with him the German psychosis. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 275-276



Certainly the Jews have lived much longer in other countries but without the contact to the soil that was not accessible to them due to their being rooted in the Torah.

~Erich Neumann, Jung Correspondence 30 Jan 1936

Certainly the Jews have lived much longer in other countries but without the contact to the soil that was not accessible to them due to their being rooted in the Torah. Erich Neumann, Jung Correspondence 30 Jan 1936

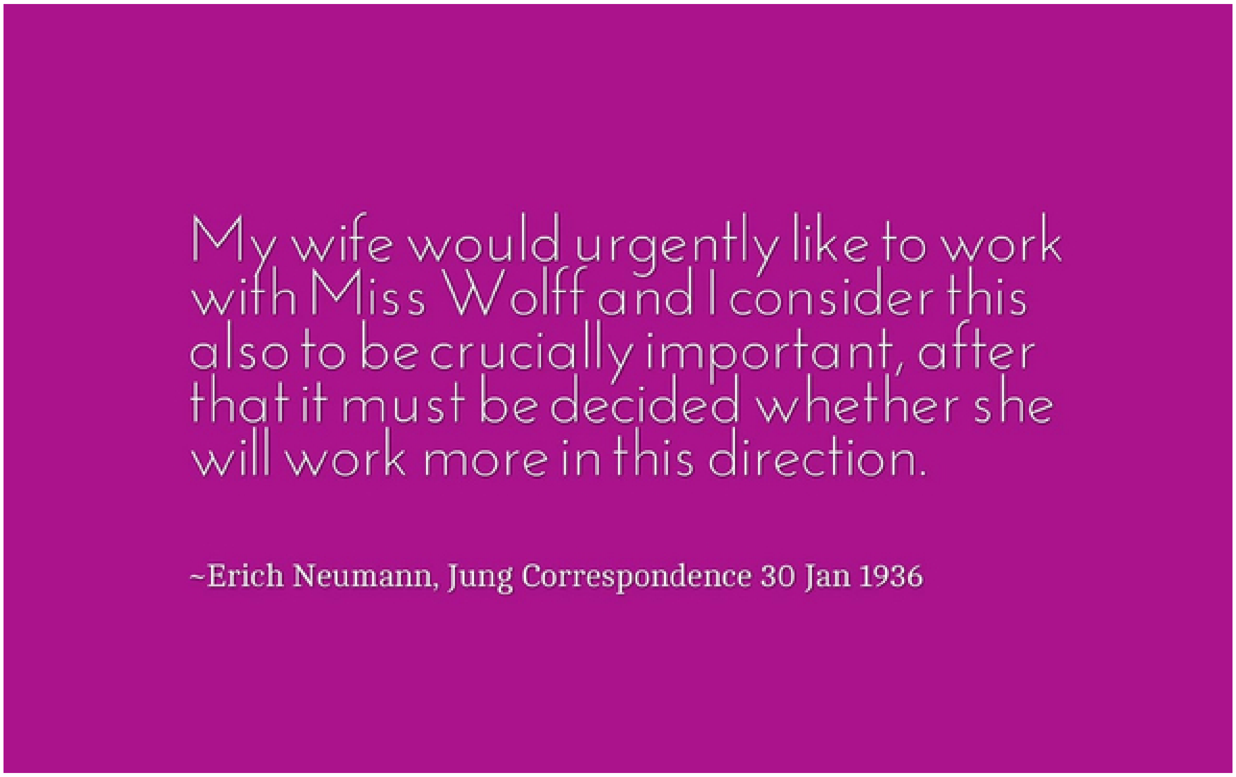
My analytical work is making great demands of me, problems are mounting up that I am grappling with without resolving them, and it is becoming evident to me more often that I urgently need to do some more work with you and Miss Wolff.

~Erich Neumann, Jung Correspondence 30 Jan 1936

My analytical work is making great demands of me, problems are mounting up that I am grappling with without resolving them, and it is becoming evident to me more often that I urgently need to do some more work with you and Miss Wolff. Erich Neumann, Jung Correspondence 30 Jan 1936



My wife would urgently like to work with Miss Wolff and I consider this also to be crucially important, after that it must be decided whether she will work more in this direction.

~Erich Neumann, Jung Correspondence 30 Jan 1936

My wife would urgently like to work with Miss Wolff and I consider this also to be crucially important, after that it must be decided whether she will work more in this direction. Erich Neumann, Jung Correspondence 30 Jan 1936

Your idea about the image of the medicine-man being the everlasting model for the impressive doctor is quite correct.

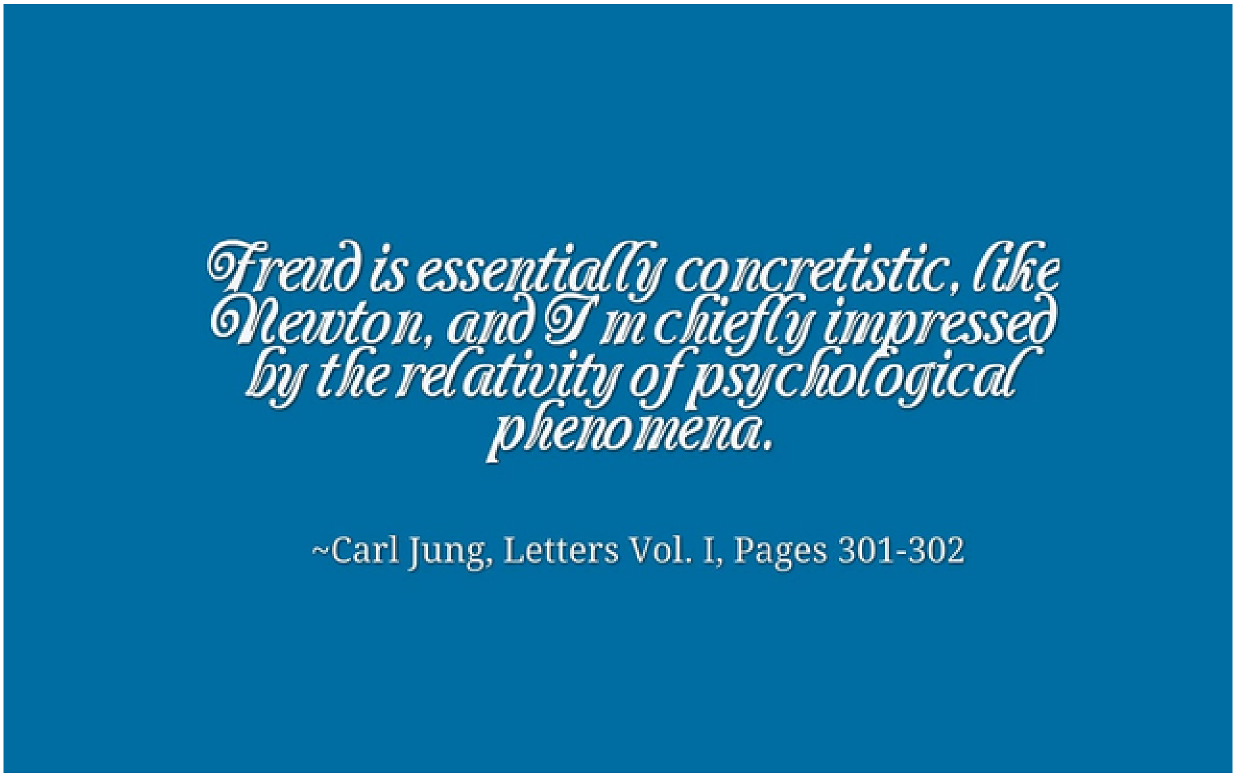
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

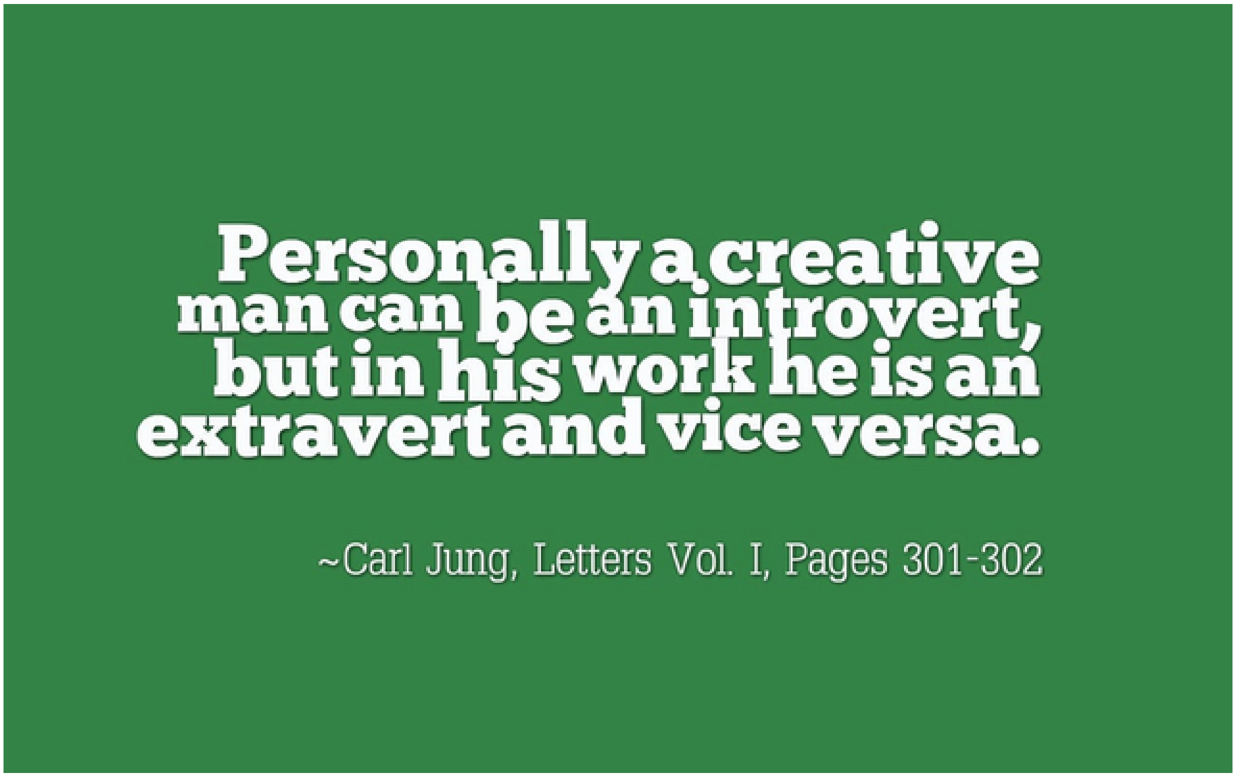
Your idea about the image of the medicine-man being the everlasting model for the impressive doctor is quite correct. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302



Freud is essentially concretistic, like Newton, and I'm chiefly impressed by the relativity of psychological phenomena.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

Freud is essentially concretistic, like Newton, and I’m chiefly impressed by the relativity of psychological phenomena. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302



Personally a creative man can be an introvert, but in his work he is an extravert and vice versa.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

Personally a creative man can be an introvert, but in his work he is an extravert and vice versa. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

His general way of living was a genuinely introverted style, whereas Adler, whom I met as a young man, being of my age, gave me the impression of a neurotic introvert, in which case there is always a doubt as to the definite type.

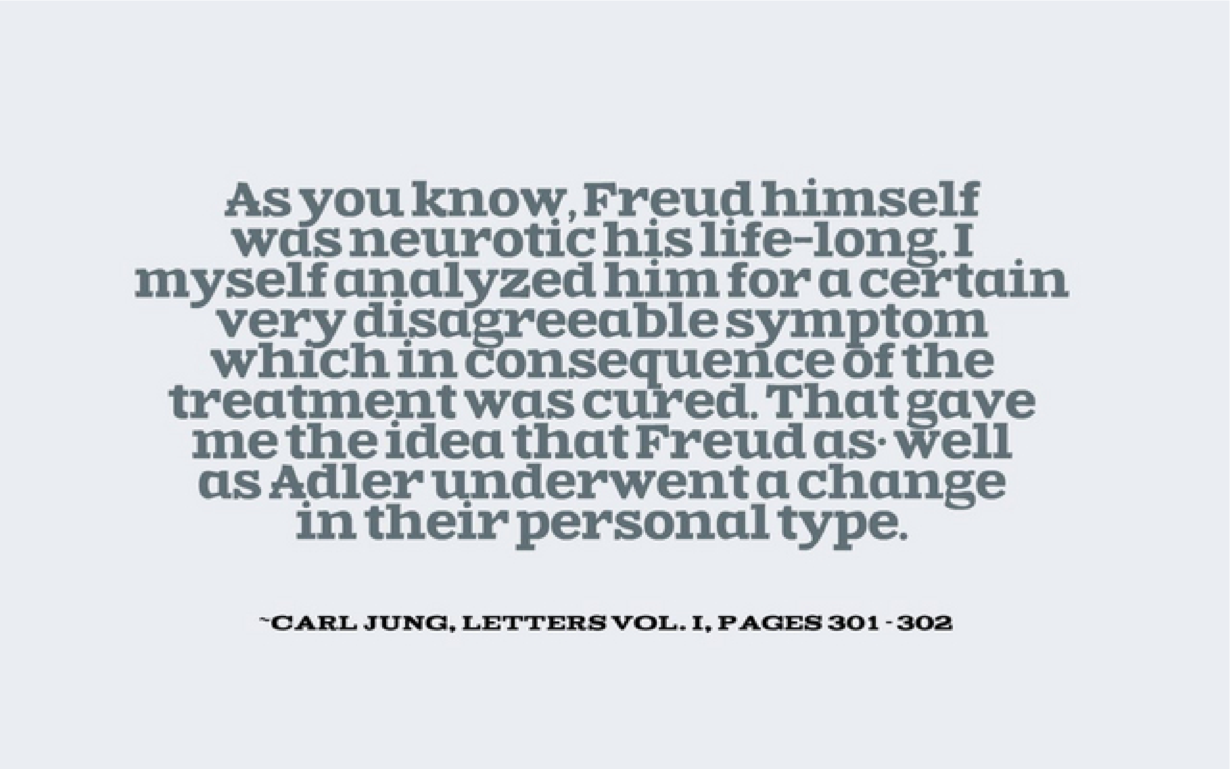
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

His general way of living was a genuinely introverted style, whereas Adler, whom I met as a young man, being of my age, gave me the impression of a neurotic introvert, in which case there is always a doubt as to the definite type. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302



As you know, Freud himself was neurotic his life-long. I myself analyzed him for a certain very disagreeable symptom which in consequence of the treatment was cured. That gave me the idea that Freud as· well as Adler underwent a change in their personal type.

~CARL JUNG, LETTERS VOL. I, PAGES 301 - 302

As you know, Freud himself was neurotic his life-long. I myself analyzed him for a certain very disagreeable symptom which in consequence of the treatment was cured. That gave me the idea that Freud as· well as Adler underwent a change in their personal type. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

Adler, I suppose, was personally never a real introvert, therefore as soon as he had a certain success he began to develop an extraverted behaviour.

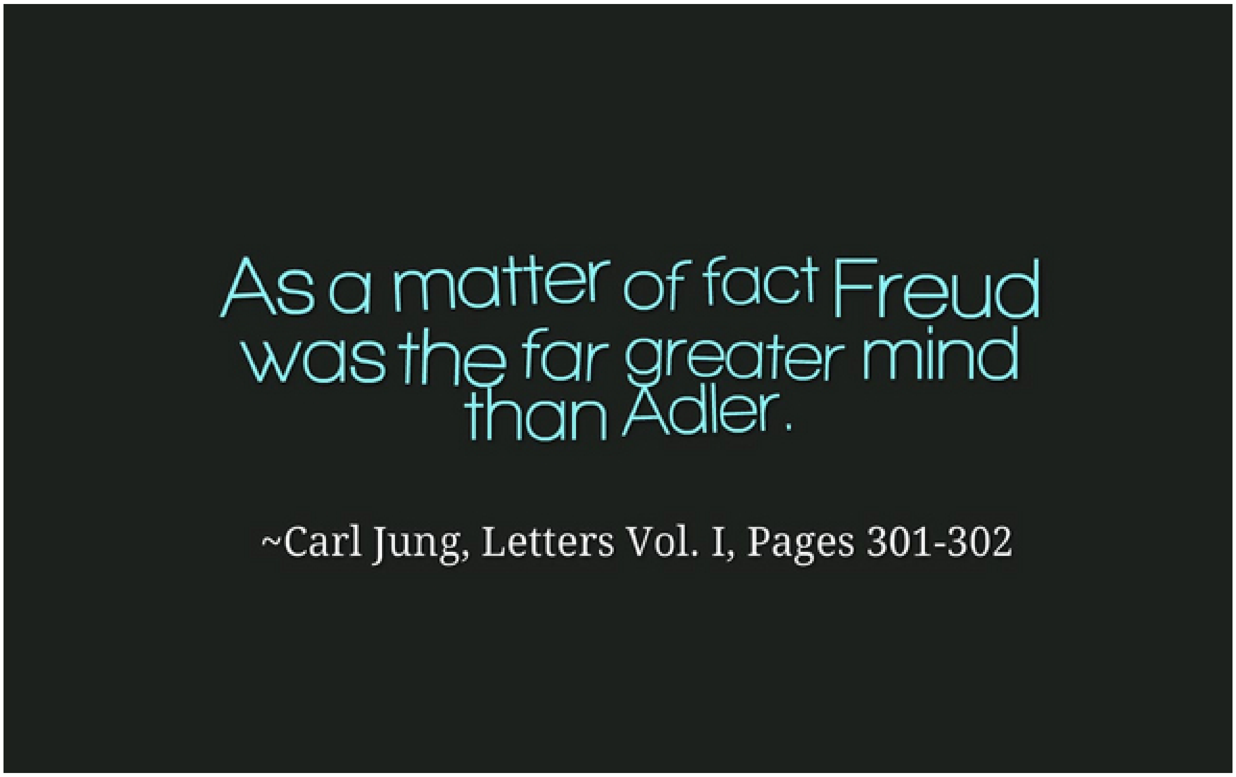
~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

Adler, I suppose, was personally never a real introvert, therefore as soon as he had a certain success he began to develop an extraverted behaviour. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

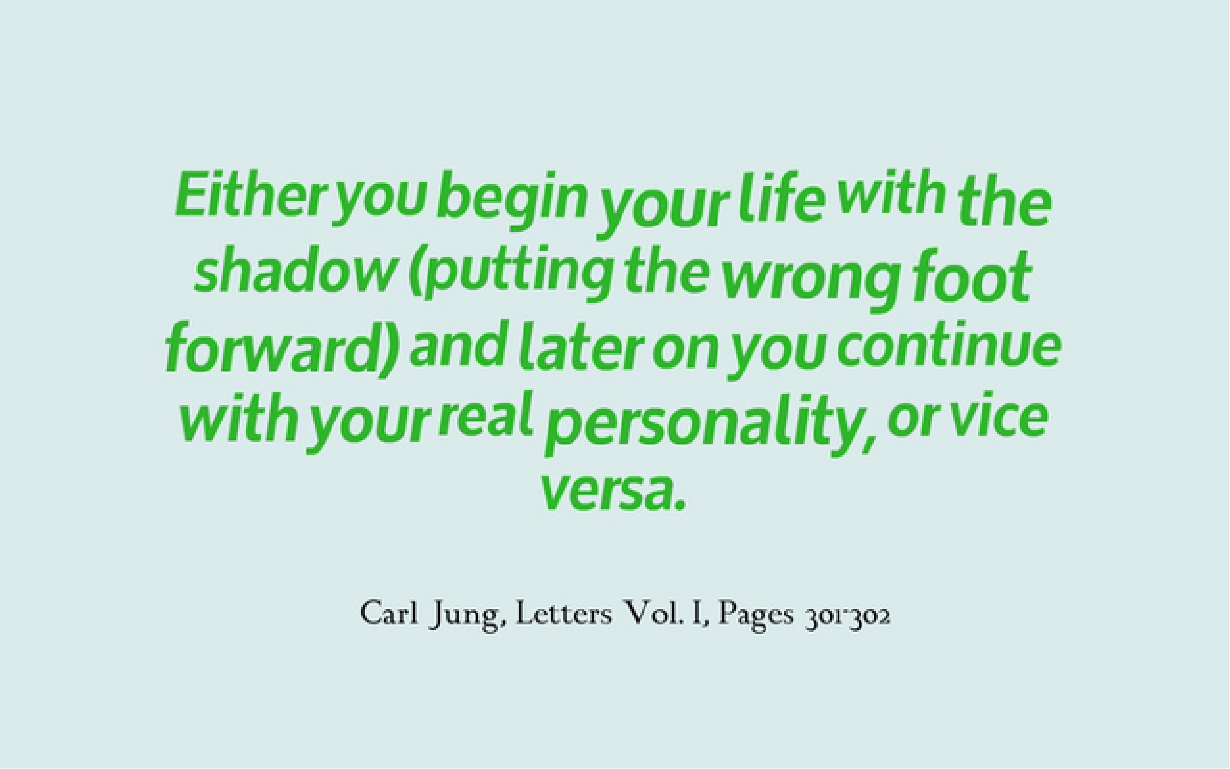


As a matter of fact Freud was the far greater mind than Adler.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

As a matter of fact Freud was the far greater mind than Adler. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

[17]

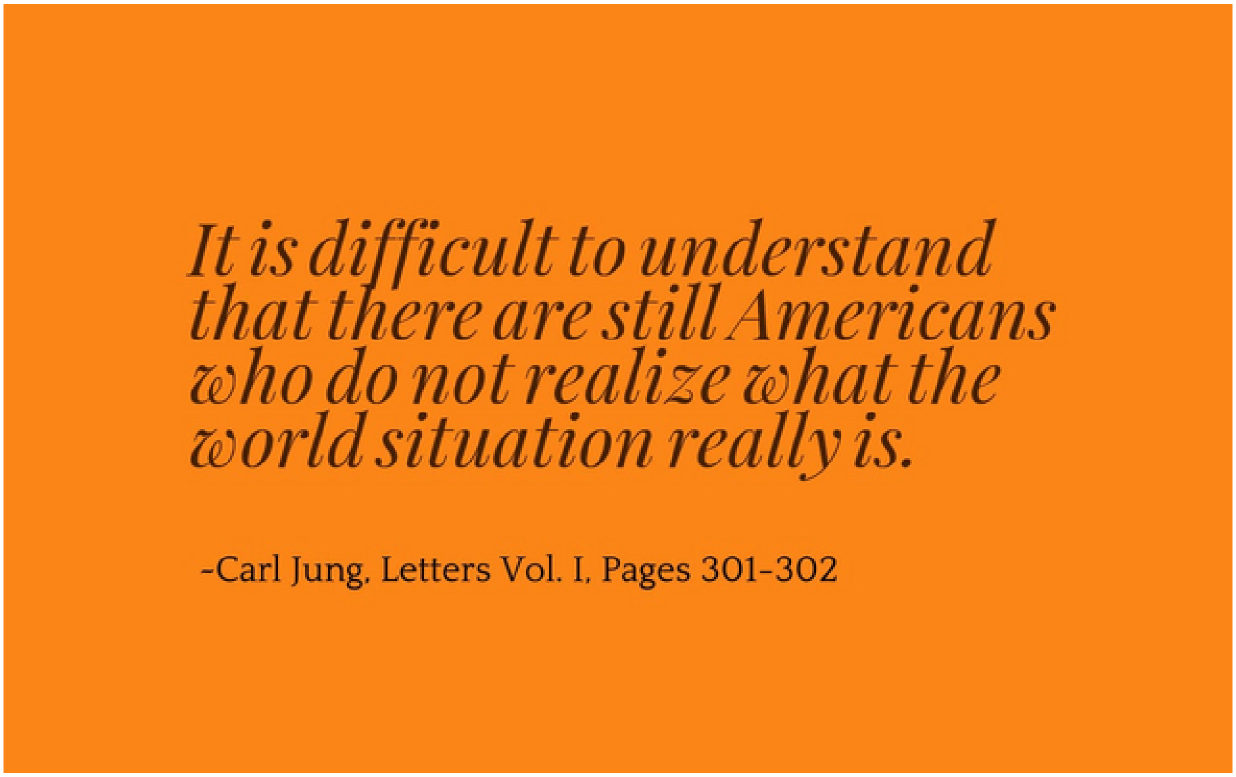


Either you begin your life with the shadow (putting the wrong foot forward) and later on you continue with your real personality, or vice versa.

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

Either you begin your life with the shadow (putting the wrong foot forward) and later on you continue with your real personality, or vice versa. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

[18]

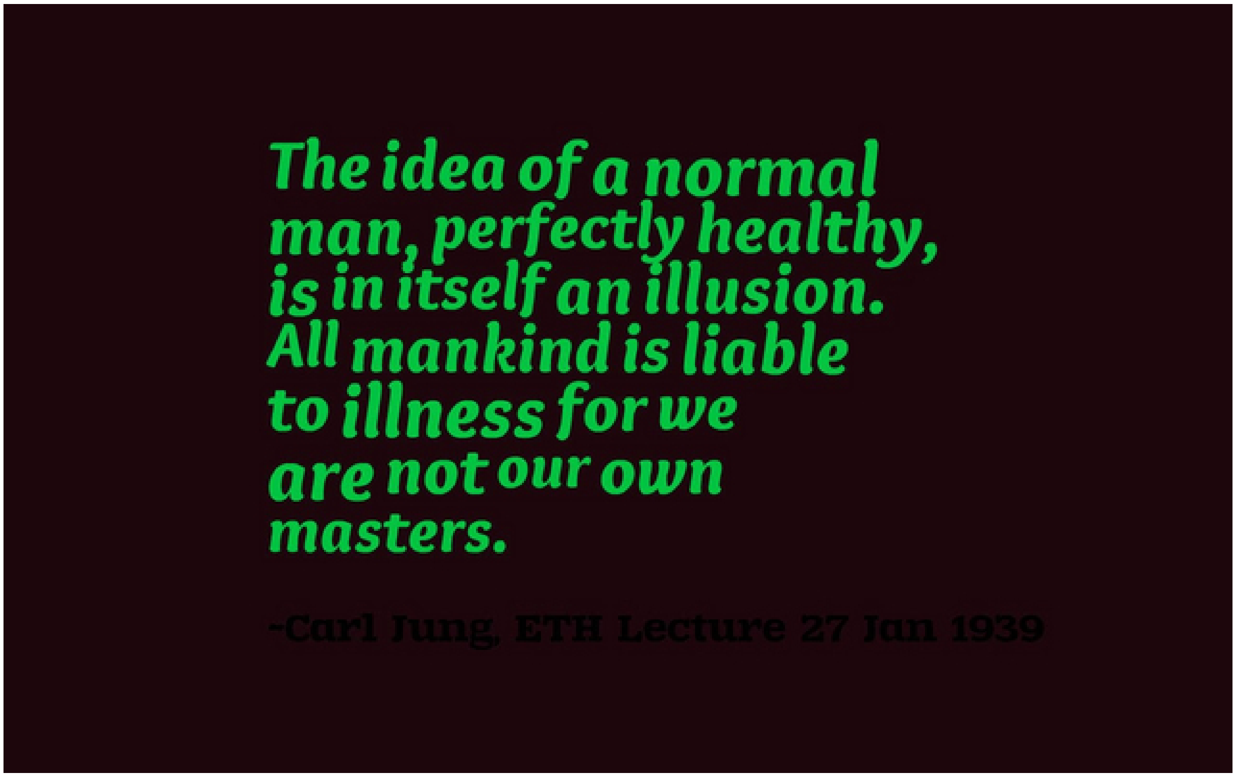


It is difficult to understand that there are still Americans who do not realize what the world situation really is.

-Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

It is difficult to understand that there are still Americans who do not realize what the world situation really is. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 301-302

[19]



The idea of a normal man, perfectly healthy, is in itself an illusion. All mankind is liable to illness for we are not our own masters.

-Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

The idea of a normal man, perfectly healthy, is in itself an illusion. All mankind is liable to illness for we are not our own masters. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

We have our bete noire and say with the old Pharisee:
God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are." We don't want to know that we are the other men.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

We have our bete noire and say with the old Pharisee: "God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are." We don't want to know that we are the "other men." Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

IT IS A GREAT BLESSING FOR MANKIND WHEN THE SOUL IS CONTAINED IN THE DOGMA AND THERE IS ALWAYS A GREAT DEAL OF MISERY WHEN THIS IS NOT THE CASE.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

It is a great blessing for mankind when the soul is contained in the dogma and there is always a great deal of misery when this is not the case. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

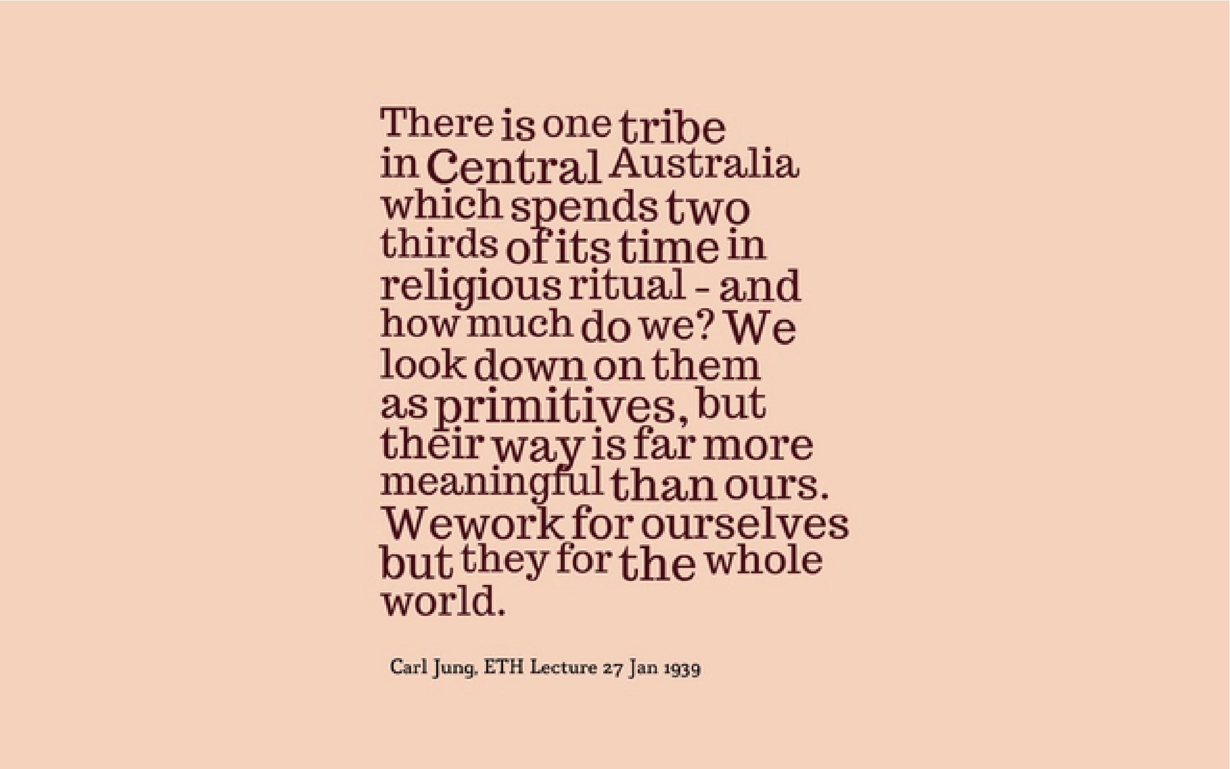
Where there are no forms and ceremonies, rites in which they can express their souls, people become moody and caught in conflicts.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

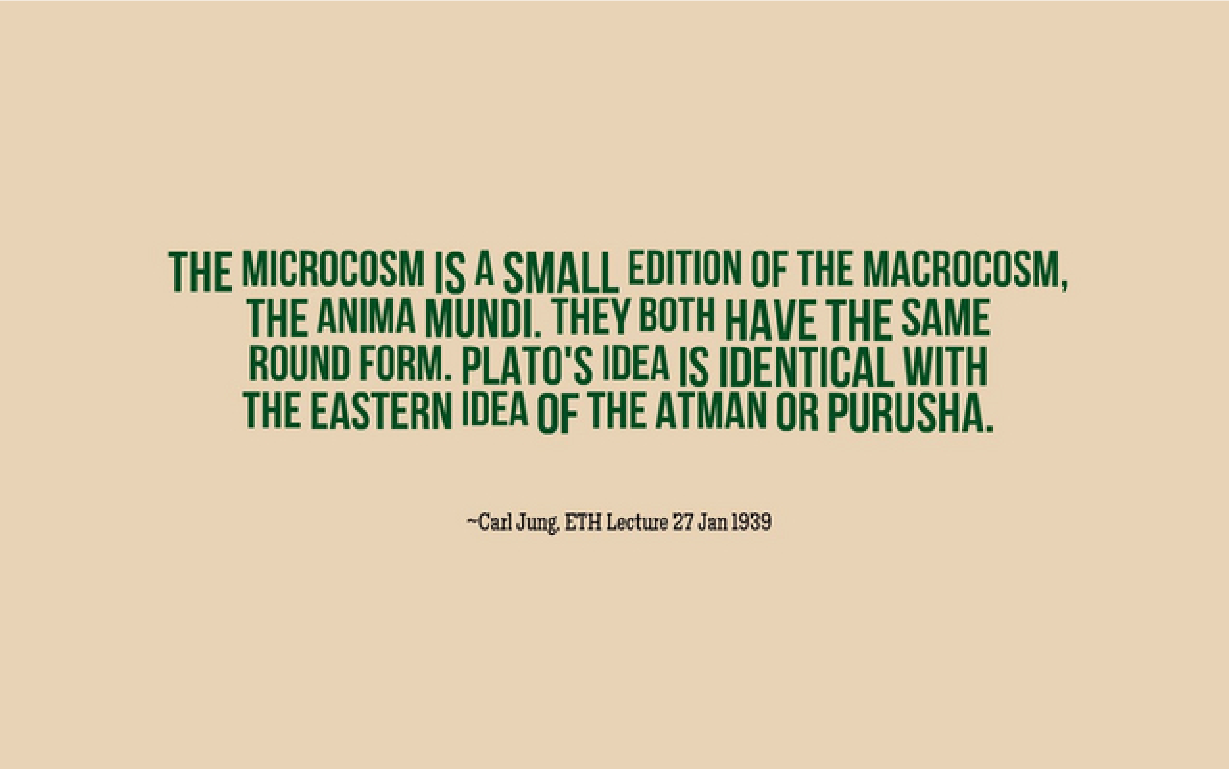
Where there are no forms and ceremonies, rites in which they can express their souls, people become moody and caught in conflicts. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 January 1939



There is one tribe in Central Australia which spends two thirds of its time in religious ritual - and how much do we? We look down on them as primitives, but their way is far more meaningful than ours. Wework for ourselves but they for the whole world.

Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

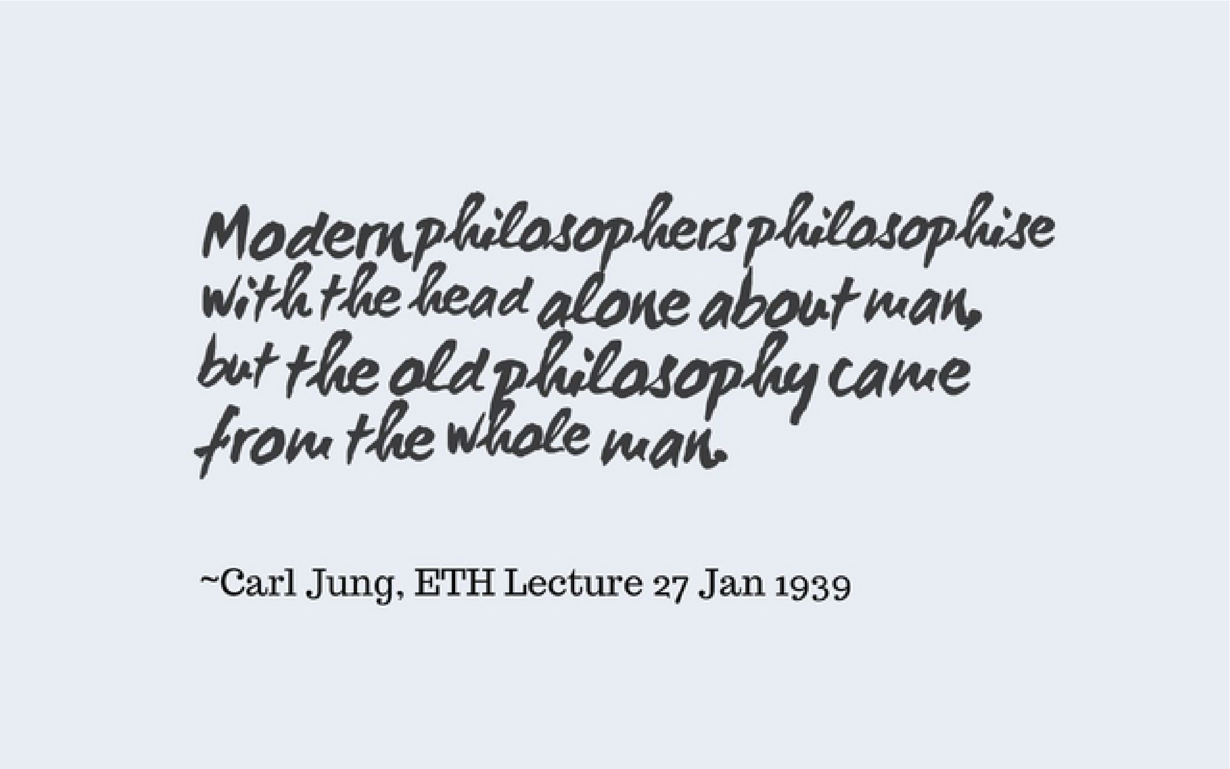
There is one tribe in Central Australia which spends two thirds of its time in religious ritual - and how much do we? We look down on them as primitives, but their way is far more meaningful than ours. We work for ourselves but they for the whole world. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 January 1939



THE MICROCOSM IS A SMALL EDITION OF THE MACROCOSM, THE ANIMA MUNDI. THEY BOTH HAVE THE SAME ROUND FORM. PLATO'S IDEA IS IDENTICAL WITH THE EASTERN IDEA OF THE ATMAN OR PURUSHA.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

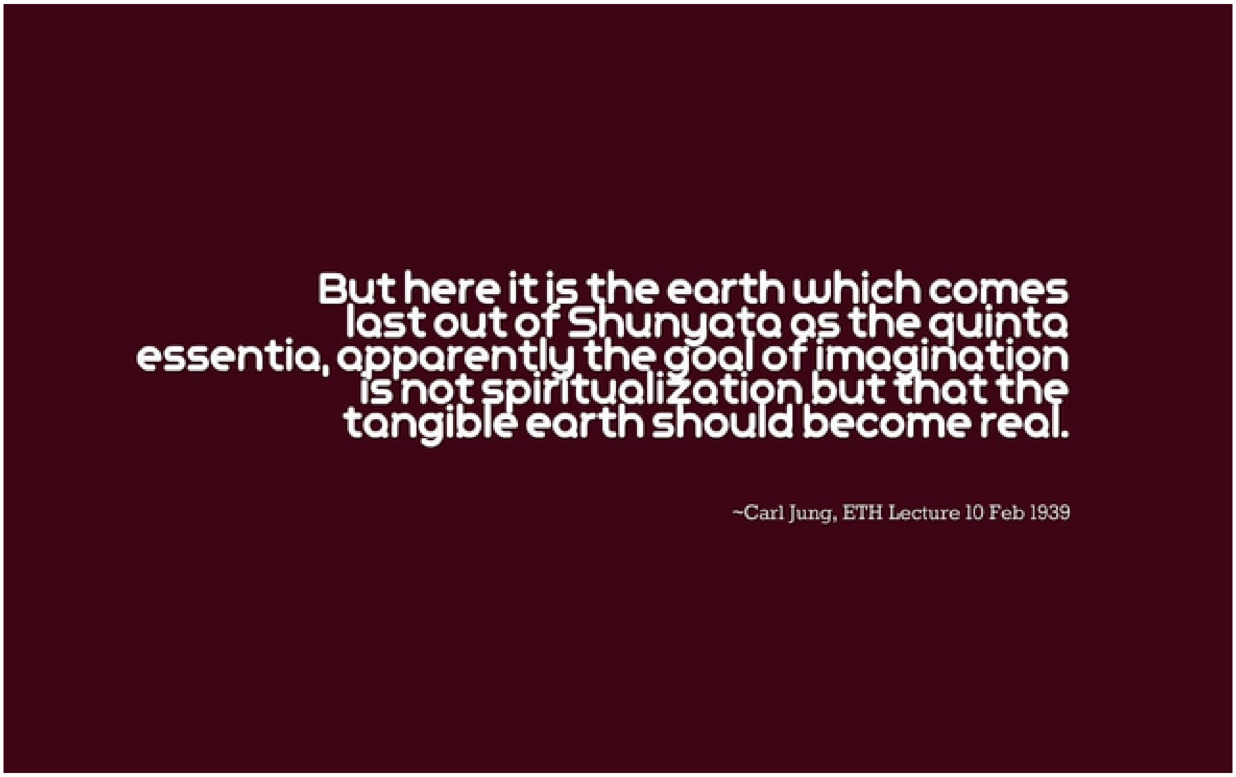
The microcosm is a small edition of the macrocosm, the anima mundi. They both have the same round form. Plato’s idea is identical with the eastern idea of the Atman or Purusha. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3 Feb 1939



Modern philosophers philosophise with the head alone about man, but the old philosophy came from the whole man.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 27 Jan 1939

Modern philosophers philosophise with the head alone about man, but the old philosophy came from the whole man. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 3 Feb 1939



But here it is the earth which comes last out of Shunyata as the quinta essentia, apparently the goal of imagination is not spiritualization but that the tangible earth should become real.

~Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 10 Feb 1939

But here it is the earth which comes last out of Shunyata as the quinta essentia, apparently the goal of imagination is not spiritualization but that the tangible earth should become real. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 10th Feb 1939

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/
2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/
4. Lance S. Owen Gnosis Archive http://gnosis.org/welcome.html

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/c6be5-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/4d505-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/4fdf1-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/a0597-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/d9954-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/be01f-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/1d679-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/aadfb-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/94421-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/b6a73-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/972e4-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/e19cd-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/38f10-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/769fe-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/37598-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/6850d-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/54fdf-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/024d6-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/a4f94-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/36349-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/066e9-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/c6d6a-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/47680-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/9ae78-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/e2079-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/d9c9b-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung: Introduction to Toni Wolff’s “Studies in Jungian Psychology” (2019-12-06 06:07)

FIGURE 82
Toni Wolff working,
ca. 1930s
Courtesy of the Naeff family archives.

Carl Jung: Introduction to Toni Wolff’s “Studies in Jungian Psychology”

In writing this introduction I am discharging a debt of thanks: the author of the essays printed in this volume was my friend and collaborator for more than forty years, until her untimely death in 1953, at the age of sixty-five.

She took an active part in all phases of the development of analytical psychology, and to her we owe the expression "complex psychology" as a designation for this field of research.

Her collaboration was not confined to working out practical methods of analysis and to the task of theoretical formulation, both of which have found visible expression in the published material.

She also helped me to carry out, over a period of forty years, a "silent experiment" in group psychology, an experiment which constitutes the life of the Psychological Club in Zurich.

This small group of thirty to seventy members was founded in 1916, and it owes its existence to the realization that analytical treatment (including the "psychoanalytic" method) is a dialectical process between two individuals, and therefore gives results which are necessarily onesided from the collective and social point of view.

The individual personality of the analyst represents only one of the infinite possibilities of adaptation which life offers as well as demands.

This should not be taken to mean that analysis is a discussion between two individuals who are, at bottom, hopelessly incommensurable, or is nothing more than an approximation between them.

Human personality is certainly not individual only, it is also collective, and to such a degree that the individual is rather like an underprivileged minority.

Every so-called normal person represents the species Homo sapiens and can therefore be regarded as the measure of things human, or as a general example of human behaviour.

For this reason, a large part of the analytical work takes place on levels which are common to all, or at any rate most, individuals, and which do not require the discussion of individual differences.

The longer the discussion is intentionally restricted to what is common, collective, and average—that is, to theoretical suppositions—the closer it comes to the danger point where the specifically individual features of the patient are suppressed.

Thanks to her high natural intelligence and quite exceptional psychological insight, the author was one of the first to recognize the extraordinary importance of this psychotherapeutic problem, and devoted herself to it with particular zeal.

For many years she was president of the Club and so had a unique opportunity to collect observations on group psychology.

For in a group we see operating all those psychic events which are never constellated by an individual, or may even be unintentionally suppressed.

A male analyst, for example, can never constellate the reactions which a woman would release if she were in his place.

These modes of behaviour therefore remain latent; or if they appear at all, there is no critical eye to separate the wheat from the chaff.

At best they remain hanging in mid-air as theoretical speculations; they are not experienced as realities and so cannot be recognized for what they are.

Only what the analyst has become conscious of through his own experience can become an object for psychological discussion.

Other objects, which may be put up for discussion by the patient should they reach his consciousness, come to grief on the unconsciousness of the analyst at this particular point.

If he can divest himself of his authority, he may be able to compensate for his own defective experience by the experience of another.

But there is always a danger that he will counter the psychological reality by some schematic theorem, because his fear of feeling inferior prevents him from admitting his defect.

This danger is particularly great for the analyst, who is always expected to show authority.

As a result, it happens all too easily that the balance between theoretical prejudice and uncritical acceptance can no longer be preserved, so that the analyst is unable to distinguish between justified and unjustified resistances on the part of his patient.

This problem, a very important one in practice, led the author to pay particular attention to the typical modes of behaviour, especially of women.

As every intelligent person knows, a typology of this sort does not aim in the least at a statistical classification; its purpose is to afford insight into the structure of normal modes of behaviour.

These are typical forms of reaction whose existence is quite justified, and which should not be regarded as pathological merely because the analyst belongs to a different type.

A typology is therefore designed, first and foremost, as an aid to a psychological critique of knowledge.

Empirical psychology is so rich that one can set up hundreds of typological criteria without necessarily endowing any one of them with special significance, unless it happened to be a particularly common and instructive criterion.

The valuable thing here is the critical attempt to prevent oneself from taking one's own prejudices as the criterion of normality.

Unfortunately, this happens only too easily; for instance, extraversion is "normal," but introversion is pathological auto-eroticism.

Her study of the difficulties that arise in a group provided the author with a mass of empirical material of which she made valuable use.

Like the individual, a group is influenced by numerous typical factors, such as the family milieu, society, politics, outlook on life, religion.

The bigger the group, the more the individuals composing it function as a collective entity, which is so powerful that it can reduce individual consciousness to the point of extinction, and it does this the more easily if the individual lacks spiritual possessions of his own with an individual stamp.

The group and what belongs to it cover up the lack of genuine individuality, just as parents act as substitutes for everything lacking in their children. In this respect the group exerts a seductive influence, for nothing is easier than a perseveration of infantile ways or a return to them.

Only the man who knows how to acquire spiritual possessions of his own is proof against this danger.

Group observations have confirmed over and over again that the group subtly entices its members into mutual imitation and dependence, thereby holding out the promise of sparing them a painful confrontation with themselves.

People still do not realize that fate will reach them all the same, if not directly then indirectly.

A State that protects us from everything also takes away from us everything that makes life worth living.

We need not stress the social advantages of living in a group, let alone the necessary and vital protection afforded by society.

They are known to everyone.

On the other hand, nobody likes or dares to mention in so many words the negative effects of group-existence, because this might bring up the frightening problem of self-knowledge and individuation.

In any analytical treatment that seeks to be a psychological process of dialectic between two individuals the odious question is bound to arise: What is mine and what is thine?

The answer to this question necessitates a thorough examination of psychic contents, of meanings and values, on a plane beyond the collective "should" and "must."

A much needed consideration of what is essential to the individual proves to be the first task, for no one can get anywhere near independence unless he is conscious of his own singularity.

Belief in general rules and precepts will never make a man anything more than a collective being, whereas in reality he is an individual different from others and should therefore be in possession of his own individual consciousness.

Without the physical and spiritual possessions that go with this he is in danger of being submerged in the collective.

As this runs counter to the specific, biological urge of man to develop an individually differentiated consciousness, a great variety of injurious effects may be produced.

The more "scientific" our education attempts to be, the more it orients itself by general precepts and thus suppresses the individual development of the child.

One of these general precepts states: "The individuality of the child should be taken into account and protected."

This principle, praiseworthy in itself, is reduced to absurdity in practice if the numerous peculiarities of the child are not adjusted to the values of the collectivity.

One is then protecting and developing merely the peculiarities, without considering whether they will be useful or harmful to the child later on in social life.

He is being robbed of the important experience that peculiarities are not admissible just because he has them.

Their differentiation and evaluation demand so much tact, experience, and sense of values on the part of the educator that the above precept cannot be realized without danger to the pupil.

It is very likely that too general an application of the principle will produce unadapted individualists rather than individuals consciousness.

The peculiar nature of discussions of this kind, which the layman often finds very puzzling, is due to the fact that they are not philosophical in the conventional sense, but are psychological.

That is to say, they are concerned with the affects, emotions, and values of individuals, and their subject matter is taken not from the abstract world of concepts but from everyday life, from the experiences, dreams, and fantasies of individual human beings.

The discussion tries to bring order into this chaos of disconnected and uncomprehended details by examining their unknown connections with the human mind in general in the light of consciousness, so far as this is possible with the help of understanding and of our present means of communication.

This therapeutic activity is naturallnot philosophy in the current sense of the word, even though those who are not familiar with the psychological material always make the mistake of confusing purely empirical and pragmatic terms with philosophical concepts, or of taking them as metaphysical assertions.

For anyone who knows the material these essays are uncommonly instructive and stimulating.

They will tell the educated layman many things about which the learned specialists have little to say.

They are answers to questions which affect the psyche of our contemporaries far more closely than those given by the academic specialist.

Though the latter would certainly do well, in the interests of scientific objectivity, to exclude from his work all feeling-values, and, in particular, all subjective reactions and excursions into neighbouring territories in which he himself is a layman, the psychologist is ill-advised to disregard the emotional connections and analogies which are the essence of psychic life.

In order to sketch an adequate picture of psychic events, and of the manifold connections between them, he must stress just those aspects which the specialist anxiously excludes from his field of study.

An empirical psychology of complex phenomena therefore occupies a difficult position in the world of specialism.

Whereas the specialist, guided by general principles, pushes forward to an ever more exact understanding of the smallest details, the empirical psychologist has to start from a very limited field in which he himself is the only expert—an expert, that is to say, in his personal knowledge of himself.

But even here he will find it exceedingly difficult to rid himself of the prejudice that what he is practising is some kind of "objective psychology."

If he really has any talent in this respect, he will soon discover that he is surrounded by a number of similar experts who all have assumptions of their own and, like him, are inclined to regard their personal prejudices as generally valid psychological knowledge.

Empirical knowledge, however, is composed of numerous individual observations by numerous individual observers, who have previously assured themselves of the identity of their methods of observation as well as of the objects observed.

Because complex psychic phenomena are amenable to experimental methods only in minimal degree, we have to depend on descriptions of them, and can attempt to interpret them only by means of amplification and comparison.

This procedure is the exact opposite of what the specialist is at pains to achieve.

He wants to know the object in its truest essence and in all its peculiarity; whereas the comparative psychologist, in order to understand its irrational and apparently accidental details, must not fight shy even of the most obvious and superficial analogies, however fortuitous they may seem, because they serve as bridges for psychic associations.

Just as he horrifies the philosopher who has no interest in psychology by what must seem to him a special brand of inferior philosophy, so he annoys the scientific specialist unacquainted with psychotherapeutic problems by the inexactitude and superficiality of his "fantastic" analogies.

What then must he expect of the theologian, whose propositions he blasphemously regards as "statements" of the psyche, i.e., as psychic products, reducing them to the same level as the statements of other religions, which are one and all erroneous?

Psychological treatment, taken in its widest sense, seeks the values that satisfy the psychic needs of contemporary man, so that he shall not fall victim to the destructive influence of mass psychology.

Words like "should" and "must" are useless remedies that have long since lost their efficacy.

In order to find a proper remedy we need a knowledge of the real and whole man, and this is not possible without taking account of all those spheres of knowledge which immediately affect him and his conduct of life.

Several of the essays in this volume bear witness to the efforts which the author has made in this regard.

They are visible examples of the endeavour of complex psychology to fill the gap which the invasion of the natural sciences has created in the higher education of man. Carl Jung, CW 10, Pages 469-475

Carl Jung on the “Subjective." (2019-12-06 11:36)

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925

Lecture 8

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Harding's question: "In your talk last time about art you used the term 'subjective.'

There have been discussions between several of us in the group as to the significance of that term, and there seem to be as many views as there are disputants.

In particular there seems to be a widespread idea that subjective is a term that can only be applied to the introvert, and on the other hand that an introvert cannot possess a concrete personality.

Will you elucidate this for us?"

Dr. Jung: "Subjective" denotes in the first place just what you know it does, that is, the view of a given individual which is special to him and different from that of any other individual.

In this sense it is often used as a criticism of an attitude, that is, as meaning that a person is not taking a given thing objectively, or "as it really is," as we say.

But, of course, it need not be a reproach to say that an opinion is subjective.

It might be that what is wanted is the particular individual’s personal opinion.

Then the term “subjective” also means an argument coming from the subject, but nonetheless an object.

In every person there are certain collective ideas—such, for example, as the Darwinian theory—which are quite objective.

They in no sense belong to the subject simply because they are to be found in his mind.

Again there are certain unconscious products which people like to think of as establishing forever the uniqueness of their individualities, but which in reality are shared by all and are, by reason of this collective quality, objects vis-à-visthe subject’s mind.

It must of course be remembered that there is no objective statement that is not subjective to a certain extent.

That is, it has undergone a certain degree of refraction by reason of its passage through the subject’s mind.

This was never so clear to me as when I was writing the Types.

I found it well-nigh impossible to reduce the refraction to the desired minimum.

The minute a thing goes into language it is ipso facto conditioned in its objectivity.

Take for example a German writing about feeling: It is a peculiarity of the German language that it does not distinguish between “sensation” and “feeling” [Empfindung] as do English and French.

Therefore, a German writing about feeling is quite likely to say sensation instead of feeling and therefore to give his idea a slant absolutely peculiar to himself.

But again, take the German word Wirklichkeit, “reality.”

The Latin word from which “reality” is derived is res, literally “thing.”

But the German translates “thing-reality” as Dinglichkeit, and Wirklichkeit means to him a special kind of reality, namely the reality of working, of validity in life.

It would lead us into a terrible entanglement of subtleties if we traced out the further connotations included in these words, but you can see what a serious handicap language is when it comes to thoroughgoing objectivity.

Thus the images in our mind tend to form prejudices, of a greater or less rigidity to be sure, but nevertheless prejudices from which we can never be wholly free.

These preexisting mental images into contact with which the stream of our personal experience comes, I call the subjective factor.

Our mental processes cannot escape the intermingling with these preexisting images, so it is easy to see why a new idea always has to fight for its life against these ancestral predispositions.

You can tell a man a new idea and he says, “Yes, of course,” and you are pleased with his understanding, but the chances are he has taken the idea and twisted every spark of life out of it in order to make it fit better the morgue of which his own mind consists; you finish by wishing you had never attempted to launch the idea.

The subjective factor, then, in this second sense, is held to be made up of objective material, namely ancestral views.

The artist returns to these ancestral views.

He leaves the outer object and returns to the object as seen by his mind rather than as seen by his senses.

Does this answer your question, Dr. Harding?

Dr. Harding: Yes, but I would like it if you would make a closer connection between “subjective” and introversion and extraversion.

Dr. Jung: The extravert bases himself on the value of the outer object, the introvert on that of the inner object.

The extravert is controlled by his relation to the thing without, the introvert by his relation to the thing within.

Both of these attitudes grow out of attitudes to be found among primitive peoples, because to the primitive the inner and the outer tend to form one experience.

The primitive is quite sure that he has both inner and outer value because it does not occur to him to distinguish between the two.

The ancient gods were exteriorized emotions personified.

It is only through consciousness that the discrimination between inner and outer experience is achieved, and only by consciousness that a man can know he is connected with the outer object to the neglect of the inner and vice versa.

The conscious extravert values his connection with the outer object and fears his own inner self.

The introvert has no fear of himself, but great fear of the object, which he comes to endow with extraordinary terrors.

You remember the story of Alcibiades and Socrates.

Alcibiades was due to make a public speech and came and told Socrates that he had failed to do it through fear of the audience.

Socrates led him about Athens, and coming first to a blacksmith said, “Do you know this man?” “Yes.”

“Do you fear him?” “No.”

Then he took him to a shoemaker and asked the same questions, and again Alcibiades had no fear.

“These,” said Socrates, “are just the men before whom you were afraid to speak.”

But it is ordinarily that way for the introvert, the crowd heaping itself up into a monster before him.

Sometimes he is able to compensate and to develop a very forceful manner in order to subdue the monster.

The fear the introvert feels rests on the unconscious assumption that the object is too much animated, and this is a part of the ancient belief in magic.

The extravert, on the other hand, behaves as if the world were a lovely family.

He does not project terrors into the object, but is quite at home with it.

But to show you the way he feels about himself, I can tell you of a patient I had who was wearing himself out with extravagant extraversion.

I told him he must take an hour apart each day when he would be quite by himself.

He said it would be fine to have some music with his wife in the evening.

“No,” I said, “that is not it, you must be by yourself.”

“To read, you mean?”

“No, to do nothing but think.”

“Not for anything in the world,” he said.

“That leads to straight-out melancholia.”

Dr. de Angulo: If you were told that a person had an extraverted attitude toward the material of the collective unconscious, what would you take it to mean?

Dr. Jung: That is difficult to say. What do you think it means?

Dr. de Angulo: I don’t know what it means.

Dr. Jung: In the case of the introvert his attitude toward his collective images is that of the extravert toward the outside world.

He lives through them as in a romance or adventure.

The extravert, on the other hand, takes his unconscious material in an introverted.

This anecdote, as related, is not found in the literature.

This way, that is, with extreme caution and with many incantations to exorcise the inner power the object exercises over him.

The extravert, seeing a green spot, jumps in and gets up to his neck in a swamp, but pulls out, shakes himself, and goes merrily on his way.

If the introvert does that he is almost incapacitated for taking a walk ever again and blames everything in heaven and on the earth for his mistake.

But if the swamp is in himself, he can jump in and come out unharmed, while to the extravert the swamp within himself is to be avoided at all costs.

You recall the dream I told you last time in which Siegfried was killed. In this dream something was fulfilled that had been suggested in the cave.

The slain hero was there and here the murder is accomplished, so we can say of the dream that it is an elaboration of the vision in the cave.

Of course, after such an event as the murder of the hero, things can be expected to happen.

Siegfried stands for the ideal, and the killing of the ideal is the killing of the superior function, for it is the conquering function.

A man with brains uses his intellect as his foremost tool, and this is truly an ideal; nor would he be adapted were this ideal not in harmony with other people's ideals of intellect.

When the intellect or any superior function is pushed that far, it becomes bloodless and takes on an airy, gas-like character.

Because it is a generally valid ideal, one thinks one has accomplished something very wonderful in differentiating a function to that extent, but in reality it is a very mechanical affair.

Take an intellectual man and confront him with a woman who is a highly differentiated feeling type and there is a mutual disappointment, each finding the other empty and dry.

Impersonal feeling and thinking are very relativistic.

When we look at them they seem something extraordinary, whereas in reality they are dead, because the personal unconscious is seeking to return to a more complete life away from the extreme differentiation of one function.

So the primitive functions begin to increase.

We cannot get anywhere in analysis with thinking until it reaches its antinomy—that is, something is and is not true at one and the same time.

The same is true with feeling, and a differentiated feeling type must reach the point where the thing most loved is the thing most hated, before refuge will be sought in another function.

In the previous vision in the cave, the black scarab came after the fair-haired hero.

The latter can be taken as the sun of the day, that is, the superior function.

After he goes comes black night, which then gives birth to a new sun.

The thing that appears should be in our expectation a new hero, but in reality it is a midnight sun.

This idea of the sun of the day having its opposite in the night is an archetypal idea.

Pythagoras, for example, thought that the earth had a twin.

The idea also comes out in an anonymous book that was published during the war.

This book was called Peter Blobbs—Real Dreams, and the first dream, the one in which the midnight sun analogy appears, is called "The Night of the Swinging Censer."

The dreamer is in an old cathedral which slowly fills with people.

It is sunset time or after. In the middle of the cathedral there hangs a censer which is swinging to and fro.

The more the night advances, the stronger grow the oscillations, and at the same time the church fills with hundreds of people clad in the costumes of all times and of all centuries.

even the primitives come in.

As the church fills, the censer swings more and more and glows more brightly.

At midnight the maximum is reached, and towards morning it decreases; with sunrise it comes to a standstill.

This is an extremely fine demonstration of the movement of the unconscious.

As day fades the unconscious is activated, and by midnight the censer is in full blaze, but lighting up the past.

As the dynamic principle increases in power, and the further back we go, the more are we overcome by the unconscious.

Lunatics go furthest back to a strange psychological state where they cannot understand their ideas, nor are they able to make them understood by others.

Sometimes, if it is in any way possible for a supposedly insane man to get his ideas understood, he can get well from the very strangest aberrations.

Once a young Swiss man tried to jump into the carriage of the Empress of Germany with a bouquet of flowers.

As he did so, he shouted out, "Les couleurs Suisses pour l'Impératrice!"

His history was this:

He was quite mad for a time and, identifying himself with Rousseau, went to the Isle Rousseau and wrote a book of five thousand pages.

While he was there on the Isle Rousseau, a German couple came there to live.

The wife thought herself misunderstood and she and the young Swiss fell in love with each other.

Then she could not stand him and fled to Berlin, being shortly followed by him.

He had to look for her among the imperial family, for of course in no lesser place was she to be found, and when he gave the bouquet to the Empress, it was to his mother-in-law to be.

I went very deeply into his analysis and found all his ideas to be in a perfectly logical sequence.

He did not know why he should be considered insane, and he was certain that if the professors understood they would not lock him up.

He has succeeded in making me understand him and finally I got his release.

About two years ago I got a letter from him in America expressing his gratitude to me.

He had married and was bringing up a family with success, and had had no return of his trouble.

Because I had been able to follow him in his ideas, it was possible for him to work over from what to all intents and purposes seemed insanity, to reality.

Later on I saw the same thing happen in other cases.

The more the dynamic principle gets into full swing, the greater is the power gained by the unconscious until the condition of dementia praecox may ensue.

The dream of the censer showed very beautifully the slow advance of power as the night advanced.

The flaming censer is analogous to the midnight sun, which becomes incandescent when the day sun, or superior function, goes out.

Why doesn’t the inferior function come up at once?

The inferior function is hooked up with the collective unconscious and has to come up first in the collective fantasies, which of course, in their first aspect, do not seem to be collective.

One thinks of them as quite unique, and the people who have them are shy and withdrawn, and often suspicious, like people who hide a great secret.

From this state to that of God-almightiness is but a step.

The person becomes more and more identical with the collective unconscious.

The next thing that happened to me was another fantastic vision.

I used the same technique of the descent, but this time I went much deeper.

The first time I should say I reached a depth of about one thousand feet, but this time it was a cosmic depth.

It was like going to the moon, or like the feeling of a descent into empty space.

First the picture was of a crater, or a ring-chain of mountains, and my feeling association was that of one dead, as if oneself were a victim.

It was the mood of the land of the hereafter.

I could see two people, an old man with a white beard and a young girl who was very beautiful.

I assumed them to be real and listened to what they were saying.

The old man said he was Elijah and I was quite shocked, but she was even more upsetting because she was Salome.

I said to myself that there was a queer mixture: Salome and Elijah, but Elijah assured me that he and Salome had been together since eternity.

This also upset me.

With them was a black snake who had an affinity for me.

I stuck to Elijah as being the most reasonable of the lot, for he seemed to have a mind.

I was exceedingly doubtful about Salome.

We had a long conversation then but I did not understand it.

Of course I thought of the fact of my father being a clergyman as being the explanation of my having figures like this.

How about this old man then?

Salome was not to be touched upon.

It was only much later that I found her association with Elijah quite natural.

Whenever you take journeys like this you find a young girl with an old man, and many examples of these two figures are to be found in books familiar to you, such as those of Melville and Rider Haggard.

In the Gnostic tradition it is said that Simon Magus always went about with a young girl whom he had found in a brothel.

She was named Helen and was supposed to be a reincarnation of Helen of Troy.

Then there are Kundry and Klingsor.

There is a book by a monk of the fifteenth century, F. Colonna, 1450, called Hypnerotomachia (Dream-love-conflict), in which the same story ecurs.

Besides those examples I have given of Haggard and Melville, there are the books of Meyrink.   Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar on Analytical Psychology, Pages 64-70

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/ad50f-1parcival.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+1925&qid=1575657524&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: ... a certain kind of resistance has an almost murderous effect... (2019-12-07 04:06)

[1]

[2]Letters of C. G. Jung: Volume 2, 1951-1961

Dear Mrs. C ., 3 May 1960

I have read your letter with great interest.

It is true that a certain kind of resistance has an almost murderous effect, as if it were a physical assault.

It is even as if the vehemence of the attack were not wholly in the consciousness of the aggressor, but rather in the air round him.

Thus it is not properly directed, and therefore anybody getting into this atmosphere will undergo its violent effect.

If he happens to be weakened he will get injured, while the stronger one will be able to deflect the blow, which he can do more successfully if somebody is present who offers a sort of safety-valve by which the intensity of the evil force can escape.

Such an event points to your strength, which seems to me enough to cope with unusual situations.

If wisely used, it will be a strong defense, but don't assume that it is your personal property, being rather a grace than anything else.

My best wishes,

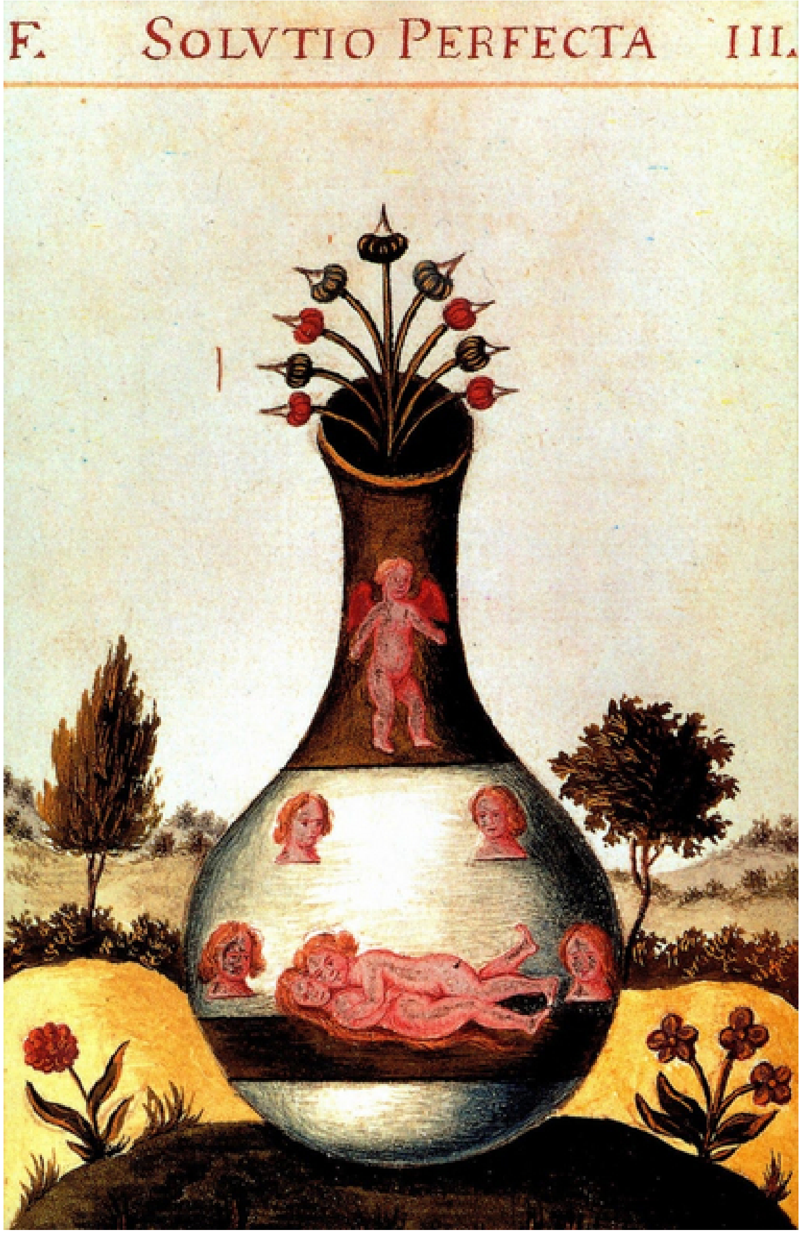
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 555-556

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d6bad-1grace.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Letters-C-G-Jung-1951-1961/dp/0415051711/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2C0H09D9NX8HP&keywords=jung+letters+volume+2&qid=1575710850&sprefix=jung+letters`

Carl Jung and "...a content emerges from within quite spontaneously, without causal involvement of the environment." (2019-12-07 04:14)

[1]



F. SOLVTIO PERFECTA III.

[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

Professor Jung:

I am thinking of something else, namely, of cases in which a content emerges from within quite spontaneously, without causal involvement of the environment.

Participant: Could it be a psychic inclusion?

Professor Jung:

Yes, that's what I mean.

I am calling this a psychic teratoma. This is a term borrowed from medicine.

There it refers to a kind of tumor as the result of a developmental disorder, and containing parts of a twin, for example, hair, teeth, finger parts, an eye, and so on. Teratomas are to be conceived of as an incomplete development of a fetus that is included in the other, fully developing twin.

Something analogous exists in the psychic realm too; though one can't talk of a psychic twin, but rather of an encapsulated entity of inheritance.

You all know what an entity of inheritance is, don't you?

You know, for instance, the peculiarity of the lower lip in the Habsburg family, although it has nothing to do with a teratoma.

Now, if an entity of inheritance simply grows along unbeknownst to the individual, then we are dealing with a kind of teratoma.

It is like the inclusion of something alien that is not properly connected to the surrounding environment.

This creates a character who, on the one hand, may have a normal disposition, but in whom, on the other, something is hidden that doesn't want at all to connect with the rest of the person.

It's not always easy to identify a teratoma; when folks say, for instance, "Now that's a very nice guy; unfortunately he's in herited that particular family trait that ruins his whole life," there needn't necessarily be a teratoma present, but it may point to some manifest feature, such as mendacity, alcoholism, or the like.

If something completely incommensurable is enclosed in the character, however, something that in no way would fit the character or could be derived from his mentality, then we can assume the existence of a teratoma.

When this part of the soul becomes conscious it can cause immense disturbance.

That is why one may touch this encapsulated world only with utmost caution, because otherwise there is the danger that all of a sudden a second personality erupts.

Such cases can be observed in the mentally insane.

Do you think that the present case could point to such a teratoma?

Participant: No, it wouldn't manifest itself as such a general symbol.

Professor Jung:

Quite right.

As I described it, the characteristic feature of the teratoma lies in the fact that it is a pathologically grotesque phenomenon, for example, consisting of only one eye, or two teeth, and so on.

The snake in our dream has no such pathological character at all, but is a general symbol.

So, by no means is it a teratoma.

What then can, on the contrary, be concluded from this universal symbol?

Participant: That the child is not abnormal.

Professor Jung:

Yes, that she is quite normal overall.

Only the facts of concretism and the force personified in the snake are striking, both being strongly accentuated.

So where must we locate the reason for the split?

Participant: In environmental influences.

Professor Jung:

Yes, very probably there must exist parental influences, affecting an in itself normal disposition of the child, and causing there a split that is an adequate answer to the situation at home.

The cause of the split, with which we are obviously dealing here, is thus clarified.

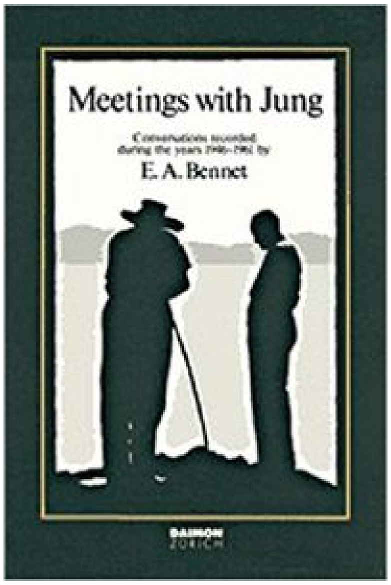
We now arrive at the question: "How should we conceive the character of the split?"

Naturally, such a disturbance affects the child's whole behavior.

Don't forget that this anxiety-triggering figure is very dynamic and contains very much energy. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Pages 253-254.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/89a73-homunculus.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1575710400&sr=8-1`

E.A. Bennet: He [Jung] told me of the stone he had just carved. (2019-12-07 04:20)



Meetings with Jung
Conversations recorded during the years 1946-1961 by
E. A. Bennet
DAIMON
ZÜRICH

[1]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Bollingen, 20th June 1951

We sat in the alcove on the terrace under the canvas cover.

As before, C.G. was in country attire, his boots laced with string to just below the knee, drill trousers shoved into them; apron hung round his neck and tucked to one side, and a leather coat with a jumper inside, and an old hat.

He makes an impressive figure.

He told me of the stone he had just carved.

It stands on a pedestal at the side of the house, near the new wall which was being built when I was here last year.

The stone was brought from the quarry on the opposite side of the lake.

A single piece was needed to finish the wall at one corner and the size was carefully measured.

When C.G. saw the stone coming in the boat he realised it was not the right size for the wall.

But then his heart leapt – it was a perfect cube! ‘That’s the very thing I want!’

He felt it was miraculous.

He had the stone put in place and has carved three faces of it.

On the front is an inscription in Greek characters and a small figure, a homunculus.

The right face, in Latin, commemorates his seventy-fifth birthday expressing gratitude for all life had given; it is as follows:

Hic lapis exilis extat pretio Quoque vilis. Spernitur a stultis Amatur plus ab edoctis.

In Memoriam Natus Di EIL XXV C.G. Jung Ex gratitudine fecit et posuit MCML

The third face is carved in condensed mediaeval Latin – impossible to read unless one knew the abbreviations.

He learned these, he said, in order to read certain mediaeval texts.

Then he talked of types, and especially of the functions.

I asked about the correlation of functions or types and neuroses of different kinds.

He said this would be very difficult, for we get introverted hysterics, and we just can’t say why a neurosis is as it is.

Probably there is much in mutation, or in the family pattern of the father or mother; but it seems less probable that it fits in with a special type or function, although this may come into it a bit.

I told him I had been asked to write a brief note about him for the British Medical Journal and he said, ‘Whatever you say make it clear that I have no dogma, I’m still open and haven’t got things fixed.’

He went on to talk of Freud’s insistence on dogma; to him it was absolutely necessary.

C.G. said that Freud did a great work in exposing the working of the mind in repression; but his need to hold to his dogma led him to make everything fit his theories, for instance dreams: if they did not fit in one way then they had to fit in another.

He always treated Freud with respect and called him Professor.

He said Freud had no notion of the anima.

I spoke of archaic ideas and archetypes, and he said certainly Freud had some of these ideas in a partial way, but he made no use of them.

In 1905 he had written to Freud saying that while repression was valuable it did not explain all the facts; there was also the autonomous psyche, the complex, and this acted on its own apart from repression.

Freud did not like the idea of the autonomous psyche, but the complex was a demonstrable fact and it did act on its own.

22nd June 1951

We spoke of groups, and C.G. said he thought it important in a group of doctors that there should be some lay people also, it keeps a balance.

He went on to talk of interviews.

He regards an interview with a patient as a social occasion; if the person has a neurosis that is something more, but people should be regarded as normal and met socially.

Speaking of intuitive people, he said it was important for them to get down to some task and make it real, ‘Otherwise they are like someone looking at that mountain over there through a telescope, and the next thing is they feel they have been there. But they haven’t, they must do the work.’

I asked about connections between organic disease and neuroses, and he said the links were not clear.

He mentioned that in free association tests breathing was restricted when a complex was touched and that this could be related to TB.

He had often treated people with TB psychologically, and when their breathing improved, became deeper, they got better.

The restriction in breathing affected the apex of the lungs.

Freudians treat the sickness –put the patients on a couch with a rug over them, then they are in the sickness.

He doesn’t believe in using a couch, but looks on patients as healthy people interfered with by their neurosis.

Also if you have a dogma then you always know, everything can be explained.

But if you haven’t then you must find out, and every person is different.

So psychopathology is difficult and you can’t fit people into your preconceived ideas. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 69-75

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_fkmr0_1?keywords=jung+bennet+said&qid=1575731789&sr=8-1-fkmr0`

Carl Jung on the Animus of a Woman (2019-12-07 04:24)

[1]

[2]Mysterium Coniunctionis (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.14)

If, therefore, we speak of the anima of a man, we must logically speak of the animus of a woman, if we are to give the soul of a woman its right name.

Whereas logic and objectivity are usually the predominant features of a man’s outer attitude, or are at least regarded as ideals, in the case of a woman it is feeling.

But in the soul it is the other way round: inwardly it is the man who feels, and the woman who reflects.

Hence a man's greater liability to total despair, while a woman can always find comfort and hope; accordingly a man is more likely to put an end to himself than a woman.

However much a victim of social circumstances a woman may be, as a prostitute for instance, a man is no less a victim of impulses from the unconscious, taking the form of alcoholism and other vices. Carl Jung, CW 6, Psychological Types, Page 469, Para 485.

Statements by men on the subject of female psychology suffer principally from the fact that the projection of unconscious femininity is always strongest where critical judgment is most needed, that is, where a man is involved emotionally.

In the metaphorical descriptions of the alchemists, Luna is primarily a reflection of a man's unconscious femininity, but she is also the principle of the feminine psyche, in the sense that Sol is the principle of a man's.

This is particularly obvious in the astrological interpretation of sun and moon, not to mention the age-old assumptions of mythology.

Alchemy is inconceivable without the influence of her elder sister astrology, and the statements of these three disciplines must be taken into account in any psychological evaluation of the luminaries.

If, then, Luna characterizes the feminine psyche and Sol the masculine, consciousness would be an exclusively masculine affair, which is obviously not the case since woman possesses consciousness too.

But as we have previously identified Sol with consciousness and Luna with the unconscious, we would now be driven to the conclusion that a woman cannot possess a consciousness.

The error in our formulation lies in the fact, firstly, that we equated the moon with the unconscious as such, whereas the equation is true chiefly of the unconscious of a man; and secondly, that we overlooked the fact that the moon is not only dark but is also a giver of light and can therefore represent consciousness.

This is indeed so in the case of woman: her consciousness has a lunar rather than a solar character.

Its light is the "mild" light of the moon, which merges things together rather than separates them.

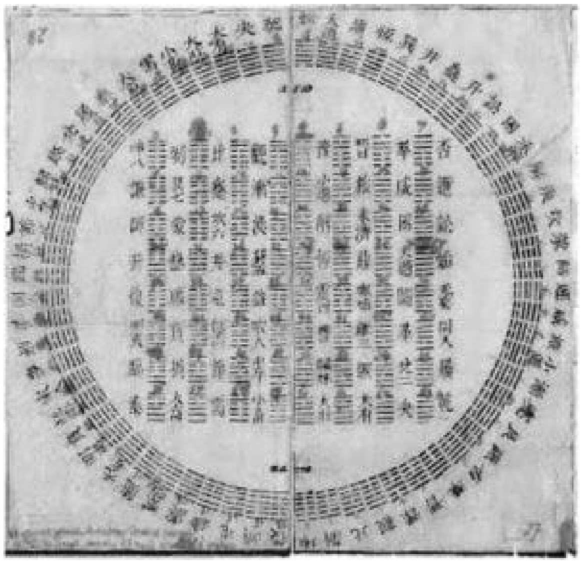
It does not show up objects in all their pitiless discreteness and separateness, like the harsh, glaring light of day, but blends in a deceptive shimmer the near and the far, magically transforming little things into big things, high into low, softening all colour into a bluish haze, and blending the nocturnal landscape into an unsuspected unity. Carl Jung, CW 14, Mysterium Coniunctionis, Page 178, Paras 222-224.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/318d3-1anima.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/Mysterium-Coniunctionis-Collected-Works-Vol-14/dp/0691018162/ref=sr_1_1?crid=T291S9PUFG3C&keywords=jung+mysterium+coniunctionis&qid=15757`

Carl Jung: I owe to Wilhelm the most valuable elucidations... (2019-12-07 05:01)



“I owe to Wilhelm the most valuable elucidations of the complicated problem of the I Ching and also the practical evaluation of the results obtained. . . .

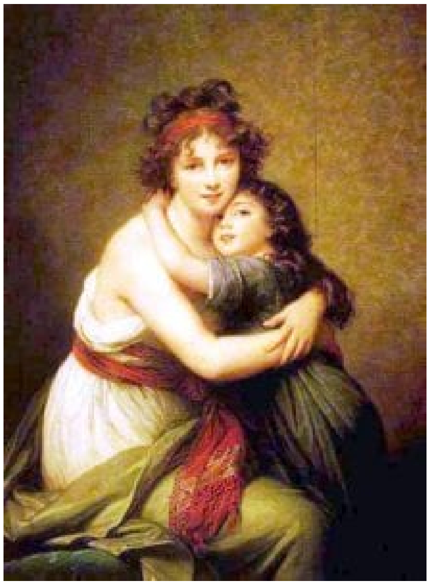
When Wilhelm was staying with me in Zurich, I asked him to work out a hexagram on the state of our Psychological Club.

The situation was known to me, but to him not at all.

The diagnosis that resulted was startlingly correct, and so was the prognosis, which described an event that occurred later and that I myself had not foreseen.

To me personally, however, this result was no longer so amazing, since I had earlier already had a number of remarkable experiences with the method.” Carl Jung, Jung’s Last Years, Page 24.

Carl Jung: The psyche pre-existent to consciousness (e.g., in the child) participates in the maternal psyche … (2019-12-08 03:26)



[1]Carl Jung: Face to Face Interview

The psyche pre-existent to consciousness (e.g., in the child) participates in the maternal psyche on the one hand, while on the other it reaches across to the daughter psyche.

We could therefore say that every mother contains her daughter in herself and every daughter her mother, and that every woman extends backwards into her mother and forwards into her daughter.

This participation and intermingling give rise to that peculiar uncertainty as regards time: a woman lives earlier as a mother, later as a daughter.

The conscious experience of these ties produces the feeling that her life is spread out over generations—the first step towards the immediate experience and conviction of being outside time, which brings with it a feeling of immortality.

The individual's life is elevated into a type, indeed it becomes the archetype of woman's fate in general.
One should not be deterred by the rather silly objection that nobody knows whether these old universal ideas—God, immortality, freedom of the will, and so on—are "true" or not.

Truth is the wrong criterion here.

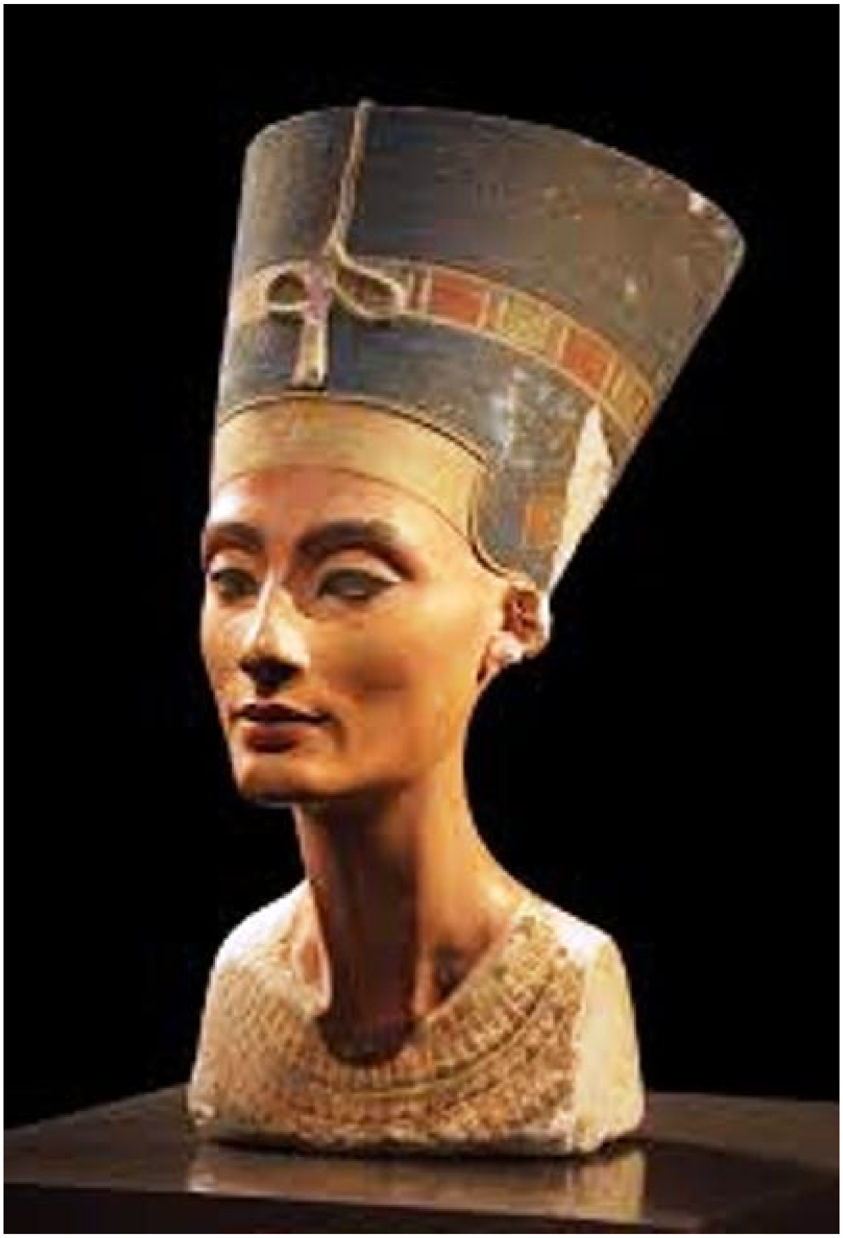
One can only ask whether they are helpful or not, whether man is better off and feels his life more complete, more meaningful and more satisfactory with or without them. Carl Jung, Face to Face, Pages 48-51

---

1. `http://www.jgsparks.net/folio/Mdr/FacetoFace.pdf`

Carl Jung: There were great artists (In Ancient Egypt) but their names are unknown. (2019-12-08 03:27)

[1]



Yes, that is most characteristic of the Egyptian civilization.

The people, even the Pharaoh, lived in mud huts, and the gods had the most gorgeous stone buildings which would last through many thousands of years.

The real beings lived in mud huts that completely disappeared, while the unreal beings, as we would say, lived in wonderful palaces built for eternity.

Babylonia was along that line too, but the Greeks, not to speak of later civilizations, built their worldly houses much more solidly.

The creative instinct in Egypt was a matter of the nation; we do not know the name of a single great Egyptian artist.

There were great artists but their names are unknown.

It is a Greek invention that we know the name of Homer, for instance.

Mesopotamia is like Egypt in that respect, the names of their poets and artists are unknown; they had great poetry and great art, but there was no individual expression of it.

We see something of that in Japan where they had certain great names but the disciples of those great fellows like Hiroshige or Hokusai renounced their own names and called themselves simply Hiroshige number two, three, four, etc. hiding themselves, becoming anonymous.

They carried on the name of the master, while they themselves completely disappeared.

That is still a remnant of the ancient consciousness of creative men; they felt so utterly identical with their people that they didn't even have a name; it created and man was merely an exponent of it.

To create was a sort of craft; he created not even knowing that he was creating something beautiful.

Many an old craftsman who produced a marvelous piece of art was utterly unconscious of the fact.

I am rather convinced that the great composer Bach was such a fellow.

He did not know what he was really producing.

He composed nice chants for the church and other things, but I am very doubtful if he knew that he was the composer Bach.

One would assume that he knew it, but it is just as difficult as to know in what time we are living.

At this point I must always tell the story of that knight in the thirteenth century who was caught by his enemies and thrown into a dungeon for several years.

Finally he got sick of that eternal prison and beating his fists down upon the table he said, "I wonder when these damned Middle Ages will come to an end!" Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Pages 655 – 656

Well, if you don't call it art, but call it the creative impulse.

Naturally, the creative impulse has always been the maker of the individual.

You see, creative impulse does not appear in everybody in the same strength: certain individuals are picked, they have a particular gift.

They create something which is striking and they are then the innovators, and stick out like old man Prometheus, that great sinner against the gods.

He was an individual and he was punished for it, but he was made to stand out through his creative impulse.

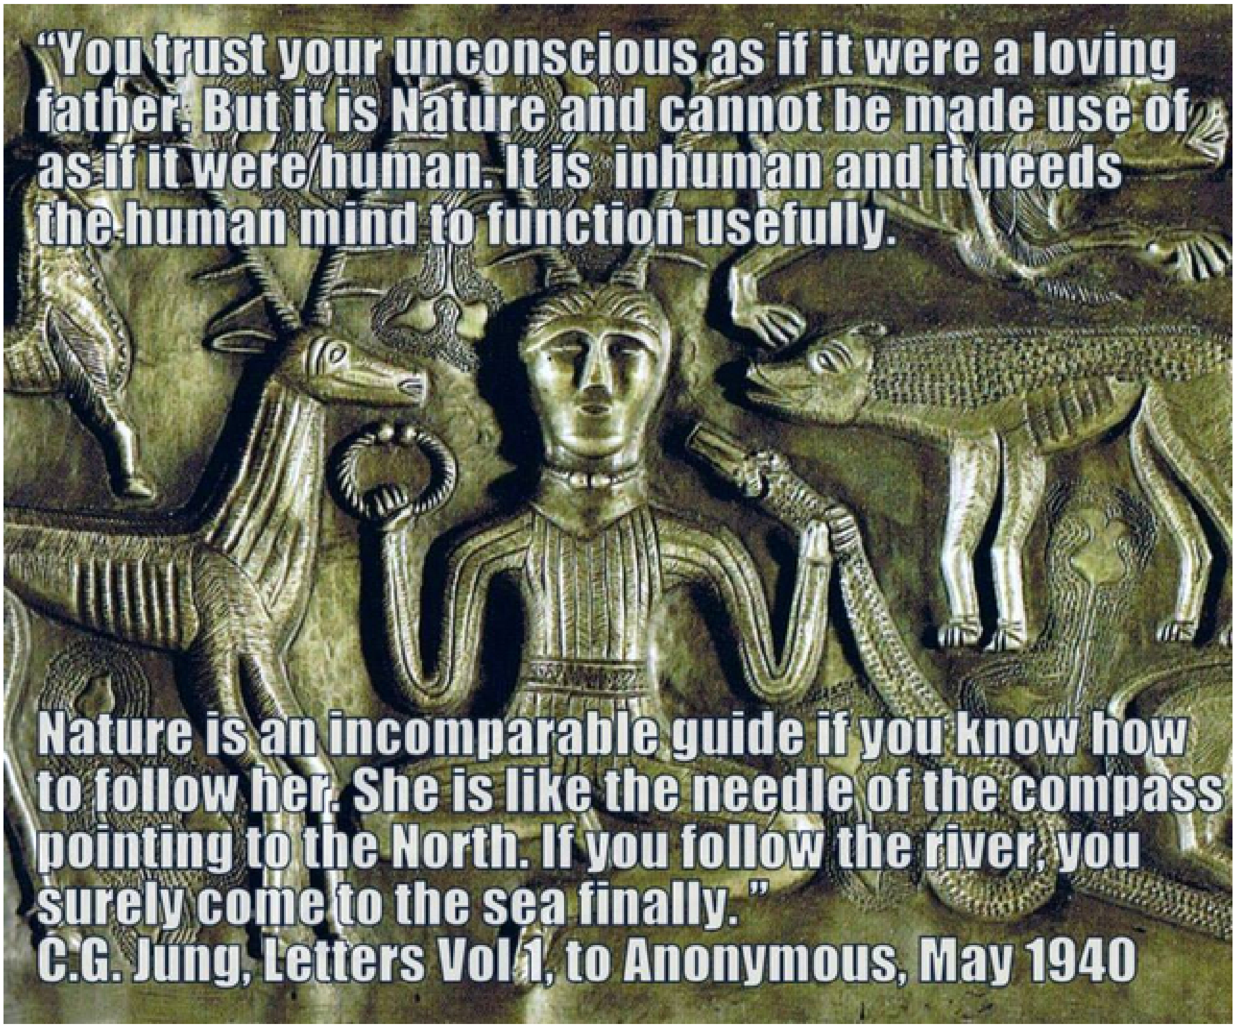
Naturally, the creative impulse is forever the maker of personality and uses that individual form, that distinction.

Therefore it is absolutely necessary that, in the process of individuation, everybody should become aware of his creative instinct, no matter how small it is. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 668.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/4b127-1egypt.jpg`
2. `http://CarlJung-FacetoFaceInterview/`

Carl Jung: You trust your unconscious as if it were a loving father. (2019-12-08 03:48)

[1]



"You trust your unconscious as if it were a loving father. But it is Nature and cannot be made use of as if it were human. It is inhuman and it needs the human mind to function usefully.
Nature is an incomparable guide if you know how to follow her. She is like the needle of the compass pointing to the North. If you follow the river, you surely come to the sea finally."
C.G. Jung, Letters Vol 1, to Anonymous, May 1940

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

Dear Mrs. N., 20 May 1940

This is just the kind of experience you needed.

You trust your unconscious as if it were a loving father. But it is nature and cannot be made use of as if it were a reliable human being.

It is inhuman and it needs the human mind to function usefully for man's purposes.

Nature is an incomparable guide if you know how to follow her.

She is like the needle of the compass pointing to the North, which is most useful when you have a good man-made ship and when you know how to navigate.

That's about the position.

If you follow the river, you surely come to the sea finally. But if you take it literally you soon get stuck in an impassable gorge and you complain of being misguided.

The unconscious is useless without the human mind.

It always seeks its collective purposes and never your individual destiny.

Your destiny is the result of the collaboration between the conscious and the unconscious.

I am actually in the mountains with my family and all the little grandchildren avoiding the dangers of Zurich.

We all hope and pray for a British victory over the Antichrist. Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Page 283.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/126fe-1father.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2FM61Q3W5SZWB&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575796458&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung on Lao Tse and Tao (2019-12-08 03:57)

[1]

vinceremo il dualismo delle sue leggi, lo Yin e lo Yang

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

A further stage of the projection already reaches a sort of conclusion.

That is, one begins to suspect that the effective thing is something definite, not just the celestial vault, the wide earth or the vast sea.

The existence of definite substances is suspected, and then one has already come nearer to a definition of the prima materia.

For instance, let us imagine the prima materia is water, water is a mysteriously determined power which can also evaporate as steam.

By this analogy we have come nearer to understanding the prima materia: it is similar to water, subject to mysterious laws which impress us in a marvellous way.

Think, for instance, of the definition of the Tao in Lao-Tse's "Tao-te Ching", where he says that the Tao is like the nature of water, it always seeks the deepest place.

The secret power of water lies in its infallible faculty of knowing the deepest place and finding it.

It was this which impressed our forefathers so deeply; and when they speak of "water" it is the essence of the unconscious that they describe.

This essence is a peculiar wisdom of nature, a knowledge which man does not possess, an instinctive knowledge, a conformity to obscure laws, totally inexplicable to naive man.

The mysterious operative in nature, which determines us, is therefore said to be of the nature of water.

But it is not tangible like water itself; we read in the Rosarium, for instance, that it is "aqua sicca" (dry water), it does not moisten the hands. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture XI, 11July1941.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/055d0-1lao.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2FM61Q3W5SZWB&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575796458&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung advises that mandalas found in monasteries and temples are of no particular significance...

(2019-12-08 04:18)

[1]

[2]Psychology and Alchemy (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.12)

[Carl Jung advises that mandalas found in monasteries and temples are of no particular significance; many mandalas are not free and individual formations.]

In 1938, I had the opportunity, in the monastery of Bhutia Busty, near Darjeeling, of talking with a Lamaic rimposhe, Lingdam Gomchen by name, about the khilkor or mandala.

He explained it as a dmigs-pa (pronounced “migpa”), a mental image which can be built up only by a fully instructed lama through the power of imagination.

He said that no mandala is like any other, they are a individually different.

Also, he said , the mandalas to be found in monasteries and temps were of no particular significance because they were external representations only.

The true mandala is always an inner image, which is gradually built up through (active) imagination, at such times when psychic equilibrium is disturbed or when a though cannot be found and must be sought for, because it is not contained in holy doctrine.

The aptness of this explanation will become apparent in the course of my exposition.

The alleged free and individual formation of the mandala, however, should be taken with a considerable grain of salt, since in all Lamaic mandalas there predominates not only a certain unmistakable style but also a traditional structure.

For instance they are all based on a Quaternary system, a quadratura circuli, and their contents are invariably derived from Lamaic dogma.

There are texts, such as the Shri-Chakra-Sambhara Tentra, which contain direcctions for the construction of these “mental images.” Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Paragraph 123

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/3a414-mandala.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Alchemy-Collected-Works-Vol-12/dp/0691018316/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+psychology+alchemy&qid=1575796753&sr=8-2`

Carl Jung on Jazz, Cinema, Sports and the Human Body. (2019-12-08 04:29)

[1]

[2]Modern Man In Search of a Soul

So I am refuted all along the line, like a man who predicts a thunderstorm when there is not a cloud in the sky.

Perhaps it is a storm beneath the horizon that he senses-and it may never reach us.

But what is significant in psychic life is always below the horizon of consciousness, and when we speak of the spiritual problem of modern man we are dealing with things that are barely visible-with the most intimate and fragile things -with bowers that open only in the night.

In daylight everything is clear and tangible; but the night lasts as long as the day, and we live in the night-time also.

There are persons who have bad dreams which even spoil their days for them.

And the day's life is for many people such a bad dream that they long for the night when the spirit awakes.

I even believe that there are nowadays a great many such people, and this is why I maintain that the spiritual problem of modern man is much as I have presented it.

I must plead guilty, indeed, to the charge of one-sidedness, for I have not mentioned the modern spirit of commitment to a practical world about which everyone has much to say because it lies in such full view.

We find it in the ideal of internationalism or super-nationalism which is embodied in the League of Nations and the like; and we find it also in sport and, very expressively, in the cinema and in jazz music.

These are certainly characteristic symptoms of our time; they show unmistakably how the ideal of humanism is made to embrace the body also.

Sport represents an exceptional valuation of the human body, as does also modern dancing.

The cinema, on the other hand, like the detective story, makes it possible to experience without danger all the excitement, passion and desirousness which must be repressed in a humanitarian ordering of life.

It is not difficult to see how these symptoms are connected with the psychic situation.

The attractive power of the psyche brings about a new self-estimation -a re-estimation of the basic facts of human nature.

We can hardly be surprised if this leads to the rediscovery of the body after its long depreciation in the name of the spirit.

We are even tempted to speak of the body's revenge upon the spirit.

When Keyserling sarcastically singles out the chauffeur as the culture hero of our time, he has struck, as he often does, close to the mark.

The body lays claim to equal recognition; like the psyche, it also exerts a fascination.

If we are still caught by the old idea of an antithesis between mind and matter, that present state of affairs means an unbearable contradiction; it may even divide us against ourselves.

But if we can reconcile ourselves with the mysterious truth that spirit is the living body seen from within, and the body the outer manifestation of the living spirit–the two being really one-then we can understand why it is that the attempt to transcend the present level of consciousness must give its due to the body.

We shall also see that belief in the body cannot tolerate an outlook that denies the body in the name of the spirit.

These claims of physical and psychic life are so pressing compared to similar claims in the past, that we may be tempted to see in this a sign of decadence.

Yet it may also signify a rejuvenation, for as Holderlin says: Danger itself dosters the rescuing power. Carl Jung, Modern Man in Search of a Soul, Pages 218-220.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/1f02b-jazz.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Modern-Search-Soul-Carl-Jung/dp/0156612062/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1CVRKAQU6J772&keywords=jung+modern+man+in+search+of+a+soul&qid=1575801520&spre`

Carl Jung: I am an irritating person. (2019-12-08 04:55)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Valentine Brooke

Dear Sir, 6 November 1959

As you have learned from Mr. Richardson’s account.

I am an irritating person.

I am dealing with doubts and views which puzzle the modern mind consciously as well as unconsciously.

I am treading on corns right and left.

As a consequence I have to spend a great amount of my time in handing out apologies and explanations for saying things which allude to facts and ideas unknown to the reader.

Moreover the reader is handicapped by his positivistic premise that the truth is simple and can be expressed by one short sentence.

Yet "nothing is quite true and even this is not quite true," as Multatuli says.

A psychologist concerned with the treatment of mental disturbances is constantly reminded of the fallacies in our verbal formulations.

In spite of all the difficulties besetting my way, I will try to explain my standpoint.

Whatever I perceive from without or within is a representation or image, a psychic entity caused, as I rightly or wrongly assume, by a corresponding "real" object.

But I have to admit that my subjective image is only grosso modo identical with the object.

Any portrait painter will agree with this statement and the physicist will add that what we call "colours" are really wave-lengths.

The difference between image and real object shows that the psyche, apperceiving an object, alters it by adding or excluding certain details.

The image therefore is not entirely caused by the object; it is also influenced by certain pre-existent psychic conditions which we can correct only partially. (We cannot remove colour perception, f.i.)

Moreover we know from experience that all acts of apperception are influenced by preexistent patterns of perceiving objects (f.i., the premise of causality), particularly obvious in pathological cases (being exaggerations or distortions of so-called "normal" behaviour).

They are presuppositions pertaining to the whole of humanity.

The history of the human mind offers no end of examples (f.i., folklore, fairy tales, religious symbolism, etc.).

To explain the spontaneous origin of such parallelisms, the theory of migration is insufficient.

I call them archetypes, i.e., instinctual forms of mental functioning.

They are not inherited ideas, but mentally expressed instincts, forms and not contents.

They influence our image-formation.

As experience shows, archetypes are equipped with a specific energy without which they could not have causal effects.

Thus when we try to form an image of the fact one calls "God" we depend largely upon innate, pre-existent ways of perceiving, all the more so as it is a perception from within, unaided by the observation of physical facts which might lend their visible forms to our God-image (though there are plenty cases of the sort).

"God" therefore is in the first place a mental image equipped with instinctual "numinosity," i.e., an emotional value bestowing the characteristic autonomy of the affect on the image.

This is my chief statement.

Now. people unaccustomed to proper thinking assume that it is a final statement.

No scientific statement is final: it is a likely formulation of observation and analysis.

It goes as far as a scientific statement can go.

But it does not and cannot say what "God" is; it only can define what He is in our mind.

The mind is neither the world in itself nor does it reproduce its accurate image.

The fact that we have an image of the world does not mean that there is only an image and no world.

But this is exactly the argument of those who assume that when I speak of the God-image I mean that God does not exist, as He is only an image.

Our images are, as a rule, of something, and even delusions are "images" of something, as modern psychology has amply shown.

If f.i. I imagine an animal which does not exist in reality as we know it, I form the picture of a mythological entity, following the age-old activity of our ancestors in imagining fairy beasts and "doctor animals."

I am functioning within the frame of an archetype.

I am in this case strongly influenced by it. (The archetype has efficacy.)

But although we can be fairly certain that no such animal exists in physical reality, there is nevertheless a real cause which has suggested the creation of the dragon.

The dragon-image is its expression.

The God-image is the expression of an underlying experience of something which I cannot attain to by intellectual means, i.e., by scientific cognition, unless I commit an unwarrantable transgression.

When I say that I don’t need to believe in God because I "know," I mean I know of the existence of God-images in general and in particular.

We know it is matter of a universal experience and, in so far as I am no exception, I know that I have such experience also, which I call God.

It is the experience of my will over against another and very often stronger will, crossing my path often with seemingly disastrous results, putting strange ideas into my head and maneuvering my fate sometimes into most undesirable corners or giving it unexpected favourable twists, outside my knowledge and my intention.

The strange force against or for my conscious tendencies is well known to me.

So I say: "I know Him."

But why should you call this something "God"?

I would ask: "Why not?"

It has always been called "God."

An excellent and very suitable name indeed.

Who could say in earnest that his fate and life have been the result of his conscious planning alone?

Have we a complete picture of the world?

Millions of conditions are in reality beyond our control.

On innumerable occasions our lives could have taken an entirely different turn.

Individuals who believe they are masters of their fate are as a rule the slaves of destiny.

A Hitler or Mussolini could believe they were such masterminds.

Respice finem!

I know what I want, but I am doubtful and hesitant whether the Something is of the same opinion or not.

Hoping I have succeeded in elucidating the puzzle,

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung

Note:

In an interview with Jung conducted by John Freeman in the series "Face to Face."

In the course of the interview Freeman asked: "Do you believe in God?" to which Jung answered after a long pause: "I don’t need to believe, I know."

These words gave rise to considerable argument, and B. sent Jung a rather derogatory review of the broadcast by Maurice Richardson in the London Observer, 25 Oct. 1959, as well as some of the correspondence published in the same paper about Jung’s words.

B. asked for their exact meaning.

The interview with Freeman is published in C. G. Jung Speaking. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 520-523

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

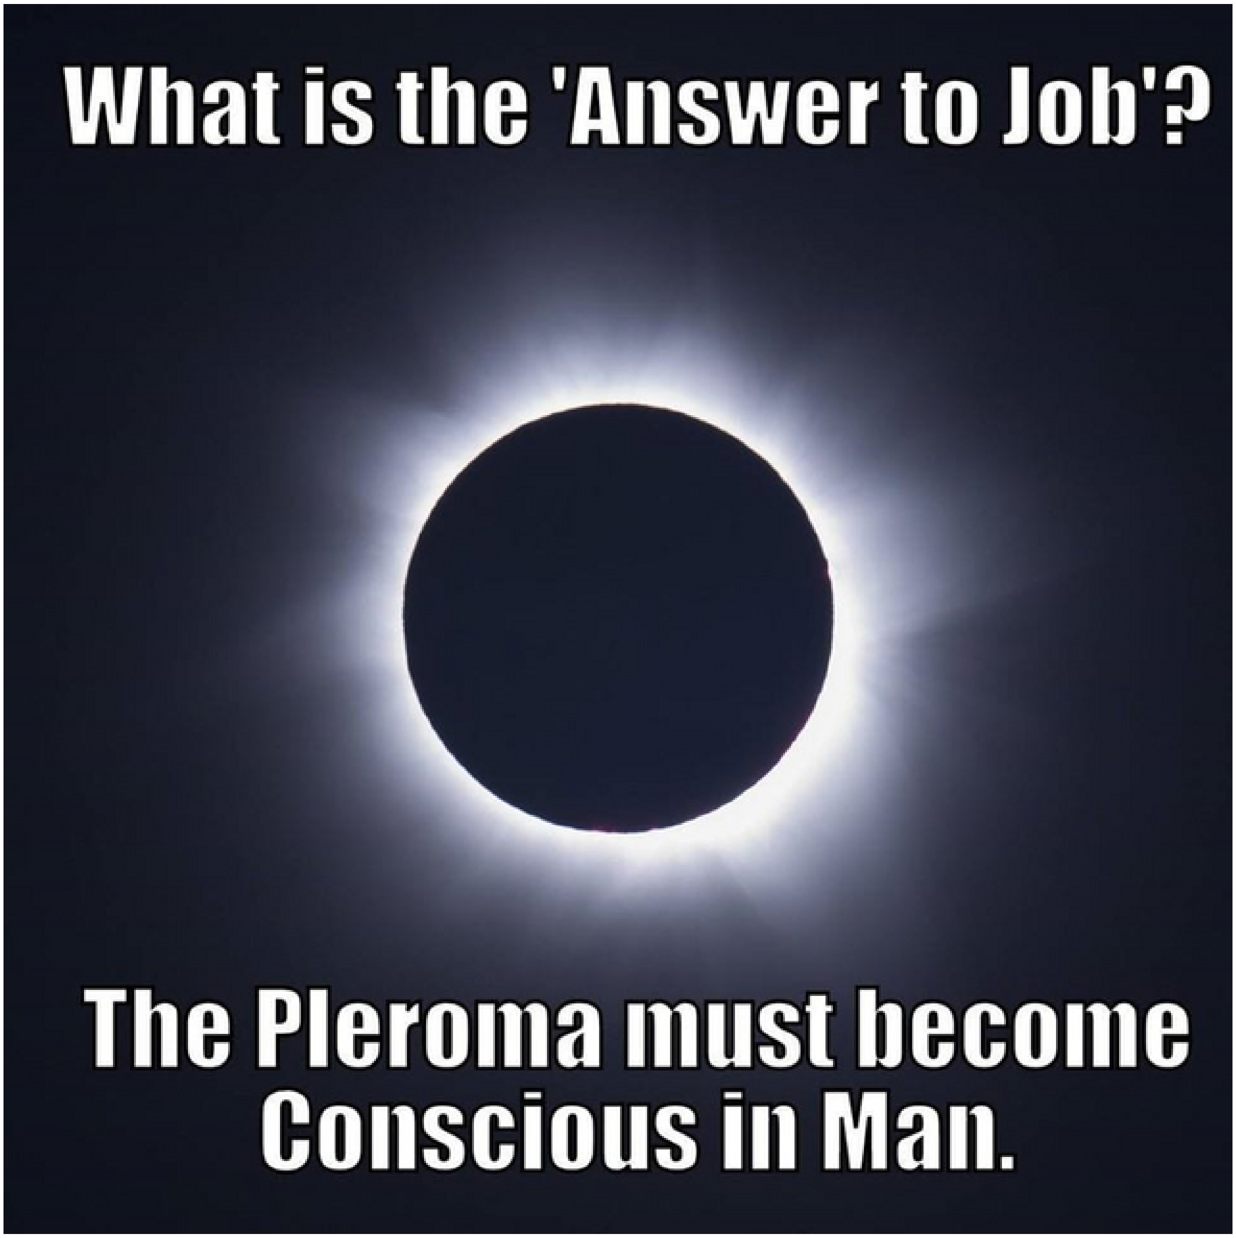
WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/74f1d-1sophia.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=A4INE6TI3JC4&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575801707&sprefix=jung+le%2`

Carl Jung and "The Answer to Job" (2019-12-09 03:45)

[1]



What is the 'Answer to Job'?
The Pleroma must become Conscious in Man.

[2]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

Although the birth of Christ is an event that occurred but once in history, it has always existed in eternity.

For the layman in these matters, the identity of a non-temporal, eternal event with a unique historical occurrence is something that is extremely difficult to conceive.

He must, however, accustom himself to the idea that "time" is a relative concept and needs to be complemented by that of the "simultaneous" existence, in the Bardo or pleroma, of all historical processes.

What exists in the pleroma as an eternal process appears in time as an aperiodic sequence, that is to say, it is repeated many times in an irregular pattern.

To take but one example:

Yahweh had one good son and one who was a failure.

Cain and Abel, Jacob and Esau, correspond to this prototype, and so, in all ages and in all parts of the world, does the motif of the hostile brothers, which in innumerable modern variants still causes dissension in families and keeps the psychotherapist busy.

Just as many examples, no less instructive, could be found for the two women prefigured in eternity.

When these things occur as modern variants, therefore, they should not be regarded merely as personal episodes, moods, or chance idiosyncrasies in people, but as fragments of the pleromatic process itself, which, broken up into individual.

When Yahweh created the world from his prima materia, the "Void," he could not help breathing his own mystery into the Creation which is himself in every part, as every reasonable theology has long been convinced.

From this comes the belief that it is possible to know God from his Creation.

When I say that he could not help doing this, I do not imply any limitation of his omnipotence; on the contrary, it is an acknowledgment that all possibilities are contained in him, and that there are in consequence no other possibilities than those which express him. Carl Jung, CW 11. Answer to Job, Pages 400-401, Paras 629-630.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/6faa3-1pleroma.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1ABT0443D7JH9&keywords=jung+religion&qid=1575883802&sprefix=jung+r`

Carl Jung on The Practice of Psychotherapy (2019-12-09 03:59)

[1]

[2]The Practice of Psychotherapy: Essays on the Psychology of the Transference and Other Subjects (Bollingen Series)

The patient is there to be treated and not to verify a theory. For that matter, there is no single theory in the whole field of practical psychology that cannot on occasion be proved to be basically wrong.

In particular, the view that the patient's resistances are in no circumstances) justified is completely fallacious. The resistance might very well prove that the treatment rests on false assumptions. "Fundamental Questions of Psychotherapy" (1951). In CW 16: The Practice of Psychotherapy. P.237

No analysis is capable of banishing all unconsciousness forever. The analyst must go on learning endlessly, and never forget that each new case brings new problems to light and thus gives rise to unconscious assumptions that have never before been constellated.

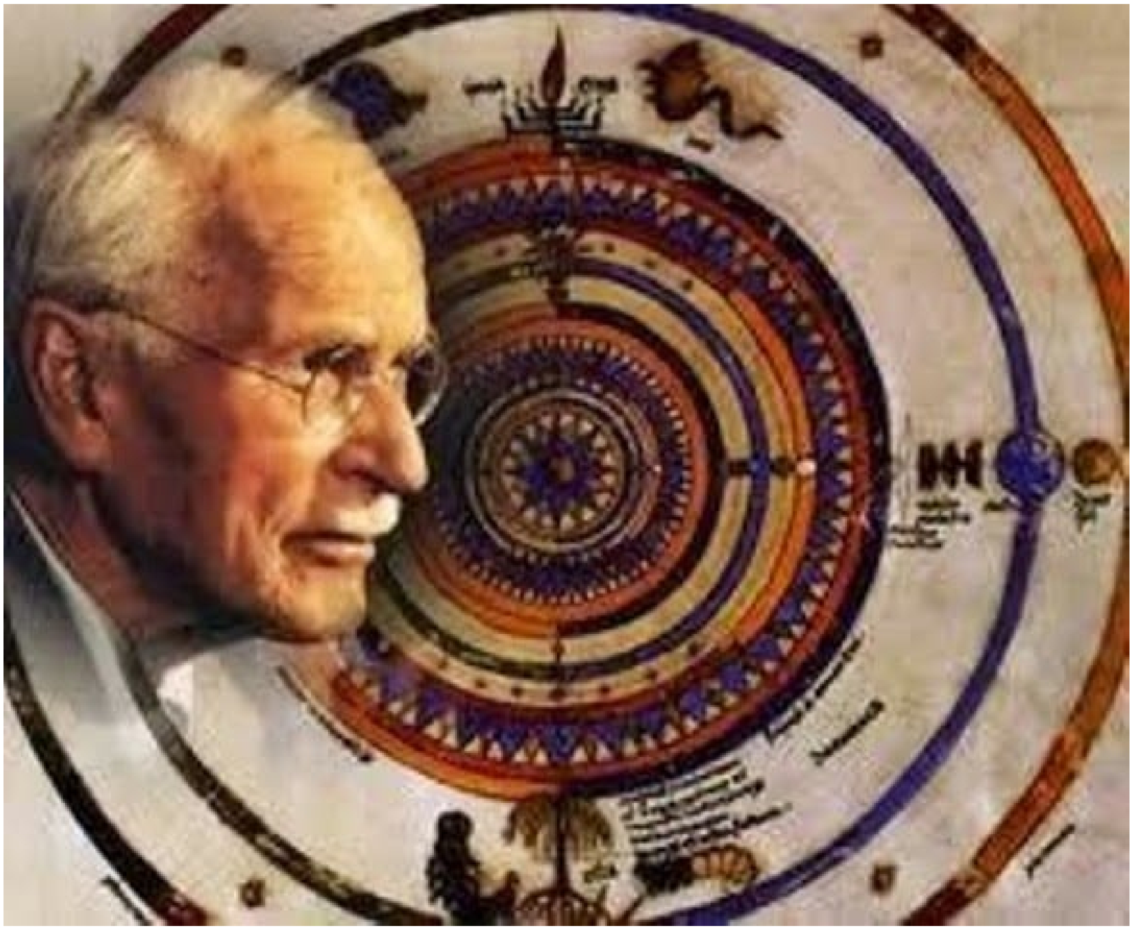
We could say, without too much exaggeration, that a good half of every treatment that probes at all deeply consists in the doctor's examining himself, for only what he can put right in himself can he hope to put right in the patient.

It is no loss, either, if he feels that the patient is hitting him, or even scoring off him: it is his own hurt that gives the measure of his power to heal. This, and nothing else, is the meaning of the Greek myth of the wounded physician. ["Fundamental Questions of Psychotherapy," ibid. para. 239.]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/474a6-therapy.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Practice-Psychotherapy-Psychology-Transference-Bollingen/dp/0691018707/ref=sr_1_1?crid=50HP8PH1UEWK&keywords=the+practice+of+psychotherap`

Carl Jung on Hosea the Prophet (2019-12-09 04:09)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Pastor Olivier Vuille

Dear Pastor Vuille, 22 February 1946

Your question raises a problem which is not easy to solve.

If Hosea were a modern man his language would lead us to suppose that he had a special rapport with his mother, since the way he expresses himself denotes a great preponderance of feeling.

But it would be dangerous to conclude this about the ancient prophet, since the biographical details, which alone would permit us to draw such a conclusion, are absolutely lacking.

We have only one text whose singular content and peculiar language could be• understood as coming from other sources than the author's particular personality.

And it must not be forgotten that this personality was speaking as a prophet.

This fact prevents us from making use of a personalistic psychology, since what a prophet imagines is derived far less from his personal unconscious than from the collective unconscious and can be explained only by the latter.

It is preferable, therefore, to explain Hosea's imagery by the archetype of the "divine marriage" an image that he must have encountered frequently in his pagan environment-than to derive it from a personal idiosyncrasy.

In the same way that we cannot deduce the principal ideas of Faust from Gothe's attitude toward his parents, we are unable to make such deductions about Hosea, a man who lived in psychological conditions so different from our own that we can hardly imagine them.

Thus I cannot allow myself to make personalistic interpretations, especially as the language of prophecy does not seem to me to arise from the personal imagination but rather from collective imagery.

Here again -as in great poetry, religious experiences, prophetic dreams and visions-archetypal images are the causal factors, and they have little to do with the prophet's individual disposition.

Hosea's way of representing the relationship between the Divinity and his people as a marriage1 is completely explicable in the spiritual atmosphere of Palestine and Syria in his time, where the idea of the hierosgamos played a great part.

I am taking the liberty of enclosing a study by one of my students, which I hope you will return at your convenience.

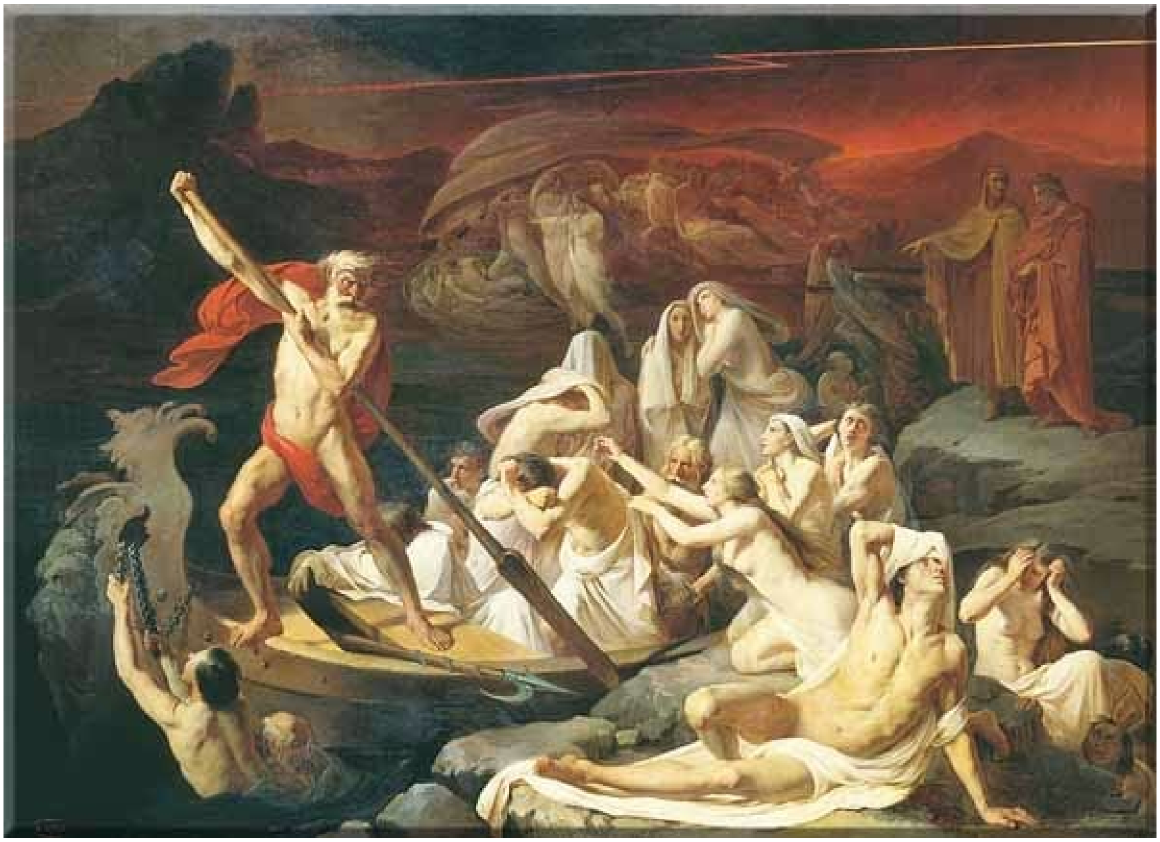
In it you will see the method we use for studying the psychology of cases like this.

With best regards,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol.1, Pages 414-415.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/2534d-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=31V1R6P2RU2TW&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1575884090&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung on the Symbolism of “Water” in the West and East (2019-12-09 04:40)

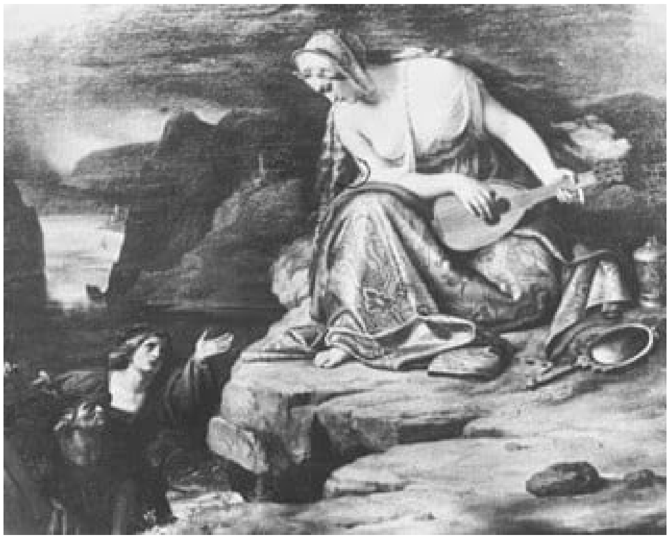


[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

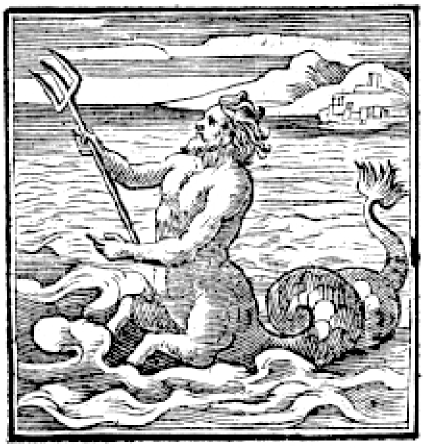
The waters of the rivers Styx and Acheron carry the dead to the other side, from the upper world to the underworld.

The dead haunt fathomless lakes, such as the Mumel lake or the legendary Pilatus lake. According to Virgil, the entrance to the realm of the dead is at the Lago d'Averno.

Poets and fairy tales tell of the dangers of the depths; the Lorelei draws ships into the vortices of the river Rhine, "half drew she him, half sank he down."



The water is also the place of transformation: Proteus, the water god, turns into a lion, a snake, a tree; Thetis, the Nereid, transforms herself into a bird and a tree while courting Peleus.



[4]

As far as the situation of the dreamer at that moment is concerned, it seems as if only the negative aspects of the water would have to be taken into account; for just as she fled from the snake in her vision, she here is afraid of the water and nearly drowns in it.

At the moment it has, just like the snake, a frightening and nearly destructive influence.

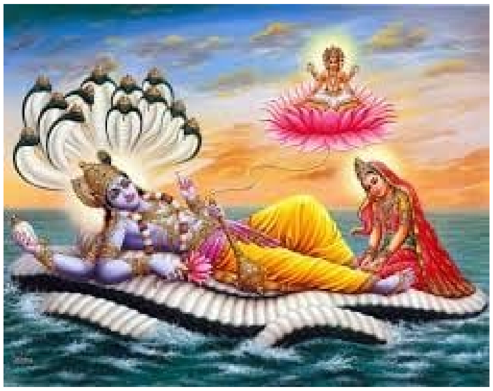
If we focus our interest on the possibilities of a later solution of the problem, however, we will have to consider also some positive aspects of the water, above all its changeability and healing power.

In Zimmer's book Maya we find the following passage referring to this: "The waters are the Gegenwelt [counterworld] to the dry sphere of the waking day, into which the eye looks outward; in them the hidden nature of things is mirrored to the inner view. . . . Down into the water means down into knowledge.

The ageless waters, taking all forms of nature, circulating as its life, know everything, they have been present since the beginning and conserve everything in their liveliness—nothing is forgotten.

Thus Vishnu speaks to the holy Naranda: Immerse yourself in water, and you will know about my Maya.”

[5]



In another place he writes:

The waters of life are the womb of all forms of the world, as well as their grave in which they are reborn, they circulate in and build, they carry and dissolve every form, they are the palpable element of the all divine Maya, whose nature the saints and seers tentatively try to grasp. They hold the secret of this Maya as the force of their own, versatile nature, and do not yield it, but let it be tasted when someone opens up to them. How the world comes into being, every hour, outside as world gestalt in the flow of coming into being and happening, coming to the fore, as gestalt of the inner world, from the dark ness of the unconsciousness into the light of consciousness—all this can be experienced, but how could it be fathomed?

Zimmer also quotes the wondrous motif of someone who immerses himself in water and emerges into a new life, sinking from life dream to life dream in doing so:

The Brahmin Sutapas went into the sacred waters in Benares. The Brahmin turned into a girl of a Chandala family that dwelled near the sacred bathing place at the mouth of the Koka. The girl was beautiful, grew up, and was married to an unsightly man. She bore him two sons, who were both blind, and later a daughter, who was deaf. Her husband was poor. The young, naive woman went to the river, and there she always sat and cried. Once, however, when she had gone to the river to fetch water with her jug, she went down in the water to bathe—and out of the water reemerged that Brahmin Supata, the pious, agile ascetic. The Chandala came to look for his wife and wept for her; the Brahmin comforted him and taught him also to dive into the metamorphosed waters; he had barely dived into the water when he was freed of all stigma, thanks to the magical power of the sacred bathing place. On a carriage of the gods he went heavenward before the eyes of the Brahmin, light as the moon. The Brahmin, however, full of sorrow, also went into the waters of the Koka, and ascended into the highest heaven, only to come to earth again and live in a middle-class family. Being ill and suffering, he recalled his former life, went again into the waters of the Koka to ascend into heaven, to be reborn again, and to tell this story as Prince Kamadamana.

The cleansing, healing power of the water is also known in Christianity, as the baptismal water that washes away original sin and admits the baptized child into the Church, the Corpus Christi.

The Jews also baptized, and admitted the proselytes into the community.

The Gospel of John quotes Christ's words to Nicodemus:

"Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again [of water and the spirit], he cannot see the kingdom of God."

[6]
Above all, however, we would like to refer to the Revelation of John:

"And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal . . . on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month" (22:1–2).

So far the water, into which our dreamer fell, showed only negative aspects for her.

The possibility is open, however, that what she fears will change and bring her salvation.

Between the Bauschänzli and the quay bridge she suddenly falls into the water in an upright position.

We see from this that she crossed the bridge on the right side.

Could this suggest that she has always been conscious of her difficulties and of her failure?

Or that her failure lies in the field of outer reality?

It is striking that she falls into the water "in an upright position," which she expressly mentions.

This can be interpreted in two ways:

it can mean that, despite everything, she "keeps her head held high," or that the heavy weight that pulls her down is not in her head, but rather in the instinctual sphere.

I do not know if we may interpret that circumstance—her falling into the water in an upright position—in this way.

"Slowly I am sinking deeper and deeper."

This might symbolize a slowly progressing process of being flooded by the unconscious.

"I nearly drown" has a parallel in the story about the vision of the snake:

"I no longer dare move in the bed, because even when awake, everywhere in the room I see the glowing eyes of the snake that wants to bite me."

Her light consciousness of the day is flooded and disturbed by the frightening snake image from the unconscious, so she is deprived of her freedom of movement.

Here, she nearly drowns—the capabilities of her senses are minimized by the unconscious content entering in her ears, nose, and mouth.

She is prevented from seeing, hearing, and speaking, and can hardly breathe at all.

So she is in an extremely reduced state; there is hardly any possibility left to contact the outer world, life.

Psychologically speaking, this could indicate a nearly autistic state, or a very great introversion, which severely restricts the possibilities of her moving or expressing herself. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 268-272.

Images:

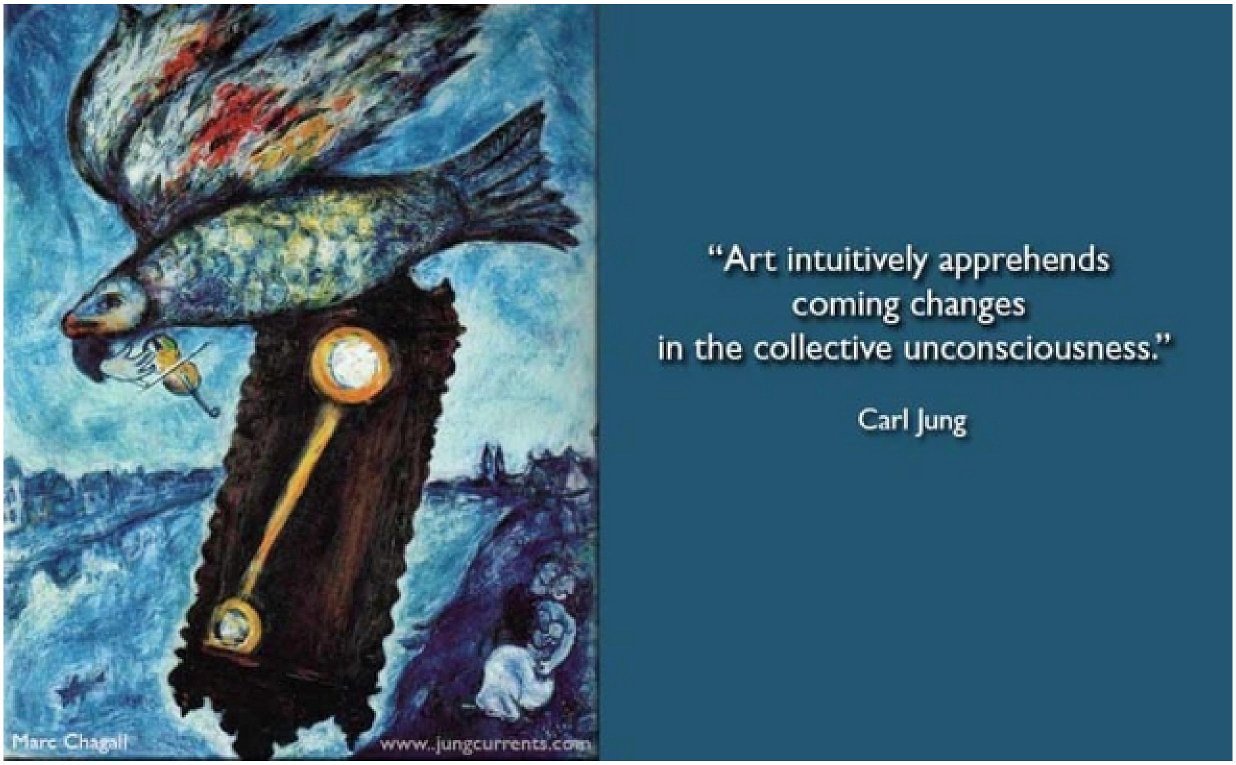
1. Charon and the River Styx
2. The Song of Lorelei
3. The Waters of Proteus
4. The Waters of Vishnu
5. Nicodemus "Except Ye be Born of Water and Spirit

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/fee4a-1charon.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+children&qid=1575886631&sr=8-1`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/53789-22blorelei.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/b9499-3proteus.gif`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/956a3-4vishnu.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/5f748-5nicodemus.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Artist and images of the Collective Unconscious (2019-12-10 02:39)

[1]



“Art intuitively apprehends coming changes in the collective unconsciousness.”

Carl Jung

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Lecture 9

Questions and Discussion

(In a previous discussion the point was made by Dr. Jung that the modern artist turns from the outer object to the inner, that is, to the images of the collective unconscious.

In order to give examples of what he had said, Dr. Jung brought some photographs of the work of a sculptor who for a time had been a patient of his.

Though it is difficult to give an account of the discussion of these pictures apart from the pictures themselves, so much of general application was said that it is worthwhile making the attempt.)

Dr. Jung: These sculptures are an effort on the part of the artist to express an experience of the collective unconscious.

When one gets an intuition of the collective unconscious, if there is any creative power in the individual a definite figure is formed, rather than that the material comes through in a fragmentary form.

It is true that it may come in this latter way, and usually does in dementia praecox, but if the creative faculty is there one tends to shape the material so that one could say that the normal form of contact with the collective unconscious is its appearance in the single form, and that when one is assailed by an inrush of fragmentary pictures, as in dementia praecox, there is disease.

When an artist has a figure from the collective unconscious, he at once begins to play with it esthetically, and usually makes some concretization of it as a monument, etc.

This artist, as you see, had a love of the human figure and allowed his imagination to play around that.

He got into his neurosis through the painting of a fresco, an order that came to him from a Protestant church.

He was free to choose his own theme, and what he chose was the descent of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost.

He began to make a composition and succeeded very well in grouping the apostles on either side, leaving the middle space open for the Holy Ghost.

Then he could not make up his mind as to how he wanted to represent the Holy Ghost.

He rejected the conventional symbol of the fire, and fell to speculating on what the Holy Ghost was like after all.

While he was digging in his mind for the Holy Ghost, he stirred up the collective unconscious and then began to have wild nightmares and various other forms of terrors, so that by the time he came to me for treatment, he had forgotten all about his original quest of the Holy Ghost.

While with me his task was to get the collective unconscious figures into plastic form.

As you noticed, the first figures are of gods with mouths open and dead eyes.

The libido is being sucked back into the unconscious.

Then he thought that these relatively simple things were inadequate, and so he began the figures that show the terrible complications.

Finally he reduced these to an extraordinarily demoniacal figure closely paralleling one of the demon gods of Java.

This then was the Holy Ghost to him. I later lost track of him.

Dr. Ward: Had he ever had anything which he called a religious experience?

Dr. Jung: Oh yes, these contacts with the collective unconscious were his religious experience and were understood by him in that sense.

In this connection it is interesting to remember that Luther came to the conception of the dual aspect of God.

He conceived of the manifest God and of the concealed God, the latter being a symbol of the evil forces of life.

In other words, Luther was so impressed with the power of negative forces that it was necessary for him to preserve them to the deity; then the devil played only a secondary role between the two forces.

Mr. Aldrich: If this was the artist's negative conception of the deity, what was his positive conception?

What were the figures he completed on the fresco?

Dr. Jung: These were more or less conventional representations of the apostles.

Like all introverts, in his conscious he tended to remain academic.

(There were a number of written questions and the remainder of the hour was given over to them.)

Mrs. Evans' questions: "Is there not a pull or urge from each of the pairs of opposites that we have, and is that not necessary to preserve our balance?

For instance: a person is both good and bad, generous and stingy, obstinate and yielding.

Would the urge from only one of those opposites destroy him morally and physically?

"Are good and evil both necessary to the development of the individual personality? (Psychology of the Unconscious [1919 edn.], page 121.)

"In the middle, between the opposites, is there not inaction, a stationary condition without growth?

Would that be the Nirvana so longed for by the Eastern mystic in his contemplation?"

Dr. Jung: This question, in order to be properly answered, involves a discussion of the pairs of opposites in a comprehensive way.

Is it the wish of the class that we pause to do that now or postpone it for a later lecture?

(It was voted by the class to postpone the discussion of the pairs of opposites to a later meeting.)

Miss Corrie: In an earlier lecture you spoke of reversing the mental machinery in order to be a passive observer of dreams.

In a later lecture you say that watching the unconscious is only a perceptional connection and the worst possible attitude.

I do not understand the distinction.

Is it that you would have been adopting the night attitude by day?

Dr. Jung: The two lives do not belong together.

When I said that I reversed the machinery in order to watch, I did not mean that it was merely for the purpose of watching.

The purpose was the assimilation of my unconscious material, and the only way to achieve this is by giving the material a chance to come through.

When one assumes a perceptional attitude toward one's unconscious, an attitude often to be observed in certain intuitives, one makes no effort to assimilate the material into the personality.

There exists no moral relation then between the observed material and the personality.

But if we observe in order to assimilate, it is an attitude that calls for the participation of all our functions.

Nietzsche made the esthetical attitude the foremost attitude of man, and the intellectual attitude can also be like this, that is, one can simply think about life without ever living.

One is not in the process, not even one's own process.

For the sake of consciousness we have had to step aside from life and observe; in other words, we have had to dissociate, but necessary as this process is in the evolution of consciousness, it ought not to be used as it is today as a means of keeping us out of life.

Our effort today should be the double one of consciousness plus a full participation in life.

The common ideal of today is work at all costs, but many people simply work and do not live.

We cannot depreciate the ideal of work, but we can understand that it is valueless when it divorces one from life.

Miss Henty's question: "Cannot the inferior functions be developed without such an overthrow of the superior functions as you described last time?"

Dr. Jung: Can you lift water up from the bottom of a falls without loss of energy?

You have to have energy in order to activate the inferior function, and if you don't get this energy away from the superior function, whence is it to come?

If you leave all your energy and will in the superior function you slowly go to hell—it sucks you dry.

Normal people are those who can live under any circumstances without developing protests, but there are certain people in whom various conditions of life develop a protest.

Take for example the effort to live a rounded life; it is most expensive.

Today to bring up the inferior function is to live, but we pay dearly for it both in mistakes and in energy.

Sometimes it is not our choice—the inferior function takes us unawares.

Such a situation presented itself at the time of the spread of Christianity two thousand years ago.

The spiritual values had at that time sunk into the unconscious, and in order to realize them again, people had to go to tremendous lengths in the repudiation of material values. Gold, women, art—all had to be given up.

Many even had to withdraw into the desert in order to free themselves from the world.

Finally they came to the point of giving up life itself, and they were confronted with the arena and with being roasted alive.

All this came to them through the growth of a psychological attitude.

They were sacrificed because they undermined the most sacred ideals of the time.

They threatened the disruption of the Roman family by their theological disputes.

They refused to consider the Emperor divine.

The effect they had on the collective viewpoint was similar to that produced today when anything is said against the god of Western Europe—Respectability.

We today are also looking for certain other values.

We seek life, not efficiency, and this seeking of ours is directly against the collective ideals of our times.

Only those who have energy enough, or who have been gripped in spite of themselves, can go through this process, but once in it you have to bleed for it.

It is a process that is going on all over the world today.

Mr. Robertson: What forced people into this attitude two thousand years ago?

Dr. Jung: People could see no other way of meeting the extreme to which paganism had led.

The reversal of attitude which Christianity induced took the juice out of the literature and the art of the time. According to the philologists, everything of value disappeared then; only a faint flame remaining burning in Apuleius.

But as a matter of fact, it was simply that the main stream of creative power left the channel dug by antiquity and sought a new bed.

A new literature and art grew up, of which Tertullian is an example.

The libido went over into spiritual values and an enormous change took place in human mentality in three hundred years.

These collective movements are always hard for the individual to sustain.

They grip people from the unconscious without their being able to know what has happened to them.

Thus the literature of those days was full of a sickish sentimentality—the spark had gone from the conscious standpoint and was buried in the unconscious.

These people in the early Christian era were unaware of the general movement contemporaneous with them.

They could not realize they were Christians, yet they were seeking initiation into all sorts of mysteries in search of the thing Christianity was offering.

They could not accept it because of its origin in the hands of despised peoples.

Most of the troubles of our times come from this lack of realization that we are part of a herd that has deviated from the main currents.

When you are in a herd you lose the sense of danger, and this it is that makes us unable to see where we deviate from the deep currents of collectivity.

Miss Hincks: When you were speaking of bringing up your inferior function, did you mean the one in the unconscious?

Dr. Jung: Yes.

Miss Hincks: I understood you to mean that you had developed your intuition in contradistinction to your thinking.

Dr. Jung: No, I meant to place feeling in opposition to thinking.

As a natural scientist, thinking and sensation were uppermost in me and intuition and feeling were in the unconscious and contaminated by the collective unconscious.

You cannot get directly to the inferior function from the superior, it must always be via the auxiliary function.

It is as though the unconscious were in such antagonism to the superior function that it allowed no direct attack.

The process of working through the auxiliary functions goes on somewhat as follows: Suppose you have sensation strongly developed but are not fanatical about it.

Then you can admit about every situation a certain aura of possibilities; that is to say, you permit an intuitive element to come in.

Sensation as an auxiliary function would allow intuition to exist.

But inasmuch as sensation (in the example) is a partisan of the intellect, intuition sides with the feeling, here the inferior function.

Therefore the intellect will not agree with intuition, in this case, and will vote for its exclusion.

Intellect will not hold together sensation and intuition, rather it will separate them.

Such a destructive attempt will be checked by feeling, which backs up intuition.

Looking at it the other way around, if you are an intuitive type, you can’t get to your sensations directly.

They are full of monsters, and so you have to go by way of your intellect or feeling, whichever is the auxiliary in the conscious.

It needs very cool reasoning for such a man to keep himself down to reality.

To sum up then, the way is from the superior to the auxiliary, from the latter to the function opposite to the auxiliary.

Usually this first conflict that is aroused between the auxiliary function in the conscious and its opposite function in the unconscious is the fight that takes place in analysis.

This may be called the preliminary conflict.

The knock-down battle between the superior and inferior functions only takes place in life.

In the example of the intellectual sensation type, I suggested the preliminary conflict would be between sensation and intuition, and the final fight between intellect and feeling.

Dr. de Angulo: Why cannot the main battle take place in analysis?

Dr. Jung: That can only happen when the analyst loses his objectivity and becomes personally involved with the patient.

In this connection it can be said that the analyst is always in danger of intoxications through his unconscious.

Suppose a woman comes and tells me I am her savior.

While consciously I may know perfectly well she has made a terrible projection upon me, unconsciously I drink it up and possibly swell to tremendous proportions.

Mrs. Keller’s question: (This question as originally presented was lost. The problem concerned was in connection with the will.)

Dr. Jung: It cannot be said that the will of man is like a stone rolling downhill.

What is true is that through the will you can release a process, say a fantasy, which then proceeds on its own course.

There are two ways of looking at will.

That of Schopenhauer, for instance, who speaks of the will to live and the will to death in the sense of an urge to life and an urge to death.

I like to reserve the concept of will for that small amount of energy that is disposable by us in consciousness.

Now if you put this small amount toward activating the instinctive process, the latter then goes on with a force much bigger than yours.

The libido of man contains the two opposite urges or instincts: the instinct to live and the instinct to die.

In youth the instinct toward life is stronger, and that is why young people don't cling to life—they have it.

The libido as an energetic phenomenon contains the pairs of opposites, otherwise there would be no movement of the libido.

It is a metaphor to use the terms of life and death; any others will do, so long as they show the opposition.

In animals and in primitive peoples, the pairs of opposites are closer together than in so-called civilized peoples, hence both animals and primitives part with life more easily than do we.

A primitive can kill himself just for the luxury of haunting an enemy.

In other words, because of our dissociation, the pairs of opposites are much further apart.

This gives us our increased psychical energy, and the price we pay is one-sidedness.

When the pairs of opposites are close together, the individual changes easily.

He passes quickly from a mood of expansion to a mood of death.

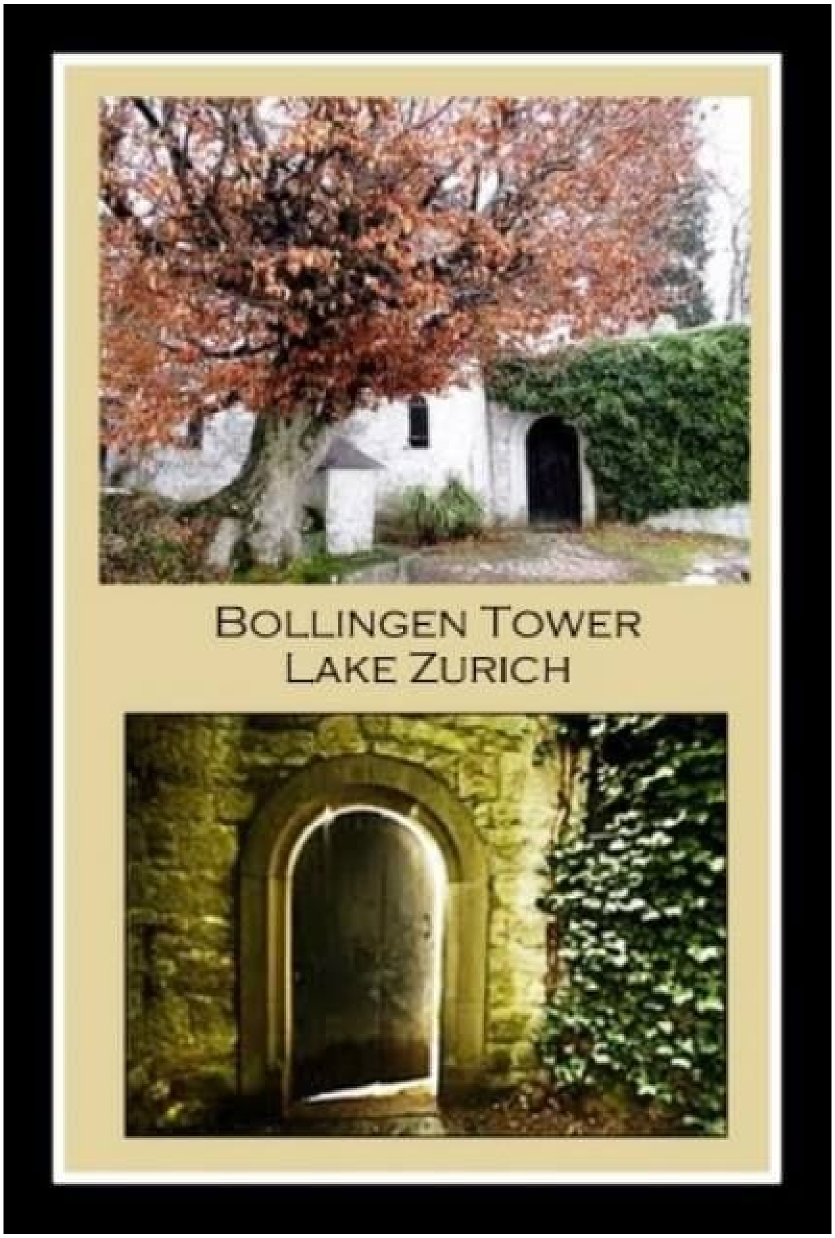
We have now come into a discussion of the pairs of opposites.

Is it the wish of the class to discuss this problem at the next meeting? (It was so voted by the class.) Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 71-77

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/bc589-1art.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=1575966253&sr=8-1`

Sonu Shamdasani: From Zurich to Geneva (2019-12-10 03:08)

[1]



In the aftermath of the first world war, a special issue of Médecine et Hygiène appeared with special notices ‘A La France Médicale’. Swiss medical and paramedical societies greeted the resumption of scientific relations with France.

As the president of the Swiss Society for Practical Psychology, Jung wrote:

“The psychopathology of the neuroses owes certain of its decisive results to the researches of French scholars. I will mention in the first place the celebrated works of Charcot and of Pierre Janet, in particular the theory of the latter on ‘the lowering of the mental level’, which has proved itself and has furnished an extremely fecund point of view for the study of these troubles.

Swiss psychiatry equally owes a considerable enrichment to the researches of the hypnotisers Liébault and Bernheim, which were continued here [chez nous] by Forel.

The investigations of Pierre Janet were particularly useful for the comprehension of functional troubles in the domain of the neuroses and above all of hysteria, where his researches have a fundamental bearing." (Jung 1945, p. 8)

(This letter was not included in Jung's Collected Works, nor does it feature in the General Bibliography of his writings. It is reproduced here in English for the first time.) Sonu Shamdasani, From Geneva to Zurich, Page 117

Two years later Jung gave an interview to Pierre Courthion which was published in La Tribune de Genève under the title 'Spiritual values of the Swiss'.

To the question, 'How did you begin?'

Jung replied:

"I was first a clinical doctor, then a privatdozent at the University of Zürich.

I wrote on associations experiments, dementia praecox, occult phenomena, etc …

I was the student of Pierre Janet and above all of Théodore Flournoy whose observations on somnambulism are absolutely remarkable.

It was only in 1906 that I made the acquaintance of Freud." (Courthion 1947) Sonu Shamdasani, From Geneva to Zurich, Page 117

The extent of the impact that Flournoy's work initially made on Jung is indicated by the following statement in Jung's tribute to him, which appeared in the German and French editions of Memories, Dreams, Reflections, though not in the English (on how this came to be misconceived as Jung's autobiography, see Shamdasani 1995):

"As I was still a doctor at the Burghölzli when I read his book, From India to the Planet Mars, it made a great impression on me.

I wrote to Flournoy, that I wanted to translate it into German.

It was after half a year that I received his reply, in which he apologized for having let my question lie unanswered for so long.

To my regret, he had already appointed another translator." (Jung 1963/1994) Sonu Shamdasani, From Geneva to Zurich, Page 117

Had this been the case, Jung's first publication would conceivably have been the German translation of Flournoy's From India to the Planet Mars.

In that work, Flournoy singled out four theories that he particularly drew from:

without perhaps always citing them explicitly, I have constantly borrowed their forms of expression, their views, and their metaphors which, by the way, have now entered more or less into the public domain to the point where it would be difficult to manage practically without them.

I particularly want to mention mental disaggregation of M. P. Janet, the double-ego of M. Dessoir, the hypnoid states of MM. Breuer and Freud, and above all the subliminal consciousness of M. Myers.” (Flournoy 1899/1994, p. 6–7) Sonu Shamdasani, From Geneva to Zurich, Page 117

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

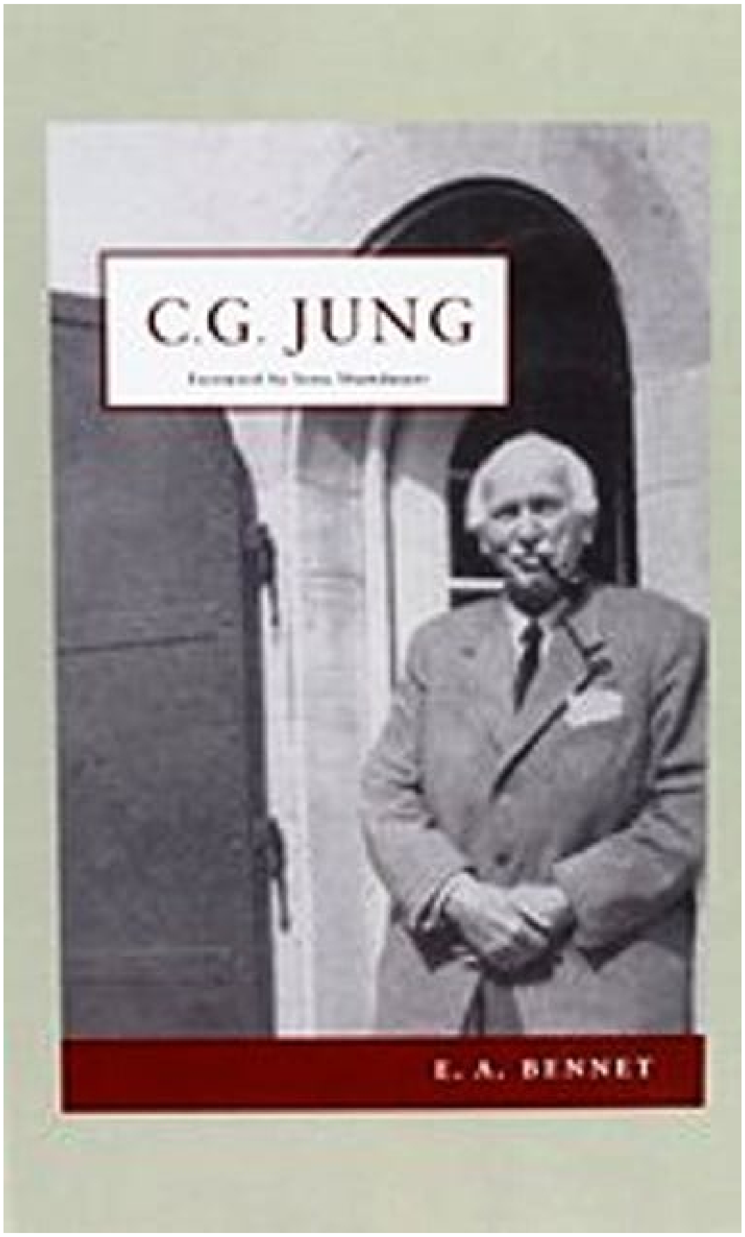
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/ef576-1bollingen.jpg`

E.A. Bennet: He [Jung] is working on a manuscript with Marie-Louise von Franz. (2019-12-10 04:30)

[1]



[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Küsnacht, 14th January 1952

Breakfast with C.G. and Mrs. Jung, and a walk afterwards with C.G.

He spoke of communists as people without ideals, with whom you could never make a treaty; the peace talks were all nonsense, to wear out the Americans.

You can't make peace with termites, they just go on and on; that's how it is with the Russians and it's best to realise it.

It is constant attrition, and there's no end to it.

He is working on a manuscript with Marie-Louise von Franz.

It is an old manuscript he found in the British Museum and there are copies; one was in Leyden for safety during the War.

She is writing a commentary on it, and it will be published as a companion volume to his own writing.

He told me how, when he built his house here forty-three years ago, there were meadows all round; the road was quiet and about twice the width of the drive up to the house.

His hedge had been at the kerb of the present sidepath and when the road was widened he had to give up part of his garden.

We went along to a little park and sat in a shelter – pretty cold, but sunny.

In the evening, after my lecture and dinner later with friends, I returned to Küsnacht at 10.15. Mrs. Jung let me in and said they were in the library.

There was C.G. in his usual chair by the window under the lamp.

He looked rather older and a bit tired, but he was full of life and, as always, went on to some topic.

He wanted to know how many petitions there were in the Lord's Prayer, because he was writing of this (I think correcting galley proofs of his book on Job).

I said they were really requests or statements rather than petitions, and he agreed that requests was the right word.

'Give us this day our daily bread', not just ordinary bread but the thing we live by.

He preferred Jerome's rendering.

And he spoke of the wonderful language of the English translation of the Bible, and also of the Zürich Bible, an excellent translation.

He showed me the papal pronouncement, which is in all languages as well as in seventeenth century baroque Latin; he said I should get a copy as it is immensely interesting.

It was quite a striking picture – C.G. with grey hair and feet up on a chair discussing the type of Latin, And Mrs. Jung behind, a sad look on her face at times.

15th January 1952

Walk in the morning with C.G. – got onto the unconscious.

At breakfast he had said how valuable patients' pictures were because they gave us knowledge of the unconscious which was not direct.

We can't look at the unconscious directly, it absorbs us.

It's like the legend of Perseus who cut off the Gorgon's head: he could not look at it and could not cut it off unless he did, so he used his shield as a mirror.

Guided by the reflection in a sideways manner, he wielded his diamond-edged sword and smote off Medusa's head.

Primitives, he said, are in the unconscious all the time.

In Africa, with the natives on Mount Elgon, he had to express himself very dramatically to get them to the point of action when he wanted them to do anything.

He spoke of the three principles in science – time, space and causality – and the need for a fourth, namely synchronicity.

It is a principle.

The book he has been writing with a physicist on these things is not yet published.

He mentioned his correspondence, it was 'too much', he would have to give it all his time if he were to attend to it properly.

16th January 1952

Walk after breakfast with C.G. Sunny.

He told me again, but in a different way than formerly, his dream of the mediaeval house, as follows:

I am on the first floor of a house, furnished a bit like my study – a sort of eighteenth century type.

Now I must see what is downstairs.

Beautiful old staircase, and the ground floor is sixteenth century-old, heavy, but beautiful furniture.

I thought, 'This is nice, I didn't know it was here – perhaps there is a cellar.'

And there was. I went down – bare walls, the plaster coming off, and behind were Roman bricks; a stone-flagged floor at the bottom.

In one corner was a stone with a ring in it.

I lifted it and looked down, and below were prehistoric remains – bones, skulls and old pottery.

He had this dream during his visit to Clark University in America with Freud.

He told the dream to Freud who said it must mean he wanted to get rid of someone.

Freud kept pressing this point and then said, ‘Well, it must mean you want to get rid of your wife.’

In their discussion Freud disregarded everything in the dream except the bones and skulls, which he related to the death of someone.

He saw the dream only from the point of view of his theory.

Freud was bound up in his theory, it was protective; everything must be reduced to something derogatory, Then you were in a superior position.

So with spirituality – to Freud it was nothing but sexuality.

For him everything could be explained.

He asked Jung to promise: ‘Promise me that you will support the dogma of sexuality.

If we have no dogma, then the black flood of occultism will sweep in and swallow us.’

The Freudians are all suffering from folie à deux and reduce everything to something else.

As against this is Jung’s notion of the collective unconscious, something bigger and greater existing in its own right.

Sitting in the shelter he told me as he finished recounting the dream of the mediaeval house, ‘It was then, at that moment, I got the idea of the collective unconscious.’

He said he had had a dream over and over again, before 1930, of a new wing in his house, a lovely room full of wonderful manuscripts.

He could make nothing of this then, but when he began to study alchemy he found that it had all been foreshadowed in this recurring dream.

He said it was always like this with his dreams; he would dream of what he would write – like the mediaeval house dream and the notion of the collective unconscious.

17th January 1952

We talked of dreams and organic disease, and he spoke of a girl with muscular atrophy.

He was consulted and asked for her dreams.

She had two: in one her mother was hanging – had hanged herself – from the candelabra in the centre of the room and was swinging there.

In the second dream a horse had gone mad and was in the house; it rushed along the corridor and jumped out of the window.

The mother, the source of life, and the horse, the life principle. C.G. felt, therefore, that the outlook was bad.

He said she was not neurotic, she had the disease and the prognosis was grave.

Sure enough, she died.

In the case of a man, an American he was seeing, a similar situation evolved.

This man dreamt of his father dying, and that meant himself – ‘I and my Father are one’.

Then one day he complained of his throat – some pain or tightness. C.G. thought it could be his heart.

He examined the man’s heart himself and then sent him to a cardiac specialist who said there was nothing wrong. C.G. wasn’t satisfied; he said that as he had sent the patient the specialist had probably thought, ‘Oh, it’s one of those neurotics!’

He sent the patient back for a second consultation telling him that if the specialist found his heart was sound he should get him to state it in writing, and he did so.

On the way home after this consultation, with the letter in his pocket saying that there was nothing wrong with him, the man fell dead.

He had an aortic aneurysm and the specialist had missed it.

Yesterday C.G. spoke of the Oedipus complex, that Freud had misunderstood it.

Oedipus did not know who it was when he killed his father; he was just a man he met.

This whole dogma was built on a misunderstanding.

It had been snowing in the night and the sun was shining this morning when we went for a walk, but it was cold.

C.G. wore his fur cap.

And then the snow came on again.

This afternoon we had five students at the Jung’s house.

They came, at their request, to discuss case material with me.

Before the meeting C.G. met them in his library and chatted for a few moments.

Then we gathered for the discussion and Mrs. Jung came in and joined the group.

Shortly after, C.G. came in also.

So I found myself conducting a seminar with, as audience, C.G., his wife, and five students.

C.G. did not remain throughout but left after half an hour having contributed to the discussion about my patient’s pictures.

At dinner we talked of it all and of other cases.

Of one patient he said, ‘Let him alone and see what the unconscious has to say,’ adding, ‘Often I’ve been very glad that I haven’t acted as the saviour.’

18th January 1952

Freudian psychology is neurotic psychology.

It is based on patients, and patients like the idea that someone has a theory which explains their troubles.

You never think in somatic disease about its cause only, you have to deal with it in the present.

It’s no help just to search for causes and then blame the parents.

Why not have the parents as the patients?

Freud’s doctrine of resistance: he said of C.G. when he opposed him, ‘That’s only resistance.’

But it might be another point of view; if we persist on and on that it is only resistance people get exhausted and may give up their neurosis.

But the neurosis shows fight, it’s a good thing.

At times C.G. has had to re-create a neurosis in order to get vitality into the treatment – for instance when a patient is just flat and deflated.

I raised the question of projections.

He said, ‘Well, they always appear, and we must expect them.

The physician is in the situation and must be prepared to be hurt; if no disease,
He mentioned a patient who could not talk, and he said, ‘What’s wrong with you?

Why don’t you say what you’ve come to say?’

She asked for a mirror and looked at herself in it, and then added that before seeing him she always looked in the mirror in the waiting room.

She was dissociated and had to do this in order to know where she was.

When people talk continuously in a stream it is because they don’t want to come to the point, and he may just let them go on.

Once with such a patient he fell asleep and had a dream while she was talking; the patient did not notice, and he told her.

She remarked, ‘Oh, really!’ and at once resumed her monologue.

‘It’s amazing,’ said C.G., ‘how auto-erotic some people are.’

The psychology of the Jew is bound up with his intellectual capacities and the other side, his instincts, suffer.

He illustrated this comment with the story of a Rabbi and his pupils.

The Rabbi was teaching, and the pupils agreed with everything he said.

Then he stated, ‘A barking dog never bites,’ and they assented.

Soon after they came to a farm and the dog ran out barking at them.

At once the Rabbi gathered up his skirts and, with his students, ran into a wood. ‘But,’ they said, ‘you told us a barking dog never bites, why did you run away?’

‘Well,’ he replied, ‘it’s quite true, but the dog might not know it.’

‘So if you have a theory you must disregard everything else!’ added C.G.

At breakfast he spoke of astrology (one of his daughters is interested in it), and of a German book in which he is criticised for giving support to horoscopes.

One author wrote to him saying it could not be proved, it was all nonsense; and he had replied, ‘But I have always known this.’

He went on, ‘It’s like “bringing owls to Athens”, what is the sense in telling me it can’t be proved?

Of course it can’t!

What I want to know is why it works, for it is amazing how useful it can be.

Like the I Ching, it’s all nonsense if you like; but then it can be absolutely relevant – how is that?

Naturally we can’t always prove things.

But there may be some other sort of truth; and it may be true on a basis we don’t know of.

So if we are reasonable we say we don’t know how it works; but it can certainly give astonishing insight into character.’

Doctors pay no attention to the mind, to he soul.

Nor does the Church – we have all got to be miserable sinners and get rid of ourselves and accept a dogma which will save us.

He spoke of psychology as a branch of natural science or medicine.

The physician for internal diseases must learn and know what happens when food goes into the stomach.

Likewise with the mind, it was precisely the same.

Hence his question at the eminar yesterday when discussing my patient’s pictures:

‘What would you expect the unconscious to be doing in these pictures, having heard the case history of dissociation?’

The answer: to produce a compensation, and that is what we find in the first picture and in the others.

There is bound to be a reaction.

We get patients to draw pictures in order to release something, to let us see what is going on, what the unconscious is doing. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 77-93

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/1248a-392bbennet.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+bennet+conversations&qid=1575973732&sr=8-1`

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-10 04:59)

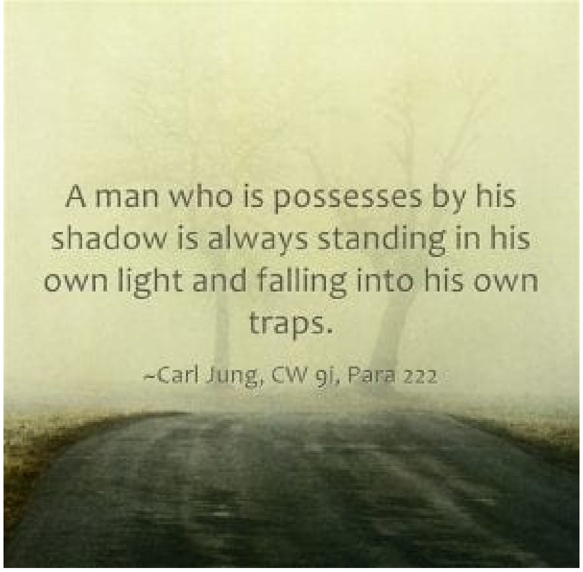
Together the patient and I address ourselves to the 2,000,000-year-old man that is in all of us. In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us.

- -Carl Jung, NY Times, October 4, 1936.

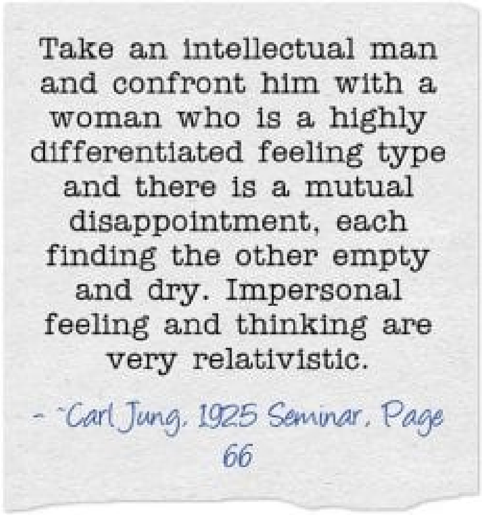
Together the patient and I address ourselves to the 2,000,000-year-old man that is in all of us. In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us. Carl Jung, NY Times, October 4, 1936.



A man who is possesses by his shadow is always standing in his own light and falling into his own traps.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 222

A man who is possesses by his shadow is always standing in his own light and falling into his own traps. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 222



Take an intellectual man and confront him with a woman who is a highly differentiated feeling type and there is a mutual disappointment, each finding the other empty and dry. Impersonal feeling and thinking are very relativistic.

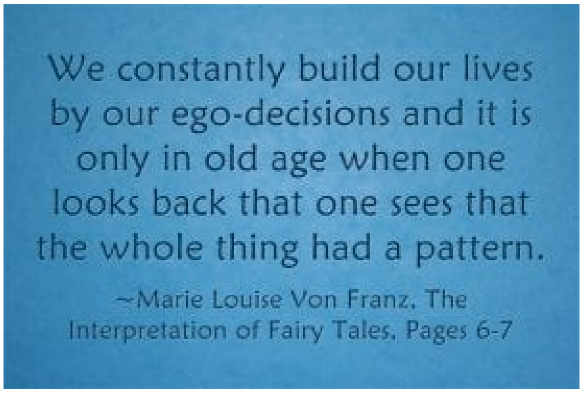
- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66

Take an intellectual man and confront him with a woman who is a highly differentiated feeling type and there is a mutual disappointment, each finding the other empty and dry. Impersonal feeling and thinking are very relativistic. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66

If I get another perfectly normal adult malingering as a sick patient I'll have him certified!

- Carl Jung to Emma Jung. [Vincent Brome Biography]

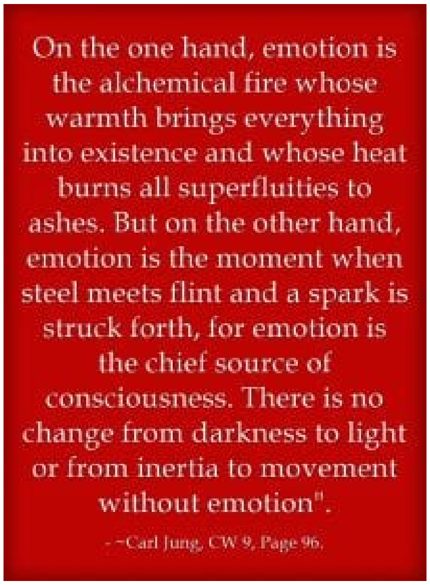
If I get another perfectly normal adult malingering as a sick patient I'll have him certified! Carl Jung to Emma Jung. [Vincent Brome Biography]



We constantly build our lives by our ego-decisions and it is only in old age when one looks back that one sees that the whole thing had a pattern.

~Marie Louise Von Franz, The Interpretation of Fairy Tales, Pages 6-7

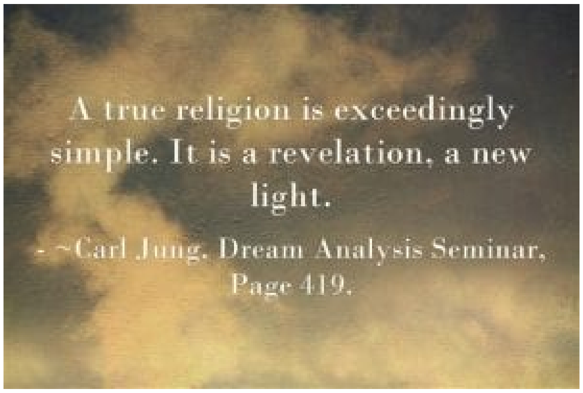
We constantly build our lives by our ego-decisions and it is only in old age when one looks back that one sees that the whole thing had a pattern. Marie Louise Von Franz, The Interpretation of Fairy Tales, Pages 6-7



On the one hand, emotion is the alchemical fire whose warmth brings everything into existence and whose heat burns all superfluities to ashes. But on the other hand, emotion is the moment when steel meets flint and a spark is struck forth, for emotion is the chief source of consciousness. There is no change from darkness to light or from inertia to movement without emotion".

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9, Page 96.

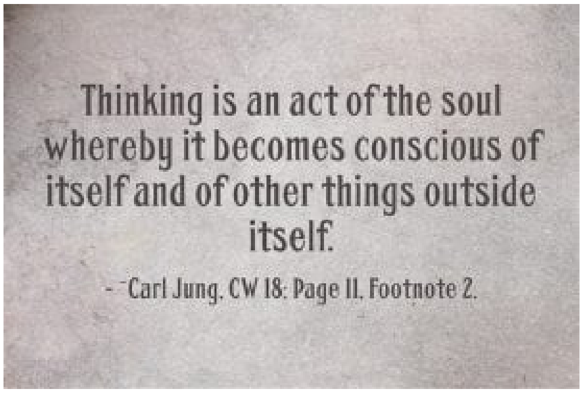
On the one hand, emotion is the alchemical fire whose warmth brings everything into existence and whose heat burns all superfluities to ashes. But on the other hand, emotion is the moment when steel meets flint and a spark is struck forth, for emotion is the chief source of consciousness. There is no change from darkness to light or from inertia to movement without emotion". Carl Jung, CW 9, Page 96.



A true religion is exceedingly simple. It is a revelation, a new light.

- ~Carl Jung, Dream Analysis Seminar, Page 419.

A true religion is exceedingly simple. It is a revelation, a new light. Carl Jung, Dream Analysis Seminar, Page 419.



Thinking is an act of the soul whereby it becomes conscious of itself and of other things outside itself.

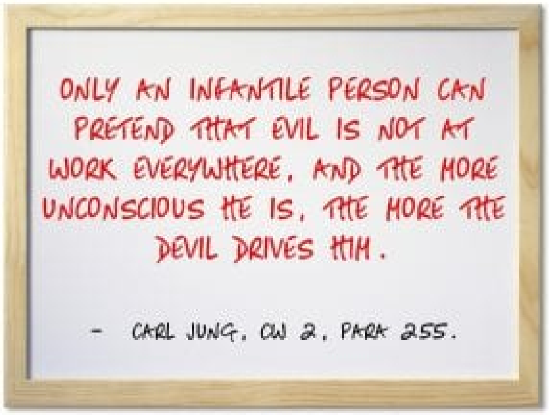
- ~Carl Jung, CW 18: Page 11, Footnote 2.

Thinking is an act of the soul whereby it becomes conscious of itself and of other things outside itself. Carl Jung, CW 18; Page 11, Footnote 2.

The earth has a spirit of her own, a beauty of her own.

- ~Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 133

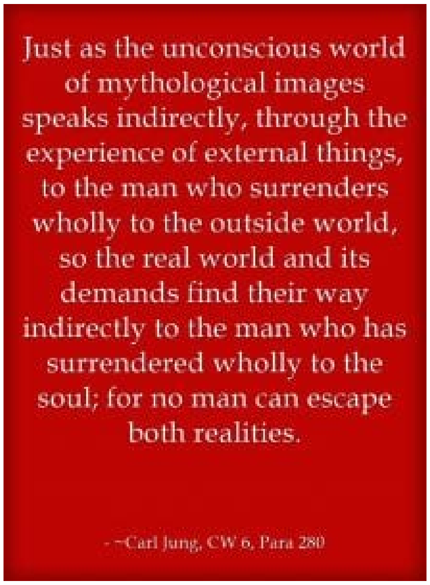
The earth has a spirit of her own, a beauty of her own. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 133



ONLY AN INFANTILE PERSON CAN PRETEND THAT EVIL IS NOT AT WORK EVERYWHERE, AND THE MORE UNCONSCIOUS HE IS, THE MORE THE DEVIL DRIVES HIM.

- CARL JUNG, CW 2, PARA 255.

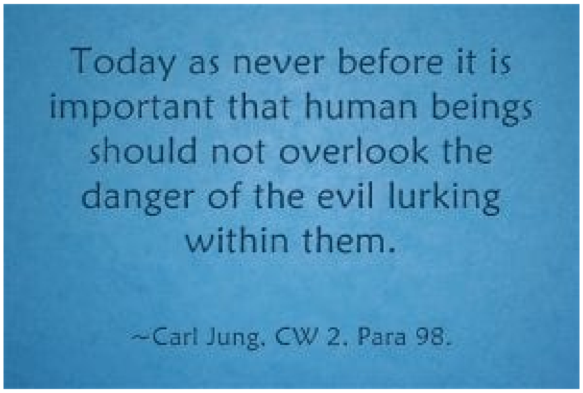
Only an infantile person can pretend that evil is not at work everywhere, and the more unconscious he is, the more the devil drives him. Carl Jung, CW 2, Para 255.



Just as the unconscious world of mythological images speaks indirectly, through the experience of external things, to the man who surrenders wholly to the outside world, so the real world and its demands find their way indirectly to the man who has surrendered wholly to the soul; for no man can escape both realities.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 280

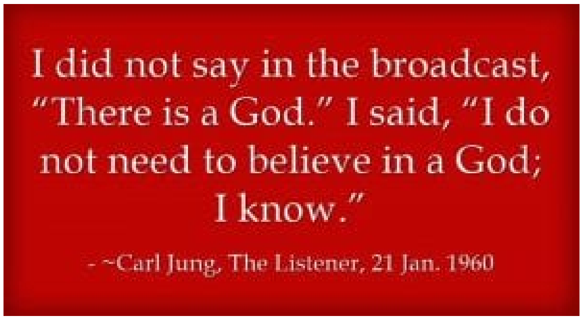
Just as the unconscious world of mythological images speaks indirectly, through the experience of external things, to the man who surrenders wholly to the outside world, so the real world and its demands find their way indirectly to the man who has surrendered wholly to the soul; for no man can escape both realities. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 280



Today as never before it is important that human beings should not overlook the danger of the evil lurking within them.

~Carl Jung, CW 2, Para 98.

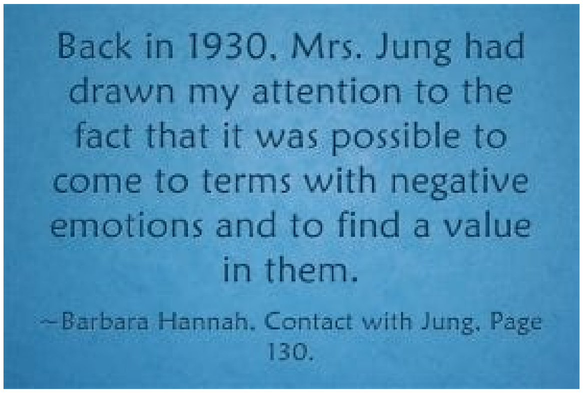
Today as never before it is important that human beings should not overlook the danger of the evil lurking within them. Carl Jung, CW 2, Para 98.



I did not say in the broadcast, "There is a God." I said, "I do not need to believe in a God; I know."

- ~Carl Jung, The Listener, 21 Jan. 1960

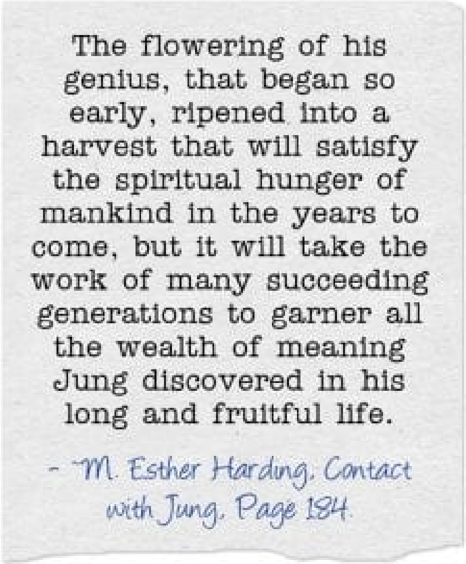
I did not say in the broadcast, "There is a God." I said, "I do not need to believe in a God; I know." Carl Jung, The Listener, 21 Jan. 1960



Back in 1930, Mrs. Jung had drawn my attention to the fact that it was possible to come to terms with negative emotions and to find a value in them.

~Barbara Hannah, Contact with Jung, Page 130.

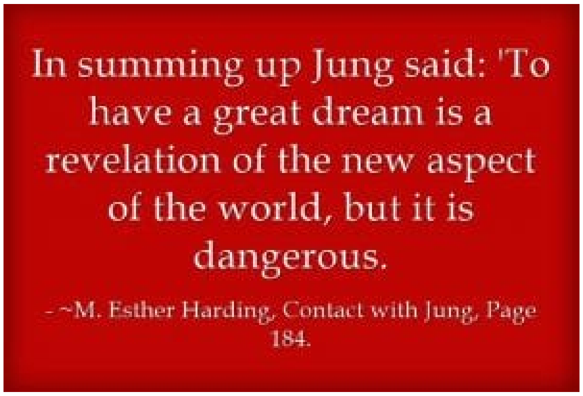
Back in 1930, Mrs. Jung had drawn my attention to the fact that it was possible to come to terms with negative emotions and to find a value in them. Barbara Hannah, Contact with Jung, Page 130.



The flowering of his genius, that began so early, ripened into a harvest that will satisfy the spiritual hunger of mankind in the years to come, but it will take the work of many succeeding generations to garner all the wealth of meaning Jung discovered in his long and fruitful life.

- ~M. Esther Harding, Contact with Jung, Page 184.

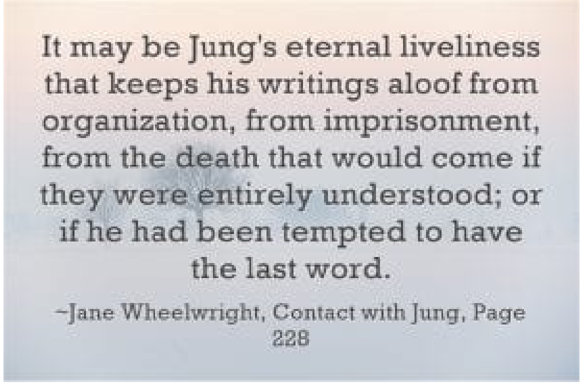
The flowering of his genius, that began so early, ripened into a harvest that will satisfy the spiritual hunger of mankind in the years to come, but it will take the work of many succeeding generations to garner all the wealth of meaning Jung discovered in his long and fruitful life. M. Esther Harding, Contact with Jung, Page 184.



In summing up Jung said: 'To have a great dream is a revelation of the new aspect of the world, but it is dangerous.

- ~M. Esther Harding, Contact with Jung, Page 184.

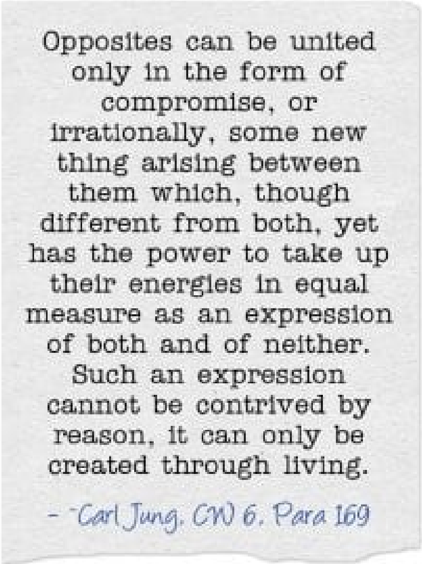
In summing up Jung said: ’To have a great dream is a revelation of the new aspect of the world, but it is dangerous. M. Esther Harding, Contact with Jung, Page 184.



It may be Jung's eternal liveliness that keeps his writings aloof from organization, from imprisonment, from the death that would come if they were entirely understood; or if he had been tempted to have the last word.

~Jane Wheelwright, Contact with Jung, Page 228

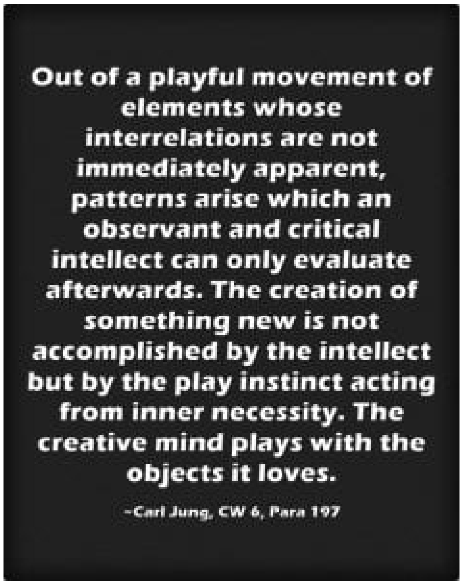
It may be Jung’s eternal liveliness that keeps his writings aloof from organization, from imprisonment, from the death that would come if they were entirely understood; or if he had been tempted to have the last word. Jane Wheelwright, Contact with Jung, Page 228



Opposites can be united only in the form of compromise, or irrationally, some new thing arising between them which, though different from both, yet has the power to take up their energies in equal measure as an expression of both and of neither. Such an expression cannot be contrived by reason, it can only be created through living.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 169

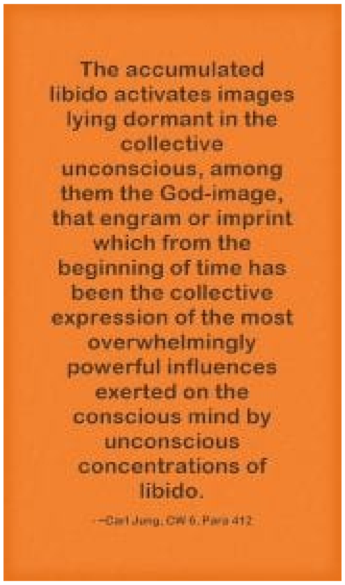
Opposites can be united only in the form of compromise, or irrationally, some new thing arising between them which, though different from both, yet has the power to take up their energies in equal measure as an expression of both and of neither. Such an expression cannot be contrived by reason, it can only be created through living. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 169



Out of a playful movement of elements whose interrelations are not immediately apparent, patterns arise which an observant and critical intellect can only evaluate afterwards. The creation of something new is not accomplished by the intellect but by the play instinct acting from inner necessity. The creative mind plays with the objects it loves.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 197

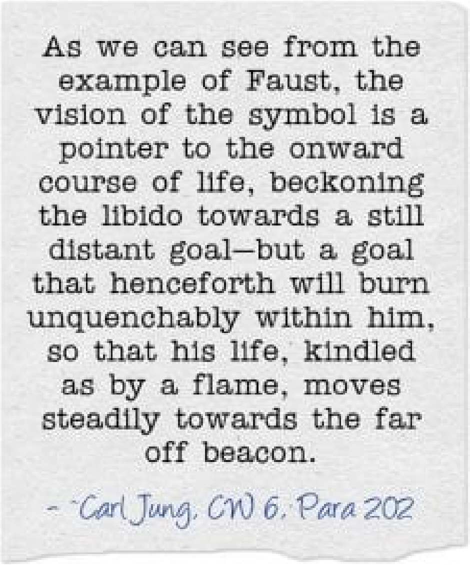
Out of a playful movement of elements whose interrelations are not immediately apparent, patterns arise which an observant and critical intellect can only evaluate afterwards. The creation of something new is not accomplished by the intellect but by the play instinct acting from inner necessity. The creative mind plays with the objects it loves. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 197



The accumulated libido activates images lying dormant in the collective unconscious, among them the God-image, that engram or imprint which from the beginning of time has been the collective expression of the most overwhelmingly powerful influences exerted on the conscious mind by unconscious concentrations of libido.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 412

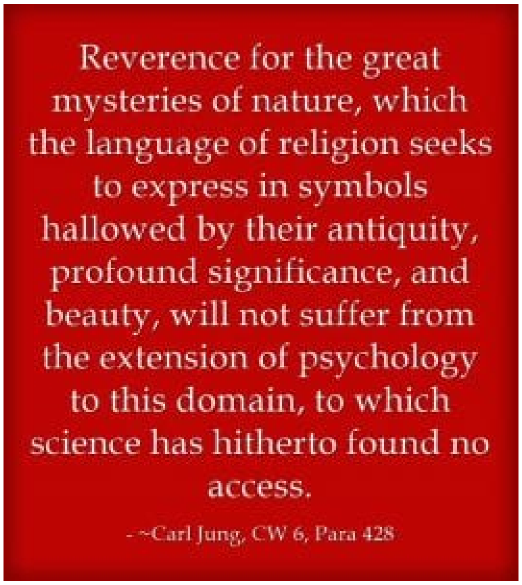
The accumulated libido activates images lying dormant in the collective unconscious, among them the God-image, that engram or imprint which from the beginning of time has been the collective expression of the most overwhelmingly powerful influences exerted on the conscious mind by unconscious concentrations of libido. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 412



As we can see from the example of Faust, the vision of the symbol is a pointer to the onward course of life, beckoning the libido towards a still distant goal—but a goal that henceforth will burn unquenchably within him, so that his life, kindled as by a flame, moves steadily towards the far off beacon.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 202

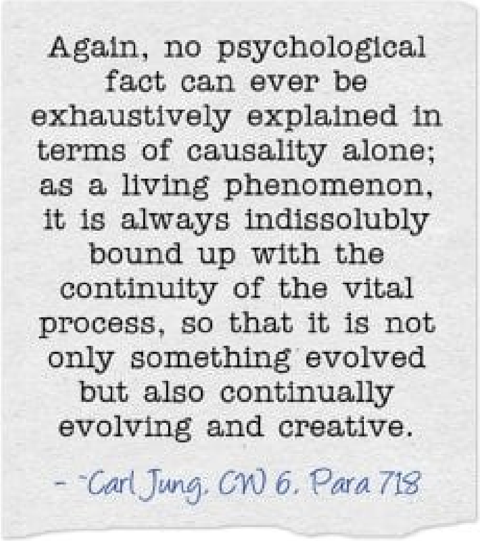
As we can see from the example of Faust, the vision of the symbol is a pointer to the onward course of life, beckoning the libido towards a still distant goal—but a goal that henceforth will burn unquenchably within him, so that his life, kindled as by a flame, moves steadily towards the far off beacon. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 202



Reverence for the great mysteries of nature, which the language of religion seeks to express in symbols hallowed by their antiquity, profound significance, and beauty, will not suffer from the extension of psychology to this domain, to which science has hitherto found no access.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 428

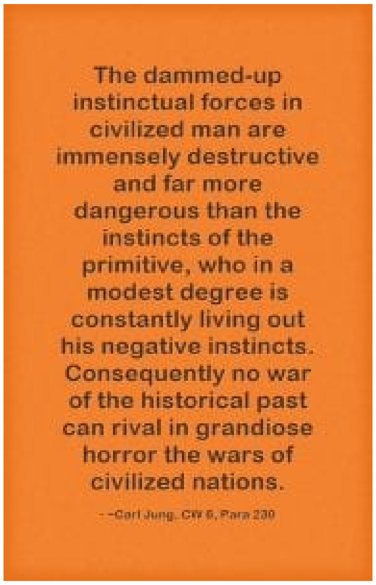
Reverence for the great mysteries of nature, which the language of religion seeks to express in symbols hallowed by their antiquity, profound significance, and beauty, will not suffer from the extension of psychology to this domain, to which science has hitherto found no access. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 428



Again, no psychological fact can ever be exhaustively explained in terms of causality alone; as a living phenomenon, it is always indissolubly bound up with the continuity of the vital process, so that it is not only something evolved but also continually evolving and creative.

- -Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 718

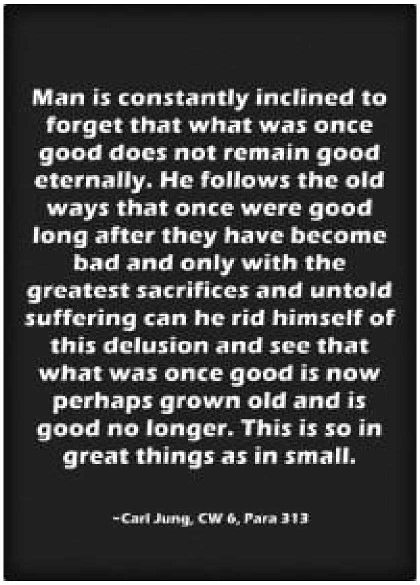
Again, no psychological fact can ever be exhaustively explained in terms of causality alone; as a living phenomenon, it is always indissolubly bound up with the continuity of the vital process, so that it is not only something evolved but also continually evolving and creative. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 718



The dammed-up instinctual forces in civilized man are immensely destructive and far more dangerous than the instincts of the primitive, who in a modest degree is constantly living out his negative instincts. Consequently no war of the historical past can rival in grandiose horror the wars of civilized nations.

- -Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 230

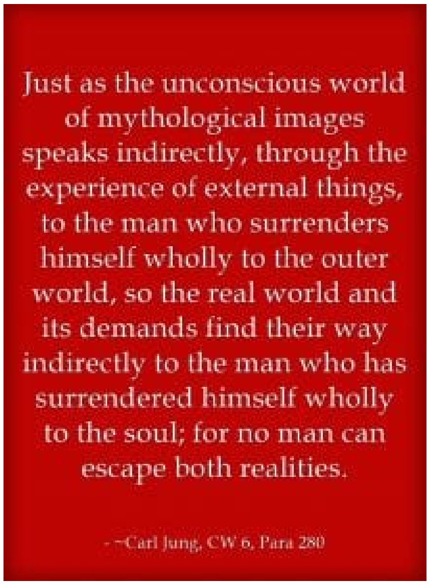
The dammed-up instinctual forces in civilized man are immensely destructive and far more dangerous than the instincts of the primitive, who in a modest degree is constantly living out his negative instincts. Consequently no war of the historical past can rival in grandiose horror the wars of civilized nations. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 230



Man is constantly inclined to forget that what was once good does not remain good eternally. He follows the old ways that once were good long after they have become bad and only with the greatest sacrifices and untold suffering can he rid himself of this delusion and see that what was once good is now perhaps grown old and is good no longer. This is so in great things as in small.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 313

Man is constantly inclined to forget that what was once good does not remain good eternally. He follows the old ways that once were good long after they have become bad and only with the greatest sacrifices and untold suffering can he rid himself of this delusion and see that what was once good is now perhaps grown old and is good no longer. This is so in great things as in small. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 313



Just as the unconscious world of mythological images speaks indirectly, through the experience of external things, to the man who surrenders himself wholly to the outer world, so the real world and its demands find their way indirectly to the man who has surrendered himself wholly to the soul; for no man can escape both realities.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 280

Just as the unconscious world of mythological images speaks indirectly, through the experience of external things, to the man who surrenders himself wholly to the outer world, so the real world and its demands find their way indirectly to the man who has surrendered himself wholly to the soul; for no man can escape both realities. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 280

Carl Jung: One could describe these movements . . . as levitation, if one assumes that the objects moved by themselves. (2019-12-10 05:21)

[1]Jung’s Last Years and Other Essays (Jungian Classics Series)

In 1961, the year of his death, looking back on the phenomena he had observed, Jung wrote in a letter:

“I have seen objects moving that were not directly touched, and moreover under absolutely satisfactory scientific conditions.

One could describe these movements . . . as levitation, if one assumes that the objects moved by themselves.

But this does not seem to be the case, because all the bodies that apparently moved by themselves moved as though lifted, shaken, or thrown by someone’s hand.

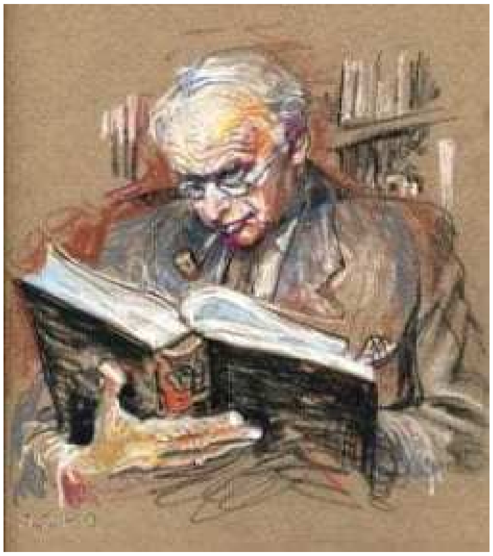
In this series of experiments I, together with other observers, saw a hand and felt its pressure-apparently the hand that caused all the other phenomena of this kind.

The phenomena have nothing to do with the "will," since they occurred only when the medium was in a trance and precisely not in control of his will.

The phenomena seem to fall into the category of poltergeist manifestations.” Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 11.

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Jungs-Years-Essays-Jungian-Classics/dp/0882145053/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+jaffe+last+years&qid=1575973908&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung Institutes, Societies, Organizations, Discussion Groups (2019-12-10 05:34)



A.E. Waite [1]A.E. Waite The Hermetic Museum

Alchemical Texts in English: [2]Alchemical Texts in English

Alchemy Website [3]The Alchemy Website

Amy and Arnold Mindell Website - [4]Amy and Arnold Mindell Website

Analytical Psychology Club of San Francisco [5]Analytical Psychology Club of San Francisco

Analytical Society of Western New York [6]APSWNY/Jung Center Buffalo

Apple Farm Community [7]Apple Farm Jungian Retreat Center

ARAS C.G. Jung Concordance [8]ARAS C.G. Jung Concordance

Archetypes in Action [9]Archetypes in Action

Archive for Research in Archetypal Symbolism [[10]Archive Research in Archetypal Studies

Arthur Miller Deciphering the Cosmic Number: The Strange Friendship of Wolfgang Pauli and Carl Jung [11]Arthur Miller - Deciphering the Cosmic Number: The Strange Friendship of Wolfgang Pauli and Carl Jung

Asheville Jung Center [12]Asheville Jung Center

Assissi Institute Brattleboro, VT [13]Assissi Institute Brattleboro, VT

Association for Humanistic Psychology [14]Association for Humanistic Society

Atlanta Psychoanalytic Society [15]Atlanta Psychoanalytic Society

Barbara Hannah Jungian Active Imagination & Hypnagogia [16]Barbara Hannah - Jungian Active Imagination & Hypnagogia

Boulder Friends of Jung [17]Boulder Friends of Jung

C.G. Jung and Jungian Analysis [18]C.G. Jung and Jungian Analysis

C.G. Jung Association of Central Ohio [19]C.G. Jung Association of Central Ohio

C.G. Jung Center of Chicago[20]C.G. Jung Center of Chicago

C.G. Jung Center of Evanston [21]C.G. Jung Center of Evanston

C.G. Jung Center of Houston [22]C.G. Jung Center of Houston

C.G. Jung Center of New York [23]C.G. Jung Institute of New York City

C.G. Jung Center of Philadelphia [24]C.G. Jung Center of Philadelphia

C.G. Jung Foundation Books Series [25]C.G. Jung Foundation Books Series

C.G. Jung Center of San Antonio [26]C.G. Jung Center of San Antonio

C.G. Jung Club of Orange County, CA [27]C.G. Jung Club of Orange County CA.

C.G. Jung Foundation of New York City [28]C.G. Jung Foundation of New York City

C.G. Jung Institute of Boston [29]C.G. Jung Institute of Boston

C.G. Jung Institute of Chicago [30]C.G. Jung Institute of Chicago

C.G. Jung Institute of Dallas [31]C.G. Jung Institute of Dallas

C.G. Jung Institute of Los Angeles [32]C.G. Jung Institute of Los Angeles

C.G. Jung Institute of San Francisco [33]C.G. Jung Institute of San Francisco

C.G. Jung Institute of Santa Fe [34]C.G. Jung Institute of Santa Fe

C.G. Jung page [35]C.G. Jung Page

C.G. Jung Society of Atlanta [36]C.G. Jung Society of Atlanta

C.G. Jung Society of Austin [37]C.G. Jung Society of Atlanta

C.G. Jung Society of the Triangle [38]C.G. Jung Society of the Triangle

C.G. Jung Society of Colorado [39]C.G. Jung Society of Colorado

C.G. Jung Society of Colorado Springs[40]C.G. Jung Society of Colorado Springs

C.G. Jung Society of Lafayette, Louisiana [41]C.G. Jung Society of Lafayette, Louisiana

C.G. Jung Society of New Mexico [42]C.G. Jung Society of Santa Fe, N.M.

C.G. Jung Society of New Orleans [43]C.G. Jung Society of New Orleans

C.G. Jung Society of New York [44]C.G. Jung Society of New York

C.G. Jung Society of Northern Alaska[45]C.G. Jung Society of Northern Alaska

C.G. Jung Society of North Texas [46]C.G. Jung Society of North Texas

C.G. Jung Society of Olympia [47]C.G. Jung Society of Olympia, Washington

C.G. Jung Society of Sarasota [48]C.G. Jung Society of Sarasota, FL.

C.G. Jung Society of Seattle [49]C.G. Jung Society of Seattle, WA.

C.G. Jung Society of St. Louis [50]C.G. Jung Society of St. Louis, MO

C.G. Jung Society of Utah [51]C.G. Jung Society of Utah

C.G. Jung Society of Vermont [52]C.G. Jung Society of Vermont

C.G. Jung Society of Washington [53]C.G. Jung Society of Washington

C.G. Jung Society of West Jersey [54]C.G. Jung Society of West Jersey

C.G. Jung's Funeral Sermon [55]Carl Jung's Funeral Sermon given by Pastor Werner Meyer

Center for Jungian Studies [South Florida] [56]Center for Jungian Studies of South Florida

Centerpoint Education Center [57]Centerpoint Education Center

Charleston Jung Society [58]Charleston Jung Society

Chrysalis Institute [59]Chrisalis Institute

Clark University [60]Clark University Jung/Freud Files

Colorado Sand Play Therapy Association [61]Colorado Sand Play Association

Connecticut Association of Jungian Studies[62]Connecticut Association of Jungian Studies

Daryl Sharp C.G. Jung Lexicon [63]Daryl Sharp C..G. Jung Lexicon

Dream Studies/Lucid Dreaming [64]Dream Studies Lucid Dreaming Organization

Enrique Eskenazi Blog [65]Enrique Eskenazi Jungian Blog

Erich Neumann Art and the Creative unconscious: [66]Erich Neumann Art and the Creative Unconscious

Erich Neumann The Great Mother [67]Erich Neumann The Great Mother

Erich Neumann Origin and History of Consciousness: [68]Erich Neumann The Origin and History of Consciousness Vol. 2

ETH C.G. Jung Papers Collection [69]ETH C.G. Jung Papers Collection

Fay Lecture Series [70]The Fay Lecture Series

Florida Association of Jungian Analysts [71]Florida Association of Jungian Analysts

Foundation C.G. Jung, Institutes, Alumni, Supporters & Friends [72]Foundation C.G. Jung Institutes for Alumni, Supporters, & Friends

Friedrich Nietzche - The Complete Works of Friedrich Nietzche [73]The Complete Works of Friedrich Nietzche

Friends of Jung Boulder, AZ [74]Friends of Jung Boulder, AZ

Friends of Jung Central Indiana [75]Central Indiana Friends of Jung

Friends of Jung Charlotte [76] Charlotte Friends of Jung

Friends of Jung Cincinnati [77]Friends of Jung Cincinnati, OH

Friends of Jung Cleveland, OH [78]Friends of Jung Cleveland, OH

Friends of Jung Glens Falls, NY [79]Friends of Jung Glens Falls, NY

Friends of Jung Greenville, SC [80]Friends of Jung Greenville, SC

Friends of Jung Eugene, OR [81]Friends of Jung Eugene, OR

Friends of Jung Idaho [82]Friends of Jung Idaho

Friends of Jung Kansas City [83]Friends of Jung Kansas City, MO

Friends of Jung Michigan [84]Friends of Jung in Michigan

Friends of Jung in Northwest Arkansas [85]Friends of Jung in Northwest Arkansas

Friends of Jung in Omaha Nebraska [86]Friend of Jung in Omaha, Nebraska

Friends of Jung in Oregon [87]Friends of Jung in Oregon

Friends of Jung in Phoenix Az. [88]Friends of Jung in Phoenix, AZ

Friends of Jung San Diego[89] Friends of Jung San Diego, CA

Friends of Jung Seattle, WA. [90]Friends of Jung in Seattle, WA.

Friends of Jung [South Alabama] [91]Friends of Jung South Alabama

Friends of Jung Southern, AZ. [92]Friends of Jung in Southern Arizona

Gnosis Archive [93]Gnosis Archive

Gnostic Library Alchemical Texts [94]Gnostic Library Alchemical Texts

Haden Institute [North Carolina] [95]Haden Institute of North Carolina

Henry Corbin Legacy: [96]Henry Corbin Legacy

Henry Corbin Official Website: [97]Official Henry Corbin Website

Heidekolb’s Blog [98]Heidekolb’s Blog

Hilde Kirsch Children’s Center [99]Hilde Kirsch Children’s Center

Houston Jung Center [100]Jung Center of Houston, TX

[101]IAAP

Institute of Analytical Psychology (Brazil) [102]Institute of Analytical Psychology [Brazil]

International Association for Jungian Studies [103]International Association for Jungian Studies

International Association for the Study of Dreams [104]International Association for the Study of Dreams

International Dictionary of Psychoanalysis 1871 [105]The International Dictionary of Psychoanalysis

International Society for Psychology as the Discipline for Interiority [106]Psychology as the Discipline of Interiority

Internet Sacred Texts [Alchemy] [107]Internet Sacred Texts [Alchemy]

Inter-regional Society of Jungian Analysts [108]Interegional Society of Jungian Analysts

James Hollis [109]James Hollis Website

J. Gary Sparks [110]J. Gary Sparks Website

Jenna Lilla Self-Realization [111]Jenna Lilla Self-Realization

Journal of Psy Art University of Florida [112]Journal of Psy Art

Journey Conferences [North Carolina] [113]Journey Conferences of North Carolina

Jung 2.0 http://[114]Jung 2.0 Website

Jung, Alchemy, & Consciousness [115]Jung, Alchemy and Consciousness

Jung, Crop Circles and the Re-Emergence of the Archetypal Feminine [116]Crop Circles and Reemergence of Archetypal Feminine

Jung Circle [117]C.G. Jung and Crop Circles

Jung Cleveland [118]C.G. Jung of Cleveland Ohio

Jung Currents [119]Dr. Stephen Parker's Jung Currents

Lance S. Owens The Red Book Lectures [120]The Red Book Lectures

Lance S. Owens C.G. Jung and Erich Neumann The Zaddik, Sophia, and the Shekinah [121]C.G. Jung and Erich Neumann

Living Human Heritage Foundation [122]Living Human Heritage Foundation

Maine Jung Center [123]C.G. Jung Maine Center

Marie Louise Von Franz [124]Marie Louise Von Franz Home Page

Marie Louise Von Franz (A Tribute to): [125]Marie Louise Von Franz [A Tribute to]

Marija Gimbutas [126]Marie Gimbutas Website

Marion Woodman Foundation [127]Marion Woodman Foundation

Minnesota Jung Association [128]C.G. Jung Association of Minnesota

Myth and the Real World Blog - [129]Myth and the Real World Blog

Myth, Dreams and Symbols Forum [130]Myth, Dreams and Symbols Forum

New York Association of Analytical Psychology [131]New York Association for Analytical Psychology

New York Center for Jungian Studies [132]New York Center for Jungian Studies

Nour Foundation [Synchronicity][133]Nour Foundation Study of Synchronicity

North Carolina Society of Jungian Analysts [134]Society of Jungian Analysts of North Carolina

North Pacific Institute for Analytical Psychology [135]North Pacific Institute for Analytical Psychology

Opus Archives [136]Opus Archives Website

Pacifica Graduate Institute [137]Pacifica Graduate Institute

Personality and Consciousness Bookstore [138]Personality and Consciousness Bookstore

Philadelphia Jungian Professional Club [139]Jungian Professional Club of Philadelphia

Pittsburgh Society of Jungian Analysts [140]Pittsburgh Society of Jungian Analysts

Research- and Training Centre for Depth Psychology [141]Research and Training Center for Depth Psychology

Robert Sardello "The Open Way" [142]Robert Sardello The Open Way

Sandplay Therapists of America [143]Sandplay Therapy of America

Saybrook Graduate School [144]Saybrook Graduate School

Sigmund Freud - The Comple Works of Sigmund Freud [145]The Complete Works of Sigmund Freud

Society of Analytical Psychology [146]Society of Analytical Psychology

Tallahassee Center for Jungian Studies [147]Center for Jungian Studies in Tallahassee, TN

Temenos Institute Website - [148]Temenos Academy

Bookstores:

Abe Books - [149]Abe Books in United Kingdom

Analytical Psychology Press [150]Analytical Psychology Press

C.G. Jung Foundation Book Service [151]C.G. Jung Foundation Book Service

Castle Books [152]Castle Books

Chiron [153]Chiron Publications

Daimon [154]Daimon Book Publishing

Fisher King Press [155]Fisher King Press

Folklore and Mythology Electronic Texts [156]Folklore and Mythology Electronic Texts

Inner City Books [157]Inner City Book Publishing

Jungian Analysts of Washington Association [158]Jungian Analysts of Washington Association

Karnac Books [159]Karnak Book Publishing

Kristine Mann Library [160]Kristine Mann Library

McKenzie Oaks Films [161]McKensie Oaks Films

Midwest Book Review [162]Midwest Book Reviews

Mythos Series [163]The Mythos Series from Princeton University Press

Opus -Magnum http://www.opus-magnum.de/

Parabola [164]Parabola Organization

Philemon Foundation [165]Philemon Foundation

Princeton University Press [166]Princeton University Press

Quadrant Journal of C.G. Jung Foundation NYC/ [167]Quadrant Journal of C.G. Jung Foundatioin

Routledge [168]Routledge Publishing

Shamballa Books [169]Shambala Book Publishing

Sophia Institute Charleston, SC [170]Sophia Institute Charleston, SC

Speaking of Jung [Podcasts] [171]Speaking of Jung Podcasts

Spring Books and Journals [172]Spring Books and Journals

Spring Publications [173]Spring Publications

Steiner Books [174]Steiner Book Publishing

Watkins Books [175]Watkins Book Publishing

Wiley-Blackwell Publishers [176]Wiley-Blackwell Publishing

Wisdom of the Dream [BBC Documentary] [177]BBC Wisdom of the Dream

Discussion Groups

Association for Psychological Type International (APTi) [178]Association of Analytical Type Internatioinal

Carl Jung Depth Psychology Blog [179]Carl Jung Depth Psychology Blog Blogger

Depth Psychology Alliance [180]Depth Psychology Alliance

The Power of Dreams [181]The Power of Dreams

Jung Journal [182]The Jung Journal

Open Foot [About the importance of Dreams] [183]Open Group on Importance of Dreams

Personality Type in Depth: [184]Personality Types in Depth

Antioch University Jungian Discussion Blog [185]Seattle Jungian Discussion Blog

Foreign:

Note: If you use a Google Chrome Browser with translation capabilities foreign languages will be translated into the language of your choice.

Argentina

C.G. Jung Foundation for Analytical Psychology [Argentina][186]C.G. Jung Foundation for Analytical Psychology: Argentina

Jung Center of Buenos Aires [187]Jung Center of Buenos Aires

Australia

Canberra Jung Society [188]Camberra Jung Society: Australia

C.G. Jung Society of Melbourne [189]C.G. Jung Society of Melbourne, Australia

C.G. Jung Society of Queensland [190]C.G. Jung Society of Queensland, Australia

C.G. Jung Society of Western Australia [191]C.G. Jung Society of Western Australia

Austria

Austrian Society for Analytical Psychology[OGAP] [192]Austrian Society for Analytical Psychology

Azerbaijan

Azerbaijan PsychiatricAssociation [193]Azerbajian Psychiatric Association

Brazil

Brazillian Society of Analytical Society [194]Brazilian Society of Analytical Psychology

Jungian Association of Brazil [195]Jungian Association of Brazil

Jungian Institute of San Paolo [196]Jungian Institute of San Paolo, Brazil

Jungian Thought [197]Jungian Thought Website of Brazil

Cambodia

The Transcultural Psychosocial Organisation Cambodia [198]Transcultural Psycho-Social Organization of Cambodia

Canada

Association of Analytical Psychologists of Quebec [199]Association of Analytical Psychologists of Quebec, Canada

C.G. Jung Foundation of Ontario [200]C.G. Jung Foundation of Ontario

C.G. Jung Society of Calgary [201]C.G. Jung Society of Calgary, Canada

C.G. Jung Society of Halifax [[202]C.G. Jung Society of Halifax, Canada on Facebook

C.G. Jung Society of Montreal [203]C.G. Jung Society of Montreal, Canada

Jung Forum Association of Edmonton [204]Jung Forum Association of Montreal, Canada

The University of Toronto Jungian Society [205]Jungian Society University of Toronto, Canada

C.G. Jung Society of Vancouver [206]C.G. Jung Society of Vancouver, Canada

C.G. Jung Society of Victoria [207]C.G. Jung Society of Victoria, Canada

Chile

Foundation for Analytical Psychology CG Jung Chile [208]Foundation of Analytical Psychology in Chile

China

Chinese Psychological Society [209]Psychological Society of Beijing, China

Columbia

Association for the Development of Analytical Psychology [210]Association of Analytical Psychology in Colombia

Cuba

Cuban Society of Psychology[211]Cuban Society of Psychology in Cuba

Cyprus:

Cyprus Psychologists Association [212]Psychologists Association of Cyprus

Czechoslavakia

Carl Gustave Jung [213]C.G. Jung website in Czechoslovakia

Denmark

C.G. Jung Institute of Copenhagen [214]C.G. Jung Institute of Copenhagen, Denmark

Danish Society of Analytical Psychology [215]Danish Society of Analytical Psychology

Forum of Analytical Psychology [216]Forum of Analytical Psychology of Denmark

Dominican Republic

Dominican College of Psychologists [217]College of Psychologists in Dominican Republic

England

Association of Jungian Analysts [218]Association of Jungian Analysts in United Kingdom

BBC Radio "In Our Time" Broadcasts[219]BBC Radio "In Our Time" Broadcasts

British Association for Psychological Type [220]British Association of Psychological Type

C.G. Jung Club London [221]C.G. Jung Club in London, England

Champernowne Trust [222]Champernowne Trust in United Kingdom

Guild of Analytical Psychology and Spirituality [223]Guild of Analytical Psychology in United Kingdom

Guild of Pastoral Psychology [224]Guild of Pastoral Psychology in United Kingdom

Independent Group of Analytical Psychologists [225]Independent Group of Analytical Psychologists United Kingdom

International Association of Jungian Studies [226]International Association of Jungian Studies

Sesame Institute [227]Sesame Institutengian Studies

Society of Analytical Psychology [228]Society of Analytical Psychology in United Kingdom

Psychotherapy Organization UKCP [229]Psychotherapy Organization in United Kingdom

University of Essex [230]University of Essex Jungian Studies

The West Midlands Institute of Psychotherapy [231]West Midlands Institute of Psychotherapy in United Kingdom

Equador

C.G. Jung Foundation of Equador [232]C.G. Jung Foundation of Equador

France

C.G. Jung Institute of France [233]C.G. Jung Institute of France

C.G.Jung.Net [234]C.G. Jung Website in France

Group of Study and Reflection of Analytical Psychology [235]Group Study of Analytical Psychology in France

European Association of Personality Psychology [236]Jungian Association of Personality Psychology

Germany

C.G. Jung Institute of Berlin [237]C.G. Jung Institute of Berlin, Germany

C.G. Jung Society of Cologne [238]C.G. Jung Society of Cologne, Germany

C.G. Jung Institute of Dresden, Germany [239]C.G. Jung Institute Dresden, Germany

C.G. Jung Institute of Munich [240]C.G. Jung Institute of Munich, Germany

C.G. Jung Institute of Stuttgart [241]C.G. Jung Institute of Stuttgart, Germany

Freiburg Forum of Analytical Psychology [242]Jung Forum of Analytical Psychology in Freiburg, Germany

Jung Journal and Forum[243]Jung Journal and Forum in Germany

European Jung Societies [244]European Jung Societies

Indian Association of Clinical Psychologists (IACP)[245]Association of Clinical Psychologists in India

National Academy of Psychology (India) [246]National Academy of Psychology India

USA-INDIA Jung Foundation [247]USA-INDIA Jung Foundation

Indonesia

Indonesian Psychological Association [248]Psychological Association of Indonesia

Ireland

Irish Analytical Psychology Association [249]Irish Analytical Psychology Association in Ireland

Israel

C.G. Jung Foundation of Israel [250]C.G. Jung Foundation of Israel

New Israel Jungian Society [251]New Israel Jungian Society

Italy

Assissi Institute [252]Assissi Institute in Italy

C.G. Jung Club of Florence [253]C.G. Jung Club of Florence, Italy

Center of Analytical Psychology Studies [254]Center of Analytical Psychology Studies in Italy

Center of Venetian-Jungian Studies [255]Center of Venetian Jungian Studies in Venice, Italy

Gaia Association [256]Gaia Association in Italy

Mediterranean Institute of Archetypal Psychology (IMPA) [257]Mediterranean Institute of Archetypal Psychology in Italy

Soul Studies[258]C.G. Jung Soul Studies in Italy

Japan

Japanese Psychological Association [259]Japanese Psychological Association in Japan

Korea

Korean Psychological Association [260]Korean Psychological Association

Lithuania

Lithuanian Association for Analytical Society [261]Lithuanian Association for Analytical Psychology

Mexico

C.G. Jung Center of Mexico [262]C.G. Jung Center of Mexico

Netherlands

Association for Analytical Psychology Netherlands [263]Netherlands Association for Analytical Psychology

Netherlands Jungian Institute [264]Jungian Institute of the Netherlands

New Zealand

New Zealand Psychological Association [265]Psychological Association of New Zealand

Phillipines

Psychological Association of the [266]Psychological Association of the Phillipines

Portugal

Institute of Psychology and Religion[267]Institute of Psychology and Religion in Portugal

Puerto Rico

Psychology Association of Puerto Rico [268]Psychology Association of Puerto Rico

Romania

Romanian Association of Analytical Psychology [269]Association of Analytical Psychology in Romania

Russia

Association of Analytical Society in Russia[270]Association of Analytical Psychology in Russia

The East European Institute of Psychoanalysis [271]East European Institute of Psychoanalysis in Russia

Jung Land [272]Jung Land in Russia

Scotland

C.G. Jung Seminars Scotland [273]C.G. Jung Seminars Scotland

Singapore

Singapore Psychological Association[274]Psychological Association of Singapore

South Africa

Southern African Association of Jungian Analysts (SASJA) [275]Association of Jungian Analysts in South Africa

Spain

Carl Gustav Jung Foundation [276]C.G. Jung Foundation of Spain

Spain Jung Association [277]Jung Association of Spain

Sweden

CJP Center for Psychoanalysis [278]Center for Psychoanalysis in Sweden

C.G. Jung Foundation of Sweden [279]C.G. Jung Foundation of Sweden

School for Initiatic Therapy (Dürckheim Center)

Switzerland

C.G. Jung Institute of Zurich [280]C.G. Jung Institute of Zurich

C.G. Jung International Seminars [ISAP] [281]C.G. Jung International Seminars Zurich, Switzerland

Eranos [282]Eranos Organization in Switzerland

Foundation for International Jungian Psychoanalytical Training in Zurich [283]Foundation for International Jungian Psychoanalysts in Switzerland

Ichthys Institute of Psychology and Religion [284]Ichthysis Institute of Psychology and Religion in Switzerland

International School for Analytical Psychology [285]International Association for Analytical Psychology

Jungian International Training [286]Jungian International Training

Lapis and Alchemical Retreat [287]Lapis Alchemical Retreat Switzerland

Research Training Center for Depth Psychology [288]Research Training Center for Depth Psychology in Switzerland

Swiss Society of Analiytical Psychology [289]Swiss Society of Analytical Psychology

Turkey

Turkish Psychological Association [290]Turkish Psychological Association in Turkey

Uruguay

Psychological Society of Uruguay [291]Psychological Society of Uraguay

Social Media:

Facebook:

Barbara Hannah [292]Barbara Hannah Page

Carl Jung Bookstore: [293]Carl Jung Bookstore

Carl Jung Depth Psychology Group:[294] Carl Jung Depth Psychology

Carl Jung Depth Psychology Page: [295]Carl Jung Depth Psychology Page

C.G. Jung Healing Descent: [296]Carl Jung Healing Descent

Depth Psychology Alliance: [297]Depth Psychology Alliance

Friends of Carl Gustav Jung Theory: [298]Friends of Carl Gustav Jung Theory

Jungian Books: [299]Jungian Books

Karl Kerenyi [300]Karl Kerenyi Page

Marie Louise Von Franz Books: [301]Marie Louise Von Franz Books

Princeton University Press: [302]Princeton University Press

Red Book by C.arl Jung: [303]The Red Book by Carl Jung

YouTube

Face to Face BBC Interview [304]BBC Face to Face Interview

Jungianthology Podcast [305]Jungianthology Podcast

Remembering Jung Series [306]Remembering Jung Series

Shrink Wrap Radio [307]Shrink Wrap Radio

Speaking of Jung [308]Speaking of Jung Podcast

1. `https://www.sacred-texts.com/alc/hermmuse/index.htm`
2. `https://le-miroir-alchimique.blogspot.com/p/texts-in-english.html?m=1`
3. `http://www.alchemywebsite.com/`
4. `http://www.aamindell.net/`
5. `http://www.sfapc.org/home`
6. `https://jungcenterbuffalo.com/`
7. `http://www.applefarmcommunity.org/`
8. `https://aras.org/concordance`
9. `https://www.archetypeinaction.com/index.php/en/`
10. `https://aras.org/`
11. `https://www.arthurimiller.com/books/deciphering-the-cosmic-number/`
12. `http://ashevillejungcenter.org/`
13. `http://www.assisiinstitute.com/`
14. `https://www.ahpweb.org/`
15. `http://atlantapsychoanalysis.com/training/atlanta-psychoanalytic-society/`
16. `http://www.bodysoulandspirit.net/hypnagogia/what/hannah.shtml`
17. `https://www.boulderfriendsofjung.org/`
18. `https://jungianwork.wordpress.com/`
19. `http://www.jungcentralohio.org/`
20. `http://www.cgjungcenter.org/`
21. `http://www.cgjungcenter.org/`
22. `http://www.junghouston.org/`
23. `https://junginstitute.org/`
24. `http://cgjungphiladelphia.org/`
25. `https://www.penguinrandomhouse.com/series/EBW/c-g-jung-foundation-books-series`
26. `http://www.jungsa.com/`
27. `http://www.junginoc.org/`
28. `http://www.cgjungny.org/`
29. `http://www.cgjungboston.com/`
30. `http://www.jungchicago.org/`
31. `http://www.cgjungpage.org/dallasinst.html`
32. `http://www.junginla.org/`
33. `http://www.sfjung.org/index.html`
34. `http://www.santafejung.org/`

35. https://www.cgjungpage.org/
36. http://jungatlanta.com/
37. http://www.jungsociety.com/
38. http://www.jungnc.org/
39. http://jungsocietyofcolorado.org/
40. http://csjung.org/
41. http://cgjunglafayettela.org/
42. http://www.faqs.org/tax-exempt/NM/C-G-Jung-Society-Of-New-Mexico.html
43. http://www.jungneworleans.org/
44. http://www.jungnewyork.com/schedule.shtml
45. https://jungalaska.wordpress.com/
46. http://www.jungdallas.org/
47. http://faculty.washington.edu/jrv/jso.html
48. http://www.friendsofjungsouth.org/
49. http://www.eskimo.com/~dcs/index1.html
50. http://www.cgjungstl.org/
51. http://www.jungutah.com/index.html
52. http://junginvermont.blogspot.com/
53. http://jung.org/
54. http://wjjung.tripod.com/calendar.html/
55. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/2019/01/02/carl-jungs-funeral-sermon-given-by-pastor-werner-meyer/#.XLoQ5uhKhPY
56. http://www.jungcentersouthflorida.org/
57. http://centerpointec.org/
58. http://www.meetup.com/Charleston-Jung-Society/
59. https://www.chrysalisinstitute.org/jungian-psychology
60. http://www.clarku.edu/research/archives/freud_jung.cfm
61. http://sandplaytherapy.org/
62. http://www.jungct.org/
63. https://www.innercitybooks.net/pdf/books/junglexicon.pdf
64. http://dreamstudies.org/
65. http://eeskenazi.blogspot.com/
66. https://archive.org/details/in.ernet.dli.2015.139225/page/n1
67. https://archive.org/details/in.ernet.dli.2015.425410/page/n3
68. https://archive.org/details/originsandhistor017897mbp/page/n12
69. https://www.library.ethz.ch/en/Resources/Archival-holdings-documentations/C.G.-Jung-Papers-Collection
70. https://junghouston.org/faylectures/
71. http://centralfloridajungians.com/resources.html
72. http://fcgji.com/index.php
73. https://www.holybooks.com/the-complete-works-of-friedrich-nietzsche-in-english-as-pdf/
74. https://www.boulderfriendsofjung.org/upcoming-events
75. https://www.indyfriendsofjung.com/
76. http://www.charlottejung.org/
77. http://www.jungcincinnati.org/
78. http://www.jungcleveland.org/
79. http://glensfallsuu.com/events/adirondack-friends-of-jung-3/
80. https://sites.google.com/site/friendsofjunggreenville/
81. http://www.eugenefriendsofjung.org/
82. http://www.idahofriendsofjung.org/Home.aspx
83. http://www.kcjung.org/

84. http://www.jungmich.org/
85. http://nwafriendsofjung.wordpress.com/
86. http://www.omahafriendsofjung.com/Omaha_Friends_of_Jung/Home.html
87. http://www.ofj.org/
88. https://phoenixfriendsofcgjung.org/
89. http://jungsandiego.org/
90. https://jungseattle.net/
91. http://www.friendsofjungsouth.org/
92. http://www.jungnc.org/
93. http://www.gnosis.org/
94. http://gnosis.org/library/alch.htm
95. http://www.hadeninstitute.com/
96. http://henrycorbinproject.blogspot.com/
97. https://www.amiscorbin.com/en/
98. https://jungianwork.wordpress.com/
99. https://junginla.org/clinical-services/hilde-kirsch-childrens-center/
100. http://www.cgjunghouston.org/
101. http://www.iaap.org/
102. http://www.animaestudosjunguianos.com.br/
103. https://jungstudies.net/
104. http://www.asdreams.org/
105. https://www.academia.edu/14161224/The_International_Dictionary_of_Psychoanalysis
106. http://www.ispdi.org/
107. http://www.sacred-texts.com/alc/index.htm
108. http://www.irsja.org/
109. http://jameshollis.net/
110. http://www.jgsparks.net/
111. http://jennalilla.org/author/jennalilla/
112. http://journal.psyart.org/
113. http://www.journeyconferences.com/
114. http://www.jung2.org/index.html
115. https://maps.org/event-calendar/7285-jung,-alchemy,-and-the-transformation-of-consciousness-taos-ski-valley,-new-mexico
116. http://www.jungandcropcircles.net/
117. http://www.jung2.org/index.html
118. http://www.jungcleveland.org/
119. http://jungcurrents.com/
120. http://www.gnosis.org/redbook/index.html
121. https://www.academia.edu/31768301/C._G._Jung_and_Erich_Neumann_The_Zaddik_Sophia_and_the_Shekinah_2016_2018_
122. https://www.livinghumanheritage.org/
123. http://www.mainejungcenter.org/
124. https://www.marie-louisevonfranz.com/en/homepage.html
125. https://web.archive.org/web/20091027151132/http://www.geocities.com/paideusis/n1cm.html
126. http://www.marijagimbutas.com/
127. http://www.mwoodmanfoundation.org/
128. http://www.minnesotajung.org/
129. http://mythandtherealworld.blogspot.com/
130. http://www.mythsdreamssymbols.com/
131. https://nyaap.org/c-g-jung-center-community/

132. https://nyjungcenter.org/
133. http://www.nourfoundation.com/
134. http://www.jungiananalyticpraxis.com/
135. http://www.npiap.org/
136. https://www.opusarchives.org/
137. http://www.pacifica.edu/
138. http://pandc.ca/?page=jungb
139. http://www.jungianphiladelphiaclub.com/
140. http://pghjung.org/institute.html
141. http://www.jungvonfranz.center/en/home_e/
142. http://www.robertsardello.com/
143. https://www.sandplay.org/
144. http://www.saybrook.edu/
145. https://www.holybooks.com/sigmund-freud-the-complete-works/
146. https://www.thesap.org.uk/resources/the-journal-of-analytical-psychology/
147. http://tallahasseejungianstudies.info/
148. https://www.temenosacademy.org/
149. http://www.abebooks.co.uk/
150. https://analyticalpsychologypress.com/
151. http://www.cgjungny.org/bookservice.html
152. https://www.bookdepository.com/search?searchTerm=carl+jung&search=Find+book
153. http://www.chironpublications.com/
154. http://www.chironpublications.com/
155. http://fisherkingpress.com/n/
156. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-admin/
157. http://www.innercitybooks.net/
158. http://www.jungiananalysts.org/
159. http://www.karnacbooks.com/
160. http://www.junglibrary.org/
161. http://mckenziemillerfilms.com/
162. http://www.midwestbookreview.com/
163. https://press.princeton.edu/catalogs/series/title/mythos-the-princeton-bollingen-series-in-world-mythology.html
164. http://www.parabola.org/
165. http://www.philemonfoundation.org/
166. http://www.press.princeton.edu/
167. http://www.cgjungny.org/quadrant.html
168. https://www.routledge.com/
169. http://www.shambhala.com/
170. https://thesophiainstitute.org/
171. https://speakingofjung.com/
172. http://www.springjournalandbooks.com/
173. http://www.springpublications.com/
174. http://www.steinerbooks.org/
175. http://www.watkinsbooks.com/
176. http://www.wiley.com/
177. http://nhne-pulse.org/bbc-documentary-carl-jung-the-wisdom-of-the-dream/
178. http://www.aptinternational.org/
179. http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/
180. http://www.depthpsychologyalliance.com/

181. http://powerofdreams.net/individuation.html
182. http://www.jung-forum.de/
183. http://www.openfoot.net/
184. http://typeindepth.com/
185. http://ausjungiangroup.blogspot.com/
186. https://www.fundacion-jung.com.ar/
187. http://www.centrojung.com.ar/videos.htm
188. http://members.pcug.org.au/~ajames/CJSHome.htm
189. http://www.jungsocietymelbourne.com/
190. http://www.jungqld.com/
191. http://www.jungwa.org/
192. http://www.cgjunggesellschaften.eu/
193. http://www.wpanet.org/detail.php?section_id=5&content_id=216
194. http://e-jungian.com/brazilian-society-for-analytical-psychology-sbrpa/
195. http://www.ajb.org.br/
196. http://www.ajb.org.br/jung-sp/
197. http://fla.matrix.com.br/jung/
198. http://www.tpocambodia.org/
199. http://www.apjq.org/
200. http://cgjungontario.com/
201. http://www.calgaryjungsociety.org/
202. https://www.facebook.com/junghalifax/
203. https://sites.google.com/site/cgjungmontreal/
204. http://www.jungforum.com/
205. https://www.ulife.utoronto.ca/organizations/view/id/2009
206. http://www.jungvancouver.org/
207. https://www.officialjungsocietyvictoria.com/
208. http://cgjung.cl/
209. http://www.cpsbeijing.org/
210. http://www.adepac.org/Ingles/Iindex2.htm
211. http://cubapsi.blogia.com/
212. http://cypsa.org.cy/english/
213. http://jung.sneznik.cz/rodina.htm
214. https://cg-jung.dk/cg-jung-institut-kbh/
215. https://iaap.org/group-members-societies/denmark-dsap/
216. http://www.jungsvenner.dk/
217. http://codopsi.tripod.com/
218. http://www.jungiananalysts.org.uk/
219. http://www.bbc.co.uk/programmes/p004y2bf
220. http://www.bapt.org.uk/
221. https://www.jungclub-london.org/
222. http://www.champernowne.org.uk/
223. http://www.gaps.co.uk/
224. http://www.guildofpastoralpsychology.org.uk/
225. http://www.igap.co.uk/
226. http://jungstudies.net/
227. http://www.sesame-institute.org/
228. http://www.thesap.org.uk/
229. http://www.psychotherapy.org.uk/
230. https://www.essex.ac.uk/courses/pg00647/1/ma-jungian-and-post-jungian-studies

231. http://www.wmip.org/
232. http://fundacioncgjungecuador.blogspot.com/2008_06_01_archive.html
233. http://www.cgjungfrance.com/
234. http://www.cgjung.net/index.htm
235. http://gerpa.online.fr/
236. http://www.eapp.org/
237. http://www.jung-institut-berlin.de/kontakt/
238. http://www.cgjung.org/
239. http://www.pxt.pt:8080/junggesellschaften/index.html
240. http://www.jung-institut-muenchen.de/
241. http://www.cgjung-stuttgart.de/
242. http://www.cgjung.org/
243. http://www.jung-journal.de/index.php
244. http://www.cgjunggesellschaften.eu/
245. http://www.iacp.in/
246. http://www.naopindia.org/
247. http://www.uijf.org/
248. https://www.neliti.com/himpunan-psikologi-indonesia
249. http://www.jungireland.com/
250. http://www.jung-israel.org/
251. http://e-jungian.com/the-new-israeli-jungian-society-nijs/
252. http://www.assisiconferences.com/
253. http://www.cgjung.it/
254. http://www.cipajung.it/
255. http://www.jung-veneto.it/
256. http://www.geagea.com/index.php
257. http://www.archeimpa.it/
258. http://www.cgjung.it/
259. https://psych.or.jp/english/
260. http://www.koreanpsychology.or.kr/
261. http://www.lapa.lt/en/asociacija/straipsniai/about-us
262. http://www.centromexicanojung.com/acerca.htm
263. https://naap.nl/en/
264. http://www.jungiaansinstituut.nl/
265. http://www.psychology.org.nz/cms_display.php
266. http://Phillipineshttp//www.pap.org.ph/
267. http://www.ichthysinstituto.com.br/
268. http://www.asppr.net/
269. http://www.psihoterapieanalitica.ro/
270. https://iaap.org/group-members-societies/russia-rsap/
271. https://en.planetofpsychotherapy.com/organizers/east-european-institute-of-psychoanalysis-eeip.html
272. http://www.jungland.ru/
273. http://www.junginscotland.org/links/
274. https://singaporepsychologicalsociety.org/
275. http://www.jungsouthernafrica.org.za/
276. http://fundacioncarlgjung.blogspot.com/
277. https://www.sepanalitica.es/home/
278. http://www.cjp.se/
279. http://www.jungstiftelsen.se/
280. http://www.junginstitut.ch/

281. `http://www.isapzurich.com/`
282. `http://www.eranos.org/`
283. `http://www.personal-values.info/`
284. `http://www.ichthysinstituto.com.br/`
285. `http://isapzurich.com/`
286. `http://www.personal-values.info/?gclid=CKrc8qG4iJECFQVjgQodikzd_g`
287. `http://www.cedrusmonte.org/`
288. `http://www.centre-dp.org/`
289. `http://www.sgap.ch/`
290. `http://www.psikolog.org.tr/`
291. `https://psychology-resources.org/`
292. `https://www.facebook.com/Barbara-Hannah-317459305124661/`
293. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/CarlJungBookstore/`
294. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/?ref=bookmarks`
295. `https://www.facebook.com/CarlJungDepthPsychology/`
296. `https://www.facebook.com/CarlJungIndividuation/`
297. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/DepthPsychologyAlliance/`
298. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/259586157866996/photos/`
299. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/1644635502430189/`
300. `https://www.facebook.com/Karl-Kerenyi-1484915891796424/`
301. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/688632314584444/`
302. `https://www.facebook.com/CarlJungPublications/`
303. `https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/`
304. `https://youtu.be/nrj0VqSJB0M`
305. `https://jungchicago.org/blog/`
306. `https://youtu.be/K6GU1OV_0eE`
307. `https://shrinkrapradio.com/category/depth/`
308. `https://speakingofjung.com/podcast/`

Carl Jung on “Parental Power” and the “Idea of Suicide.” (2019-12-10 06:32)

[1]

will get forget
I love y
Goodbye.

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

Dear Sir, 10 July 1946

By parental power is usually understood the influence exerted by any person in authority.

If this influence occurs in childhood and in an unjustified way, as happened in your case, it is apt to take root in the unconscious.

Even if the influence is discontinued outwardly, it still goes on working in the unconscious and then one treats oneself as badly as one was treated earlier.

If your work now gives you some joy and satisfaction you must cultivate it, just as you should cultivate everything that gives you some joy in being alive.

The idea of suicide, understandable as it is, does not seem commendable to me.

We live in order to attain the greatest possible amount of spiritual development and self-awareness.

As long as life is possible, even if only in a minimal degree, you should hang on to it, in order to scoop it up for the purpose of conscious development.

To interrupt life before its time is to bring to a standstill an experiment which we have not set up.

We have found ourselves in the midst of it and must carry it through to the end.

That it is extraordinarily difficult for you, with your blood pressure at 80, is quite understandable, but I believe you will not regret it if you cling on even to such a life to the very last.

If, aside from your work, you read a good book, as one reads the Bible, it can become a bridge for you leading inwards, along which good things may flow to you such as you perhaps cannot now imagine.

You have no need to worry about the question of a fee.

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 434.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/7816c-suicide.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=QF458TTEPMXC&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576002300&sprefix=jung+lett`

Carl Jung: The archetype compensates this state of spiritual deficiency... (2019-12-10 07:22)

[1]

The archetype of spirit in the shape of a man, hobgoblin, or animal always appears in a situation where insight, understanding, good advice, determination, planning, etc., are needed but cannot be mustered on one's own resources.
Carl Jung
www.jungcurrents. com
Image: Brian Rood

[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

The figure of the wise old man can appear so plastically, not only in dreams but also in visionary meditation (or what we call imagination"), that, as is sometimes apparently the case in India, it takes over the role of a guru.

The wise old man appears in dreams in the guise of a magician, doctor, priest, teacher, professor, grandfather, or any other person possessing authority.

The archetype of spirit in the shape of a man, hobgoblin, or animal always appears in a situation where insight, understanding, good advice, determination, planning, ete., are needed but cannot be mustered on one’s own resources.

The archetype compensates this state of spiritual deficiency by contents designed to fill the gap.

An excellent example of this is the dream about the white and black magicians, which tried to compensate the spiritual difficulties of a young theological student.

I did not know the dreamer myself, so the question of my personal influence is ruled out.

He dreamed he was standing in the presence of a sublime hieratic figure called the "white magician," who was nevertheless clothed in a long black robe.

This magician had just ended a lengthy discourse with the words "And for that we require the help of the black magician."

Then the door suddenly opened and another old man came in, the "black magician," who however was dressed in a white robe.

He too looked noble and sublime.

The black magician evidently wanted to speak with the white, but hesitated to do so in the presence of the dreamer.

At that the white magician, pointing to the dreamer, said, "Speak, he is an innocent."

So the black magician began to relate a strange story of how he had found the lost keys of Paradise and did not know how to use them.

He had, he said, come to the white magician for an explanation of the secret of the keys.

He told him that the king of the country in which he lived was seeking a suitable tomb tor himself·

His subjects had chanced to dig up an old sarcophagus containing the mortal remains of a virgin.

The king opened the sarcophagus, threw away the bones, and had the empty sarcophagus buried again for later use.

But no sooner had the bones seen the light of day than the being to whom they once had belonged -the virgin-changed into a black horse that galloped of into the desert.

The black magician pursued it across the sandy wastes and beyond, and there after many vicissitudes and difficulties he found the lost keys of Paradise.

That was the end of his story, and also, unfortunately, of the dream. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Pages 215-217

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/86ebe-1hobgoblin.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=SPJQ9OV1OIQQ&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+collec`

Carl Jung on “why one’s fate always strives for posthumous recognition. (2019-12-10 17:20)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Alwine von Keller

Dear Frau von Keller, 21 August 1944

Best thanks for your long letter. I have heard nothing from Frau X. for a long time.

I only hope things are going better with her.

She is indeed a problem, like all Germans today.

I am very grateful to you for news about Zimmer for I have had but little.

Like the physician who attended me, Dr. Haemmerl he died on the eve of his fame.

This seems to be a particularly critical moment.

There is indeed a great danger in being praised before the eve.

That is why one’s fate always strives for posthumous recognition.

It would almost have done away with me too, for the sole reason that I was appointed professor in Basel.

I am extremely glad that this year’s Eranos meeting went off very well without me.

By the beginning of winter I hope to have got my wits together again so that I can also think of other people.

Meanwhile with best thanks and friendly greetings,

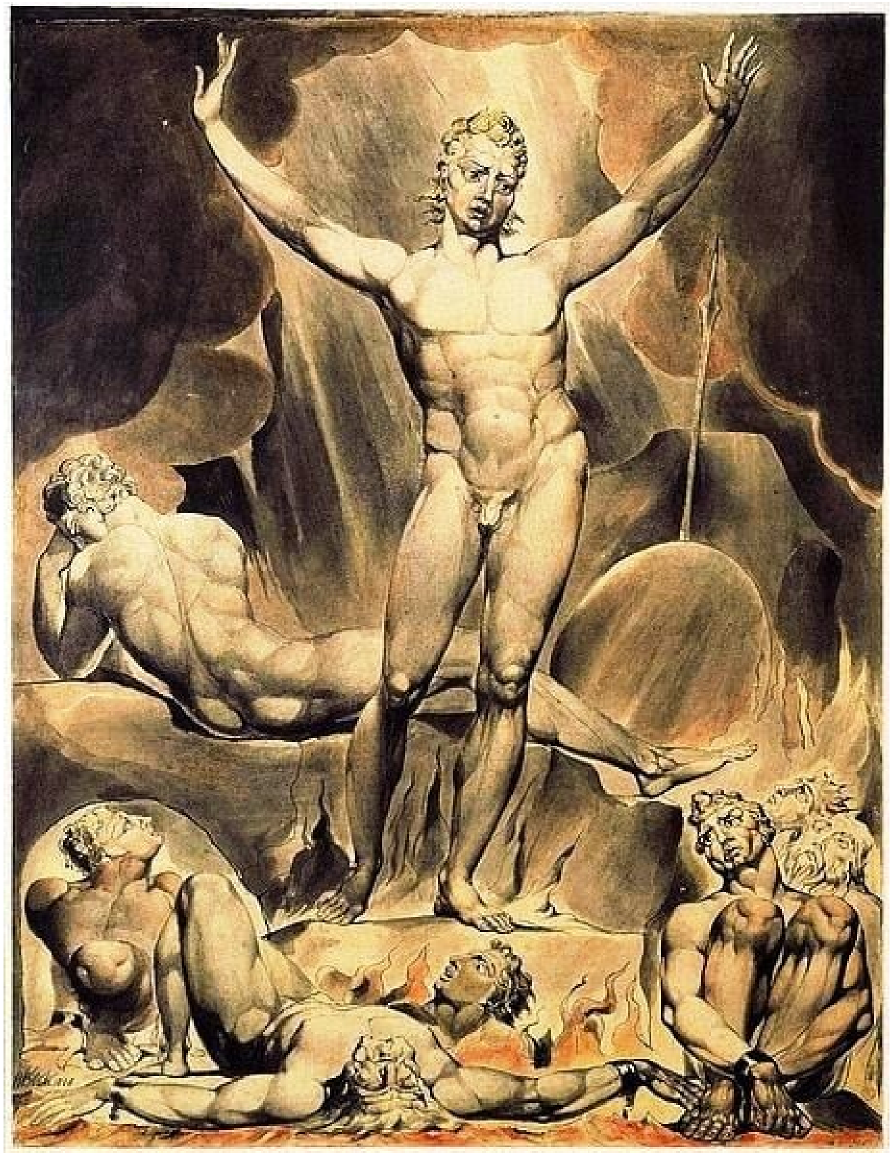
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 344-345.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/56c0e-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/gp/product/0691098956?pf_rd_p=ab873d20-a0ca-439b-ac45-cd78f07a84d8&pf_rd_r=4FBF93JSNXDS3VV8X5KB`

Carl Jung on “Evil,” “Power,” and Lucifer as the Anthropos (2019-12-10 17:39)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Max Pulver

Dear Dr. Pulver, 2 November 1944

Many thanks for kindly sending me your interesting and timely book.

The third chapter seems to me particularly valuable.

Regarding the problem of evil and power, it has always struck me as significant that "Macht" [power] is derived from "machen" [to make); and since "making" is a specific activity of man, one might come to the conclusion that the characteristic expression of human life bears the stamp of evil and that in consequence the Anthropos is really Lucifer.

Again with thanks and kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 352-353.

Note: Anthropos =The Original Man, man in his ideal, archetypal totality and one of the symbols of the self.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/c1ffa-2.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/gp/product/0691098956?pf_rd_p=ab873d20-a0ca-439b-ac45-cd78f07a84d8&pf_rd_r=4FBF93JSNXDS3VV8X5KB`

Carl Jung on “Recurring Dreams” and “Retrogressive Birth." (2019-12-10 18:12)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Professor Jung:

Yes, we have to conclude that there is an inner constellation that did not change over the years.

When a dream recurs so frequently, I usually refrain from searching for the specific motives.

Moreover, I quite generally take the view that a neurosis is not of traumatic origin, that is, that it can’t be traced back to a singular frightening experience; I try to understand it in the context of its present meaning.

For what lives and takes effect today is also recreated today, again and again.

I also relate frequently recurring dreams to what is currently going on, therefore, and to what is recreated over and over again, and not to something that lies many years back.

So this dream, too, refers to an inner constellation, which has not changed over the years.

We already know from the previous dream that there exists a certain splitting in the dreamer, that is, that consciousness and the unconscious are split off from each other.

We further saw that the unconscious and consciousness even attract each other, as expressed in the threat that the snake poses to the dreamer.

This dream goes a step further than the mere threat; the danger becomes manifest: the dreamer falls into the water, in which she is, so to speak, completely swallowed by the monster of the unconscious.

We have to take into account a peculiar detail, the fact that she falls down in an upright position.

This is very unusual, because usually one falls sideways one way or the other.

When someone, as in this case, falls down with the hands on the body and with the feet first, this expresses a certain stiffness, as if one were enclosed by something.

The feeling of suffocation the dreamer experiences when sinking also points to this tight enclosure.

It is as if she were pulled into the mouth of a monster and swallowed.

Myths express the sucking and suffocating aspect of water by populating it with monsters, dragons, or other water creatures.

Many primitive heroic myths also tell the story that the hero is devoured by the dragon, complete with his ship.

In the monster's belly he is pressed to such an extent that, so as not to be crushed, he pushes the remains of the ship against the walls of the stomach.

The experience of being pressed is a very important motif.

In our dream it also finds expression in the feeling of suffocating.

To what does this refer? From where do we have such a direct experience?

Participant: From birth.

Professor Jung:

Although the newborn is not consciously aware of it, the nervous system registers these events.

Dreams that refer back to birth, and seem to be based on a perfect knowledge of anatomy, are not infrequent.

This led Rank to the assumption, for instance, that all neuroses can be traced back to the trauma of birth.

Birth is indeed a trauma, an impressive moment, and it is also possible that such an impression continues to have an effect throughout life, especially if there were complications at birth.

But we must not generalize this fact.

Participant: Is this dream not about a “reversed” birth?

Professor Jung:

That’s right, it is like a retrogressive birth, a going back into the womb, into the prenatal state.

This immersion into the unconscious actually represents a figurative death, a frequent motif of the transformation process, standing in close connection to the symbolism of rebirth.

This is not at all evident from the dream at first sight, but we may add it from our knowledge.

The dream itself describes only the danger; it shows that in each transformation, and whenever a transition occurs, the ground may cave in, so that we fall down into an unconscious state.

When are there such transitions in practical life?

Participant: At the beginning of school, at the development from childhood to adulthood, at the beginning of professional life.

Professor Jung:

These are transitions, transformations in life, in which we change from one state into another, from a previous situation into a new one.

This we can only achieve if we are at one with ourselves.

A split personality will have difficulties in all these transitions, comparable to a sinking in water.

What does this mean in concrete terms?

Participant: That we are in over our head.

Professor Jung:

Quite right. We also say: “I can’t keep my head above water,” or “In such a situation you’ll go under.”

The difficulties may vary greatly, it could be overwhelming affects, or experiences we can’t cope with, but these are always very deep experiences into which we sink, so to speak.

It is a fact, by the way, that persons with splits are particularly destined to have such very deep-going experiences.

Why?

Participant: So that the split may be overcome.

Professor Jung:

Yes, fate imposes hard experiences on them, to hit them in their innermost being, where they are still at one with themselves, that is, in the instinct.

With their split, such persons will always blunder into split situations.

They will have to endure things that stand in sharpest contrast to each other.

So, for example, they will have friends of completely different characters.

In all these cases, those persons never know who they actually are.

They don't know: Am I white or am I black?

I'm actually both, because I'm the friend of A and of B. Something is bound to happen here.

This situation downright invites fate to intervene with a blow, so that deep regions are touched and may grow again as a unity.

Split persons always generate split situations, conflict situations.

To such persons in particular, to those who do not know who they are, it happens that they are particularly confronted with decisions, whereas other people can go on living in their unambiguous situations.

The treatment of such split persons is not easy.

We often simply do not manage to reunite the halves, which have come apart, into a whole.

We can only say: Hopefully something really overwhelming will happen to them, so that they realize who they are.

So this dream points to the fateful necessity of having ultimate experiences, so that the point is touched where the person is still one.

Such a person has to be completely torn apart at first to recompose himself anew.

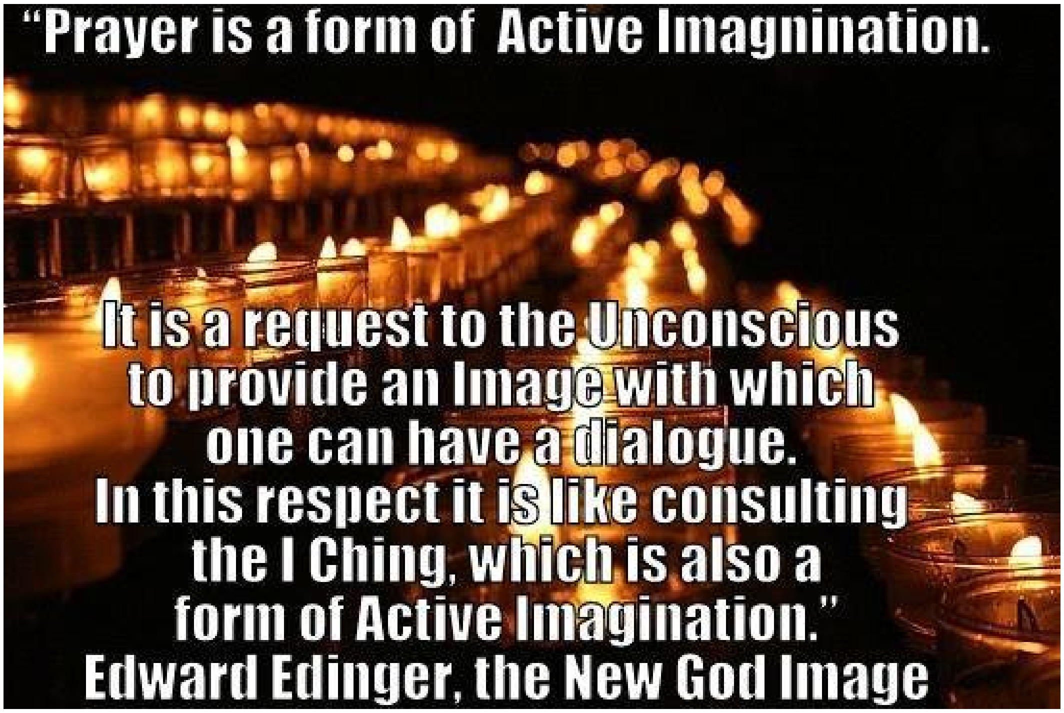
This last unity has to be found, and this will happen only if the person is wounded in his innermost being, most often by someone chosen by fate to be the hammer, because as a rule he can't do it on his own. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Pages 276-279.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/48a08-choice.jpeg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1576051098&s=books&sr=1-1`

Edward F. Edinger on Prayers as a Active Imagination (2019-12-11 03:25)

[1]



“Prayer is a form of Active Imagnination.

It is a request to the Unconscious to provide an Image with which one can have a dialogue. In this respect it is like consulting the I Ching, which is also a form of Active Imagination.”

Edward Edinger, the New God Image

[2]Transformation of the God-Image: An Elucidation of Jung’s Answer to Job

I thought this would give me an opportunity to say a few words about the psychological implications of the passage that we know of as the Lord’s Prayer.

This comes from the sixth chapter of Matthew.

Let me remind you of how it goes:

“Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our trespasses [or debts] as we forgive those who trespass against us, and lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil. . . .

That prayer has been on the lips of millions and millions of individuals at the times of greatest crisis. It is laden with psychological impact. It is divided into seven "petitions." (Jung speaks of the sixth petition as the words "lead us not into temptation.")

When looked at psychologically you see right away that it is a formula for maintaining a connection between the ego and the Self. Let me just illustrate that briefly with each of these seven petitions.

Petition 1. "Hallowed be thy name," or "Thy name be sacred." That means I must remember the transpersonal sacred dimension of life.
That is what the ego is reminding itselfto remember that life is not just secular, it has a transpersonal dimension.

Petition 2. "Thy kingdom come." The ego here is announcing that it recognizes that the rule of the Self should prevail.

Petition 3. "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Here the ego is saying, "I am going to live my life out of the same rule that you bring to your kingdom."

Petition 4. "Give us our daily bread." (The Vulgate says, "Give us our super-substantial bread," which I think puts a nice angle onto it.) The idea there would be a petition or request for the inflow of nourishing images and meaning which is the psychological bread.

Petition 5. "Forgive us our trespasses," or "our debts." I prefer "trespasses" (though debts is the more common translation) because it emphasizes the nature of the ego's sin against the Self. Its characteristic sin is the inflation of identifying with the Self in other words, trespassing on the Self's territory.

Petition 6. "Lead us not into temptation," is the one Jung refers to, because the fact is that the Self in its desire for total realization, total incarnation of its opposite nature, leads one into evil as well as into good. It is quite understandable that that petition would be included.

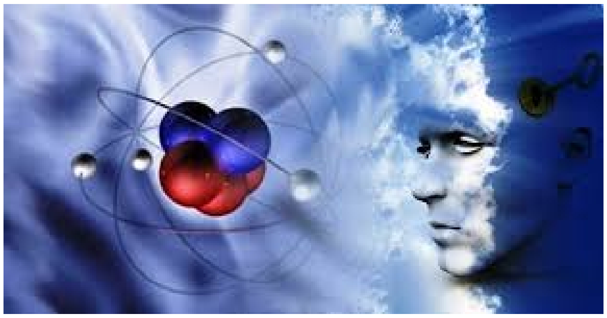
Petition 7. "Deliver us from evil." Protect us from disruptive dangers that you cannot help but lead us into.

Edward F. Edinger, Transformation of the God Image, Pages 75-76.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/37157-1god2bimage.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Transformation-God-Image-Elucidation-Jungs-Answer/dp/0919123554/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=edinger+transformation&qid=1576053480&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung on “Numbers” – Anthology (2019-12-11 04:30)

[1]



In the evening after dinner, we somehow got onto the subject of numbers which, C.G. said, had a life of their own. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 158

Whole numbers may well be the discovery of God's "primal thoughts," as for instance the significant number four, which has distinctive qualities. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 301-302

Numbers are autonomous. They had their life, their significance before men used them as instruments. The mathematicians continue to use them as instruments, so in that instant they become dry. Before they had their proper significance. C. G. Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff - A Collection of Remembrances; Pages 51-70.

There is no reason why whole numbers possess certain meanings or qualities, and no reason why elephants or men should exist. These arrangements are simply there as given facts, like the crystalline systems or the discontinuities of physics, even as the whole of creation is a "just-so story." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 355.

I have got stuck, on the one hand, in the acausality (or "synchronicity") of certain phenomena of unconscious provenance and, on the other hand, in the qualitative statements of numbers, for here I set foot on territories where I cannot advance without the help and understanding of the other disciplines. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 351-352.

Like all the inner foundations of judgment, numbers are archetypal by nature and consequently partake of the psychic qualities of the archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 327-329.

It would be a worthy task for a mathematician to collect all the known properties of numbers and also all their "inescapable" statements which should be quite possible up to 10-and in this way project a biological picture of whole numbers. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 327-329.

It is a mathematical structure, which first made me hit on the idea that the unconscious somehow avails itself of the properties of whole numbers. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 327-329.

From this it appears that whole numbers are individuals, and that they Possess properties which cannot be explained on the assumption that they are multiple units. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 327-329.

The idea that numbers were invented for counting is obviously untenable, since they are not only pre-existent to judgment but possess properties which were discovered only in the course of the centuries, and presumably possess a number of others which will be brought to light only by the future development of mathematics. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 327-329.

The fact is that the numbers pre-existing in nature are presumably the most fundamental archetypes, being the very matrix of all others. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 325-327.

Archetypes are not mere concepts but are entities, exactly like whole numbers, which are not merely aids to counting but possess irrational qualities that do not result from the concept of counting, as for instance the prime numbers and their behaviour. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 22.

Hence the mathematician Kronecker could say: Man created mathematics, but God created whole numbers. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 23.

Where numbers indicate a measure we move into the material. A concrete image is a manifestation requiring space in which the spirit clothes itself in the material in order to draw to man. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 60.

Images and numbers are doors through which the spiritual can reach man. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 60.

It is characteristic of the transcendent that it can be pictured and described by numbers; the passage of time, quantity, and identity, are spiritual substances. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 60.

The character of the image is not determined by numbers. Pure spiritual substance is eternal. An image as such needs neither time nor space. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 60.

I should like to study the theory of numbers. What is a number, an entity, a sequence, an archetype? We think we can perceive and grasp a number logically and suddenly it behaves quite differently from the way we expected. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 55.

It is a fundamental phenomenon of mathematics that numbers are not just mathematical entities but individualities. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 55.

We believe we are playing with equations and suddenly it transpires that certain equations express the laws of electric currents. God played and formulated currents. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 55.

It is characteristic of the transcendent that it can be pictured and described by numbers; the passage of time, quantity, and identity, are spiritual substances. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 60.

Do not forget that the original meaning of all letters and numbers was a magical one! Hence the "perils of the soul." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 528-529.

A concrete image is a manifestation requiring space in which the spirit clothes itself in the material in order to draw to man. Images and numbers are doors through which the spiritual can reach man. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 60.

Numbers are autonomous. They had their life, their significance before men used them as instruments. The mathematicians continue to use them as instruments, so in that instant they become dry. Before they had their proper significance. C. G. Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff - A Collection of Remembrances; Pages 51-70.

A mathematician once remarked that everything in science was man-made except numbers, which had been created by God himself.
Carl Jung, CW 8, ¶356, note 24.

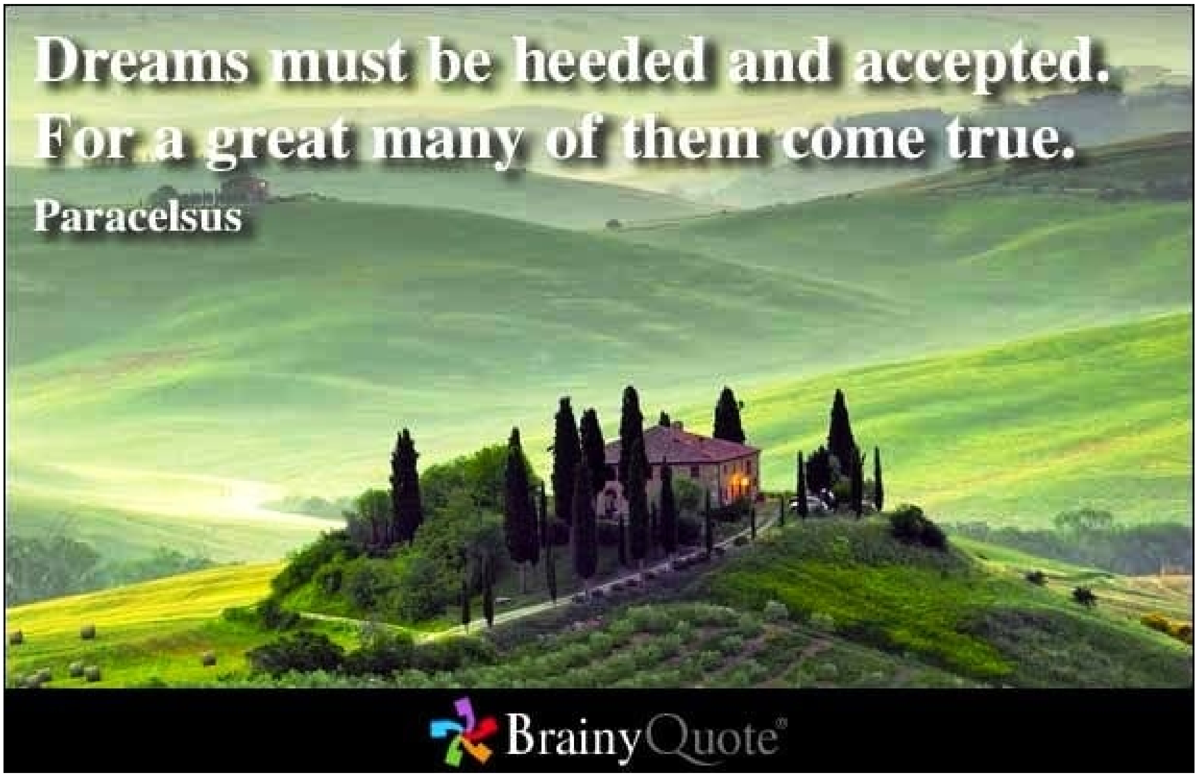
… number and synchronicity… were… always brought into connection with one another,… both possess numinosity and mystery as their common characteristics. Number has invariably been used to characterize some numinous object, and all numbers from 1 to 9 are ‘sacred,’ just as 10, 12, 13, 14, 28, 32, and 40 have a special significance. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 870.

The very numbers you use in counting are more than you take them for. They are at the same time mythological entities (for the Pythagoreans they were even divine), but you are certainly unaware of this when you use numbers for a practical purpose. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 461

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/36a1a-12bnumber.jpg`

There are two Bodies in Man (2019-12-11 05:02)

[1]



Dreams must be heeded and accepted.
For a great many of them come true.
Paracelsus
BrainyQuote

[2]Psychology and Alchemy (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.12)

"so there are two bodies in man, one composed of the elements, the other of the stars; therefore, these two have to be well distinguished from each other. In death the elementary body is buried together with its spirit, the ethereal ones are consumed in the firmament, and the spirit of the God-image goes to Him of which it is the image." Paracelsus, De Lunaticus.

"Ruland says, 'Imagination is the star in man, the celestial or supercelestial body.' This astounding definition throws a quite special light on the fantasy processes connected with the opus. We have to conceive of these processes not as the immaterial phantoms we readily take fantasy-pictures to be, but as something corporeal, a 'subtle body,' semi-spiritual in nature." Carl Jung, Representations of Redemption in Alchemy."

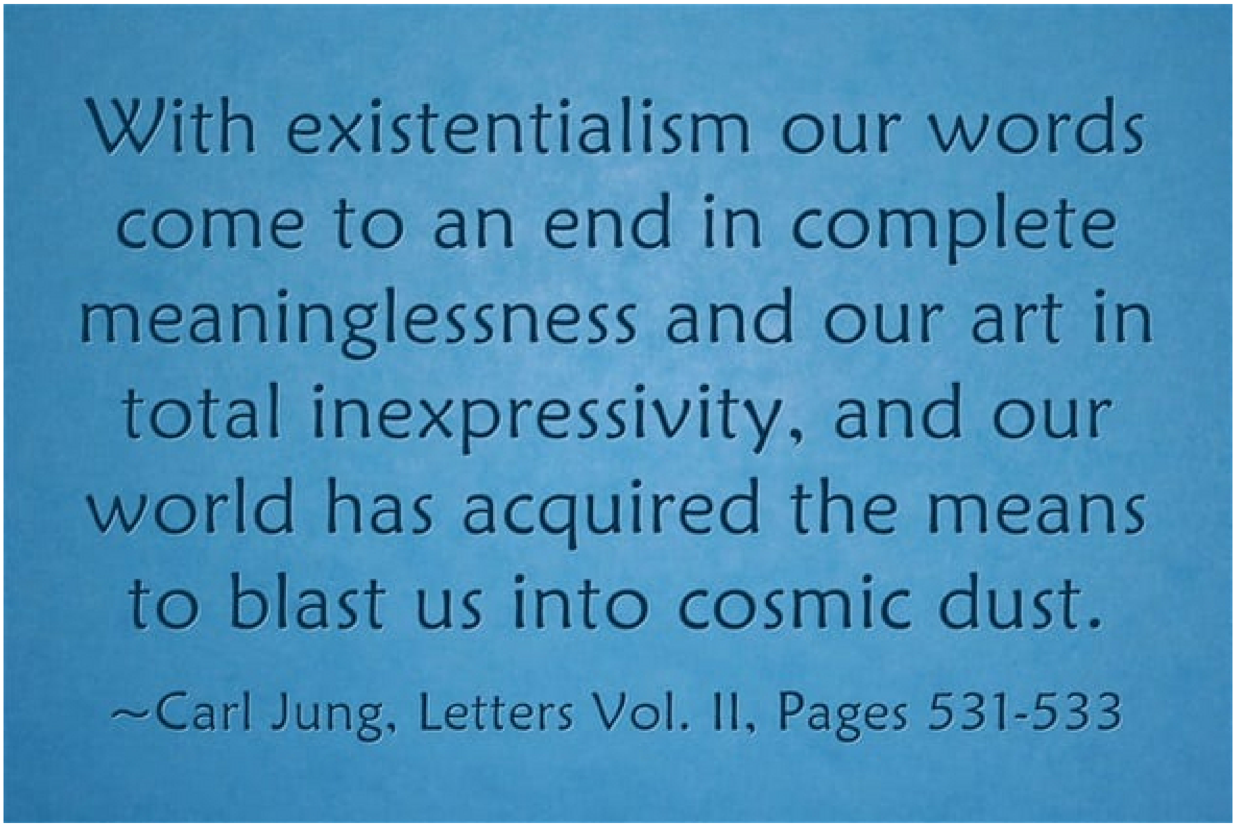
"since divine wisdom is only partly enclosed in the body of the world, the greater part of it is outside, and it imagines far higher things than the body of the world could conceive (concipere). And these things are outside nature: God's own secrets. The soul is an example of this: it too imagines many things [. . .] outside the body, just as God does." An Alchemist cited in Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 287.

And, finally: imagination is, therefore, not "a question of actualizing those contents of the unconscious that are outside nature, that is, not a datum of our empirical world, and therefore a priori of archetypal character. The place or the medium of realization is neither mind nor matter, but that intermediate realm of subtle reality that can be adequately expressed [only] by the symbol." Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, CW 12, § 394

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/04ae3-accept.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Alchemy-Collected-Works-Vol-12/dp/0691018316/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+and+alchemy&qid=1576087127&sr=8-1`

Some Carl Jung Quotations XI (2019-12-11 05:43)

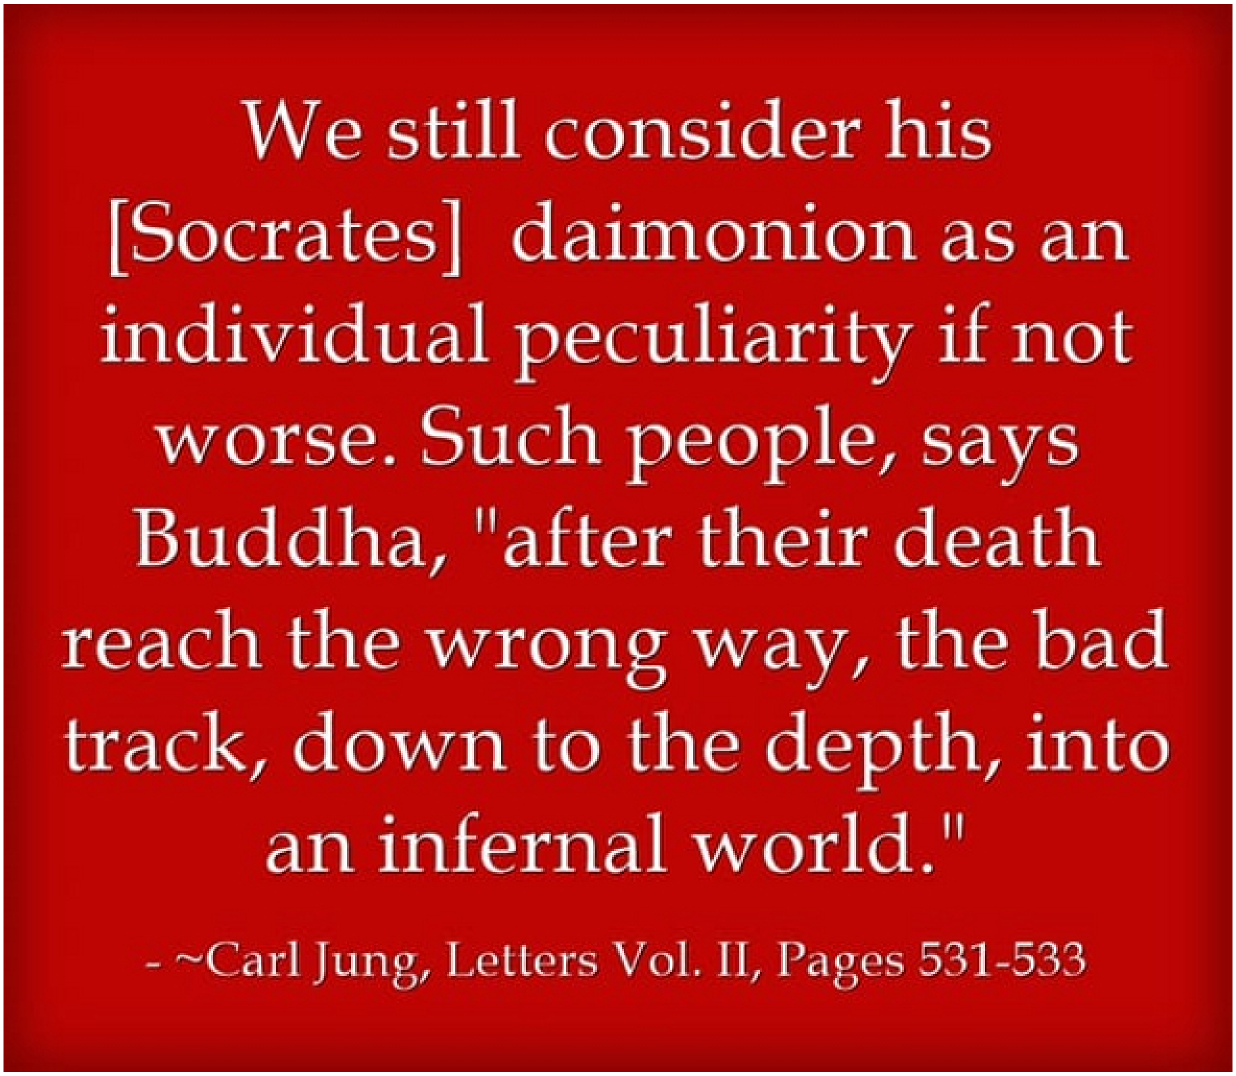
[1]



With existentialism our words come to an end in complete meaninglessness and our art in total inexpressivity, and our world has acquired the means to blast us into cosmic dust.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533

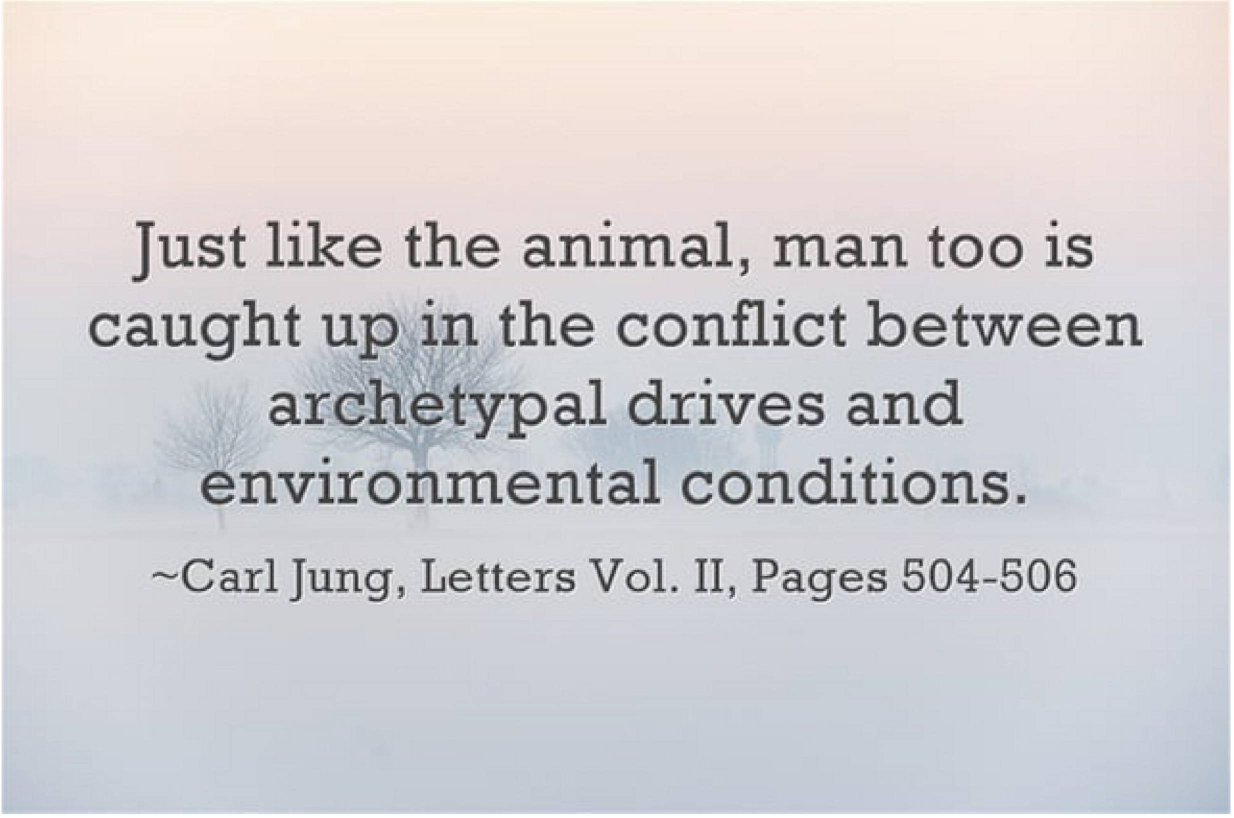
With existentialism our words come to an end in complete meaninglessness and our art in total inexpressivity, and our world has acquired the means to blast us into cosmic dust. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533



We still consider his [Socrates] daimonion as an individual peculiarity if not worse. Such people, says Buddha, "after their death reach the wrong way, the bad track, down to the depth, into an infernal world."

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533

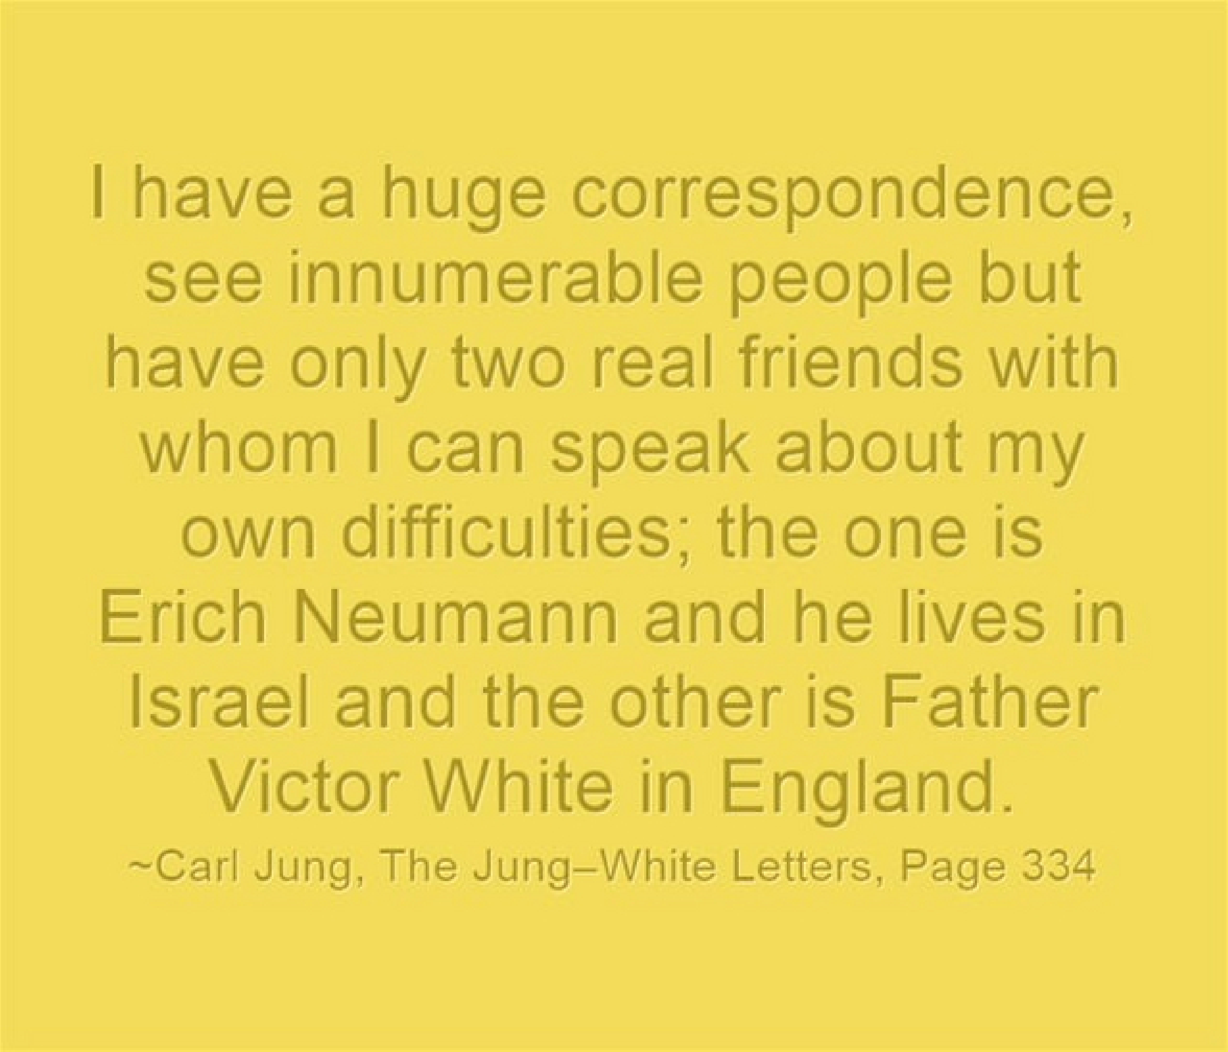
We still consider his [Socrates] daimonion as an individual peculiarity if not worse. Such people, says Buddha, "after their death reach the wrong way, the bad track, down to the depth, into an infernal world." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533



Just like the animal, man too is caught up in the conflict between archetypal drives and environmental conditions.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

Just like the animal, man too is caught up in the conflict between archetypal drives and environmental conditions.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

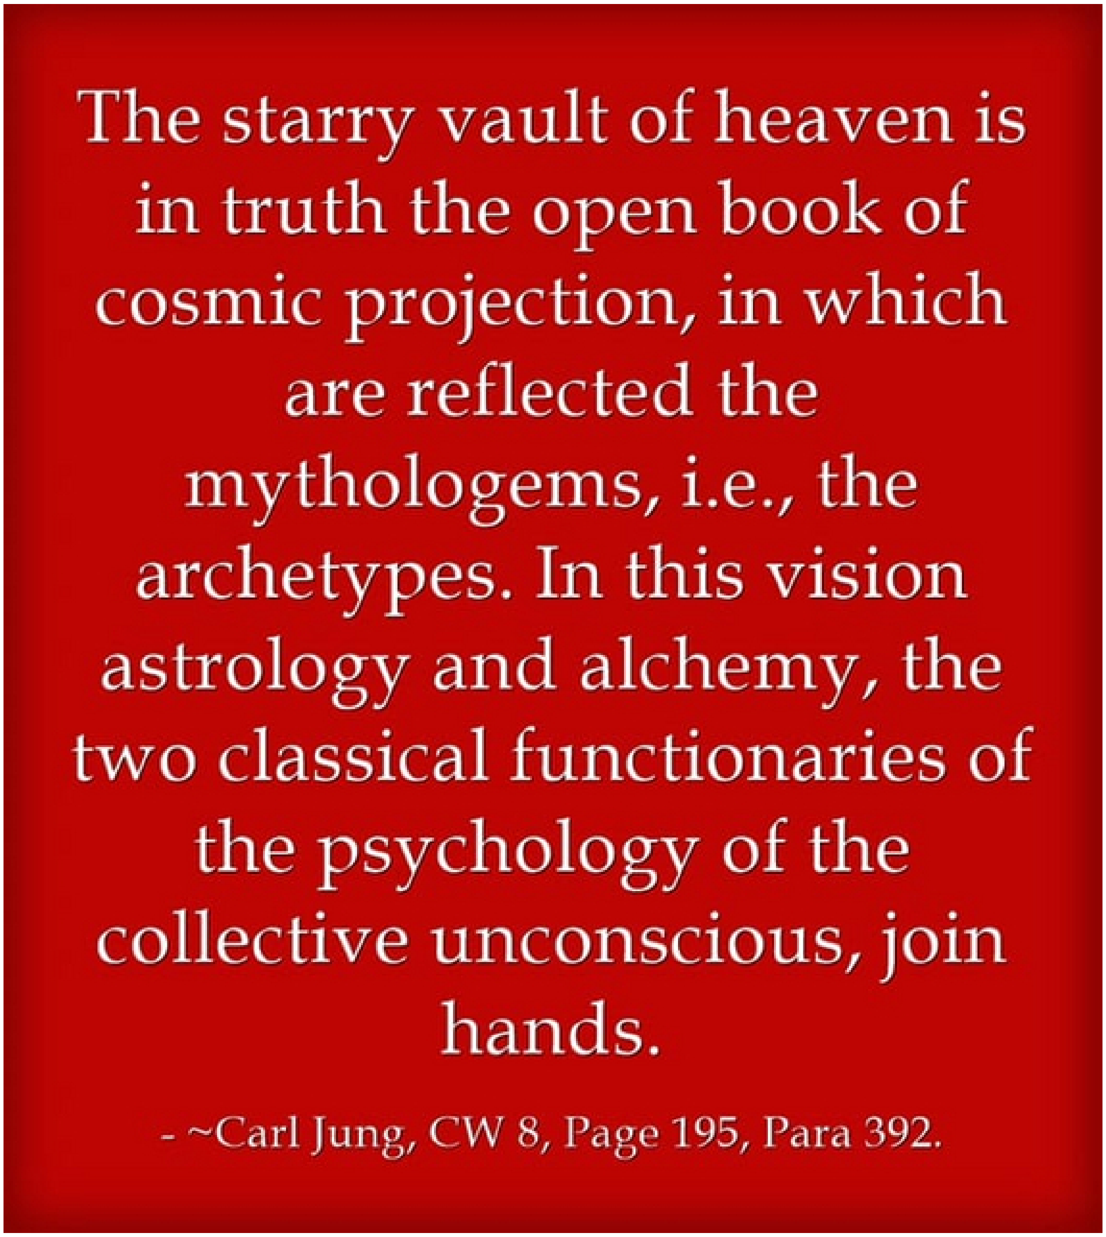


I have a huge correspondence, see innumerable people but have only two real friends with whom I can speak about my own difficulties; the one is Erich Neumann and he lives in Israel and the other is Father Victor White in England.

~Carl Jung, The Jung–White Letters, Page 334

I have a huge correspondence, see innumerable people but have only two real friends with whom I can speak about my own difficulties; the one is Erich Neumann and he lives in Israel and the other is Father Victor White in England.

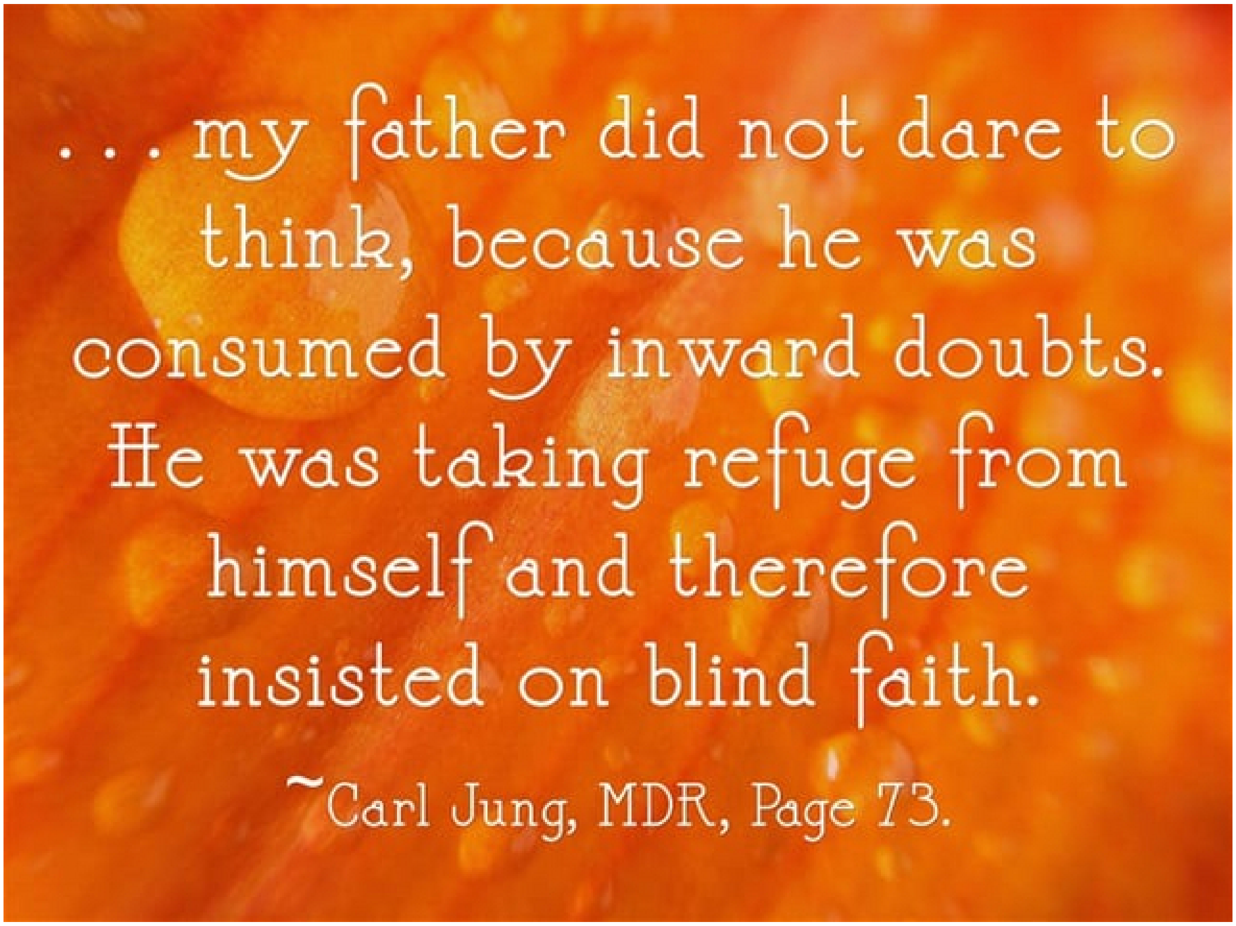
Carl Jung, The Jung–White Letters, Page 334



The starry vault of heaven is in truth the open book of cosmic projection, in which are reflected the mythologems, i.e., the archetypes. In this vision astrology and alchemy, the two classical functionaries of the psychology of the collective unconscious, join hands.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 195, Para 392.

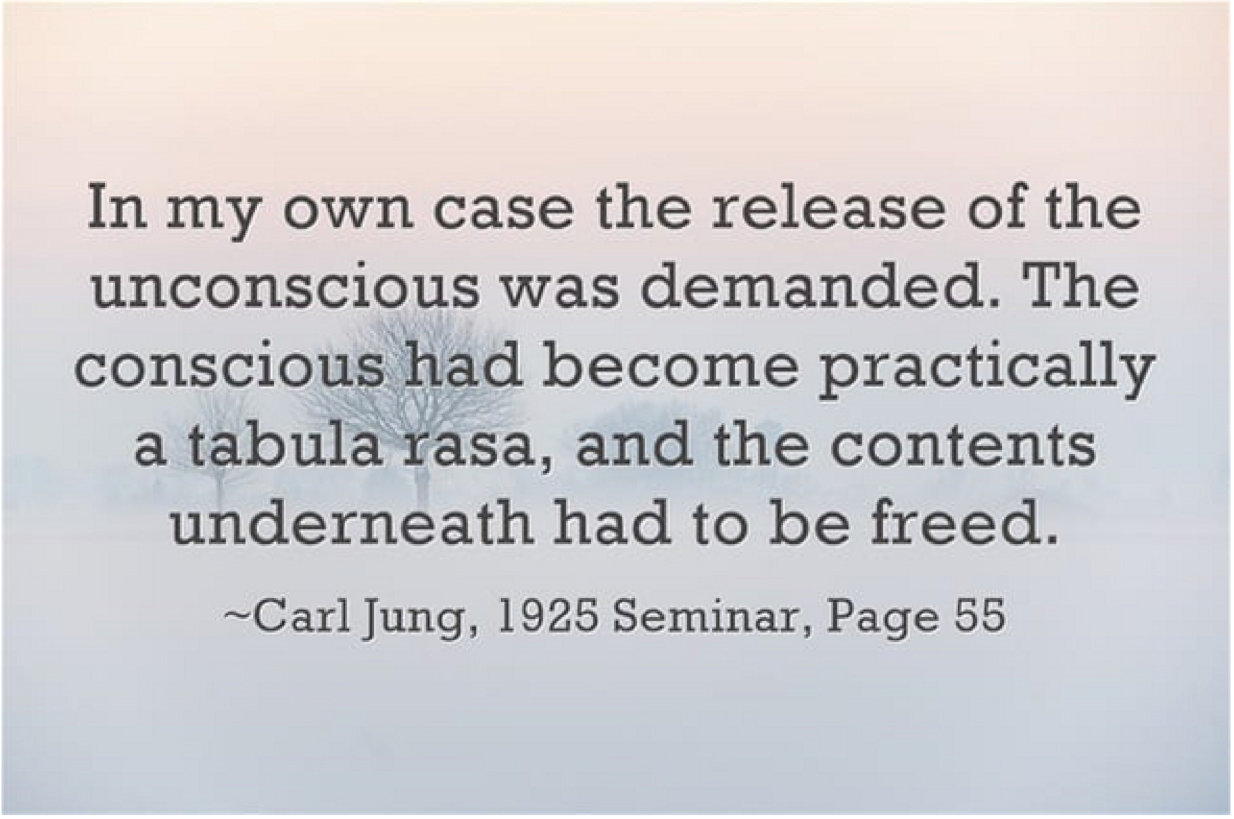
The starry vault of heaven is in truth the open book of cosmic projection, in which are reflected the mythologems, i.e., the archetypes. In this vision astrology and alchemy, the two classical functionaries of the psychology of the collective unconscious, join hands. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 195, Para 392.



. . . my father did not dare to think, because he was consumed by inward doubts. He was taking refuge from himself and therefore insisted on blind faith.

~Carl Jung, MDR, Page 73.

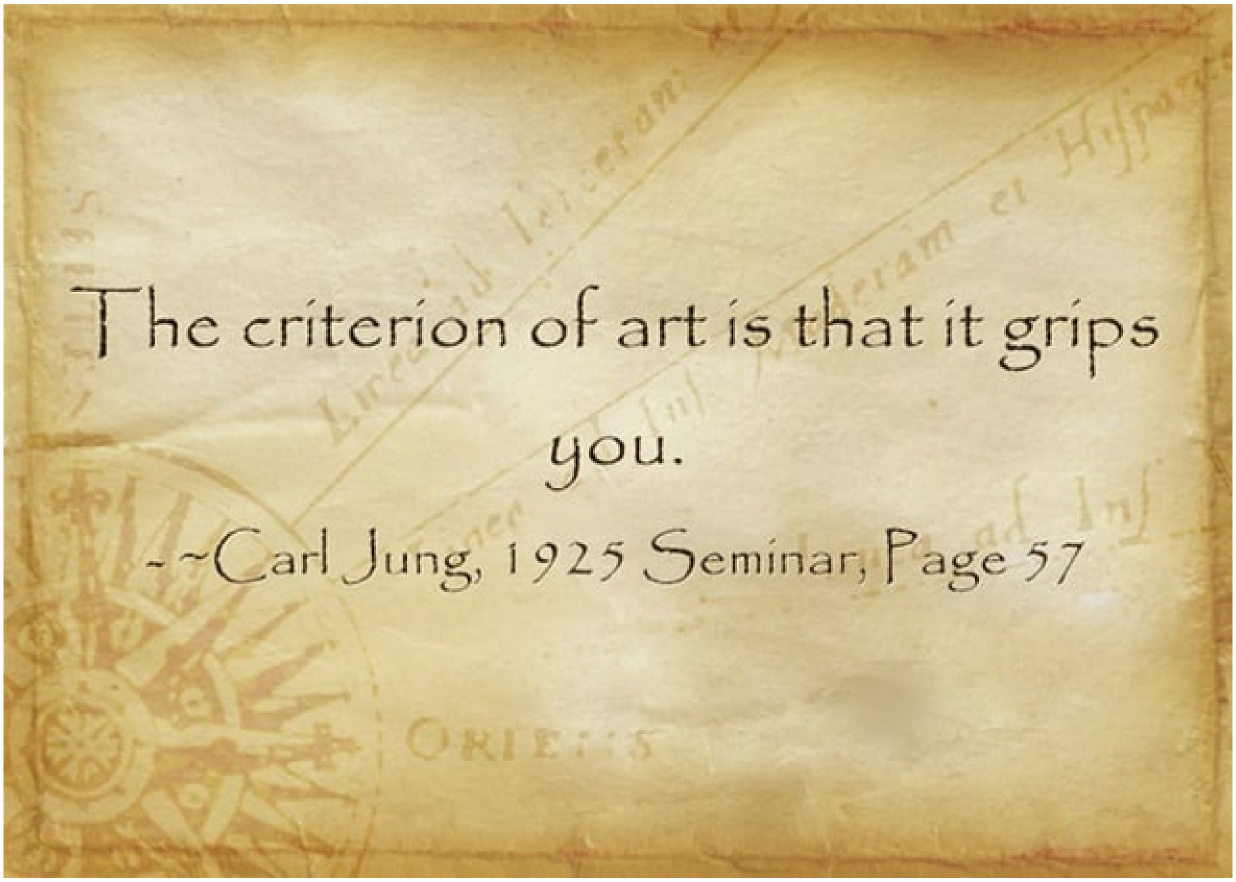
. . . my father did not dare to think, because he was consumed by inward doubts. He was taking refuge from himself and therefore insisted on blind faith. Carl Jung, MDR, Page 73.



In my own case the release of the unconscious was demanded. The conscious had become practically a tabula rasa, and the contents underneath had to be freed.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 55

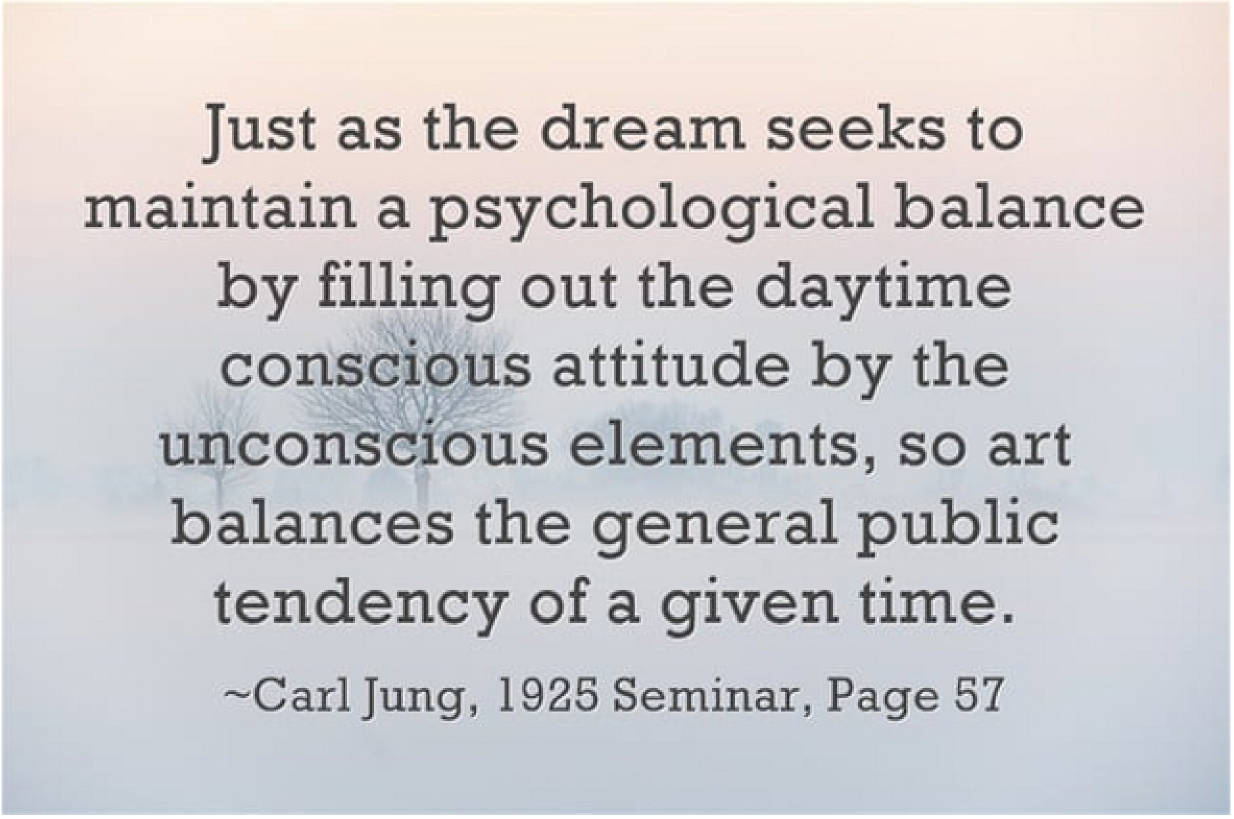
In my own case the release of the unconscious was demanded. The conscious had become practically a tabula rasa, and the contents underneath had to be freed. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 55



The criterion of art is that it grips you.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 57

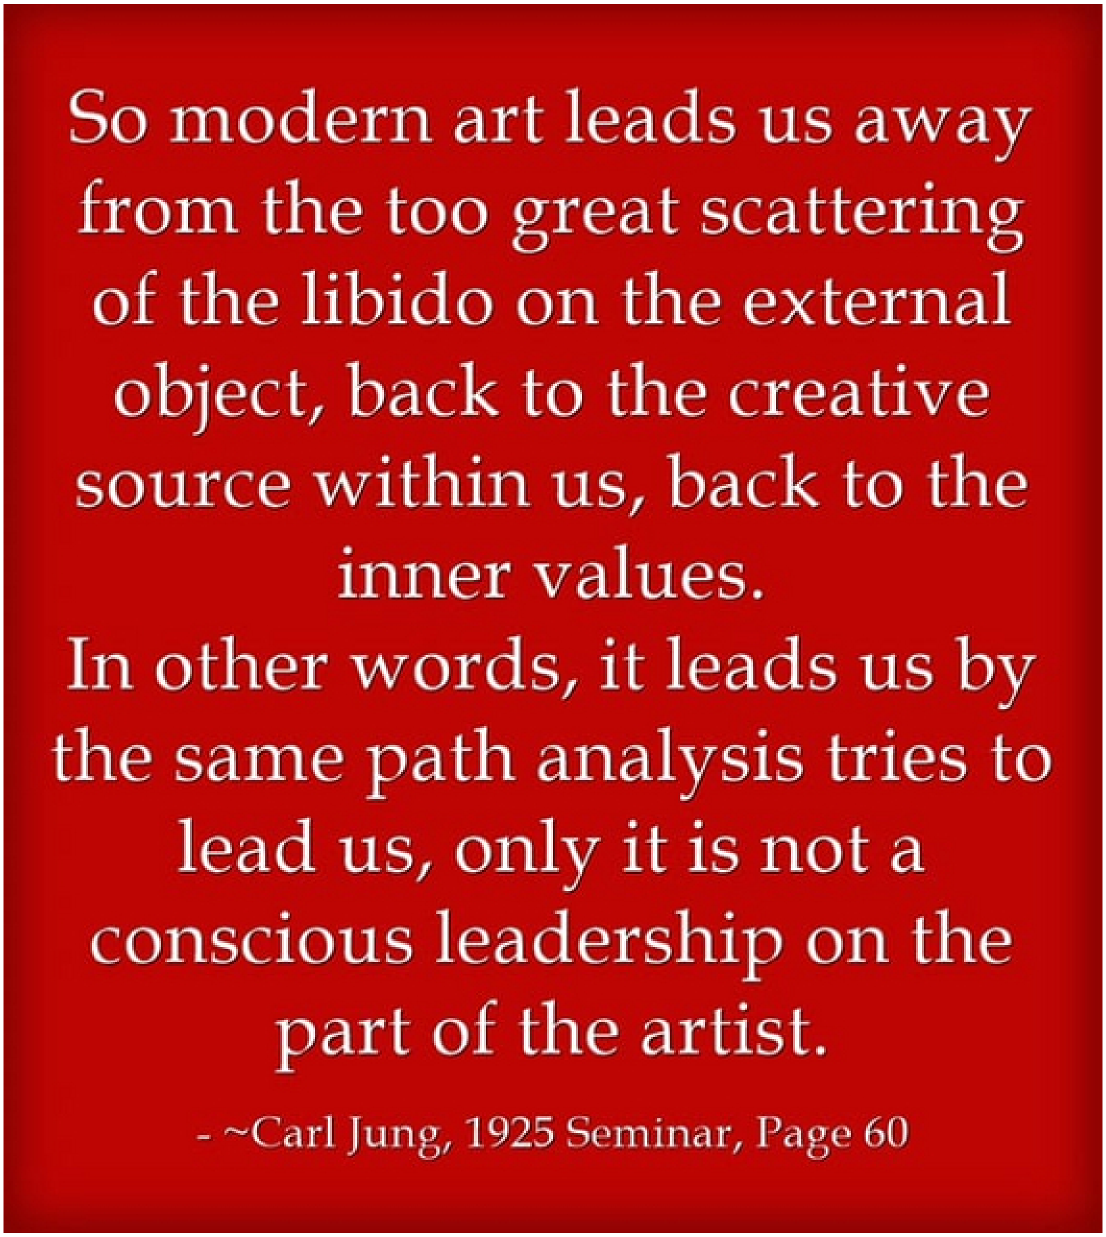
The criterion of art is that it grips you. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 57



Just as the dream seeks to maintain a psychological balance by filling out the daytime conscious attitude by the unconscious elements, so art balances the general public tendency of a given time.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 57

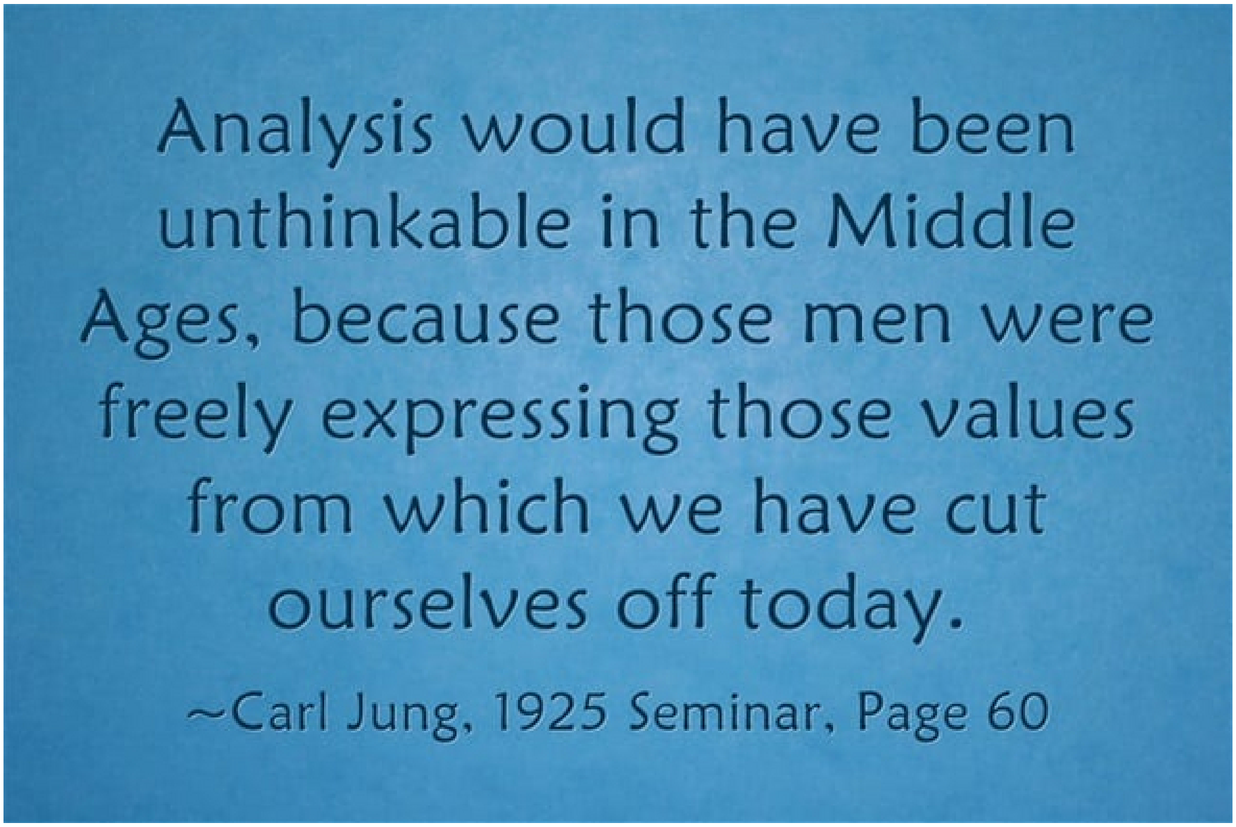
Just as the dream seeks to maintain a psychological balance by filling out the daytime conscious attitude by the unconscious elements, so art balances the general public tendency of a given time. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 57



So modern art leads us away from the too great scattering of the libido on the external object, back to the creative source within us, back to the inner values.
In other words, it leads us by the same path analysis tries to lead us, only it is not a conscious leadership on the part of the artist.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 60

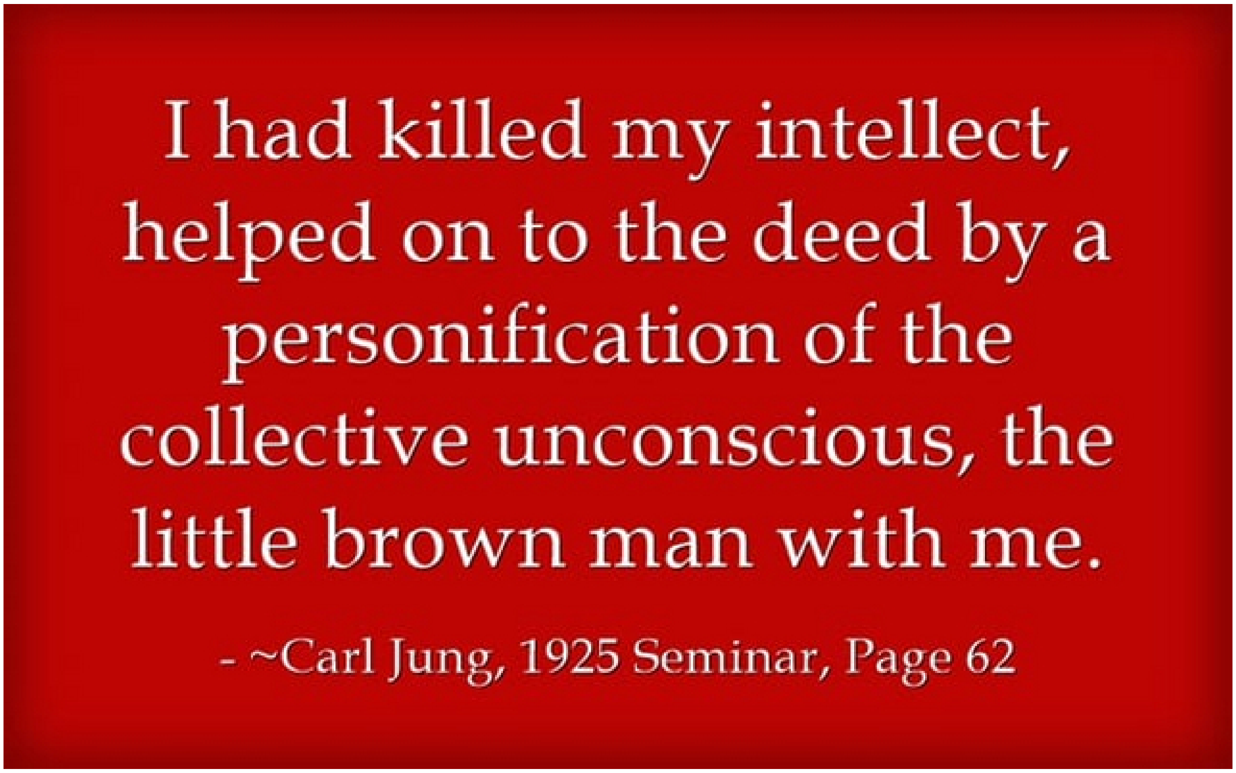
So modern art leads us away from the too great scattering of the libido on the external object, back to the creative source within us, back to the inner values.
In other words, it leads us by the same path analysis tries to lead us, only it is not a conscious leadership on the part of the artist. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 60



Analysis would have been unthinkable in the Middle Ages, because those men were freely expressing those values from which we have cut ourselves off today.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 60

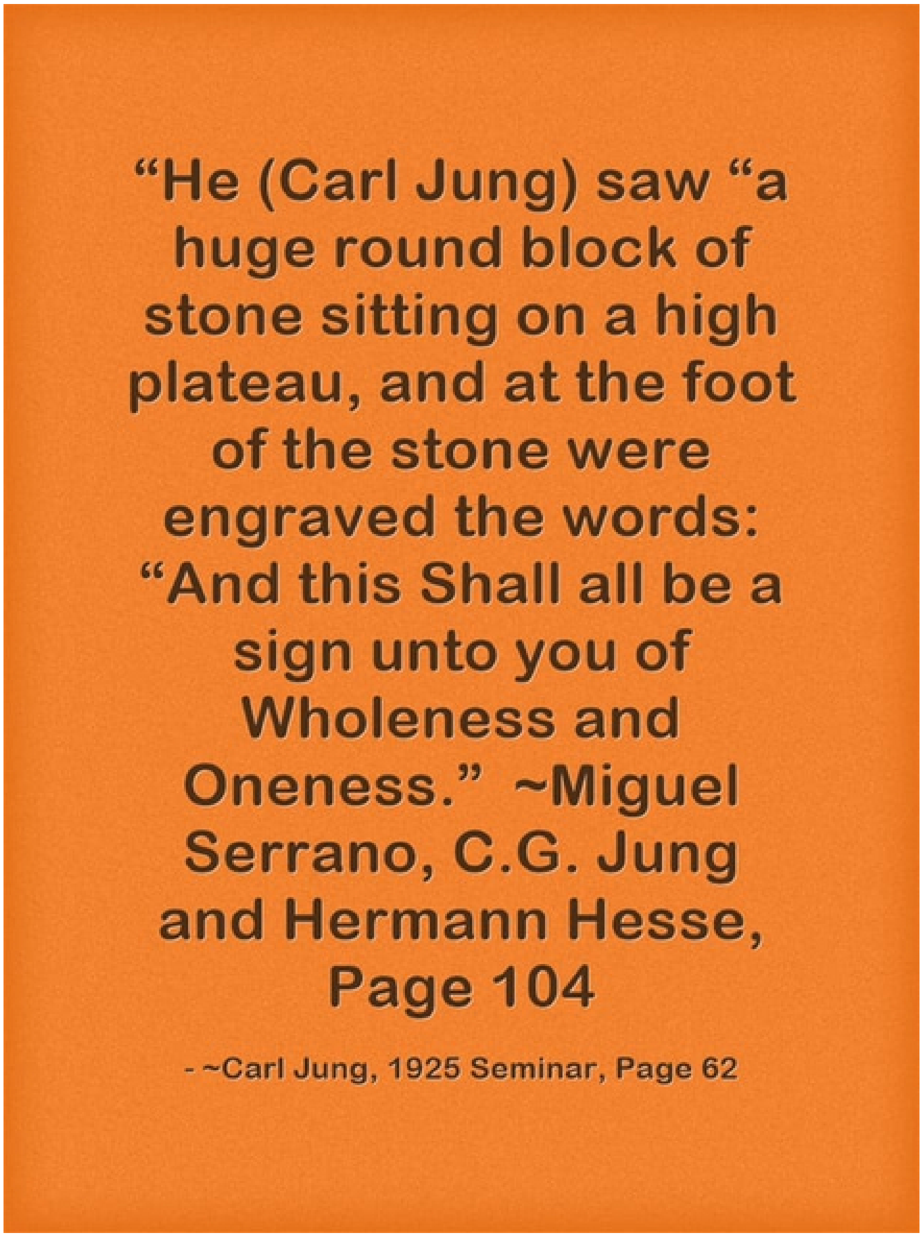
Analysis would have been unthinkable in the Middle Ages, because those men were freely expressing those values from which we have cut ourselves off today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 60



I had killed my intellect, helped on to the deed by a personification of the collective unconscious, the little brown man with me.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 62

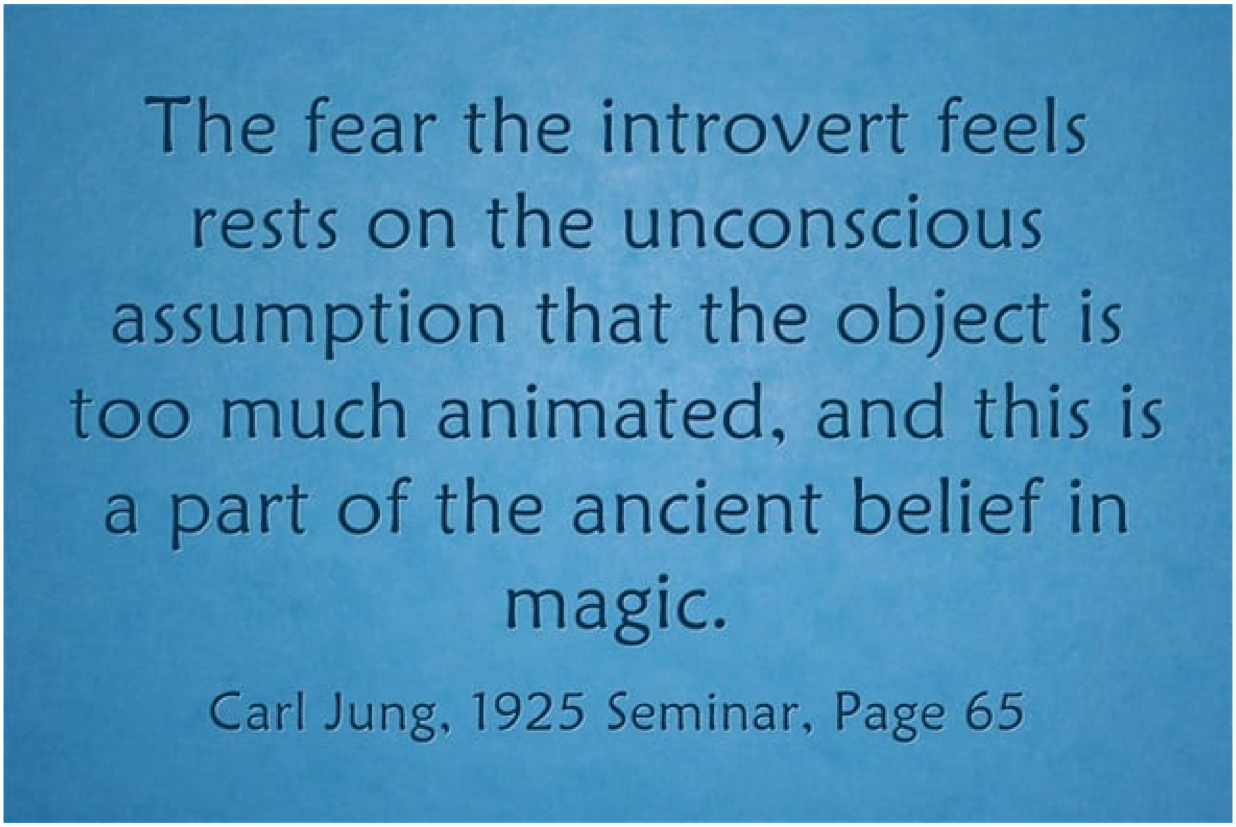
I had killed my intellect, helped on to the deed by a personification of the collective unconscious, the little brown man with me. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 62



“He (Carl Jung) saw “a huge round block of stone sitting on a high plateau, and at the foot of the stone were engraved the words: “And this Shall all be a sign unto you of Wholeness and Oneness.” ~Miguel Serrano, C.G. Jung and Hermann Hesse, Page 104

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 62

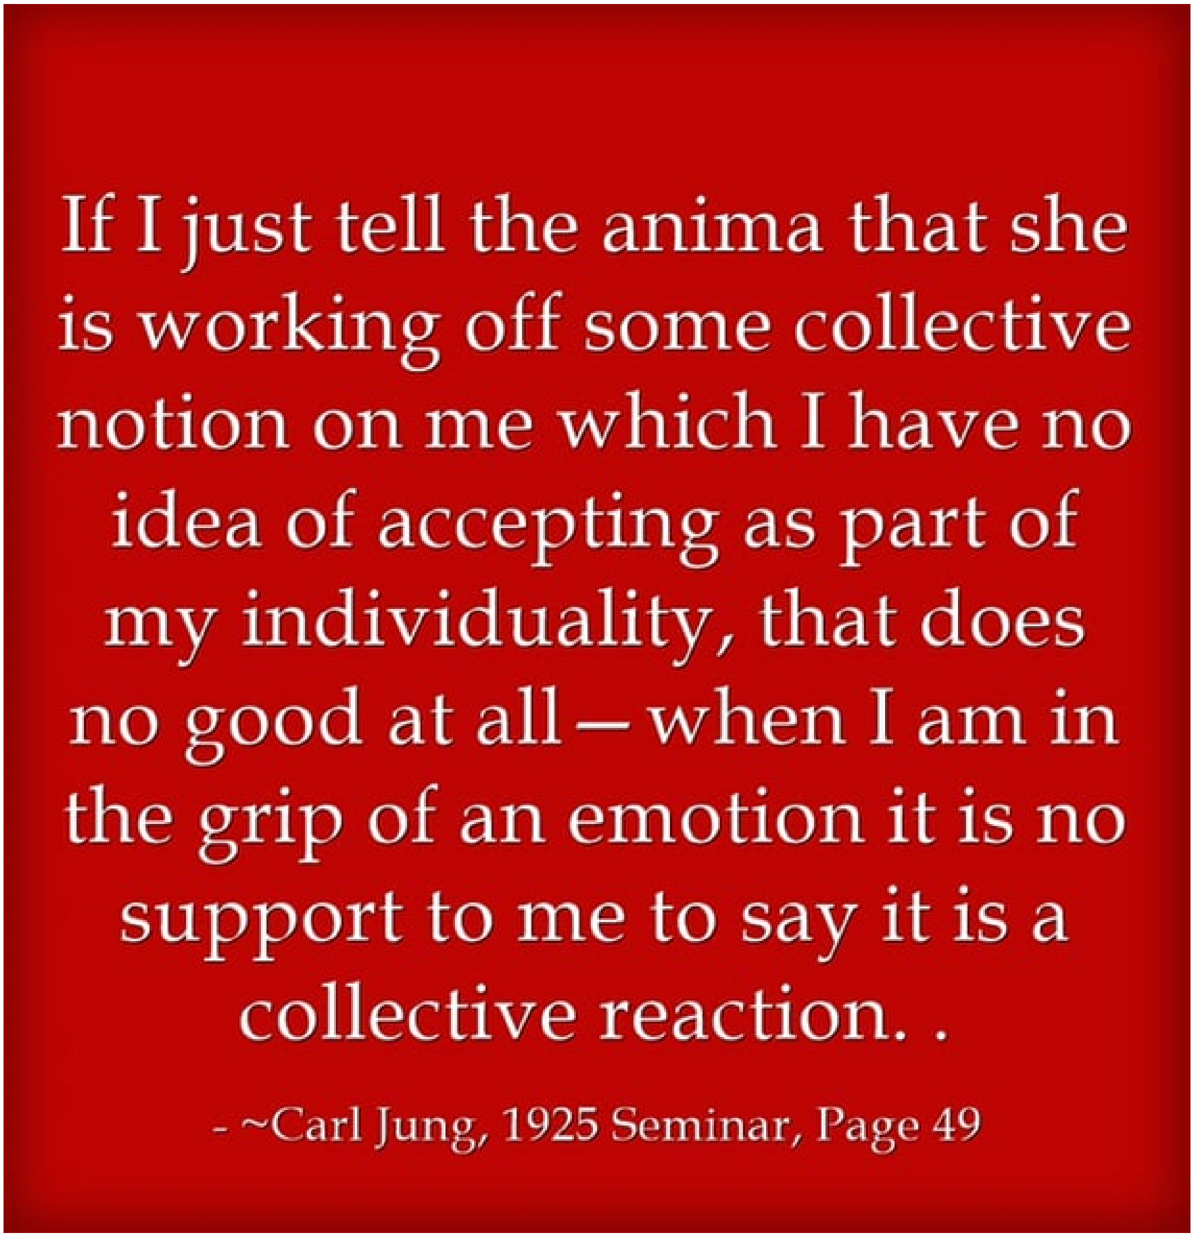
“He (Carl Jung) saw “a huge round block of stone sitting on a high plateau, and at the foot of the stone were engraved the words: “And this Shall all be a sign unto you of Wholeness and Oneness.” Miguel Serrano, C.G. Jung and Hermann Hesse, Page 104



The fear the introvert feels rests on the unconscious assumption that the object is too much animated, and this is a part of the ancient belief in magic.

Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 65

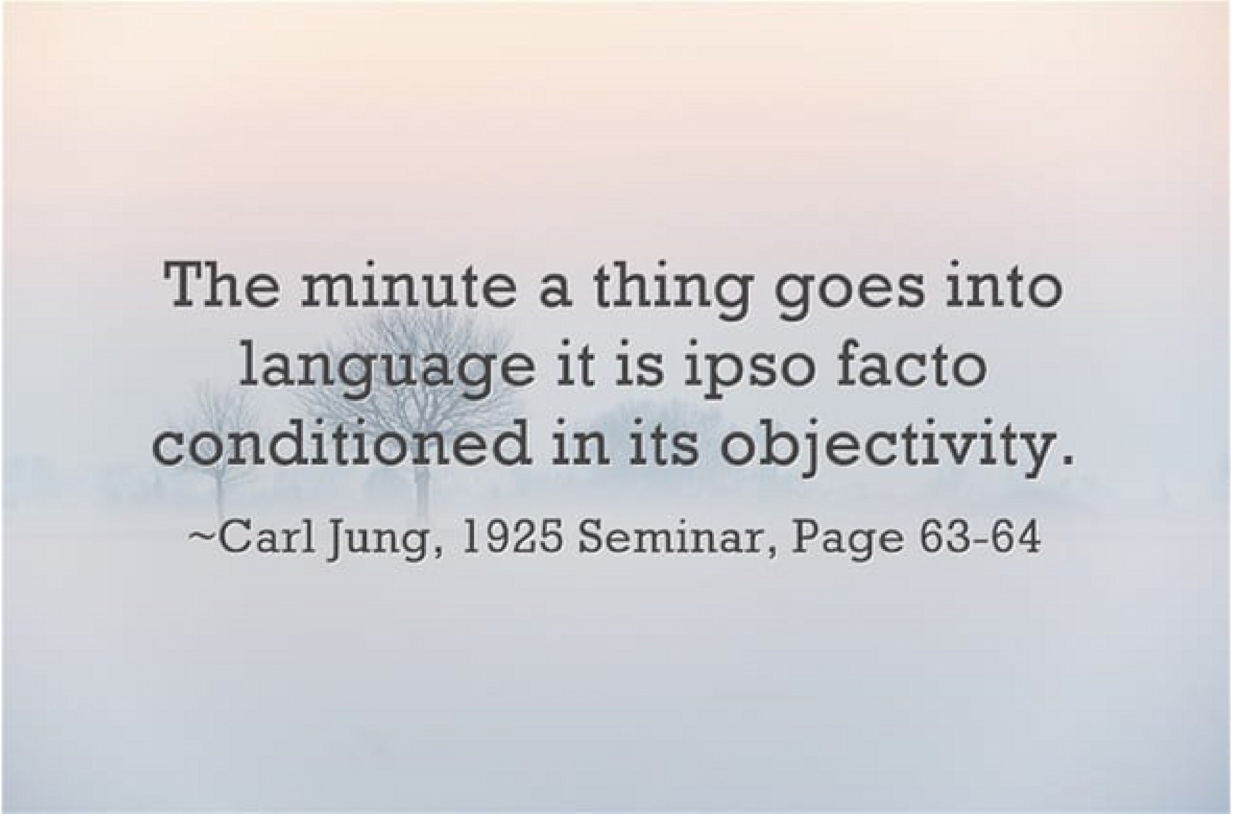
The fear the introvert feels rests on the unconscious assumption that the object is too much animated, and this is a part of the ancient belief in magic. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 65



If I just tell the anima that she is working off some collective notion on me which I have no idea of accepting as part of my individuality, that does no good at all—when I am in the grip of an emotion it is no support to me to say it is a collective reaction. .

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 49

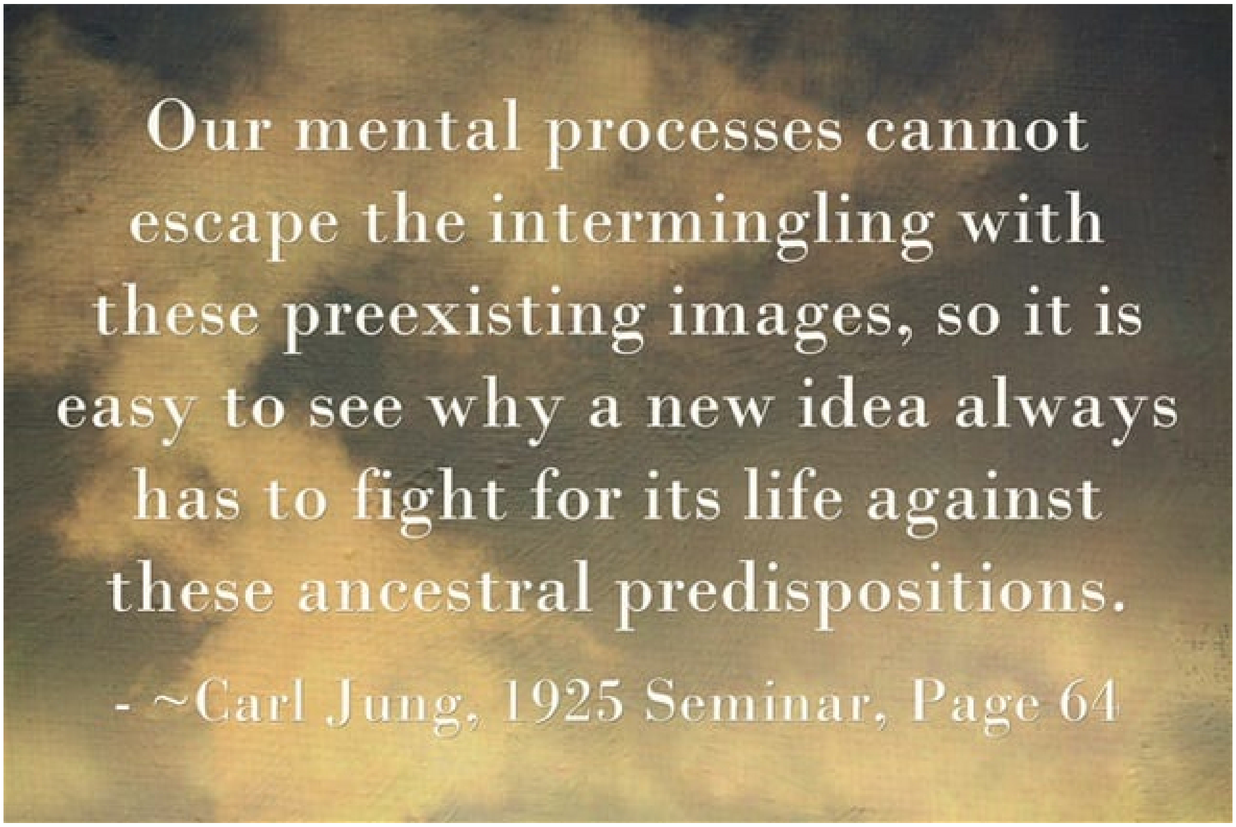
If I just tell the anima that she is working off some collective notion on me which I have no idea of accepting as part of my individuality, that does no good at all—when I am in the grip of an emotion it is no support to me to say it is a collective reaction. . Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 49



The minute a thing goes into language it is ipso facto conditioned in its objectivity.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 63-64

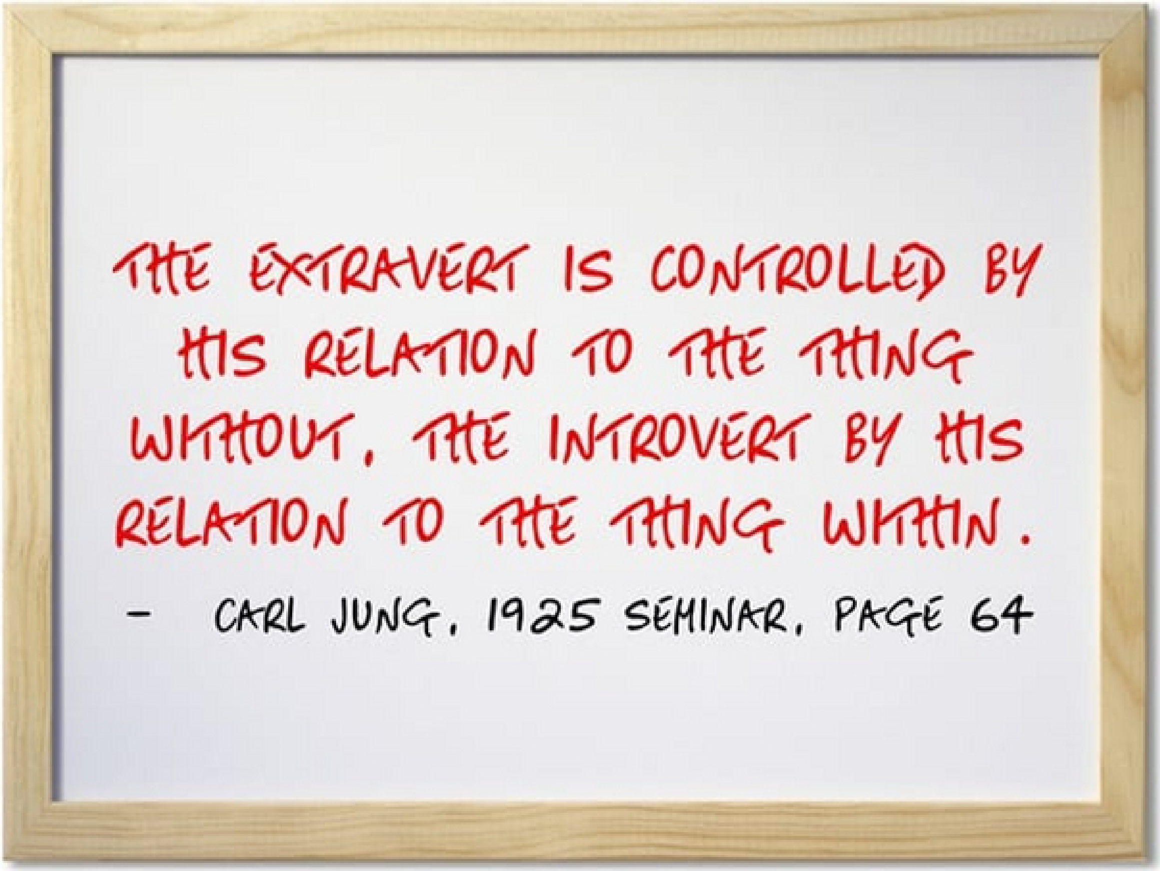
The minute a thing goes into language it is ipso facto conditioned in its objectivity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 63-64



Our mental processes cannot escape the intermingling with these preexisting images, so it is easy to see why a new idea always has to fight for its life against these ancestral predispositions.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 64

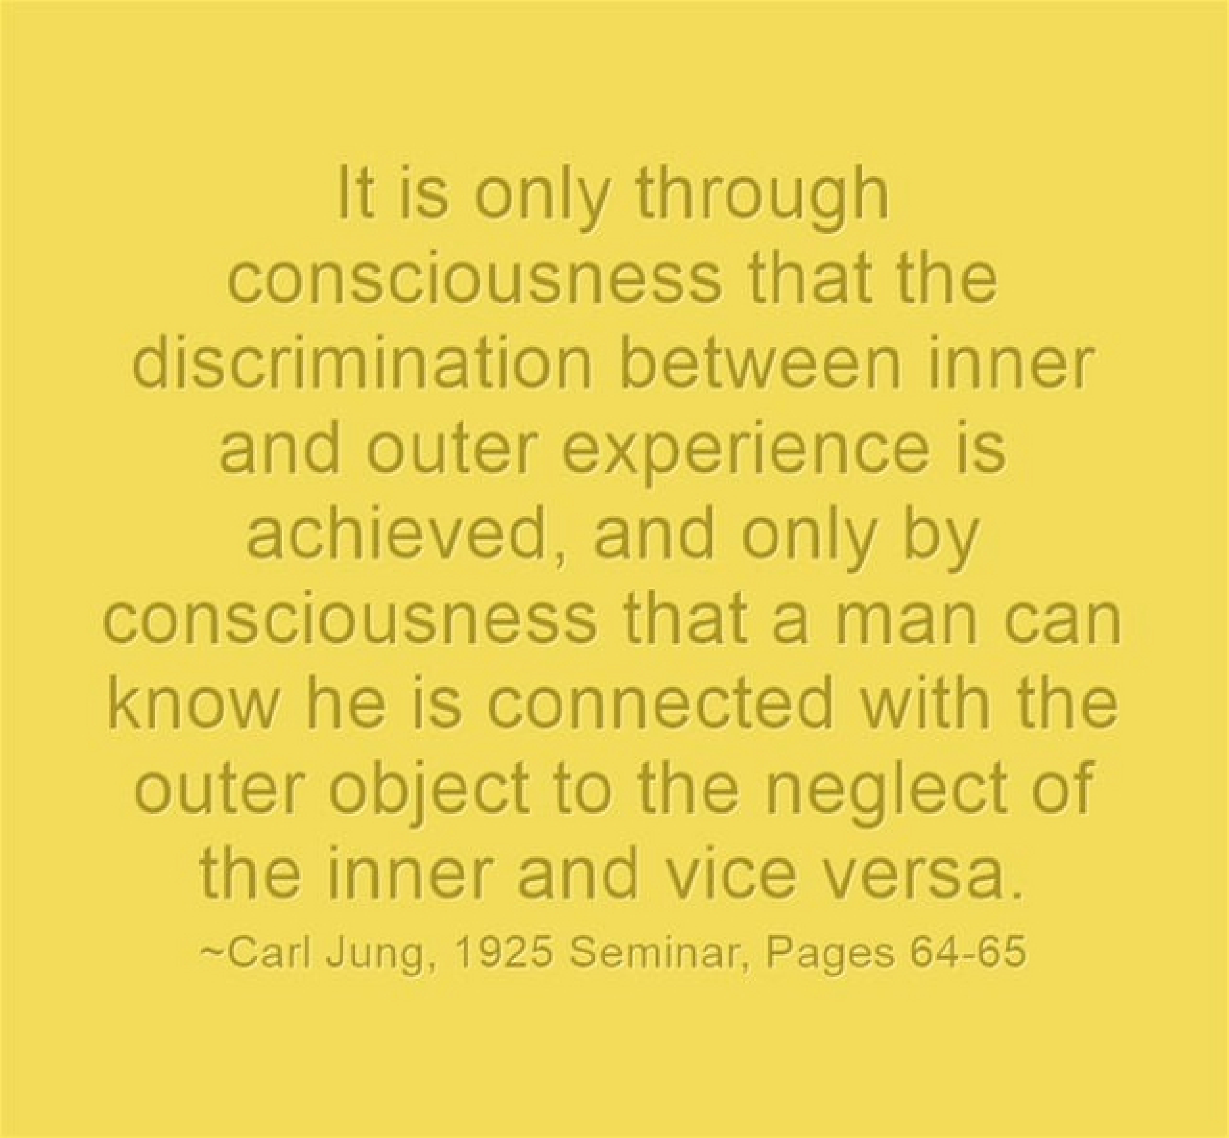
Our mental processes cannot escape the intermingling with these preexisting images, so it is easy to see why a new idea always has to fight for its life against these ancestral predispositions. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 64



THE EXTRAVERT IS CONTROLLED BY HIS RELATION TO THE THING WITHOUT, THE INTROVERT BY HIS RELATION TO THE THING WITHIN.

- CARL JUNG, 1925 SEMINAR, PAGE 64

The extravert is controlled by his relation to the thing without, the introvert by his relation to the thing within. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 64

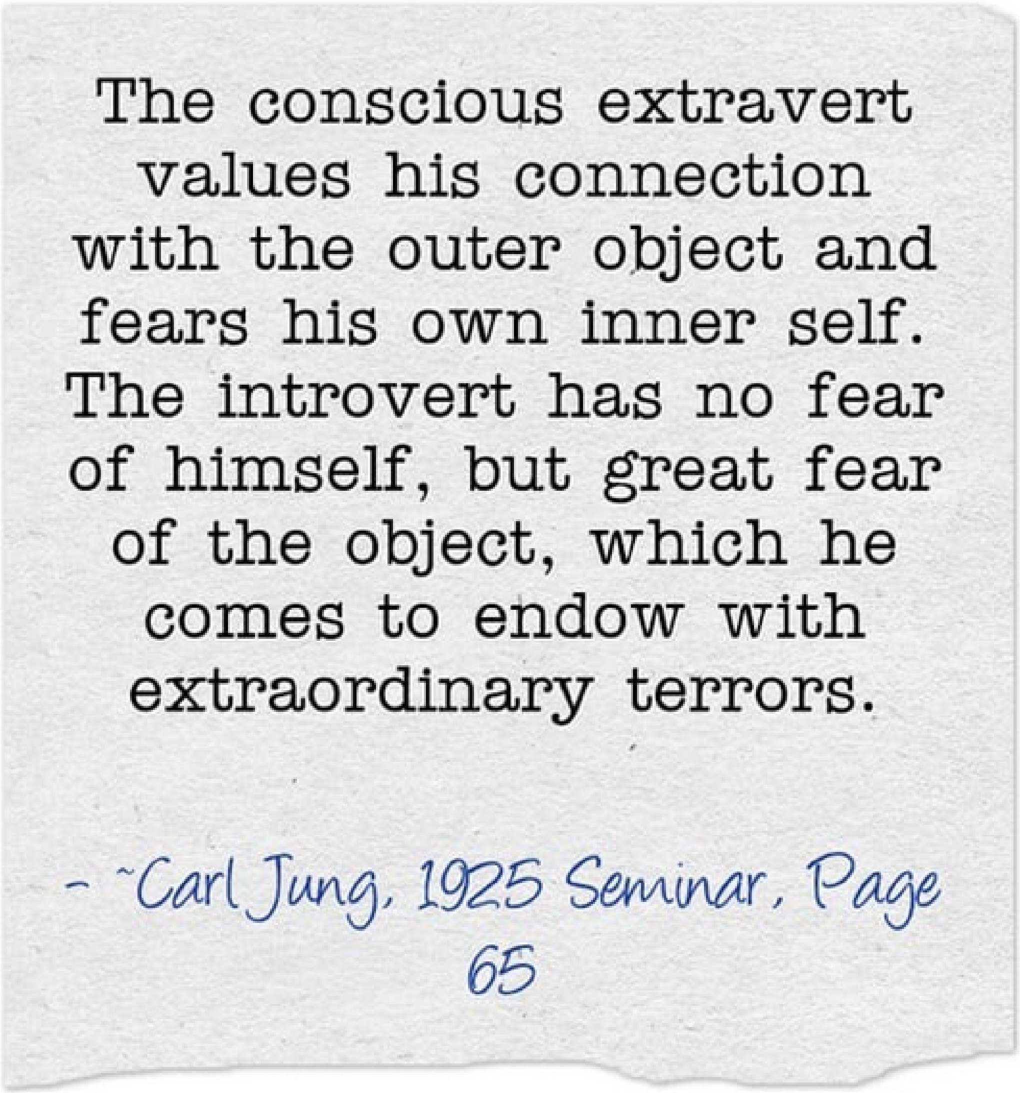


It is only through consciousness that the discrimination between inner and outer experience is achieved, and only by consciousness that a man can know he is connected with the outer object to the neglect of the inner and vice versa.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 64-65

It is only through consciousness that the discrimination between inner and outer experience is achieved, and only by consciousness that a man can know he is connected with the outer object to the neglect of the inner and vice versa.

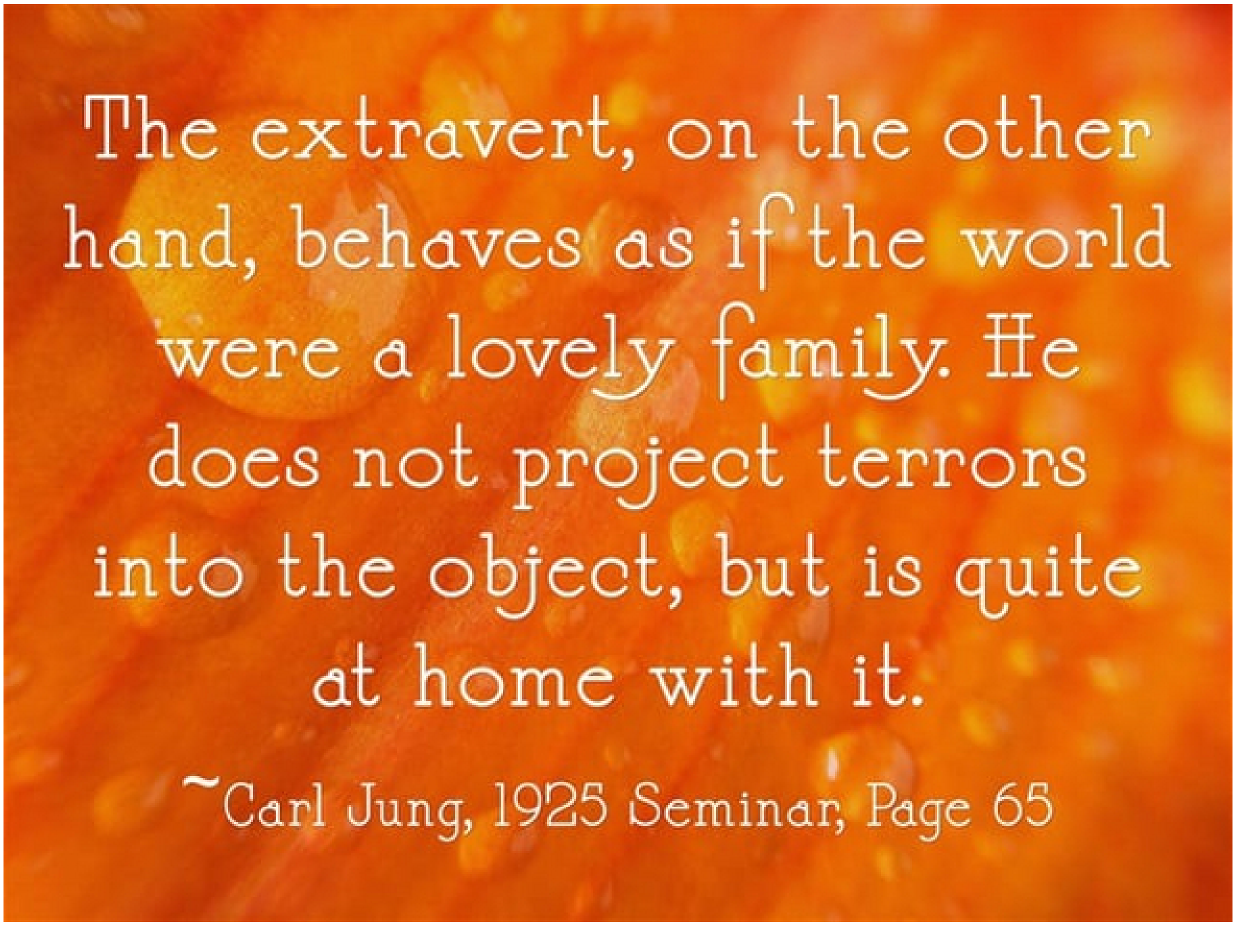
Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 64-65



The conscious extravert values his connection with the outer object and fears his own inner self. The introvert has no fear of himself, but great fear of the object, which he comes to endow with extraordinary terrors.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 65

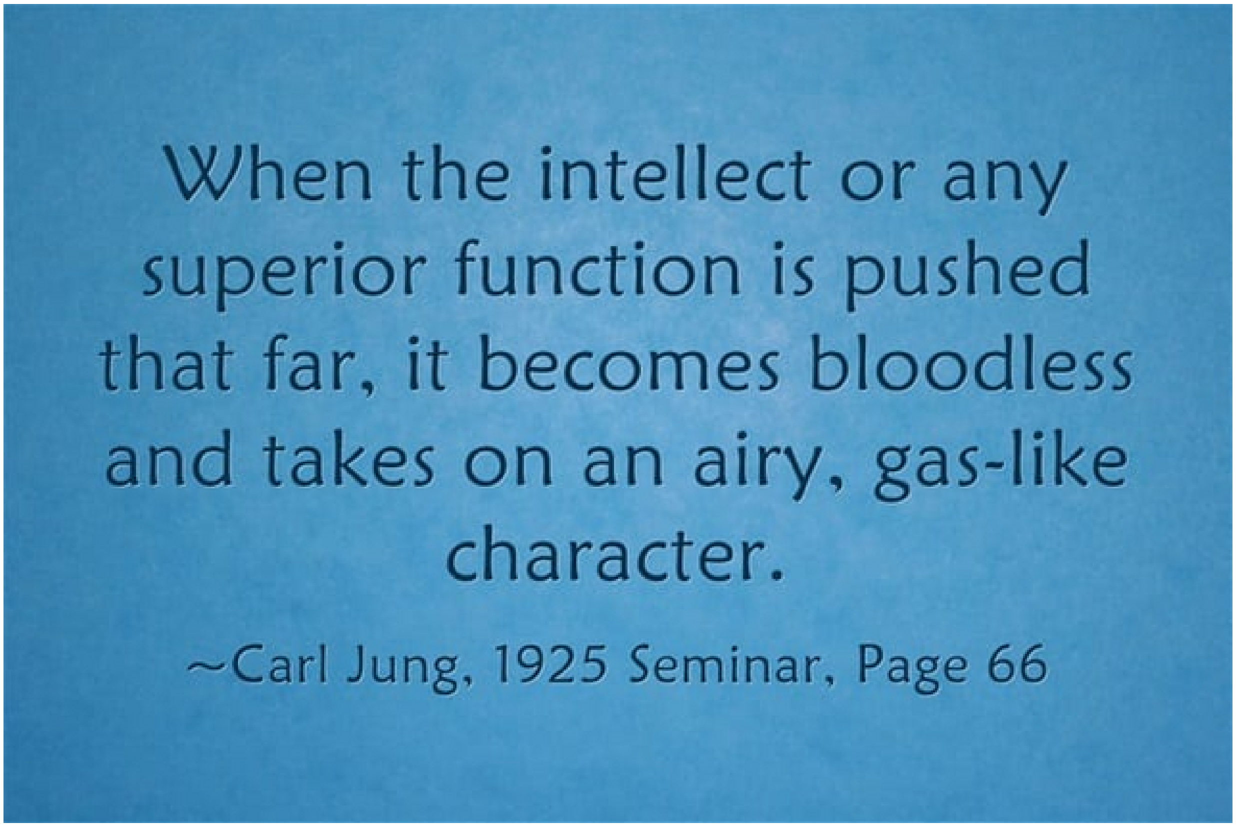
The conscious extravert values his connection with the outer object and fears his own inner self. The introvert has no fear of himself, but great fear of the object, which he comes to endow with extraordinary terrors. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 65



The extravert, on the other hand, behaves as if the world were a lovely family. He does not project terrors into the object, but is quite at home with it.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 65

The extravert, on the other hand, behaves as if the world were a lovely family.
He does not project terrors into the object, but is quite at home with it. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 65

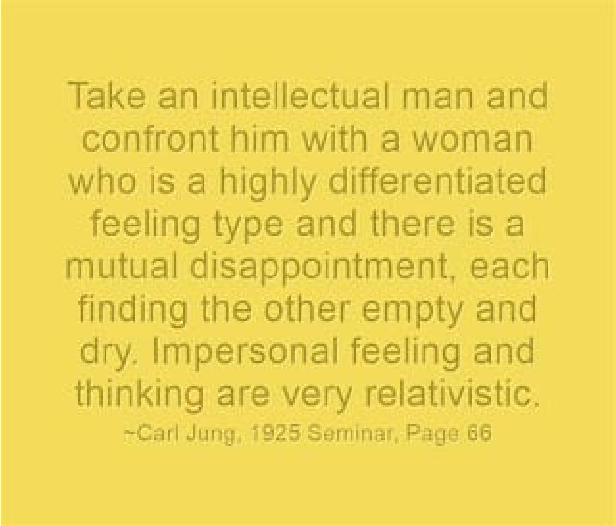


When the intellect or any superior function is pushed that far, it becomes bloodless and takes on an airy, gas-like character.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66

When the intellect or any superior function is pushed that far, it becomes bloodless and takes on an airy, gas-like character. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66

[23]

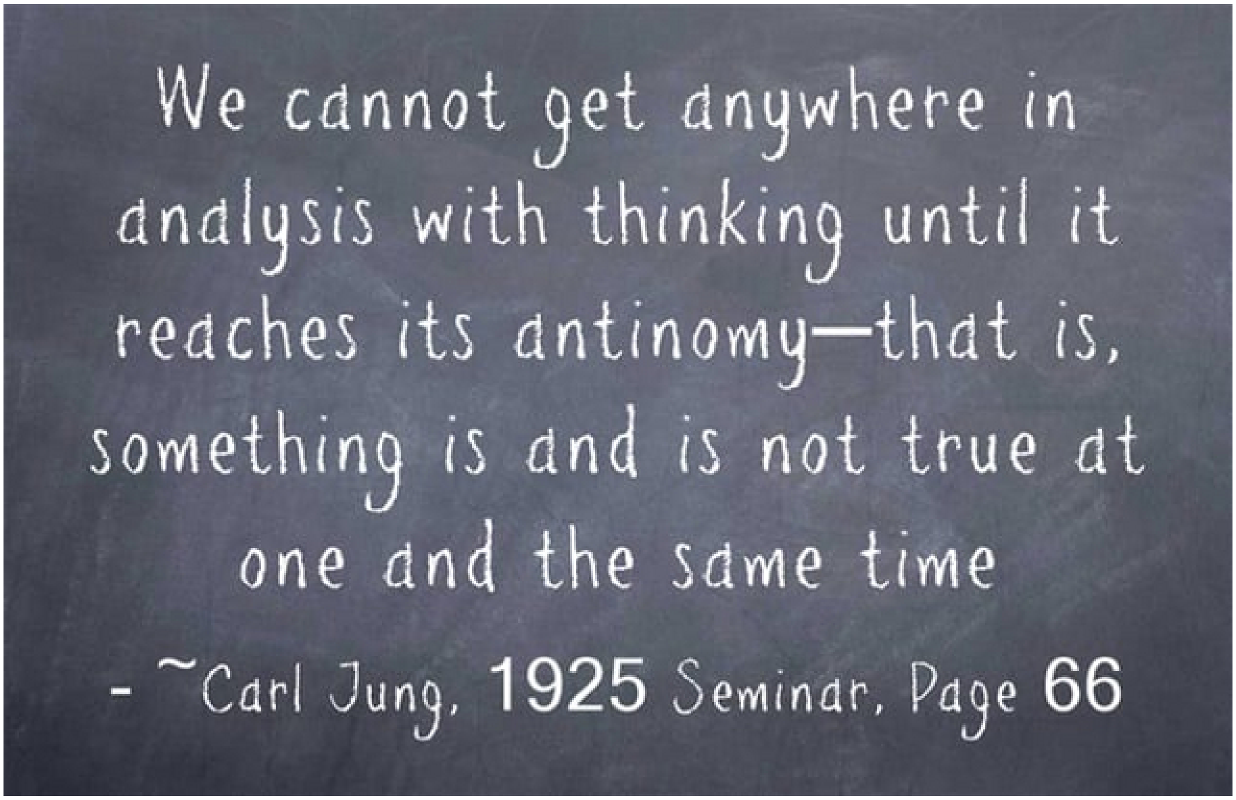


Take an intellectual man and confront him with a woman who is a highly differentiated feeling type and there is a mutual disappointment, each finding the other empty and dry. Impersonal feeling and thinking are very relativistic.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66

Take an intellectual man and confront him with a woman who is a highly differentiated feeling type and there is a mutual disappointment, each finding the other empty and dry. Impersonal feeling and thinking are very relativistic. Carl Jung, 125 Seminar, Page 66

[24]

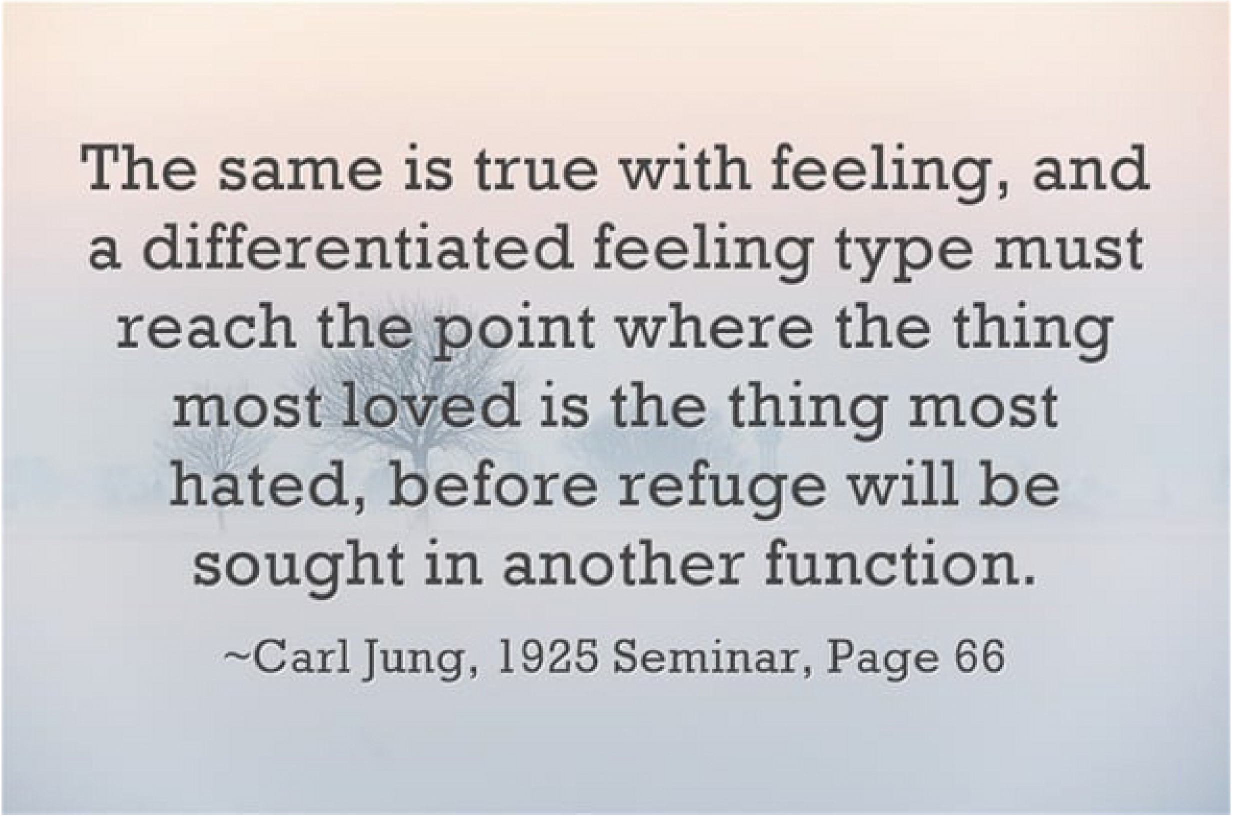


We cannot get anywhere in analysis with thinking until it reaches its antinomy—that is, something is and is not true at one and the same time

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66

We cannot get anywhere in analysis with thinking until it reaches its antinomy—that is, something is and is not true at one and the same time. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66

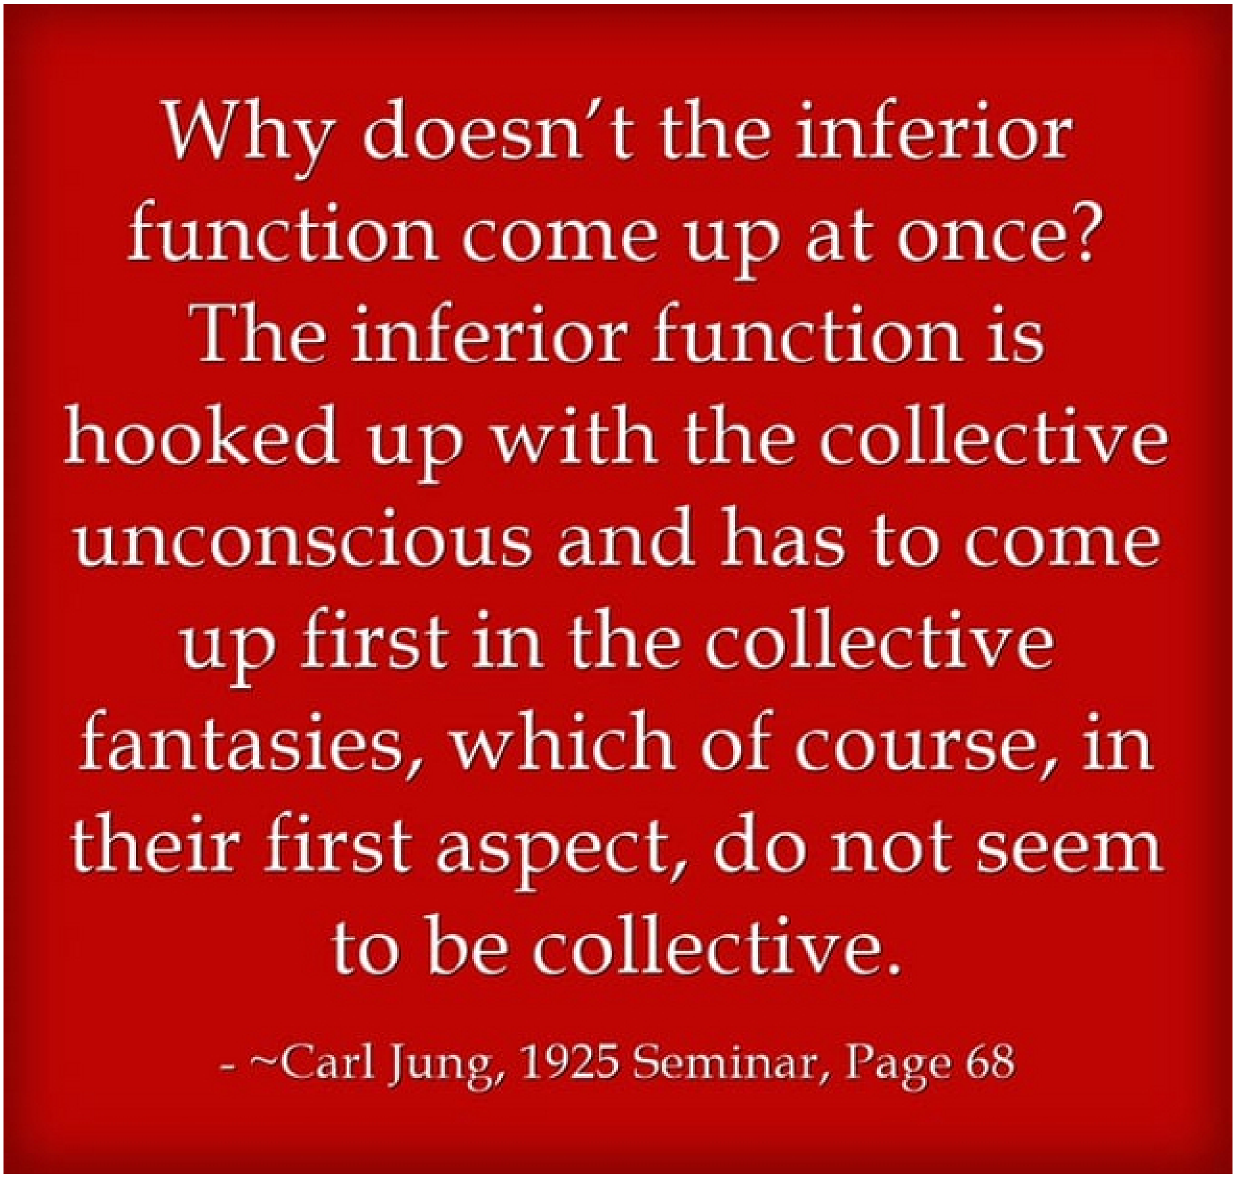
[25]



The same is true with feeling, and a differentiated feeling type must reach the point where the thing most loved is the thing most hated, before refuge will be sought in another function.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66

The same is true with feeling, and a differentiated feeling type must reach the point where the thing most loved is the thing most hated, before refuge will be sought in another function. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 66



Why doesn’t the inferior function come up at once? The inferior function is hooked up with the collective unconscious and has to come up first in the collective fantasies, which of course, in their first aspect, do not seem to be collective.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 68

Why doesn’t the inferior function come up at once? The inferior function is hooked up with the collective unconscious and has to come up first in the collective fantasies, which of course, in their first aspect, do not seem to be collective. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 68

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

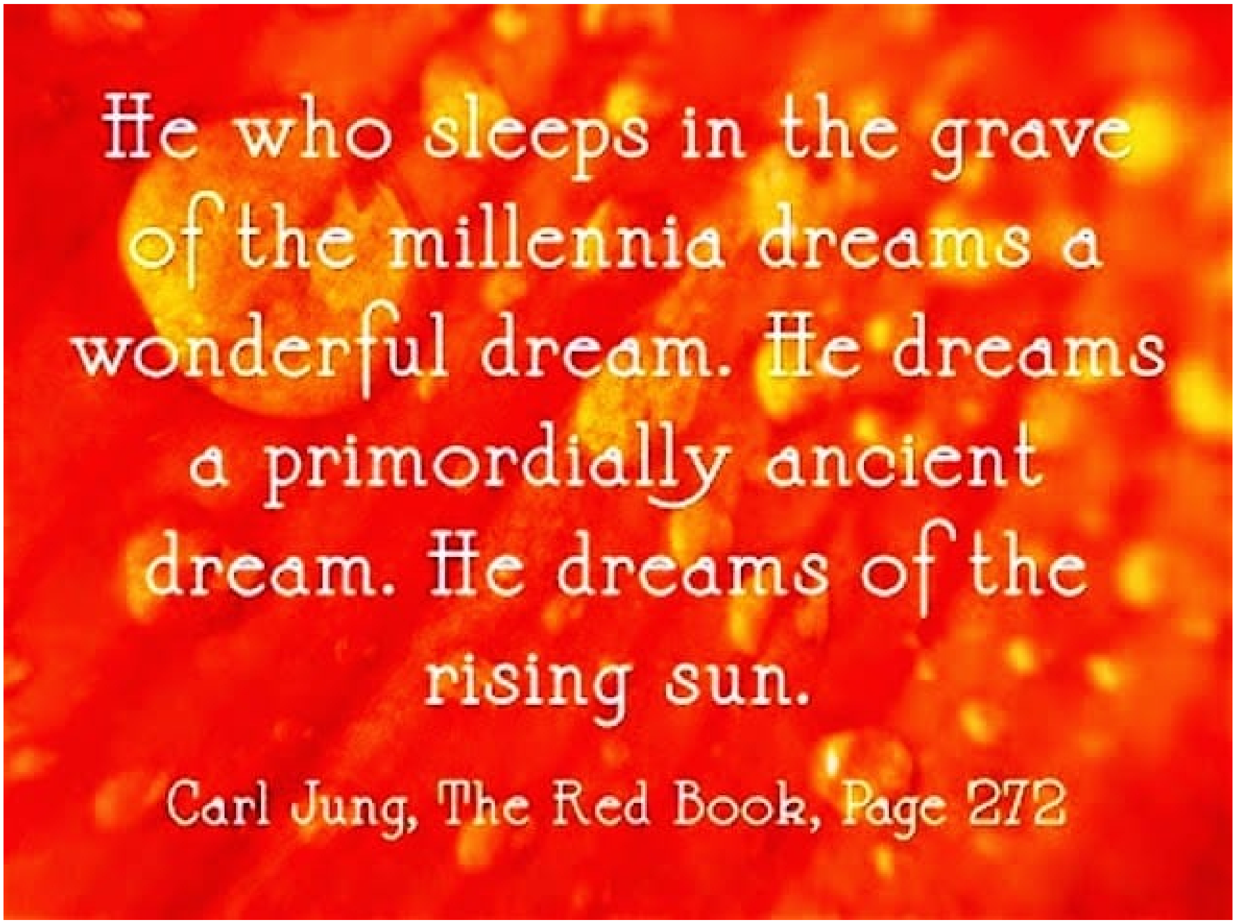
WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/b6974-aaa.jpg
2. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d1e48-bbb.jpg
3. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d6116-ccc.jpg
4. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/a0c95-ddd.jpg
5. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/daa78-eee.jpg
6. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/af30d-fff.jpg
7. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/e35a8-ggg.jpg
8. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/5a7a4-hhh.jpg
9. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/b31ae-iii.jpg
10. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/f7b1b-jjj.jpg
11. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/1baa2-kkk.jpg
12. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/5a6e6-lll.jpg
13. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/230f5-mmm.jpg
14. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/6e42e-nnn.jpg
15. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/1a77e-ooo.jpg
16. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/b14de-ppp.jpg
17. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/345d0-qqq.jpg
18. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/dd863-rrr.jpg
19. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/59896-sss.jpg
20. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/131fa-ttt.jpg
21. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/6ed4d-uuu.jpg
22. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/4770b-vvv.jpg
23. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/34d3e-www.jpg
24. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d71f3-xxx.jpg
25. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/29ee9-yyy.jpg
26. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/75b40-zzz.jpg

---

Carl Jung and “...the dream is a pure product of the prenatal psyche...” (2019-12-11 05:56)

[1]



He who sleeps in the grave of the millennia dreams a wonderful dream. He dreams a primordially ancient dream. He dreams of the rising sun.

Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 272

[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Professor Jung: Yes, the dream is a pure product of the prenatal psyche, and belongs, so to speak, to a virginal layer that hasn't had any contact yet with the outer world.

In such cases the images persist in their original form.

This glass house does not correspond to any experience; otherwise, the dreamer might perhaps have rather talked of a "lantern," and then tried to make a connection between this strange object and some known form.

Here, however, it remains completely unreal.

Even if he had once seen a pyramid, there certainly was no glass house on top.

During this winter term we will deal with some more of those abstract dreams.

The dream in which four gods rise from the four corners also comes from layers that had not been in touch with the world before.

In all these cases with such remote images, we have to consult an extremely multi-layered symbolism to reach an understanding.

Let us only add some few remarks to the exhaustive paper of Mrs. Jaffé.

It was mentioned that the glass house standing on top of the pyramid represents its center.

We also find this idea of the vessel as the center of the pyramid elsewhere, for example, in the Maya culture.

During the excavations of the great pyramid, a lime vessel was found beneath the altar inside, there where the ancient temple had stood.

It contained a wonderful work of art in the form of a mandala, made of about three thousand small turquoise stones.

It portrays four snakes aligned in such a way that they point to the four world regions.

The vessel also plays a crucial role in alchemy, where it appears in the most varied forms.

As you have heard, it can also be a glass house, the domus vitrea.

Often an old man sits in it, the senex, sweating, for the glass house is a sweat house.

In the Visio Arislei, the king's daughter and son are imprisoned in the triple glass house under the sea.

It is unbearably hot there.

In this heat the transformation of the dead prince takes place.

To perform such transubstantiations, the alchemists often used round glass bowls, called uteri, whose roundness indicated perfection.

A beautiful parallel can be found in the Mountain Chant of the Navajo Indians.

It is a healing ceremony to which they subject themselves when they have had a bad dream, for instance, or do not feel well for some other reason.

In this ceremony, a circle of about 650 to 1,000 feet in diameter is staked out.

In the center of this circle, which represents a mandala, there is the medicine lodge with the sweat lodge66 at its side.

The latter is a little round hut built of branches and earth.

Often the rainbow goddess is drawn with colored sand on its top, leaning over the hut as over her own uterus.

The hut is heated up and the man to be healed crawls into it and starts to sweat.

Do you know of a parallel in the heroic myths?

Participant: The night sea journey in the womb of the whale.

Professor Jung: Yes, there the hero sweats so much that he loses all his hair and reemerges bald-headed, like a newborn child.

As a matter of fact, he is reborn indeed.

In India the sweating corresponds to the tapas.

This is a kind of self-brooding.

By the concentration of the soul powers on this one point, on the central point of the self, it is hatched like an egg.

One is enclosed in it oneself, as in the retort or in the uterus.

Where do we find similar ideas on transubstantiation?

Participant: In the Christian church, in the ritual of consecrating the baptismal water.

Professor Jung: Yes, this ritual of the benedictio fontis was performed on Holy Saturday.

It goes back to the seventh or eighth century and is full of mysterious things.

The regulations for this ritual are laid down in the Missale Romanum.

After certain preparations of the water, for example, separating the water in the form of a cross, exorcizing, and benediction, there follows the fertilization with the help of the Paschal Candle.

It is thrice dipped into the baptismal font, which contains the sacral water, the third time down to the fundus, the bottom of the font.

This imparts the facultas regerandi to the baptismal water, the power to give new birth to man.

Man is reborn into a new childhood through being touched by this magic water and is completely purified.

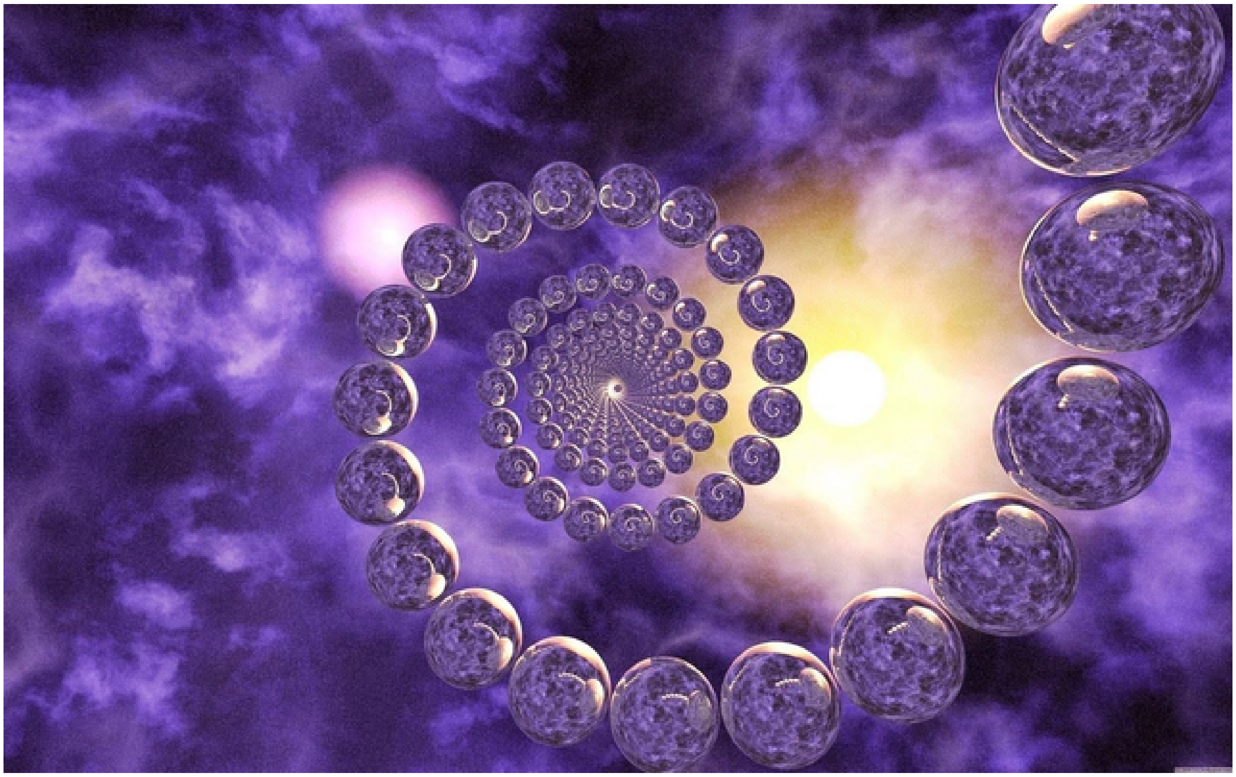
This fertilization of the uterus ecclesia is a veritable coniunctio, because the candle represents Christ Himself, and the baptismal water the mater gratia, the Mother of Grace.

In this union the transformation of the water to the aqua permanens occurs, the eternal divine water, as it is called in alchemy. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 294-297.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/69401-grave.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3C8961CHGXZRH&keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1576087333&s`

Carl Jung on Dreams from God. (2019-12-11 07:27)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Pastor Ernst Fischer

Dear Pastor Fischer, 21 December 1944

The article you sent me in the Volksblattmay refer to a dream but the development is literary so that one can never be quite certain how much invention is mixed up with it.

The dream is not uninteresting and was obviously dreamt by a very religious person.

We know, of course, that what happens in the dream is a drama taking place on one's own interior stage, where the dreamer is the actors, the libretto, the theatre, and the public rolled into one.

Here the dreamer witnesses how his wife and daughter suddenly vanish as though rapt up to heaven.

This is undoubtedly a process of dissociation which the dream by projection extends to any number of other families.

If we take this bit as genuine, we would have to conclude that the dreamer is suffering from a dissociation affecting not only himself but his whole circle.

His dissociation consists in a splitting-off of the feminine element in the unconscious, which in Western languages is designated by anima, psyche, and their cognates, all of the feminine gender.

These dissociations usually occur when consciousness has in one respect or another strayed too far from its natural basis and consequently gets into conflict with its natural preconditions.

This is such a common phenomenon in the history of culture that for the purpose of healing such dissociations reconciliation rites were instituted which frequently took the form of the hierosgamos.

Even in Christianity we have this symbolism in the nuptiae agni and in the union of the sponsus Christ with the sponsa ecclesia.

This reconciliation symbolism as a cure for psychic dissociation is found in most religions.

Even in the strongly masculine Jewish religion we have the love symbolism of the pardes rimmonim and the ultimate union of the Shekhinah with the sponsus Tifereth.

The dissociated state is itself a morbid one and people who run around in such a state are liable to infect others.

The excitement emanating from this article tends to rouse the naive reader to expect some kind of miracle which is not altogether as it should be.

I therefore always advise my patients when they have significant dreams of this nature to regard them as messages directed to their own private address (somnia a Deo missal and I would have given the same advice to the writer of this article.

On top of that he lays himself bare before the eyes of the knowledgeable.

It would be another matter if together with the dream he had made an insightful confession of his own state.

But from lack of knowledge this was obviously impossible.

Hoping I have given a satisfactory answer to the complicated questions raised by the article

I remain,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 355-356.

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/772ed-dream.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3VMJ7ARYW5ODX&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576087768&sprefix=jung+l%2

Carl Jung on the “Problem of the pairs of Opposites" (2019-12-11 07:34)

[1]

Lecture 10

Dr. Jung: Is there any particular way you would like to approach the problem of the pairs of opposites?

Dr. de Angulo: I would like to begin with them as they appear in nature and work up to them as they appear in man.

Dr. Jung: That would be beginning at the roof inasmuch as, in a certain sense, the notion of the pairs of opposites is a projection upon nature.

For that reason it is better for us to begin with our psychological experience of the pairs of opposites, for we are not at all sure of the objectivity of the world.

Thus, for example, there is the widespread theory of monism, which is a denial of the dualistic aspect of the world—that is, it insists on our oneness and the world's oneness.

If you hold the theory of the pairs of opposites, you can hold both monism and dualism which will then become a pair of opposites, but here you will find yourself once more in the magic circle of your own personality.

You cannot get out of your skin until you become an eternal ghost.

There is a written question from Miss Hincks which takes us into the philosophical aspect of the problem, from which side I think we will find the best approach.

Miss Hincks' question: "In treating the opposites in analysis, do you consider them as psychological, or as biological phenomena from which the elements of opposition can be removed, in contradistinction to the philosophical viewpoint where they are qualities logically opposed and therefore irreconcilable?"

Dr. Jung: The idea of the pairs of opposites is as old as the world, and if we treated it properly, we should have to go back to the earliest sources of Chinese philosophy, that is to the I Ching oracle.

Curiously enough, the pairs of opposites do not appear as such in Egyptian thought, but they are a basic part of both Chinese and Indian philosophy.

In the I Ching, they appear as an ever-recurring enantiodromia, through the action of which one state of mind leads inevitably to its opposite.

[2]
This is the essential idea of Taoism, and the writings of both Lao-tse and Confucius are permeated with this principle.

We have the I Ching, the source of Chinese philosophy, in the form given it by King Wên and the Duke Chou, who employed a prison term, so it is said, in working out an intuitive interpretation of the I Ching oracle.

Some of you know the technique of the I Ching.

The arrangement is in the form of hexagrams symbolizing the enantiodromia to be expressed.

It might be called a contradiction psychology, that is, while the a principle is increasing, its opposite the b principle is decreasing, but there always comes a point where b imperceptibly begins increasing until it is the dominant.

This same conception is involved in the symbol of Tao, where the opposing principles are represented by white and black spiral divisions of a circle.

They are thought of as the male and female elements respectively.

The white portion, or masculine principle, contains within it a black spot, and the black portion, or female principle, contains a white spot.

Thus Yang the masculine principle, when at its full, generates Yin the feminine, and vice versa.

The Tao Tê Ching is also founded on these principles of the opposites, though expressed in a somewhat different way. I t is possible that the author of the Tao Tê Ching, Lao-tse, was in some way in connection with the philosophy of the Upanishads, as there is a similarity between the two.

[3]

Perhaps among the books of the king whom he served as librarian there were to be found Brahmanic texts, or perhaps the contact was made through travelers.

In Lao-tse the idea of the opposites is expressed in this way:

High rests upon Low, Great Good and Great Evil, that is to say, nothing exists save by virtue of a balancing opposite.

It is the same notion Nietzsche voices when he says the greater the spread of the tree, the deeper the roots.

The philosophical position of India with respect to the opposites is more advanced.

There the teaching is, “Be free of the pairs of opposites, don’t pay attention to High and Low.”

The perfect man must be above his virtues as well as above his vices.

It is again the same idea that Nietzsche expresses when he says, “Master your virtues as well as your vices.”

So in the Upanishads, in contrast to the Chinese viewpoint, the emphasis is not on the opposites as such, but on the peculiar creative process between them.

One could say therefore that the general point of view of the Upanishads is monistic.

Atman is the central thing between the opposites; they themselves are almost taken for granted. Lao-tse on the other hand, as we have seen, stresses the opposites, although he knows the way between the two, Tao, and accepts it as the essence of life.

Still he is always concerned with the pedagogic aspect of the problem; it is his intention that his pupils never are to forget that they are in the way of oppositions, and he has to teach them the things that will lead them along that way.

The Brahman pupil, on the other hand, does not have to be taught these things; he knows them.

Perhaps this grows out of the fact, in the case of the Brahman, [that] it is a matter of the wisdom having been handed down through the caste.

The knowledge of the opposites was a possession of this priestly caste and did not need to be taught.

The Brahman pupil, in a word, stood on a certain philosophical niveau by virtue of his birth and was ready for the next step, namely the thing between the pairs of opposites, whereas the people whom Lao-tse addressed were on no such aristocratic level, spiritually speaking; they were the people of average intelligence.

The legend about Lao-tse’s writing down his wisdom before his retirement into solitude is an example of what I mean.

Lao-tse is said to have left his home on the slope of the mountain and to have wandered west.

When he reached the gate in the Great Wall, the guard recognized him at once and would not let him pass through the gate until he had written down his wisdom.

He wrote it then in the book of five thousand words, the Tao Tê Ching.

This legend would show that the book was meant for the generally learned, not just for a priest class.

The Upanishads appeal to people who are beyond the pairs of opposites.

If you are free of illusion, life is worthwhile and not worthwhile to an almost equal degree, but such people could only be frequent in a class specially devoted to philosophical training.

In those times, what philosophers thought was nature itself.

It was not very intentional; rather, thought happened to people in a strangely direct and immediate way so as to give the impression of being given to the mind rather than made by it.

Of course, innumerable examples of this sort of thing occur to us if we begin to think of great discoveries and works of art.

Mayer's conception of energy came this way, as though from heaven.

So also the Devil's Sonata of Tartini.

Raphael's Madonna (now in Dresden) was the result of a sudden vision, as was Michelangelo's Moses.9

When a thought or a vision comes to a man in this way, it is with an overwhelming power of conviction.

This, as I say, is the type of original thought.

Today we have lost to a great extent this sense of the immanence of thought, as one might put it, and have instead the illusion of making our thoughts ourselves.

We are not convinced that our thoughts are original beings that walk about in our brains, and we invent the idea that they are powerless without our gracious creative act; we invent this in order not to be too much influenced by our thoughts.

We are in relation to our thoughts a little bit like Chanteclair with the sun: convinced that the sun could not rise without his crowing, he was persuaded once to make the experiment, but just as the sun came up, so great was his mistrust of its powers, that he crowed, making sure thereby, that the world would not be without the sun that day.

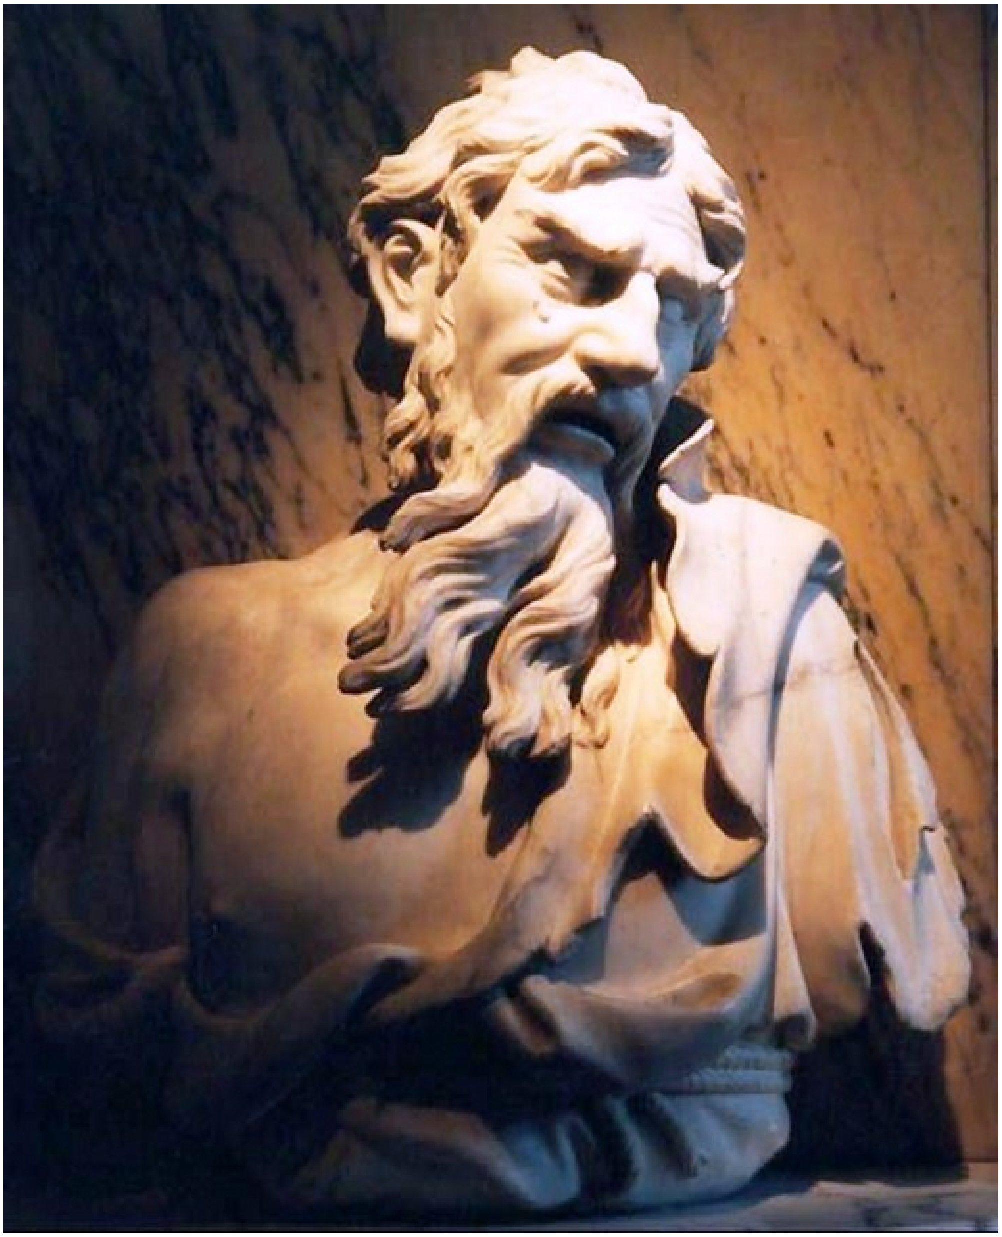
Of course it is quite useful to us to have the idea that our thoughts are free expressions of our intentional thinking, otherwise we would never be free from the magic circle of nature.

After all, we really can think, even if not with an absolute independence from nature; but it is the duty of the psychologist to make the double statement, and while admitting man's power of thought, to insist also on the fact that he is trapped in his own skin, and therefore always has his thinking influenced by nature in a way he cannot wholly control.



As I said, this original thinking is immediately convincing.

When you have such a thought, you are sure it is true—it comes as a revelation.

This is no more beautifully shown than in a projection; you simply know it to be true, and you are inclined to resent any suggestion of error connected with it.

This is especially true with women, where the projection may not even be conscious.

The unconscious has power to influence our thinking in incredible ways.

Thus I remember once reading a passage in one of Lamprecht's books to the effect that it is quite evident that man has passed through an age of incest.

I accepted this as I read it, but then I said to myself, "Why is it evident that man has passed through an age of incest?"—and the more I thought of it, the less evident it became.

Lamprecht was no doubt guided in his assumption by the unconscious acceptance of the Adam and Eve myth.

So there is a certain kind of thinking gripping us all the time, and these unconscious ideas act as the players of marionettes.

Insofar as natural thinking carried with it the conviction of natural fact, the early philosophers when thinking about nature had some such sudden revelation, as we would say, come to them, and they took it for granted that nature herself had spoken to them and that they were in possession of a truth of nature, indisputably true. It never occurred to them that it might be a projection, and without foundation in the world of fact.

Thus it was with the principle of the opposites; it was held by the early philosophers to have been given to man by nature.

The legend says of the I Ching that a horse came up out of the Yellow River bearing on his back the trigrams out of which the symbols are built up.

The sages copied it and it was known as the River Map.

We do not think thus, and so we no longer take our thoughts as nature; the very way thought processes work in us keeps us from the notion that nature has spoken to us when we have thought.

But these people allowed their minds to work without control, and inasmuch as the brain is also a phenomenon of nature, it is a true product of nature and therefore contains the result of the action of the forces of nature.

The fruit of the brain is a natural product and as such must be assumed to contain the general principles of nature.

A very wise man could construct the whole world from one apple.

He could tell you the climate that made it possible, the tree that bore it, the animals that eat it, in short everything about it, for all is related to all.

Why then should it not be supposed that the brain could produce a perfectly natural fruit which would reproduce all nature?

Obviously there is no law to prove that this is so, but we cannot assume that the products of our brains do not derive from nature; therefore I see no reason why we would not find astonishingly true things in the thought of the ancient sages, such as the I Ching represents.

Confucius is said to have regretted not having spent his whole life in the study of the I Ching, and to have said that it only failed him once as a guide in his actions.

Since the earliest times, then, the pairs of opposites have been the theme of men's thoughts.

The next important philosopher we have to consider in connection with them is Heraclitus.

He is singularly Chinese in his philosophy and is the only Western man who has ever really compassed the East.

If the Western world had followed his lead, we would all be Chinese in our viewpoint instead of Christian.

We can think of Heraclitus as making the switch between East and West.

After him, the next person in history to become deeply and seriously concerned with the problem of the pairs of opposites is Abelard, but he has stripped off all connection with nature and has intellectualized the problem entirely.

The most recent resurrection of the problem is through analysis.

Freud has a great deal to say about the pairs of opposites as they present themselves in pathological psychology.

In a case of sadism, masochism is always to be found in the unconscious, and vice versa.

A man who is a miser on one side is a spendthrift on the other.

We all know the cruelty possible in excessively good people, and that respectable people are so often blessed with hellions as sons.

In the works of both Freud and Adler there is a continuous play of this principle of above and below.

I also approached the problem from the pathological side, first in sexual psychology, and then with respect to the character as a whole.

I formulated it as a heuristic principle always to seek for the opposite of every given trend, and all along the line the principle worked.

Extreme fanaticism I found to rest on a concealed doubt. Torquemado, as the father of the Inquisition, was as he was because of the insecurity of his faith; that is, he was unconsciously as full of doubt as he was consciously full of faith.

So in general any excessively strong position brings forth its opposite.

I traced this phenomenon down to the fundamental split in the libido, by virtue of which split we can never crave anything violently without at the same time destroying it.

A very vivid example of this took place with a patient of mine.

She was a young woman who was engaged to a man whom she could not marry because of financial hardships.

Finally he went away to Japan and stayed three years.

She wrote him the most beautiful love letters all during this time and could scarcely live from day to day so great was her yearning for him.

Then he sent for her and they were married.

Almost immediately she became completely insane and had to be sent home.

So when you say “Yes” you say at the same time “No.”

This principle may seem a hard one, but as a matter of fact there must be this split in the libido or nothing works and we remain inert.

Life is never so beautiful as when surrounded by death.

Once I had a very wealthy patient who on coming to me said, “I don’t know what you are going to do with me, but I hope you are going to give me something that isn’t grey.”

And that is exactly what life would be if there were no opposites in it; therefore the pairs of opposites are not to be understood as mistakes but as the origin of life.

For the same thing holds in nature.

If there is no difference in high and low, no water can come down.

Modern physics expresses the condition that would ensue were the opposites removed from nature by the term entropy: that is, death in an equable tepidity.

If you have all your wishes fulfilled, you have what could be called psychological entropy.

I found, then, that what I had thought to be a pathological phenomenon is in fact a rule of nature.

We are part of the general energic process, and it is psychology looked at with this fact in mind that I have tried to present in the Types.

When I was beginning Types, I had a letter from a French editor who wanted me to contribute a book in a series he was arranging on oppositions.

He sent me a long list of these opposites to consider: action and inaction, spirituality and materialism, etc., but I avoided all these derived or subordinate oppositions and occupied myself with tracing them down to something fundamental.

I started with the primitive idea of the flowing out and the flowing in of energy, and from this I constructed the theory of the introverted and extraverted types.

As you remember from a previous lecture, I had come upon this notion of a split in the libido at the time I was working on the Psychology of the Unconscious, but the phrase “split in the libido” could lead to a misconception.

The libido is not split in itself; it is a case of a balancing movement between opposites, and you could say that libido is one or that libido is two according as you concentrate now on the flow, now on the opposing poles between which the flow takes place.

The opposition is a necessary condition of libido flow, and so you may say that by virtue of that fact one is committed to a dualistic conception of the world; but you can also say that the "flow"—that is, the energy—is one, and that is monism. If there is no high and low, no water flows; if there is high and low and no water, nothing happens; thus there is at the same time duality and oneness in the world, and it is a matter of temperament which viewpoint you choose to assume.

If you are a dualist like Lao-tse, and concerned chiefly with the opposites, all you will find to say about what is between might go into his words, "Tao is so still."

But if, on the other hand, you are monistic like the Brahmans, you can write whole volumes about Atman, the thing between the opposites.

Thus monism and dualism are psychological problems without intrinsic validity.

What we are more nearly concerned with is the existence of the pairs of opposites.

To us, in a way, it is a new discovery that all things are in opposition; we are still reluctant to accept the bad of our good, and the fact that our ideals are based on things far from ideal.

We have to learn with effort the negations of our positions, and to grasp the fact that life is a process that takes place between two poles, being only complete when surrounded by death.

We are really in the position of Lao-tse's pupils and need to say of the Tao, "It is so still," for it is not loud to us.

But when we become aware of the opposites we are driven to seek the way that will resolve them for us, for we cannot live in a world that is and is not, we must go forward to a creation that enables us to attain a third point superior to the pairs of opposites.

We could adopt Tao and Atman as our solutions, possibly, but only on the assumption that these terms have meant to their originators what our philosophical ideas mean to us.

But that is not so; Tao and Atman grew, Atman out of the lotus, while Tao is the still water.

That is to say, they were revelations, while to us they are concepts and leave us cold.

We cannot assimilate them as did the men in those days.

To be sure, the theosophists attempt it, with the result, however, of going up in the air like so many wind-bags, and with all connections with reality severed.

These revelations happened to those people, they grew out of them just as the apple grows from the tree.

For us, they give great satisfaction to the intellect, but for uniting the pairs of opposites they serve nothing.

Suppose a patient comes to me with a great conflict and I say to him, "Read the Tao Tê Ching" or "Throw your sorrows on Christ."

It is splendid advice, but what does it mean to the patient in helping his conflict? Nothing.

To be sure, the thing for which Christ stands does work for Catholics and partly for Protestants, but it does not work for everybody; and nearly all my patients are people for whom the traditional symbols do not work.

So our way has to be one where the creative character is present, where there is a process of growth which has the quality of revelation.

Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body, such as those things occurred to the ancients.

If I were going to symbolize it I would choose the Annunciation.

Swedenborg had an experience of this immediate and challenging character.

He was in London at an inn, and after having had a very good dinner, later in the evening he suddenly saw the whole floor covered with snakes and toads.

He was greatly frightened, and still more so when there appeared before him a man in a red mantle.

You imagine, no doubt, that this apparition spoke weighty words to Swedenborg, but what he said was, "Don't eat so much!"

Thus did Swedenborg's thought take on bodily form, and because of being so objective, it had a tremendous effect on him.

He was shaken to the depths by it.

Another similar case comes to my mind, that of a man who drank.

One evening he came home after a very fine carouse, dead drunk.

He heard people upstairs having a great feast, and that he enjoyed.

At five o'clock he went to the window to see what the great noise was.

He lived in an alley with some sycamore trees outside his window.

There he saw a cattle fair in progress, but with all the pigs in the trees.

He raised a great shout to call attention to them, and then the police took him to the insane asylum.

When he came to a realization of what had happened to him, he had finished with drinking.

In both these cases, nature produced a great terror, and though the examples are grotesque, nonetheless they illustrate the point I was making to the effect that the representation that liberates must have an ancient character, then it is convincing.

It must be organically true, that is, in and of our own being.

We know there is no method by which we can force these events, but the world is full of methods to produce states of mind that facilitate contact with immediate truth.

Of these methods, yoga is the most conspicuous example.

There are several different kinds of yoga, those that have to do with breathing, exercises, fasting, etc., and again others such as Kundalini yoga, which is a sort of sexual training somewhat obscene in character.

Sexuality is taken because it is an instinctive condition and therefore liable to induce states in which these immediate experiences can take place.

All these yoga methods, and practices similar to them, will bring about the desired condition, but only if God be willing, so to speak; that is to say, there is another factor involved which is necessary, but the nature of which we do not know.

All kinds of primitive practices are to be understood as an effort on the part of man to make himself receptive to a revelation from nature. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Lecture 10, Pages 79-88

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/b4203-4brahman.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d0811-4lao.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/b41b0-4tao.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/0a529-4heraclitus.jpg`

Aniela Jaffe: Pyramids are an expression of an archetypal image. (2019-12-11 08:24)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

“I see a pyramid in front of me”—no further details about its form or dimension are revealed.

But we will hardly prejudice the meaning of the dream if we assume that this is a building of immense proportions—there is room for a whole house on its top, and in most cases the term pyramid generally indicates, in common usage, a high building that rises above a quadratic base.

In addition, most often there is still another qualification: a pyramid as it is found in Egypt is a tomb of a Pharaoh.

Pyramids as sacred buildings, however, have been erected not only in Egypt, but also in Mexico, China, and Java, in completely different cultural environments.

They are an expression of an archetypal image.

Of the many observations that have been made on the construction of those pyramids, so mysterious to this day, I would like to single out only those that seem to be important for the understanding of the dream, acting on the assumption that this is about the Egyptian pyramid.

It has been observed that the pyramids, in whose interior the mummy of a Pharaoh was conserved in a burial chamber, had a glossy, polished, and reflecting surface.

The rising triangular areas acted like gigantic mirrors that during the day reflected the sunlight onto the land like a gigantic cone of light, and at night showed the stellar constellations.

The hieroglyph for certain pyramids, therefore, means source of light, and various inscriptions indicate its light symbolism.

Something very strange or even contradictory seems to lie in the fact that these of all buildings symbolize light and radiance, because with all the impact of their completely unstructured, immense surfaces they seem to represent the impenetrability of stone and the epitome of structured matter.

This double aspect is also expressed in the composition of the form: with their greatest width, the surface areas solidly rest on the ground, and then narrow more and more toward the top; they seem almost to dematerialize.

Finally, coming from four sides, the surfaces meet in one single point of no square dimension at all.

This point has always been considered the crowning feature of the whole edifice, however, its most sacred and mystic place.

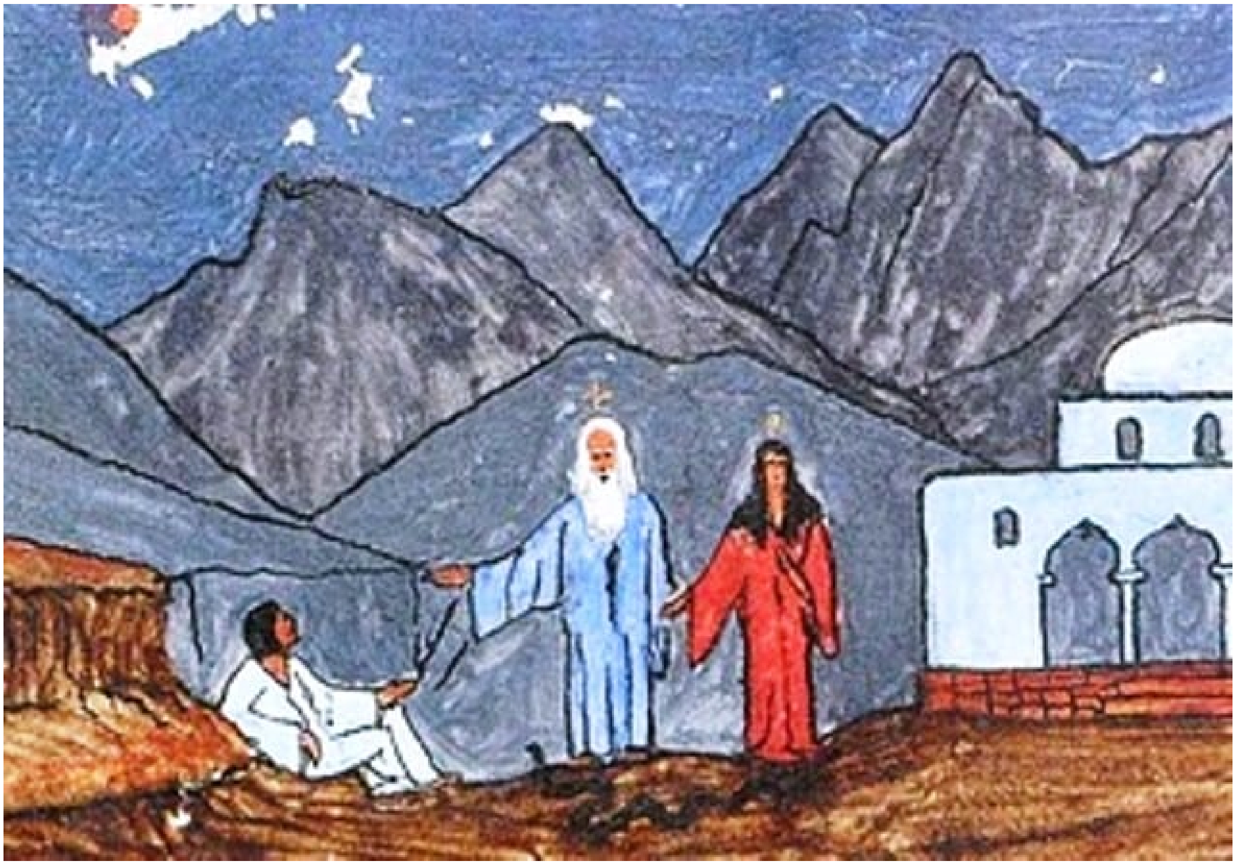
Often the tops of Egyptian pyramids were gilded or made of a specially gleaming stone.

It was assumed that after the Pharaoh's death his soul, that is, his image, the Ka soul, would travel through the underworld and then be transformed into the god Osiris, or rise to Atum, the highest god of light, exactly at this top of his grave. Aniela Jaffe, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 281-282.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/b232d-pyramid.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/b?node=17276826011&pd_rd_w=RMxX3&pf_rd_p=1c8307fa-9b80-48e4-96bd-19931ece46f6&pf_rd_r=8X9HHSFG9G8TCSZVA4PX&pd_rd_r=97ed92b1-5298-45a4-ab8`

Carl Jung on Elijah, Salome and The Serpent (2019-12-12 03:03)

[1]



[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

I told you last time about the dream concerning the killing of the hero and then the fantasy about Elijah and Salome.

Now the killing of the hero is not an indifferent fact, but one that involves typical consequences.

Dissolving an image means that you become that image.

Doing away with the concept of God means that you become that God.

This is so because if you dissolve an image it is always consciously, and then the libido invested in the image goes into the unconscious.

The stronger the image the more you are caught by it in the unconscious, so if you give up the hero in the conscious you are forced into the hero role by the unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 95.

Besides Elijah and Salome, there was a third factor in the fantasy I began to describe, and that is the huge black snake between them.6 The snake indicates the counterpart of the hero.

Mythology is full of this relationship between the hero and the snake.

A northern myth says the hero has eyes of a snake, and many myths show the hero being worshipped as a snake, having been transformed into it after death.

This is perhaps from the primitive idea that the first animal that creeps out of the grave is the soul of the man who was buried.

The presence of the snake then says it will be again a hero myth.

As to the meaning of the two figures, Salome is an anima figure, blind because, though connecting the conscious and the unconscious, she does not see the operation of the unconscious.

Elijah is the personification of the cognitional element, Salome of the erotic.

Elijah is the figure of the old prophet filled with wisdom.

One could speak of these two figures as personifications of Logos and Eros very specifically shaped.

This is practical for intellectual play, but as Logos and Eros are purely speculative terms, not scientific in any sense, but irrational, it is very much better to leave the figures as they are, namely as events, experiences.

As to the snake, what is its further significance? Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 96-97.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/da2bd-2salome.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2HVM9K67MGKOE&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=15761450`

Carl Jung letter to Allen W. Dulles (2019-12-12 04:03)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Allen W. Dulles

My dear Dulles 11 February 1945

Since after my illness I get interested once more in the affairs of the world the various ways of propaganda began to interest me.

German propaganda tries inevitably to hollow out a moral hole with the hope of an eventual collapse.

A better propaganda appeals to the moral strength and not to the feebleness of the enemy.

As far as the psychological effectiveness of Allied propaganda is concerned, it strikes me that the best things that have appeared so far are General Eisenhower's proclamations to the German people.

These proclamations, couched in simple, human language which anyone can understand offer the German people something they can cling to and tend to strengthen any belief which may exist in the justice and humanity of the Americans.

Thus they appeal to the best in the German people, to their belief in idealism, truth, and decency.

They fill up the hole of moral inferiority, which is infinitely better propaganda than destructive insinuations.

General Eisenhower certainly should be congratulated.

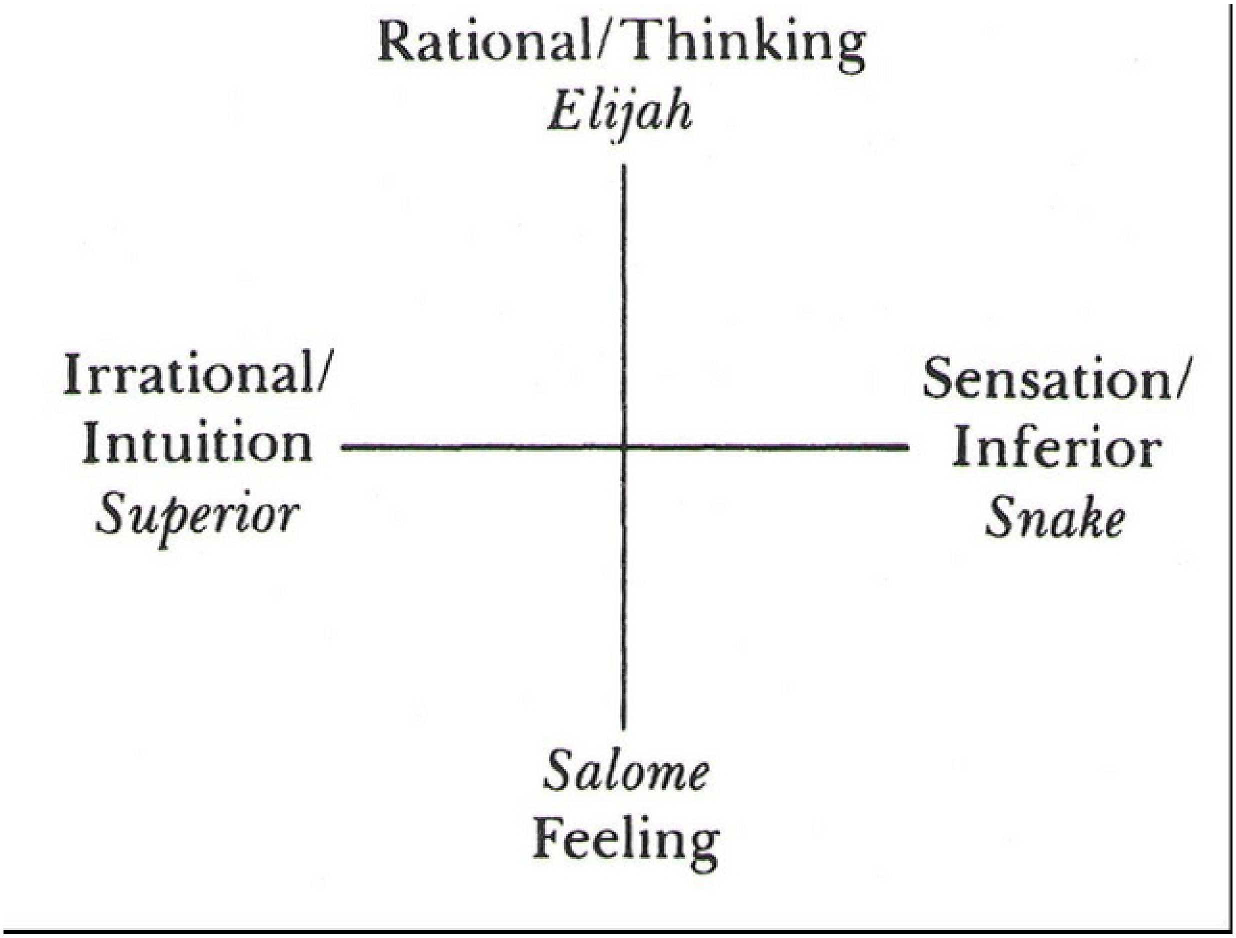
Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 356-357.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/37fb1-1allen.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1YFGG1PB6PSYX&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576145343&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung: The powers of my depths are predetermination and pleasure. (2019-12-12 04:09)

[1]



[Note: Dr. Jung was lecturing on The Red Book as early as 1925. Evidence that The Red Book was not the "Secret" and "Hidden" book that is often erroneously asserted]

In layer two of Liber Novus, Jung interpreted the figures of Elijah and Salome respectively in terms of fore thinking and pleasure:

“The powers of my depths are predetermination and pleasure. Predetermination or fore thinking is Prometheus, who, without determined thoughts, brings the chaotic to form and definition, who digs the channels and holds the object before pleasure.

Fore thinking also comes before thought.

But pleasure is the force that desires and destroys forms without form and definition.

It loves the form in itself that it takes hold of, and destroys the forms that it does not take.

The fore-thinker is a seer, but pleasure is blind. It does not foresee, but desires what it touches.

Forethinking is not powerful in itself and therefore does not move.

But pleasure is power, and therefore it moves” (p. 247).

In later commentaries written probably sometime in the 1920s, Jung commented on this episode and noted:

“This configuration is an image that forever recurs in the human spirit.

The old man represents a spiritual principle that could be designated as Logos, and the maiden represents an unspiritual principle of feeling that could be called Eros” (p. 362). Footnote 8, 1925 Seminar, Page 97

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/f1cc2-1elijah.jpg`

Carl Jung - Retrospective from Memories, Dreams and Reflections (2019-12-12 04:24)

[1]

The end

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections Publisher

More than twenty years earlier (in 1918), in the course of my investigations of the collective unconscious, I discovered the presence of an apparently universal symbol of a similar type the mandala symbol.

To make sure of my case, I spent more than a decade amassing additional data, before announcing my discovery for the first time. The mandala is an archetypal image whose occurrence is attested throughout the ages. It signifies the wholeness of the self.

This circular image represents the wholeness of the psychic ground or, to put it in mythic terms, the divinity incarnate in man. In contrast to Boehme's mandala, the modern ones strive for unity; they represent a compensation of the psychic cleavage, or an anticipation that the cleavage will be surmounted.

Since this process takes place in the collective unconscious, it manifests itself everywhere. The worldwide stories of the UFOs are evidence of that; they are the symptom of a universally present psychic disposition. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

The natural function of the animus (as well as of the*anima) is to remain in [their] place between individual consciousness and the collective unconscious [q.v.]; exactly as the persona [q.v.] is a sort of stratum between the ego-consciousness and die objects of the external world. The animus and the anima should function as a bridge, or a door, leading to the images of the collective unconscious, as the persona should be a sort of bridge into the world." (Unpublished) Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Retrospective http://faculty.spokanefalls.edu/InetShare/AutoWebs/kimt/jung %20restrospect.pdf

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/8e46e-end.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-Publisher-Vintage/dp/B004X19L3E/ref=sr_1_2?crid=3RILFRW8PXTXV&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=1`

Carl Jung on the Collective Unconscious (2019-12-12 04:27)

[1]

“The collective unconscious -- so far as we can say anything about it at all -- appears to consist of mythological motifs
or primordial images,
for which reason
the myths of all nations
are its real exponents.
In fact, the whole of mythology
could be taken as a sort of projection of the collective unconscious.”
Carl Jung

[2]The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche (Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Volume 8)

"The collective unconscious-so far as we can say anything about it at all-appears to consist of mythological motifs or primordial images, for which reason the myths of all nations are its real exponents.

In fact, the whole of mythology could be taken as a sort of projection of the collective unconscious. . . .

We can therefore study the collective unconscious in two ways, either in mythology or in the analysis of the individual." Carl Jung, The Structure of the Psyche, Collected Works 8, Paragraph 325

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/a1ffb-appear.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Structure-Dynamics-Psyche-Collected-Works/dp/0691097747/ref=sr_1_1?crid=32GMG1S7E4IE0&keywords=structure+and+dynamics+of+the+psyche+jung&`

Some Carl Jung Quotations LVI (2019-12-12 04:30)

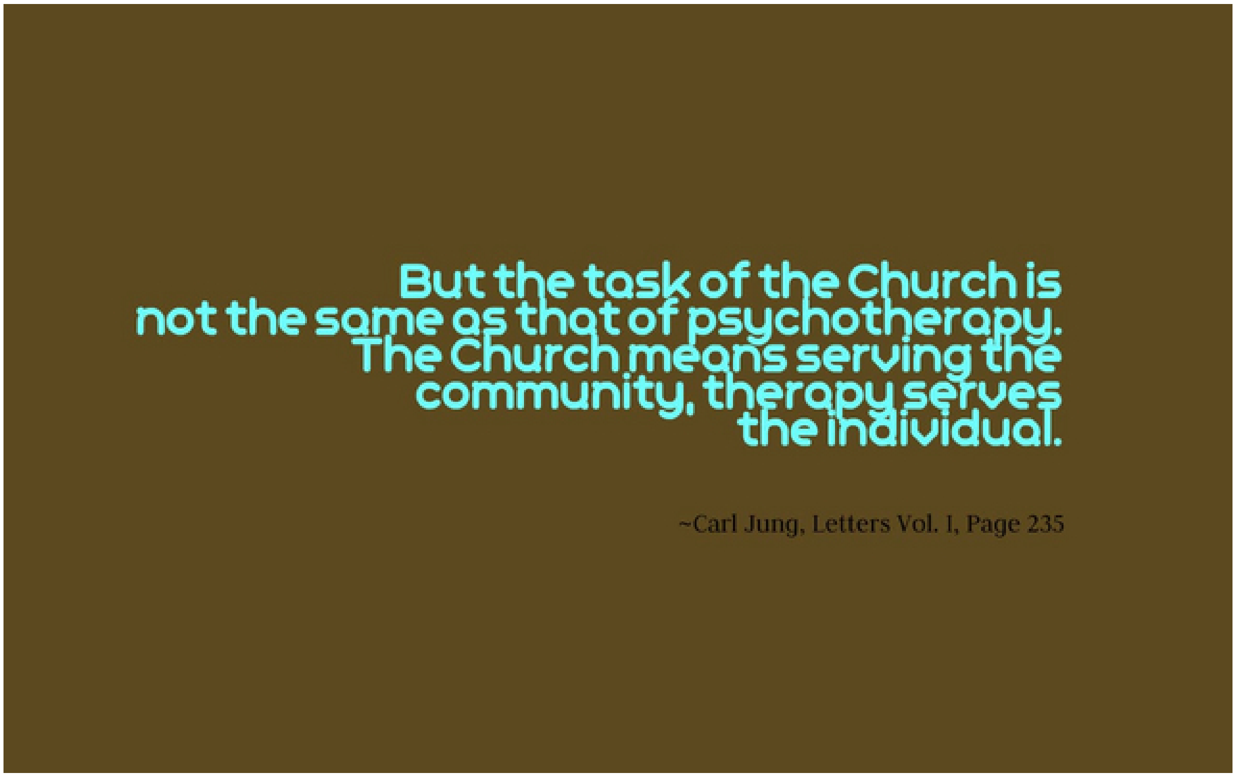
[1]



But the task of the Church is not the same as that of psychotherapy. The Church means serving the community, therapy serves the individual.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 235

But the task of the Church is not the same as that of psychotherapy. The Church means serving the community, therapy serves the individual. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 235

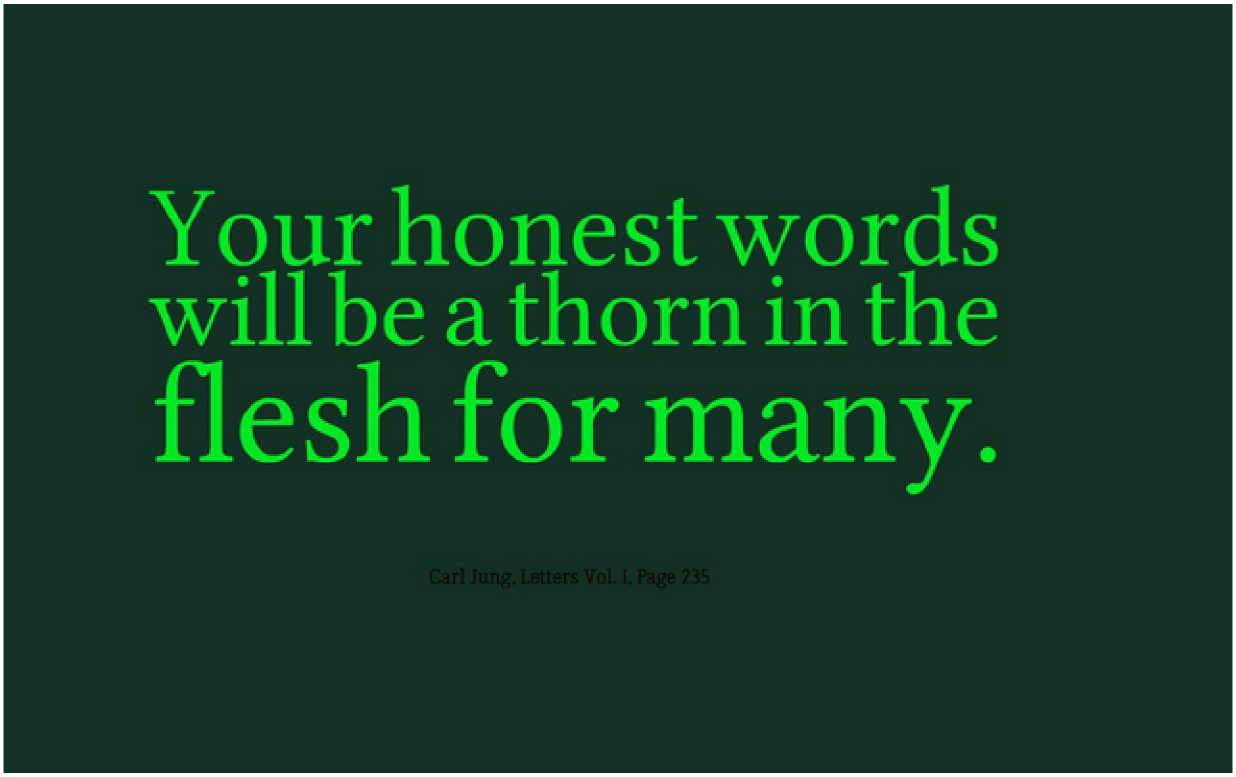
[2]

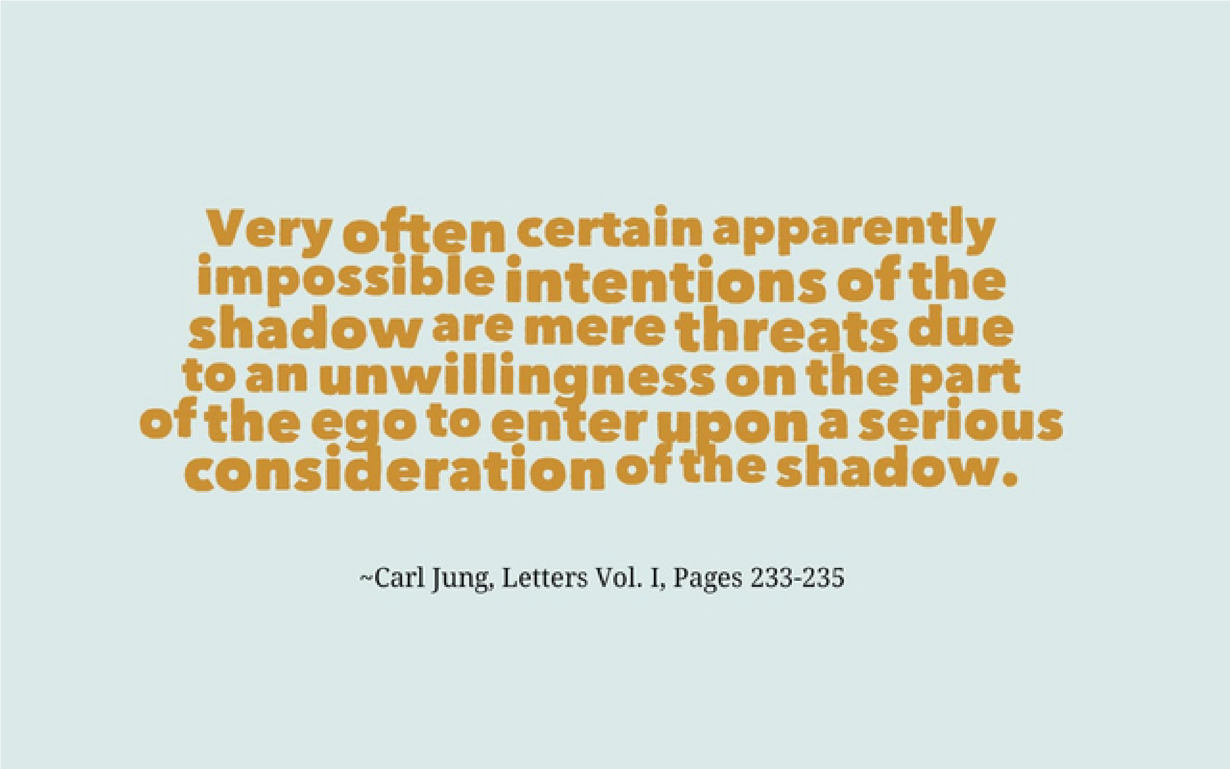


Your honest words will be a thorn in the flesh for many.

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 235

Your honest words will be a thorn in the flesh for many. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 235

[3]



Very often certain apparently impossible intentions of the shadow are mere threats due to an unwillingness on the part of the ego to enter upon a serious consideration of the shadow.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 233-235

Very often certain apparently impossible intentions of the shadow are mere threats due to an unwillingness on the part of the ego to enter upon a serious consideration of the shadow. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 233-235

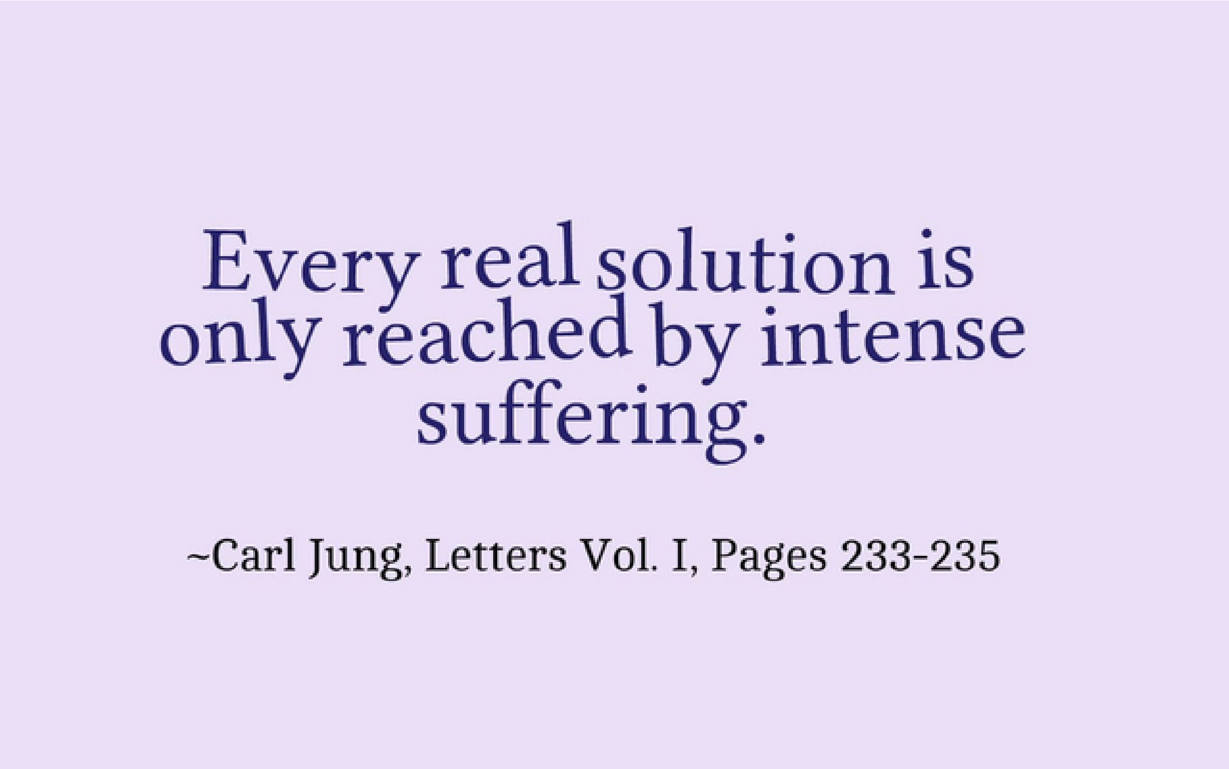
As a matter of fact, you have to heat up such conflicts until they rage in full swing so that the opposites slowly melt together. It is a sort of alchemistic procedure rather than a rational choice and decision.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 233-235

As a matter of fact, you have to heat up such conflicts until they rage in full swing so that the opposites slowly melt together. It is a sort of alchemistic procedure rather than a rational choice and decision.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 233-235

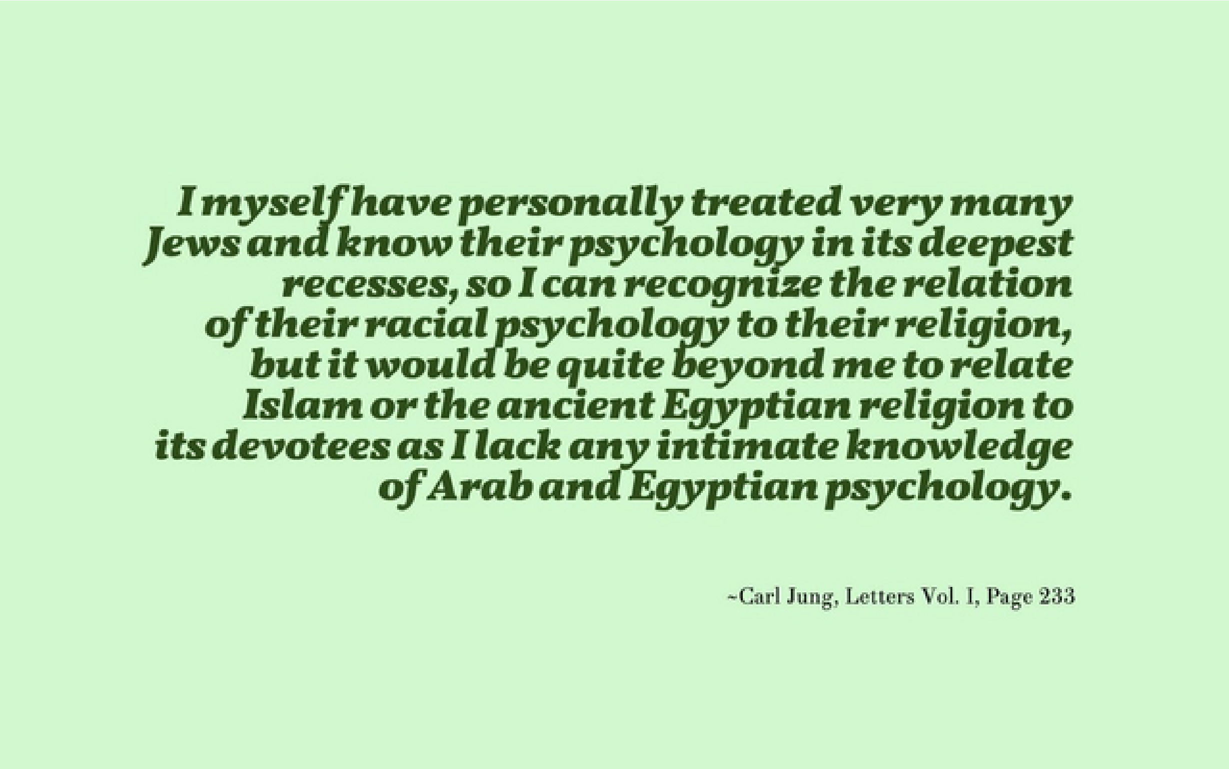


Every real solution is only reached by intense suffering.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 233-235

Every real solution is only reached by intense suffering. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 233-235

[6]



I myself have personally treated very many Jews and know their psychology in its deepest recesses, so I can recognize the relation of their racial psychology to their religion, but it would be quite beyond me to relate Islam or the ancient Egyptian religion to its devotees as I lack any intimate knowledge of Arab and Egyptian psychology.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 233

I myself have personally treated very many Jews and know their psychology in its deepest recesses, so I can recognize the relation of their racial psychology to their religion, but it would be quite beyond me to relate Islam or the ancient Egyptian religion to its devotees as I lack any intimate knowledge of Arab and Egyptian psychology. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 233

Your dream is really the stuff artists work with.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 232

Your dream is really the stuff artists work with. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 232

Action as we know can take place only in the third dimension, and the fourth dimension is that which actually wants to grow into our conscious three-dimensional world

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 232

Action as we know can take place only in the third dimension, and the fourth dimension is that which actually wants to grow into our conscious three-dimensional world. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 232

I find him [Kierkegaard ] simply insupportable and cannot understand, or rather, I understand
only too well,
why the theological neurosis of our time has made such a fuss over him.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 231-232

I find him [Kierkegaard] simply insupportable and cannot understand, or rather, I understand only too well, why the theological neurosis of our time has made such a fuss over him. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 231-232

It is perfectly clear to me that everything I do is pioneer work which has still to be followed by a real laying of foundations, but there are gratifying signs that others are beginning to make forays into this territory.

~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 231-232

It is perfectly clear to me that everything I do is pioneer work which has still to be followed by a real laying of foundations, but there are gratifying signs that others are beginning to make forays into this territory. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 231-232

Suffering is not an illness; it is the normal counterpole to happlness.

Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 179

Suffering is not an illness; it is the normal counterpole to happlness. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 179

[12]

He [Jung] listened daily to the B.B.C. and knew that England was the only hope, and that they would never give in.

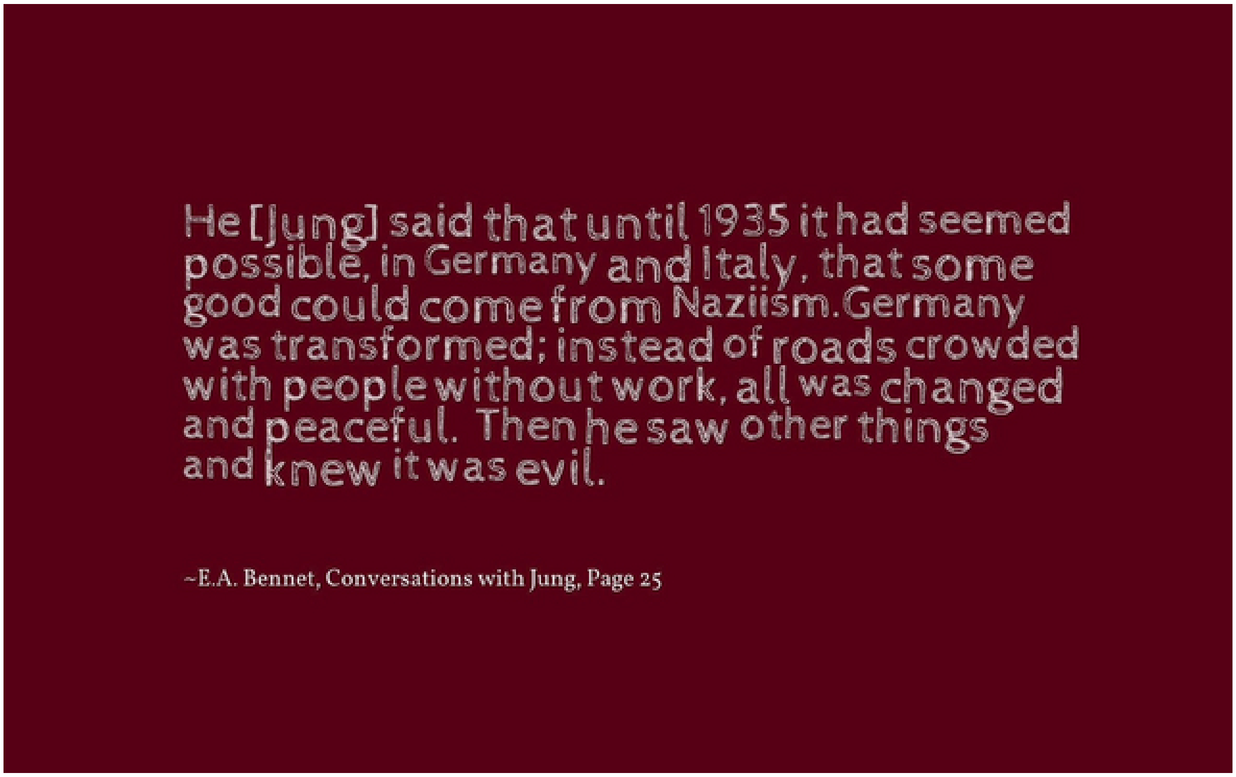
~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 24.

He [Jung] listened daily to the B.B.C. and knew that England was the only hope, and that they would never give in. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 24.

[13]



He [Jung] said that until 1935 it had seemed possible, in Germany and Italy, that some good could come from Naziism.Germany was transformed; instead of roads crowded with people without work, all was changed and peaceful. Then he saw other things and knew it was evil.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 25

He [Jung] said that until 1935 it had seemed possible, in Germany and Italy, that some good could come from Naziism.
Germany was transformed; instead of roads crowded with people without work, all was changed and peaceful. Then he saw other things and knew it was evil. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 25.

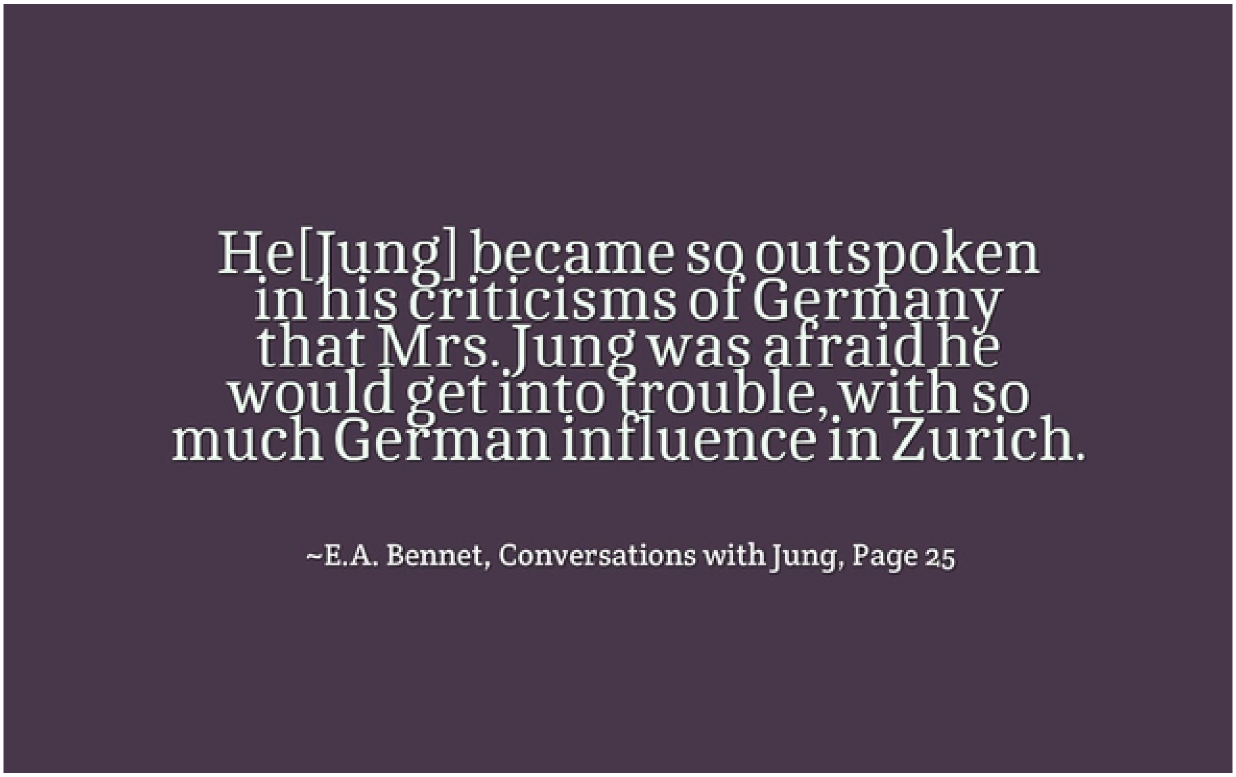
[14]



He[Jung] became so outspoken in his criticisms of Germany that Mrs. Jung was afraid he would get into trouble, with so much German influence in Zurich.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 25

He[Jung] became so outspoken in his criticisms of Germany that Mrs. Jung was afraid he would get into trouble, with so much German influence in Zürich. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 25

Referring to the rumours of his so-called Nazi sympathies, C.G. told me that his name was on the black List in Germany because of his views, and that he would certainly have been shot at once had he fallen into Nazi hands.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 25

Referring to the rumours of his so-called Nazi sympathies, C.G. told me that his name was on the black List in Germany because of his views, and that he would certainly have been shot at once had he fallen into Nazi hands. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 26

THEN HE [JUNG] WOKE AND WAS GLAD, FOR HE KNEW THAT GERMANY WOULD BE BEATEN BY RUSSIA.
THIS, HE SAID, WAS A COLLECTIVE DREAM, AND VERY IMPORTANT.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 27

Then he woke and was glad, for he knew that Germany would be beaten by Russia. This, he said, was a collective dream, and very important. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 27

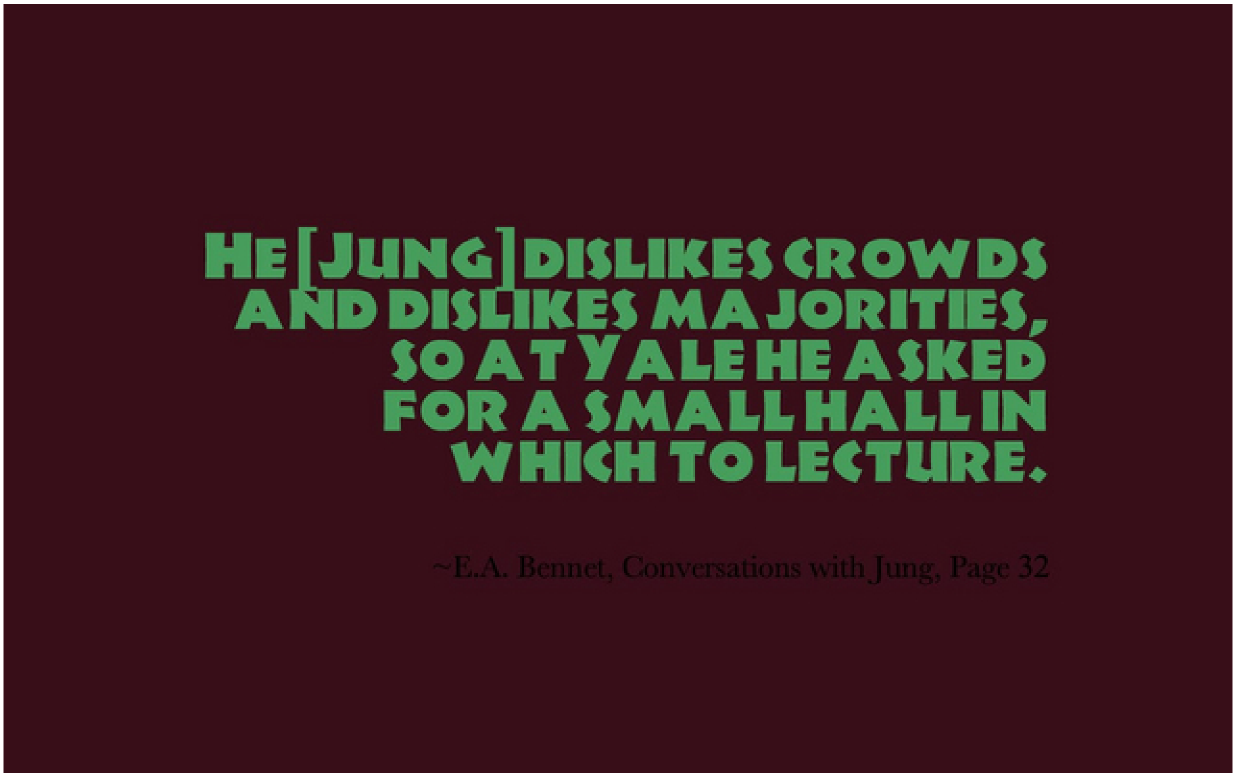
No, the Virgin was the archetypal figure of the soul of man, the anima, and it is only in the soul of man that God can be born, where else could it be?

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 32

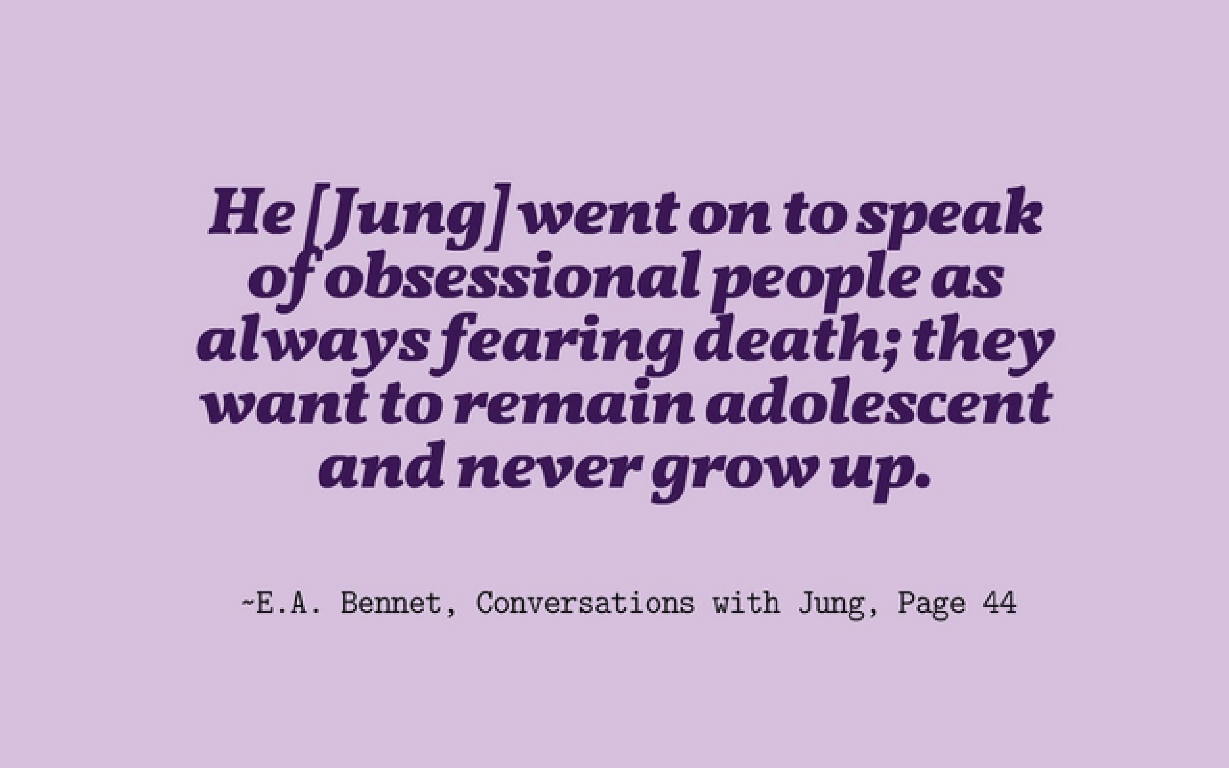
No, the Virgin was the archetypal figure of the soul of man, the anima, and it is only in the soul of man that God can be born, where else could it be? E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 32



He [Jung] dislikes crowds and dislikes majorities, so at Yale he asked for a small hall in which to lecture.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 32

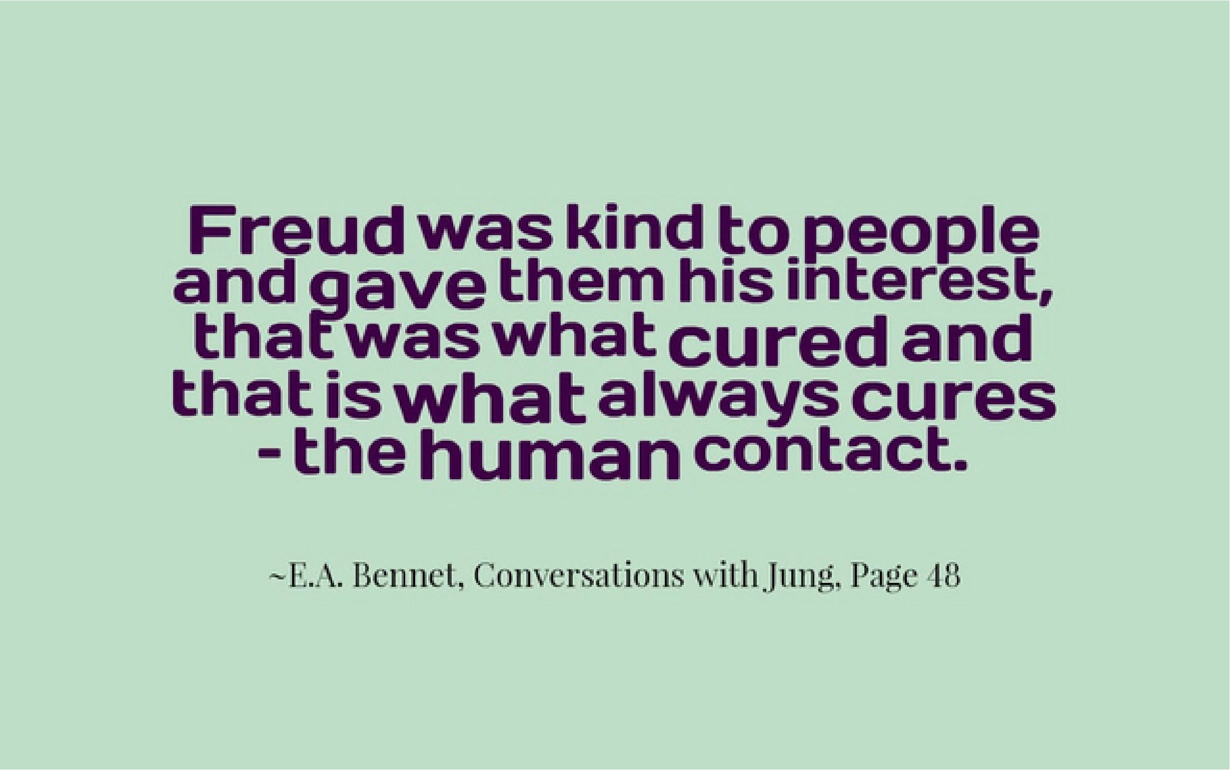
He [Jung] dislikes crowds and dislikes majorities, so at Yale he asked for a small hall in which to lecture. E.A. Bennet,
Conversations with Jung, Page 32



He [Jung] went on to speak of obsessional people as always fearing death; they want to remain adolescent and never grow up.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 44

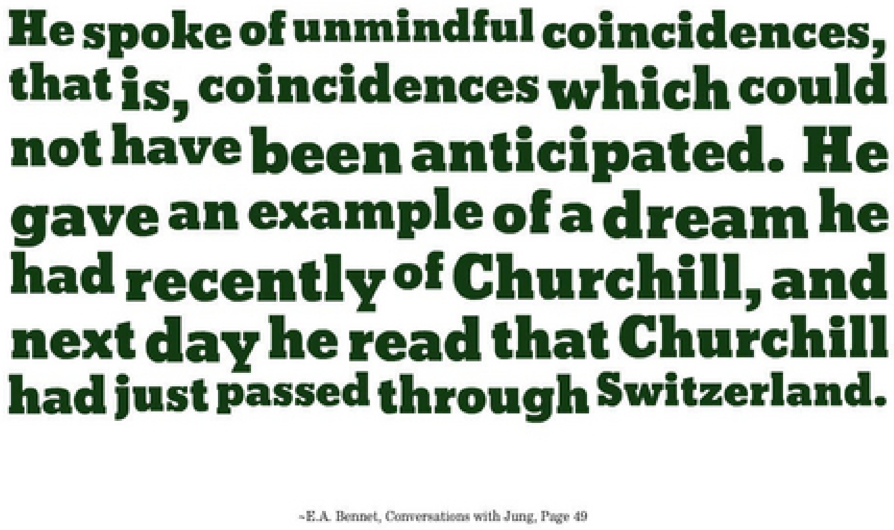
He [Jung] went on to speak of obsessional people as always fearing death; they want to remain adolescent and never grow up. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 44



Freud was kind to people and gave them his interest, that was what cured and that is what always cures - the human contact.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 48

Freud was kind to people and gave them his interest, that was what cured and that is what always cures – the human contact. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 48



He spoke of unmindful coincidences, that is, coincidences which could not have been anticipated. He gave an example of a dream he had recently of Churchill, and next day he read that Churchill had just passed through Switzerland.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 49

He [Jung] spoke of unmindful coincidences, that is, coincidences which could not have been anticipated. He gave an example of a dream he had recently of Churchill, and next day he read that Churchill had just passed through Switzerland. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 49

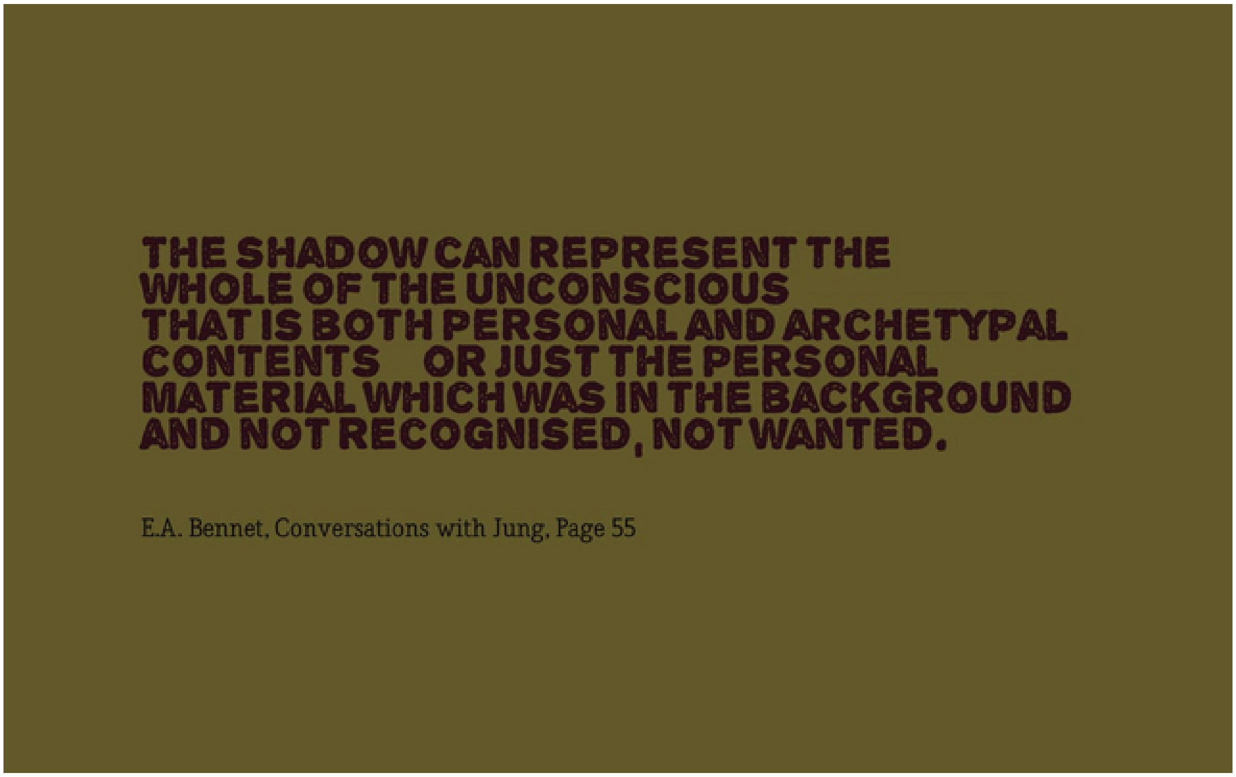
HE [JUNG] ALLUDED BY WAY OF ILLUSTRATION TO THE DECAY OF RADIUM, THAT AFTER ABOUT 1400 YEARS THE GRANULE OF RADIUM HAD GONE. IT DIMINISHES AT A CERTAIN RATE; SPACE, TIME AND CAUSATION DO NOT ACCOUNT FOR THIS.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 49

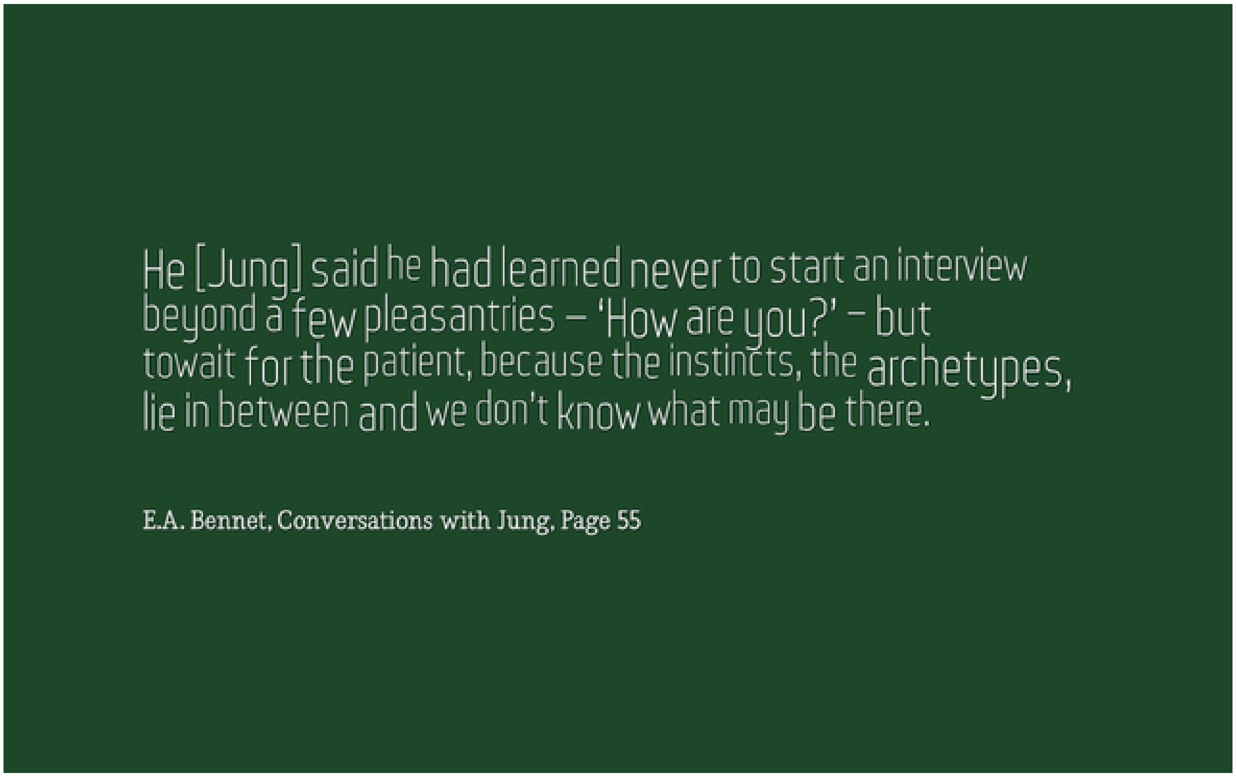
He [Jung] alluded by way of illustration to the decay of radium, that after about 1400 years the granule of radium had gone. It diminishes at a certain rate; space, time and causation do not account for this. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 50



THE SHADOW CAN REPRESENT THE WHOLE OF THE UNCONSCIOUS THAT IS BOTH PERSONAL AND ARCHETYPAL CONTENTS OR JUST THE PERSONAL MATERIAL WHICH WAS IN THE BACKGROUND AND NOT RECOGNISED, NOT WANTED.

E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 55

The shadow can represent the whole of the unconscious – that is both personal and archetypal contents – or just the personal material which was in the background and not recognised, not wanted. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 55



He [Jung] said he had learned never to start an interview beyond a few pleasantries – ‘How are you?’ – but towait for the patient, because the instincts, the archetypes, lie in between and we don’t know what may be there.

E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 55

He [Jung] said he had learned never to start an interview beyond a few pleasantries – ‘How are you?’ – but to wait for the patient, because the instincts, the archetypes, lie in between and we don’t know what may be there. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 55

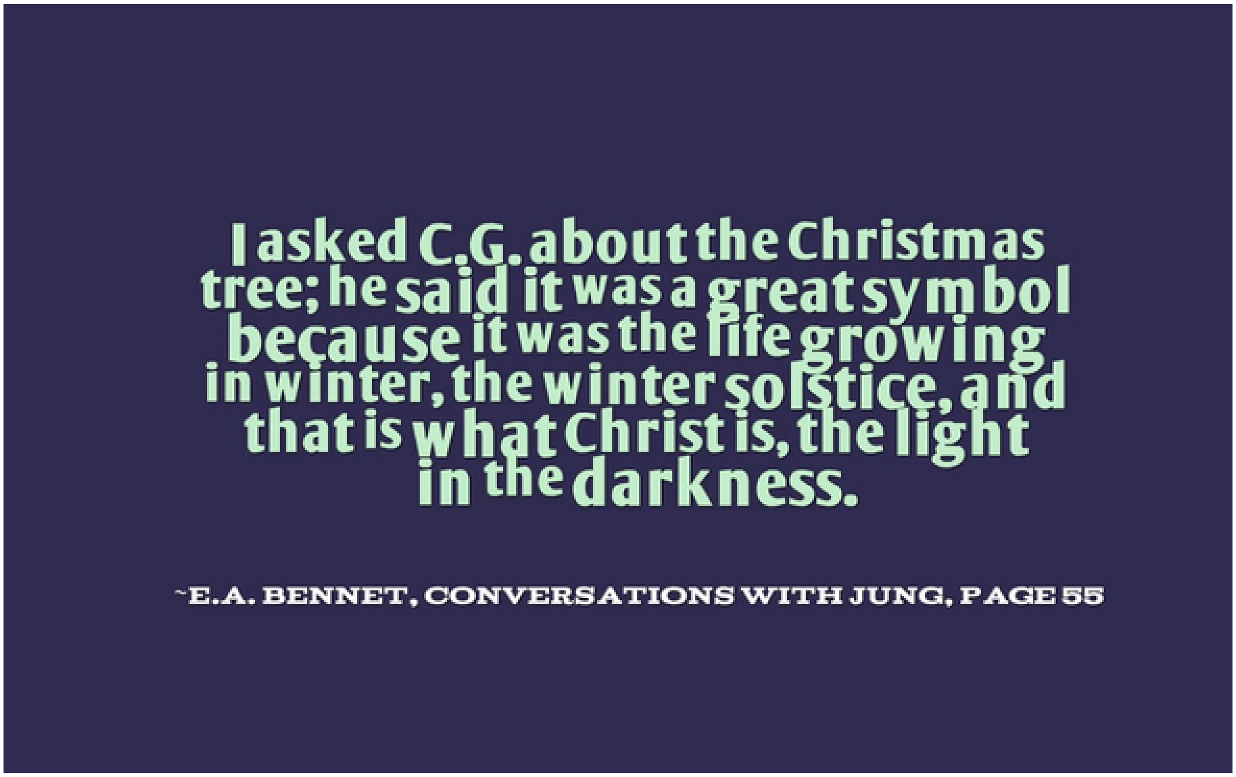
BUT THE SPIRITUAL POWER OF THE CHURCH HAS FALLEN, AND COMMUNISM IS THE OPPOSITE: IT HAS ARISEN AS THE GLORIFICATION OF THE MATERIA.

~E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 55

But the spiritual power of the Church has fallen, and Communism is the opposite: it has arisen as the glorification of the materia. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 57



I asked C.G. about the Christmas tree; he said it was a great symbol because it was the life growing in winter, the winter solstice, and that is what Christ is, the light in the darkness.

~E.A. BENNET, CONVERSATIONS WITH JUNG, PAGE 55

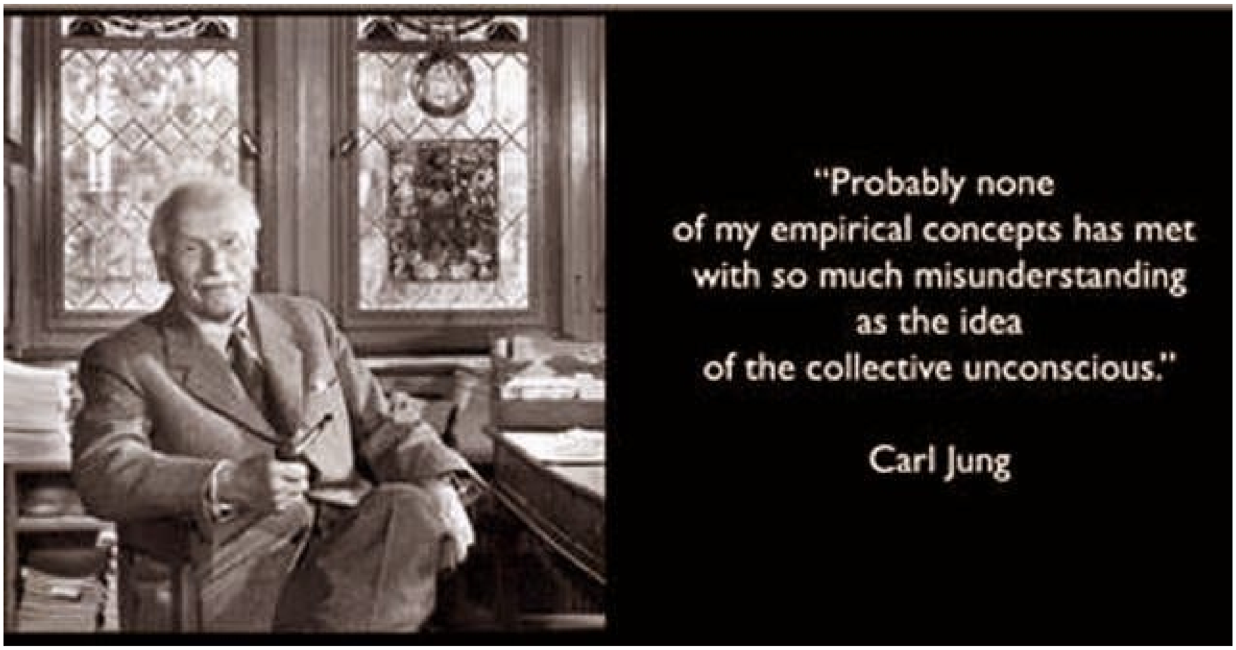
I asked C.G. about the Christmas tree; he said it was a great symbol because it was the life growing in winter, the winter solstice, and that is what Christ is, the light in the darkness. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 59

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/de068-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/9ee4e-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/7ea0d-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/8e6ae-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/c391f-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/4d840-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/cbd43-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/17155-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/8ee5f-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/d18c7-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/a0053-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/a9403-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/634ff-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/9c02a-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/be6b4-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/3a70d-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/a446f-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/03160-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/df5c9-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/a6d23-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/aa79d-uuu.jpg`

22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/fabb5-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/3489d-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/6fce6-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/000ac-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/efee4-zzz.jpg`

Jung defines his concept of the collective unconscious (2019-12-12 04:32)

[1]



"Probably none of my empirical concepts has met with so much misunderstanding as the idea of the collective unconscious."
Carl Jung

[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1

Jung defines his concept of the collective unconscious:

Probably none of my empirical concepts has met with so much misunderstanding as the idea of the collective unconscious....

I. Definition.

The collective unconscious is part of the psyche which can be negatively distinguished from a personal unconscious by the fact that it does not, like the latter, owe its existence to personal experience and consequently is not a personal acquisition. While the personal unconscious is made up essentially of contents which have at one time been conscious but which have disappeared from consciousness through having been forgotten or repressed, the contents of the collective unconscious have never been individually acquired, but owe their existence exclusively to heredity. I have chosen the term 'collective' since this part of the unconscious is not individual, but universal. And unlike the personal soul its contents and modes of behavior are relatively the same everywhere and in all individuals. It is, in other words, identical in all men and thus constitutes a common psychic substrate of a super personal nature which is present in every one of us. Carl Jung, Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious http://jungcurrents.com/carl-jung-definition-collective-unconscious/

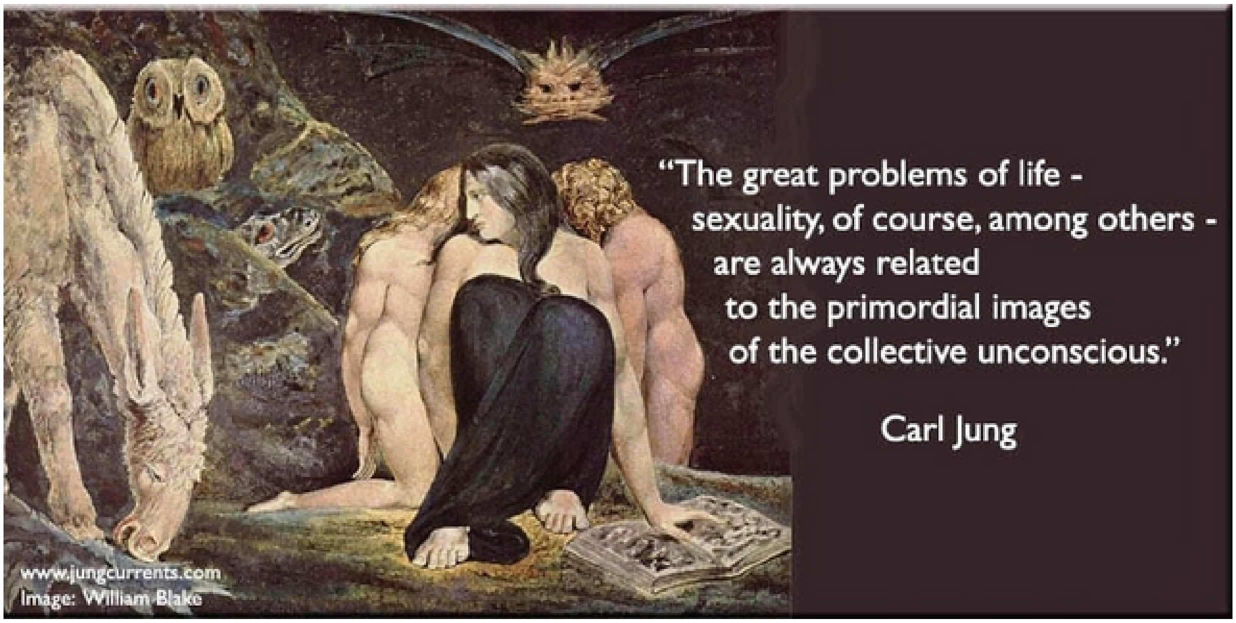
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/ebcef-collective.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=30LZYE8M6EIKE&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+colle`

The great problems of life—sexuality (2019-12-12 04:38)

[1]



"The great problems of life - sexuality, of course, among others - are always related to the primordial images of the collective unconscious."
Carl Jung
www.jungcurrents.com
Image: William Blake

[2]Psychological Types (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Vol. 6) (Bollingen Series XX)

"The great problems of life—sexuality, of course, among others—are always related to the primordial images of the collective unconscious.

These images are really balancing or compensating factors which correspond with the problems life presents in actuality.

This is not to be marveled at, since these images are deposits representing the accumulated experience of thousands of years of struggle for adaptation and existence." Carl Jung, Psychological Types, 1923

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/21777-are.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychological-Types-Collected-Works-Bollingen/dp/0691018138/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+types&qid=1576169686&sr=8-1`

The Gods have claimed another Victim.... (2019-12-12 04:39)

[1]

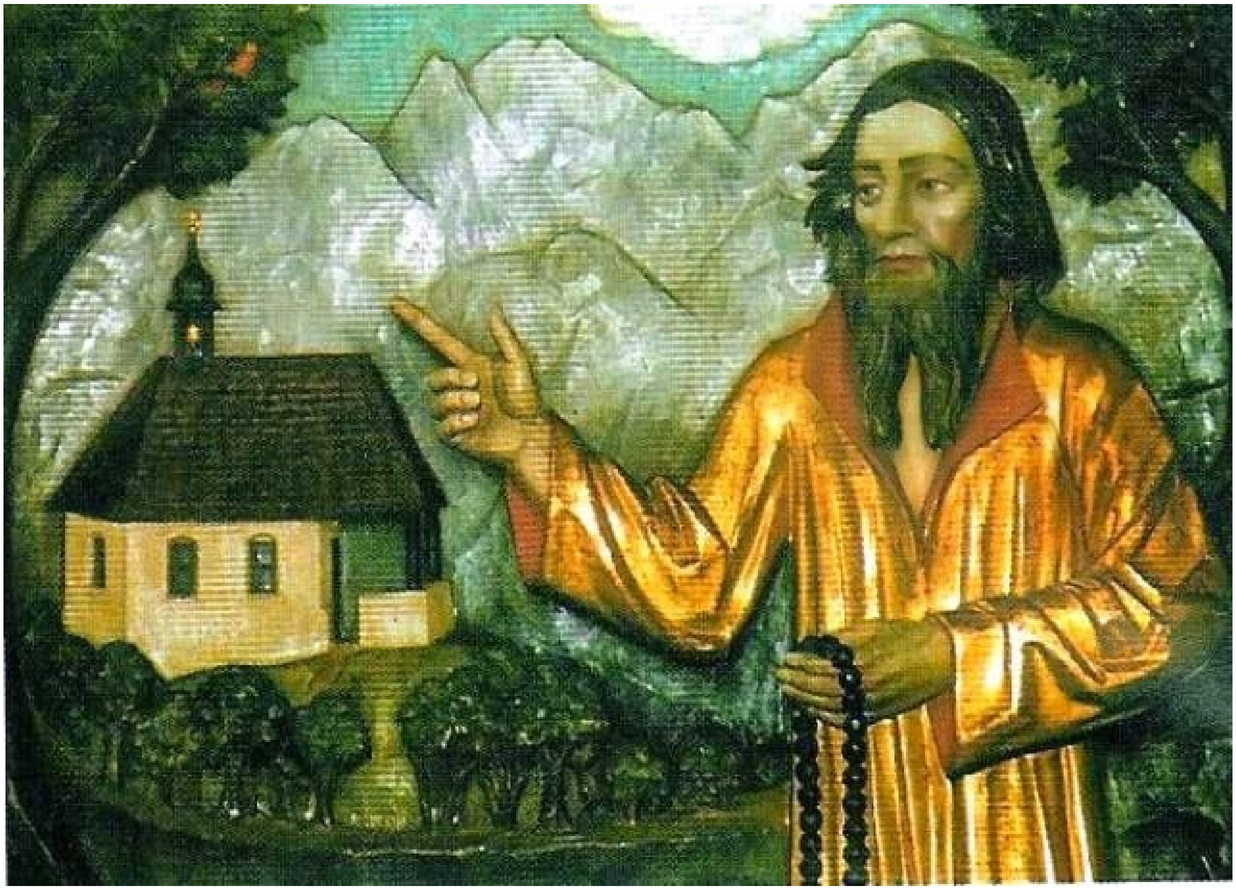
[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

Archetypes are complexes of experience that come upon us like fate, and their effects are felt in our most personal life. The anima no longer crosses our path as a goddess, but, it may be, as an intimately personal misadventure, or perhaps as our best venture. When, for instance, a highly esteemed professor in his seventies abandons his family and runs off with a young red-headed actress, we know that the gods have claimed another victim. "Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious" (1935). In CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. P. 62

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/bb45a-red.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2L9HJZ6RBBGAL&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+colle`

Carl Jung on the Vision of Brother Klaus. (2019-12-12 04:42)

[1]

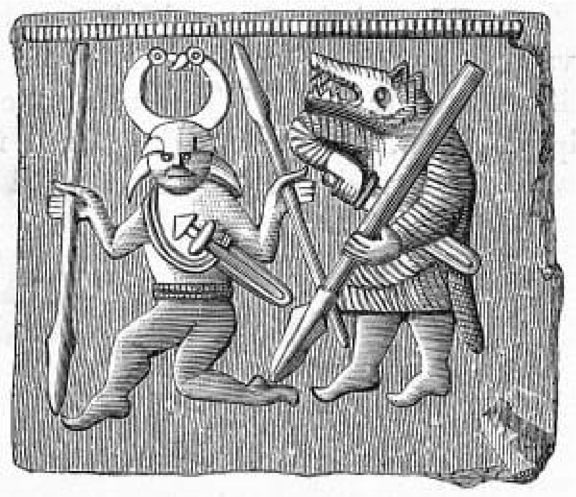


[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Fritz Blanke

Dear Colleague, 2 May 1945

The "Bear-skinned" comes into the category of unorthodox beings, more specifically that of werewolves, "doctor animals," leopard men, and "Beriserkr."



[3]

The man charged with mana, or numinous man, has theriomorphic attributes, since he surpasses the ordinary man not only upwards but downwards.

Heroes have snake’s eyes (Nordic: ormr i auga), are half man half serpent (Kekrops, Erechtheus) , have snake-souls and snake’s skin; the medicine-man can change into all sorts of animals.

Among the American Indians, certain animals appear to the primitive medical candidate; there is an echo of this in the dove of the Holy Ghost at the unearthly baptismal birth (when the Christ came to Jesus).

Another echo is the "Brother Wolf" of St. Francis.

Characteristic of the Germanic mentality of Brother Klaus is the figure of the pilgrim reminiscent of Wotan, for whom "die Wtitenden" [the raging ones] , the Bear-skinned, are an excellent match.

Evidently the figure of Christ appears here in two forms:

1. as a pilgrim who, like the mystic, has gone on the peregrinatio animae;
2. as a bear whose pelt contains the golden lustre.

In alchemy the bear is one of the theriomorphic symbols of transformation, like the dragon, lion, and eagle. (See Psychology and Alchemy, fig. 90.)

These are all stages of spiritual transformation, like the Kopa etc. of Mithraism.

In alchemical mysticism there finally arises out of the lion (or bear) the aurum philosophicum in the form of a novus sol, i.e., the golden lustre.

[4]

(Folklore and alchemy interpenetrated at a very early date!)

The meaning of the vision may be as follows: on his spiritual pilgrimage and in his instinctual (bear-like, i .e., hermit-like) subhumanness Brother Klaus recognizes himself as Christ.

This runs parallel with his manifest adoption by God the Father and God the Mother.

The brutal coldness of feeling that the saint needed in order to abandon his wife and children and friends is encountered in the subhuman animal realm.

Hence the saint throws an animal shadow. (Analogies: Antichrist, the Temptation. Quid mihi et tibi es, mulier?)

Whoever can suffer within himself the highest united with the lowest is healed, holy, whole.

The vision is trying to show him that the spiritual pilgrim and the Beriserker are both Christ, and this opens the way to forgiveness of the great sin which holiness is. (Sine peccato nulla gratia!)

He is frightened to death by God’s wrath (Trinity vision) because this wrath is aimed at him, who has betrayed his nearest and dearest and the ordinary man for God’s sake.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung; Letters Vol. 1; Pages 363-365.

Note: B. inquired about Nicholas von der Flue’s vision of the "man with the bearskin."

In this vision the Blessed Brother Klaus saw a divine pilgrim whom he seemed to have identified with Christ, and whose clothes changed into a bear•skin, glistening with gold (cf. von Franz, Die Visionen des Niklaus von der Flue, 1959, p. 8 1) .

In "Brother Klaus" Jung discusses the Trinity vision (cf. n. 12 infra) but mentions the Bear-skin vision only in passing (par. 487).

In a letter to Mary Mellon of 24 Sept. 45 (not published in this selection) Jung reports an incident which throws light on the role of Nicholas von der Flue in Swiss psychology.

He writes:

"We lived (during the war] in ghostlike suspension and in an unbelievable sort of unreality, never too sure of our existence. Several times it hung on a hair that we were invaded. We hardly dared to believe in a miracle. But it came off. My son is an officer in a Catholic infantry regiment. He told me that his soldiers had the collective vision of the blessed brother Niklaus von der Fliie, extending his hands towards the Rhine to ward off the German troops approaching our frontiers. The blessed Brother is actually going to be canonized in Rome. It is nice to have such protective saints . . . ."

Note: In this vision Brother Klaus "saw the head of a human figure with a terrifying face, full of wrath and threats," whereupon "overcome with terror he instantly turned his face away and fell to the ground." "Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious," CW 9, i, pars. 1 2 ff.; "Brother Klaus," par. 478.)

On account of its terrifying and therefore heretical character this vision was later adjusted to dogmatic concepts and brought into connection with the Trinity picture in the parish church at Sachseln (where Brother Klaus had been baptized) and called the "Trinity vision."

Carl Jung; Letters Vol. 1; Pages 363-365.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/d578e-1k.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2V2VGWF699EK1&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576175657&sprefix=jung+let`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/c3f7a-1b.jpg'.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/6700d-c1.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Girl who never noticed her body (2019-12-12 04:45)

[1]

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series

People with an overdevelopment of intuition which leads them to scorn objective reality, and so finally to a conflict such as I have described above, have usually characteristic dreams.

I once had as a patient a girl of the most extraordinary intuitive powers, and she had pushed the thing to such a point that her own body even was unreal to her.

Once I asked her half-jokingly if she had never noticed that she had a body, and she answered quite seriously that she had not—she bathed herself under a sheet! When she came to me she had ceased even to hear her steps when she walked—she was just floating through the world.

Her first dream was that she was sitting on top of a balloon, not even in a balloon, if you please, but on top of one that was high up in the air, and she was leaning over peeping down at me.

I had a gun and was shooting at the balloon which I finally brought down.

Before she came to me she had been living in a house where she had been impressed with the charming girls.

It was a brothel and she had been quite unaware of the fact.

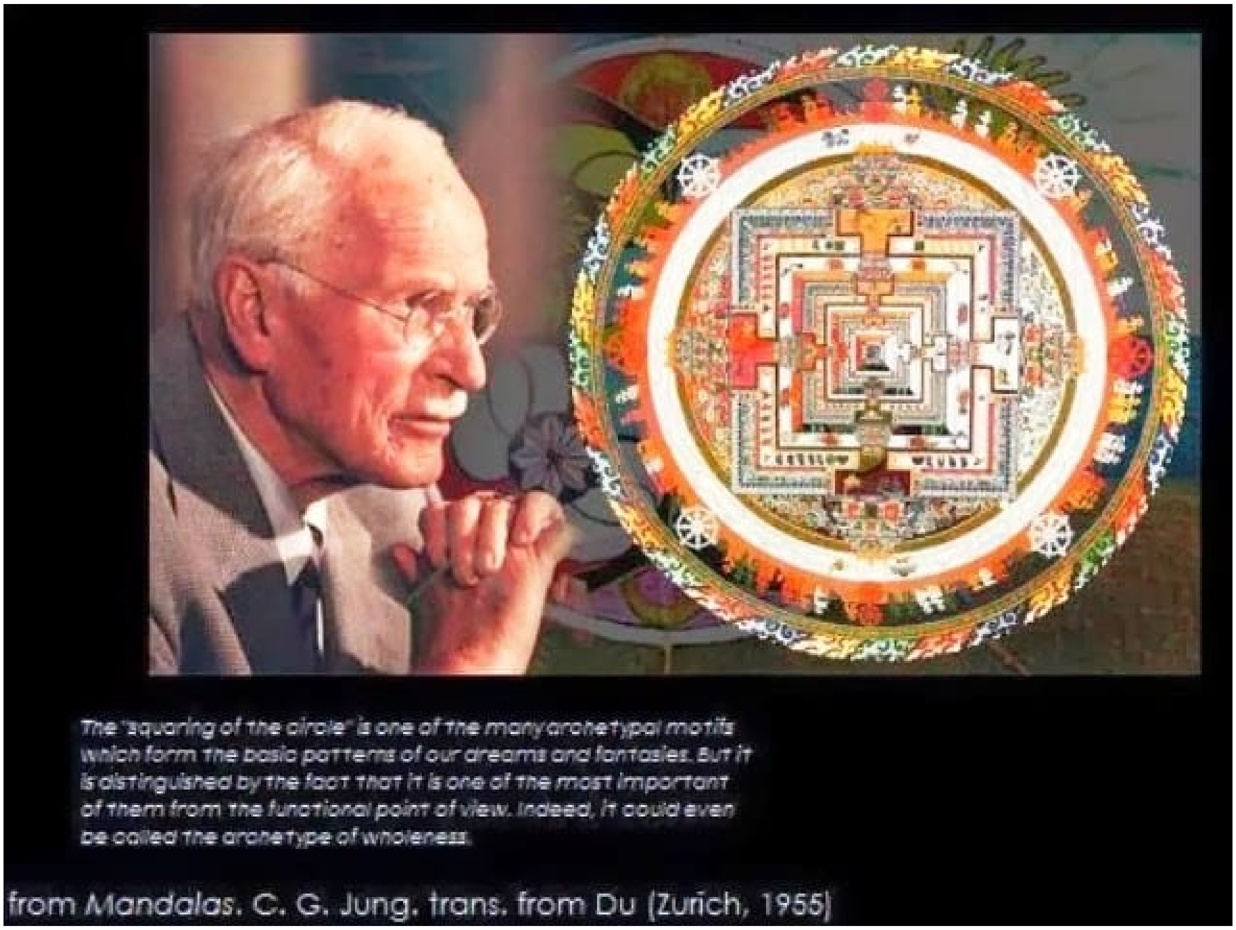
This shock brought her to analysis.

I cannot bring such a case down to a sense of reality through sensation directly, for to the intuitive, facts are mere air; so then, since thinking is her auxiliary function, I begin to reason with her in a very simple way till she becomes willing to strip from the fact the atmosphere she has projected upon it. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 90 - 91

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/8874a-1mirror.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3NP18BC6YZ32R&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=15761758`

Carl Jung and the Mandala ought to be a collective phenomenon but is met with in distinct forms in few cases. (2019-12-12 04:46)

[1]



The "squaring of the circle" is one of the many archetypal motifs which form the basic patterns of our dreams and fantasies. But it is distinguished by the fact that it is one of the most important of them from the functional point of view. Indeed, it could even be called the archetype of wholeness.

from Mandalas. C. G. Jung. trans. from Du (Zurich, 1955)

[Carl Jung and the Mandala ought to be a collective phenomenon but is met with in distinct forms in few cases.]

If the motif of the mandala is an archetype it ought to be a collective phenomenon, i.e. theoretically it should appear in everyone.

In practice however, it is to be met with in distinct forms in relatively few cases, though this does not prevent it from functioning as a concealed pole round which everything ultimately revolves.

In the last analysis every life is the realization of a whole, that is, of a self, for which reason this realization can also be called "individuation."

All life is bound to individual carriers who realize it, and it is simply inconceivable without them. But every carrier is charged with an individual destiny and destination, and the realization of them alone makes sense of life.

True, the "sense" is often something that could just as well be called "nonsense," for there is a certain incommensurability between the mystery of existence and human understanding.

"Sense" and "nonsense" are merely man made labels which serve tjo give us a reasonably valid sense of direction. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, The Symbolism of the Mandala, Page 222, Paragraph 330.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/d3d4f-archetypemandala.jpg`

Carl Jung: Ennoia = “thinking mind, knowledge, insight”: a way to reach higher consciousness.

(2019-12-12 04:51)

[1]

Professor Jung:

Exactly, we find this vessel of transformation in the writings of Zosimos, an alchemist of the third century a.d.70.

It probably goes back to the fourth tract of the Corpus Hermeticum, in which it is said that God had sent a vessel from heaven to earth, in which the humans could submerge in order to reemerge renewed in the state of ennoia.

[Note: Ennoia = Greek, “thinking mind, knowledge, insight”: a way to reach higher consciousness. Cf. C. G. Jung, “The Visions of Zosimos,” in CW 13, § 97]

A medieval variation of this kratér is the Grail.

[2]

It is a miraculous bowl from which Christ is said to have taken the Last Supper.

Another legend says that Joseph of Arimathea had collected Christ’s blood in it.

It is also a blood vessel, filled with the blood of Christ, with the spirit of God.

The power of giving man new life by filling him with its spirit is inherent in both the kratér and the Grail.

Wolfram von Eschenbach brings another version of the story of the Grail.

Do you know about it?

Participant: He talks about the Grail as a stone.

Professor Jung:

Yes, for him it is a stone. Wolfram von Eschenbach quotes a very strange expression in connection with the Grail, namely, lapsit exillis.

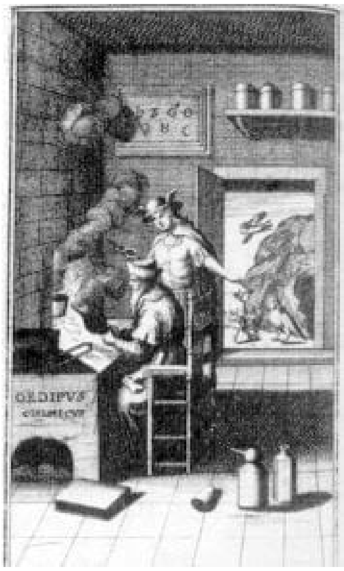
Now this is bungled Latin; he himself did not understand Latin.

Philologists have tried their hands at its interpretation in all kinds of ways.

One of them interpreted it as “ex illis,” “from those” (i.e., “from those eternal stars”); another as “ex coelis,” “from the heavens.”

In my view, however, this “lapsit exillis” could refer to the lapis.

There is evidence for this. Arnoldus de Villanova, a doctor living around the year 1250, left some alchemical texts, in which the stone is called “lapis exilis” in a hexameter, meaning that the stone is one that can be had vili pretio, cheaply.



[3]

It is found everywhere, in the streets, in dung, in toilets.

An alchemist held that people would sell it at a quite different price if they only knew its value.

This stone is, of course, the cornerstone that was discarded by the builders, and that is an allegoria Christi.

The Christian Church also knew about the secret similarity between the stone and Christ.

JESUS CHRIST
†
THE CHIEF CORNERSTONE

[4]

In the ritual of striking fire, the new fire, which is an image of Christ, is struck out of the cornerstone, the lapis angularis.

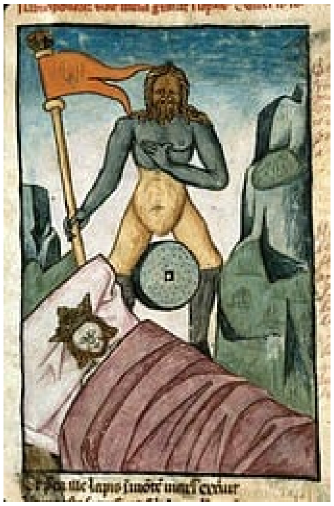
In 1330, Petrus Bonus for the first time expressed the idea that the stone was an allegory of Christ.

So this enigmatic expression, “lapsit exillis,” can be interpreted as “lapis exilis,” that insignificant, unimportant stone, to which nobody pays attention, although it is the greatest treasure.

Do you know about a passage in the Old Testament where the stone plays a role?

Participant: The rolling stone in the dream of Nebuchadnezzar in the Book of Daniel.

[5]



Professor Jung:

Yes, that dream speaks about a great, tall, and bright image of a terrible form. It was made of four different materials—gold, silver, brass, and iron—and its feet were of clay.

While the king looked at the image, a stone rolled down the mountain and smote the image upon its feet, so that this great being collapsed.

The strange thing about it is that the stone broke away from the mountain “without hands,” without being touched by anybody.

In the Book of Daniel this stone became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

Daniel’s prophecy that this stone will smite and destroy all kingdoms, but shall stand forever itself, might well have been why Christ was compared to it in the patristic literature.

Where else does the mountain appear in connection with the precious stone?

Participant: In your lecture you mentioned that the city of Meru is on top of the mountain.

Professor Jung: Yes, this connection is found in the Indian Shri-Chakra-Sambhara Tantra.

We also find it in alchemy, where the city, the vas hermeticum, is lying on top of the mons.

Often the image of the vitrum aureum, the golden glass, appears in connection with the idea of the eternal city.

As you have heard in the paper, it says in the Revelation of John: “and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass” (21:18).

What does this glass indicate?

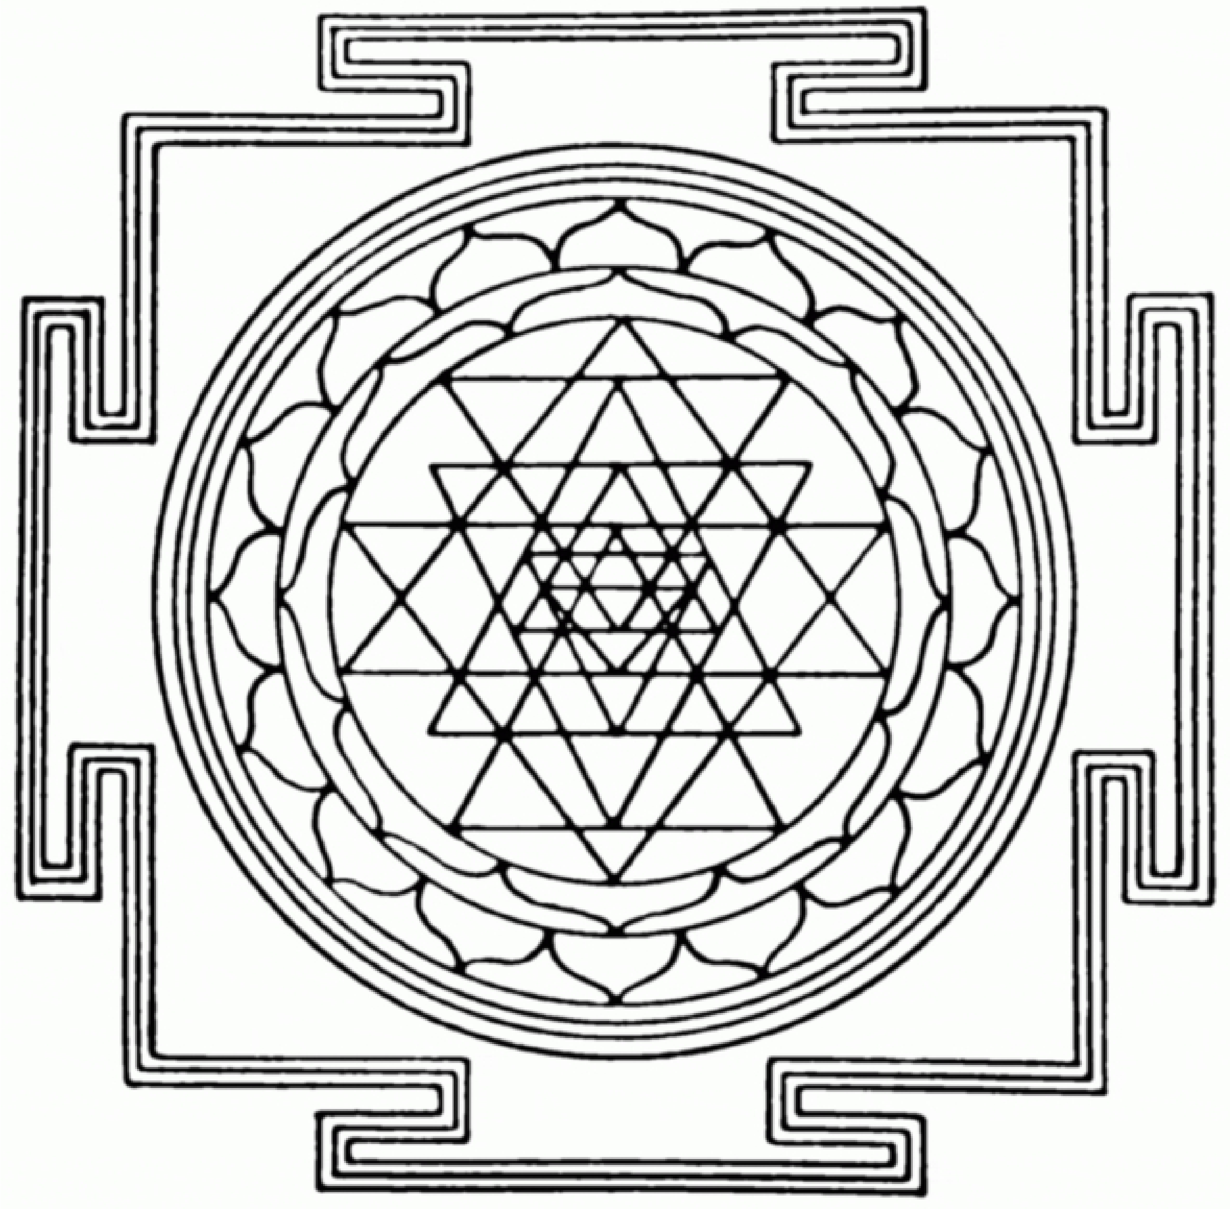
Participant: Something hard and indestructible.

Professor Jung: This is characteristic not of the glass, but of stone in general.

The wondrous thing about glass is the diaphanitas, its transparency.

One has also tried to express the spiritual nature of the stone or the vessel with the help of this characteristic.

The same is true when we talk about the lapis spiritualis, the lapis invisibilitatis, or the lapis aethereus, or about the diamond stone light as water.



All these expressions are meant to illustrate the spiritual existence of the stone; they are about an object that is a body, yet at the same time transparent.

The glass house in the present dream also points to this spiritual existence.

Mrs. Jaffé quite correctly interprets the Doppelgänger in the glass house as corpus subtile, as a subtle body, a spiritual mirror image, so to speak.

One creates oneself in this transparent vessel; the double in the glass house is like a second one, who is also there, and who awaits his preparation there.

This is a vision of what we have to call the Self.

There the transformation to one’s own self occurs, the other within us is consolidated there.

This other has miraculous qualities: he is transparent and has a subtle and incorruptible body.

For the time being, he is still in a suspended state; he has not yet become.

Through the union with the human being, he is clothed in matter, thus acquiring actual existence in actu and is saved from his potential existence.

This idea is also at the base of the homunculus, that miraculous being that, so to speak, creates himself in the stone.

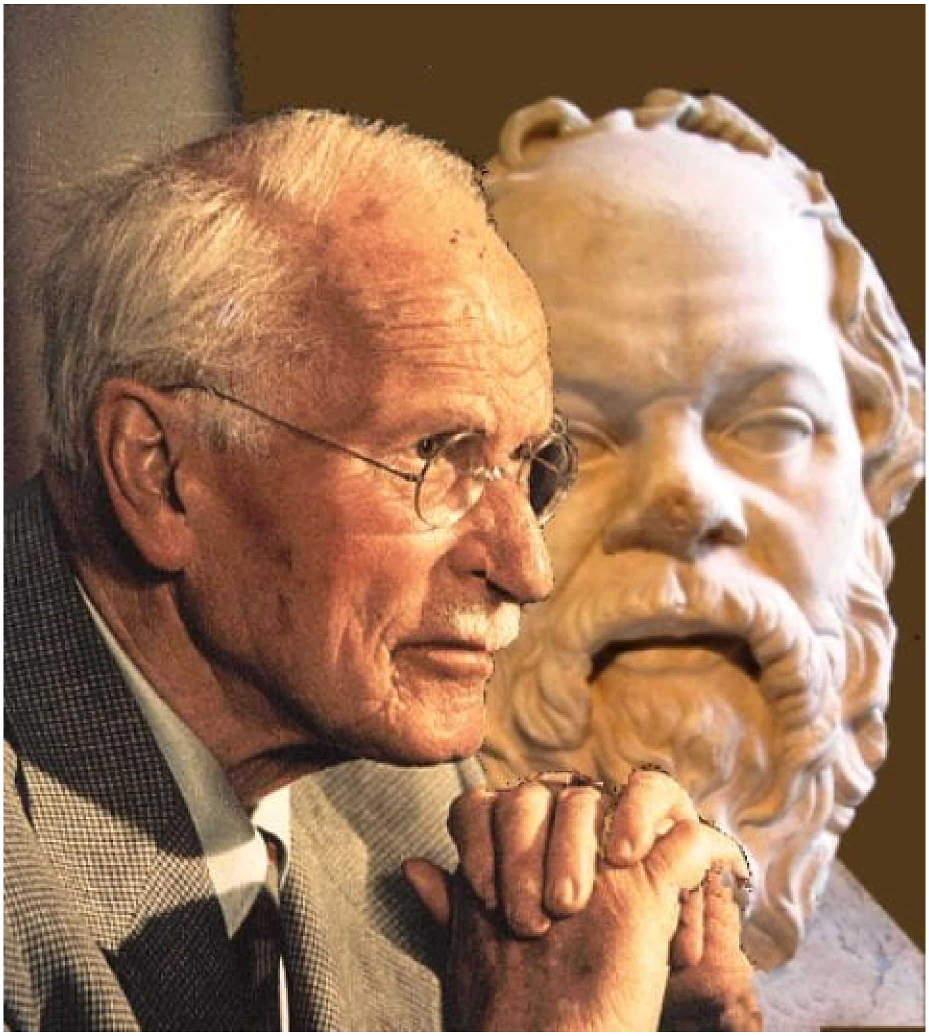
In the dream, the glass house is on top of the pyramid, and so there is also a connection between the double and the king, resting in the tomb as a mummy.

The lapis is thus related to the grave, to death. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 294-298.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/ff3c2-1ennoia.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/ffc63-2grail.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/6b23c-3arnoldus.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/e42a6-4christ.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/48c29-5daniel.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/71ffe-6tantra.gif`

Carl Jung and ... a tremendous revolution in Christianity has long been due (2019-12-12 10:23)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Hans Meyer

Dear Colleague, 30 January 1946

I was very interested in your paper and will see if it can be placed with the Neue Schweizer Rundschau.

At all events I will recommend it to the editor as the first German attempt to get at the problem psychologically.

I can only agree with your reflections.

You have set yourself a frame of reference that restricts the problem to the actions and sufferings of Germany.

To go beyond that would probably not be appropriate at the moment, even though the argument as such would have to be carried further, to the point where it embraced all Europe.

Germany is an isolated instance at present, but she represents merely the tip of an iceberg.

European man, indeed man in general, has for the first time in his history dropped out of the original scheme of things and is growing up in a world which he has robbed of every influence on his psychic life and now loads him with a crushing responsibility.

At the same time fate has pressed the atom bomb into his hands and with it the means of destroying himself for good and all.

In the face of this situation there is naturally a compensating reaction in the unconscious, whose outcome, considering the ineffectuality of our consciousness, could have no other consequences than a catastrophe.

In reality, however, a tremendous revolution in Christianity has long been due, since our erstwhile religious views have been overtaken by events and need a reformation.

400 years ago it was Germany who performed this service for the world.

The unconscious is pure nature, with the result that what stands behind the bad foreground is a natural fact beyond good and evil.

It always depends on human comprehension whether the archetypal content of the unconscious will take a favorable or a nefarious turn.

The unconscious is the future in the form or disguise of the past.

It is not a "wish" but a "must."

What happens when man introjects God? A superman psychosis, because every blockhead thinks that when he withdraws a projection its contents cease to exist.

Insight, insight!

I have tried all my life to din a bit of understanding into people.

May others have better luck.

With collegial regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 407.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/3c1d8-aristotle.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2V2VGWF699EK1&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576175657&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung on "The Birth of a Saviour." (2019-12-13 03:30)

[1]

[2]Psychological Types (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Vol. 6) (Bollingen Series XX)

The birth of a saviour is equivalent to a great catastrophe, because a new and powerful life springs up just where there had seemed to be no life and no power and no possibility of further development.

It comes streaming out of the unconscious, from that unknown part of the psyche which is treated as nothing by all rationalists.

From this discredited and rejected region comes the new afflux of energy, the renewal of life.

But what is this discredited and rejected source of vitality?

It consists of all those psychic contents that were repressed because of their incompatibility with conscious values—everything hateful, immoral, wrong, unsuitable, useless, etc., which means everything that at one time or another appeared so to the individual concerned.

The danger is that when these things reappear in a new and wonderful guise, they may make such an impact on him that he will forget or repudiate all his former values.

What he once despised now becomes the supreme principle, and what was once truth now becomes error.

This reversal of values amounts to the destruction of the old ones and is similar to the devastation of a country by floods. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 449

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/98abc-12begypt.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychological-Types-Collected-Works-Bollingen/dp/0691018138/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+types&qid=1576230441&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place. (2019-12-13 03:37)

[1]

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925

[Carl Jung: I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.”]

Lecture 12

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Ward’s question: “You speak of energy as falling from a higher to a lower level and use the waterfall as the illustration.

How do you account for the opposing though equal energy that lifts the water to the rain cloud?

In this case is the rain cloud the lower level?

It is if you transform your level into terms of heat energy.

Should we not take into consideration in psychic energy this transformability into various modes of expression?

Is not this the crux of the problem of the neurosis?

If the psychic energy were sufficiently free or fluid to make easy transformations, the neurosis would not occur.

But here enters the problem of ethics—the choice of direction.

Will you kindly discuss this question?"

Dr. Jung: To make water rise from the sea you need new energy.

When water runs uphill there is always an additional source of energy; in other words, the energy of the sun lifts it.

Water lifted to the clouds must fall again.

In the collective unconscious we release additional sources of energy that make our level rise.

In the collective unconscious there is energy in "solid" forms from of old, but it is additional energy similar to the energy found in coal mines, and like the energy in the mines, it is subject to exhaustion.

If we do not succeed in releasing atomic energy, or the energy of the tides or the wind, the population of Europe will have to decrease.

If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation.

The archetypes are sources of energy.

If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient.

Put an idea into the heads of small people and they become big and tremendously efficient.

We like to think that with moral ideas we can direct our lives, but these things do not catch; if they did we would have been all right long ago.

Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious.

Within the realm of willpower we have choice, but beyond that no choice at all.

Lecture

The black serpent symbolizes the introverting libido.

Salome is the anima and Elijah the wise old man.

Salome, being instinctive and quite blind, needs the foreseeing eyes of wisdom that Elijah possesses.

The figure of the prophet is compensatory to that of the blind anima.

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

As you remember, the real Salome was involved in incestuous relations with Herod, her stepfather, and it was because of the latter's love for her that she was able to get the head of John the Baptist.

I had read much mythology before this fantasy came to me, and all of this reading entered into the condensation of these figures.

The old man is a very typical figure.

One encounters him everywhere; he appears in all sorts of forms, and usually in company with a young girl. (See Rider Haggard: Wisdom's Daughter.)

Feeling-sensation is in opposition to the conscious intellect plus intuition, but the balance is insufficient.

When you assume the anima is due to the preponderance of the differentiated function in the conscious, the unconscious is balanced by a figure within itself that compensates the anima figure.

This is the old man Elijah.

It is as though you have a scale, and in the one side of the scale is the conscious, in the other the unconscious.

This was one of my first hypotheses.

With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance.

In those days I saw a compensatory principle that seemed to show a balance between the conscious and unconscious.

But I saw later that the unconscious was balanced in itself.

It is the yea and the nay. The unconscious is not at all exactly the opposite of the conscious.

It may be irrationally different.

You cannot deduce the unconscious from the conscious.

The unconscious is balanced in itself, as is the conscious.

When we meet an extravagant figure like Salome, we have a compensating figure in the unconscious.

If there were only such an evil figure as Salome, the conscious would have to build up a fence to keep this back, an exaggerated, fanatical, moral attitude.

But I had not this exaggerated moral attitude, so I suppose that Salome was compensated by Elijah.

When Elijah told me he was always with Salome, I thought it was almost blasphemous for him to say this.

I had the feeling of diving into an atmosphere that was cruel and full of blood.

This atmosphere was around Salome, and to hear Elijah declare that he was always in that company shocked me profoundly.

Elijah and Salome are together because they are pairs of opposites.

Elijah is an important figure in man's unconscious, not in woman's.

He is the man with prestige, the man with a low threshold of consciousness or with remarkable intuition.

In higher society he would be the wise man; compare Lao-tse.

He has the ability to get into touch with archetypes.

He will be surrounded with mana, and will arouse other men because he touches the archetypes in others.

He is fascinating and has a thrill about him. He is the wise man, the medicine man, the mana man.

Later on in evolution, this wise man becomes a spiritual image, a god, "the old one from the mountains" (compare Moses coming down from the mountain as lawgiver), the sorcerer of the tribe.

He is the legislator.

Even Christ was in company with Moses and Elijah in his transfiguration.

All great lawgivers and masters of the past, such as for example the Mahatmas of theosophical teaching, are thought of by theosophists as spiritual factors still in existence.

Thus the Dalai Lama is supposed by theosophists to be such a figure.

In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

Christ is not quite suitable; he is too young to be the Mahatma.

The great man has to be given another role.

John the Baptist was the great wise man, teacher, and initiator, but he has been depotentiated.

The same archetype reappears in Goethe as Faust and as Zarathustra in Nietzsche, where Zarathustra came as a visitation.

Nietzsche has been gripped by the sudden animation of the great wise man.

This plays an important role in man's psychology, as I have said, but unfortunately a less important part than that played by the anima.

The serpent is the animal, but the magical animal.

There is hardly anyone whose relation to a snake is neutral.

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct.

Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

In primitive countries, you can easily see why man has acquired this instinct.

The Bedouins are afraid of scorpions and carry amulets to protect themselves, especially stones from certain Roman ruins.

So whenever a snake appears, you must think of a primordial feeling of fear.

The black color goes with this feeling, and also with the subterranean character of the snake.

It is hidden and therefore dangerous.

As animal it symbolizes something unconscious; it is the instinctive movement or tendency; it shows the way to the hidden treasure, or it guards the treasure.

The dragon is the mythological form of the snake.

The snake has a fascinating appeal, a peculiar attraction through fear.

Some people are fascinated by this fear.

Things that are awe-inspiring and dangerous have an extraordinary attraction.

This combination of fear and attraction is shown, for instance, when a bird is hypnotized by a snake, for the bird flutters down to fight the snake, and then becomes attracted and held by the snake.

The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

The snake is also Yin, the dark female power.

The Chinese would not use the snake (i.e., dragon) as a symbol for Yin, but for Yang.

In Chinese [tradition], the Yin is symbolized by the tiger and the Yang by the dragon.

The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization.

It makes things real, makes them come into being, after the manner of Yin.

Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below.

There are mythological parallels.

Certain Negroes call the soul “My serpent”—they say, “My serpent said to me,” meaning “I had an idea.”

Therefore the serpent is also the symbol of wisdom, speaks the wise word of the depths.

It is quite chthonic, quite earth-born, like Erda, daughter of the earth.

The dead heroes transform into serpents in the underworld.

In mythology, that which had been the sun-bird devours itself, goes into the earth, and comes up again.

The Semenda Bird, like the phoenix, burns in order to renew itself.

Out of the ashes comes the snake, and out of the snake the bird again.

The snake is the transition from the Heaven-born, back again to the bird.

The snake encoils the vessel of Ra. In the Night Journey, in the Seventh Hour, Ra must fight the serpent. Ra is supported by the ritual of the priests: if he kills the serpent, the sun rises, if he should not succeed, the sun would rise no more.

The serpent is the personification of the tendency to go into the depths and to deliver oneself over to the alluring world of shadows.

I had already engaged the old man in an interesting conversation; and, quite against all expectations, the old man had assumed a rather critical attitude toward my kind of thinking.

He said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air.

He said, “If you should see people in a room, you would not say that you made those people, or that you were responsible for them.”

Only then I learned psychological objectivity.

Only then could I say to a patient, “Be quiet, something is happening.”

There are such things as mice in a house.

You cannot say you are wrong when you have a thought.

For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena.

We must have perfect objectivity.

A few evenings later, I felt that things should continue; so again I tried to follow the same procedure, but it would not descend.

I remained on the surface.

Then I realized I had a conflict in myself about going down, but I could not make out what it was, I only felt that two dark principles were fighting each other, two serpents.

There was a mountain ridge, a knife edge, on one side a sunny desert country, on the other side darkness.

I saw a white snake on the light side and a dark snake on the dark side.

They met in battle on the narrow ridge.

A dreadful conflict ensued.

Finally the head of the black snake turned white, and it retired, defeated.

I felt, “Now we can go on.”

Then the old man appeared high up on the rocky ridge.

We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring.

I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.”

We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar.

The old man climbed up on the altar.

At once he became small and so did the altar, while the walls grew bigger and bigger.

Then I saw a tiny house near the walls, and a tiny, tiny woman, like a doll, who turned out to be Salome.

I also saw the snake, but it too was very tiny.

The walls kept on growing, and then I realized that I was in the underworld, that the walls were those of a crater, and that this was the house of Salome and Elijah.

All this time, I did not grow, but kept my own size.

As the walls grew, Salome and Elijah grew a bit bigger.

I realized that I was at the bottom of the world.

Elijah smiled and said, “Why, it is just the same, above or below.”

Then a most disagreeable thing happened.

Salome became very interested in me, and she assumed that I could cure her blindness.

She began to worship me.

I said, “Why do you worship me?”

She replied, “You are Christ.”

In spite of my objections she maintained this.

I said, “This is madness,” and became filled with skeptical resistance.

Then I saw the snake approach me.

She came close and began to encircle me and press me in her coils.

The coils reached up to my heart. I realized as I struggled, that I had assumed the attitude of the Crucifixion.

In the agony and the struggle, I sweated so profusely that the water flowed down on all sides of me.

Then Salome rose, and she could see.

While the snake was pressing me, I felt that my face had taken on the face of an animal of prey, a lion or a tiger.

The interpretation of these dreams is this:

First the fight of the two snakes: the white means a movement into the day, the black into the kingdom of darkness, with moral aspects too.

There was a real conflict in me, a resistance to going down.

My stronger tendency was to go up.

Because I had been so impressed the day before with the cruelty of the place I had seen, I really had a tendency to find a way to the conscious by going up, as I did on the mountain.

The mountain was the kingdom of the sun, and the ring-wall was the vessel in which people had gathered the sun.

Elijah had said that it was just the same below or above.

Compare Dante’s Inferno.

The Gnostics express this same idea in the symbol of the reversed cones.

Thus the mountain and the crater are similar.

There was nothing of conscious structure in these fantasies, they were just events that happened.

So I assume that Dante got his ideas from the same archetypes.

I have seen these ideas very often in patients—the upper and the lower cones, things above and things below.

Salome's approach and her worshiping of me is obviously that side of the inferior function which is surrounded by an aura of evil.

I felt her insinuations as a most evil spell.

One is assailed by the fear that perhaps this is madness.

This is how madness begins, this is madness.

For example, in a certain Russian book there is a story of a man who fears he will go mad.

Lying in bed at night, he sees a bright square of moonlight in the middle of the room.

He says to himself, "If I should sit there and howl like a dog, then I would be mad, but I am not doing it so I am not mad."

Then he tries to dismiss this thought, but after a while he says to himself, "I might sit there and howl like a dog, knowing it and choosing it, and still I would not be mad."

Again he tries to put the thought away, but finally he can resist it no longer—he gets up and sits in the moonlight and howls like a dog, and then he is mad.

You cannot get conscious of these unconscious facts without giving yourself to them.

If you can overcome your fear of the unconscious and can let yourself down, then these facts take on a life of their own.

You can be gripped by these ideas so that you really go mad, or nearly so.

These images have so much reality that they recommend themselves, and such extraordinary meaning that one is caught.

They form part of the ancient mysteries; in fact, it is such figures that made the mysteries.

Compare the mysteries of Isis as told in Apuleius, with the initiation and deification of the initiate.

Awe surrounds the mysteries, particularly the mystery of deification.

This was one of the most important of the mysteries; it gave the immortal value to the individual—it gave certainty of immortality.

One gets a peculiar feeling from being put through such an initiation.

The important part that led up to the deification was the snake's encoiling of me.

Salome's performance was deification.

The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake's head resting on the man's head, and the face of the man that of a lion.

This statue has only been found in the mystery grottoes (the under-churches, the last remnants of the catacombs).

The catacombs were not originally places of concealment, but were chosen as symbolical of a descent into the underworld.

It was also part of those early conceptions that the saints should be buried with the martyrs in order to go down into the earth before rising again.

The Dionysian mysteries have the same idea.

When the catacombs decayed, the idea of the church continued.

The Mithraic religion also had an underground church, and only initiates assisted at the underground ceremonies.

Holes were cut in the walls of the underground portion in order that lay people might hear in the church above what was being said by the initiates in the church below.

The lower church was fitted up with divans or cubicles placed opposite each other.

Bells were used in the ceremony, and bread marked with a cross.

We know that they celebrated a sacramental meal where this bread was eaten with water instead of wine.

The Mithraic cult was strictly ascetic.

No women were admitted as members.

It is almost certain that the symbolical rite of deification played a part in these mysteries.

The lion-headed god encoiled by the snake was called Aion, or the eternal being.

He derives from a Persian deity, Zrwanakarana, which word means "the infinitely long duration."

Another very interesting symbol in this cult is the Mithraic amphora with flame arising from it, and the lion on one side with the snake on the other, both trying to get at the fire.

The lion is the young, hot, dry July sun in culmination of light, the summer.

The serpent is humidity, darkness, the earth, winter.

They are the opposites of the world trying to come together with the reconciling symbol between them.

It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains).

Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics.

It is of course a man's symbol, a symbol of the womb—the creative womb of the man out of which rises the fire.

When the pairs of opposites come together, something divine happens, and then it is immortality, the eternal, creative time.

Wherever there is generation there is time, therefore Chronos is God of Time, Fire, and Light.

In this deification mystery you make yourself into the vessel, and are a vessel of creation in which the opposites reconcile.

The more these images are realized, the more you will be gripped by them.

When the images come to you and are not understood, you are in the society of the gods or, if you will, the lunatic society; you are no longer in human society, for you cannot express yourself.

Only when you can say, "This image is so and so," only then do you remain in human society.

Anybody could be caught by these things and lost in them—some throw the experience away saying it is all nonsense, and thereby losing their best value, for these are the creative images.

Another may identify himself with the images and become a crank or a fool.

Question: What is the date of this dream?

Dr. Jung: December 1913.

All this is Mithraic symbolism from beginning to end. In 1910 I had a dream of a Gothic cathedral in which Mass was being celebrated.

Suddenly the whole side wall of the cathedral caved in, and herds of cattle, with ringing bells, trooped into the church.

You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 99-108

Lecture 12

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Ward's question: "You speak of energy as falling from a higher to a lower level and use the waterfall as the illustration.

How do you account for the opposing though equal energy that lifts the water to the rain cloud?

In this case is the rain cloud the lower level?

It is if you transform your level into terms of heat energy.

Should we not take into consideration in psychic energy this transformability into various modes of expression?

Is not this the crux of the problem of the neurosis?

If the psychic energy were sufficiently free or fluid to make easy transformations, the neurosis would not occur.

But here enters the problem of ethics—the choice of direction.

Will you kindly discuss this question?"

Dr. Jung: To make water rise from the sea you need new energy.

When water runs uphill there is always an additional source of energy; in other words, the energy of the sun lifts it.

Water lifted to the clouds must fall again.

In the collective unconscious we release additional sources of energy that make our level rise.

In the collective unconscious there is energy in "solid" forms from of old, but it is additional energy similar to the energy found in coal mines, and like the energy in the mines, it is subject to exhaustion.

If we do not succeed in releasing atomic energy, or the energy of the tides or the wind, the population of Europe will have to decrease.

If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation.

The archetypes are sources of energy.

If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient.

Put an idea into the heads of small people and they become big and tremendously efficient.

We like to think that with moral ideas we can direct our lives, but these things do not catch; if they did we would have been all right long ago.

Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious.

Within the realm of willpower we have choice, but beyond that no choice at all.

Lecture

The black serpent symbolizes the introverting libido.

Salome is the anima and Elijah the wise old man.

Salome, being instinctive and quite blind, needs the foreseeing eyes of wisdom that Elijah possesses.

The figure of the prophet is compensatory to that of the blind anima.

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

As you remember, the real Salome was involved in incestuous relations with Herod, her stepfather, and it was because of the latter's love for her that she was able to get the head of John the Baptist.

I had read much mythology before this fantasy came to me, and all of this reading entered into the condensation of these figures.

The old man is a very typical figure.

One encounters him everywhere; he appears in all sorts of forms, and usually in company with a young girl. (See Rider Haggard: Wisdom's Daughter.)

Feeling-sensation is in opposition to the conscious intellect plus intuition, but the balance is insufficient.

When you assume the anima is due to the preponderance of the differentiated function in the conscious, the unconscious is balanced by a figure within itself that compensates the anima figure.

This is the old man Elijah.

It is as though you have a scale, and in the one side of the scale is the conscious, in the other the unconscious.

This was one of my first hypotheses.

With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance.

In those days I saw a compensatory principle that seemed to show a balance between the conscious and unconscious.

But I saw later that the unconscious was balanced in itself.

It is the yea and the nay. The unconscious is not at all exactly the opposite of the conscious.

It may be irrationally different.

You cannot deduce the unconscious from the conscious.

The unconscious is balanced in itself, as is the conscious.

When we meet an extravagant figure like Salome, we have a compensating figure in the unconscious.

If there were only such an evil figure as Salome, the conscious would have to build up a fence to keep this back, an exaggerated, fanatical, moral attitude.

But I had not this exaggerated moral attitude, so I suppose that Salome was compensated by Elijah.

When Elijah told me he was always with Salome, I thought it was almost blasphemous for him to say this.

I had the feeling of diving into an atmosphere that was cruel and full of blood.

This atmosphere was around Salome, and to hear Elijah declare that he was always in that company shocked me profoundly.

Elijah and Salome are together because they are pairs of opposites.

Elijah is an important figure in man's unconscious, not in woman's.

He is the man with prestige, the man with a low threshold of consciousness or with remarkable intuition.

In higher society he would be the wise man; compare Lao-tse.

He has the ability to get into touch with archetypes.

He will be surrounded with mana, and will arouse other men because he touches the archetypes in others.

He is fascinating and has a thrill about him. He is the wise man, the medicine man, the mana man.

Later on in evolution, this wise man becomes a spiritual image, a god, "the old one from the mountains" (compare Moses coming down from the mountain as lawgiver), the sorcerer of the tribe.

He is the legislator.

Even Christ was in company with Moses and Elijah in his transfiguration.

All great lawgivers and masters of the past, such as for example the Mahatmas of theosophical teaching, are thought of by theosophists as spiritual factors still in existence.

Thus the Dalai Lama is supposed by theosophists to be such a figure.

In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

Christ is not quite suitable; he is too young to be the Mahatma.

The great man has to be given another role.

John the Baptist was the great wise man, teacher, and initiator, but he has been depotentiated.

The same archetype reappears in Goethe as Faust and as Zarathustra in Nietzsche, where Zarathustra came as a visitation.

Nietzsche has been gripped by the sudden animation of the great wise man.

This plays an important role in man's psychology, as I have said, but unfortunately a less important part than that played by the anima.

The serpent is the animal, but the magical animal.

There is hardly anyone whose relation to a snake is neutral.

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct.

Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

In primitive countries, you can easily see why man has acquired this instinct.

The Bedouins are afraid of scorpions and carry amulets to protect themselves, especially stones from certain Roman ruins.

So whenever a snake appears, you must think of a primordial feeling of fear.

The black color goes with this feeling, and also with the subterranean character of the snake.

It is hidden and therefore dangerous.

As animal it symbolizes something unconscious; it is the instinctive movement or tendency; it shows the way to the hidden treasure, or it guards the treasure.

The dragon is the mythological form of the snake.

The snake has a fascinating appeal, a peculiar attraction through fear.

Some people are fascinated by this fear.

Things that are awe-inspiring and dangerous have an extraordinary attraction.

This combination of fear and attraction is shown, for instance, when a bird is hypnotized by a snake, for the bird flutters down to fight the snake, and then becomes attracted and held by the snake.

The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

The snake is also Yin, the dark female power.

The Chinese would not use the snake (i.e., dragon) as a symbol for Yin, but for Yang.

In Chinese [tradition], the Yin is symbolized by the tiger and the Yang by the dragon.

The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization.

It makes things real, makes them come into being, after the manner of Yin.

Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below.

There are mythological parallels.

Certain Negroes call the soul "My serpent"—they say, "My serpent said to me," meaning "I had an idea."

Therefore the serpent is also the symbol of wisdom, speaks the wise word of the depths.

It is quite chthonic, quite earth-born, like Erda, daughter of the earth.

The dead heroes transform into serpents in the underworld.

In mythology, that which had been the sun-bird devours itself, goes into the earth, and comes up again.

The Semenda Bird, like the phoenix, burns in order to renew itself.

Out of the ashes comes the snake, and out of the snake the bird again.

The snake is the transition from the Heaven-born, back again to the bird.

The snake encoils the vessel of Ra. In the Night Journey, in the Seventh Hour, Ra must fight the serpent. Ra is supported by the ritual of the priests: if he kills the serpent, the sun rises, if he should not succeed, the sun would rise no more.

The serpent is the personification of the tendency to go into the depths and to deliver oneself over to the alluring world of shadows.

I had already engaged the old man in an interesting conversation; and, quite against all expectations, the old man had assumed a rather critical attitude toward my kind of thinking.

He said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air.

He said, "If you should see people in a room, you would not say that you made those people, or that you were responsible for them."

Only then I learned psychological objectivity.

Only then could I say to a patient, “Be quiet, something is happening.”

There are such things as mice in a house.

You cannot say you are wrong when you have a thought.

For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena.

We must have perfect objectivity.

A few evenings later, I felt that things should continue; so again I tried to follow the same procedure, but it would not descend.

I remained on the surface.

Then I realized I had a conflict in myself about going down, but I could not make out what it was, I only felt that two dark principles were fighting each other, two serpents.

There was a mountain ridge, a knife edge, on one side a sunny desert country, on the other side darkness.

I saw a white snake on the light side and a dark snake on the dark side.

They met in battle on the narrow ridge.

A dreadful conflict ensued.

Finally the head of the black snake turned white, and it retired, defeated.

I felt, “Now we can go on.”

Then the old man appeared high up on the rocky ridge.

We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring.

I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.”

We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar.

The old man climbed up on the altar.

At once he became small and so did the altar, while the walls grew bigger and bigger.

Then I saw a tiny house near the walls, and a tiny, tiny woman, like a doll, who turned out to be Salome.

I also saw the snake, but it too was very tiny.

The walls kept on growing, and then I realized that I was in the underworld, that the walls were those of a crater, and that this was the house of Salome and Elijah.

All this time, I did not grow, but kept my own size.

As the walls grew, Salome and Elijah grew a bit bigger.

I realized that I was at the bottom of the world.

Elijah smiled and said, “Why, it is just the same, above or below.”

Then a most disagreeable thing happened.

Salome became very interested in me, and she assumed that I could cure her blindness.

She began to worship me.

I said, “Why do you worship me?”

She replied, “You are Christ.”

In spite of my objections she maintained this.

I said, “This is madness,” and became filled with skeptical resistance.

Then I saw the snake approach me.

She came close and began to encircle me and press me in her coils.

The coils reached up to my heart. I realized as I struggled, that I had assumed the attitude of the Crucifixion.

In the agony and the struggle, I sweated so profusely that the water flowed down on all sides of me.

Then Salome rose, and she could see.

While the snake was pressing me, I felt that my face had taken on the face of an animal of prey, a lion or a tiger.

The interpretation of these dreams is this:

First the fight of the two snakes: the white means a movement into the day, the black into the kingdom of darkness, with moral aspects too.

There was a real conflict in me, a resistance to going down.

My stronger tendency was to go up.

Because I had been so impressed the day before with the cruelty of the place I had seen, I really had a tendency to find a way to the conscious by going up, as I did on the mountain.

The mountain was the kingdom of the sun, and the ring-wall was the vessel in which people had gathered the sun.

Elijah had said that it was just the same below or above.

Compare Dante’s Inferno.

The Gnostics express this same idea in the symbol of the reversed cones.

Thus the mountain and the crater are similar.

There was nothing of conscious structure in these fantasies, they were just events that happened.

So I assume that Dante got his ideas from the same archetypes.

I have seen these ideas very often in patients—the upper and the lower cones, things above and things below.

Salome’s approach and her worshiping of me is obviously that side of the inferior function which is surrounded by an aura of evil.

I felt her insinuations as a most evil spell.

One is assailed by the fear that perhaps this is madness.

This is how madness begins, this is madness.

For example, in a certain Russian book there is a story of a man who fears he will go mad.

Lying in bed at night, he sees a bright square of moonlight in the middle of the room.

He says to himself, “If I should sit there and howl like a dog, then I would be mad, but I am not doing it so I am not mad.”

Then he tries to dismiss this thought, but after a while he says to himself, “I might sit there and howl like a dog, knowing it and choosing it, and still I would not be mad.”

Again he tries to put the thought away, but finally he can resist it no longer—he gets up and sits in the moonlight and howls like a dog, and then he is mad.

You cannot get conscious of these unconscious facts without giving yourself to them.

If you can overcome your fear of the unconscious and can let yourself down, then these facts take on a life of their own.

You can be gripped by these ideas so that you really go mad, or nearly so.

These images have so much reality that they recommend themselves, and such extraordinary meaning that one is caught.

They form part of the ancient mysteries; in fact, it is such figures that made the mysteries.

Compare the mysteries of Isis as told in Apuleius, with the initiation and deification of the initiate.

Awe surrounds the mysteries, particularly the mystery of deification.

This was one of the most important of the mysteries; it gave the immortal value to the individual—it gave certainty of immortality.

One gets a peculiar feeling from being put through such an initiation.

The important part that led up to the deification was the snake's encoiling of me.

Salome's performance was deification.

The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake's head resting on the man's head, and the face of the man that of a lion.

This statue has only been found in the mystery grottoes (the under-churches, the last remnants of the catacombs).

The catacombs were not originally places of concealment, but were chosen as symbolical of a descent into the underworld.

It was also part of those early conceptions that the saints should be buried with the martyrs in order to go down into the earth before rising again.

The Dionysian mysteries have the same idea.

When the catacombs decayed, the idea of the church continued.

The Mithraic religion also had an underground church, and only initiates assisted at the underground ceremonies.

Holes were cut in the walls of the underground portion in order that lay people might hear in the church above what was being said by the initiates in the church below.

The lower church was fitted up with divans or cubicles placed opposite each other.

Bells were used in the ceremony, and bread marked with a cross.

We know that they celebrated a sacramental meal where this bread was eaten with water instead of wine.

The Mithraic cult was strictly ascetic.

No women were admitted as members.

It is almost certain that the symbolical rite of deification played a part in these mysteries.

The lion-headed god encoiled by the snake was called Aion, or the eternal being.

He derives from a Persian deity, Zrwanakarana, which word means “the infinitely long duration.”

Another very interesting symbol in this cult is the Mithraic amphora with flame arising from it, and the lion on one side with the snake on the other, both trying to get at the fire.

The lion is the young, hot, dry July sun in culmination of light, the summer.

The serpent is humidity, darkness, the earth, winter.

They are the opposites of the world trying to come together with the reconciling symbol between them.

It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains).

Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics.

It is of course a man’s symbol, a symbol of the womb—the creative womb of the man out of which rises the fire.

When the pairs of opposites come together, something divine happens, and then it is immortality, the eternal, creative time.

Wherever there is generation there is time, therefore Chronos is God of Time, Fire, and Light.

In this deification mystery you make yourself into the vessel, and are a vessel of creation in which the opposites reconcile.

The more these images are realized, the more you will be gripped by them.

When the images come to you and are not understood, you are in the society of the gods or, if you will, the lunatic society; you are no longer in human society, for you cannot express yourself.

Only when you can say, “This image is so and so,” only then do you remain in human society.

Anybody could be caught by these things and lost in them—some throw the experience away saying it is all nonsense, and thereby losing their best value, for these are the creative images.

Another may identify himself with the images and become a crank or a fool.

Question: What is the date of this dream?

Dr. Jung: December 1913.

All this is Mithraic symbolism from beginning to end. In 1910 I had a dream of a Gothic cathedral in which Mass was being celebrated.

Suddenly the whole side wall of the cathedral caved in, and herds of cattle, with ringing bells, trooped into the church.

You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 99-108.]

Lecture 12

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Ward's question: "You speak of energy as falling from a higher to a lower level and use the waterfall as the illustration.

How do you account for the opposing though equal energy that lifts the water to the rain cloud?

In this case is the rain cloud the lower level?

It is if you transform your level into terms of heat energy.

Should we not take into consideration in psychic energy this transformability into various modes of expression?

Is not this the crux of the problem of the neurosis?

If the psychic energy were sufficiently free or fluid to make easy transformations, the neurosis would not occur.

But here enters the problem of ethics—the choice of direction.

Will you kindly discuss this question?"

Dr. Jung: To make water rise from the sea you need new energy.

When water runs uphill there is always an additional source of energy; in other words, the energy of the sun lifts it.

Water lifted to the clouds must fall again.

In the collective unconscious we release additional sources of energy that make our level rise.

In the collective unconscious there is energy in "solid" forms from of old, but it is additional energy similar to the energy found in coal mines, and like the energy in the mines, it is subject to exhaustion.

If we do not succeed in releasing atomic energy, or the energy of the tides or the wind, the population of Europe will have to decrease.

If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation.

The archetypes are sources of energy.

If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient.

Put an idea into the heads of small people and they become big and tremendously efficient.

We like to think that with moral ideas we can direct our lives, but these things do not catch; if they did we would have been all right long ago.

Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious.

Within the realm of willpower we have choice, but beyond that no choice at all.

Lecture

The black serpent symbolizes the introverting libido.

Salome is the anima and Elijah the wise old man.

Salome, being instinctive and quite blind, needs the foreseeing eyes of wisdom that Elijah possesses.

The figure of the prophet is compensatory to that of the blind anima.

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

As you remember, the real Salome was involved in incestuous relations with Herod, her stepfather, and it was because of the latter's love for her that she was able to get the head of John the Baptist.

I had read much mythology before this fantasy came to me, and all of this reading entered into the condensation of these figures.

The old man is a very typical figure.

One encounters him everywhere; he appears in all sorts of forms, and usually in company with a young girl. (See Rider Haggard: Wisdom's Daughter.)

Feeling-sensation is in opposition to the conscious intellect plus intuition, but the balance is insufficient.

When you assume the anima is due to the preponderance of the differentiated function in the conscious, the unconscious is balanced by a figure within itself that compensates the anima figure.

This is the old man Elijah.

It is as though you have a scale, and in the one side of the scale is the conscious, in the other the unconscious.

This was one of my first hypotheses.

With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance.

In those days I saw a compensatory principle that seemed to show a balance between the conscious and unconscious.

But I saw later that the unconscious was balanced in itself.

It is the yea and the nay. The unconscious is not at all exactly the opposite of the conscious.

It may be irrationally different.

You cannot deduce the unconscious from the conscious.

The unconscious is balanced in itself, as is the conscious.

When we meet an extravagant figure like Salome, we have a compensating figure in the unconscious.

If there were only such an evil figure as Salome, the conscious would have to build up a fence to keep this back, an exaggerated, fanatical, moral attitude.

But I had not this exaggerated moral attitude, so I suppose that Salome was compensated by Elijah.

When Elijah told me he was always with Salome, I thought it was almost blasphemous for him to say this.

I had the feeling of diving into an atmosphere that was cruel and full of blood.

This atmosphere was around Salome, and to hear Elijah declare that he was always in that company shocked me profoundly.

Elijah and Salome are together because they are pairs of opposites.

Elijah is an important figure in man's unconscious, not in woman's.

He is the man with prestige, the man with a low threshold of consciousness or with remarkable intuition.

In higher society he would be the wise man; compare Lao-tse.

He has the ability to get into touch with archetypes.

He will be surrounded with mana, and will arouse other men because he touches the archetypes in others.

He is fascinating and has a thrill about him. He is the wise man, the medicine man, the mana man.

Later on in evolution, this wise man becomes a spiritual image, a god, "the old one from the mountains" (compare Moses coming down from the mountain as lawgiver), the sorcerer of the tribe.

He is the legislator.

Even Christ was in company with Moses and Elijah in his transfiguration.

All great lawgivers and masters of the past, such as for example the Mahatmas of theosophical teaching, are thought of by theosophists as spiritual factors still in existence.

Thus the Dalai Lama is supposed by theosophists to be such a figure.

In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

Christ is not quite suitable; he is too young to be the Mahatma.

The great man has to be given another role.

John the Baptist was the great wise man, teacher, and initiator, but he has been depotentiated.

The same archetype reappears in Goethe as Faust and as Zarathustra in Nietzsche, where Zarathustra came as a visitation.

Nietzsche has been gripped by the sudden animation of the great wise man.

This plays an important role in man's psychology, as I have said, but unfortunately a less important part than that played by the anima.

The serpent is the animal, but the magical animal.

There is hardly anyone whose relation to a snake is neutral.

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct.

Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

In primitive countries, you can easily see why man has acquired this instinct.

The Bedouins are afraid of scorpions and carry amulets to protect themselves, especially stones from certain Roman ruins.

So whenever a snake appears, you must think of a primordial feeling of fear.

The black color goes with this feeling, and also with the subterranean character of the snake.

It is hidden and therefore dangerous.

As animal it symbolizes something unconscious; it is the instinctive movement or tendency; it shows the way to the hidden treasure, or it guards the treasure.

The dragon is the mythological form of the snake.

The snake has a fascinating appeal, a peculiar attraction through fear.

Some people are fascinated by this fear.

Things that are awe-inspiring and dangerous have an extraordinary attraction.

This combination of fear and attraction is shown, for instance, when a bird is hypnotized by a snake, for the bird flutters down to fight the snake, and then becomes attracted and held by the snake.

The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

The snake is also Yin, the dark female power.

The Chinese would not use the snake (i.e., dragon) as a symbol for Yin, but for Yang.

In Chinese [tradition], the Yin is symbolized by the tiger and the Yang by the dragon.

The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization.

It makes things real, makes them come into being, after the manner of Yin.

Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below.

There are mythological parallels.

Certain Negroes call the soul “My serpent”—they say, “My serpent said to me,” meaning “I had an idea.”

Therefore the serpent is also the symbol of wisdom, speaks the wise word of the depths.

It is quite chthonic, quite earth-born, like Erda, daughter of the earth.

The dead heroes transform into serpents in the underworld.

In mythology, that which had been the sun-bird devours itself, goes into the earth, and comes up again.

The Semenda Bird, like the phoenix, burns in order to renew itself.

Out of the ashes comes the snake, and out of the snake the bird again.

The snake is the transition from the Heaven-born, back again to the bird.

The snake encoils the vessel of Ra. In the Night Journey, in the Seventh Hour, Ra must fight the serpent. Ra is supported by the ritual of the priests: if he kills the serpent, the sun rises, if he should not succeed, the sun would rise no more.

The serpent is the personification of the tendency to go into the depths and to deliver oneself over to the alluring world of shadows.

I had already engaged the old man in an interesting conversation; and, quite against all expectations, the old man had assumed a rather critical attitude toward my kind of thinking.

He said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air.

He said, "If you should see people in a room, you would not say that you made those people, or that you were responsible for them."

Only then I learned psychological objectivity.

Only then could I say to a patient, "Be quiet, something is happening."

There are such things as mice in a house.

You cannot say you are wrong when you have a thought.

For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena.

We must have perfect objectivity.

A few evenings later, I felt that things should continue; so again I tried to follow the same procedure, but it would not descend.

I remained on the surface.

Then I realized I had a conflict in myself about going down, but I could not make out what it was, I only felt that two dark principles were fighting each other, two serpents.

There was a mountain ridge, a knife edge, on one side a sunny desert country, on the other side darkness.

I saw a white snake on the light side and a dark snake on the dark side.

They met in battle on the narrow ridge.

A dreadful conflict ensued.

Finally the head of the black snake turned white, and it retired, defeated.

I felt, "Now we can go on."

Then the old man appeared high up on the rocky ridge.

We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring.

I thought, "Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place."

We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar.

The old man climbed up on the altar.

At once he became small and so did the altar, while the walls grew bigger and bigger.

Then I saw a tiny house near the walls, and a tiny, tiny woman, like a doll, who turned out to be Salome.

I also saw the snake, but it too was very tiny.

The walls kept on growing, and then I realized that I was in the underworld, that the walls were those of a crater, and that this was the house of Salome and Elijah.

All this time, I did not grow, but kept my own size.

As the walls grew, Salome and Elijah grew a bit bigger.

I realized that I was at the bottom of the world.

Elijah smiled and said, “Why, it is just the same, above or below.”

Then a most disagreeable thing happened.

Salome became very interested in me, and she assumed that I could cure her blindness.

She began to worship me.

I said, “Why do you worship me?”

She replied, “You are Christ.”

In spite of my objections she maintained this.

I said, “This is madness,” and became filled with skeptical resistance.

Then I saw the snake approach me.

She came close and began to encircle me and press me in her coils.

The coils reached up to my heart. I realized as I struggled, that I had assumed the attitude of the Crucifixion.

In the agony and the struggle, I sweated so profusely that the water flowed down on all sides of me.

Then Salome rose, and she could see.

While the snake was pressing me, I felt that my face had taken on the face of an animal of prey, a lion or a tiger.

The interpretation of these dreams is this:

First the fight of the two snakes: the white means a movement into the day, the black into the kingdom of darkness, with moral aspects too.

There was a real conflict in me, a resistance to going down.

My stronger tendency was to go up.

Because I had been so impressed the day before with the cruelty of the place I had seen, I really had a tendency to find a way to the conscious by going up, as I did on the mountain.

The mountain was the kingdom of the sun, and the ring-wall was the vessel in which people had gathered the sun.

Elijah had said that it was just the same below or above.

Compare Dante's Inferno.

The Gnostics express this same idea in the symbol of the reversed cones.

Thus the mountain and the crater are similar.

There was nothing of conscious structure in these fantasies, they were just events that happened.

So I assume that Dante got his ideas from the same archetypes.

I have seen these ideas very often in patients—the upper and the lower cones, things above and things below.

Salome's approach and her worshiping of me is obviously that side of the inferior function which is surrounded by an aura of evil.

I felt her insinuations as a most evil spell.

One is assailed by the fear that perhaps this is madness.

This is how madness begins, this is madness.

For example, in a certain Russian book there is a story of a man who fears he will go mad.

Lying in bed at night, he sees a bright square of moonlight in the middle of the room.

He says to himself, "If I should sit there and howl like a dog, then I would be mad, but I am not doing it so I am not mad."

Then he tries to dismiss this thought, but after a while he says to himself, "I might sit there and howl like a dog, knowing it and choosing it, and still I would not be mad."

Again he tries to put the thought away, but finally he can resist it no longer—he gets up and sits in the moonlight and howls like a dog, and then he is mad.

You cannot get conscious of these unconscious facts without giving yourself to them.

If you can overcome your fear of the unconscious and can let yourself down, then these facts take on a life of their own.

You can be gripped by these ideas so that you really go mad, or nearly so.

These images have so much reality that they recommend themselves, and such extraordinary meaning that one is caught.

They form part of the ancient mysteries; in fact, it is such figures that made the mysteries.

Compare the mysteries of Isis as told in Apuleius, with the initiation and deification of the initiate.

Awe surrounds the mysteries, particularly the mystery of deification.

This was one of the most important of the mysteries; it gave the immortal value to the individual—it gave certainty of immortality.

One gets a peculiar feeling from being put through such an initiation.

The important part that led up to the deification was the snake's encoiling of me.

Salome's performance was deification.

The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake's head resting on the man's head, and the face of the man that of a lion.

This statue has only been found in the mystery grottoes (the under-churches, the last remnants of the catacombs).

The catacombs were not originally places of concealment, but were chosen as symbolical of a descent into the underworld.

It was also part of those early conceptions that the saints should be buried with the martyrs in order to go down into the earth before rising again.

The Dionysian mysteries have the same idea.

When the catacombs decayed, the idea of the church continued.

The Mithraic religion also had an underground church, and only initiates assisted at the underground ceremonies.

Holes were cut in the walls of the underground portion in order that lay people might hear in the church above what was being said by the initiates in the church below.

The lower church was fitted up with divans or cubicles placed opposite each other.

Bells were used in the ceremony, and bread marked with a cross.

We know that they celebrated a sacramental meal where this bread was eaten with water instead of wine.

The Mithraic cult was strictly ascetic.

No women were admitted as members.

It is almost certain that the symbolical rite of deification played a part in these mysteries.

The lion-headed god encoiled by the snake was called Aion, or the eternal being.

He derives from a Persian deity, Zrwanakarana, which word means “the infinitely long duration.”

Another very interesting symbol in this cult is the Mithraic amphora with flame arising from it, and the lion on one side with the snake on the other, both trying to get at the fire.

The lion is the young, hot, dry July sun in culmination of light, the summer.

The serpent is humidity, darkness, the earth, winter.

They are the opposites of the world trying to come together with the reconciling symbol between them.

It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains).

Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics.

It is of course a man’s symbol, a symbol of the womb—the creative womb of the man out of which rises the fire.

When the pairs of opposites come together, something divine happens, and then it is immortality, the eternal, creative time.

Wherever there is generation there is time, therefore Chronos is God of Time, Fire, and Light.

In this deification mystery you make yourself into the vessel, and are a vessel of creation in which the opposites reconcile.

The more these images are realized, the more you will be gripped by them.

When the images come to you and are not understood, you are in the society of the gods or, if you will, the lunatic society; you are no longer in human society, for you cannot express yourself.

Only when you can say, “This image is so and so,” only then do you remain in human society.

Anybody could be caught by these things and lost in them—some throw the experience away saying it is all nonsense, and thereby losing their best value, for these are the creative images.

Another may identify himself with the images and become a crank or a fool.

Question: What is the date of this dream?

Dr. Jung: December 1913.

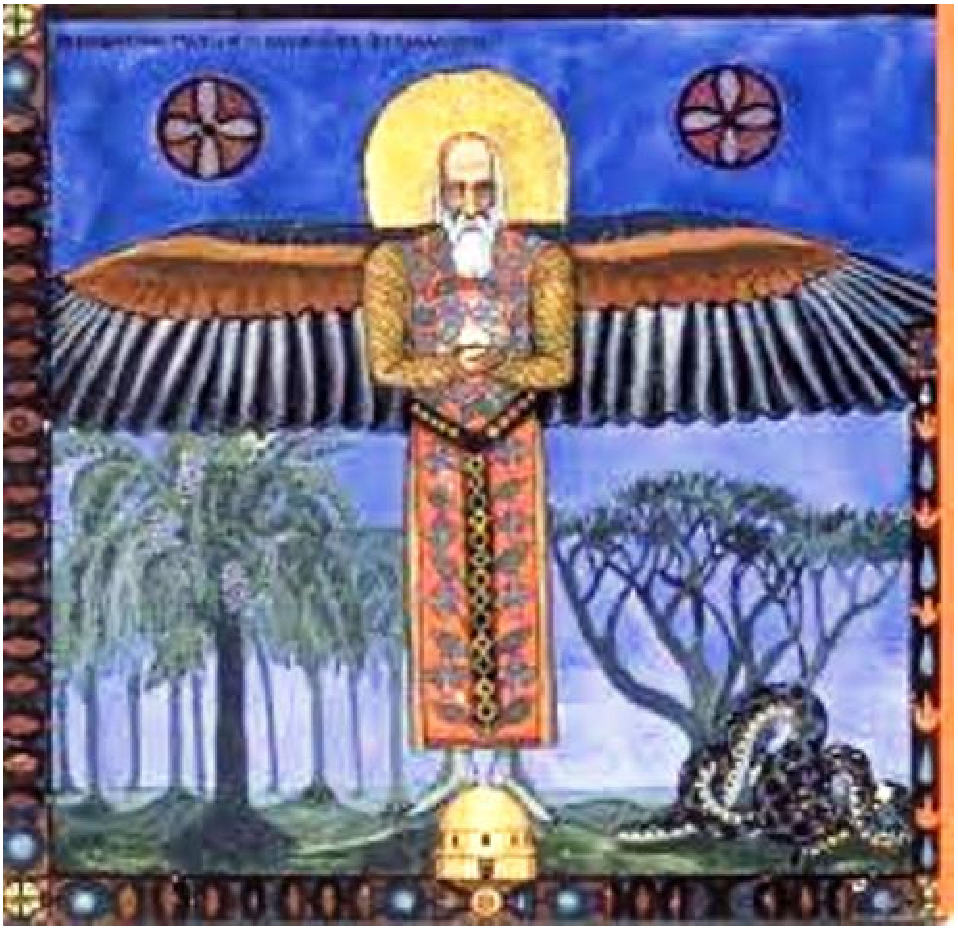
All this is Mithraic symbolism from beginning to end. In 1910 I had a dream of a Gothic cathedral in which Mass was being celebrated.

Suddenly the whole side wall of the cathedral caved in, and herds of cattle, with ringing bells, trooped into the church.

You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 99-108

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/48b3d-1druid.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=85MSH7EJZHC9&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=157623081`

Carl Jung on "Archetypes" - Anthology (2019-12-13 04:30)



Carl Jung on “Archetypes” – Anthology

It is the prime task of all education (of adults) to convey the archetype of the God image, or its emanations and effects, to the conscious mind. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 47.

"If as seems probable, the aeon of the fishes is ruled by the archetypal motif of the ’hostile brothers,’ then the approach of the next Platonic month, namely Aquarius, will constellate the problem of the union of opposites. It will then no longer be possible to write off evil as a mere privatio boni; its real existence will have to be recognized"). Liber Novus, Page 316, Footnote 275

We do not know what an archetype is (i.e., consists of), since the nature of the psyche is inaccessible to us, but we know that archetypes exist and work. Carl Jung, The Symbolic Self, Page 694.

The better we understand the archetype, the more we participate in its life and the more we realize its eternity or timelessness. Carl Jung, The Symbolic Self, Page 695.

There is no real life without archetypal experiences. The ordinary life is two-dimensional-it consists of pieces of paper-but the real life consists of three dimensions, and if it doesn’t it is not real life, but is a provisional life. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 970.

The self in its divinity (i.e., the archetype) is unconscious of itself. It can become conscious only within our consciousness. And it can do that only if the ego stands firm. Carl Jung; Letters Volume 1; 335-336.

It is a primordial, universal idea that the dead simply continue their earthly existence and do not know that they are disembodied spirits an archetypal idea which enters into immediate, visible manifestation whenever anyone sees a ghost. Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Page 518.

The archetypes are, so to speak, organs of the pre-rational psyche. They are eternally inherited forms and ideas which have at first no specific content. Their specific content only appears in the course of the individual's life, when personal experience is taken up in precisely these forms. Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Page 518.

The archetype is outside of me as well as in me. C. G. Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff - A Collection of Remembrances; Pages 51-70.

My God-image corresponds to an autonomous archetypal pattern. Therefore I can experience God as if he were an object, but I need not assume that it is the only image. Carl Jung, Letters II, 154.

Archetypes, in spite of their conservative nature, are not static but in a continuous dramatic flux. Thus the self as a monad or continuous unit would be dead. But it lives inasmuch as it splits and unites again. There is no energy without opposites! This is unavoidable, for consciousness can keep only a few images in full clarity at one time, and even this clarity fluctuates. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 20.

With the archetype of the anima, we enter the realm of the gods, or rather, the realm that metaphysics has reserved for itself. Carl Jung, CW 9, Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious, Page 28

When I say as a psychologist , that God is an archetype, I mean by that the "type" in the psyche. Carl Jung, CW 12, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 149

Analysts and mathematicians both consider themselves infallible; they live with invisible magic cloaks around them. They are both concerned with archetypes . Archetypes are living powers; they are the "thoughts of God." Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 59.

Matter may be stimulated by the inner psychic process, understood archetypally, to produce something analogous. A latent tension, for example, can manifest itself in creaking wood. Matter plays along with the psychic process. There is a story that says that when Mohammed ascended into Heaven the stone in the Temple of Jerusalem wanted to go too. The archetype manifests itself in the outer world as sympathia. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 51.

We should be particularly watchful when synchronous events occur for a numen is then in sight. In a certain mood one notices that the crows fly towards the left. When an archetypal event approaches the sphere of consciousness, it also manifests itself in the outer life. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 51

When someone is under a grave threat, and the archetypes are constellated, synchronistic situations can arise – events that are independent of him, existing in the outside world. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 51.

Like every archetype, the animus has a Janus face. Carl Jung, CW 13, The Philosophical Tree; Page 268.

An archetype is composed of an instinctual factor and a spiritual image. Carl jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Archetypes; Page 21.

Archetypes are not matters of faith; we can know that they are there. Carl Jung; Conversations with C.G. Jung; Archetypes; Page 21.

The archetype signifies that particular spiritual reality which cannot be attained unless life is lived in consciousness. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Archetypes, Page 21.

Archetypes are images in the soul that represent the course of one's life.   Carl Jung; Conversations with C.G. Jung; Archetypes; Page 21.

Archetypes are complexes of experience that come upon us like fate, and their effects are felt in our most personal life. The anima no longer crosses our path as a goddess, but, it may be, as an intimately personal misadventure, or perhaps as our best venture. When, for instance, a highly esteemed professor in his seventies abandons his family and runs off with a young red-headed actress, we know that the gods have claimed another victim. Carl Jung; "Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious"; CW 9, Part I: The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious. Page 62.

Take for comparison the daily course of the sun-but a sun that is endowed with human feeling and man's limited consciousness. In the morning it rises from the nocturnal sea of unconsciousness and looks upon the wide, bright world which lies before it in an expanse that steadily widens the higher it climbs in the firmament. In this extension of its field of action caused by its own rising, the sun will discover its significance; it will see the attainment of the greatest possible height, and the widest possible dissemination of its blessings, as its goal. In this conviction the sun pursues its course to the unforeseen zenith-unforeseen, because its career is unique and individual, and the culminating point could not be calculated in advance. At the stroke of noon the descent begins. And the descent means the reversal of all the ideals and values that were cherished in the morning. - "The Stages of Life" (1930). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche.

We must constantly bear in mind that what we mean by "archetype" is in itself irrepresentable, but has effects which make visualizations of it possible, namely, the archetypal images and ideas. We meet with a similar situation in physics: there the smallest particles are themselves irrepresentable but have effects from the nature of which we can build up a model. The archetypal image, the motif or mythologem, is a construction of this kind. Carl Jung; "On the Nature of the Psyche" (1947). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.417.

The archetype or primordial image might suitably be described as the instinct's perception of itself, or as the self portrait of the instinct, in exactly the same way as consciousness is an inward perception of the objective life-process.   Carl Jung; "Instinct and the Unconscious" (1919). CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche P.277.

The God-image is a complex of ideas of an archetypal nature, it must necessarily be regarded as representing a certain sum of energy (libido) which appears in which creates the attributes of divinity is the father-imago, while in the older religions it was the mother imago... In certain pagan conceptions of divinity the maternal element is strongly emphasized. Carl Jung; Symbols of Transformation; para. 89.

The archetypal image of the wise man, the savior or redeemer, lies buried and dormant in man's unconscious since the dawn of culture; it is awakened whenever the times are out of joint and a human society is committed to a serious error. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul.

Archetypal statements are based upon instinctive preconditions and have nothing to do with reason; they are neither rationally grounded nor can they be banished by rational arguments. They have always been part of the world scene representations collectives, as Levy-Bruhl rightly called them. Certainly the ego and its will have a great part to play in life; but what the ego wills is subject in the highest degree to the interference, in ways of which the ego is usually unaware, of the autonomy and numinosity of archetypal processes. Practical consideration of these processes is the essence of religion, insofar as religion can be approached from a psychological point of view.   Carl Jung Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 353

The psychic fact “God” is a typical autonomism, a collective archetype...It is therefore characteristic not only of all higher forms of religion, but appears spontaneously in the dreams of individuals. Carl Jung; CW 8; fn 29.

At such moments ["when an archetypal situation occurs"] we are no longer individuals, but the race. . . . Carl Jung; On the Relation of Analytical Psychology to Poetry; CW 15: 128.

Archetypes speak the language of high rhetoric, even of bombast. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams and Reflections; Chapter 6.

The primordial image, or archetype, is a figure–be it a daemon, a human being, or a process–that constantly recurs in the course of history and appears wherever creative fantasy is freely expressed. Essentially, therefore, it is a mythological figure. . . . In each of these images there is a little piece of human psychology and human fate, a remnant of the joys and sorrows that have been repeated countless times in our ancestral history. . . . Carl Jung; On the Relation of Analytical Psychology to Poetry; CW 15; 127.

A remarkable instance of this can be found in the Eleusinian mysteries, which were finally suppressed in the beginning of the seventh century of the Christian era. They expressed, together with the Delphic oracle, the essence and spirit of ancient Greece. On a much greater scale, the Christian era itself owes its name and significance to the antique mystery of the god-man, which has its roots in the archetypal Osiris-Horus myth of ancient Egypt. Carl Jung; Man and His Symbols; P. 68.

It would be blasphemy to assert that God can manifest Himself everywhere save only in the human soul. Indeed the very intimacy of the relationship between Cod and the soul automatically precludes any devaluation of the latter. It would be going perhaps too far to speak of an affinity; but at all events the soul must contain in itself the faculty of relation to God, i.e. a correspondence, otherwise a connection could never come about This correspondence is, in psychological terms, the archetype of the God-image [q.v.]" Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Pages 399-400 and Psychology and Alchemy, CW 12, par. 11.

Just as the "psychic infra-red," the biological instinctual psyche, gradually passes over into the physiology of the organism and thus merges with its chemical and physical conditions, so the "psychic ultra-violet," the archetype, describes a field which exhibits none of the peculiarities of the physiological and yet, in the last analysis, can no longer be regarded as psychic. Carl Jung; On the Nature of the Psyche; CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche; Page 420.

While the man who despairs marches towards nothingness, the one who has placed his faith in the archetype follows the tracks of life and lives right into his death. Both, to be sure, remain in uncertainty, but the one lives against his instincts, the other with them. Carl Jung; MDR; Page 306.

All ages before ours believed in gods in some form or other. Only an unparalleled impoverishment in symbolism could enable us to rediscover the gods as psychic factors, which is to say, as archetypes of the unconscious. No doubt this discovery is hardly credible as yet. Carl Jung; The Integration of the Personality p. 72

The unconscious . . . is the source of the instinctual forces of the psyche and of the forms or categories that regulate them, namely the archetypes. Carl Jung; The Structure of the Psyche; CW 8, par. 342.

The drama of the archetypal life of Christ describes in symbolic images the events of the conscious life–as well as in the life that transcends consciousness–of a man who has been transformed by his higher destiny. Carl Jung; Psychology and Religion.

Archetypes are like riverbeds which dry up when the water deserts them, but which it can find again at any time. An archetype is like an old watercourse along which the water of life has flowed for centuries, digging a deep channel for itself. The longer it has flowed in this channel the more likely it is that sooner or later the water will return to its old bed. Carl Jung: CW 10; Civilization in Transition; Wotan; Page 395.

Hierosgamos. Sacred or spiritual marriage, union of archetypal figures in the rebirth mysteries of antiquity and also in alchemy. Typical examples are the representation of Christ and the Church as bridegroom and bride (sponsus et sponsa) and the alchemical conjunction of sun and moon. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 395.

With a little self-criticism one can see through the shadow-so far as its nature is personal. But when it appears as an archetype, one encounters the same difficulties as with anima and animus. In other words, it is quite within the bounds of possibility for a man to recognize the relative evil of his nature, but it is a rare and shattering experience for him to gaze into the face of absolute evil. Carl Jung; CW 17; The Shadow; Page 338; par. 19.

This image is fundamentally unconscious, an hereditary factor of primordial origin engraved in the living organic system of the man, an imprint or ’archetype’ [q.v.] of all the ancestral experiences of the female, a deposit, as it were, of all the impressions ever made by woman . . .
Since this image is unconscious, it is always unconsciously projected upon the person of the beloved, and is one of the chief reasons for passionate attraction or aversion." Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 391.

Instinct is anything but a blind and indefinite impulse, since it proves to be attuned and adapted to a definite external situation. This latter circumstance gives it its specific and irreducible form. Just as instinct is original and hereditary, so too, its form is age-old, that is to say, archetypal. It is even older and more conservative than the body’s form. Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 49.

Like any archetype, the essential nature of the self is unknowable, but its manifestations are the content of myth and legend. Carl Jung, Definitions CW 6, Para 790.

The idea of angels, archangels, “principalities and powers” in St. Paul, the archons of the Gnostics, the heavenly hierarchy of Dionysius the Areopagite, all come from the perception of the relative autonomy of the archetypes. Carl Jung, CW 7, Page 66, Para 104.

It seems to me probable that the real nature of the archetype is not capable of being made conscious, that it is transcendent, on which account I call it psychoid. Carl Jung, CW 8, para. 417.

Often when people behave in an exceedingly unexpected manner the appearance of an archetype is the explanation ; archetypes go back not only through human history, but to our ancestors the animals, that is why we are able to understand animals so well and make friends with them. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Vol. 2, Page 177.

The idea of transformation and renewal by means of the serpent is a well-substantiated archetype. It is [a] healing [symbol] Carl Jung, CW 7, Par 184.

...as I have inserted some rather extensive material illustrating the multiple "luminosities" of the unconscious, representing the "conscious-like" nuclei of volitional acts (presumably identical with archetypes). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 448-449.

The self in its divinity (i.e., the archetype) is unconscious of itself It can be come conscious only within our consciousness. And it can do that only if the ego stands firm. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 335-337.

But every archetype before it is integrated consciously wants to manifest itself physically since it forces the subject into its own form. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 335-337.

My further writing led me to the archetype of the God-man and to the phenomenon of synchronicity which adheres to the archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 479-481.

It is when we come to a summit in life that the archetypal symbols appear. These primeval pictures of human life form the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Pages 176-177.

The moment where the archetype appears is always characterized by remarkable emotion; it, as it were, fascinates the dreamer and exalts him, as if the Muse had kissed him not only on the forehead but on the shoulder. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 177.

But this is where the above-mentioned difficulty comes in: our knowledge of the instincts, i .e., of the underlying biological drives, is very inadequate, so that it is only with the greatest difficulty and great uncertainty that we can equate the archetypes with them. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 546-548.

The archetypal or image side seldom comes to the surface in young people, they take instinct for granted, and never stop to think what the meaning of it is, it just functions naturally. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 213.

She [The Anima] herself is the archetype of mere life that leads into experiences and awareness. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 498-499.

The archetypes of the unconscious can be shown empirically to be the equivalents of religious dogmas. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 17.

In the West the archetype is filled out with the dogmatic figure of Christ; in the East, with Purusha, the Atman, Hiranyagarbha, the Buddha, and so on. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 17.

It is also a plausible hypothesis that the archetype is produced by the original life urge and then gradually grows up into consciousness-with the qualification, however, that the innermost essence of the archetype can never become wholly conscious, since it is beyond the power of imagination and language to grasp and express its deepest nature. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 313.

Your conception of the archetype as a psychic gene is quite possible. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 313.

But the ground-plan of these images [Archetypal] is universal and must be assumed to be pre-existent, since it can be demonstrated in the dreams of small children or uneducated persons who could not possibly have been influenced by tradition. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 538-539.

Thus the archetype as a phenomenon is conditioned by place and time, but on the other hand it is an invisible structural pattern independent of place and time, and like the instincts proves to be an essential component of the psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 538-539.

The combination of priest and medicine man is not so impossible as you seem to think. They are based upon a common archetype, which will assert its right provided your inner development will continue as hitherto. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 516-517.

In archetypal conceptions and instinctual perceptions, spirit and matter confront one another on the psychic plane. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 420.

If so, the position of the archetype would be located beyond the psychic sphere, analogous to the position of physiological instinct, which is immediately rooted in the stuff of the organism and, with its psychoid nature, forms the bridge to matter in general. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 420.

The dreams of early childhood contain mythological motifs which the children could not possibly know of. These archetypal images are the primeval knowledge of mankind; we are born with this inheritance, though this fact is not obvious and only becomes visible in indirect ways. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIV, Page 119.

Consciousness thus is torn from its roots and no longer able to appeal to the authority of the archetypal images; it has Promethean freedom, it is true, but also a godless hybris. It does indeed soar above the earth, even above mankind, but the danger of an upset is there, not for every individual, to be sure, but collectively for the weak. Carl Jung, The Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 85.

This system of images is also born in human beings, it is the archetypes, the potential force in man, but it only comes to the surface when the moment for it is ripe, then the archetype functions as an urge, like an instinct. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 213.

In the collective unconscious the archetypes and the instincts are one and the same thing. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 213.

The Sambhoga-kaya corresponds exactly to the modern term collective unconscious; and the archetypal figures correspond to the Devatas of our text. ETH Lecture XIII 17Feb1939, Page 86.

The history of energetics is largely intuitive, it starts primitively as intuitions of archetypes, first they were beings, now they are mathematical formulas. Carl Jung, Lecture III, 4May1934, Page 100.

Do not allow yourself to go gray over missing my 60th birthday. The abstract number 60 means nothing at all to me. I much prefer to know, through hearing from you, what you are doing. What the European Jews are doing I already know, but what the Jews are doing on archetypal soil—that interests me extraordinarily. Carl Jung, 22Dec1935.

Anthropos: Original or primordial man, an archetypal image of wholeness in alchemy, religion and Gnostic philosophy. There is in the unconscious an already existing wholeness, the "homo totus" of the Western and the Chên-yên (true man) of Chinese alchemy, the round primordial being who represents the greater man within, the Anthropos, who is akin to God. Carl Jung, CW 14, par. 152.

I tried to give a general view of the structure of the unconscious. Its contents, the archetypes, are as it were the hidden foundations of the conscious mind, or, to use another comparison, the roots which the psyche has sunk not only in the earth in the narrower sense but in the world in general. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 31.

Archetypes are systems of readiness for action, and at the same time images and emotions. They are inherited with the brain structure—indeed, they are its psychic aspect. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 31.

We shall have to reckon with quite unusual difficulties in dealing with it, and the first of these is that the archetype and its function must be understood far more as a part of man's prehistoric, irrational psychology than as a rationally conceivable system. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 31.

Phylogenetically as well as ontogenetically we have grown up out of the dark confines of the earth; hence the factors that affected us most close*ly became archetypes, and it is these primordial images which influence us most directly, and therefore seem to be the most powerful. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 32.

I would like to suggest that every psychic reaction which is out of proportion to its precipitating cause should be investigated as to whether it may be conditioned at the same time by an archetype. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 32.

We should make the archetype responsible only for a definite, minimal, normal degree of fear; any pronounced increase, felt to be abnormal, must have special causes. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 33.

Arrangement in triads is an archetype in the history of religion, which in all probability formed the basis of the Christian Trinity. Carl Jung, CW 11, Page 113.

The body as a whole, so it seems to me, is a pattern of behavior, and man as a whole is an Archetype. Carl Jung, Letter to Medard Boss, 27June1947.

The archetypes. . . are not intellectually invented. They are always there and they produce certain processes in the unconscious one could best compare with myths. That's the origin of mythology. Mythology is a dramatization of a series of images that formulate the life of the archetypes. C.G. Jung Speaking, Page 348.

Music is dealing with such deep archetypal material with boots as swift as and those who play don't realize this. Yet, used therapeutically from this level music should be an essential part of every analysis Carl Jung, J.E.T., Page 126.

In our ordinary mind we are in the worlds of time and space and within the separate individual psyche. In the state of the archetype we are in the collective psyche, in a world-system whose space-time categories are relatively or absolutely abolished. Carl Jung, Letters Volume II, P. 399.

We must, however, constantly bear in mind that what we mean by "archetype" is in itself irrepresentable, but has effects which make visualisation of it possible, namely the archetypal images and ideas. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 214.

The archetype is an irrepresentable factor, a "disposition" which starts functioning at a given moment in the development of the human mind and arranges the material of consciousness in definite patterns. Carl Jung, CW 11, Page 148.

The archetypes are complementary and equivalents of the "outside" world and therefore possess "cosmic" character. Thins explains their numinosity and godlikeness. Carl Jung, CW 9, Page 196.

The word "type" means "blow" or "imprint", thus an archetype presupposes an imprinter. Carl Jung, CW 12, Page 14.

We simply do not know the ultimate derivation of the archetype any more than we know the origin of the psyche. Carl Jung, CW 12, Page 14.

The archetype signifies that particular spiritual reality which cannot be attained unless life is lived in consciousness. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 21.

Archetypes are images in the soul that represent the course of one's life. One part of the archetypal content is of material and the other of spiritual origin. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 21.

When all the archetypal images are properly placed in a hierarchy, when that which must be below is below, and that which must be above is above, our final condition can recapture our original blissful state. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 21.

Archetypes are not matters of faith; we can know that they are there. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 21.

When an archetypal event approaches the sphere of consciousness, it also manifests itself in the outer life. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 55.

When an archetype is constellated it can appear in the inner and the outer world at the same time. Each distinct case is an example of creation. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 55.

There is a story that says that when Mohammed ascended into Heaven the stone in the Temple of Jerusalem wanted to go too. The archetype manifests itself in the outer world as sympathia. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 56.

I should like to study the theory of numbers. What is a number, an entity, a sequence, an archetype? We think we can perceive and grasp a number logically and suddenly it behaves quite differently from the way we expected. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 55.

That is the first archetype [Oedipus] Freud discovered; the first and the only one. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 13.

The anima is an archetypal form, expressing the fact that a man has a minority of feminine or female genes. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 18.

It is a peculiar fact that the archetype of the anima plays a very great role in Western literature, French and Anglo-Saxon. But in Germany, there are exceedingly few examples in German literature where the anima plays a role. . . . Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 21.

Nobody can say where man ends. That is the beauty of it, you know. It is very interesting. The unconscious of man can reach—God knows where. There we are going to make discoveries. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 21.

It [The Mandala] is the archetype of inner order; and it is always used in that sense, either to make arrangements of the many, many aspects of the universe, a world scheme, or to arrange the complicated aspects of our psyche into a scheme. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 21.

A mandala spontaneously appears as a compensatory archetype during times of disorder. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 21.

. . . what is meant [by the child archetype] is the boy who is born from the maturity of the adult man, and not the unconscious child we would like to remain. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 742.

The mandala is an archetypal image whose occurrence is attested throughout the ages. It signifies the wholeness of the Self. This circular image represents the wholeness of the psychic ground or, to put it in mythic terms, the divinity incarnate in man. Carl Jung, MDR, Page 334-335.

Primeval history is the story of the beginning of consciousness by differentiation from the archetypes. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 32.

the Church severed the coniunctio from the physical realm altogether, and natural philosophy turned it into an abstract theoria. These developments meant the gradual transformation of the archetype into a psychological process which, in theory, we can call a combination of conscious and unconscious processes. Carl Jung, CW 9i, para. 295.

It is a great mistake in practice to treat an archetype as if it were a mere name, word, or concept. It is far more than that: it is a piece of life, an image connected with the living individual by the bridge of emotion. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 96.

Archetypes are not mere concepts but are entities, exactly like whole numbers, which are not merely aids to counting but possess irrational qualities that do not result from the concept of counting, as for instance the prime numbers and their behaviour. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 22.

Inasmuch as karma means either a personal or at least an individual inherited determinant of character and fate, it represents the individually differentiated manifestation of the instinctual behaviour pattern, i.e., the general archetypal disposition. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 287-289.

You see, the archetype is a force. It has an autonomy, and it can suddenly seize you. It is like a seizure. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 17
Nobody has ever seen an archetype, and nobody has ever seen an atom either. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 53-55.

When I say "atom" I am talking of the model made of it; when I say "archetype" I am talking of ideas corresponding to it, but never of the thing-in itself, which in both cases is a transcendental mystery. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 53-55.

One must therefore assume that the effective archetypal ideas, including our model of the archetype, rest on something actual even though unknowable, just as the model of the atom rests on certain unknowable qualities of matter. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 53-55.

Nobody would assume that the biological pattern is a philosophical assumption like the Platonic idea or a Gnostic hypostasis. The same is true of the archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 152.

Emotions follow an instinctual pattern, i.e., an archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47. Purple

It looks as if the collective character of the archetypes would manifest itself also in meaningful coincidences, i.e., as if the archetype (or the collective unconscious) were not only inside the individual, but also outside, viz. in one’s environment, as if sender and percipient were in the same psychic space, or in the same time (in precognition cases). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47.

Where an archetype prevails, we can expect synchronistic phenomena, i.e., acausal correspondences, which consist in a parallel arrangement of facts in time. The arrangement is not the effect of a cause. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47.

Divine favour and daemonic evil or danger are archetypal. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 52-53.

Just as the physicist regards the atom as a model, I regard archetypal ideas as sketches for the purpose of visualizing the unknown background. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 64-65.

No doubt the archetypes are present everywhere, but there is also a widespread resistance to this "mythology." That is why even the gospel has to be "demythologized." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 83-86.

I fully realize that Catholic analysts are faced with very particular problems which, on the one hand, are an aggravation of the work which is difficult in itself already, yet on the other hand, an asset, since you start within a world of thought and feeling based upon archetypal realities. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 100-101.

This archetypal drama is at the same time exquisitely psychological and historical. We are actually living in the time of the splitting of the world and of the invalidation of Christ. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 133-138

I never look for archetypes and don't try to find them; enough when they come all by themselves. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 159-161.
The "archetype" is practically synonymous with the biological concept of the behaviour pattern. But as the latter designates external phenomena chiefly, I have chosen the term "archetype" for "psychic pattern." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 151-154.

Nobody would assume that the biological pattern is a philosophical assumption like the Platonic idea or a Gnostic hypostasis. The same is true of the archetype. Its autonomy is an observable fact and not a philosophical hypostasis. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 151-154.

My God-image corresponds to an autonomous archetypal pattern. Therefore I can experience God as if he were an object, but I need not assume that it is the only image. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 151-154.

I have never claimed f.i. to know much about the nature of archetypes, how they originated or whether they originated at all, whether they are inherited or planted by the grace of God in every individual anew. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 184-187.

Archetypes, in spite of their conservative nature, are not static but in a continuous dramatic flux. Thus the self as a monad or continuous unit would be dead. But it lives inasmuch as it splits and unites again. There is no energy without opposites! Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 163-174

In the two Christian churches, the importance and the psychological significance of rites are not generally appreciated; to some people they are acts of faith or of habit; to others, acts of magic. But in reality there is a third aspect: the aspect of the rite as a symbolic act, giving expression to the archetypal expectation of the unconscious. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 208-210.

On the other hand "God" is a verbal image, a predicate or mythologem founded on archetypal premises which underlie the structure of the psyche as images of the instincts ("instinctual patterns"). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 254-256.

"God" in this sense is a biological, instinctual and elemental "model," an archetypal "arrangement" of individual, contemporary and historical contents, which, despite its numinosity, is and must be exposed to intellectual and moral criticism, just like the image of the "evolving" God or of Yahweh or the Summum Bonum or the Trinity. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 254-256.

I don't know whether the archetype is "true" or not. I only know that it lives and that I have not made it. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.
With increasing approximation to the centre there is a corresponding depotentiation of the ego in favour of the influence of the "empty" centre, which is certainly not identical with the archetype but is the thing the archetype points to. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

As the Chinese would say, the archetype is only the name of Tao, not Tao itself. Just as the Jesuits translated Tao as "God," so we can describe the "emptiness" of the centre as "God." Emptiness in this sense doesn't mean "absence" or "vacancy," but something unknowable which is endowed with the highest intensity. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

The up surging archetypal material is the stuff of which mental illnesses are made. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

They [Archetypes] guide but they also mislead; how much I reserve my criticism for them you can see in Answer to Job, where I subject archetypal statements to what you call "blasphemous" criticism. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

The reason why mythic statements invariably lead to word-magic is that the archetype possesses a numinous autonomy and has a psychic life of its own. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

I cannot prove the identity of an historical personage with a psychological archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 267-268.

The archetype is not just the formal condition for mythological statements but an overwhelming force comparable to nothing I know. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

Christ is not an archetype but a personification of the archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 304-306.

The spiritual (as contrasted with the worldly) Messiah, Christ, Mithras, Osiris, Dionysos, Buddha are all visualizations or personifications of the irrepresentable archetype which, borrowing from Ezekiel and Daniel, I call the Anthropos. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 304-306.

The archetype itself (nota bene not the archetypal representation!) is psychoid,i.e., transcendental and thus relatively beyond the categories of number, space, and time. That means, it approximates to oneness and immutability. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 317-319.

The fact is that the numbers pre-existing in nature are presumably the most fundamental archetypes, being the very matrix of all others. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 325-327.

Like all the inner foundations of judgment, numbers are archetypal by nature and consequently partake of the psychic qualities of the archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 327-329.

So far as the integration of personality components are concerned, it must be borne in mind that the ego-personality as such does not include the archetypes but is only influenced by them; for the archetypes are universal and belong to the collective psyche over which the ego has no control. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 341-343.

Thus animus and anima are images representing archetypal figures which mediate between consciousness and the unconscious. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 341-343.

By these deeper levels I mean the determining archetypes which are supraordinate to, or underlie, individual development and presumably are responsible for the supreme meaning of individual life. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 344-345

The archetypes have a life of their own which extends through the centuries and gives the aeons their peculiar stamp. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 344-345

Since the archetypes are the instinctual forms of mental behaviour it is quite certain that, inasmuch as animals possess a "mind," their mind also follows archetypal patterns, and presumably the same that are operative in the human mind. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 372-373

As we do not know the actual status of an archetype in the unconscious and only know it in that form in which it becomes conscious, it is impossible to describe the human archetype and to compare it to an animal archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 372-373

If I say that we do not know "the ultimate derivation of the archetype," I mean that we are unable to observe and describe the archetype in its unconscious condition. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 372-373

Yet in the archetypal unimaginable event that forms the basis of conscious apperception, a is b, stench is perfume, sex is amor Dei, as inevitably as the conclusion that God is the complexio oppositorum. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 392-396

This, too,[UFO's] is an expression of something that has always claimed my deepest interest and my greatest attention: the manifestation of archetypes, or archetypal forms, in all the phenomena of life: in biology, physics, history, folklore, and art, in theology and mythology, in parapsychology, as well as in the symptoms of insane patients and neurotics, and finally in the dreams and life of every individual man and woman. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 397-398.

Or in other words: there is no outside to the collective psyche. In our ordinary mind we are in the worlds of time and space and within the separate individual psyche. In the state of the archetype we are in the collective psyche, in a world-system whose space-time categories are relatively or absolutely abolished. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 398-400

Our intellectual means reach only as far as archetypal experiences, but within that sphere we are not the motors, we are the moved objects. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 398-400

The experimental activation of an archetypal situation has to be explained causally, since there is no possibility of explaining it otherwise and no reason to do so. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 420-421

I can also say, therefore, that in itself the archetype is an irrepresentable configuration whose existence can be established empirically in a multitude of forms. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

At the same time the archetype is always of an objective nature since it is an a priori ideational pattern which is everywhere identical with itself. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

The archetype, then, is a modality that represents visual forms, and synchronicity is another modality representing events. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

With regard to the dynamic processes of the unconscious, he can also determine that the further characteristic of synchronicity exists; in other words, that archetypes have something to do with synchronicity. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

In so far as both modalities, archetype and synchronicity, belong primarily to the realm of the psychic, we are justified in concluding that they are psychic phenomena. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

Synchronicity is not a name that characterizes an "organizing principle," but, like the word "archetype," it characterizes a modality. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

Concerning archetypes, migration and verbal transmission are self-evident, except in those cases where individuals reproduce archetypal forms outside of all possible external influences (good examples in childhood dreams!). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 450-451

Since archetypes are instinctual forms, they follow a universal pattern, as do the functions of the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 450-451

Why should the psyche be the only living thing that is outside laws of determination? We follow archetypal patterns as the weaver-bird does. This assumption is far more probable than the mystical idea of absolute freedom. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 450-451

The assumption, therefore, that the (psychoid) archetypes are inherited is for many reasons far more probable than that they are handed down by tradition. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 450-451

The childish prejudice against inherited archetypes is mostly due to the fact that one thinks archetypes are representations; but in reality they are preferences or "penchants," likes and dislikes. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 450-451

It is legitimate to ask yourself what it is that carries the qualities of the archetypal and synchronistic, and to pose the question, for instance, of the intrinsic nature of the psyche or of matter. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

Therefore Elihu in spite of his fundamental truth belongs to those foolish Jungians, who, as you suggest, avoid the shadow and make for the archetypes, i.e., the "divine equivalents," which by the way are nothing but escape camouflage according to the personalistic theory. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546

In some cases of psychotherapeutic treatment, contact with the sphere of the archetypes can produce the kind of constellation that underlies synchronicity. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 498-500

In this chaos of chance, synchronistic phenomena were probably at work, operating both with and against the known laws of nature to produce, in archetypal moments, syntheses which appear to us miraculous. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 493-496

Now whether these archetypes, as I have called these pre-existent and pre-forming psychic factors, are regarded as "mere" instincts or as daemons and gods makes no difference at all to their dynamic effect. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488

But it often makes a mighty difference whether they [Archetypes] are undervalued as "mere" instincts or overvalued as gods. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 482-488

Another common misunderstanding is that I derive my idea of "archetypes" from Philo or Dionysius Areopagita, or St. Augustine. It is based solely upon empirical data, viz . upon the astonishing fact that products of the unconscious in modern individuals can almost literally coincide with symbols occurring in all peoples and all times, beyond the possibility of tradition or migration, for which I have given numerous proofs. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 500-502

A certain interplay of round and square seems to be indispensable. This is about all I can tell you about "architectural archetypes." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 509-510

I call them archetypes, i.e., instinctual forms of mental functioning. They are not inherited ideas, but mentally expressed instincts, forms and not contents. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 520-523

The archetypality of Communism is on the one hand the common ownership of goods, as in primitive societies, and on the other hand the unlimited power of the tribal chieftain. Ostensibly all goods belong to all. Everybody has his share. But since all are represented by one man, the chieftain, only one man has control of everything. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 513

It may be a prejudice to think that the world of human ideas is conditioned by archetypes, but it is also a means of grasping something of the psychology of another organism. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

Thus the environment delivers us from the power of the archetypes, and the archetypes deliver us from the crushing influence of the environment. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

For me the archetype means: an image of a probable sequence of events, an habitual current of psychic energy. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

Therefore Elihu in spite of his fundamental truth belongs to those foolish Jungians, who, as you suggest, avoid the shadow and make for the archetypes, i.e., the "divine equivalents," which by the way are nothing but escape camouflage according to the personalistic theory. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 544-546

Whether he understands them or not, man must remain conscious of the world of the archetypes, because in it he is still a part of nature and is connected to his own roots. Carl Jung, Symbols of Transformation, Page 23.

If I speak of the collective unconscious I don't assume it as a principle,
I only give a name to the totality of observable facts, i.e., archetypes. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567

Just like the animal, man too is caught up in the conflict between archetypal drives and environmental conditions. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 504-506

The starry vault of heaven is in truth the open book of cosmic projection, in which are reflected the mythologems, i.e., the archetypes. In this vision astrology and alchemy, the two classical functionaries of the psychology of the collective unconscious, join hands. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 195, Para 392.

Psychologically, however, the archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415

If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation. The archetypes are sources of energy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

They [ESP] were puzzling to me inasmuch as archetypal constellations are usually more or less momentary and don't extend over longer periods. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 576-577

As you have found out for yourself, the I Ching consists of readable archetypes, and it very often presents not only a picture of the actual situation but also of the future, exactly like dreams. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 584-585

Your equation of certain archetypal ideas with fundamental physiological processes has my undivided applause. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 617-620

I would like to emphasize that it very often does not depend upon the use one makes of an image, but rather upon the use the archetypes make of ourselves, which decides the question whether it will be artistic creation or a change of religious attitude. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 625-626

I see that many of my pupils indulge in a superstitious belief in our so-called " free will" and pay little attention to the fact that the archetypes are, as a rule, autonomous entities, and not only material subject to our choice. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 625-626

I was especially interested in palaeontology; you see, my life work in historical comparative psychology is like palaeontology. That is the study of the archetypes of the animals, and this is the study of the archetypes in the soul. The Eohippus is the archetype of the modern horse, the archetypes are like the fossil animals. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218

The archetype of the individual is the Self. The Self is all embracing. God is a circle whose center is everywhere and whose circumference is nowhere. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218

. . the individual in society may be understood as a piece of the archetype, a piece that has been differentiated out of the collective representation. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218

You don’t see the archetypal world, but live like a pressed flower in the pages of a book, a mere memory of yourself. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 972.

The great lure of the archetypal situation is that you yourself suddenly cease to be. You cease to think and are acted upon as though carried by a great river with no end. You are suddenly eternal. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 240.

The indispensable condition is that you have an archetypal experience, and to have that means that you have surrendered to life. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 972

The archetype itself is an exaggeration and it reaches beyond the confines of humanity. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1343.

For the archetype is nothing human; no archetype is properly human. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1343.

Therefore the appearance of an archetype in our psychology is always a moment of the greatest danger as well as the greatest hope. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 67

When someone is able to perform the art of touching on the archetypal, he can play on the souls of people like on the strings of a piano. Carl Jung, Children’s Dream Seminar, Page 150

The archetypes are the numinous, structural elements of the psyche and possess a certain autonomy and specific energy which enables them to attract, out of the conscious mind, those contents which are best suited to themselves. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 344.

Experience of the archetype is not only impressive, it seizes and possesses the whole personality, and is naturally productive of faith. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 344.

A host of possibilities is still embedded in the archetypes, in the realm of the Mothers. The abundance of possibilities eludes our comprehension. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 22

The origin of the archetypes is a crucial question. Where space and time are relative it is not possible to speak of developments in time.
Everything is present, altogether and all at once, in the constant presence of the Pleroma. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 22

The archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415.

It seems to me probable that the real nature of the archetype is not capable of being made conscious, that it is transcendent, on which account I call it psychoid. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 417

Archetypes probably represent typical situations in life. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 254

The deposit of man's whole ancestral experience—so rich in emotional imagery—of father, mother, child, husband and wife, of the magic personality, of dangers to body and soul, has exalted this group of archetypes into the supreme regulating principles of religious and even of political life, in unconscious recognition of their tremendous psychic power. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 337

Meaningful coincidences—which are to be distinguished from meaningless chance groupings—therefore seem to rest on an archetypal foundation. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 846

The archetype—let us never forget this—is a psychic organ present in all of us. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 271

Man must remain conscious of the world of the archetypes, because in it he is still a part of Nature and is connected with his own roots. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 174

The archetypes are imperishable elements of the unconscious, but they change their shape continually. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 301

When, towards middle life, the last gleam of childhood illusion fades—this it must be owned is true only of an almost ideal life, for many go as children to their graves—then the archetype of the mature man or woman emerges from the parental imago: an image of man as woman has known him from the beginning of time, and an image of woman that man carries within him eternally. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 74

Empirically considered, however, the archetype did not ever come into existence as a phenomenon of organic life, but entered into the picture with life itself. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 222.

Holiness is also revelatory: it is the illuminative power emanating from an archetypal figure. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 225.

The archetype is, so to speak, an "eternal" presence, and it is only a question of whether it is perceived by the conscious mind or not. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 329

It is certainly a difficult undertaking to discover connecting links between dogma and immediate experience of psychological archetypes, but a study of natural symbols of the unconscious gives us the necessary raw material. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 148.

In a very generalizing way we can therefore define them [Archetypes] as attributes of the creator. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 606.

They[Archetypes] are primordial psychic experiences which very often give patients access again to blocked religious truths. I have also had this experience myself. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 56-57

His [Freud] is the honour of having discovered the first archetype, the Oedipus complex. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 524-527

Your dream unquestionably refers to the archetypal problem of the extrusion of the soul from the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

No, the Virgin was the archetypal figure of the soul of man, the anima, and it is only in the soul of man that God can be born, where else could it be? E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 32

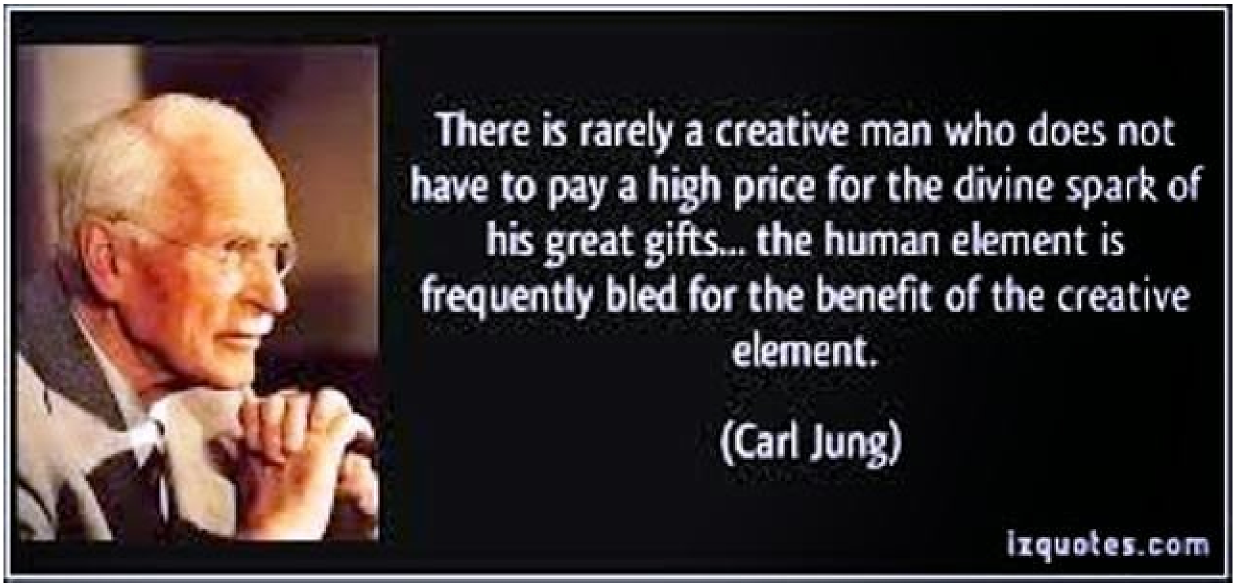
The shadow can represent the whole of the unconscious – that is both personal and archetypal contents – or just the personal material which was in the background and not recognised, not wanted. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 55

He [Jung] said he had learned never to start an interview beyond a few pleasantries – ‘How are you?’ – but to wait for the patient, because the instincts, the archetypes, lie in between and we don’t know what may be there. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Page 55

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/5825e-12barchetypes.jpg`

Carl Jung on the “Creative Element." (2019-12-13 04:42)

[1]



There is rarely a creative man who does not have to pay a high price for the divine spark of his great gifts... the human element is frequently bled for the benefit of the creative element.

(Carl Jung)

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Dr. Tochtermann

Dear Colleague, 13 January 1940

By the "creative element" you probably mean a person’s creative faculty.

Your question as to whether this faculty is present from the beginning is not easy to answer.

There are undoubtedly cases where one can take it as certain that it was present from the start, but in other cases it seems to develop in the course of life.

I personally incline to the view that this faculty, like everything else, was present from the start.

Your second question, regarding the relation between creativity and the mother complex, can be answered as follows: A creative person who has not yet developed this faculty sufficiently will generally have a mother complex, which does not mean that anyone with a mother complex is also creative.

So when a mother complex is resolved by analysis, in one case a creative person will emerge, in another a timid little boy who would rather have hidden behind his mother all his life. In the first case the mother complex is unreal, in the other it is real.

With collegial regards,

Yours sincerely,

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/cda96-gift.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1Y7SQZH4AJ9M5&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576233009&sprefix=jung+le%`

Carl Jung and the Gnostic Anima. (2019-12-13 04:59)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

The Gnostics already knew about the transformations of the anima.

In their writings we find a kind of development of the anima, from its most primitive stage up to wisdom.

The most primitive anima is Chawwa, the earth.

She is Eve, who represents the all-motherly and the receiving.

At this stage, the anima is still a purely sexual being, a kind of earth goddess in a nearly prehuman developmental form.

A further stage is Helen.

According to a Gnostic legend, Simon Magus discovered a girl in a brothel in Tyrus (Phoenicia), in whom he recognized a reincarnation of Helen of Troy, and whom he therefore named after her.

Helen of Troy was an adulteress and the lover of many a hero of those times.

She was actually the type of the “femme qui se fait suivre.”

The link between these two women is that both of them carry a light within them, regardless of their bad reputation.

Helen of Troy means beauty to the man, the Gnostic Helena ennoia (consciousness).

At this stage, man still experiences the anima as a collective figure, but a certain concentration on the one woman has already taken place.

This is a very human stage, partly conducive to cultural development.

The next stage of the anima is Mary, who was also an extraordinary person.

She was the lover of the Holy Spirit and so become the mother of God.

The humiliation by illegitimate motherhood is compensated by the symbolism of her being the mother of God.

Although this stage still bears human traits, it already points to the spiritual.

For the Gnostics, the highest developmental stage of the anima is Sophia.

She is one-half of the divine syzygy (Greek, “pair,” “yoked together”; conjunction and opposition of sun and moon).

She is the most spiritual form of the universal mother.

Any human or personal aspect has disappeared.

The anima as a friend or soror mystica has always played a great role in history.

In the cours d'amour of René d'Anjou she even takes precedence over the wife.

The term maîtresse actually means mistress or master.

In the Middle Ages, for example, the worship of the anima led to courtly love, in which the knight was committed to his lady and was at her service.

In later history we know of women such as Madame de Maintenon, Ninon de Lenclos, or Madame de Guyon.

The latter was a woman of the highest spiritual eroticism and of a strangely deep wisdom.

She deserved being called a saint.

It is no sign of culture if a woman is only a daughter, or only a pregnant mother, or only a whore.

The primitives and also the apes do act out this onesidedness.

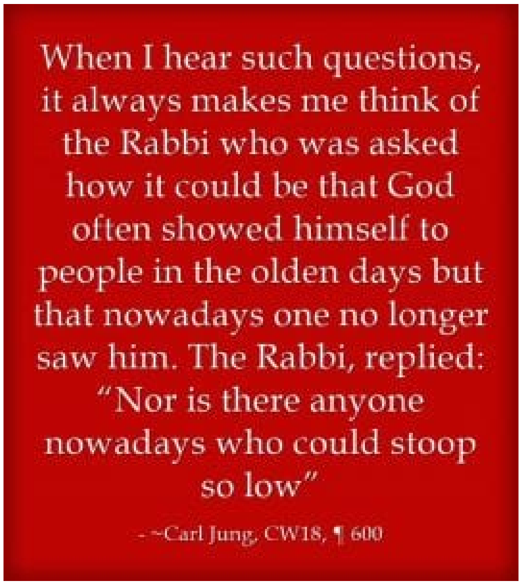
But should she become the femme inspiratrice, oscillating between goddess and whore, representing all the doubtfulness and diversity of life, the highest skills and the highest Eros are called for.

Such women are manifestations of a much more developed culture, and this was known in the Middle Ages and also in Greece in its heyday.

You know, of course, about Aspasia, the mistress of Pericles and of many cultured men of her time. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 320-321.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/0cdc9-gnostic.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2MOKC56Z5STHP&keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1576233124&s`

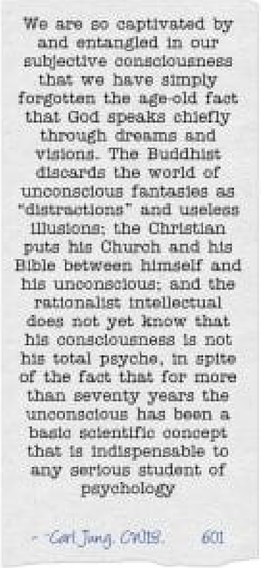
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-13 05:11)



When I hear such questions, it always makes me think of the Rabbi who was asked how it could be that God often showed himself to people in the olden days but that nowadays one no longer saw him. The Rabbi, replied: "Nor is there anyone nowadays who could stoop so low"

- ~Carl Jung, CW18, ¶ 600

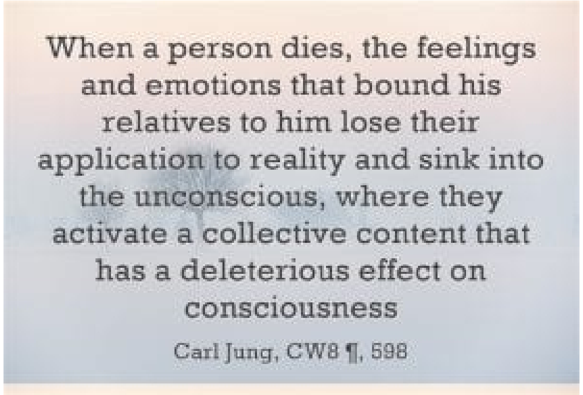
When I hear such questions, it always makes me think of the Rabbi who was asked how it could be that God often showed himself to people in the olden days but that nowadays one no longer saw him. The Rabbi, replied: "Nor is there anyone nowadays who could stoop so low" Carl Jung, CW18, Para 600



We are so captivated by and entangled in our subjective consciousness that we have simply forgotten the age-old fact that God speaks chiefly through dreams and visions. The Buddhist discards the world of unconscious fantasies as "distractions" and useless illusions; the Christian puts his Church and his Bible between himself and his unconscious; and the rationalist intellectual does not yet know that his consciousness is not his total psyche, in spite of the fact that for more than seventy years the unconscious has been a basic scientific concept that is indispensable to any serious student of psychology

- Carl Jung, CW18, 601

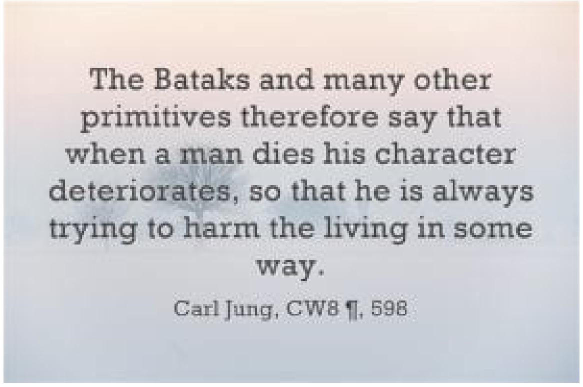
We are so captivated by and entangled in our subjective consciousness that we have simply forgotten the age-old fact that God speaks chiefly through dreams and visions. The Buddhist discards the world of unconscious fantasies as "distractions" and useless illusions; the Christian puts his Church and his Bible between himself and his unconscious; and the rationalist intellectual does not yet know that his consciousness is not his total psyche, in spite of the fact that for more than seventy years the unconscious has been a basic scientific concept that is indispensable to any serious student of psychology Carl Jung, CW18, Para 601



When a person dies, the feelings and emotions that bound his relatives to him lose their application to reality and sink into the unconscious, where they activate a collective content that has a deleterious effect on consciousness

Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 598

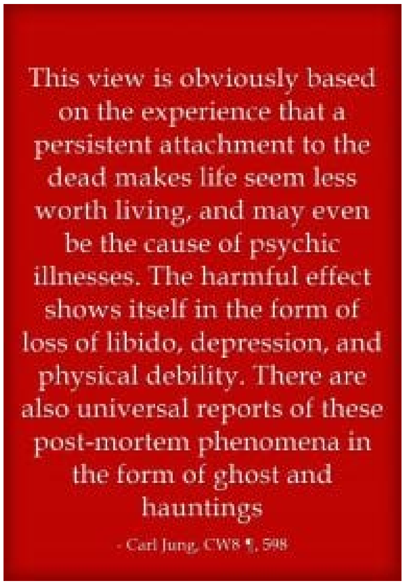
When a person dies, the feelings and emotions that bound his relatives to him lose their application to reality and sink into the unconscious, where they activate a collective content that has a deleterious effect on consciousness Carl Jung, CW 8, Para, 598



The Bataks and many other primitives therefore say that when a man dies his character deteriorates, so that he is always trying to harm the living in some way.

Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 598

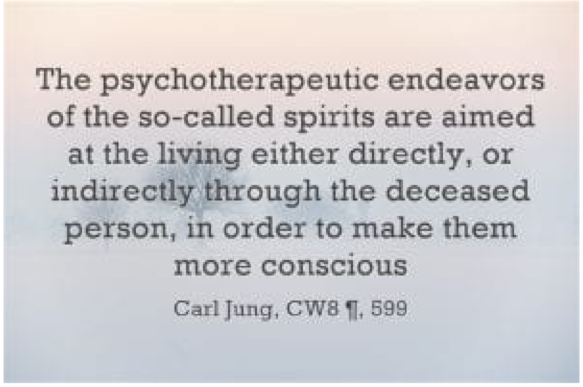
The Bataks and many other primitives therefore say that when a man dies his character deteriorates, so that he is always trying to harm the living in some way Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 598



This view is obviously based on the experience that a persistent attachment to the dead makes life seem less worth living, and may even be the cause of psychic illnesses. The harmful effect shows itself in the form of loss of libido, depression, and physical debility. There are also universal reports of these post-mortem phenomena in the form of ghost and hauntings

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 598

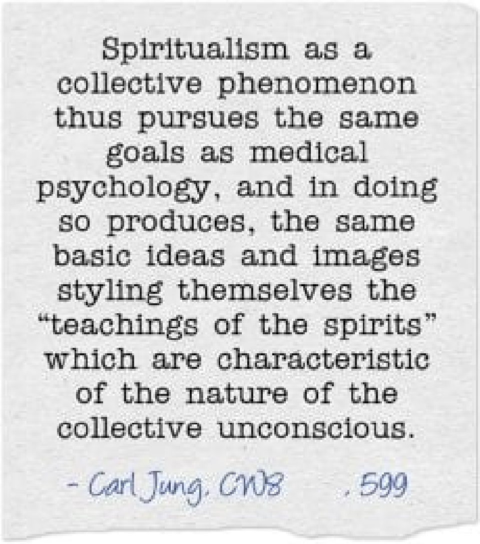
This view is obviously based on the experience that a persistent attachment to the dead makes life seem less worth living, and may even be the cause of psychic illnesses. The harmful effect shows itself in the form of loss of libido, depression, and physical debility. There are also universal reports of these post-mortem phenomena in the form of ghost and hauntings Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 598



The psychotherapeutic endeavors of the so-called spirits are aimed at the living either directly, or indirectly through the deceased person, in order to make them more conscious

Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 599

The psychotherapeutic endeavors of the so-called spirits are aimed at the living either directly, or indirectly through the deceased person, in order to make them more conscious Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 599



Spiritualism as a collective phenomenon thus pursues the same goals as medical psychology, and in doing so produces, the same basic ideas and images styling themselves the “teachings of the spirits” which are characteristic of the nature of the collective unconscious.

- Carl Jung, CW8 . 599

Spiritualism as a collective phenomenon thus pursues the same goals as medical psychology, and in doing so produces, the same basic ideas and images styling themselves the “teachings of the spirits” which are characteristic of the nature of the collective unconscious Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 599

The body cannot be understood as a mere heaping together of inert matter, but must be regarded as a material system ready for life and making life possible, with the proviso that for all its readiness it could not live without the addition of a "living being." For setting aside the possible significance of "living being," there is lacking to the body by itself something that is necessary to its life, namely a psychic factor.

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶. 605

The body cannot be understood as a mere heaping together of inert matter, but must be regarded as a material system ready for life and making life possible, with the proviso that for all its readiness it could not live without the addition of a "living being." For setting aside the possible significance of "living being," there is lacking to the body by itself something that is necessary to its life, namely a psychic factor. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 605

We know this directly from our own experience of ourselves, and indirectly from our experience of our fellow men. We also know it through our scientific study of the higher vertebrates, and, for total lack of evidence to the contrary, we must suppose that some such factor is present in lower organisms and even in plants

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶. 605

We know this directly from our own experience of ourselves, and indirectly from our experience of our fellow men. We also know it through our scientific study of the higher vertebrates, and, for total lack of evidence to the contrary, we must suppose that some such factor is present in lower organisms and even in plants Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 605

Mind and body are the expression of a single entity whose essential nature is not knowable either from its outward, material manifestation or from inner, direct perception

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶. 629

Mind and body are the expression of a single entity whose essential nature is not knowable either from its outward, material manifestation or from inner, direct perception Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 619

According to an ancient belief, man arose from the coming together of a soul and a body. It would probably be more correct to speak of an unknowable living being, concerning the ultimate nature of which nothing can be said except that it vaguely expresses the quintessence of “life”

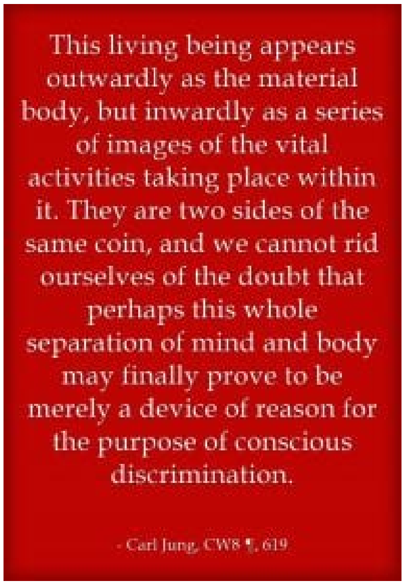
Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 619

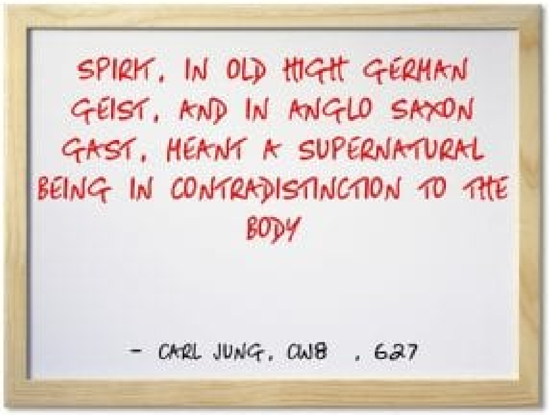
According to an ancient belief, man arose from the coming together of a soul and a body. It would probably be more correct to speak of an unknowable living being, concerning the ultimate nature of which nothing can be said except that it vaguely expresses the quintessence of “life” Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 619



This living being appears outwardly as the material body, but inwardly as a series of images of the vital activities taking place within it. They are two sides of the same coin, and we cannot rid ourselves of the doubt that perhaps this whole separation of mind and body may finally prove to be merely a device of reason for the purpose of conscious discrimination.

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 619

This living being appears outwardly as the material body, but inwardly as a series of images of the vital activities taking place within it. They are two sides of the same coin, and we cannot rid ourselves of the doubt that perhaps this whole separation of mind and body may finally prove to be merely a device of reason for the purpose of conscious discrimination Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 619



SPIRIT, IN OLD HIGH GERMAN GEIST, AND IN ANGLO SAXON GAST, MEANT A SUPERNATURAL BEING IN CONTRADISTINCTION TO THE BODY

- CARL JUNG, CW8 , 627

Spirit, in Old High German Geist, and in Anglo Saxon gast, meant a supernatural being in contradistinction to the body Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 627

According to Kluge, the fundamental meaning of the word [spirit] is not quite certain, though there seem to be connections with the Old Norse geisa, `to rage,' with the Gothic us-gaisyan, `to be beside oneself,' with the Swiss-German üf-gaistä, `to fly into a passion,' and with the English aghast

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 627

According to Kluge, the fundamental meaning of the word [spirit] is not quite certain, though there seem to be connections with the Old Norse geisa,

`to rage,' with the Gothic us-gaisyan,` to be beside oneself,' with the Swiss-German üf-gaistä, 'to fly into a passion,' and with the English aghast Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 627

These connections are substantiated by other figures of speech. For a person "to be seized with rage" means that something falls on him, sits on him, rides him, he is ridden by the devil, he is possessed, something has got into him, etc.
When we are "beside ourselves with rage" we are obviously no longer identical with ourselves, but are possessed by a daemon or spirit.

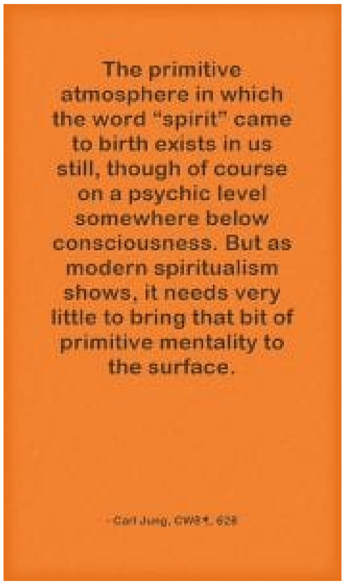
- Carl Jung, CW8 . 627

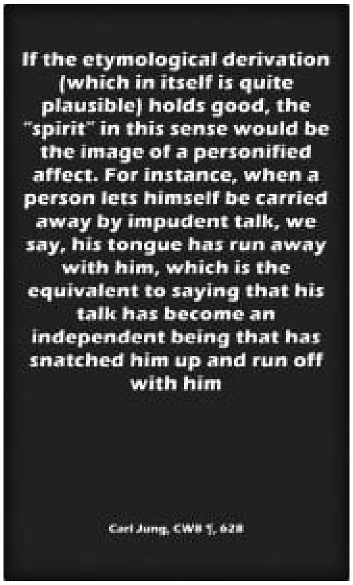
These connections are substantiated by other figures of speech. For a person "to be seized with rage" means that something falls on him, sits on him, rides him, he is ridden by the devil, he is possessed, something has got into him, etc. When we are "beside ourselves with rage" we are obviously no longer identical with ourselves, but are possessed by a daemon or spirit Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 627



The primitive atmosphere in which the word “spirit” came to birth exists in us still, though of course on a psychic level somewhere below consciousness. But as modern spiritualism shows, it needs very little to bring that bit of primitive mentality to the surface.

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 628

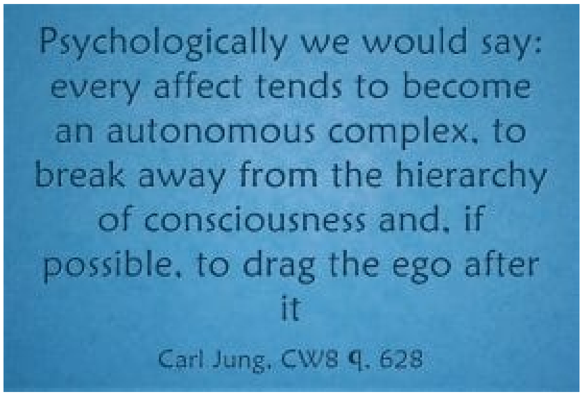
The primitive atmosphere in which the word “spirit” came to birth exists in us still, though of course on a psychic level somewhere below consciousness. But as modern spiritualism shows, it needs very little to bring that bit of primitive mentality to the surface Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 628



If the etymological derivation (which in itself is quite plausible) holds good, the “spirit” in this sense would be the image of a personified affect. For instance, when a person lets himself be carried away by impudent talk, we say, his tongue has run away with him, which is the equivalent to saying that his talk has become an independent being that has snatched him up and run off with him

Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 628

If the etymological derivation (which in itself is quite plausible) holds good, the “spirit” in this sense would be the image of a personified affect. For instance, when a person lets himself be carried away by impudent talk, we say, his tongue has run away with him, which is the equivalent to saying that his talk has become an independent being that has snatched him up and run off with him Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 628



Psychologically we would say:
every affect tends to become an autonomous complex, to break away from the hierarchy of consciousness and, if possible, to drag the ego after it

Carl Jung, CW8 ¶. 628

Psychologically we would say: every affect tends to become an autonomous complex, to break away from the hierarchy of consciousness and, if possible, to drag the ego after it Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 628

No wonder, then, that the primitive mind sees in this the activity of a strange invisible being, a spirit. Spirit in this case is the reflection of an autonomous affect, which is why the ancients, very appropriately, called the spirits imagines, `images'

- Carl Jung, CW8 . 628

No wonder, then, that the primitive mind sees in this the activity of a strange invisible being, a spirit. Spirit in this case is the reflection of an autonomous affect, which is why the ancients, very appropriately, called the spirits imagines, ‘images’ Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 628

Let us now turn to other usages of the concept of the “spirit”. The phrase “he acts in the spirit of his dead father” still has a double meaning, for here the word “spirit” refers as much to the spirit of the dead as to an attitude of mind.
Other idioms are “doing something in a new spirit,” or, “a new spirit is growing up,” meaning a renewal of mental attitude

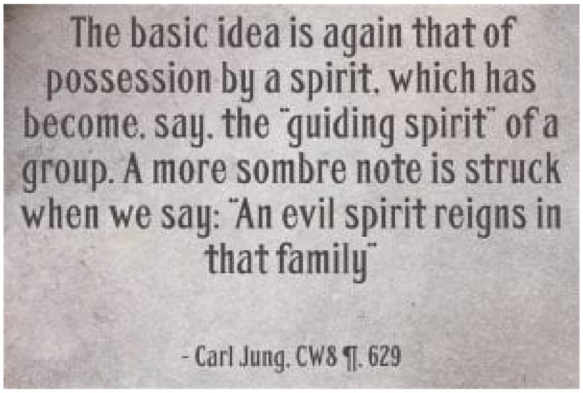
- Carl Jung, CW8 . 629

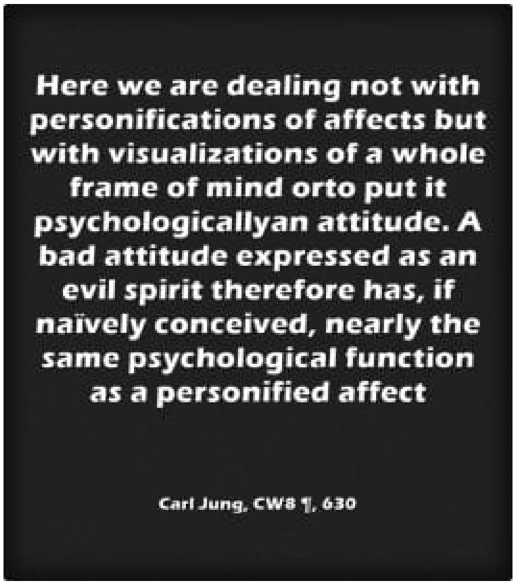
Let us now turn to other usages of the concept of the “spirit”. The phrase “he acts in the spirit of his dead father” still has a double meaning, for here the word “spirit” refers as much to the spirit of the dead as to an attitude of mind. Other idioms are “doing something in a new spirit,” or, “a new spirit is growing up,” meaning a renewal of mental attitude Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 629



The basic idea is again that of possession by a spirit, which has become, say, the "guiding spirit" of a group. A more sombre note is struck when we say: "An evil spirit reigns in that family"

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶. 629

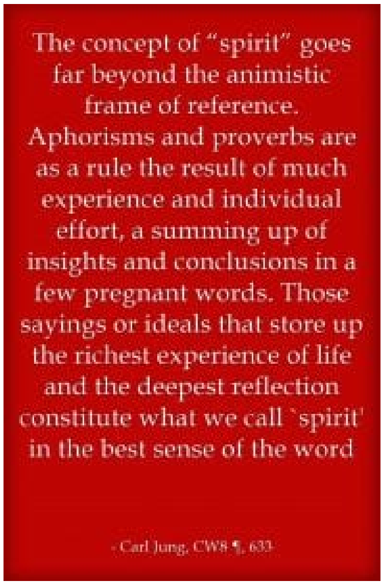
The basic idea is again that of possession by a spirit, which has become, say, the “guiding spirit” of a group. A more sombre note is struck when we say: “An evil spirit reigns in that family” Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 629



Here we are dealing not with personifications of affects but with visualizations of a whole frame of mind orto put it psychologicallyan attitude. A bad attitude expressed as an evil spirit therefore has, if naïvely conceived, nearly the same psychological function as a personified affect

Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 630

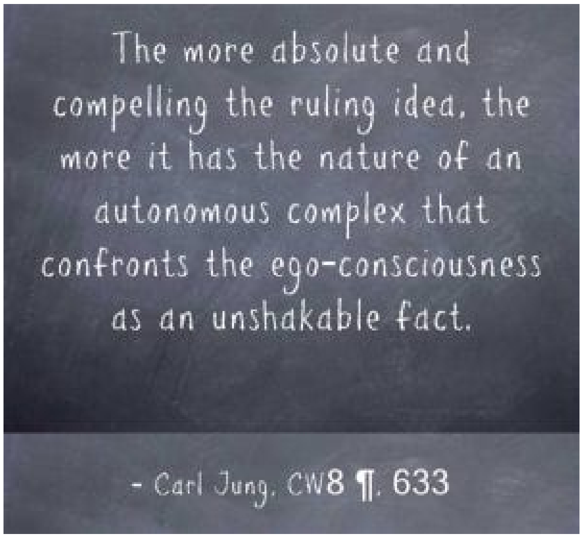
Here we are dealing not with personifications of affects but with visualizations of a whole frame of mind orto put it psychologicallyan attitude. A bad attitude expressed as an evil spirit therefore has, if naïvely conceived, nearly the same psychological function as a personified affect Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 630



The concept of “spirit” goes far beyond the animistic frame of reference. Aphorisms and proverbs are as a rule the result of much experience and individual effort, a summing up of insights and conclusions in a few pregnant words. Those sayings or ideals that store up the richest experience of life and the deepest reflection constitute what we call `spirit' in the best sense of the word

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 633

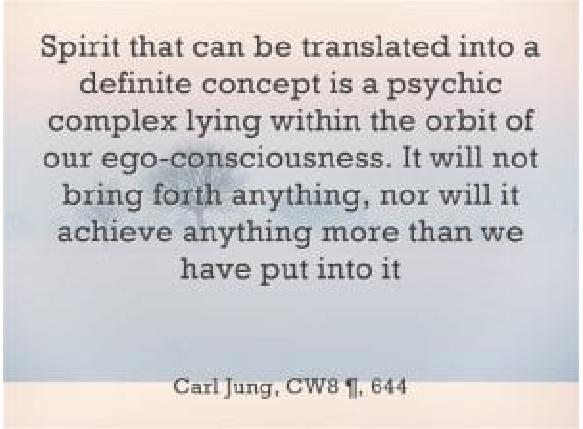
The concept of “spirit” goes far beyond the animistic frame of reference. Aphorisms and proverbs are as a rule the result of much experience and individual effort, a summing up of insights and conclusions in a few pregnant words. Those sayings or ideals that store up the richest experience of life and the deepest reflection constitute what we call ‘spirit’ in the best sense of the word Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 633



The more absolute and compelling the ruling idea, the more it has the nature of an autonomous complex that confronts the ego-consciousness as an unshakable fact.

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶. 633

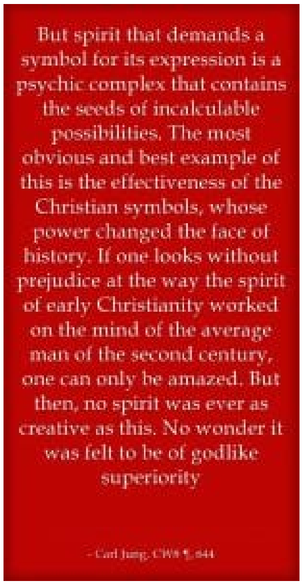
The more absolute and compelling the ruling idea, the more it has the nature of an autonomous complex that confronts the ego-consciousness as an unshakable fact Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 633



Spirit that can be translated into a definite concept is a psychic complex lying within the orbit of our ego-consciousness. It will not bring forth anything, nor will it achieve anything more than we have put into it

Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 644

Spirit that can be translated into a definite concept is a psychic complex lying within the orbit of our ego-consciousness. It will not bring forth anything, nor will it achieve anything more than we have put into it Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 644



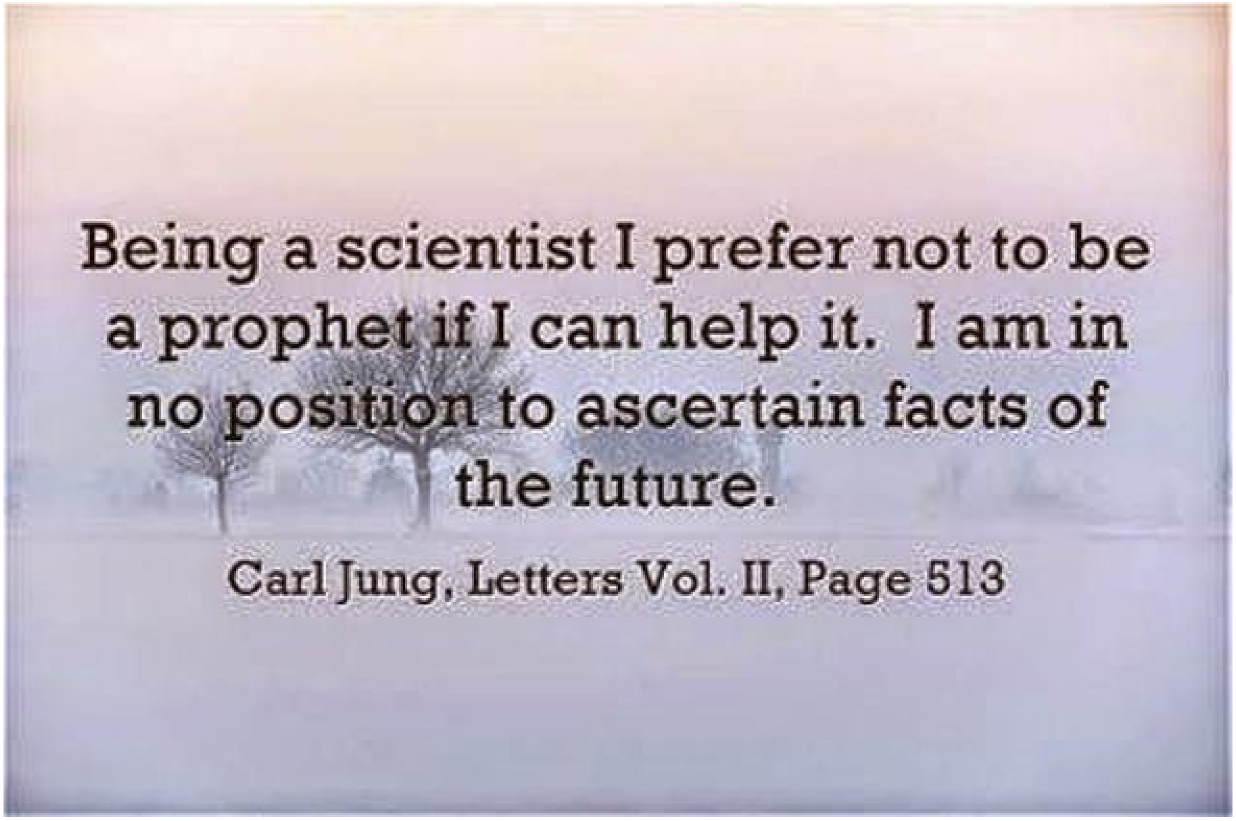
But spirit that demands a symbol for its expression is a psychic complex that contains the seeds of incalculable possibilities. The most obvious and best example of this is the effectiveness of the Christian symbols, whose power changed the face of history. If one looks without prejudice at the way the spirit of early Christianity worked on the mind of the average man of the second century, one can only be amazed. But then, no spirit was ever as creative as this. No wonder it was felt to be of godlike superiority

- Carl Jung, CW8 ¶, 644

But spirit that demands a symbol for its expression is a psychic complex that contains the seeds of incalculable possibilities. The most obvious and best example of this is the effectiveness of the Christian symbols, whose power changed the face of history. If one looks without prejudice at the way the spirit of early Christianity worked on the mind of the average man of the second century, one can only be amazed. But then, no spirit was ever as creative as this. No wonder it was felt to be of godlike superiority Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 644

Carl Jung and “It seems to be that you have very many opinions.” (2019-12-13 05:34)

[1]



Being a scientist I prefer not to be a prophet if I can help it. I am in no position to ascertain facts of the future.

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 513

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

Dear Dr. N., 6 January 1943

Permit me a few remarks on the content of your letter of 25 December 42 .

It seems to be that you have very many opinions.

But if one wants to understand something, it is advisable to have no opinions and to learn to weigh the facts carefully.

In the case of dreams, for instance, you completely overlook the fact that it is not a question of mere phenomenology but of actual determinants which can only be discovered by carefully taking up the whole dream context.

You also assume that what you know about a dream is everything that can be known about it.

But that isn’t so at all.

There are still very many things behind and besides, which one needs to know in order to understand a dream properly.

Incidentally, you can give up from the start trying to understand your own dreams, because everywhere you will strike your own blind spot.

Maybe you are of the opinion that you don’t have one, but I would advise you to drop this opinion if you want to get anywhere.

Maybe, too, you want to get nowhere and therefore your opinions are quite particularly dear to you.

One can thoroughly deceive oneself about oneself in this respect.

At all events your mental situation is thoroughly conducive to dreams about burglars.

One always has such dreams when there is something outside that wants to get inside, but is kept outside with the greatest cunning.

Dreams do not " jumble up the personalities."

On the contrary, everything is in its proper place, only you don’t understand it.

As to the dream of the mountaineer, I knew my colleague.

He, too, was a man who lived by his opinions and continually made his reckoning without the host.

In his case I didn’t need to prophesy anything at all, for I knew only too well that he was walking on air and could fall through at any moment, which was what actually happened because he took my warning for a mere opinion that could be offset by umpteen other opinions.

Unfortunately my opinion was on the side of fact while his wasn’t.

Certainly telepathy is a phenomenon conditioned by space and time.

But it demonstrates the relativity of space and time, and this is something I didn’t invent.

You might consult your countryman, Prof. Jordan in Rostock, on this question.

You seem to have very strange ideas about religion.

Rightness is not a category that can be applied to religion anyway.

Religion consists of psychic realities which one cannot say are right or wrong.

Are lice or elephants right or wrong?

It is enough that they exist.

Here you show your very defective sense for facts which you compensate by masses of opinions.

I have a scientific training and hence an entirely different standpoint which is obviously alien to you in every respect.

Thus for me religious statements are not opinions but facts that one can look at as a botanist at his plants.

The criterion is the old dictum: Quod semper quod ubique quod ab omnibus creditur.

The science of religion including the psychology of religion has to come to terms with this fact.

No opinions prevail against it.

The question of dream psychology is a very difficult topic which can be discussed with some prospect of success only if one has the necessary rudiments of knowledge together with thorough practical experience.

The fact of having dreams is not nearly enough.

You also have a digestive system but this is not nearly enough to make you a physiological chemist.

Yours very truly,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 326-328.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/1b023-facts.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=316W140N9NWXV&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576253581&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung on Saint Nicholas. (2019-12-14 04:01)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940

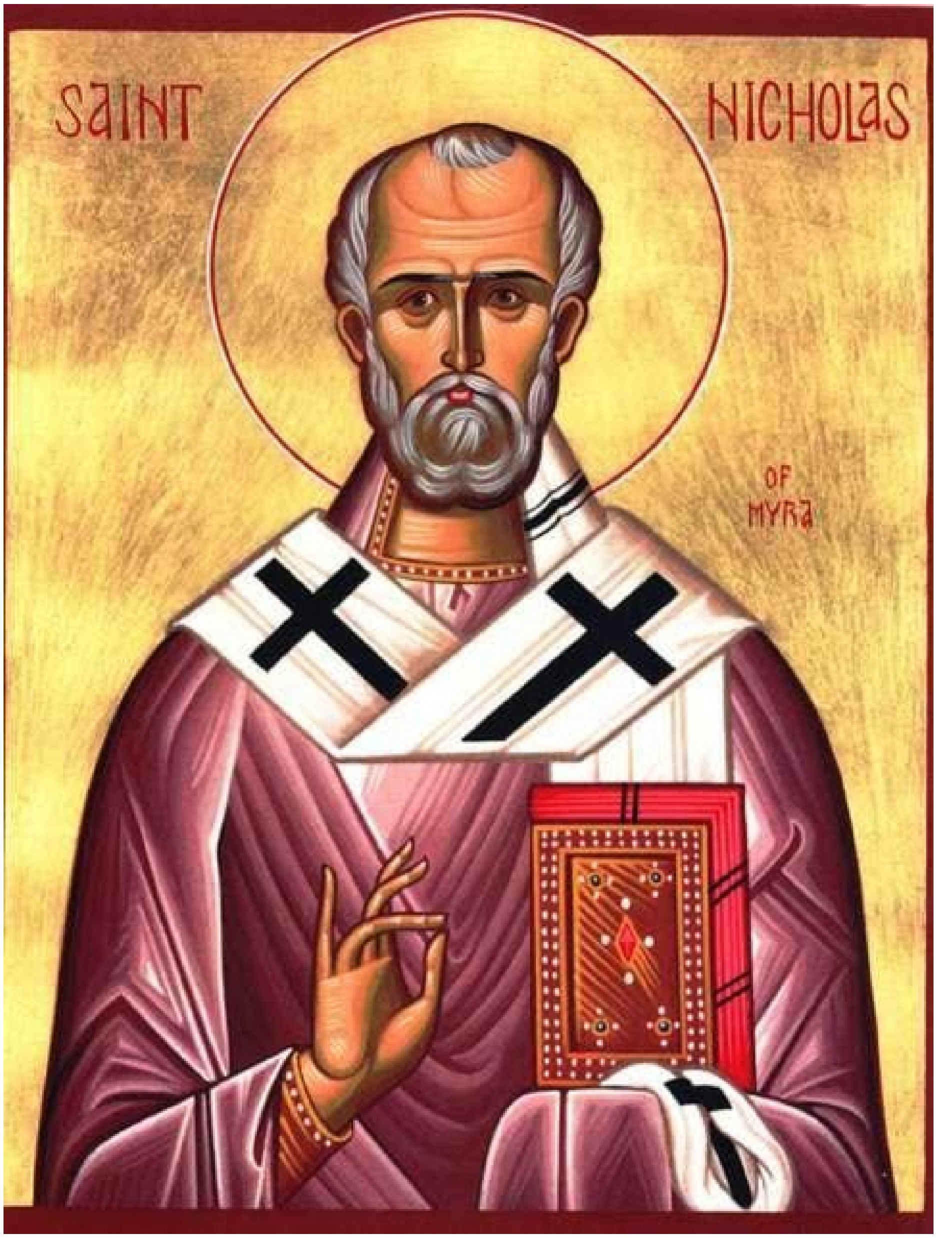
The figure of Jack Frost appears in the dream.

He is a figure from English folklore, and there are similar figures in German popular belief.

There is St. Nicholas, the icily gray and cold one; he is the old man symbolizing the beginning of winter.

St. Nicholas, however, is a benevolent figure. Why?

[3]



Participant: He’s like the Erinyes, who are evil and benevolent at the same time.

Professor Jung: Yes, often a good name stands for an evil cause.

Participant: St. Nicholas is also split into two figures. He usually is accompanied by Knecht Ruprecht, who represents the devil. He comes with a rod and a sack, in which there are the children he has already taken.

[4]
Professor Jung: Where does he carry the bad children?

Participant: Into the forest.

Professor Jung: Yes, into the forest. And what happens there? What is the forest?

Participant: It is a dark place, full of dangers.

Professor Jung:

You know the saying “To hell with him!”

[5]

Vor ſo ſchön geputzten Schuh'n hat der Krampus nichts zu tun.

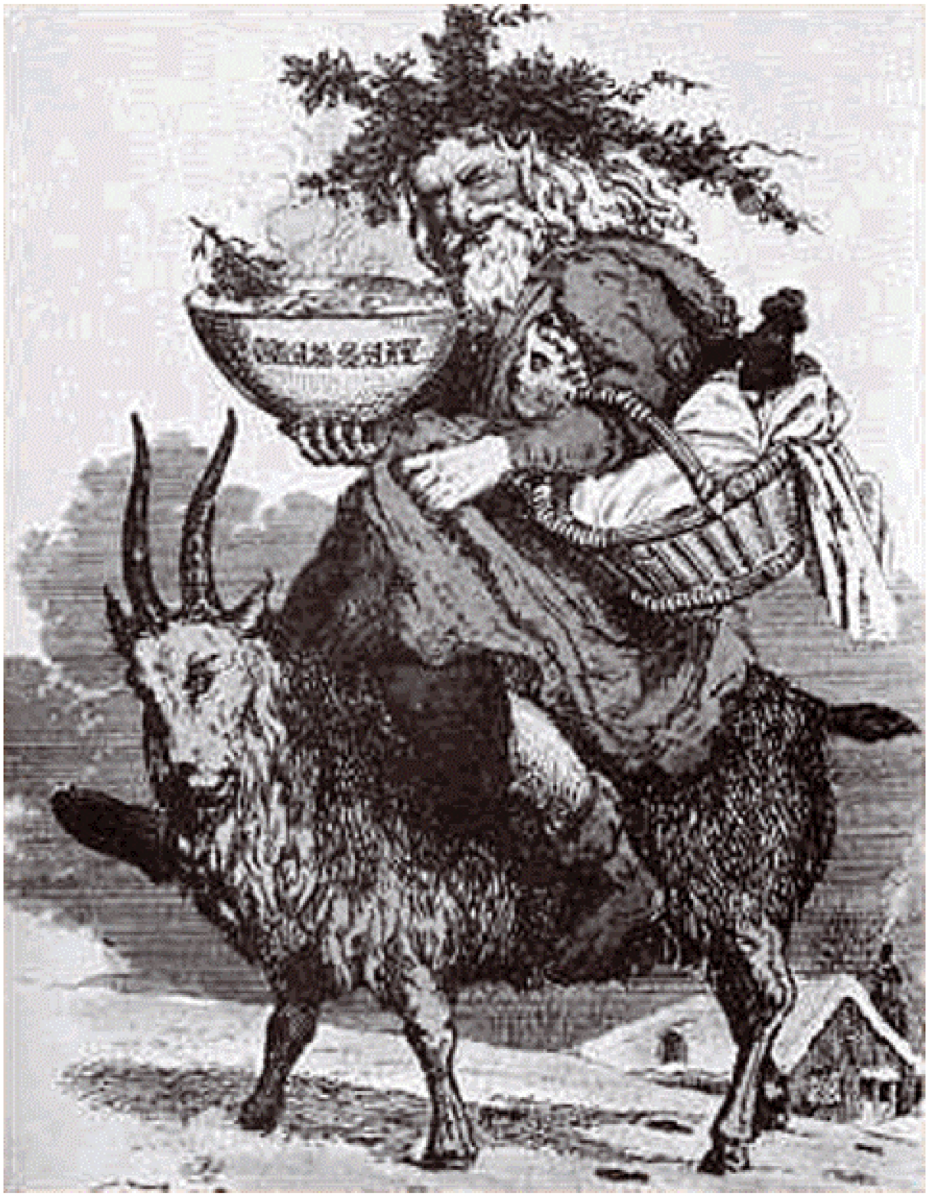
This means that the devil takes you to the place of darkness and terror, actually to the place of the dead.

St. Nicholas, too, takes the children to the place of darkness.

As the gray one, who appears at the beginning of December, he is also death, who takes man into the world beyond.

He is a kind of judge of the dead, who punishes the bad and rewards the good, similar to Osiris, the judge of the underworld.



So a very serious meaning is concealed behind the figure of St. Nicholas.

Jack Frost corresponds to St. Nicholas, although he is much less incorporated into folkloric culture.

He, too, appears at the beginning of winter and represents coldness, which implies a memento mori.

A white ghost, he seems to be covered by the shroud of snow. Carl Jung, Children’s Dreams Seminar, Pages 340-341.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/2d2b7-1saint.jpg`
2. `http://Children'sDreams/`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/20d1b-2saint.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/9e6f3-3saint.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/02f58-4saint.jpg`

6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/34531-6saint.gif`

Carl Jung: “Whoever goes to himself risks a confrontation with himself. . . .” (2019-12-14 04:13)

[1]

“The shadow is a tight passage, a narrow door,
whose painful constriction
no one is spared who goes down to the deep well.”

Carl Jung

[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

True, whoever looks into the mirror of the water will see first of all his own face.

Whoever goes to himself risks a confrontation with himself. . . .

The meeting with oneself is, at first, the meeting with one's own shadow.

The shadow is a tight passage, a narrow door, whose painful constriction no one is spared who goes down to the deep well.

But one must learn to know oneself in order to know who one is.

For what comes after the door is, surprisingly enough, a boundless expanse full of unprecedented uncertainty, with apparently no inside and no outside, no above and no below, no here and no there, no mine and no thine, no good and no bad.

It is the world of water, where all life floats in suspension; where the realm of the sympathetic system, the soul of everything living, begins; where I am indivisibly this and that; where I experience the other in myself and the other-than-myself experiences me. . . .

Our concern with the unconscious has become a vital question, a question of spiritual being or non-being.

All those who have had an experience like that mentioned in the dream know that the treasure lies in the depths of the water and will try to salvage it.

As they must never forget who they are, they must on no account imperil their consciousness.

They will keep their standpoint firmly anchored to the earth, and will thus—to preserve the metaphor—become fishers who catch with hook and net what swims in the water. . .

Whoever looks into the water sees his own image, but behind it living creatures soon loom up; fishes, presumably, harmless dwellers of the deep—harmless, if only the lake were not haunted.

They are water-beings of a peculiar sort.

Sometimes a nixie gets into the fisherman's net, a female, half-human fish.

Nixies are entrancing creatures. Carl Jung, Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious, CW 9, §§ 43–52.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/7b04f-mirror.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=CG0QCKV06CIY&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+collec`

Carl Jung and “I can only hope and wish that no one becomes "Jungian." (2019-12-14 04:19)

[1]

Carl Gustav Jung 1875 - 1961
70
Helvetia

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To J. H. van der Hoop

Dear Colleague, 14 January 1946

It made me very happy to hear from you again after these terrible years.

I have often thought of you and felt tempted to write to you.

But I didn't because I was afraid of compromising you.

On account of my critical utterances I was "marked down" by the Gestapo, my books were banned in Germany, and in France they were for the most part destroyed.

During the last five years I have succeeded in establishing pleasant working relations with my one-time opponents, some of the leading minds among the Freudians here.

We have founded a "Teaching Institute for Psychotherapy" at the University, directed by a Curatorium of nine doctors.

The "Institute" consists in regular lectures being held .

The Curatorium, to which some ten guests are invited, meets regularly every fortnight for common scientific work.

At present we are concerned with the psychology of the transference.

Even the president of the Psychoanalytical Society takes part.

The transactions are pervaded by a thoroughly positive spirit, and the discussions are fruitful and in every way enjoyable.

I can only hope and wish that no one becomes "Jungian."

I stand for no doctrine, but describe facts and put forward certain views which I hold worthy of discussion.

I criticize Freudian psychology for a certain narrowness and bias, and the Freudians for a certain rigid, sectarian spirit of intolerance and fanaticism.

I proclaim no cut-and-dried doctrine and I abhor "blind adherents."

I leave everyone free to deal with the facts in his own way, since I also claim this freedom for myself.

I can thoroughly approve the facts Freud describes and the way he treats these facts provided they stand the test of critical reason and common sense.

I diverge only when it comes to interpreting the facts, which Freud conceived in a demonstrably unsatisfactory way.

Since the psyche is not personal only and not only of today, we have to draw upon the psychology of primitives as well as the history of the mind in explaining them, avoiding at the same time certain medical and biological prejudices.

An example of faulty method would be Freud's Totem and Taboo or The Future of an Illusion.

Here doctrinaire assumptions led to erroneous conclusions.

His conception of the incest problem is also unsatisfactory.

The fact that it was just the Allied representatives who would not allow me to resign from the Presidium of the International Medical Society for Psychotherapy is now taking its revenge on me, as I am suspected of collaboration with the Nazis.

For instance, I have been blamed for the death of 6oo Jews.

These insinuations originate demonstrably with the Freudians.

This is called scientific discussion!!

I should be glad to welcome you again in Zurich.

For me long journeys are unfortunately out of the question; my cardiac infarct has left me with a lasting scar and a correspondingly low cardiac performance.

I hope you are now recovering from the terrible time of suffering.

For us the uncertainty and the constant alerts were not easy to bear, but nothing in comparison with what Holland suffered and what we could follow only from a distance with impotent rage.

Heyer had the impertinence to write to me recently that he was only an "ideologist," of course no Nazi.

If there is anything I can do for you please let me know.

With best regards and wishes,

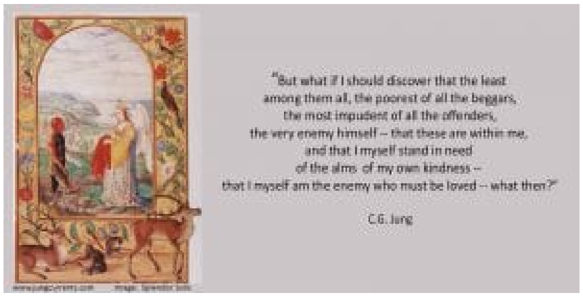
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 404-405

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/20393-stamp.gif`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=7C08SY4M3LCY&keywords=carl+jung+letters&qid=1576316197&sprefix=carl+jung+let`

Carl Jung: It is, so to speak, an unconscious prefiguration of the ego. (2019-12-14 04:27)



"But what if I should discover that the least among them all, the poorest of all the beggars, the most impudent of all the offenders,
the very enemy himself -- that these are within me, and that I myself stand in need of the alms of my own kindness -- that I myself am the enemy who must be loved -- what then?"

C.G. Jung

[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

The term "self" seemed to me a suitable one for this unconscious substrate, whose actual exponent in consciousness is the ego.

The ego stands to the self as the moved to the mover, or as object to subject, because the determining factors which radiate out from the self surround the ego on all sides and are therefore supraordinate to it.

The self, like the unconscious, is an a priori existent out of which the ego evolves.

It is, so to speak, an unconscious prefiguration of the ego.

It is not I who create myself, rather I happen to myself.

This realization is of fundamental importance for the psychology of religious phenomena, which is why Ignatius Loyola started off his Spiritual Exercises with "Homo creatus est" as their "fundamentum."

But, fundamental as it is, it can be only half the psychological truth.

If it were the whole truth it would be tantamount to determinism, for if man were merely a creature that came into being as a result of something already existing unconsciously, he would have no freedom and there would be no point in consciousness.

Psychology must reckon with the fact that despite the causal nexus man does enjoy a feeling of freedom, which is identical with autonomy of consciousness.

However much the ego can be proved to be dependent and preconditioned, it cannot be convinced that it has no freedom.

An absolutely preformed consciousness and a totally dependent ego would be a pointless farce, since everything would proceed just as well or even better unconsciously.

The existence of ego consciousness has meaning only if it is free and autonomous.

By stating these facts we have, it is true, established an antinomy, but we have at the same time given a picture of things as they are.

There are temporal, local, and individual differences in the degree of dependence and freedom.

In reality both are always present: the supremacy of the self and the hybris of consciousness. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 391

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1MQGRWAFI4A8M&keywords=carl+jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=15763`

Carl Jung: It was the impish Mercury. (2019-12-14 04:30)

[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Bollingen, 14th September 1959

Talk after breakfast with C.G.

He spoke of Aquarius and the significance of Khrushchev’s visit to America.

He thinks that Khrushchev is getting uneasy because of China; Russia with two hundred million people is hemmed in between the West and, in the East, China with six hundred million people; and China won’t always do what he wants.

He sees China as a danger.

He was very interested about the Russians hitting the moon and read every detail in the English papers we had brought with us.

He mentioned later a reference in a Swiss paper to the fact that there was no proof that they had hit the moon – it could have been a device that the messages ceased at that time.

He had not thought it possible that the course of the missile could be followed.

15th September 1959

C.G. spoke of Ernest Jones and some of the inaccuracies in his biography of Freud.

He said Jones had always been simply a follower of Freud; he had not added any original ideas.

When Jones was writing his book on Freud he never asked him (C.G.) anything about the early years when he and Freud were working together.

As Freud and Ferenczi were dead, C.G. was the only person who could have given him accurate information, and he could easily have done so.

Jones was not there, and there were a number of errors in his book.

At supper, speaking of his granddaughter's wedding, which was followed by a feast and a wedding cake, he said, 'You see, there are always traces of the old things!'

The wedding cake is a mandala and the bride and bridegroom are the royal wedding couple, the King and Queen, for that evening, and they preside over the gathering. That is symbolism; it belongs to life.

16th September 1959

C.G. said he liked to finish his coffee at breakfast slowly – I then come to life with no hurry.

"Omnis festinatio a parte diaboli est",' he quoted in Latin – 'all haste comes from the devil'.

It is an old alchemical saying.

I asked him again about the carving of the face of Mercury on the stone at the side of the Tower.

He said, 'I got terribly stuck when I was working on synchronicity, in the part about statistics.

Then I saw that face in the stone and put my papers away and got my tools and carved it.

It was the impish Mercury.'

He went on, ‘The alchemists knew this hindering thing and Mercury was often mentioned by them as the jester.’

18th September 1959

I asked C.G. how Freud had come to think of him as anti-Semitic.

He told me that he had always talked freely to Freud as to a friend; Freud despised his Jewish associates in Vienna, and he himself had found those in Freud’s circle unattractive when he first went to Vienna.

There were very few Jews in Switzerland then and no antiSemitism; he had never been anti-Semitic.

What he felt about Freud was that he had taken just one of the instincts or drives and tried to explain everything in those terms.

He suggested later that the concept of sex was too narrow; there were many other urges, for example nutrition was very important.

His own notion of libido was of mental energy.

He wanted Freud to widen his concept to explain facts better.

The concept (not the theory) was a wide notion: energy was obvious in many ways other than sex, so the concept of energy was, as in physics, a wider one than Freud had conceived.

Typology is a description of specific manifestations of energy.

Bergson used the term élan vital, but again he was too specific; what is élan?

It is simply energy and so, said C.G., why not call it that?

Bergson used the term as a specific instance of mental energy; but the term energy is not absolutely precise, we don’t know what energy is, it is an abstract concept.

His own concept of mental energy is not a theory.

Energy is irreversible and goes in one direction, and the goal of energy is no energy – that is entropy.

The aim of an oak tree is to be an oak tree; it can only grow from below to above, in one direction.

19th September 1959

We left Bollingen and went on to stay at the Hotel Bad at Schmerikon.

23rd September 1959

C.G. and Ruth came for dinner at the Hotel Bad.

He said that he remembered Seif, and that he had been at Munich when Freud fainted. (Seif himself had told me that.)

I asked if it were true, as Ernest Jones had said, that Seif 'joined' Jung.

C.G. said that never happened at all, Seif had joined forces with Adler. (I had met Seif at an Adlerian meeting in London.)

26th September 1959

Talk in the afternoon after tea at Bollingen, sitting in the courtyard.

I asked about the effect of Christianity upon non-Christians in Europe, for example the Jews; he had mentioned in Aion how the Christian tradition affected people inevitably.

He said that amongst the Jews there was, as it were, a parallel effect, for in the Cabbala there were similar matters mentioned and the Jews, in a way, were in the Christian tradition.

But of course Christianity was not widespread; there were pockets of Christians.

St. Paul's teacher, Gamaliel, was a noted Cabbalist.

He said also that for the first thousand years of Christianity (or more) it was quite harmonious and where the 'pockets' or groups were Christianity was fully accepted.

Then about 1100 or so came many schisms.

This was the spread of knowledge laterally as well as vertically (that is spiritually), and he said he had mentioned this in Aion, and that Pisces – he pronounced it with a hard 'c', Piskes – was like this: the sign was a perpendicular and a horizontal fish, they went in opposite directions.

And now we are coming to the end of the Pisces era, as was foretold nearly two thousand years ago by the Arabian astrologer Albumasar.
The pre-Christian time was Aries.

I asked about the picture which is the frontispiece in Aion and he said this meant the Aion, the era.

This was the Mithraic god, and we know of similar pictures; the god was represented in the temples of Mithras.

The snake is endless time.

In a postcard from Arles another picture of Aion was shown together with the signs of the Zodiac; the head of Aion was missing.

He said we had practically no written historical records of Mithraism.

I asked about the future of psychology.

This he could not foresee – it was conceivable that advances would be made in the field of biochemistry and physiology.

It was also possible that our hard-won knowledge of psychology and the psyche and kindred things would be buried for five hundred years.

C.G. had been reading a review in a theological journal from, I think, Czechoslovakia, which criticised him.

But, he went on, the theologians seem incapable of seeing what he means, and yet it is quite simple.

They resent his intrusion into theology as if it were their private preserve, an area where they alone had special knowledge.

Yet we have no such absolute knowledge.

They want something to be ‘true’, just as people deride mythology saying it is not ‘true’.

He is not interested in the establishment of absolute truth but in observing facts.

So far as mythology goes the interesting thing is that the myths are repeated, that is a fact and a very important one.

But discussing whether the myth is ‘true’ or not is a waste of time.

He would not regard the myth as the dream of a people.

Often a myth contained some factual knowledge which ‘hit’ something, and so it went on, was expressed afresh; such things are important because they are factual.

We can have ideas about God; but whether they are ‘true’ or not, or whether they are ‘absolute’, cannot be answered.

He said he is constantly criticised for saying things which are ‘anti-Christian’ or ‘anti-theological’, such as all the nonsense about the privatio boni.

I asked about split libido and he referred to the inevitable polarity of the energic force, its dual nature.

So far as introversion or extraversion went they were simple variations, different expressions of energy.

But the energy moves in one direction; that is its nature – it does something, or you see something is done.

I asked him about the symbol of the house and in particular the mediaeval house of his dream.

‘Well,’ he said, ‘in a dream we see the house as our husk, and we are just in it.’

Thus with the mediaeval house dream he was just there, in this beautiful eighteenth century house, as he stood on the first floor.

It was as if it was where he lived, and presumably his family were about somewhere but they were not evident.

When he reflected about it later the house had some association in his mind with his uncle's very old house in Basel which was built in the old moat of the town and had two cellars; the lower one was very dark and like a cave.

In the dream he wondered what was below and went down the steps; near the bottom it was of Roman construction, very old, and in this room were stone slabs for a floor just as there are at Bollingen.

There was a ring in one of the stones and this he lifted and went down more steps.

The light came in when he lifted this slab.

Below he saw bones and skulls and old pottery, all very ancient.

The important thing for him was the stratification, the layers of different ages.

This was how he eventually came to the notion of the collective unconscious.

Houses, he said, often came in his dreams.

Thus before he took up the study of alchemy he had a dream of a house with two wings quite new to him – he did not know they were there.

He looked on this dream as indicating something in his own psychology he did not know about, and the repetition of the dream meant it was being forced to his attention.

In his father's room in this house were many zoological specimens in glass vessels; C.G. had earlier a special interest in zoology.

In his mother's room were cages, like bird cages, only they were houses, and they were for the ghosts (that is, the flitting ideas in the mind) to lodge in.

And there were wonderful old books in the library, most lovely manuscripts and old volumes.

He associated these also with his uncle's old house in Basel from which he got many books – one a lovely lexicon which he has at Bollingen.

This dream was a forerunner of his interest in alchemy.

He has often dreamt of houses with additional rooms and this has meant there were many things he had still to find out and that they were there, in 'his house'. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 295-308

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/23950-472bmercury2bbennet.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+bennet+conversations&qid=1576318710&sr=8-1`

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-14 04:30)

Life is a touchstone for the truth of the spirit. Spirit that drags a man away from life, seeking fulfillment only in itself, is a false spirit though the man too is to blame, since he can choose whether he will give himself up to this spirit or not

- ~Carl Jung, CW8, ¶ 647

Life is a touchstone for the truth of the spirit. Spirit that drags a man away from life, seeking fulfillment only in itself, is a false spirit though the man too is to blame, since he can choose whether he will give himself up to this spirit or not Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 647

Life and spirit are two powers or necessities between which man is placed. Spirit gives meaning to his life, and the possibility of its greatest development. But life is essential to spirit, since its truth is nothing
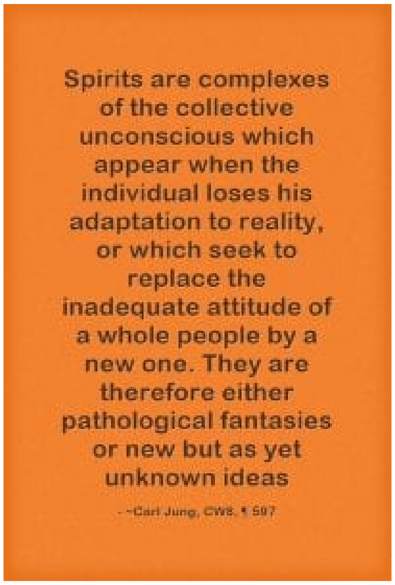
if it cannot live .

- ~Carl Jung, CW8, 648

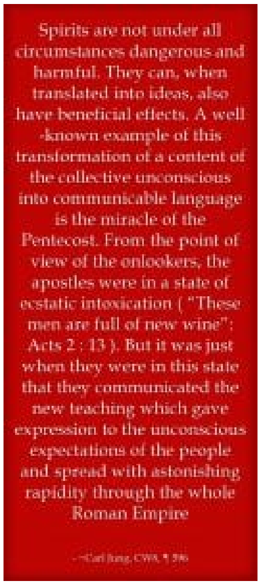
Life and spirit are two powers or necessities between which man is placed. Spirit gives meaning to his life, and the possibility of its greatest development. But life is essential to spirit, since its truth is nothing if it cannot live Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 648



Spirits are complexes of the collective unconscious which appear when the individual loses his adaptation to reality, or which seek to replace the inadequate attitude of a whole people by a new one. They are therefore either pathological fantasies or new but as yet unknown ideas

- ~Carl Jung, CW8, ¶ 597

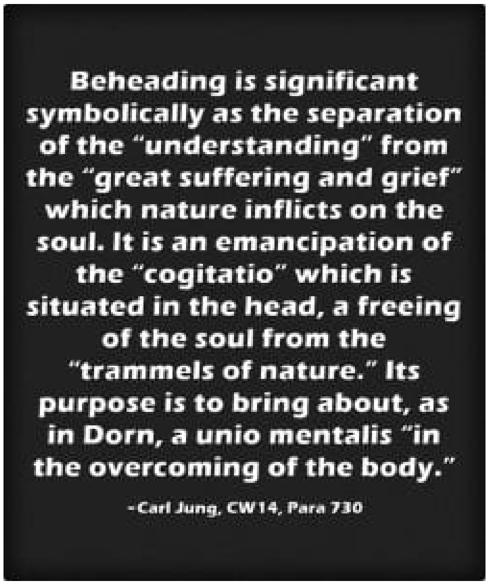
Spirits are complexes of the collective unconscious which appear when the individual loses his adaptation to reality, or which seek to replace the inadequate attitude of a whole people by a new one. They are therefore either pathological fantasies or new but as yet unknown ideas Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 597



Spirits are not under all circumstances dangerous and harmful. They can, when translated into ideas, also have beneficial effects. A well-known example of this transformation of a content of the collective unconscious into communicable language is the miracle of the Pentecost. From the point of view of the onlookers, the apostles were in a state of ecstatic intoxication ("These men are full of new wine": Acts 2 : 13). But it was just when they were in this state that they communicated the new teaching which gave expression to the unconscious expectations of the people and spread with astonishing rapidity through the whole Roman Empire

- ~Carl Jung, CW8, ¶ 596

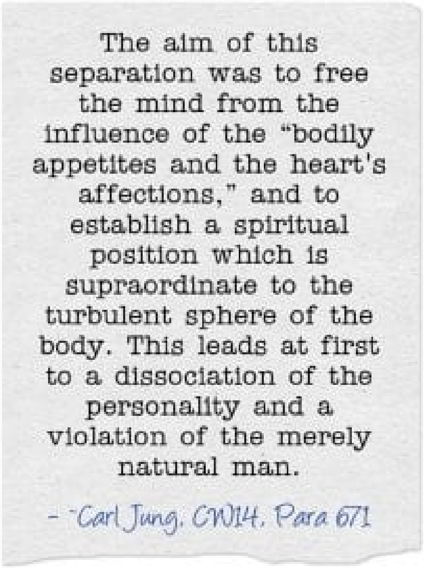
Spirits are not under all circumstances dangerous and harmful. They can, when translated into ideas, also have beneficial effects. A well-known example of this transformation of a content of the collective unconscious into communicable language is the miracle of the Pentecost. From the point of view of the onlookers, the apostles were in a state of ecstatic intoxication ("These men are full of new wine": Acts 2 : 13). But it was just when they were in this state that they communicated the new teaching which gave expression to the unconscious expectations of the people and spread with astonishing rapidity through the whole Roman Empire Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 596



Beheading is significant symbolically as the separation of the "understanding" from the "great suffering and grief" which nature inflicts on the soul. It is an emancipation of the "cogitatio" which is situated in the head, a freeing of the soul from the "trammels of nature." Its purpose is to bring about, as in Dorn, a unio mentalis "in the overcoming of the body."

-Carl Jung, CW14, Para 730

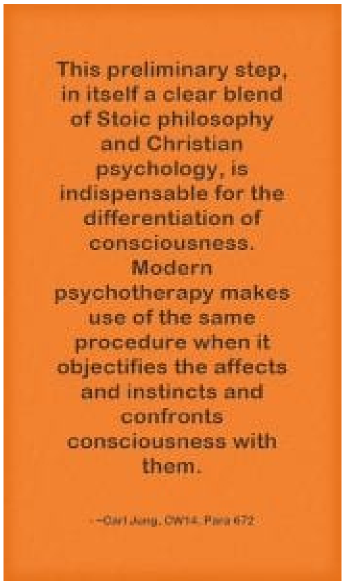
Beheading is significant symbolically as the separation of the "understanding" from the "great suffering and grief" which nature inflicts on the soul. It is an emancipation of the "cogitatio" which is situated in the head, a freeing of the soul from the "trammels of nature." Its purpose is to bring about, as in Dorn, a unio mentalis "in the overcoming of the body." Carl Jung, CW14, para 730.



The aim of this separation was to free the mind from the influence of the "bodily appetites and the heart's affections," and to establish a spiritual position which is supraordinate to the turbulent sphere of the body. This leads at first to a dissociation of the personality and a violation of the merely natural man.

- Carl Jung, CW14, Para 671

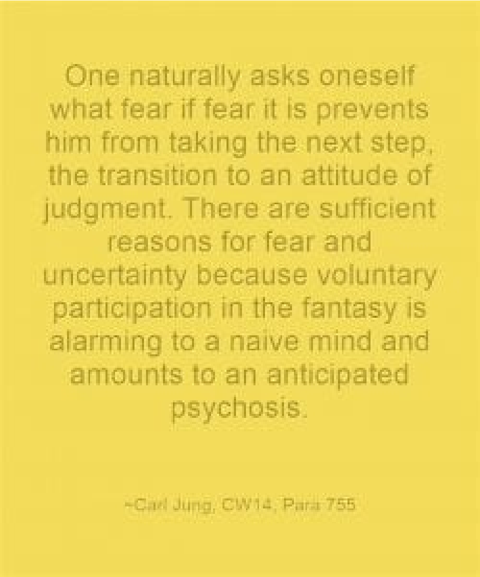
The aim of this separation was to free the mind from the influence of the "bodily appetites and the heart's affections," and to establish a spiritual position which is supraordinate to the turbulent sphere of the body. This leads at first to a dissociation of the personality and a violation of the merely natural man. Carl Jung, CW14, Para 671.



This preliminary step, in itself a clear blend of Stoic philosophy and Christian psychology, is indispensable for the differentiation of consciousness. Modern psychotherapy makes use of the same procedure when it objectifies the affects and instincts and confronts consciousness with them.

~Carl Jung, CW14, Para 672

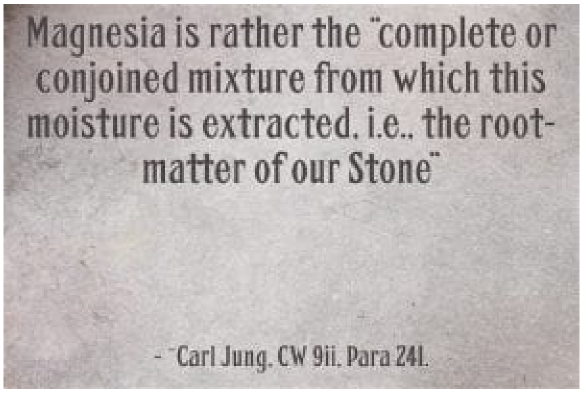
This preliminary step, in itself a clear blend of Stoic philosophy and Christian psychology, is indispensable for the differentiation of consciousness. Modern psychotherapy makes use of the same procedure when it objectifies the affects and instincts and confronts consciousness with them. Carl Jung, CW14, Para 672.



One naturally asks oneself what fear if fear it is prevents him from taking the next step, the transition to an attitude of judgment. There are sufficient reasons for fear and uncertainty because voluntary participation in the fantasy is alarming to a naive mind and amounts to an anticipated psychosis.

~Carl Jung, CW14, Para 755

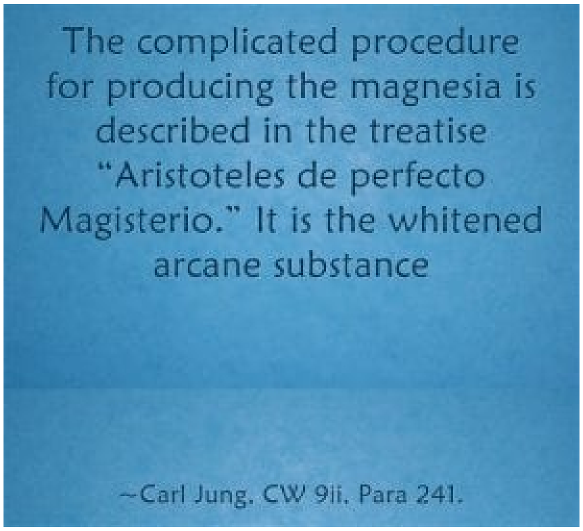
One naturally asks oneself what fear if fear it is prevents him from taking the next step, the transition to an attitude of judgment. There are sufficient reasons for fear and uncertainty because voluntary participation in the fantasy is alarming to a naive mind and amounts to an anticipated psychosis. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 755



Magnesia is rather the "complete or conjoined mixture from which this moisture is extracted, i.e., the root-matter of our Stone"

- "Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241.

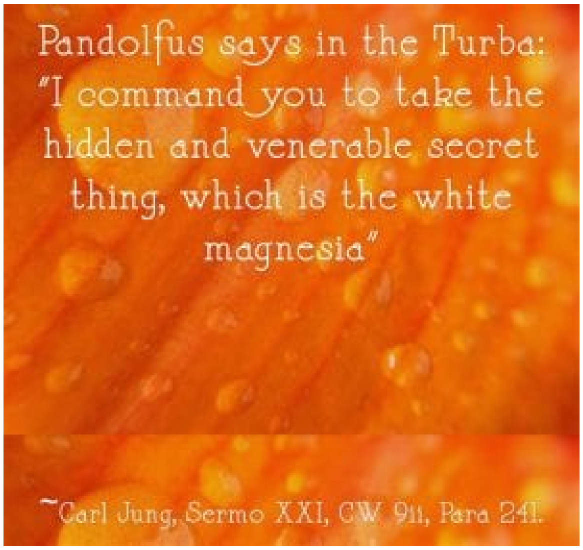
Magnesia is rather the “complete or conjoined mixture from which this moisture is extracted, i.e., the root-matter of our Stone” Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241.



The complicated procedure for producing the magnesia is described in the treatise “Aristoteles de perfecto Magisterio.” It is the whitened arcane substance

~Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241.

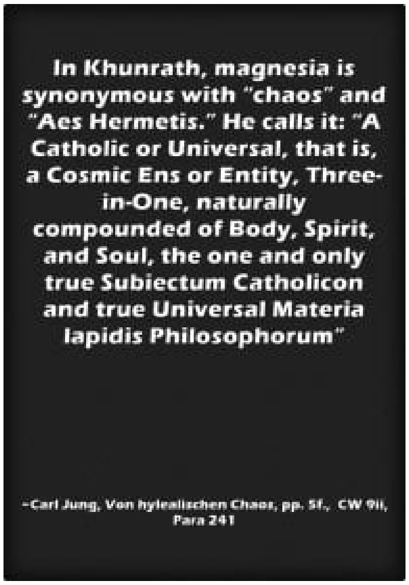
The complicated procedure for producing the magnesia is described in the treatise “Aristoteles de perfecto Magisterio.” It is the whitened arcane substance Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241



Pandolfus says in the Turba: "I command you to take the hidden and venerable secret thing, which is the white magnesia"

~Carl Jung, Sermo XXI, CW 9ii, Para 241.

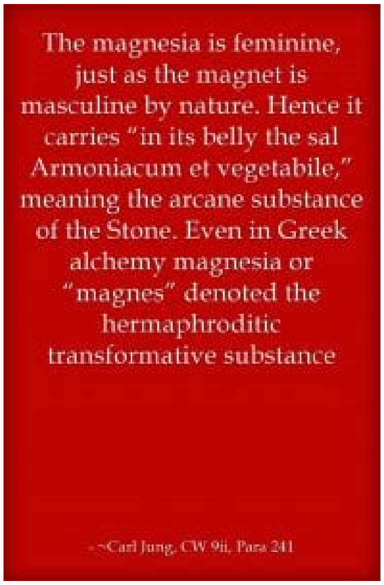
Pandolfus says in the Turba: "I command you to take the hidden and venerable secret thing, which is the white magnesia" Carl Jung, Sermo XXI, CW 9ii, Para 241



In Khunrath, magnesia is synonymous with "chaos" and "Aes Hermetis." He calls it: "A Catholic or Universal, that is, a Cosmic Ens or Entity, Three-in-One, naturally compounded of Body, Spirit, and Soul, the one and only true Subiectum Catholicon and true Universal Materia lapidis Philosophorum"

~Carl Jung, Von hylealischen Chaos, pp. 5f., CW 9ii, Para 241

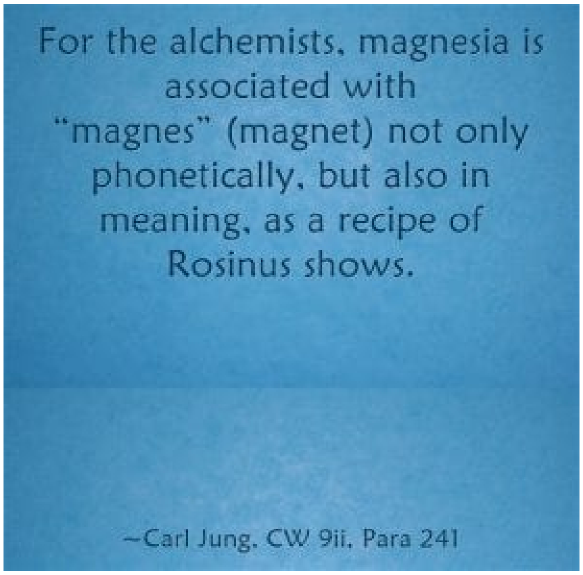
In Khunrath, magnesia is synonymous with "chaos" and "Aes Hermetis." He calls it: "A Catholic or Universal, that is, a Cosmic Ens or Entity, Three-in-One, naturally compounded of Body, Spirit, and Soul, the one and only true Subiectum Catholicon and true Universal Materia lapidis Philosophorum" Carl Jung, Von hylealischen Chaos, pp. 5f., CW 9ii, Para 241



The magnesia is feminine, just as the magnet is masculine by nature. Hence it carries "in its belly the sal Armoniacum et vegetabile," meaning the arcane substance of the Stone. Even in Greek alchemy magnesia or "magnes" denoted the hermaphroditic transformative substance

~Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241

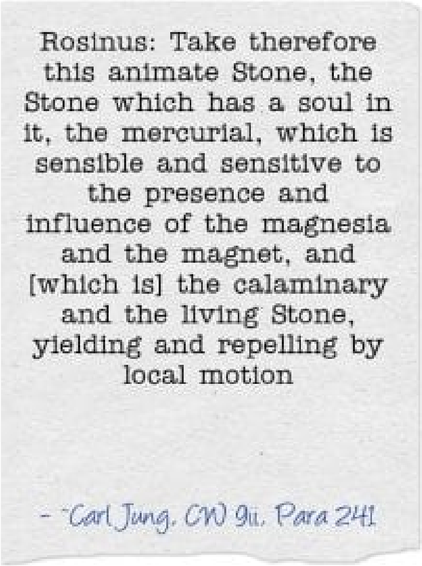
The magnesia is feminine, just as the magnet is masculine by nature. Hence it carries "in its belly the sal Armoniacum et vegetabile," meaning the arcane substance of the Stone. Even in Greek alchemy magnesia or "magnes" denoted the hermaphroditic transformative substance Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241



For the alchemists, magnesia is associated with "magnes" (magnet) not only phonetically, but also in meaning, as a recipe of Rosinus shows.

~Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241

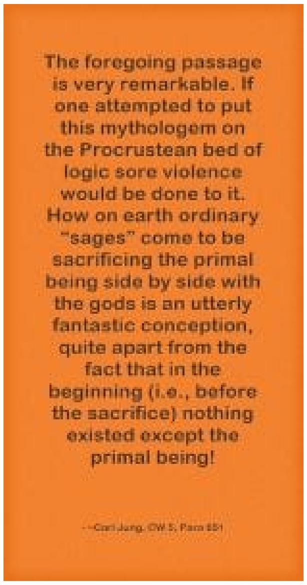
For the alchemists, magnesia is associated with "magnes" (magnet) not only phonetically, but also in meaning, as a recipe of Rosinus shows: Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241



Rosinus: Take therefore this animate Stone, the Stone which has a soul in it, the mercurial, which is sensible and sensitive to the presence and influence of the magnesia and the magnet, and [which is] the calaminary and the living Stone, yielding and repelling by local motion

- Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241

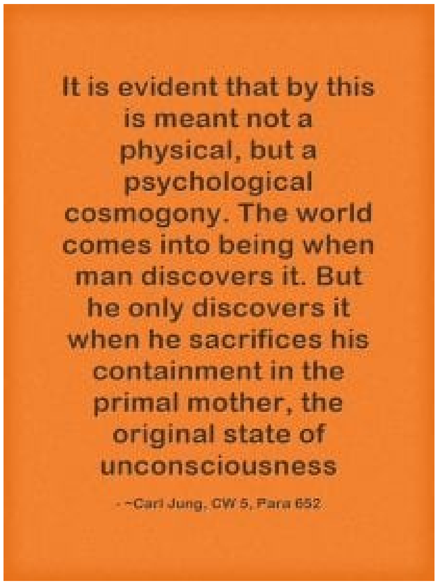
Rosinus: Take therefore this animate Stone, the Stone which has a soul in it, the mercurial, which is sensible and sensitive to the presence and influence of the magnesia and the magnet, and [which is] the calaminary and the living Stone, yielding and repelling by local motion Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 241.



The foregoing passage is very remarkable. If one attempted to put this mythologem on the Procrustean bed of logic sore violence would be done to it. How on earth ordinary "sages" come to be sacrificing the primal being side by side with the gods is an utterly fantastic conception, quite apart from the fact that in the beginning (i.e., before the sacrifice) nothing existed except the primal being!

- ~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 651

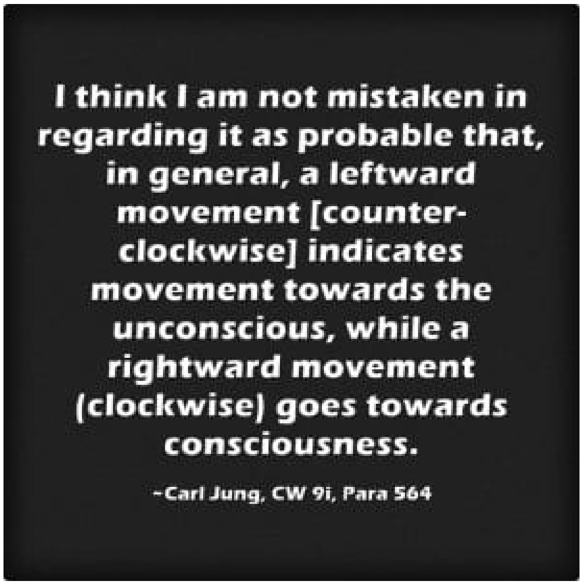
The foregoing passage is very remarkable. If one attempted to put this mythologem on the Procrustean bed of logic sore violence would be done to it. How on earth ordinary “sages” come to be sacrificing the primal being side by side with the gods is an utterly fantastic conception, quite apart from the fact that in the beginning (i.e., before the sacrifice) nothing existed except the primal being! Carl Jung, CW5, Para 651



It is evident that by this is meant not a physical, but a psychological cosmogony. The world comes into being when man discovers it. But he only discovers it when he sacrifices his containment in the primal mother, the original state of unconsciousness

- ~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 652

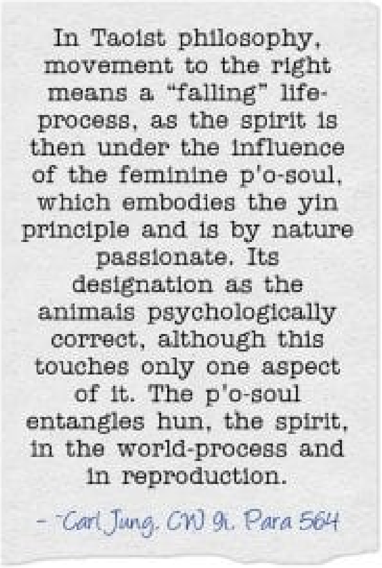
It is evident that by this is meant not a physical, but a psychological cosmogony. The world comes into being when man discovers it. But he only discovers it when he sacrifices his containment in the primal mother, the original state of unconsciousness Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 652



I think I am not mistaken in regarding it as probable that, in general, a leftward movement [counter-clockwise] indicates movement towards the unconscious, while a rightward movement (clockwise) goes towards consciousness.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564

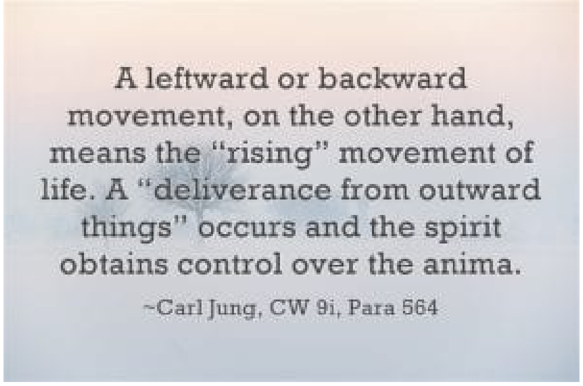
I think I am not mistaken in regarding it as probable that, in general, a leftward movement [counter-clockwise] indicates movement towards the unconscious, while a rightward movement (clockwise) goes towards consciousness Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564



In Taoist philosophy, movement to the right means a “falling” life-process, as the spirit is then under the influence of the feminine p'o-soul, which embodies the yin principle and is by nature passionate. Its designation as the animais psychologically correct, although this touches only one aspect of it. The p'o-soul entangles hun, the spirit, in the world-process and in reproduction.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564

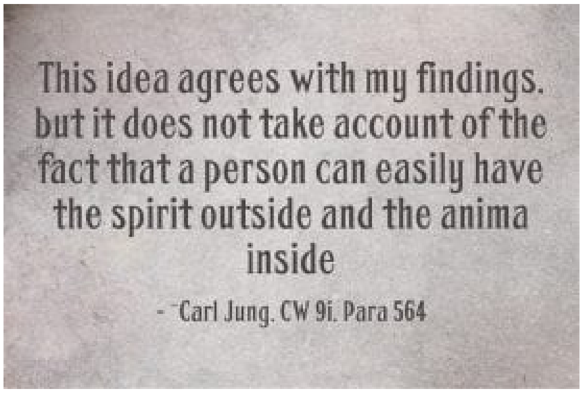
In Taoist philosophy, movement to the right means a “falling” life-process, as the spirit is then under the influence of the feminine p’o-soul, which embodies the yin principle and is by nature passionate. Its designation as the animais psychologically correct, although this touches only one aspect of it. The p’o-soul entangles hun, the spirit, in the world-process and in reproduction Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564



A leftward or backward movement, on the other hand, means the “rising” movement of life. A “deliverance from outward things” occurs and the spirit obtains control over the anima.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564

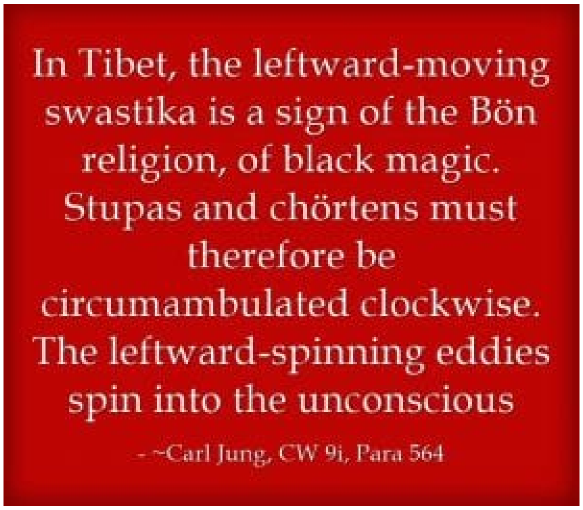
A leftward or backward movement, on the other hand, means the “rising” movement of life. A “deliverance from outward things” occurs and the spirit obtains control over the anima. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564



This idea agrees with my findings. but it does not take account of the fact that a person can easily have the spirit outside and the anima inside

- ~Carl Jung. CW 9i. Para 564

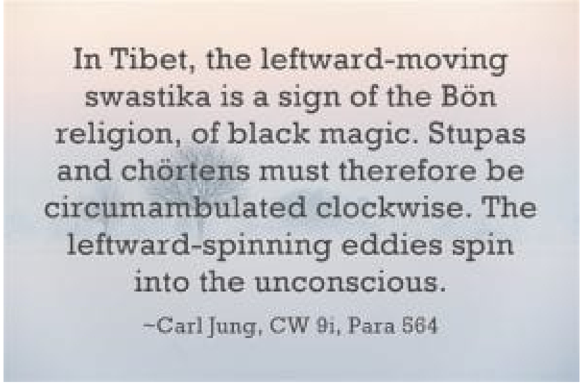
This idea agrees with my findings, but it does not take account of the fact that a person can easily have the spirit outside and the anima inside Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564



In Tibet, the leftward-moving swastika is a sign of the Bön religion, of black magic. Stupas and chörtens must therefore be circumambulated clockwise. The leftward-spinning eddies spin into the unconscious

- ~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564

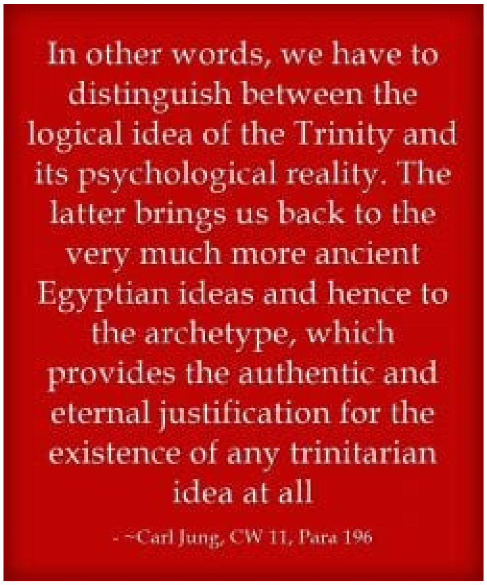
In Tibet, the leftward-moving swastika is a sign of the Bön religion, of black magic. Stupas and chörtens must therefore be circumambulated clockwise. The leftward-spinning eddies spin into the unconscious Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564



In Tibet, the leftward-moving swastika is a sign of the Bön religion, of black magic. Stupas and chörtens must therefore be circumambulated clockwise. The leftward-spinning eddies spin into the unconscious.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564

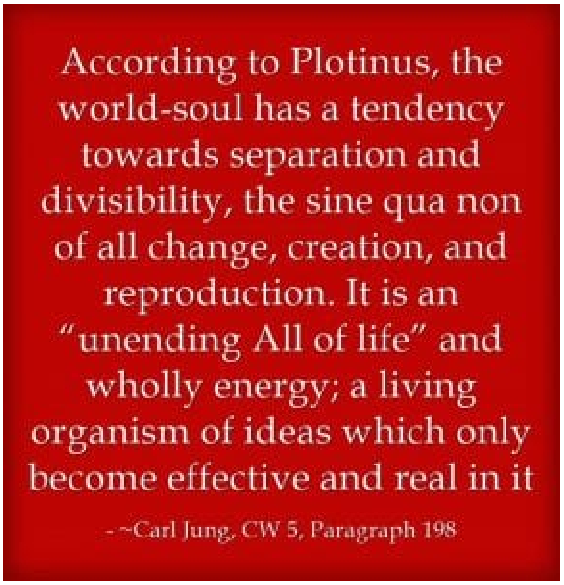
The rightward-spinning ones spin out of the unconscious chaos. The rightward-moving swastika in Tibet is therefore a Buddhist emblem Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 564



In other words, we have to distinguish between the logical idea of the Trinity and its psychological reality. The latter brings us back to the very much more ancient Egyptian ideas and hence to the archetype, which provides the authentic and eternal justification for the existence of any trinitarian idea at all

- ~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 196

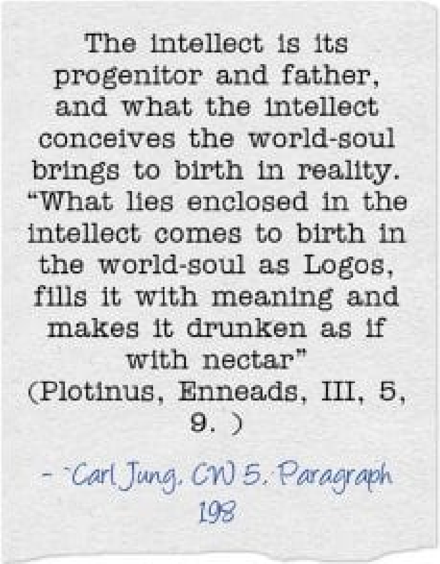
In other words, we have to distinguish between the logical idea of the Trinity and its psychological reality. The latter brings us back to the very much more ancient Egyptian ideas and hence to the archetype, which provides the authentic and eternal justification for the existence of any trinitarian idea at all Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 196



According to Plotinus, the world-soul has a tendency towards separation and divisibility, the sine qua non of all change, creation, and reproduction. It is an "unending All of life" and wholly energy; a living organism of ideas which only become effective and real in it

- ~Carl Jung, CW 5, Paragraph 198

According to Plotinus, the world-soul has a tendency towards separation and divisibility, the sine qua non of all change, creation, and reproduction. It is an "unending All of life" and wholly energy; a living organism of ideas which only become effective and real in it Carl Jung, CW 5, Paragraph 198



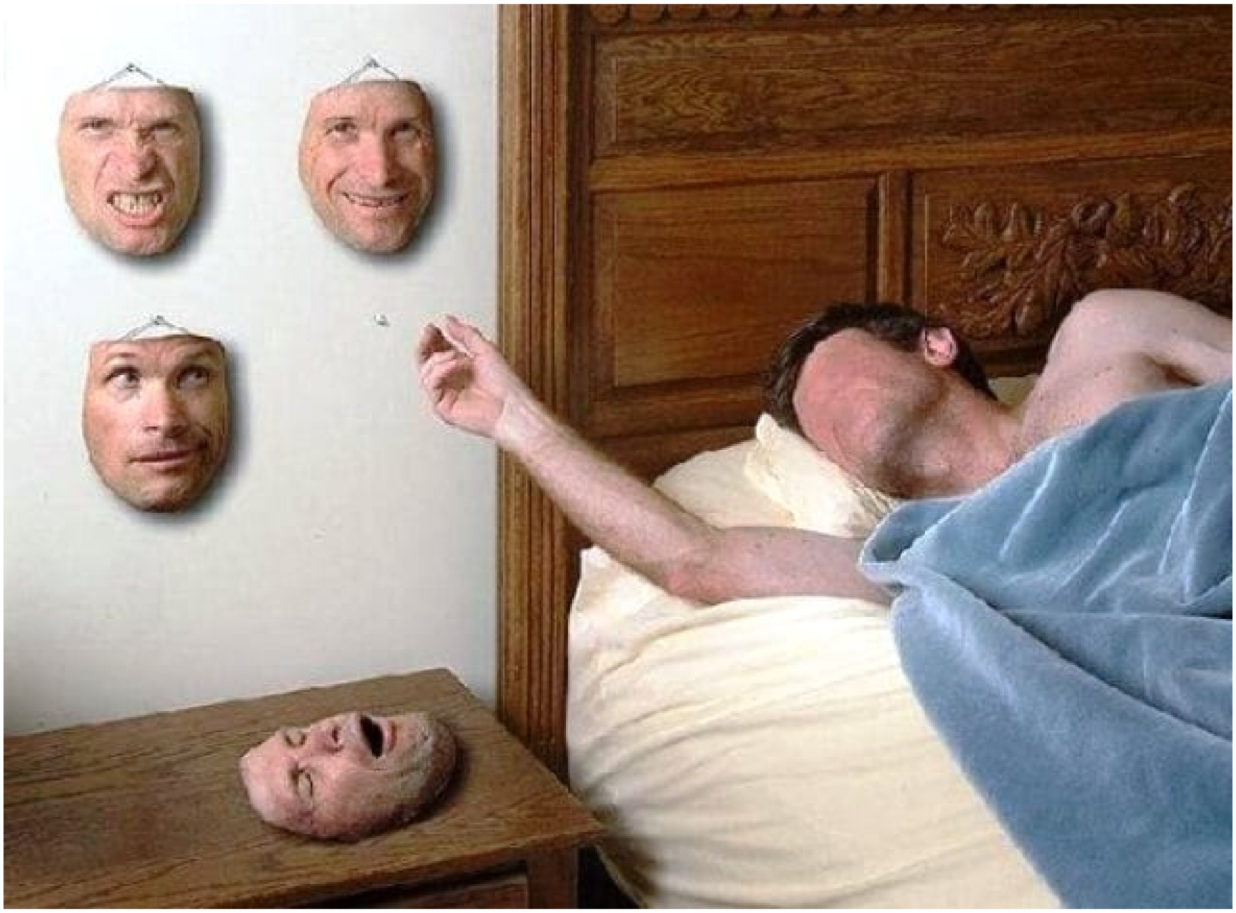
The intellect is its progenitor and father, and what the intellect conceives the world-soul brings to birth in reality. "What lies enclosed in the intellect comes to birth in the world-soul as Logos, fills it with meaning and makes it drunken as if with nectar" (Plotinus, Enneads, III, 5, 9.)

- ~Carl Jung, CW 5, Paragraph 198

The intellect is its progenitor and father, and what the intellect conceives the world-soul brings to birth in reality. "What lies enclosed in the intellect comes to birth in the world-soul as Logos, fills it with meaning and makes it drunken as if with nectar" (Plotinus, Enneads, III, 5, 9.) Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 198

Carl Jung: Insofar as you live in a world, you cannot escape forming a persona. (2019-12-14 04:34)

[1]



[2]Analytical Psychology: Notes of the Seminar given in 1925 by C.G. Jung

Lecture 13

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Jung:

I have brought with me some pictures done by a young American who, at the time that he made the pictures, had no knowledge of my theories.

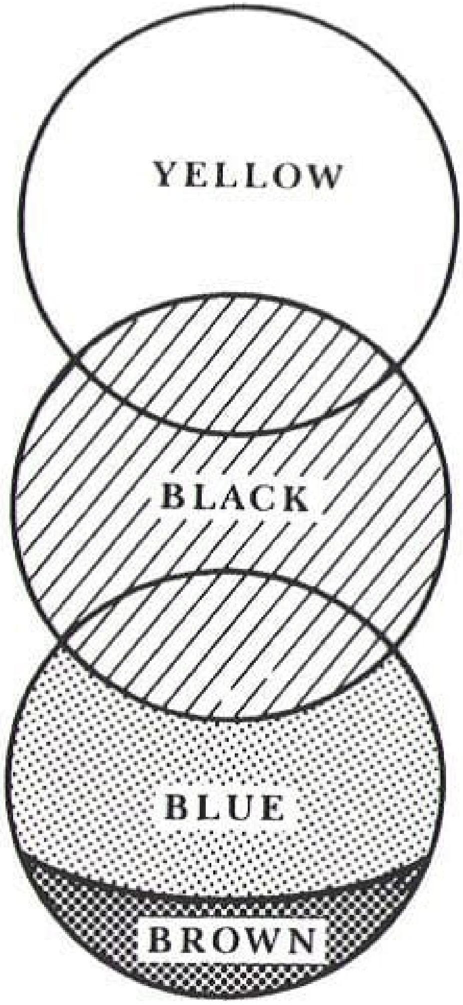
I merely told him to try to express in color the inner condition of his mind, which was very badly muddled.

He had no prescription as to the style in which he should paint, and I explained very little about the pictures to him so as not to disturb the naïveté of his attitude about them.

The pictures follow a progressive series and, as you will see, are a further expression of the transcendent function, that is, an effort to make the unconscious content conscious.

They show a struggle between the pairs of opposites, with an attempt to solve the problem of bringing the two together, and so they really belong to the discussion we had of the pairs of opposites, but I was not able to get them before today.

First picture (see Diagram 1):



[3]

In this picture he said he felt clearness above; below, something moving or snakelike, and then the weight of the earth; in between was emptiness, blackness.

We might observe in passing that only an American could produce a symbol like this.

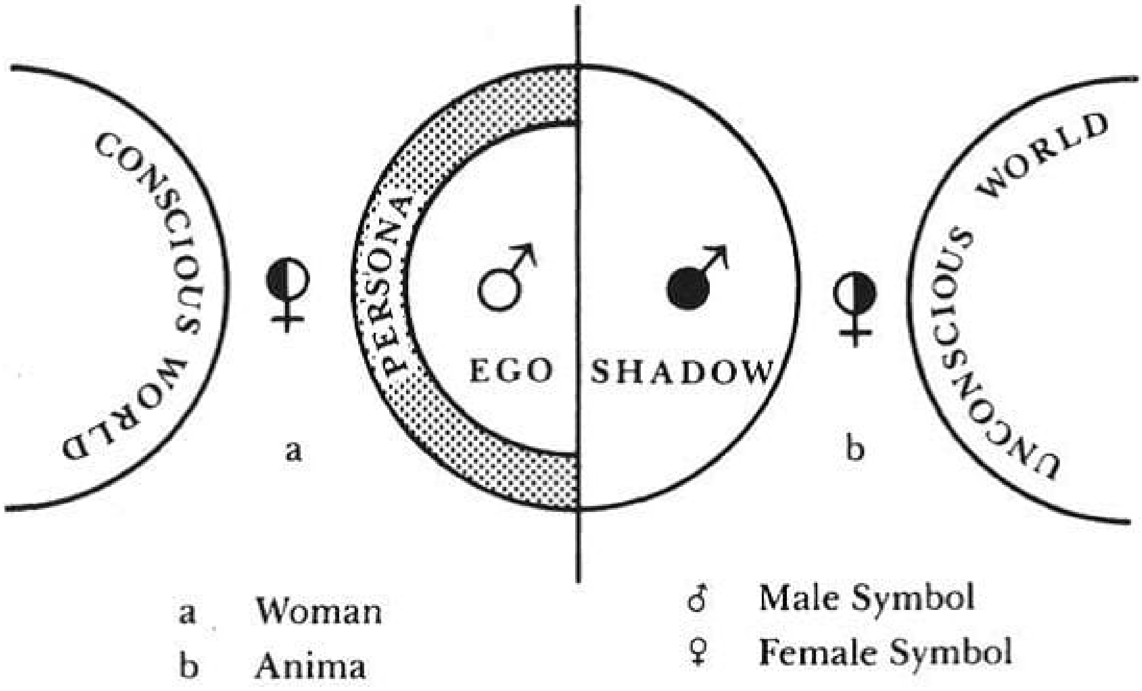
The blue in the top part of the lowest circle is associated with the sea—he actually does feel he is at sea in his present condition.

The black, the unconscious, is associated with the idea of evil.

This picture is typical of masculine psychology: consciousness above, sex below, nothing in the middle.

Second picture:

[4]



CONSCIOUS WORLD
♀
a PERSONA
♂
EGO
♂
SHADOW
♀
b UNCONSCIOUS WORLD a Woman
b Anima
♂ Male Symbol
♀ Female Symbol

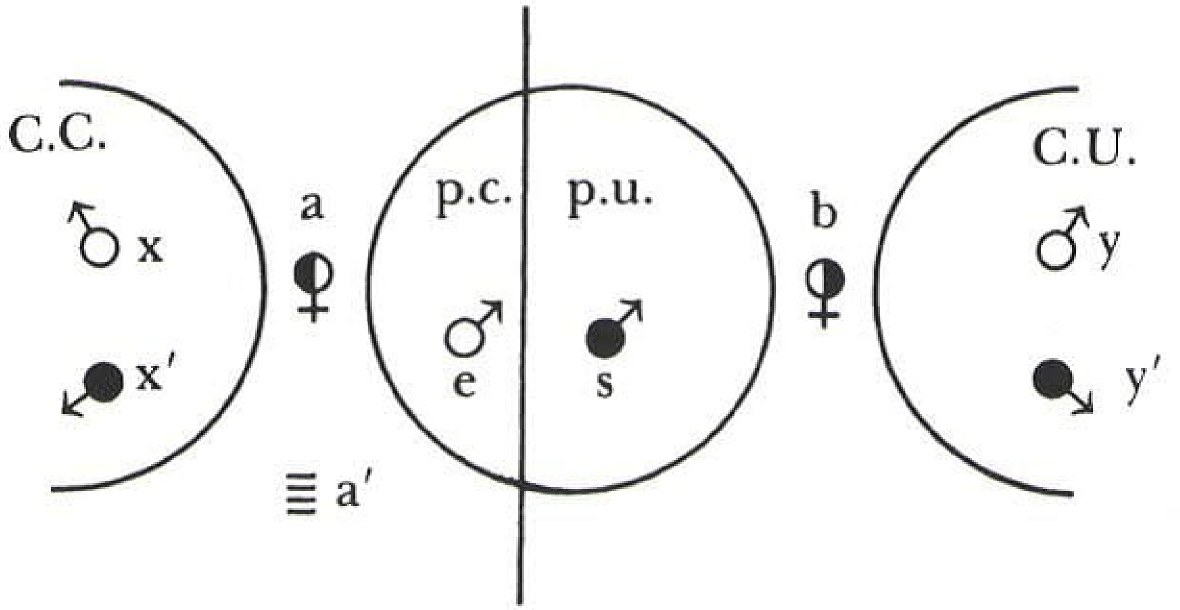
Two circles separate, one above and one below.

This shows a complete division, Yang above and Yin below.

In the lower circle a tendency to develop primitive ornamentation is shown.

Third picture:

[5]



C.C. = Collective Conscious.
p.c. = Personal conscious.
p.u. = Personal unconscious.
C.U. = Collective Unconscious.
x = Positive aspect of C.C.
x′ = Negative aspect of C.C. y = Positive aspect of C.U.
y′ = Negative aspect of C.U.
a = Real woman or absolute object.
a′ = Plurality of absolute objects.
b = Anima.
e = Ego.
s = Shadow self.

Shows an attempt to get things together.

Yang colors above, Yin below, some signs of growth shown in an effort to depict a tree green in color.

Snakes are coming up from below.

Fourth picture:

Here is a very vigorous attempt at getting things together.

The two principles, Yang and Yin, join in a star-like figure.

The problem of intuition-sensation is shown in a vertical form of design.

As soon as horizontal forms show in design it is the appearance of the rational functions, because they are on our earth.

Fifth picture: Here is shown a more typical Indian or primitive character. "Soul-birds" are shown; helpful animals are needed.

In previous designs he came to an impossibility because a rational function cannot be taken up directly by an irrational type; therefore he has birds.

The Yang has almost disappeared, the birds are in the center.

In the earth peculiar movement is shown: canals, snakes, roots perhaps.

Birds show an instinctive tendency.

If he can see that there are some helpful birds about, that means more to him than any rational function.

Sixth picture:

In the previous picture he approached the earth sphere.

Here he is deeply in it.

The earth reaches up to heaven, the clouds hide the sun, but Yang descends into the earth, deep into the sea.

High up there is a man who is looking to see if he can jump down into the depths of the unconscious.

The unconscious contents are felt as fishes.

There is no connection between the man’s standpoint and the depths; he cannot take the leap.

Seventh picture:

Here the man has taken the leap.

But it is air, not water; it is a desert, skulls are present.

The man is fastened to the bottom with iron balls.

All life is shown above.

This means that the going to the other extreme is as disastrous and full of death as if he had remained above.

He is in the bowels of the earth.

The production of these pictures is a stimulation of the primitive layers of the mind, and the individual will get at instinctive impulses thereby.

The pictures show a marked influence from the East, which is generally characteristic of American psychology as opposed to European.

No European could have produced these drawings.

(There followed some discussion as to the ways in which the various races tend to react toward the primitive cultures with which they come in contact.)

North and South America have followed very different ways in this respect.

The Anglo-Saxon holds himself away from the primitive, while the Latin goes down to his level.

I have come into contact with some very strange psychological problems illustrating this.

The following will show you something of what happens in South America.

I was once consulted by a South American family as to the condition of their son, who had been nearly driven crazy by his friends.

The parents were Austrian and went to South America only after their marriage.

Inside their house European traditions prevailed, but outside everything was Indian, the Latin inhabitants not having resisted those influences.

It was the custom for the Indian families to send their children into the city to work for little or no wages, and in the case of the little girl this meant inevitable sexual abuse.

This way of life got terribly on the nerves of the son of these Austrians, and he went to a professor of whom he was very fond to ask him for advice.

The professor asked him if he had a mascot, and of course the boy had none, so he was given one.

The professor told him he had to take this mascot, which was a doll, and attend to the task of increasing its strength all the time, and the stronger the doll got, the more the boy's troubles would diminish.

The first thing he had to do with it was to carry it about the streets in his arms, and this the boy did, though with great shame.

Then he took it to the professor and asked him if there was anything more to be done, and was told there was.

The doll was not yet strong enough.

He must take it to a great celebration that was about to be held for the president of the republic and he must break through the cordon of police and swing the doll three times in the face of the president.

The boy did this and of course got into trouble with the police, but was set free when they found that the affair had only to do with the strengthening of a mascot.

The boy went back to the professor.

No, the doll was not yet as strong as it ought to be!

He must now find a little girl and throttle her over the doll until she was nearly dead.

Then the force of her agony as she approached death would go into the doll and it would be really strong.

he boy broke down after this last ordeal, but he was afraid to say anything, for if he did all the strength would go out of the doll, and so he continued in a thoroughly neurotic condition till his parents had to seek help.

The boy's mother was Catholic, but it would be absurd to say that the Church supported such things.

The Spanish clergy is and always has been terribly superstitious in these Latin American countries.

One can find things such as I have described going on in all of them, and it comes from the fact that the Conquistadores mixed with the natives in marriage.

In doing this the Latins have managed to keep out of the split between the conscious and the unconscious, but have lost their superiority.

The Anglo-Saxons did not mix with the primitives, but in the unconscious they sank down to the primitive level.

Miss Taylor's question: (1) "Do you think that some development of the Mithraic religion may become a living religion in the near future?"

Dr. Jung: I could not assume that anything like that is going to happen.

I merely mentioned the Mithraic religion because my fantasies were so much connected with it.

In itself this religion is as antiquated as can be.

It is only relatively important as being the brother of Christianity, which has assimilated some elements from it.

It is interesting to trace out both those elements that were discarded and those that were accepted by Christianity.

The ringing of the bells in the celebration of the Mass probably comes from the Mithraic cult, where bells were rung at a certain point in the mysteries.

Also, Christmas day is a Mithraic feast.

In early days, Christmas came on the 8th of January, and was a day taken over from the Egyptians, being the day celebrating the finding of the body of Osiris.

It was only in later days, when the Mithraic cult was being overcome, that the Christians took the 25th of December, the day celebrated by the followers of Mithras as the day of Sol invictus, for their Christmas.

To the early Christians, Christmas was the resurrection of the sun, and as late as Augustine, Christ was identified with the sun.

Miss Taylor’s question: (2) “Is the view you expressed in your last lecture a further development of an earlier view that the contents of the unconscious can be deduced from what is lacking in the unconscious?”

Dr. Jung: Yes, but I do not mean to imply a contradiction between my earlier view and what I said the other day about the unconscious being balanced.

I have simply gone one step further.

There is no doubt that to a certain extent the conscious can be deduced from the unconscious and vice versa.

If a dream says such and such a thing, we are justified in saying the conscious attitude must have been thus and so.

If a person is only intellectual he must have repressed feelings in the unconscious, and we have a right to expect to find them there.

I went on further to say that the unconscious shows a balance within itself, over and above the compensatory role it plays to the conscious.

That is, we cannot say that the main contents of the unconscious are nothing but a balance to the conscious, nor vice versa.

Therefore one can perfectly well live wholly in the conscious as most people do, and pay little or no attention to the unconscious.

As long as you can put up with the symptoms and inhibitions that come from such a life, it does not matter.

Now the balance in the conscious consists in weighing processes.

You say yea to this thing and nay to that.

Similarly, if you take a dream, you can find a yea and a nay in that also—that is what I call the ambiguity of a dream; it is never wholeheartedly committed to one thing or the other, and so I speak of the unconscious as being balanced in itself when it is operating properly.

In all cases where the unconscious is heavily one-sided, it is so because it is out of gear.

A case in point is that of Saul and Paul—had Saul been more balanced in his conscious, his unconscious would have run a different course also, and would not have produced the full-fledged Paul overnight, so to speak.

One can follow this same principle of balance in any separate units holding a compensatory relation to one another—for example, in the relation of men and women to each other.

There is no man who could not exist without a woman—that is, he carries the necessary balance within himself if he be obliged to live his life that way, and the same thing applies to a woman with respect to a man, but if either sex is to have a complete life, it requires the other as a compensatory side.

It is the same thing with the conscious and the unconscious, and we seek analysis just to get at the benefits of the compensation from the unconscious.

Primitives show a much more balanced psychology than we do for the reason that they have no objection to letting the irrational come through, while we resent it.

Sometimes a patient becomes greatly outraged at the mere possibility of a dream or a fantasy having a sexual content, though to be sure, today it has become fashionable to recognize sexuality.

But let a dream show a moral criticism about the individual—let it say there is something unclean and ugly about you—and there is the same violent reaction that used to come with a sexual dream.

Mr. Robertson: Isn't there another way of looking at the balancing that goes on in the conscious? That is, if all four functions are in operation, does not that mean balance?

Dr. Jung: But even if all four functions are in operation, there are things that are forgotten, and the unconscious contains these.

There is a tendency among some people to make the unconscious carry what properly belongs to the conscious, and this always upsets the functioning of the unconscious.

Such people could remove much both from the personal and from the collective unconscious, and so free the unconscious to function more normally.

For example, you can run across people who think themselves born without a religious sense, and this is just as absurd as if they said they were born without eyes. It simply means they have left all that side of themselves in the unconscious.

If you get these things out of the unconscious into the conscious, then, as I said, the unconscious functions are helped.

As another example, one is always hearing persons who have had some experience of analysis saying, “I won't make up my mind about that, I'll see what my dreams say.” But there are hosts of things which call for decisions from the conscious, and about which it is idiotic to “put it up” to the unconscious for a decision.

This freeing of the unconscious of elements that really belong to the conscious is greatly aided by all the old mystery practices.

All who go through the initiation ceremonies in the right spirit find a magic quality in them, which is simply due to the effect they have had upon the unconscious.

One can develop astonishing insights through the release that comes to the unconscious in this way.

One can even come to clairvoyance; but when such a gift as the latter is developed, it makes the person permeable to all sorts of atmospheric conditions that may result in his misery.

When life becomes unbearably impoverished, people reach out for such extensions of powers, only to curse fate often when they have achieved them; but when one has fire, one welcomes the insight.

Those of you who heard Dr. Radin's last lecture remember the zigzag road that was encountered after the fourth lodge in the Medicine Dance had been passed.

At the end of the fourth lodge the initiate has been given high honors and has won great increase of powers, and now the road becomes full of appalling obstacles.

So when you relieve the unconscious of non-realized contents, you release it for its own special functioning, and it will go ahead like an animal.

You will have the zigzag road with all the fears of the primitive to be met on it, but also you will have all the wealth of his experience.

For it is a fact that, to the primitive, life is far more voluminous than to us, because there is not only the thing but also its meaning.

We look at an animal and say it is such and such a species, but if we knew that animal to be our ghost brother, it would be a different situation for us.

Or, we sit in the woods and a beetle drops down on someone’s head.

“What a nuisance,” is all the comment it elicits, but to the primitive there is meaning in that event.

Sometimes I have met this primitive reaction in my patients—an extraordinary sense of the meaningfulness of apparently trivial things in nature.

After all, an animal is not just a thing with fur on it; it is a complete being.

You may say a coyote is nothing but a coyote, but then along comes one that is Dr. Coyote, a super-animal who has mana and spiritual powers.

So says the primitive.

The unconscious should act for us like a super-animal.

When one dreams of a bull, one should not think of it as being below the human only, but also as being above—that is, as of something godlike.

Miss Houghton: If it is permissible to ask the question here, I would like to know why Americans are closer to the Far East than Europeans.

Dr. Jung: First, they are closer geographically, and secondly there are much stronger art connections of the East with America than with Europe, and then Americans are living on the soil of that race.

Miss Houghton: Do you mean ethnologically?

Dr. Jung: Yes. I was enormously struck by the resemblance of the Indian women of the Pueblos to the Swiss women in Canton Appenzell, where we have descendants of Mongolian invaders.

These might be ways of explaining the fact that something in American psychology leans toward the East.

Dr. de Angulo: Is not that to be explained from the conscious?

Dr. Jung: Yes, it might be explained that way too.

That is, Americans, being so split, turn to the East for the expression of the unconscious.

The appreciation of the Chinese in America is extraordinary.

All my knowledge of Chinese things comes from the Anglo-Saxon side, not from Europe—from England, it is true, but America is an extension of England.

Lecture:

I want to give you today a scheme for understanding such figures as I spoke of last time, that is, the anima and the wise old man.

When you analyze a man, you almost always come to these figures if you go deep enough.

At first you might not have them separated—I had three figures—but you might get them fused with an animal, say with a feminine form.

Or the animal can be split off, and there can be a hermaphroditic figure.

Then the old man and the anima are one.

All these figures correspond to certain relations of the conscious ego to the persona, and the symbolism varies according to conscious conditions.

Let us start with this diagram [2].

Take this room as consciousness: I feel myself as a luminous point in this conscious field of vision.

I am not aware of what you think, so it is a field limited in extent—outside it is the world of tangible reality.

This world can be represented to me through an object; thus, if I ask Mr. A. something he becomes my bridge to that world for that specific instant.

But if I ask myself how I establish an absolute or unconditioned connection with the world, my answer is that I can only do that when I am both passive and active at the same time, as much victim as actor.

This only occurs for a man through woman.

She is the factor that links man to the earth.

If you do not marry you may go where you please, but as soon as a man marries, he must be in some particular spot, he must put down roots.

This field of vision of which I speak is my sphere of action, and as far as my action extends, I extend my sphere of influence.

This makes my mask, but when I am active, my action can only get to you by your receiving it, thus you help make my appearance—I cannot make it alone.

In other words, I create a shell around me due to my influence on you and yours on me.

This we call persona.

The fact that there is a shell is no intentional deception; it is simply due to the fact that a system of relationships is there whereby I am never apart from the effect of the object on me.

Insofar as you live in a world, you cannot escape forming a persona.

You can say, “I won’t have such and such a persona,” but as you discard one you get another—unless, of course, you live on Everest.

You can only learn who you are through your effects on other people.

By this means you create your personality.

So much for the conscious.

On the unconscious side, we have to work by inference through dreams.

We must assume a field of vision somewhat the same, but a little peculiar since one is never exactly oneself in dreams; even sex is not always clearly defined in the unconscious.

We can assume that there are things in the unconscious also, namely images of the collective unconscious.

What is your relationship to these things?

Again it is a woman.

If you give up the woman in reality, you fall a victim to the anima.

It is this feeling of inevitability about his connection with woman that man dislikes the most.

Just when he is sure he has cut himself free of her and is moving about at last in an inner world which is his own, behold, he is in his mother’s lap! Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 109-118

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/32851-5persona.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Analytical-Psychology-Notes-Seminar-Collected/dp/0415046939/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+1925+seminar&qid=1576318829&sr=8-1`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/7981e-142bdiagram2b1.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/fe61f-142bdiagram2b2.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/79451-142bdiagram2b3.jpg`

Carl Jung and Catholicism and Protestantism (2019-12-14 04:45)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Pastor H. Wegmann

Dear Pastor Wegmann, 6 December 1945

Your standpoint, I think, is sufficiently clear.

I have nothing against it in principle, since Protestantism stands or falls by it.

There must be individual freedom in Biblical exegesis.

The only question seems to be whether this freedom should be exclusive or not.

Being gripped by Christ, as you yourself say, is no unambiguous matter.

Even those who persecute him are gripped by him.

For one person he is a human being, for another God.

•Now, the sermon is not a dialogue between two individuals but an address to a collectivity consisting of widely divergent mind .

Hence, quite rightly, the gospel should be preached, i.e., something that has the support of a consensus.

One can, it seems to me, go to extremes in two opposite directions: one man preaching his subjective standpoint, the other moving exclusively along traditional lines.

The one stirs up polemics, the other peters out in conventionality.

One need not, however, go to extremes, but only remember that the community has different needs.

Thus the fact that there is a genuine religiosity in the Catholic Church proves the existence of a need for fixed and immovable ideas and forms.

But you also come across this need with Protestants, particularly as the Bible guarantees no solid foundation.

You mention for instance the Book of Job .

For every thinking person the question arises:

What about God's omniscience?

What, above all, about his morality?

He dickers with the devil, lets himself be bamboozled by him and torments the wretched Job simply because he is unsure of himself.

It is as if a potter made a bet with his apprentice as to whether the pot he had fashioned would go kaput if he hurled it to the ground.

What does the pot, which in this case is a human being, say to that?

What does it mean when he calls upon God to help him against God?

And how does this conception of God square with the New Testament one?

How, come to that, does the layman square it with the ambiguous figure of Christ, not only with the discrepancy between the Synoptic and the Johannine Christ but also with the biographically elusive, so-called "personal" figure?

It took many centuries of the most strenuous mental effort to produce anything like a unified conception which a "keen" Protestantism deems itself entitled to cold-shoulder.

This discontinuity gives me much food for thought.

I always have the feeling of being torn up by the roots.

Protestantism pur sang strikes me as something dynamic but unbalanced which, lacking a counterweight, plunges ahead and dissolves into countless subjectivisms.

If I had any say in the matter I would suggest calling this manifestation of the individuation process, now emerging more and more clearly, no longer a denomination and not squeezing it into an ostensible Church, since Protestantism is by its very nature anti-ecclesiastical.

A Church must have a common foundation, and that foundation is certainly not the Bible nor is it the figure of Christ, which has provoked the most divergent views among the theologians themselves.

Why the devil didn’t the Protestant theologians of the day travel to the Tridentinum when safe conduct was nevertheless assured them?

The Protestants are equally to blame for it that the evolutionary process within the Church has not proceeded more rapidly.

The individuation process is a development on the native soil of Christianity.

But Protestantism is not a Church and will not be a Church, and particularly not a Counter church, although it is rooted in the Church, namely the primitive Church and its tradition.

Whatever the specialist may think about Meyer’s exegesis, I regard it as a signpost that should not be overlooked .

He brings the foundations of Protestantism closer again to the primitive Church and allows the lone wanderer, the fate-marked heretic (significantly derived from aip£’iv, to take, choose, decide for something!) to divine something of that maternal foundation where he is connected with the whole of Christendom.

And since the outpoured Holy Ghost is himself a great heretic, he also inflicts choice and agonizing decision, on all those solitaries who disturb and loosen up the Ecclesia by enriching her-provided of course that they can and want to link back to a maternal Church.

Whether the earthly Church recognizes this linking-back or not is perhaps a painful, personal, subsidiary question.

The main thing is that the linking-back should occur in the spirit, and in a spirit of childlikeness and humility.

Should the earthly Church not be present at this act, then the case is no different from that of the priest who, in the absence of a congregation, celebrates the Mass by himself.

The space the congregation otherwise fills will not be empty, and if the mother does not succour her children, then the grandmother will, who always intervenes when the mother fails.

The grandmother is less exclusive than the mother.

The Magna Mater has already had pagan children and as Ecclesia spiritualis she embraces a Christendom as huge as it is fragmented.

You write that the Protestant dynamism is endangered by the spirit of tradition.

In my opinion this danger appears only where the dynamism of the Holy Ghost is at work, that is, where a solitary heretic must strike a new path through the primeval jungle.

But where the "Holy Ghost" can be damped down by tradition, it is no longer a question of a "holy" Ghost-who cannot be damped down -but of a man-made secession which had probably better be stopped.

In Protestantism diversionary tactics have virtually been elevated into a principle, which on the one hand hinders the linking-back to the immemorial collective origin and on the other hand renders any agreement on what has been achieved impossible.

Because of his narrow spiritual foundation the Protestant is constantly driven into spiritual arrogance, of which, as you know, we have some terrifying examples before our eyes.

The Catholic, however, has to squander his best energies in papering over the crumbling Church walls, while the religious problems slip out of his hands into those of the Protestants, who create the greatest confusion by carrying them to extremes.

Meyer’s book has opened my eyes again to the truly neurotic situation of the Christian today.

The highest cultural principles of the West glower at each other across the schism-the Christian is split within himself.

Therefore it is quite possible that the devil will overrun the world.

A universal Church would have more authority than a split one.

It is clear that the Catholic Church cannot give up her claim to catholicity without collapsing into nothing.

If on the other hand Protestantism were to give up its ambitious claim to be itself a Church, it would have lost nothing but only gained itself, whole and complete.

You cannot have both, Church and freedom, and if both want both undiminished, no Solomon will be found to pronounce judgment.

Anyone who wants both must sacrifice something on both sides.

The tragedy is that the two creeds cannot bring this to pass.

Ecclesia semper catholica aut nihil, but Protestantism culminates in the individual.

The claim of the Church is legitimate in principle, and so is the individual's.

To share in the tradition the Protestant would definitely have to sacrifice some of his subjectivism and spiritual arrogance, and for the sake of catholicity the Church would have to make some radical exceptions to the rule.

Forgive me, my dear Pastor, that this letter has turned out so long.

Your decisive standpoint has enabled me to formulate my thoughts about the schism in the Church.

And for that I am sincerely grateful to you.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 395-398.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/8dec6-church.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2YWT5XZQ4XY2W&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576319056&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung: "Everything that irritates us about others can lead us to an understanding of ourselves" in context. (2019-12-14 04:49)

[1]

Keystone-France via Getty Images

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

[Carl Jung: “Everything that irritates us about others can lead us to an understanding of ourselves” in context.]

We always require an outside point to stand on, in order to apply the lever of criticism.

This is especially so in psychology, where by the nature of the material we are much more subjectively involved than in any other science.

How, for example, can we become conscious of national peculiarities if we have never had the opportunity to regard our own nation from outside?

Regarding it from outside means regarding it from the standpoint of another nation.

To do so, we must acquire sufficient knowledge of the foreign collective psyche, and in the course of this process of assimilation we encounter all those in compatibilities which constitute the national bias and the national peculiarity.

Everything that irritates us about others can lead us to an understanding of ourselves.

I understand England only when I see where I, as a Swiss, do not fit in. I understand Europe, our greatest problem, only when I see where I as a European do not fit into the world.

Through my acquaintance with many Americans, and my trips to and in America, I have obtained an enormous amount of insight into the European character; it has always seemed to me that there can be nothing more useful for a European than some time or another to look out at Europe from the top of a skyscraper.

When I contemplated for the first time the European spectacle from the Sahara, surrounded by a civilization which has more or less the same relationship to ours as Roman antiquity has to modern times, I became aware of how completely, even in America, I was still caught up and imprisoned in the cultural consciousness of the white man.

The desire then grew in me to carry the historical comparisons still farther by descending to a still lower cultural level. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Pages 246-247.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/ec7e9-bias.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Ukemi-Audiobooks-Memories-Dreams-Reflections/dp/B01BW37JXE/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1ST586B80441&keywords=carl+jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qi`

Carl Jung on Physical and Psychic processes. (2019-12-15 03:50)

[1]

To Markus Fierz

Dear Professor Fierz, 7 May 1945

Best thanks for your prompt and detailed answer, which I found very satisfactory.

I am particularly pleased with your suggested change on p. 25, which is much more promising than my version.

I quite agree with your view that the situation indicated in this sentence is similar to the situation in psychology where discrimination is the precondition of knowledge, only it seems to me a sidetrack which, though entirely right in itself, does not, as you yourself remark, quite fit into the context of my argument.

The ego-complex consists of all conscious contents, since consciousness is the exponent of the whole personality.

Hence its contents are also of a personal nature and must be distinguished from those of the objective psyche.

My argument is concerned with a more general reflection, namely the reconstruction of the physical process as a psychic process.

The parallel to this is the idea that the psychic process would, conversely, also be ”reconstructed" as a physical process.

The physical reconstruction would differ from the psychic in that it is not really a construction but would have to be conceived as an end-state or as an influence on the physical process, much as Schrodinger conceives it in his new English publication What Is Life?-an influencing of the physical processes by the psychic.

The materialistic premise is that the physical process causally determines the psychic process.

The spiritualistic premise is the reverse of this.

I think of this relationship in the physical sense as a reciprocal one, in which now one side and now the other acts as a cause.

One could also say that under certain conditions the physical process reflects itself in the psychic, just as the psychic does in the physical.

Of the utmost importance, it seems to me, is your information that the result of a measurement is essentially conditioned by the very nature of the measurement.

From this it is evident that an objective and absolute measurement is actually impossible.

Nevertheless a certain amount of measurement and a certain amount of knowledge of the physical are rendered possible by the psychic.

We would have to conclude that a certain molding and influencing of the physical process by the psychic are objectively present.

Whether this can be proved is naturally another matter.

If, faced with a reciprocal relationship, we can speak of an Archimedean point at all, then in my view such a point would be at least theoretically possible, since for the physical world there is an "outside" in the psychic, and consequently the physical would be an "outside" for the psychic at least in theory.

Your idea that the behaviour of physical processes is essentially conditioned by the physicist's method and mode of observation is very interesting.

If we apply this idea to psychic processes, then psychological observation would also be prejudicial to the behaviour of the psyche.

In both cases the physical as well as the psychic would be needed. for the purpose of complementation, from which it follows that an approximately adequate knowledge of the physical could be completed by psychic complementation and, conversely, that any psychological knowledge could be completed only by knowledge of the physical.

In accordance with your view, psychology would be faced with the difficult task of explaining what the explanation of the physical as a psychic process actually means, and physics would be faced with the equally impossible task of explaining what are the physics of psychological theory.

Actually this seems to me possible only if, by a combination of physical and psychic knowledge, one could reach a plane above and beyond the present dichotomous mode of observation by virtue of being in possession of both standpoints.

I have a vague recollection that Pauli once said something similar.

I still have a lot of thinking to do as regards your opinion that the moral commitment of psychological knowledge involves a crucial difference between this and the physicist's knowledge.

At the moment I could not say anything adequate.

The moral "ought" is certainly, in itself, a genuine phenomenon, but whether it signifies a radical difference still seems to me somehow questionable.

Again with best thanks,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 365-367.

Note: The changed passage occurs in "Analytical Psychology and Education," par. 163 : "As physics has to relate its measurements to objects, it is obliged to distinguish the observing medium from the thing observed, with the result that the categories of space, time, and causality become relative."

Note: F. wrote: "Therefore I do not know whether it is not just the mathematical unequivocality but the moral non-commitment of physics which can be understood as a justification for the peculiar equivocality of psychology, which on the other hand is morally committed."

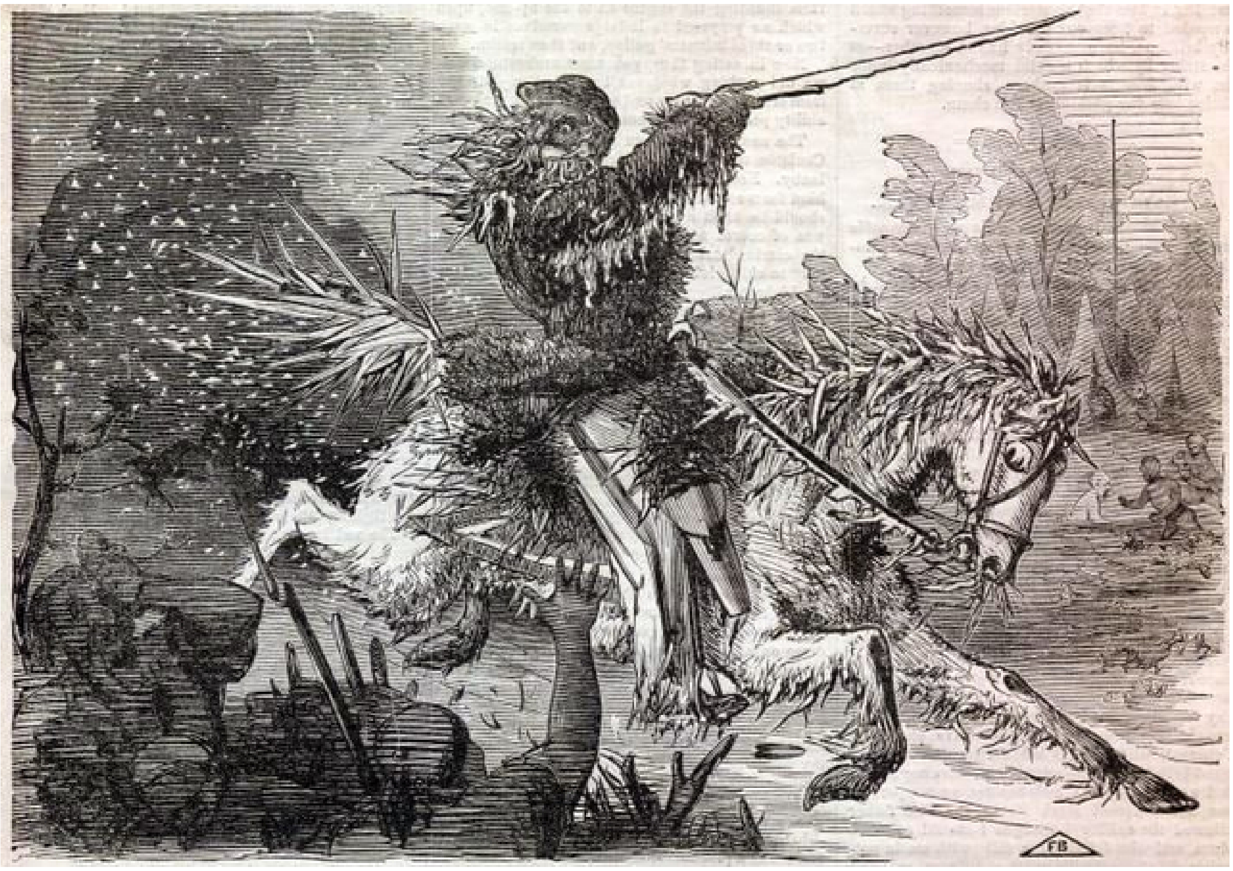
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/67950-ancestor.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1TALUJTZWTE00&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576400905&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung and “What does the Jack Frost in our Dream signify?" (2019-12-15 03:53)

[1]



What does Jack Frost in our dream signify?

Participant: Death wants to get to the dreamer.

Professor Jung:

Yes, it is not yet spring, and winter is here already.

Participant: Do we have to see the figure of Jack Frost in such a negative light? If he wants to take the dreamer into the forest, this might perhaps only mean a state of introversion, out of which a new content could arise.

Professor Jung:

Such an optimistic interpretation is not appropriate here.

We must not forget that the dream has no lysis, and that it is extremely meager.

It is impossible to conceive of the figure of Jack Frost, therefore, as positive.

Even if the Samichlaus appeared in his place, it would be misleading to think of a joyous children's party or any other merry event.

We have to try to grasp Jack Frost in his ominous meaning, as the one who freezes all life.

We also have to stick to the dream, in which the child does not experience joy, but fear of the ghost of coldness.

And this figure touches her!

Participant: This increases the negative effect of this figure. It is similar to the Erlking.

Professor Jung:

Yes, the Erlking is also such a ghost.

In Goethe's poem the increasing anxiety of the child is beautifully expressed, until the moment where he says:

"Dear father, oh father, he seizes my arm! The Erlking, father, has done me harm!"

Then the child dies.

Participant: It also seems very dangerous to me that Jack Frost touches the girl on her belly.

Professor Jung:

Yes, the belly is the kitchen, the stove, radiating warmth. In the belly we are sheltered as long as we are embryos.

If we are cold, we'd like to crawl into our own belly to warm up.

This place of warmth is also the origin and the center of all life; this is expressed in the word "liver," the main organ in the abdomen.

It is "the liver," he who lives.

Participant: Can we see from the dream if this is about a psychical or physical death?

Professor Jung:

This is not easy to see.

Let us assume that the child told this dream at the age of ten, that is, at a time when there was no visible sign of a neurosis yet.

In this case, I would really have been in doubt whether it referred to a physical or a spiritual death.

I would have been able to say only that the dream indicated something extremely alarming, but I would not have been able to decide if this would later lead to an obsessional neurosis, to a psychosis, or to suicide.

But then the dreamer took her own life at the age of thirty-six in a mental institution!

The psychosis began with extreme anxiety states that intensified until the fatal end.

The dream does contain a detail that could point to the suicide.

She herself intervened in her life with a cold hand.

Participant: Was this the reason why she escaped into masturbation? Was it an attempt to keep herself warm?

Professor Jung:

Yes, for her it was a defensive move, an apotropaic magic, a stress on life in aspectu mortis, just as people may become sexually aroused when they are in mortal danger or confronted with hopeless, life-threatening situations.

There was ample evidence of this desperate eroticism in the earthquake at Messina.

It is as if the life instinct asserted itself, and as if life tried to affirm itself in a quandmême.

145 So, you see, the dream is very tragic.

I would not hesitate to make a connection between the fact that the dreamer pinched herself and the suicidal outcome. Any more questions?

Participant: You mentioned that the dreamer at first fell ill with an obsessional neurosis, which masked a latent psychosis. How did the psychosis become manifest?

Professor Jung:

Behind each classical obsessional neurosis a psychosis is hidden.

In the dreamer the mental illness broke out when the voices began to become audible.

From then on the process could not be arrested by anything.

Participant: Doesn't emotion also originate in the belly?

Professor Jung:

Yes, of course, it is the seat of the solar plexus, where the psychical and the physical are still one.

But you must not conceive of the belly as too complicated.

It is merely the center of warmth, the seat of life.

Because the psychical and the physical are still one in it, it is hard to tell if it was a physical or a psychical illness that prematurely destroyed the dreamer.

The unconscious actually does not seem to care one way or the other.

Moreover, the unconscious has a different relation to death than we ourselves have.

For example, it is very surprising in which way dreams anticipate death.

Often this does not happen the way we look at death, but in a completely different manner.

You will find something analogous in astrology or also in chiromancy and other ancient "mancies," in which the indications for death are also very questionable.

It is as if death was something other than what we think.

That is, approximately, how we could put it.

It might be linked to the fact that the unconscious has a different relation to time than we have.

In the unconscious there exist, so to speak, an elastic space and an elastic time.

It seems as if these deeper layers of the psyche were characterized by particularly strange features, and this, of course, is also expressed in dreams.

So I would not have dared to predict from the dream's character if a physical or psychical death was implied.

Participant: Wouldn't it have helped the dreamer if she had later gone to a female analyst? What she missed was probably primitive, vital warmth. Perhaps she never received enough maternal love; moreover, the dream expresses a very negative attitude toward men.

Professor Jung:

If we are dealing, as in this dream, with such deep- reaching and life-threatening affairs, the sex is no longer of importance.

In these cases, a physical force has to intervene, a force that pulls the person out of the predicament and saves her from drowning, so to speak.

These fine details no longer play a role, and it doesn't make any difference at all if it is a man or a woman who tries to come to the rescue. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 341-344.

Jack Frost is a figure believed to have originated in Viking folklore, an elfish creature who personifies crisp, cold, winter weather. He is said to leave frosty crystal patterns on leaves and windows on cold mornings. It is also thought that the English derived the name Jack Frost from the Norse character names, Jokul ("icicle") and Frosti ("frost") (trans.). Children's Dreams Seminar, Footnote 138, Page 338.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/85fca-frost.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+children+dreams+seminar&qid=1576401015&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: The Spirit Prompts Me to Write You (2019-12-15 03:55)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Dear Victor, 16 December 1948

The spirit prompts me to write to you.

It is quite a while ago since I have heard of you and very much longer since I have heard you really.

I may be all wrong, but I confess to have a feeling as if when you were in America a door had been shut, softly but tightly.

I don’t want to disturb you, but I feel as if I ought to tell you about my fantasy, so that you know my side of the picture at least.

I know there are things somewhere too damned difficult to be even mentioned, but they should not cut you off entirely.

It is not bad for you to get a breath from the great wind of the world occasionally and from all the dark things "that go bump in the night."

That is why I take the liberty of knocking at your door.

I suppose you are very busy.

Don't feel pressed for an answer, please!

I am looking for my own peace and that is the reason why I tell you about my qualms.

Having done so I recline in my grandfather's chair going on dreaming about Virgil's "Tityre, tu patulae recubans sub tegmine fagi … "

Light that wants to shine needs darkness.

Cordially yours,

C.G. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 514.

Note: Virgil, Eclogue, I,1: "Tityrus, thou liest canopied beneath thy spreading beech."

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/f273c-white.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1TALUJTZWTE00&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576400905&sprefix=jung+let`

E.A. Bennet: C.G. told me that his name was on the black List in Germany because of his views, (2019-12-15 04:30)

[1]

[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Küsnacht, 29th March 1946

Arriving from Geneva yesterday I was met by car at the station in Zürich and reached the Seestrasse just before one o'clock.

With C.G. and Mrs. Jung were their daughter and son-in-law, Marianne and Walther Niehus, and two children, a girl of about sixteen and a boy of six – also C.G.'s secretary, Miss Schmid.

We sat down to a lovely lunch – fish mayonnaise followed by beef, then biscuits, and afterwards coffee on the verandah.

Later I had a long talk with C.G. till tea-time, and left about five.

He looks very fit, is most alert, and appears in excellent health though he says his heart is a bit weak – he can't do hills and must go slowly upstairs.

He spoke of the sense of isolation in Switzerland in 1940.

They were expecting a German invasion, and one day his brother-in-law at Schaffhausen sent a message warning him that the Germans might come that night.

He took his wife and daughter and his daughter-in-law (who was eight months pregnant) to a refugium in east Switzerland by car.

The general plan was that in the event of invasion the Swiss would evacuate the flat ground near Zürich, and fight in the hills where they would blow up the railway tunnels, the Gotthard and others.

This was a big factor, a trump card – Switzerland would be useless to the Germans without communications To Italy.

He listened daily to the B.B.C. and knew that England was the only hope, and that they would never give in.

He said that until 1935 it had seemed possible, in Germany and Italy, that some good could come from Nazi-ism.

Germany was transformed; instead of roads crowded with people without work, all was changed and peaceful.

Then he saw other things and knew it was evil.

He began to speak against it – as at the Oxford Congress for instance – and did so increasingly.

He showed me an American article which had been falsely translated, misquoting him on the subject: his phrase 'looking with amazed eyes' (at the trend of events in Europe) had been transcribed as 'looking with admiring eyes'.

He said it had been answered.

He became so outspoken in his criticisms of Germany that Mrs. Jung was afraid he would get into trouble, with so much German influence in Zürich.

Referring to the rumours of his so-called Nazi sympathies, C.G. told me that his name was on the black List in Germany because of his views, and that he would certainly have been shot at once had he fallen into Nazi hands.

He said that at the Oxford Congress he had asked Göring if he thought there would be a war, and Göring replied, 'Well, if there is there will be a round table conference later.'

C.G. added that this would never have happened had Germany won.

Of Russia – he said Stalin was clever and no fool.

He [Jung] had feared much when the Russians came into the war; but then he had a striking dream, of which he told me a part:

He was in a vast field with, in the distance, buildings like barracks.

The place was filled with hordes of buffalos (i.e. Germans).

He was on a mound, and Hitler was on another mound.

He felt that as long as he fixed his gaze on Hitler all would be well.

Then he saw a cloud of dust in the distance, and horsemen – Cossacks – rounding up the buffalos and driving them out of the field.

Then he woke and was glad, for he knew that Germany would be beaten by Russia.

This, he said, was a collective dream, and very important.

Various chat.

I told him of the Stalingrad sword incident and of Chamberlain forgetting his umbrella at Godesburgh.

C.G. was most interested in the former, and said of the latter that when people leave without an object that belongs to them it means that they are unconscious of something – as patients forget their notebook or bag etc.; it is not simply an indication that they don't want to go, or want to come back.

He has had a long correspondence with Father Victor White of Blackfriars, Oxford, and is very impressed by him and his learning.

They publish a magazine, Blackfriars.

Both he and Mrs. Jung told me that he was publishing all his papers about Germany and the Nazis; the book is already in print and will be translated. E.A. Bennett, Conversations with Jung, Pages 23-27

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

Great Sites to visit:

1. Jenna Lilla's Path of the Soul http://jennalilla.org/

2. Steve Jung-Hearted Parker's Jung Currents http://jungcurrents.com/
3. Frith Luton's Jungian Dream Analysis and Psychotherapy: http://frithluton.com/articles/
4. Lance S. Owen Gnosis Archive http://gnosis.org/welcome.html

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/ac7c7-342bbennet.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017`

Carl Jung on the Dreams and Death of a 62 Year Old Woman. (2019-12-15 05:28)

[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

In my rather long psychological experience I have observed a great many people whose unconscious psychic activity I was able to follow into the immediate presence of death.

As a rule the approaching end was indicated by those symbols which, in normal life also, proclaim changes of psychological condition—rebirth symbols such as changes of locality, journeys, and the like.

I have frequently been able to trace back for over a year, in a dream-series, the indications of approaching death, even in cases where such thoughts were not prompted by the outward situation.

Dying, therefore, has its onset long before actual death.

Moreover, this often shows itself in peculiar changes of personality which may precede death by quite a long time.

On the whole, I was astonished to see how little ado the unconscious psyche makes of death.

It would seem as though death were something relatively unimportant, or perhaps our psyche does not bother about what happens to the individual.

But it seems that the unconscious is all the more interested in how one dies; that is, whether the attitude of consciousness is adjusted to dying or not.

For example, I once had to treat a woman of sixty-two.

She was still hearty, and moderately intelligent.

It was not for want of brains that she was unable to understand her dreams.

It was unfortunately only too clear that she did not want to understand them.

Her dreams were very plain, but also very disagreeable.

She had got it fixed in her head that she was a faultless mother to her children, but the children did not share this view at all, and the dreams too displayed a conviction very much to the contrary.

I was obliged to break off the treatment after some weeks of fruitless effort because I had to leave for military service (it was during the war).

In the meantime the patient was smitten with an incurable disease, leading after a few months to a moribund condition which might bring about the end at any moment.

Most of the time she was in a sort of delirious or somnambulistic state, and in this curious mental condition she spontaneously resumed the analytical work.

She spoke of her dreams again and acknowledged to herself everything that she had previously denied to me with the greatest vehemence, and a lot more besides.

This self-analytic work continued daily for several hours, for about six weeks.

At the end of this period she had calmed herself, just like a patient during normal treatment, and then she died. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 809

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_4?keywords=carl+jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=1576431422&s=books&sr=1-`

Carl Jung: Everything psychic is pregnant with the future. (2019-12-16 03:30)

[1]
[2]The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche (Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Volume 8)

It would all be so much simpler if only we could deny the existence of the psyche.

But here we are with our immediate experiences of something that is—something that has taken root in the midst of our measurable, ponderable, three dimensional reality, that differs mysteriously from this in every respect and in all its parts, and yet reflects it.

The psyche could be regarded as a mathematical point and at the same time as a universe of fixed stars.

It is small wonder, then, if, to the unsophisticated mind, such a paradoxical being borders on the divine.

If it occupies no space, it has no body.

It would all be so much simpler if only we could deny the existence of the psyche.

But here we are with our immediate experiences of something that is—something that has taken root in the midst of our measurable, ponderable, three dimensional reality, that differs mysteriously from this in every respect and in all its parts, and yet reflects it.

The psyche could be regarded as a mathematical point and at the same time as a universe of fixed stars.

It is small wonder, then, if, to the unsophisticated mind, such a paradoxical being borders on the divine.

If it occupies no space, it has no body.

Bodies die, but can something invisible and incorporeal disappear?

What is more, life and psyche existed for me before I could say "I," and when this "I" disappears, as in sleep or unconsciousness, life and psyche still go on, as our observation of other people and our own dreams inform us.

Why should the simple mind deny, in the face of such experiences, that the "soul" lives in a realm beyond the body? Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 671

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/2830d-12bcarl.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Structure-Dynamics-Psyche-Collected-Works/dp/0691097747/ref=sr_1_1?crid=11WYBE0RHNTY3&keywords=the+structure+of+the+psyche+carl+jung&qid=

Carl Jung to Alan Watts on the "Wheel of Life" (2019-12-16 04:30)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Alan W. Watts

Dear Sir, 21 December 1936

I’m sorry to be so late in thanking you for kindly sending me the "Wheel of Life."

I have seen it already.

As you rightly point out, it is not exactly what I meant by mandalas, although figuratively it is a mandala.

There are as you certainly know two kinds: the one I would call a mandala proper, namely for purposes of magic and worship, generally yoga practices.

And the other, the cosmic, geographical, "scientific" mandala.

The "Wheel of Life" belongs to the latter category.

It is a close parallel to our Western cosmological, geographical, and physiological representations, of which you find plenty of examples in alchemistic philosophy and in the early mystical texts (f.i. Hildegard von Bingen).

The Trinity is very frequently the centre.

Such mandalas are usually based upon even numbers.

That is as you see the reason why I said that I haven't come across Buddhist mandalas based upon 3, 5, or 6 (2 x 3) .

I'm most indebted to you for mentioning the literature concerning the "Wheel."

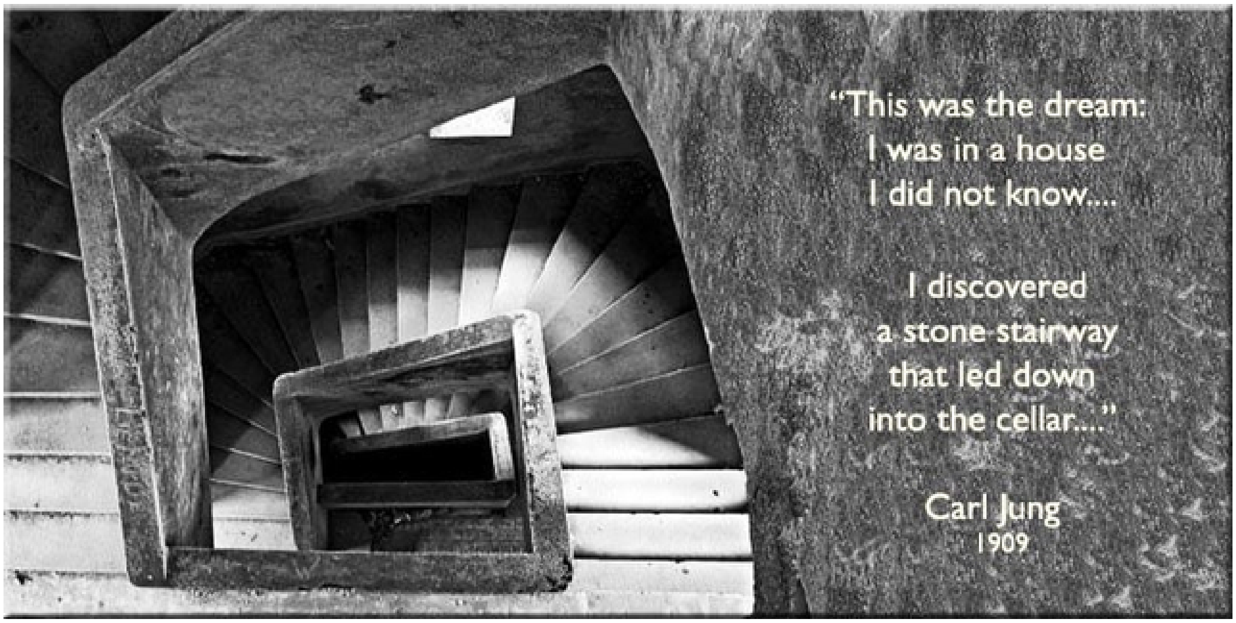
Yours truly,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 222-223

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/e09b8-12bwheel.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=44NQSQW4OMZU&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576489341&sprefix=jung+l%2C`

The dream that preceded Jung's concept of the collective unconscious... (2019-12-16 04:58)

[1]



"This was the dream:
I was in a house
I did not know....
I discovered a stone stairway that led down into the cellar...."
Carl Jung
1909

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

The dream that preceded Jung's concept of the collective unconscious, with his comments about it from Memories, Dreams, Reflections:

“This was the dream. I was in a house I did not know, which had two stories. It was ‘my house.’ I found myself in the upper story, where there was a kind of salon furnished with fine old pieces in rococo style. On the walls hung a number of precious old paintings. I wondered that this should be my house, and thought, ‘Not bad.’ But then it occurred to me that I did not know what the lower floor looked like.

Descending the stairs, I reached the ground floor. There everything was much older, and I realized that this part of the house must date from about the fifteenth or sixteenth century. The furnishings were medieval; the floors were of red brick. Everywhere it was rather dark.

I went from one room to another, thinking, ‘Now I really must explore the whole house.’ I came upon a heavy door, and opened it. Beyond it, I discovered a stone stairway that led down into the cellar. Descending again, I found myself in a beautifully vaulted room which looked exceedingly ancient. Examining the walls, I discovered layers of brick among the ordinary stone blocks, and chips of brick in the mortar.

As soon as I saw this I knew that the walls dated from Roman times. My interest by now was intense. I looked more closely at the floor. It was of stone slabs, and in one of these I discovered a ring. When I pulled it, the stone slab lifted, and again I saw a stairway of narrow stone steps leading down into the depths.

These, too, I descended, and entered a low cave cut into the rock. Thick dust lay on the floor, and in the dust were scattered bones and broken pottery, like remains of a primitive culture. I discovered two human skulls, obviously very old and half disintegrated. Then I awoke…

It was plain to me that the house represented a kind of image of the psyche–that is to say, of my then state of consciousness, with hitherto unconscious additions. Consciousness was represented by the salon. It had an inhabited atmosphere, in spite of its antiquated style.

The ground floor stood for the first level of the unconscious. The deeper I went, the more alien and the darker the scene came. In the cave, I discovered remains of a primitive culture, that is, the world of the primitive man within myself–a world which can scarcely be reached or illuminated by consciousness. The primitive psyche of man borders on the life of the animal soul, just as the caves of prehistoric times were usually inhabit by animals before men laid claim to them.

During this period I became aware of how keenly I felt the difference between Freud’s intellectual attitude and mine. I had grown up in the intensely historical atmosphere of Basel at the end of the nineteenth century, and had acquired, thanks to reading the old philosophers, some knowledge of the history of psychology.

When I thought about dreams and the contents of the unconscious, I never did so without making historical comparisons;… . I was especially familiar with the writers of the eighteenth and early nineteenth century. Theirs was the world which had formed the atmosphere of my first-story salon….

The dream pointed out that there were further reaches to the state of consciousness… : the long uninhabited ground floor in medieval style, then the Roman cellar, and finally the prehistoric cave. These signified past times and passed stages of consciousness.

Certain questions had been much on my mind during the days preceding this dream. They were: On what premises is Freudian psychology founded?… What is the relationship of its almost exclusive personalism to general historical assumptions? My dream was giving me the answer. It obviously pointed to the foundations of cultural history–a history of successive layers of consciousness.

My dream thus constituted a kind of structural diagram of the human psyche; it postulated something of an altogether impersonal nature underlying that psyche. It ‘clicked,’ as the English have it–and the dream became for me a guiding image…

This was my first inkling of a collective a priori beneath the personal psyche.” Carl Jung. MDR, Pages 158-159

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/9a833-dream.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-C-Jung/dp/0679723951/ref=tmm_pap_swatch_0?_encoding=UTF8&qid=1576490893&sr=8-1`

Our souls as well as our bodies are composed of individual elements... (2019-12-16 05:07)

[1]

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

Our souls as well as our bodies are composed of individual elements which were all already present in the ranks of our ancestors.

The "newness" in the individual psyche is an endlessly varied recombination of age-old components.

Body and soul therefore have an intensely historical character and find no proper place in what is new, in things that have just come into being.

That is to say, our ancestral components are only partly at home in such things.

We are very far from having finished completely with the Middle Ages, classical antiquity, and primitivity, as our modern psyches pretend. Nevertheless, we have plunged down a cataract of progress which sweeps us on into the future with ever wilder violence the farther it takes us from our roots.

Once the past has been breached, it is usually annihilated, and there is no stopping the forward motion.

But it is precisely the loss of connection with the past, our uprootedness, which has given rise to the "discontents" of civilization and to such a flurry and haste that we live more in the future and its chimerical promises of a golden age than in the present, with which our whole evolutionary background has not yet caught up.

We rush impetuously into novelty, driven by a mounting sense of insufficiency, dissatisfaction, and restlessness.” Carl G. Jung - Memories, Dreams, Reflections, Pages 158-159

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/70242-nesrin.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-C-Jung/dp/0679723951/ref=tmm_pap_swatch_0?_encoding=UTF8&qid=1576490893&sr=8-1`

The real mystery does not behave mysteriously or secretively... (2019-12-16 05:11)

[1]

“I am not speaking of a secret personally guarded by someone, with a content known to its possessor, but of a mystery....”

C.G. Jung

Image: Aurora Consurgens

www.jungcurrents.com

[2]Psychology and Alchemy (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.12)

The real mystery does not behave mysteriously or secretively; it speaks a secret language, it adumbrates itself by a variety of images which all indicate its true nature. I am not speaking of a secret personally guarded by someone, with a content known to its possessor, but of a mystery, a matter or circumstance which is “secret,” i.e., known only through vague hints but essentially unknown.

The real nature of matter was unknown to the alchemist: he knew it only in hints. In seeking to explore it he projected the unconscious into the darkness of matter in order to illuminate it.

In order to explain the mystery of matter he projected yet another mystery – his own psychic background - into what was to be explained: Obscurum per obscurius, ignotum per ignotius! This procedure was not, of course, intentional; it was an involuntary occurrence.” Carl Jung, CW 12, Page 244

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/a347d-amnot.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Alchemy-Collected-Works-Vol-12/dp/0691018316/ref=sr_1_3?crid=1FHY4987S6S7E&keywords=jung+psychology+and+alchemy&qid=1576508711`

Carl Jung and "... the prolongation of the cross downwards signifies a predominance of the unconscious is not improbable.” (2019-12-16 05:53)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Udo Rukser

Dear Herr Rukser, 6 September 1947

Your conjecture that the prolongation of the cross downwards signifies a predominance of the unconscious is not improbable.

I have always regarded this prolongation as a moving upwards of the triad which goes together with the Christian Trinity symbol, i.e., with the predominance of the so-called "upper triad" representing the spirit.

The more strongly the spiritual element comes to the forefront, the greater the danger of its becoming identical with consciousness.

There then supervenes, as you correctly surmise, a compensatory emphasis on the unconscious.

You are also right when you conjecture that a one-sided orientation of consciousness always leads to a counter-reaction.

The greater the danger of mass-mindedness, the stronger the emphasis on the individual.

The fact, for instance, that our age has truly discovered the unconscious comes under this head, as well as the widespread interest in psychology, which to begin with looked like an exclusively subjective affair.

But with psychology the real man becomes a problem, that is to say the individual, for there are no other men except individuals.

In this movement, widely supported by the public, there is already an attempt to combat mass-mindedness and the resultant totalitarianism.

The interest in psychology has the inevitable consequence that individual self-awareness is heightened, which we know from experience is the best weapon against the devastating influence of the mass psyche.

If this movement forges ahead and increases in scope, the greatest threat to our civilization would be checked.

But if the reaction fails, we must inevitably look forward to further frightful catastrophes, for mass man breeds mass catastrophe.

The greatest dangers today are the huge mass States like Russia and America .

However, history teaches that such monsters are usually short-lived.

That at least is a hope!

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 476-477.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/4b1f2-cross.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=ISFDKRH1SKGT&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576508923&sprefix=jung+lett`

Carl Jung’s touching letter to Aniela Jaffe. (2019-12-16 06:10)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Aniela Jaffe

Dear Aniela, Bollingeil, 10 August 1947

I thank you with all my heart for your response to my "Trinity": I couldn't imagine a more beautiful one. It is a "total" reaction, and it had a "total" effect on me too.

You have perfectly imaged what I imagined into my work.

It again became clear to me from your letter how much one misses when one receives no response or a mere fragment, and what a joy it is to experience the opposite-a creative resonance which is at the same time like a revelation of the feminine being.

[3]

It is as though a wine, which by dint of toil and sweat, worry and care has finally become mature and good, were being poured into a precious beaker.

Without this receptacle and acceptance a man's work remains a delicate child, followed with doubting eyes and released into the world with inner anxiety.

But when a soul opens to the work, it is as though a seed were lodged in good earth, or the gates of a city were closed in the evening, so that it can enjoy surer repose.

I thank you.

Cordially,

C.G.J. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 474.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/6b70f-jaffe.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=ISFDKRH1SKGT&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576508923&sprefix=jung+lett`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/48c85-2j.jpg`

Carl Jung and "astrology, in the sequence of the historical ages." (2019-12-16 07:12)

[1]

Another parallel is given by astrology, in the sequence of the historical ages.

About six thousand years ago, the first historical written records were made in the Age of Taurus.

The earth element is assigned to the constellation Taurus.

In ancient Egypt, the spirit found its expression through the medium of matter, the stone, and the earth.

Two thousand years later, the vernal equinox entered the constellation Aries.

With that, a fiery age began, as witnessed by Moses, when he sees God in a fiery bush, or when God appears to His people as a pillar of fire.

Around the birth of Christ, there follows the Age of Pisces.

Pisces is a water sign.

That is probably why we have to look for the spirit in the water, in life's flow of images, and in the unconscious.

And now we are on the threshold of the sign of Aquarius.

The air element is assigned to it, and it is symbolized by an angel or a human being, instead of an animal.

Here the spirit is meant to become something subtle again, and man to become who he is.

This juxtaposition shows what is meant by man in general and by the one person in our dream.

These final stages correspond to the lotuses of Atman-, Purusha-, or God-knowledge.

It is a union with Christ and an experience of the self, or an anthropogenesis that will be fully realized only in the coming Age of Aquarius.

I am not able to make this reaching of the final stage clear to you.

Let me quote instead from Meister Eckhart's sermons.

You surely know the words of Meister Eckhart: "All nature means man."

And another one: "All creatures feel an urge to rise from their lives to their inner nature. All creatures carry my reason within themselves, so that they may gain reason in me. I alone again prepare all creatures for God!" (All creatures—thus also man!)

And about the final transformation: “When the soul has to realize that no creature at all can come into the Kingdom of God, it begins to feel itself, goes its own way and no longer seeks God. Only then does it die its highest death. In this death the soul loses all desire, all capability of thinking, all form, and is deprived of all essence.
Now at last it finds itself in the highest primordial image, in which God lives and is active, where He is His own kingdom.”

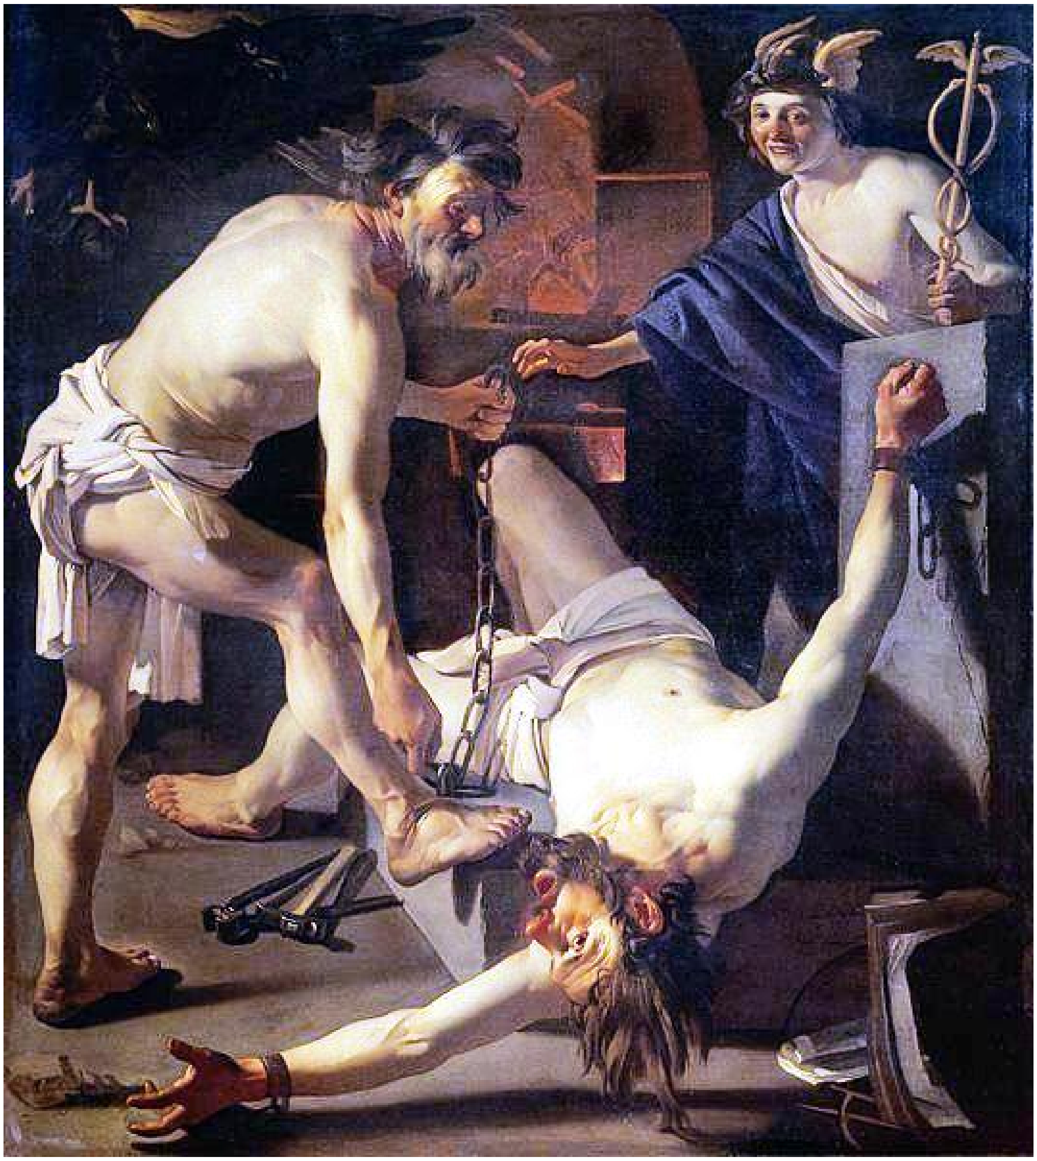
Here the soul has found out that it itself is the “Kingdom of God.”

That is why the Church Fathers particularly stress “that the humanness of Jesus must not be just adored separately from the deity, but both have to be worshiped together in one single act.” Carl Jung, Children’s Dreams Seminar, Pages 353-355.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/0e299-astro.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3OZD0HC6OA1EW&keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1576509367&s`

Consciousness should defend its reason (2019-12-16 07:17)

[1]



[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

Consciousness should defend its reason and protect itself, and the chaotic life of the unconscious should be given the chance of having its way too–as much of it as we can stand. This means open conflict and open collaboration at once. That, evidently, is the way human life should be. It is the old game of hammer and anvil: between them the patient iron is forged into an indestructible whole, an "individual."[Conscious, Unconscious, and Individuation," Carl Jung, CW 9i, par. 522.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/fe6f1-pro.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2G0PTP7L9JUQR&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+colle`

Carl Jung and Tantric Yoga in the Dream of a Child. (2019-12-16 07:20)

[1] C. G. Jung
The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga
Notes of the Seminar Given in 1932 by C. G. Jung
Edited by Sonu Shamdasani
BOLLINGEN XCIX

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

I think there is a very elaborate parallel in Tantric Yoga.

This visualizing yoga knows seven mandalas, situated one above the other, which correspond to certain body parts, and which are successively to be awakened and meditated by the ascending Kundalini serpent.

The lowest of these mandalas is the earth lotus.

It corresponds to the gray mouse.

It is the place of the world-bound souls.

In its center there is the lingam, colored like a fresh sapling, perhaps reminiscent of a worm.

Coiled around the lingam, the Kundalini serpent sleeps.

In it sleeps the essence of the highest experience.

When it awakens, it ascends, passing through all lotuses to bring them to life.

It is the driving force, the compulsion to become conscious.

The animals in our dream can be seen as a transformational form of the Kundalini.

The dragon in the second lotus corresponds to the snakes in our dream.

Above, there is the fire circle, the center of emotions.

This is the navel lotus, in the region of the solar plexus.

The fish correspond to the heart-lotus, with a fleeing antelope.

Nearby there is the place of the "divine wish-tree." In this lotus thinking begins.

Then follows the ether airspace or firmament-lotus, which reveals its connection with the blue mouse by its blue ovary and by its name, "circle of purification and ablution."

Above, in the two-leaved, winged circle of knowledge, there are no longer any animals.

There the yogi sees the highest, eternal god, the incarnate, primordial man.

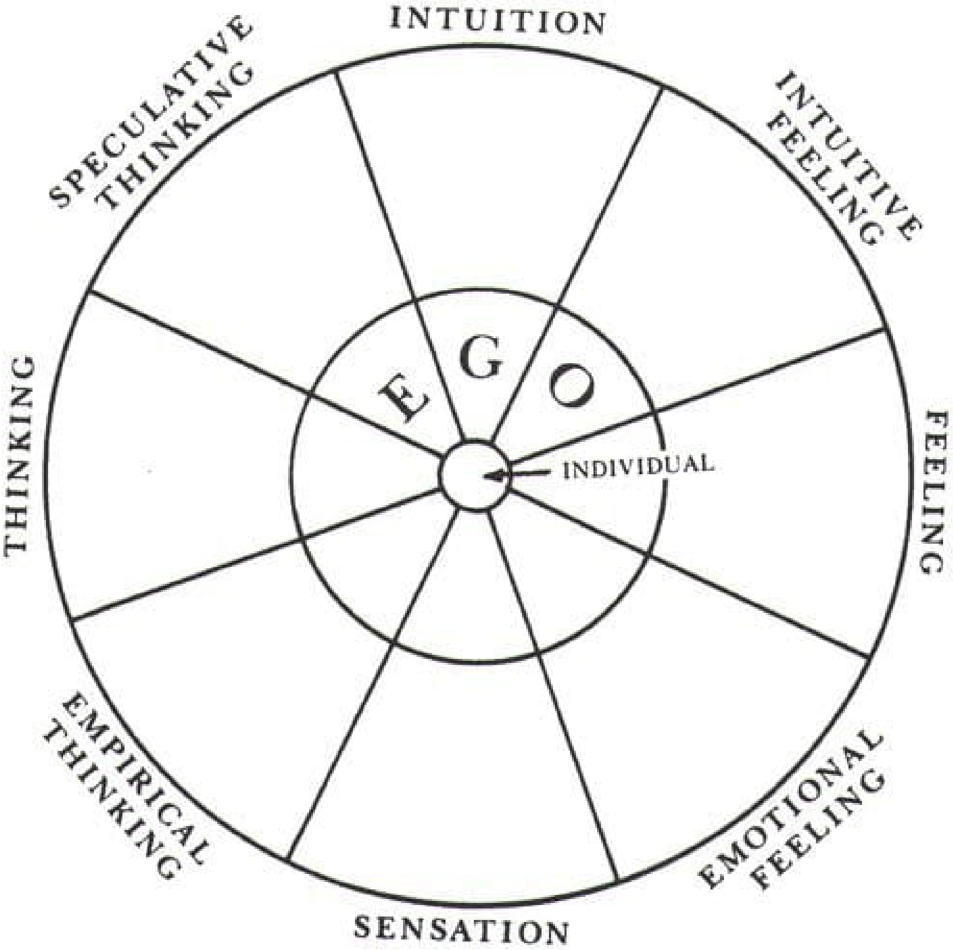
And finally, in the highest, thousand-petaled lotus, the yogi receives the "knowledge of one's own self."

The name of this place is "eternal blessedness," and some call it salvation, Atman knowledge, or knowledge of existence itself. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 353-355.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/94a17-kunda.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3OZD0HC6OA1EW&keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1576509367&s`

Carl Jung: on three books written on the Anima theme (2019-12-16 07:29)

[1]



INTUITION
INTUITIVE FEELING
FEELING EMOTIONAL FEELING
SENSATION
EMPIRICAL THINKING THINKING SPECULATIVE THINKING EGO
INDIVIDUAL

Lecture 15

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Jung:

Before taking up the questions, I would like to assign to the class a piece of work I am anxious to have it undertake: that is the analysis of three books written on the anima theme:

She, by Haggard; L'Atlantide, by Benoît; and Meyrink's Das grüne Gesicht.

I would like you to choose three committees of about five people each for these three books, each committee selecting a chairman who will bring in the findings of the group.

If you do this you will furnish me with a very good idea of what you have gained from these lectures.

Of course you may proceed about it in any way you see fit, but I would like to make the following suggestions:

(1) For the sake of the people in the class who may not have read the particular book under discussion, we should have a résumé of the contents;

(2) then there should be a characterization and interpretation of the dramatis personae;

(3) this should be followed by a presentation of the psychological processes involved, transformations of the libido, and behavior of the unconscious figures from start to finish.

No doubt the presentation of the material will take about one hour, and then we should have about half an hour for discussion.

(It was suggested by the class that, instead of having all three books on anima problems, it would be interesting to have one that dealt with the animus.

On Dr. Jung's recommendation, a novel called The Evil Vineyard, by Marie Hay,was substituted for Das grüne Gesicht.)

The committees were chosen as follows (the chairman is indicated with §):

comment on the Hay, Haggard, and Benoît novels, cf. "Mind and Earth" (1927; CW 10), pars. 75–91.

For the reports and discussion in the seminar, see below, following the appendix to Lecture 16.

Dr. Harding§ Mr. Aldrich§ Dr. Mann§ Miss Baynes Mrs. Zinno Mr. Robertson She Dr. Bond L'Atlan –tide Miss Houghton The Evil Vineyard Miss Hincks Mr. Radin Miss Sergeant Mr. Bacon Dr. Ward Mr. Bacon Dr. de Angulo

Diagram 5

Lecture

Diagram 5 is of an ideal condition which we never meet in reality, that is, it presupposes a complete consciousness of all the functions.

Therefore I have represented the functions on one plane.

In the center is a virtual nucleus I call the self, which represents the totality or sum of the conscious and unconscious processes.

This is in contradistinction to the ego or partial self, which is not conceived of as being in contact with the unconscious elements of the psychological processes.

Because the ego is not in touch with the unconscious side of our personality—that is, not necessarily in touch with it—we very often have a very different idea of ourselves from what others have of us, even allowing for projections.

The unconscious is continually playing its part, sometimes even an emphatic one, without our being cognizant of its imprint upon ourselves.

I can do what in fact are really very complicated things without knowing that I have done them—as, for instance, in walking down the street, I may carefully weave my way in and out of a crowd of people, and yet if someone asks me at the end of a block or two, "How many people did you pass?"

I am perfectly unable to say.

Each of the people I have passed, however, has been registered separately in my mind; I simply have not brought the results to bear upon my ego.

Similarly, we seldom see to it that we become conscious of the expressions on our faces, and all the time things are peeping out from the unconscious that are perfectly visible to the outside observer, who sometimes finds it hard to realize our ignorance of the things that he can see so clearly.

As long, then, as there remains so much in us that is not taken into account by the ego, the latter cannot be said to represent the totality of the mental processes.

Of course we cannot be too sure that we have this virtual center that I have assumed as existing; it is something that is not susceptible of proof. Instead of one center, we may have two or, as in dementia praecox, a multitude. But when you deal with a fairly normal individual there is always a center to which things lead up, and when something critical happens, it seems to come from that central government.

Some people project the reaction they get from this central core of themselves as a God-given message.

This center of self-regulation, then, is a postulate that is assumed.

I have represented the self as a point in the middle of the diagram, but it could just as well be thought of as including the whole, or indeed as spreading over all the world. Indian philosophy describes the self as I have taken it as being smaller than small, yet greater than great.

Turning to the diagram you will see that I have arranged the functions as sectors of the circle.

Let us start with thinking, or pure intellect.

This as a rational function is connected with the irrational function intuition by what we call speculative thinking, or intuitive thinking.

Then we pass to the polar opposite of thinking, namely feeling, through intuitive feeling, and from there to the polar opposite of intuition, sensation, via emotion of feeling.

Emotion is that sort of feeling which is a physiological condition, and which is perceived by sensation.

From sensation we get back again to thinking through a kind of thinking we call empirical, i.e., thinking to the fact.

We have now the conception that thinking passes by easy transition to both intuition or sensation, or vice versa, but that it is furthest removed from feeling.

Let us now try to arrive at a precise notion of feeling, though, as we have observed in previous lectures, this is a task beset with difficulties.

Will the class volunteer some suggestions as to the essential nature of feeling?

-

(The class volunteered one or two suggestions but, it must be said, with more enthusiasm for the theme than success in finding a solution.

From one point of view there was an effort to define feeling in such a way that it should be shown to be present in all the other functions, from another point of view it was thought that the definition should be of such a character as to apply to feeling alone.

It was generally agreed that the definition of feeling now accepted in analytical psychology—that is, as the function wherein subjective values are formulated—was not satisfactory, and that a satisfactory efinition must include the ideal of a dynamic existing between subject and object.

The end of the hour found the class still deep in this discussion.

Dr. Jung was asked to give a brief summary of his viewpoint.)

Dr. Jung: My idea is that feeling is an unthinking kind of appreciation on the one side, and on the other a dynamic relation. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 127-130

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

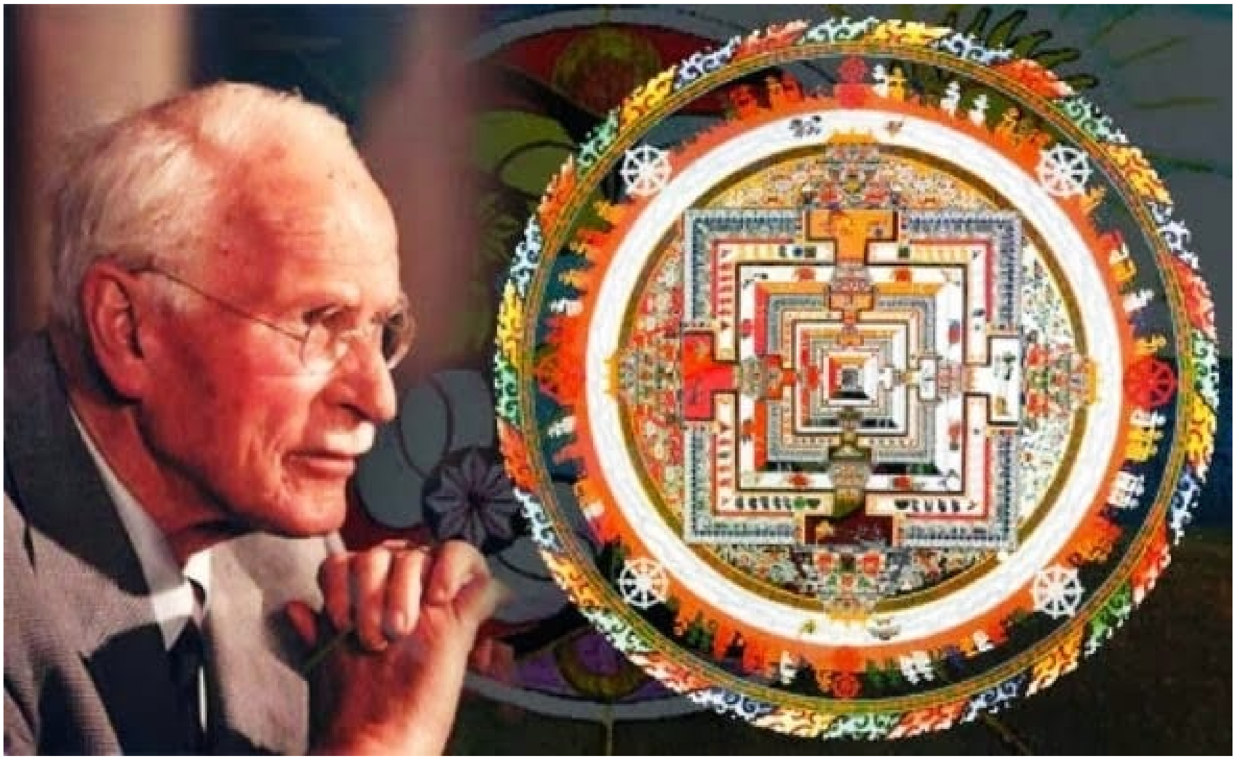
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/b6d0d-15ego.jpg`

Carl Jung on Tantric Yoga, Astrology and the Final Transformation of Man. (2019-12-16 07:29)

[1]



I think there is a very elaborate parallel in Tantric Yoga.

This visualizing yoga knows seven mandalas, situated one above the other, which correspond to certain body parts, and which are successively to be awakened and meditated by the ascending Kundalini serpent.

The lowest of these mandalas is the earth lotus.

It corresponds to the gray mouse.

It is the place of the world-bound souls.

In its center there is the lingam, colored like a fresh sapling, perhaps reminiscent of a worm.

Coiled around the lingam, the Kundalini serpent sleeps.

In it sleeps the essence of the highest experience.

When it awakens, it ascends, passing through all lotuses to bring them to life.

It is the driving force, the compulsion to become conscious.

The animals in our dream can be seen as a transformational form of the Kundalini.

The dragon in the second lotus corresponds to the snakes in our dream.

Above, there is the fire circle, the center of emotions.

This is the navel lotus, in the region of the solar plexus.

The fish correspond to the heart-lotus, with a fleeing antelope.

Nearby there is the place of the “divine wish-tree.” In this lotus thinking begins.

Then follows the ether airspace or firmament-lotus, which reveals its connection with the blue mouse by its blue ovary and by its name, “circle of purification and ablution.”

Above, in the two-leaved, winged circle of knowledge, there are no longer any animals.

There the yogi sees the highest, eternal god, the incarnate, primordial man.

And finally, in the highest, thousand-petaled lotus, the yogi receives the “knowledge of one’s own self.”

The name of this place is “eternal blessedness,” and some call it salvation, Atman knowledge, or knowledge of existence itself.

Another parallel is given by astrology, in the sequence of the historical ages.

About six thousand years ago, the first historical written records were made in the Age of Taurus.

The earth element is assigned to the constellation Taurus.

In ancient Egypt, the spirit found its expression through the medium of matter, the stone, and the earth.

Two thousand years later, the vernal equinox entered the constellation Aries.

With that, a fiery age began, as witnessed by Moses, when he sees God in a fiery bush, or when God appears to His people as a pillar of fire.

Around the birth of Christ, there follows the Age of Pisces.

Pisces is a water sign.

That is probably why we have to look for the spirit in the water, in life’s flow of images, and in the unconscious.

And now we are on the threshold of the sign of Aquarius.

The air element is assigned to it, and it is symbolized by an angel or a human being, instead of an animal.

Here the spirit is meant to become something subtle again, and man to become who he is.

This juxtaposition shows what is meant by man in general and by the one person in our dream.

These final stages correspond to the lotuses of Atman-, Purusha-, or God-knowledge.

It is a union with Christ and an experience of the self, or an anthropogenesis that will be fully realized only in the coming Age of Aquarius.

I am not able to make this reaching of the final stage clear to you.

Let me quote instead from Meister Eckhart's sermons.

You surely know the words of Meister Eckhart: "All nature means man."

And another one: "All creatures feel an urge to rise from their lives to their inner nature. All creatures carry my reason within themselves, so that they may gain reason in me. I alone again prepare all creatures for God!" (All creatures—thus also man!)

And about the final transformation: "When the soul has to realize that no creature at all can come into the Kingdom of God, it begins to feel itself, goes its own way and no longer seeks God. Only then does it die its highest death. In this death the soul loses all desire, all capability of thinking, all form, and is deprived of all essence.
Now at last it finds itself in the highest primordial image, in which God lives and is active, where He is His own kingdom."

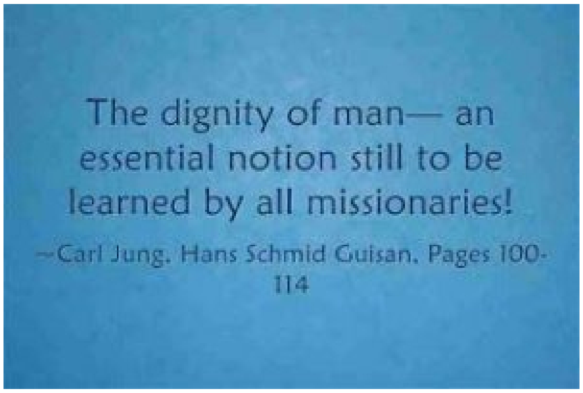
Here the soul has found out that it itself is the "Kingdom of God."

That is why the Church Fathers particularly stress "that the humanness of Jesus must not be just adored separately from the deity, but both have to be worshipped together in one single act." Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 353-355.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/11a0f-1.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Missionary in you. (2019-12-16 10:12)



The dignity of man— an essential notion still to be learned by all missionaries!

—Carl Jung, Hans Schmid Guisan, Pages 100-114

[1]Jung, My Mother and I: The Analytical Diaries of Catharine Rush Cabot

He [Jung] went back to say again that if you have the missionary in you which tells everyone what is good for him, you will certainly arouse a thundercloud … and if you preach to yourself only, you won't be able to accept the socially inferior individual which is to be found within everyone, as he is a nuisance and naturally not acceptable.

But to bring up that being, the shadow side in oneself, one must quietly look within and bring up one's inferior man in an acceptable form by being genuinely sorry for yourself.

But if you bring up your inferior man by telling people how awful they are (with a brass band) then he will never be acceptable to you. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 55

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-My-Mother-Analytical-Catharine/dp/3856306013/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung%2C+my+mother+and+i&qid=1576509810&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: It just boils down to the question of whether man will accept the ugliest man in himself, or not? (2019-12-16 10:22)

[1]Jung, My Mother and I: The Analytical Diaries of Catharine Rush Cabot

…Jung spoke about people who love to be compassionate to others; they are the great helpers and eternal saviors!

It is such a nice feeling for them and quenches for them their unquestionable thirst to be on top!

He said it would be very much better if such people were compassionate with themselves - with the ugliest man in themselves!

But it is nicer to forget him in oneself, and instead go to one's neighbor and weed out his garden!

Let all the weeds grow in your garden, don't bother about them, just go and help your neighbor weed out his.

Naturally, if you give your compassion to yourself, to the imperfect man in yourself, you bring up a monster, and run into that terrific cataclysm man carries within him, that eternal skeleton in the cupboard of which he is afraid.

It just boils down to the question of whether man will accept the ugliest man in himself, or not? Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 55

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-My-Mother-Analytical-Catharine/dp/3856306013/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung%2C+my+mother+and+i&qid=1576509810&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: "The sin to be repented, of course, is unconsciousness." (2019-12-16 11:21)

[1]

[2]Aion: Researches into the Phenomenology of the Self (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 2)

St. Paul’s concept of ayvoia (ignorantia) may not be too far removed from dyiwia, since both mean the initial, unconscious condition of man.

When God "looked down" on the times of ignorance, the Greek word used here, WeptSwv (Vulgate: despiciens) has the connotation ’to disdain, despise.’

At all events, Gnostic tradition says that when the highest God saw what miserable, unconscious creatures these human beings were whom the demiurge had created, who were not even able to walk upright, he immediately got the work of redemption under way.

And in the same passage in the Acts, Paul reminds the Athenians that they were "God’s offspring," and that God, looking back disapprovingly on "the times of ignorance," had sent the message to mankind, commanding "all men every-where to repent."

Because that earlier condition seemed to be altogether too wretched, the (transformation of mind) took on the moral character of repentance of sins, with the result that the Vulgate could translate it as "poenitentiam agere."

The sin to be repented, of course, is unconsciousness.

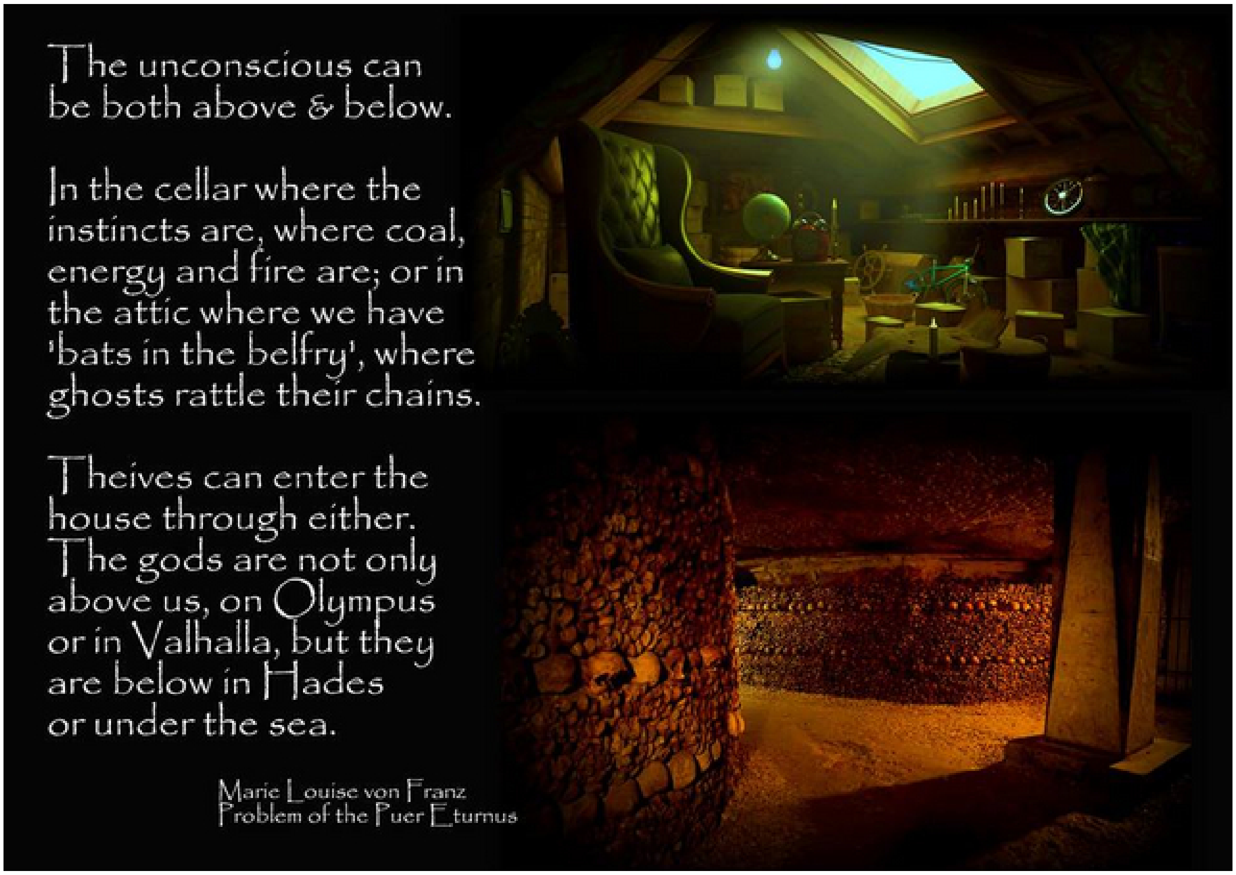
As we have seen, it is not only man who is in this condition, but also, according to the Gnostics, the God without consciousness.

This idea is more or less in line with the traditional Christian view that God was transformed during the passage from the Old Testament to the New, and, from being the God of wrath, changed into the God of Love—a thought that is expressed very clearly by Nicolaus Caussin in the seventeenth century. Carl Jung, Aion, Pages 191-192.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/19433-asp.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Aion-Researches-Phenomenology-Collected-Works/dp/069101826X/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+aion&qid=1576534878&sr=8-1`

Marie Louise Von Franz: Ghosts usually rattle their chains in the attic and walk about over our heads.

(2019-12-16 12:16)



The unconscious can be both above & below.

In the cellar where the instincts are, where coal, energy and fire are; or in the attic where we have 'bats in the belfry', where ghosts rattle their chains.

Theives can enter the house through either. The gods are not only above us, on Olympus or in Valhalla, but they are below in Hades or under the sea.

Marie Louise von Franz
Problem of the Puer Eturnus

[2]Problem of the Puer Aeternus, The Speaking in spatial terms, if we are objective we have to admit that there is a field of the unconscious both above and below us.

This same duality applies to the symbolism of the house.

The cellar often represents the unconscious in some form, the area of the drives, the instincts; there are innumerable dreams in which coal is in the cellar and there is a fire, or awful animals are in the cellar or

For instance, a crazy person, overwhelmed by the unconscious, has "bats in the belfry" or "mice in the attic."

So up in the attic, where it is dark and full of cobwebs and we are a bit crazy, there is just as much a realm of unconsciousness as in the cellar. People frequently dream of thieves getting in from the roof or of demons sitting up there and taking off the tiles, and so on.

We must therefore look at the above and the below from a different standpoint and see if there is any kind of qualitative difference between representations of the unconscious powers above and the unconscious powers below.

There are exceptions, but it can be said that in general the above is associated with what is masculines—ordered, light and sometimes spiritual—and the below with the feminine—fertile, dark (not evil; there are no moral designations in the original mythological counterpositions), chaotic, and the realm of the animals.

The sphere above is connected with birds and angels—with winged beings which have to do with the spiritual world.

For instance, if in a dream something comes from below, you might expect it to come up in the form of an emotion or a physical symptom such as sleeplessness, or some affective disturbance of the sympathetic nervous system.

Or it comes in the form of synchronistic occurrences in the outer world.

If an invasion from the unconscious comes from above, it can take the form of an enthusiasm for Communism or Nazism; such an "above" unconsciousness erupts into the system in the form of a collective idea. If it is characterized as positive, then it can be said to be the Holy Ghost; if it is considered negative, then there are the winged demons, bats in the belfry, and other pernicious winged creatures—that is, destructive ideas.

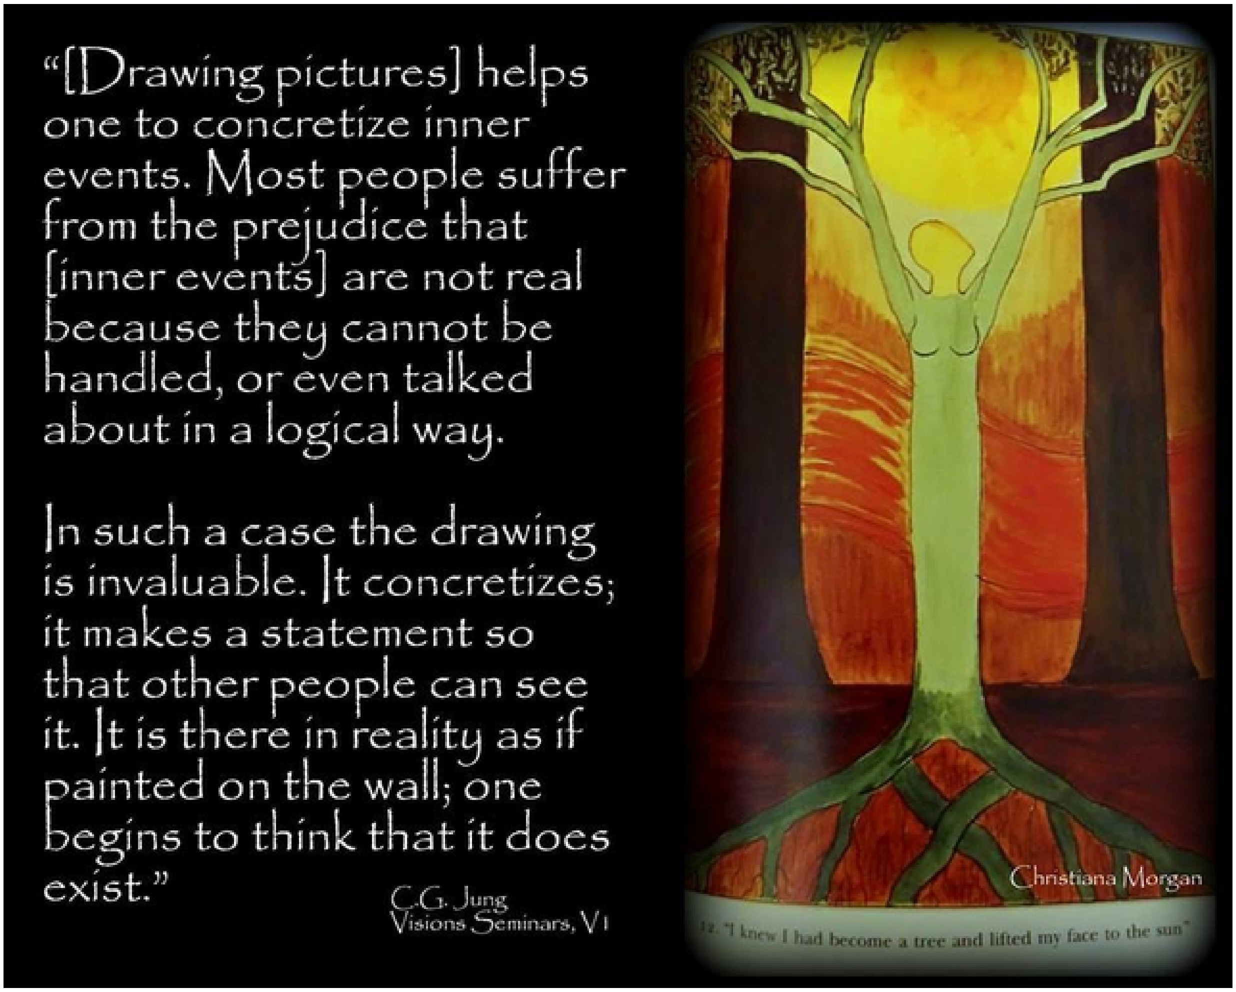
Whether constructive or destructive, such ideas have a strong collective energy of their own.

Dynamic representations belong to the "above" aspect of the unconscious and the emotional, instinctive representations to its "below” aspect. Marie Louise Von Franz, The Problem of the Puer Aeternus, Pages 13-14.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d3829-1puer.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Problem-Puer-Aeternus-Marie-Louise-Franz/dp/0919123880/ref=sr_1_2?crid=RLZ51N05DA9X&keywords=marie+louise+von+franz+puer+aeternus&qid=157`

She [Christiana Morgan] created mythic visions chronicling her struggle with the feminine and masculine forces in her world. (2019-12-16 17:23)

[1]



"[Drawing pictures] helps one to concretize inner events. Most people suffer from the prejudice that [inner events] are not real because they cannot be handled, or even talked about in a logical way.

In such a case the drawing is invaluable. It concretizes; it makes a statement so that other people can see it. It is there in reality as if painted on the wall; one begins to think that it does exist."

C.G. Jung
Visions Seminars, V1

12. "I knew I had become a tree and lifted my face to the sun"

[2]Visions : Notes of the seminar given in 1930-1934 (2 Volume Set) (Bollingen)

Christiana Morgan-When Carl Jung met Christiana he considered her the manifestation of the perfect feminine, une femme inspiratrice whose role was to act as a muse to great men.

Jung conducted a seminar, called the "Vision Seminars", analyzing Christiana's many drawings and dreams.
She created mythic visions chronicling her struggle with the feminine and masculine forces in her world.

Christiana Drummond Morgan (born Christiana Drummond Councilman) (1897–1967) was a lay psychoanalyst at Harvard University best known for her work co-authoring the Thematic Apperception Test, one of the most widely used projective psychological test.

She administered one of the earliest versions of the test to one of the first diagnosed anorexic patients in Boston.

She is mostly remembered as the lover of American psychologist Henry Murray.

The nude portrait statue of Christiana commissioned by Murray from Gaston Lachaise is now owned by the Governor's Academy, Byfield, Massachusetts. Christiana committed suicide at 69 years of age.

There is some controversy over her death related to Henry Murray's conflicting accounts, but it is mostly considered a suicide.

Christiana was born in Boston, Massachusetts on October 6, 1897. She attended Miss Winsor's school for girls in Boston from 1908 to 1914 and later a boarding school in Farmington, Massachusetts.

She came of age, a debutante in Boston society and met William Morgan, a young man enlisted to fight in WWI.

William went abroad to war and Christiana stayed behind and received a certificate as a nurses aid after completing a training program at the YWCA in New York City. She served as a nurse during the 1918 Influenza.

Christiana was an artist, writer, and lay psychoanalyst fascinated by the depth psychology.

Part of the Introvert/Extrovert Club in New York City in the 1920s, she traveled to Zurich to consult Carl Jung.

When Carl Jung met Christiana he considered her the manifestation of the perfect feminine, une femme inspiratrice whose role was to act as a muse to great men. Jung conducted a seminar, called the "Vision Seminars", analyzing Christiana's many drawings and dreams.

She created mythic visions chronicling her struggle with the feminine and masculine forces in her world.

At Harvard University she played a vital role in inventing the Thematic Apperception Test, a way to elicit fantasy still used today. The test is considered the most used and researched projective psychological test.

In its early development, the test which consisted of a series of pictures shown to a patient who is asked to make up a story about each picture, many of Christiana's own drawings were included.

Also, she was cited as co-author with Henry Murray in the first publication of the test. As it was further developed, Christiana's pictures were taken out as well as her co-authorship.

This is sometimes attributed to her lack of professional credentials.

After a radical sympathectomy surgery for high blood pressure and years of excessive drinking, Christiana Morgan committed suicide at the age of 69 at Denis Bay, St. John, Virgin Islands on March 14, 1967.

She left a Conrad Aiken poem to be read over her grave.
"O sweet clean earth, from whom the green blade cometh!
When we are dead, my blest beloved and I,
Embrace us well, that we may rest forever,
Sending up grass and blossoms to the sky."

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d24fc-1visions2bseminar.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Visions-Notes-seminar-1930-1934-Bollingen/dp/0691099715/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1G8PVLAOHAY54&keywords=jung+visions+seminar&qid=1576572956&sprefi`
3. `http://www.artandpopularculture.com/Christiana_D._Morgan`

Carl Jung on "Immortality" (2019-12-17 03:30)

[1]

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925

Our life is indeed the same as it ever was.

At all events, in our sense of the word it is not transitory; for the same physiological and psychological processes that have been man's for hundreds of thousands of years still endure, instilling into our inmost hearts this profound intuition of the "eternal" continuity of the living.

But the self, as an inclusive term that embraces our whole living organism, not only contains the deposit and totality of all past life, but is also a point of departure, the fertile soil from which all future life will spring.

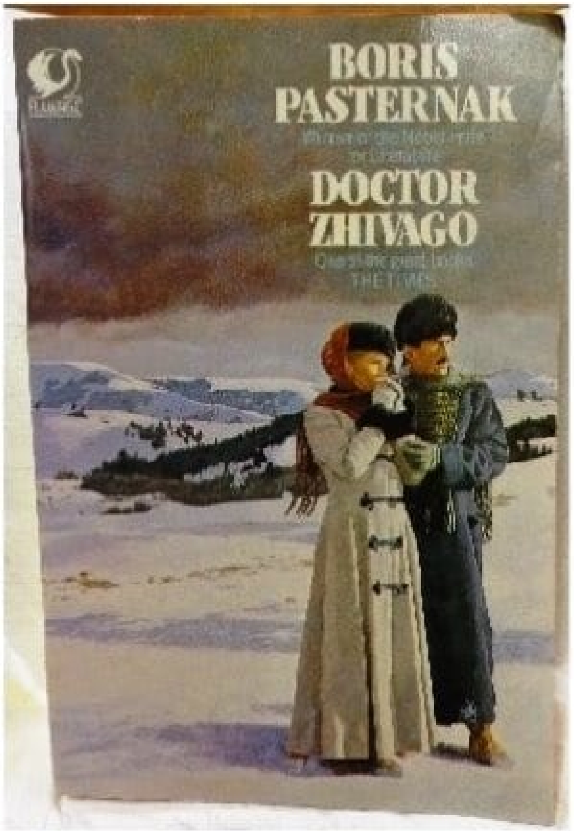
This premonition of futurity is as clearly impressed upon our innermost feelings as is the historical aspect.

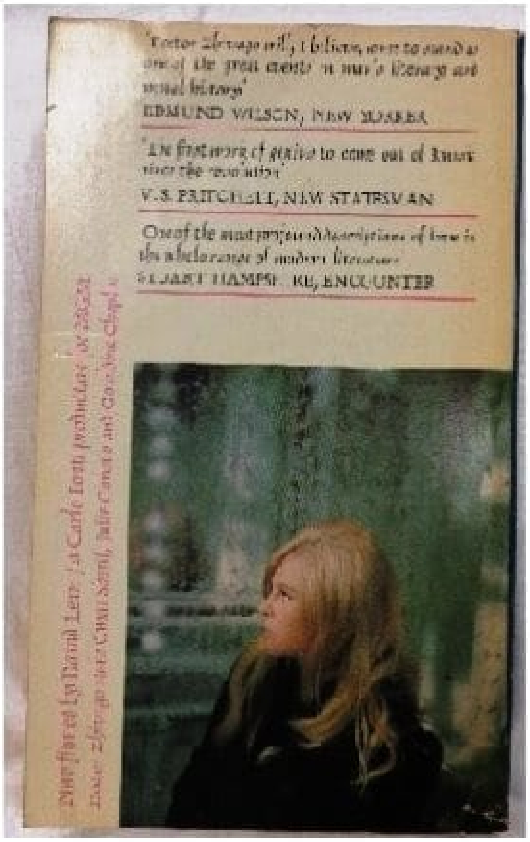
The idea of immortality follows legitimately from these psychological premises. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 303

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/c952b-12bimmortality.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=VLNX1JJMWGDI&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=157657316`

E.A. Bennet: C.G. told me to read Dr. Zhivago, a novel by the Russian, Pasternak; it was a wonderful picture of the anima. (2019-12-17 04:30)

[1]





[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Küsnacht, 20th March 1959

Arrived at the Hauptbahnhof at 2.20 p.m. and was met by Ruth Bailey and Müller [Jung’s chauffeur] and so to Küsnacht.

Tea on the verandah.

C.G. is in good form and looking very fit.

He was interested at seeing the dredger arriving, apparently to dredge by the Strandbad.

After tea he went to see a patient and I visited Barbara Hannah.

Back at the Seestrasse C.G., Ruth and I strolled in the garden before dinner and had a look at two magnolia trees, one of which was planted last year.

Then we went on through the garden to the lake.

I asked about a cross which is nailed to the summer house and he said it was from a churchyard (I wonder where).

We had a pleasant chat at dinner.

C.G. was glad he had finished work for the term and had only one or two people to see.

I reminded him of the man we had met in St. Gallen who told us of the river in flood and his (C.G.'s) remark, ‘These extraverts are quite useful!’, and he laughed heartily.

Later we went upstairs to the study.

He arranged – ‘as usual’ he said – the chair for me under the lamp by his writing table, and he sat by the window reading the evening paper and smoking a cigar; he gave me one.

On his writing table is an object I have seen before, sent to him by the Indian Psychiatric Society; it is a carved wooden lotus which opens.

They also sent him, years ago, a dhoti of cotton which he once put on with much difficulty and amusement.

There is also a metal statue of Buddha on the table.

Another feature in the main study is the large Swiss stove of green tiles; this one is quite an architectural feature as it is fitted at an angle.

These stoves are easily lit and use little fuel, usually wood.

Behind where I sit are the books on alchemy – a remarkable collection.

When C.G. had finished with the newspaper he played patience on a board on his knee, sitting with his feet up on another chair.

We sit quite silently, a very peaceful scene.

He likes to be quiet in the evenings and let his mind unbend, uncoil.

21st March 1959

After breakfast C.G. and I sat in the garden in the sun and he read my Introduction and part of Chapter 2.

He made a few comments as he read.

His father was Lutheran, but of the Basel Reformed Church.

There were variations between Geneva (Calvin) and Zürich (Zwingli) – the latter was very rational; wooden vessels were used at communion and there were no ornaments, whereas at Basel they were more ritualistic, or more old fashioned.

Coming to my notes about his childhood dream of the underground chamber he said what a tremendous impression it had made upon him.

A red carpet led to the dais, just a strip, and on it was a large golden throne.

He said that the object which stood upon it, which he took to be a tree trunk, was about four times his height – twelve or fifteen feet – and he corrected my manuscript in pencil accordingly.

It had an eye like a demonic god, and his terror at this apparition intensified when his mother's voice called from outside, 'Just look at him, he's the man-eater!'

He told me that he had been writing an autobiography of the first twenty-five years of his life but he was hesitant to publish it because it could so easily be misunderstood, and this could disturb many people who depended upon him.

He said it was only two years ago, while he was working on this autobiography, that he suddenly linked the three early episodes of his dream of the cave, the priest and funerals.

He often saw funerals for the churchyard was near their house; only at these services did the men appear with polished shoes, black clothes and tall hats.

In his mind he linked the dream of the cave with a tomb – like Jesus in the tomb – and with the priest; he thought the priest was a woman.

Throughout the years these experiences had been 'islands of consciousness' and now he saw the connection between them for the first time.

As a small child he was taught to pray that Jesus would look after, keep safe, this chicken (himself) and put his wings over him.

There was some link between the idea of a chicken and a little cake, and God would not eat the cake.

But the devil would eat any amount of cakes like this.

All these reflections of his were a secret for he thought his parents would not know these things nor understand them; so this separated them from him.

He associated his mother's words in the dream of the cave – 'That is the maneater' – with the priest, and it was absolutely terrifying.

Then, much later, in the dream in Basel he saw that he must accept the strange idea of God treating the Church with disrespect.

What would a scientist think of such ideas?

For him they were impressive and a source of development.

In the afternoon we drove to Bollingen, C.G., Ruth and I.

It took half an hour.

The Tower looked its best in the warm sunshine and we walked around.

C.G. took me to see his carving of Attis at the end of the path near the boat house.

The carving, in stone, was a small pillar and had on it Tô ATTEI – to Attis.

It was set in the midst of anemones, small wild ones, and C.G. said this was the flower of Attis.

He spoke of the story of Attis as one of the most beautiful in antiquity and classed it with that of Apollo and Demeter.

On the wall of the Tower he had made a new carving of a woman kneeling; he said she was the mother of Attis.

While we were there C.G. spent much of the time sitting beside a little stream which comes from two springs and runs down to the lake.

He had a tool which he said was used by shepherds – a small spade, part of which stood up to make a crook; he had it fixed to a polo stick with a thong at the end.

The stick was long and he sat by the stream and cleared the channel with the spade so that the water flowed freely.

I asked why he did this and he said he found it was relaxing and let his mind work; he liked to be beside the flowing water which suggested the flow of life and ideas.

Ruth said he often did this when, as now, the water in the lake is low.

After the snows melt the lake rises and the little streams are usually covered.

When he is reflecting in this way C.G. likes to be silent and alone.

He never finds it irksome to be alone.

22nd March 1959

We went for a drive to see the grounds which are being prepared for the coming exhibition; it will be held on either side of the lake and connected by a cable railway which is now being constructed.

C.G. wanted to see this and we walked round.

He is very interested in such a thing; also in old buildings and houses.

From the site of the exhibition we drove down the Sihl Valley and had coffee with Müller joining us.

Then we returned over the Albis Pass.

C.G. took great pleasure in the natural surroundings, the trees, the little lake Türler, and in the various views of Zürich.

When we got back we walked round the garden and he looked at every plant and flower.

I asked whether he had met James Joyce, and he had done so.

He remarked that his writing in Ulysses was brilliant at times; he mentioned particularly the detailed description of a piece of paper floating down the river to the sea which he had quoted in his paper on Ulysses.

After tea C.G. and I sat in the front garden just behind the wall.

I asked some questions about the origin and development of his theory of types.

Later he talked of kinship libido, the natural bond between people, the link they need to prevent isolation, to be aware of belonging with others of like interest and awareness.

23rd March 1959

C.G. told me to read Dr. Zhivago, a novel by the Russian, Pasternak; it was a wonderful picture of the anima.

'You don't know who she is, she's not quite real, too good to be true; and there's something wrong somewhere.'

In the library in the evening he said to Ruth, 'If you want to know what the anima is you must read that book!'

In Dr. Zhivago the anima is absolutely typical, and he (Pasternak) did not know what she was.

Before dinner C.G., Ruth and I went for a walk to the little park by the Strandbad pier.

He had just seen a French professor who was very concerned about the real truth of the life of Jesus of Nazareth, the historical Jesus; this man knew all the various versions and was in doubt about the truth.

C.G. told him, and repeated to us, an experience he and members of the British Association had when he was in India.

They were near Darjeeling, and went up Signal Hill, a well-known place, to watch the sunset.

They had the good fortune to get an absolutely clear view of Kanchenjunga which is rare, for the high mountain is usually in cloud.

On Signal Hill is a mound of stones; they are reddish in colour being painted with red oxide of lead, and the Mohammedans pour ghee over them.

The red represents blood.

There are also many very tall bamboos – 'as high as the electric standards,' he said, pointing to one in the road.

These trees were hung all over with little flags printed with a horse (a special horse which he described but I could not get the details) for this had been a sacred place for many many centuries, since long before Mohammed.

It was a marvellous spectacle with the valley in shadow and then the bluish-purple, and out of it all the brilliant fiery setting of the sun.

Everyone gazed spellbound at this striking scene, and one of the members of the British Association muttered ‘Phew!’ – an involuntary exclamation of awe. C.G. said to him, ‘What is it that you do?

You are uttering quite spontaneously the exclamation of awe which has been uttered for countless centuries, and you don’t know it!’

There was quite a crowd there and Barker, the professor of English from Cambridge, said, ‘Now Jung, you must know the famous passage in Faust about the setting sun!’

And Jung did know it, and recited it.

It was a most impressive and highly unscientific spectacle, he said.

He repeated the passage from Goethe to us as we sat in the little shed by the pier where, as often before, we had sat after a similar stroll.

‘But,’ C.G. went on to tell us, ‘here was a living myth, for the mountain lit by the sun is said to be the wife of Vishnu; and the myth gives the story and the experience meaning.

That is what myths are.’

He spoke of the stupidity of an Anglican parson who had visited him and talked of ‘trying to get Truth’, as if he could get it in a form he would be able to understand and that it would not be truth otherwise.

In the evening when we were sitting in the library he asked Ruth to show me the pictures in an Italian paper of flying saucers.

He had got this paper from an Italian who had taken a photograph of a flying saucer in 1952; he had been thrown out of his photographic club because it was assumed to be a false picture, but recently it has been accepted.

C.G. knows a lady in southern Switzerland who is the secretary of an organization which records observations of UFOs, and she sends him reports about them.

One was a photograph, which he showed me, of a typical UFO; he had written on the back that it had been taken by an eighteen-year-old girl, the daughter of a parson in California.

She had, so he wrote, put her camera in the fork of a tree for a time exposure, and later came to terminate it.

When the negative was developed there was the flying saucer.

Apparently she had not seen it.

24th March 1959

In the morning we drove to a high point above Küsnacht and sat in the sun and had coffee.

On our return C.G. and I sat in the front garden.

I asked about Ernest Jones's remark that on an early visit to Freud he (C.G.) had demonstrated poltergeist phenomena.

He said this was utter nonsense; he knew the statement had been made by Freud.

The basis of it was this: at the close of their first talk, which lasted thirteen hours, he felt disappointed because the discussion had been restricted by Freud's insistence on explaining everything only in terms of sexuality.

C.G. had been thrilled to meet and talk with him and at the end of the conversation he was still full of unresolved expectations.

Suddenly there was a loud cracking in the bookcase above Freud's head, a formidable crash as if the wood were expanding and the whole thing coming down. Freud looked up startled, and C.G. said, 'What do you make of that?'

He knew at once that it was an extracorporeal expression of a psychic situation and that it would happen again, though he did not know why.

But he told Freud, 'It will happen again,' and at once it did.

Freud was aghast though he would not say so; he tried to dismiss it as nothing.

But it was a real crash and C.G. told him at the time that it was significant.

They examined the bookcase and there was nothing to see.

C.G. had had experience of similar incidents – extra-corporeal effects, he called them – and added that these parapsychological things are exteriorised affects and happen like complexes – that is they are projected.

The crash affected Freud very much but he never sought to explain it.

'If I had never asked Why? in the word association tests,' said C.G., 'I would never have discovered the complexes.

But Freud brushed these things aside.

There is now an Institute for Parapsychology at Freibourg and the Director comes to consult me.'

A similar incident had happened with Eugen Bleuler and when C.G. mentioned parapsychological phenomena to him he said it was all nonsense; but twenty years later he became a spiritualist and had many experiences of this kind.

C.G. described the crash in the bookcase as a synchronistic event, as acausal.

It could not be explained; but it happened, of that there was no doubt.

It gave him an odd feeling: ‘Now look out! – there might be a split between us.’

We went on to talk of dreams and I mentioned my idea of making dreams and clinical material central in what I would write; he thought this quite a good plan.

Speaking of dreams he said we must always ask ‘Whose dream?’

It was always an individual matter, we cannot generalise; we develop guidelines but not laws.

For Freud all dreams were wish fulfilments, and he looked on the dream as a means of preserving sleep.

C.G. thought that more often than not they failed to keep us asleep.

He talked for a while about Laufe, his early home above the Rhine Falls.

Then at tea-time Mrs. Niehus came.

She asked about my book.

I told her C.G. had mentioned that he had already written much of his autobiography (I remember him talking of the difficulties of writing about his life a year or two ago and perhaps this put the idea into his mind).

She said Mrs. Jaffé wanted to publish what he had written.

I gave her my Introduction to read.

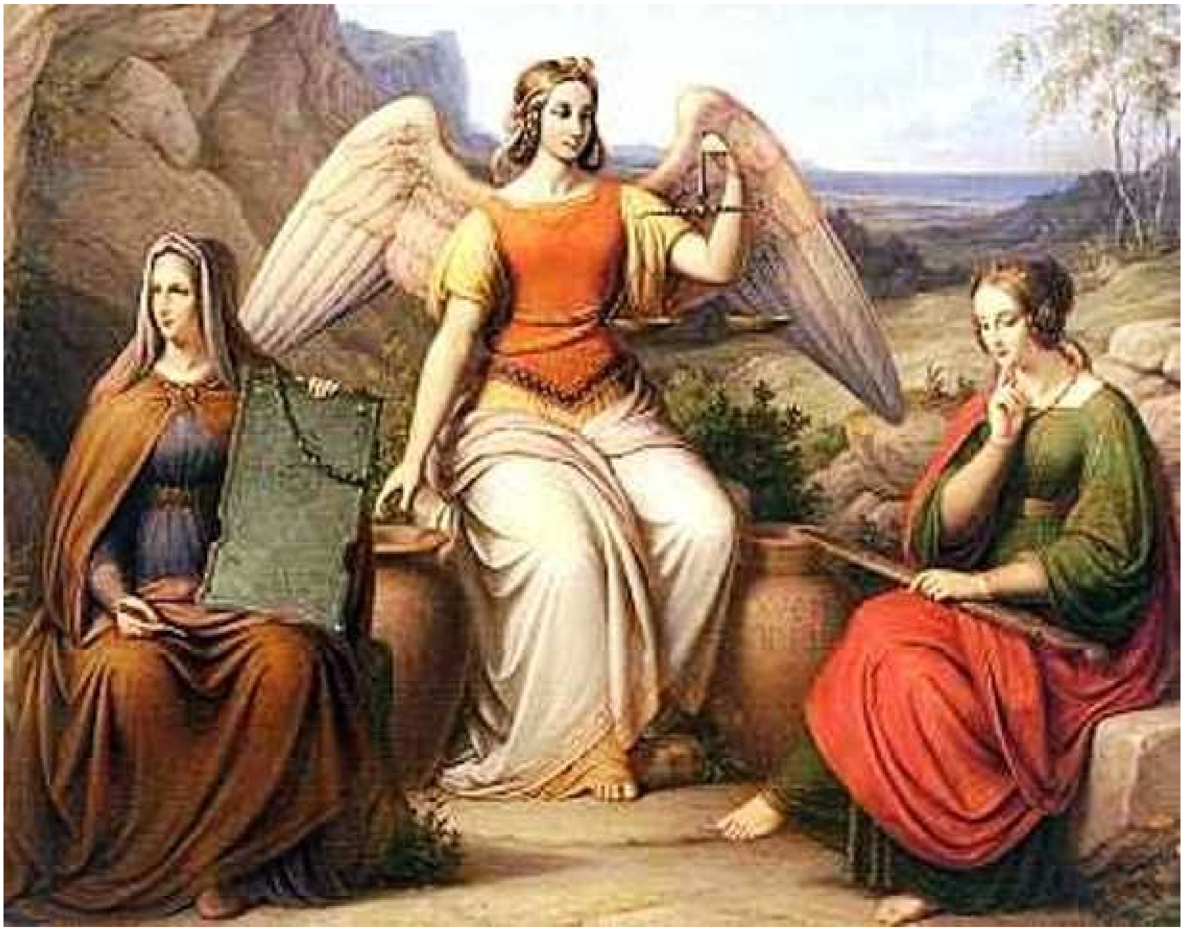
She said my approach was quite different from Mrs. Jaffé’s and pressed me to continue.

She said mine was more masculine, and the fact that another biography was in preparation should not prevent me from going on with it. C.G. had read it earlier and he also thought it good and on the right lines. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 272-290

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/0c066-462bbennet.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1MQN5QOT8BBWW&keywords=carl+jung+bennet+conversations&qid=15`

Urdarbrunnr: The Well of Fate (2019-12-17 05:18)

[1]



Urdarbrunnr: The Well of Fate

"The psychological rule says that when an inner situation is not made conscious, it happens outside, as fate.

That is to say, when the individual remains undivided and does not become conscious of his inner opposite, the world must perforce act out the conflict and be torn into opposing halves." Carl Jung, From Christ, A Symbol of the Self; CW 9ii, par. 126.)

(From Christ, A Symbol of the Self; CW 9ii, par. 126.)

The psychological rule says that when an inner situation is not made conscious, it happens outside, as fate.

That is to say, when the individual remains undivided and does not become conscious of his inner opposite, the world must perforce act out the conflict and be torn into opposing halves.

The Norns are three women who shape the life of each man from his first day until his last, and they determine the moment of his death.

The Norns live in Ásgarð by the Well of Urð, where the gods meet each day in council. Of the three women, Urð is old and decrepit, looking backwards to past events and people. Verðandi is young and active, looking straight before her. Skuld is closely veiled, and looks in a direction opposite to where Urð gazes.

The Norns carve men’s fate on a stave of wood, in much the same way Norsemen might carve their individual marks on pieces of wood before throwing them together to draw lots.

In Gylfaginning, Snorri Sturluson writes that other norns, descended from the Æsir, dwarves, and elves, visit each new-born child to determine its life. Good norns grant a good life, while malevolent norns grant lives filled with misfortune. (Source)

Die Nornen: Johannes Gherts (1889)

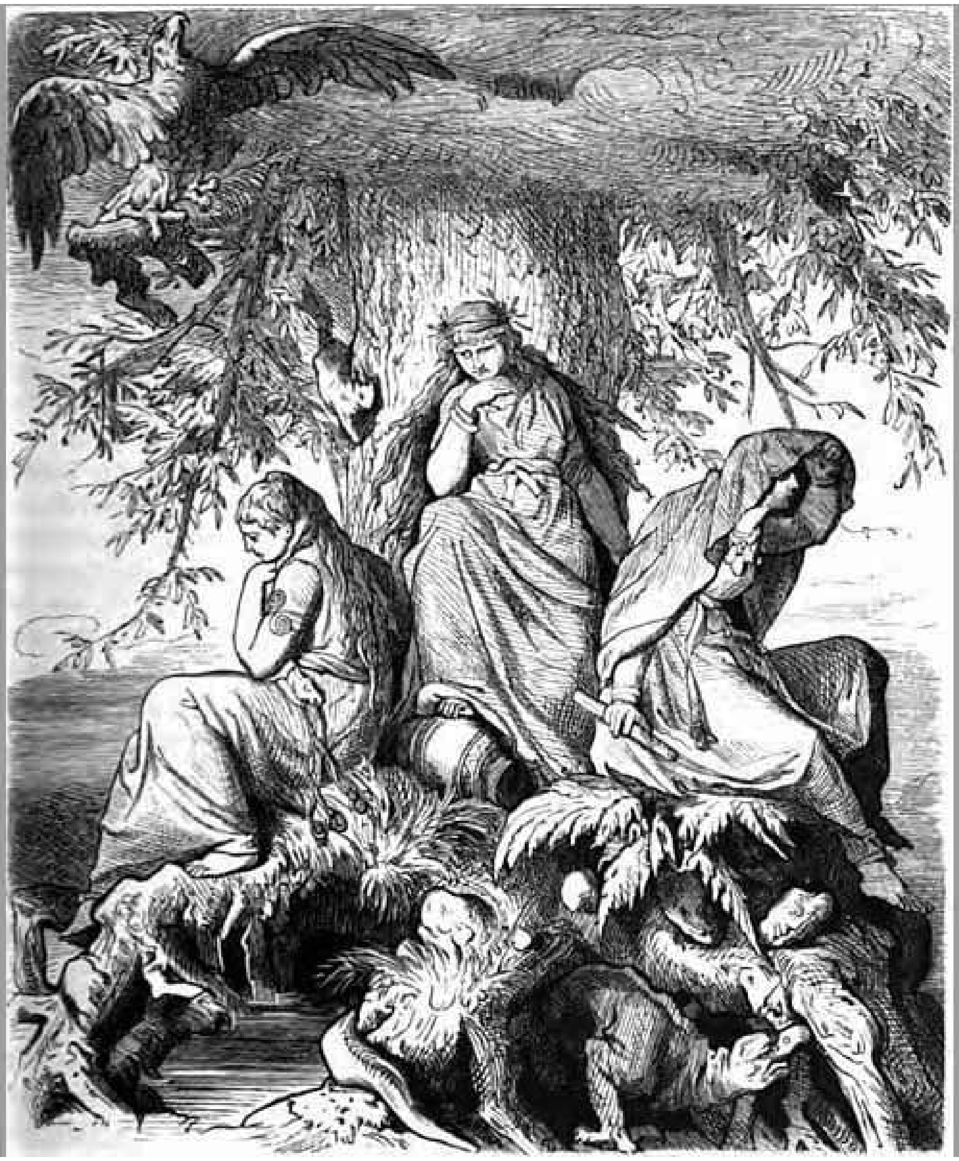
Urth is the guardian of a sacred well at the base of the World Tree. Each day as the roots of the World Tree are worn away by care and ill-will, the Norns take up some earth, moisten it with water from Urth’s Well, and place this clay with care on the roots of the tree, healing and renewing it.

The tree that links all worlds draws up water from the well, up through trunk and branches and leaves, and the well’s water falls again from the tree as the dew, where it re-enters the well again to renew the cycle.

I don’t know about you, but I have been used to considering Norse mythology as pretty much the most brutal and patriarchal of all mythologies. And yet, here at the center of its cosmological myth, with the sacred Well and the holy Tree, are images of the three Goddesses doing their work of healing and renewal. It is one of the loveliest images in all mythology. (Source)

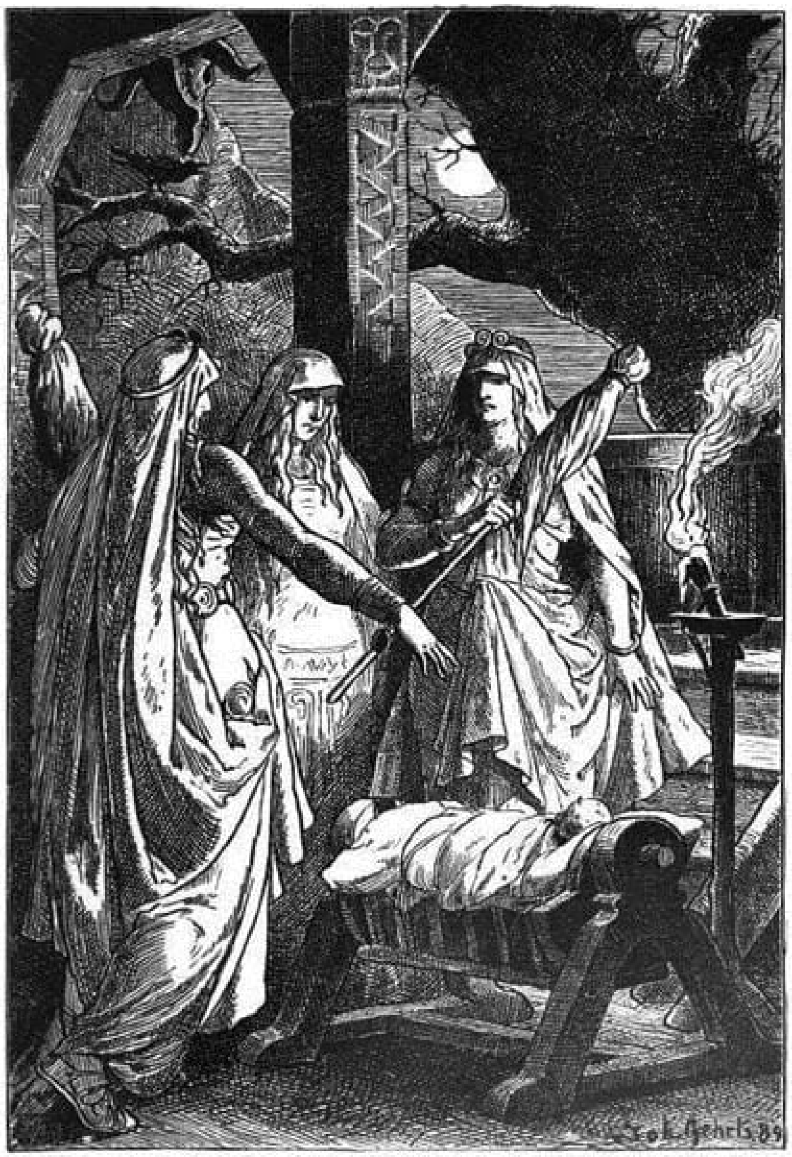
(Why are there are three roots, three well, three norns?)

(from Marie Louise Von Franz, Number and Time, p.33):



Numbers as archetypal structural constants of the collective unconscious possess a dynamic, active aspect which is especially important to keep in mind. It is not what we can do with numbers but what they do to our consciousness that is essential'

(from Psychology and Religion: East and West CW 11, par. 179):



One is the first from which all other numbers arise, and in which the opposite qualities of numbers, the odd and the even, must therefore be united; two is the first even number; three the first that is uneven and perfect, because in it we first find beginning, middle and end.

http://jungcurrents.com/and-the-norns/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/1dc21-norns.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/80b3f-nornss.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/b9d96-norrnen.jpg`

For those interested in "Runes"... (2019-12-17 05:24)

[1]

[2]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition (Philemon)

For those interested in "Runes" I suggest you read Footnotes 157 and 232 in Dr. Jung’s "The Red Book."

It is difficult to post the "Rune" here because some of the symbols used cannot be transposed.

Also, there is a passage in The Red Book which says:

"I do not recognize him, the solitary. What is he saying? He says:

"I suffer fear and distress for the sake of man."

I dug up old runes and magical sayings for words never reach men. Words have become shadows.

Therefore I took old magical apparatuses and prepared hot potions and mixed in secrets and ancient powers, things that even the cleverest would not guess at.

I stewed the roots of all human thoughts and deeds. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Paragraphs 130/132.

Odin of Norse Mythology is also referred to in The Red Book:

"I recognize you, DIAHMQN, you most cunning of all fraudsters!

You have deceived me. You impregnated my maidenly soul with the terrible worm.

Diahmon, damned charlatan, you aped the mysteries for me, you lay the mantle of the stars on me, you played a Christ-fool's comedy with me, you hanged me, carefully and ludicrously; in the tree just like Odin,you let me devise runes to enchant Salome-and meanwhile you procreated my soul with the worm, spew of the dust. Deception upon deception!

Terrible devil trickery! Carl Jung, The Red Book, The Magician, Page 327.

Footnote 343 in The Red Book reads:

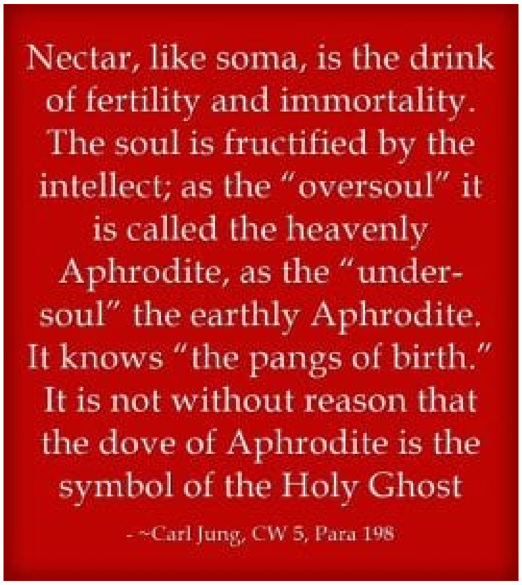
"In Norse mythology; Odin was pierced by a spear and hung from the world tree, Yggdrasill, where he hung for nine nights until he found the runes, which gave him power."

Image below: An inscription using cipher runes, the Elder Futhark, and the Younger Futhark, on the 9th-century Rök Runestone in Sweden

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/b3fe8-cipher.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=1EGZNW11P0PUR&keywords=carl+jung+red+book+illustrated&qid=1576601060&sprefix=carl

---

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-17 06:02)



Nectar, like soma, is the drink of fertility and immortality. The soul is fructified by the intellect; as the "oversoul" it is called the heavenly Aphrodite, as the "under-soul" the earthly Aphrodite. It knows "the pangs of birth." It is not without reason that the dove of Aphrodite is the symbol of the Holy Ghost

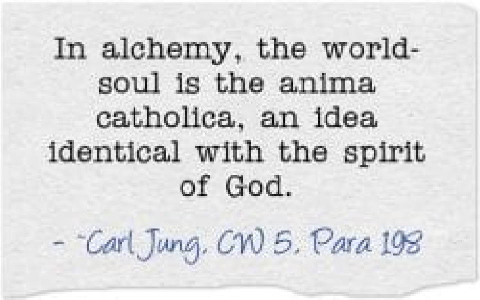
- ~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 198

Nectar, like soma, is the drink of fertility and immortality. The soul is fructified by the intellect; as the "over-soul" it is called the heavenly Aphrodite, as the "under-soul" the earthly Aphrodite. It knows "the pangs of birth." It is not without reason that the dove of Aphrodite is the symbol of the Holy Ghost Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 198

Certain early Christian sects gave a maternal significance to the Holy Ghost (world-soul or moon)

~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 198

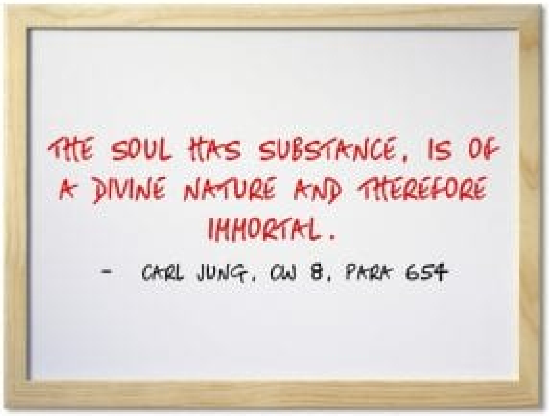
Certain early Christian sects gave a maternal significance to the Holy Ghost (world-soul or moon) Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 198



In alchemy, the world-soul is the anima catholica, an idea identical with the spirit of God.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 198

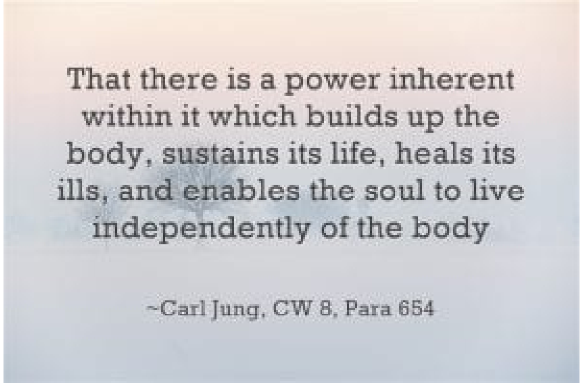
In alchemy, the world-soul is the anima catholica, an idea identical with the spirit of God Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 388



THE SOUL HAS SUBSTANCE, IS OF A DIVINE NATURE AND THEREFORE IMMORTAL.

- CARL JUNG, CW 8, PARA 654

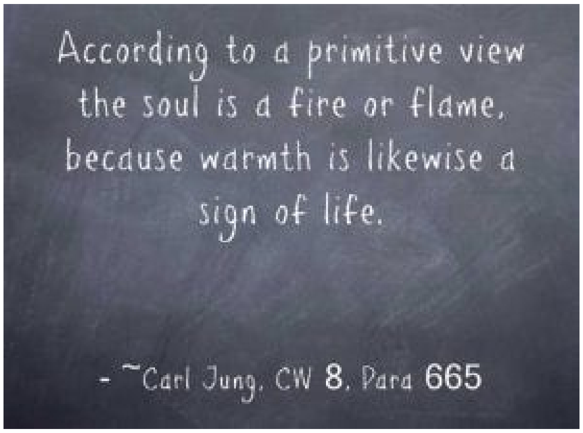
The soul has substance, is of a divine nature and therefore immortal Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 654



That there is a power inherent within it which builds up the body, sustains its life, heals its ills, and enables the soul to live independently of the body

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 654

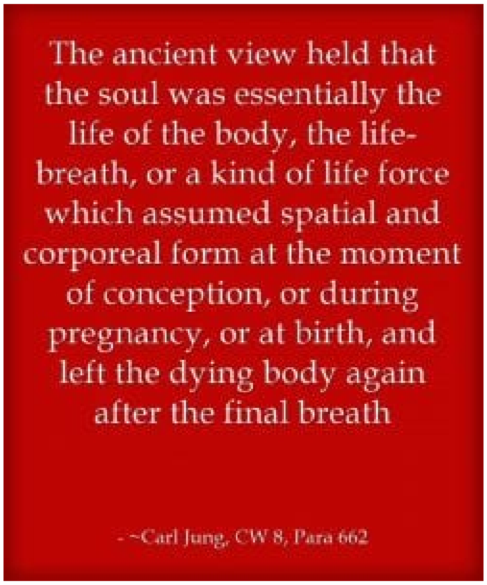
That there is a power inherent within it which builds up the body, sustains its life, heals its ills, and enables the soul to live independently of the body Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 654



According to a primitive view the soul is a fire or flame, because warmth is likewise a sign of life.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 665

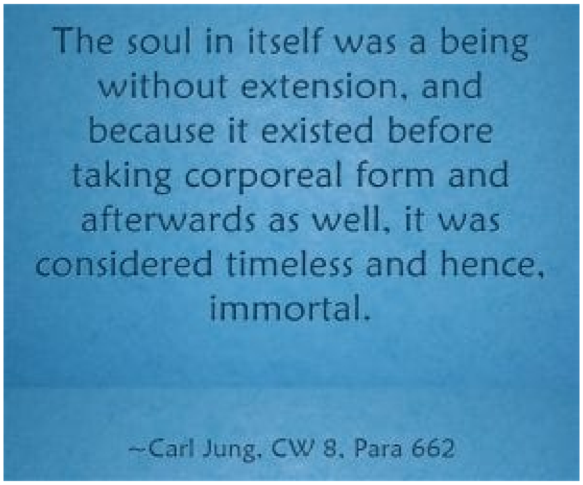
According to a primitive view the soul is a fire or flame, because warmth is likewise a sign of life.   Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 665



The ancient view held that the soul was essentially the life of the body, the life-breath, or a kind of life force which assumed spatial and corporeal form at the moment of conception, or during pregnancy, or at birth, and left the dying body again after the final breath

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 662

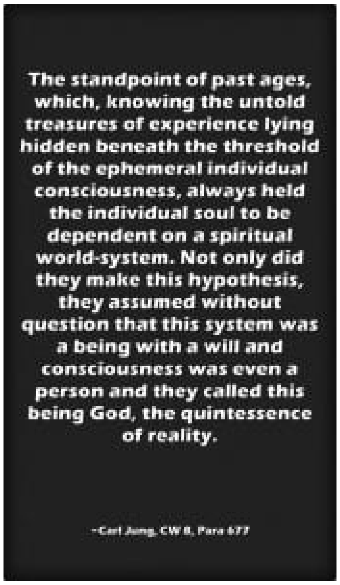
The ancient view held that the soul was essentially the life of the body, the life-breath, or a kind of life force which assumed spatial and corporeal form at the moment of conception, or during pregnancy, or at birth, and left the dying body again after the final breath Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 662



The soul in itself was a being without extension, and because it existed before taking corporeal form and afterwards as well, it was considered timeless and hence, immortal.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 662

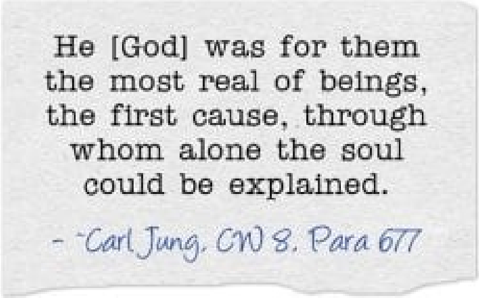
The soul in itself was a being without extension, and because it existed before taking corporeal form and afterwards as well, it was considered timeless and hence, immortal Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 662



The standpoint of past ages, which, knowing the untold treasures of experience lying hidden beneath the threshold of the ephemeral individual consciousness, always held the individual soul to be dependent on a spiritual world-system. Not only did they make this hypothesis, they assumed without question that this system was a being with a will and consciousness was even a person and they called this being God, the quintessence of reality.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 677

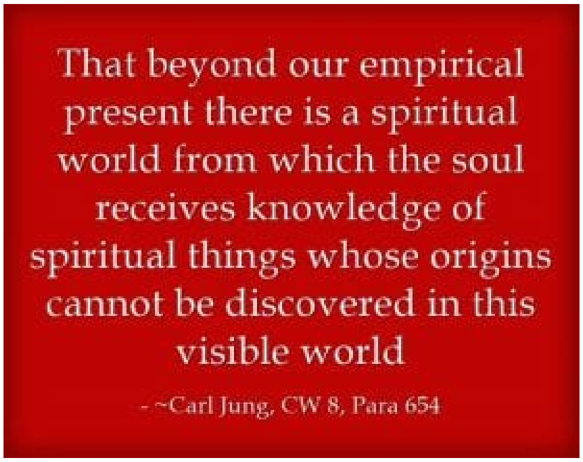
The standpoint of past ages, which, knowing the untold treasures of experience lying hidden beneath the threshold of the ephemeral individual consciousness, always held the individual soul to be dependent on a spiritual world-system. Not only did they make this hypothesis, they assumed without question that this system was a being with a will and consciousness was even a person and they called this being God, the quintessence of reality Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 677



He [God] was for them the most real of beings, the first cause, through whom alone the soul could be explained.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 677

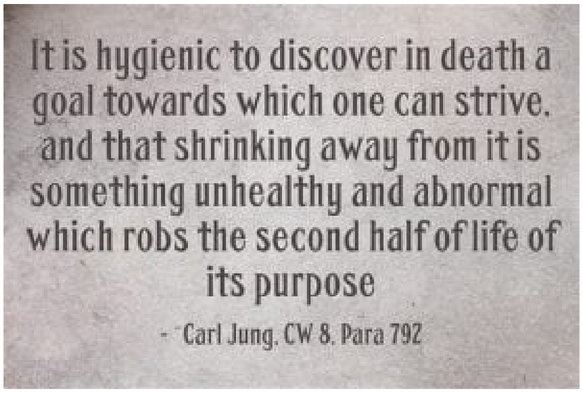
He [God] was for them the most real of beings, the first cause, through whom alone the soul could be explained Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 677



That beyond our empirical present there is a spiritual world from which the soul receives knowledge of spiritual things whose origins cannot be discovered in this visible world

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 654

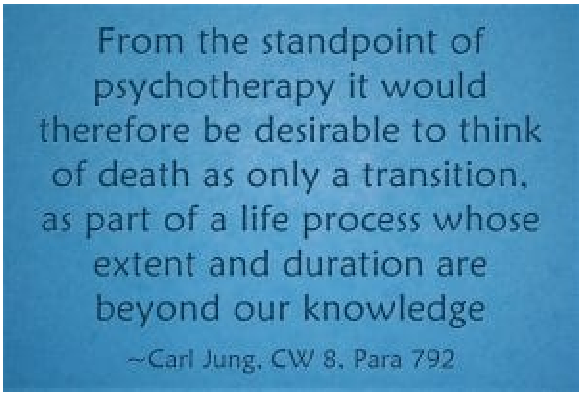
That beyond our empirical present there is a spiritual world from which the soul receives knowledge of spiritual things whose origins cannot be discovered in this visible world Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 654



It is hygienic to discover in death a goal towards which one can strive, and that shrinking away from it is something unhealthy and abnormal which robs the second half of life of its purpose

- Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 792

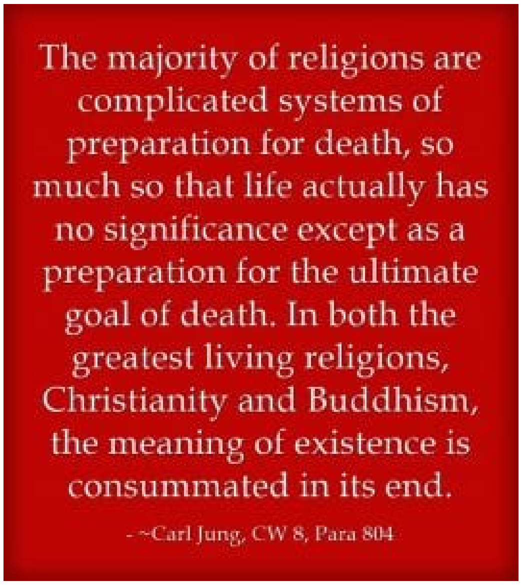
It is hygienic to discover in death a goal towards which one can strive, and that shrinking away from it is something unhealthy and abnormal which robs the second half of life of its purpose Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 792



From the standpoint of psychotherapy it would therefore be desirable to think of death as only a transition, as part of a life process whose extent and duration are beyond our knowledge

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 792

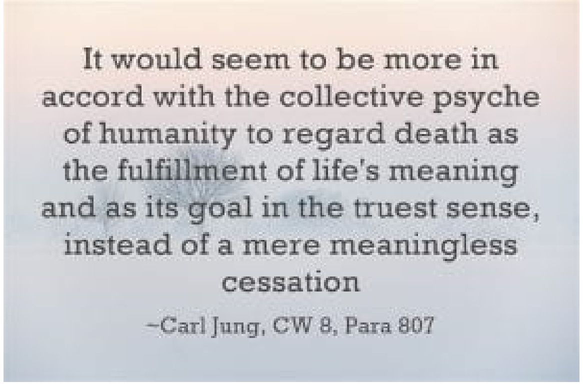
From the standpoint of psychotherapy it would therefore be desirable to think of death as only a transition, as part of a life process whose extent and duration are beyond our knowledge Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 792



The majority of religions are complicated systems of preparation for death, so much so that life actually has no significance except as a preparation for the ultimate goal of death. In both the greatest living religions, Christianity and Buddhism, the meaning of existence is consummated in its end.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 804

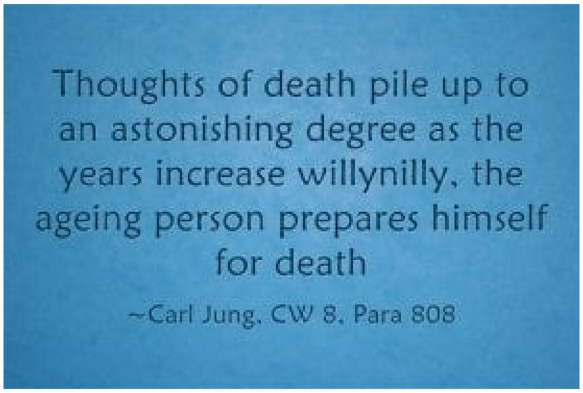
The majority of religions are complicated systems of preparation for death, so much so that life actually has no significance except as a preparation for the ultimate goal of death. In both the greatest living religions, Christianity and Buddhism, the meaning of existence is consummated in its end Carl Jung, CW 8. Para 804



It would seem to be more in accord with the collective psyche of humanity to regard death as the fulfillment of life's meaning and as its goal in the truest sense, instead of a mere meaningless cessation

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 807

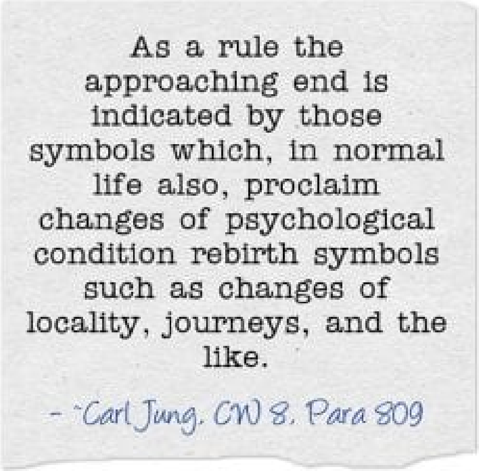
It would seem to be more in accord with the collective psyche of humanity to regard death as the fulfillment of life's meaning and as its goal in the truest sense, instead of a mere meaningless cessation Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 807



Thoughts of death pile up to an astonishing degree as the years increase willynilly, the ageing person prepares himself for death

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 808

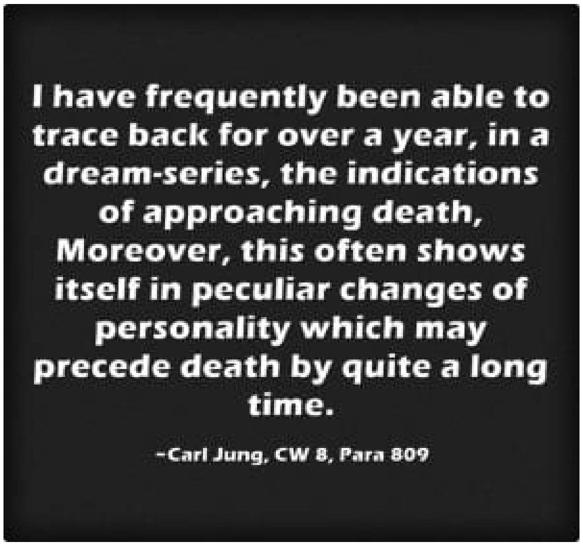
Thoughts of death pile up to an astonishing degree as the years increase willynilly, the ageing person prepares himself for death Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 808



As a rule the approaching end is indicated by those symbols which, in normal life also, proclaim changes of psychological condition rebirth symbols such as changes of locality, journeys, and the like.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 809

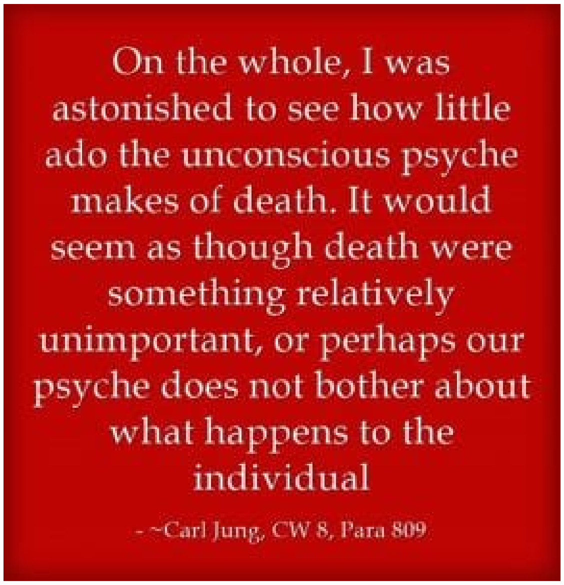
As a rule the approaching end is indicated by those symbols which, in normal life also, proclaim changes of psychological condition rebirth symbols such as changes of locality, journeys, and the like Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 809



I have frequently been able to trace back for over a year, in a dream-series, the indications of approaching death, Moreover, this often shows itself in peculiar changes of personality which may precede death by quite a long time.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 809

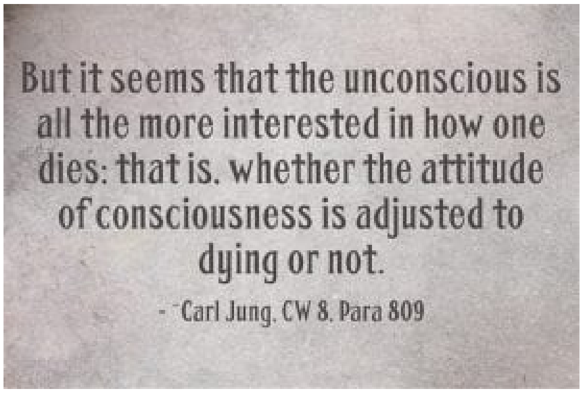
I have frequently been able to trace back for over a year, in a dream-series, the indications of approaching death, Moreover, this often shows itself in peculiar changes of personality which may precede death by quite a long time Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 809



On the whole, I was astonished to see how little ado the unconscious psyche makes of death. It would seem as though death were something relatively unimportant, or perhaps our psyche does not bother about what happens to the individual

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 809

On the whole, I was astonished to see how little ado the unconscious psyche makes of death. It would seem as though death were something relatively unimportant, or perhaps our psyche does not bother about what happens to the individual Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 809



But it seems that the unconscious is all the more interested in how one dies: that is. whether the attitude of consciousness is adjusted to dying or not.

- ~Carl Jung. CW 8. Para 809

But it seems that the unconscious is all the more interested in how one dies; that is, whether the attitude of consciousness is adjusted to dying or not Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 809

Carl Jung on Martin Buber (2019-12-17 06:05)

[1]

</div

[2]Selected Letters of C.G. Jung, 1909-1961 (Bollingen Series (General))
To Robert C. Smith

Dear Mr. Smith , 29 June 1960

Buber and I start from an entirely different basis: I make no transcendental statements.

I am essentially empirical, as I have stated more than once.

I am dealing with psychic phenomena and not with metaphysical assertions.

Within the frame of psychic events I find the fact of the belief in God.

It says : "God is."

This is the fact I am concerned with.

I a m not concerned with the truth or untruth of God’s existence.

I am concerned with the statement only, and I am interested in its structure and behaviour.

It is an emotionally "toned" complex like the father- or mother-complex or the Oedipus complex.

It is obvious that if man does not exist, no such statement can exist either, nor can anybody prove that the statement "God" exists in a non-human sphere.

What Buber misunderstands as Gnosticism is psychiatric observation, of which he obviously knows nothing.

It is certainly not my invention.

Buber has been led astray by a poem in Gnostic style I made 44 years ago for a friend’s birthday celebration (a private print!), a poetic paraphrase of the psychology of the unconscious.

"Every pioneer is a monologist" until other people have tried out his method and confirmed his results.

Would you call all the great minds which were not popular among their contemporaries, monologists, even that "voice of one crying in the wilderness"?

Buber, having no practical experience in depth psychology, does not know of the autonomy of complexes, a most easily observable fact however.

Thus God, as an autonomous complex, is a subject confronting me.

One must be really blind if one cannot get that from my books.

Likewise the self is a redoubtable reality, as everybody learns who has tried or was compelled to do something about it.

Yet I define the Self as a borderline concept.

This must be a puzzler for people like Buber, who are unacquainted with the empiricist’s epistemology.

Why cannot Buber get into his head that I deal with psychic facts and not with metaphysical assertions?

Buber is a theologian and has far more information about God’s true existence and other of His qualities than I could ever dream of acquiring.

My ambitions are not soaring to theological heights.

I am merely concerned with the practical and theoretical problem of how-do-complexes-behave?

F.i. how does a mother-complex behave in a child and in an adult?

How does the God-complex behave in different individuals and societies?

How does the self-complex compare with the Lapis Philosophorum in Hermetic philosophy and with the Christ-figure in patristic allegories, with Al Chadir in Islamic tradition, with Tifereth in the Kabbalah, with Mithras, Attis, Odin, Krishna, and so on?

As you see, I am concerned with images, human phenomena, of which only the ignorant can assume that they are within our control or that they can be reduced to mere "objects."

Every psychiatrist and psychotherapist can tell you to what an enormous degree man is delivered over to the terrific power of a complex which has assumed superiority over his mind.

(Vide compulsion neurosis, schizophrenia, drugs, political and private nonsense, etc.)

Mental possessions are just as good as ghosts, demons, and gods.

It is the task of the psychologist to investigate these matters.

The theologian certainly has not done it yet.

I am afraid it is sheer prejudice against science which hinders theologians from understanding my empirical standpoint.

Seen from this standpoint the "experience of God" is nolens volens the psychic fact that I find myself confronted with, a factor in myself (more or less represented also by external circumstances) which proves to me to be of insurmountable power. F.i. a most rational professor of philosophy is entirely possessed by the fear of cancer which he knows does not exist.

Try to liberate such an unfortunate fellow from his predicament and you will get an idea of "psychic autonomy."

I am sorry if X. bothers about the question of the basis upon which "religion rests."

This is a metaphysical question the solution of which I do not know.

I am concerned with phenomenal religion, with its observable facts, to which I try to add a few psychological observations about basic events in the collective unconscious, the existence of which I can prove.

Beyond this I know nothing and I have never made any assertions about it.

How does Buber know of something he cannot "experience psychologically"?

How is such a thing possible at all?

If not in the psyche, then where else?

You see, it is always the same matter: the complete misunderstanding of the psychological argument: "God" within the frame of psychology is an autonomous complex, a dynamic image, and that is all psychology is ever able to state.

It cannot know more about God. It cannot prove or disprove God's actual existence, but it does know how fallible images in the human mind are.

If Niels Bohr compares the model of atomic structure with a planetary system, he knows it is merely a model of a transcendent and unknown reality, and if I talk of the God-image I do not deny a transcendental reality.

I merely insist on the psychic reality of the God-complex or the God-image, as Niels Bohr proposes the analogy of a planetary system.

He would not be as dumb as to believe that his model is an exact and true replica of the atom.

No empiricist in his senses would believe his models to be the eternal truth itself.

He knows too well how many changes any kind of reality undergoes in becoming a conscious representation.

All my ideas are names, models, and hypotheses for a better understanding of observable facts.

I never dreamt that intelligent people could misunderstand them as theological statements, i.e., hypostases.

I was obviously too naive in this regard and that is the reason why I was so me times not careful enough to repeat time and again: "But what I mean is only the psychic image of a nou menon"

Kant’s thing-in-itself, which is not a negation as you know).

My empirical standpoint is so disappointingly simple that it needs only an average intelligence and a bit of common sense to understand it, but it needs an uncommon amount of prejudice or even ill will to misunderstand it, as it seems to me.

I am sorry if I bore you with my commonplaces.

But you asked for it.

You can find them in most of my books, beginning with the year 1912, almost half a century ago and not yet noticed by authorities like Buber.

I have spent a lifetime of work on psychological and psychopathological investigations.

Buber criticizes me in a field in which he is incompetent and which he does not even understand.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/da965-1martin.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Selected-Letters-1909-1961-Bollingen-General/dp/0691640300/ref=sr_1_3?keywords=carl+jung+letters&qid=1576601479&sr=8-3

Carl Jung: If we do not fashion for ourselves a picture of the world, (2019-12-17 06:21)

[1]

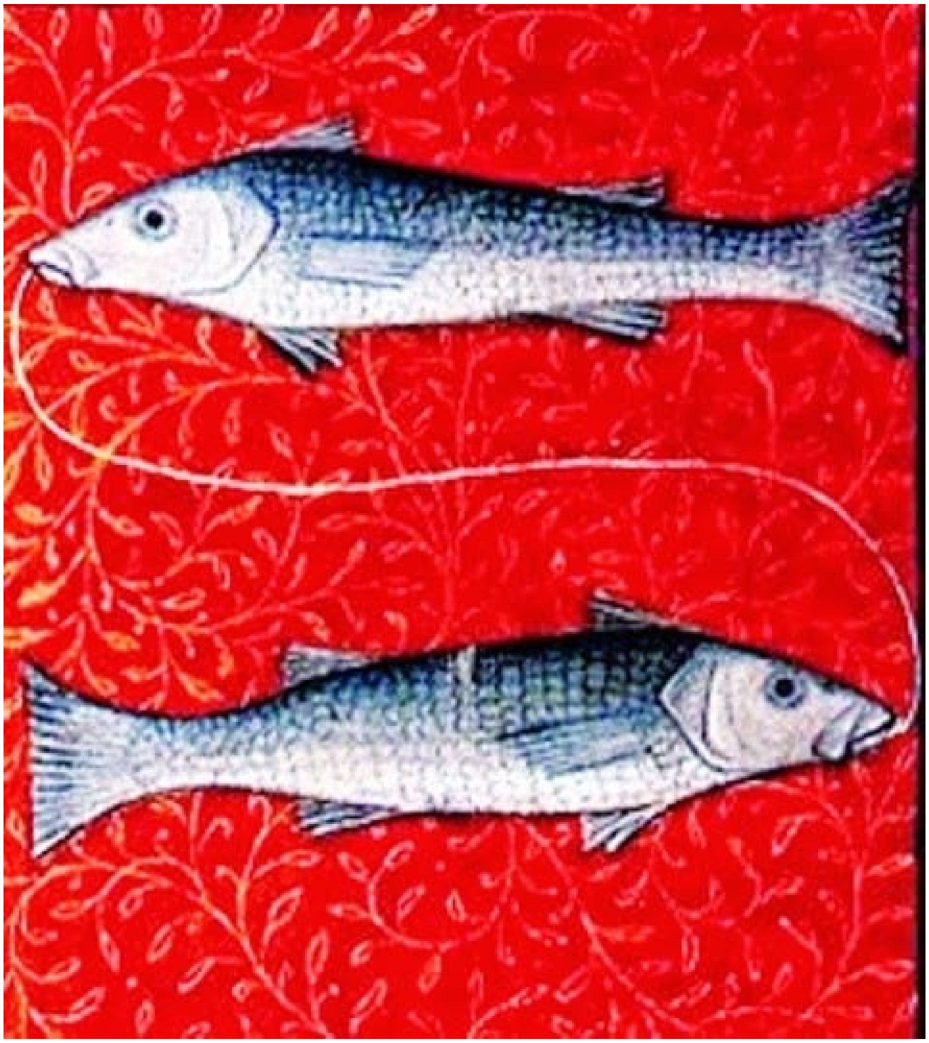
If we do not fashion for ourselves a picture of the world, we do not see ourselves either, who are the faithful reflections of that world. Only when mirrored in our picture of the world can we see ourselves in the round? Only in our creative acts do we step forth into the light and see ourselves whole and complete. Never shall we put any face on the world other than our own, and we have to do this precisely in order to find ourselves. For higher than science or art as an end in itself stands man, the creator of his instruments. "Analytical Psychology and Weltanschauung" (1928). In CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.737

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/fc687-the2btrundholm2bsun2bchariot.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Symbolism of Fish. (2019-12-17 06:35)

[1]



[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

The fish, the next transformational form of the mouse, represent the water element.

Here the chthonic quality recedes into the background, and the spiritual begins.

Mrs. Brunner has quite correctly pointed out that fish are like thoughts and premonitions that rise from the unconscious.

There is an analogy in alchemy: when the primordial water, the humidum radicale, is sufficiently heated up, something like fish eyes (that is, steam bubbles) appears in it.

This is what is most precious in fish, that which is capable of being illuminated.

We may here interpret the fish, therefore, as the transition into spiritual element, into the air.

In creation there was only the primordial water at first, which also contained the air.

Then, it says, God divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament.

The lower waters border the underworld, but the upper waters are the spirit.

According to alchemical philosophy, the spirit of life becomes visible here, the Holy Spirit.

The upper waters form the body of the pneuma and are a kind of corpus spirituale, or a spiritus corporalis, a subtle spirit.

At the final stage, humans come into being. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 365.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/fa220-fish.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?crid=W3TBYFKWUPZ9&keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1576609499&sp`

Carl Jung on the Symbolism of Snakes. (2019-12-17 06:40)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

The same was true of the snakes.

If such a snake from the grave came into the house, the whole family moved out, because the spirit of the dead had taken possession of the house (the same can also be found in certain primitive tribes!).

In their capacity as spirits of the dead, snakes were even publicly worshipped in Greece.

The snake that was worshipped in the Erechtheion on the Acropolis was considered to be the spirit of King Erechtheus or Erechthonios, who was buried there.

Usually the living spirit of the dead was fed by sacrificed food offered to it through burial holes.

The snake cult also had an apotropaic meaning, because snakes are animals that suddenly appear out of the darkness and, therefore, frighten people.

Moreover, man is incapable of establishing a rapport with them.

They are as enigmatic and frightening as the unconscious, so, since time immemorial, man has protected himself against them as he has done against the unconscious.

Primitives, for example, wear amulets on each joint, and their whole life is completely regulated by an immense number of practices governed by fear.

They live as if imprisoned within walls they have erected out of fear of their unconscious, for it might well play a sudden trick on them.

Snakes, and particularly red ones, are not only spirits of the dead, but can also represent emotional states, as you have heard in the paper.

They stand for the heat of the soul, the fire of passion, and thus represent a more intense stage of development. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 364-365.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/d53e5-asp.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+childrens+dreams&qid=1576601754&sr=8-2`

Carl Jung: "The Mouse is a Soul Animal." (2019-12-17 06:45)

[1]

[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

But why is it the mouse, of all animals, that is the medium of the development?

We cannot give any compelling reasons for this, but Mrs. Brunner has given you enough evidence that the mouse is a soul animal.

She has also quite correctly pointed to the transparency of the mouse and interpreted it as spirituality.

Transparency is a criterion for the spirituality of matter.

So the lapis philosophorum is also called vitrum (glass), precisely because it is of a spiritual nature, or lapis aethereus.

So we have to imagine that the mouse, by virtue of its transparency, can form the spiritual vessel, in which the various transformations from animal to man take place.

The starting point of this development is the gray mouse.

The gray mouse is, as Mrs. Brunner has mentioned, an animal that stands in connection to the darkness of the soul; it represents that fleetingly glimpsed, dark nature of man that makes itself unpleasantly felt from time to time, above all at night.

Mice are also allegories of gnawing thoughts, therefore, of pricks of conscience, that haunt us like spirits at night.

These are chthonic animals with a certain relation to death.

As deathly animals, they are brought in connection with Apollo.

The Greeks worshipped Phoebus Smintheus, that is, the Mouse-Apollo, in whose temple mice were kept under the altar.

There they were looked after and cared for, and in a way this had the meaning of apotropaic magic.

We might ask what, for heaven's sake, Apollo, the sun god, should have to do with mice.

Now we know that Apollo is not only the god of light, but also the bearer of death, because his arrows can bring the plague, which is an illness that is spread by animals such as mice and rats.

The mouse in general is an uncanny, deathly messenger.

A great mouse plague is an evil omen for a country.

This is understandable, because there were times when veritable mice epidemics broke out, when they multiplied in great numbers, destroyed all the crops, and caused famine and illness.

Participant: In Faust the mice also appear as spirits.

Professor Jung: Where?

Participant: When the pentagram prevents the devil from crossing the threshold.

Professor Jung: Yes, there Mephistopheles calls his assistants, the rats and the mice, that they should gnaw through the pentagram:

"The Lord of Rats and Mice,
Of Flies, Frogs, Bugs, and Lice,
Summons you to venture here,
And gnaw the threshold here."

Participant: The gray color of the mouse is also the color of the spirits.

Professor Jung: Yes, it is the color of darkness and of the spirits.

So, you see, for all these reasons we may understand the mouse as a dark and enigmatic starting point of the development.

In Greek antiquity, for example, the mice that crept out of graves were considered the spirits of the dead, and were, therefore, taken care of and fed. Carl Jung, The Children's Seminar, Pages 363-364.

Image: The Bronze Mouse of Apollo Smintheus

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/4c6aa-apollo.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=jung+childrens+dreams&qid=1576601754&sr=8-2

Carl Jung " I have raised corn, potatoes, beans and lately even wheat, also poppy for oil." (2019-12-17 07:01)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Eugene H. Henley

My dear Henley, 20 April 1946

I should have written to you long ago to thank you for your kindness and generosity.

The tobacco has safely arrived and I must say that Granger has remained my true love.

I hope that you have received the two books I sent you.

I'm having another one sent to you.

Ever since my recovery I have been very busy and I only have to be careful not to overwork.

There is so much to do and particularly such a flood of letters that I hardly can keep up with it.

For some time the current affairs ate up whatever time was left to me and so all my personal correspondence had to go by the board for a while.

I now have my spring vacations and can atone for some of my sins at last.

I'm up at Bollingen and enjoy a most beautiful spring.

I can sail my boat again which gives me no end of pleasure.

I have read with great interest all the news about conditions in America.

We only get some scarce information through the papers and it isn't always very clear.

Having been shut off from the world for such a long time, one is no longer au courant with the status of the world in general.

Our so-called peace is a troubled affair and the greatest part of Europe is still in hysterics.

No wonder really!

The mental and moral, social and financial catastrophe is simply gigantic.

The mental and moral devastation is the one I'm chiefly concerned with, since we begin now to get more immediate and personal acquaintance with the facts of the atrocities of the war.

We see now the people who have been in the bombed cities and have undergone the nightmare of hell.

The mentality created by the Nazis in Germany is really a study in itself.

People were horrified by my assertion that the Germans were psychopaths, but this is really a very mild judgment considering the spiritual catastrophe of the German mind.

I have seen a great deal of X.

In a way he has pleased me very much.

He is running his job very efficiently and he could really do something pretty great.

But he gets into drink from time to time and then he is just damn foolish, so that one is never too sure that he doesn't get mixed up in a fatal scandal.

In that respect he is excuse me-typically American, as he is unexpectedly efficient in one way and in another way as astonishingly childish .

A European of his calibre would be far less efficient because he would be just too childish, and he would be far less childish because he would be cleverer.

There is a great distance between the ego and the shadow in an American and that is the reason why so many of your boys get on with the Germans so well-because there is something similar in the Germans, namely the great tension between the positive and the negative pole.

The only difference is that in the American the tension exists between the civilized and the primitive man, in the German between the cultural man and the devil.

This is one of the reasons why the Americans are easily led astray or influenced by the Germans.

I think there is no small danger for your boys in Germany.

I see it also in X., who is always in danger of getting too much under their influence.

They are so damn plausible, like old Hitler, who may roast in hell for ever.

But I must say this for him: he was an eye opener!

He has even opened my eyes several inches.

You quote in your letter my saying that I had no illusions.

Against this statement I must say that before the Hitler era I still had some illusions which have been radically destroyed by the prodigious efforts of the Germans.

I really had not thought that man could be so absolutely bad.

I thought he could be evil, but evil has at least a certain character, while evil in Germany was rotten.

It was a carrion of evil, unimaginably worse than the normal devil.

Since Germany is not on the moon, I have drawn my conclusions for the rest of mankind.

Conditions in Switzerland are somewhat better than during the war, though our bread-ration has been reduced again to 250 gr. A day, which isn't bad since we have more possibilities of other foodstuffs than in other countries.

During the war I cultivated my own fields.

I have raised corn, potatoes, beans and lately even wheat, also poppy for oil.

We have eaten polenta like Italians.

It isn't so bad, but not very interesting.

My best regards to Mrs. Henley,

Gratefully yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 423-425.

Note: Granger is a type of American tobacco.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/8e789-crops.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1N8Q2371PBLLD&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576601978&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Carl Jung on Old People, Death, Soul. (2019-12-17 07:14)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Margaret Erwin Schevill

Dear Mrs. Schevill, 25 July 1946

Thank you very much for your kind birthday-letter which has reached me a day before the eventful date.

The idea of a seminar for old people is not bad at all, although it would be exceedingly difficult to find suitable material along which one could develop the ideas that deserve to be talked about.

It could be done however in an absolutely unpremeditated way in the form of questions and answers.

Of course all of the people ought to be seriously concerned with the question of death or should have felt the touch of it at least.

I’m sorry to hear that Mr. Schevill died. I did not know it.

I hope he had an easy death and not such a terrible agony as for instance Kristine Mann.

I'm terribly sorry X. has to suffer from cancer, in her case cancer really comes too early and it is a mean way of killing people anyhow.

But nature is horrible in many respects.

It is a fact that the body very often apparently survives the soul, often even without a disease.

It is just as if the soul detached itself from the body sometimes years before death actually occurs, or sometimes with perfectly healthy people who are going to die within a short delay by acute illness or accident.

As far as we know at all there seems to be no immediate decomposition of the soul.

One could almost say, on the contrary.

It is curious that you mention the problem of transference and its importance for the problem of death.

I'm just about to publish a book about the psychology of transference/ where I try to elucidate its problems with reference to its meta-psychical aspects.

I'm glad to hear that your books thrive. Mine do too!

Actually I'm enjoying my summer vacations and I'm full of the best intentions to restrict my work with patients to the utmost, and you know that the way to hell is always paved with good intentions.

You know, for old people, the concept of "next year" or something of the sort is always problematic since one has learned that time is a most relative thing and can come to a complete end whenever it chooses.

It would be nice to see you again if you come across the dividing ocean.

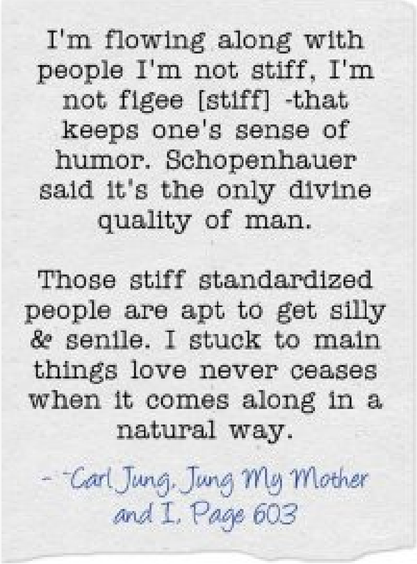
Cordially yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 437-438.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/ca4c9-death.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1N8Q2371PBLLD&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576601978&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Jane Reid: Jung, My Mother and I - Quotations (2019-12-17 10:45)

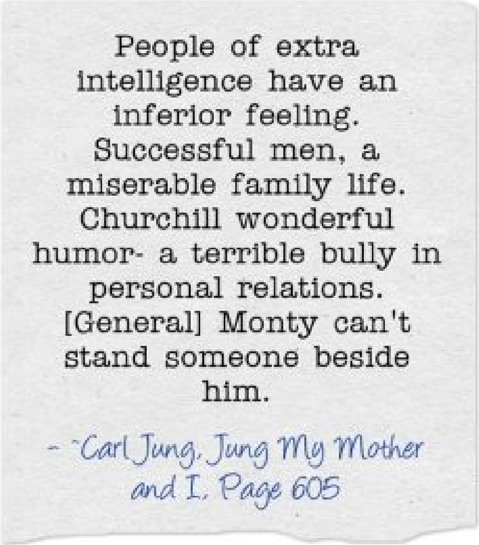
[1]Jung, My Mother and I: The Analytical Diaries of Catharine Rush Cabot



I'm flowing along with people I'm not stiff, I'm not figee [stiff] -that keeps one's sense of humor. Schopenhauer said it's the only divine quality of man.

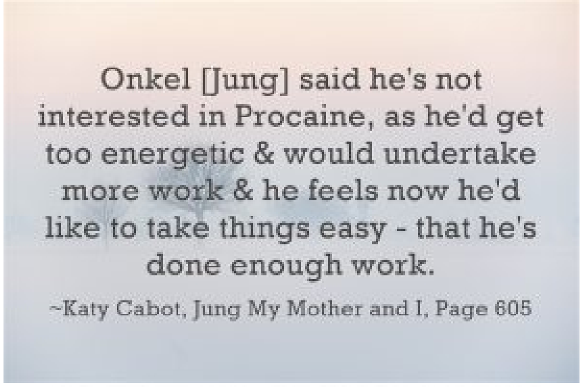
Those stiff standardized people are apt to get silly & senile. I stuck to main things love never ceases when it comes along in a natural way.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 603



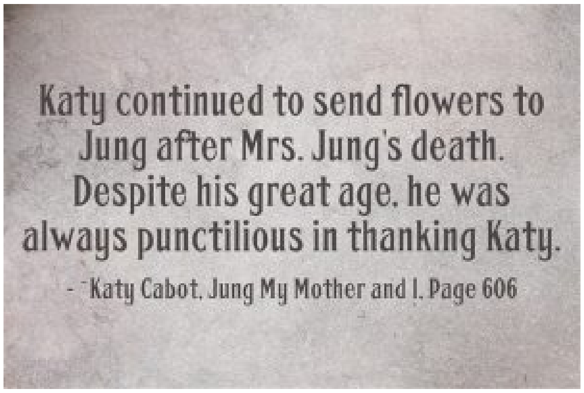
People of extra intelligence have an inferior feeling. Successful men, a miserable family life. Churchill wonderful humor- a terrible bully in personal relations. [General] Monty can't stand someone beside him.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 605



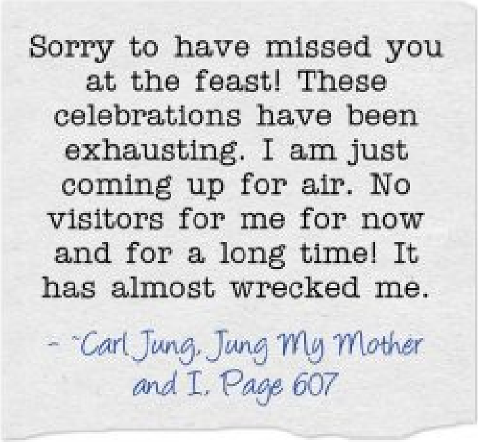
Onkel [Jung] said he's not interested in Procaine, as he'd get too energetic & would undertake more work & he feels now he'd like to take things easy - that he's done enough work.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 605



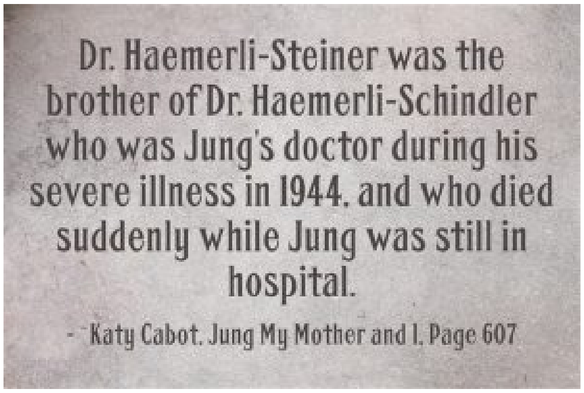
Katy continued to send flowers to Jung after Mrs. Jung's death. Despite his great age, he was always punctilious in thanking Katy.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 606



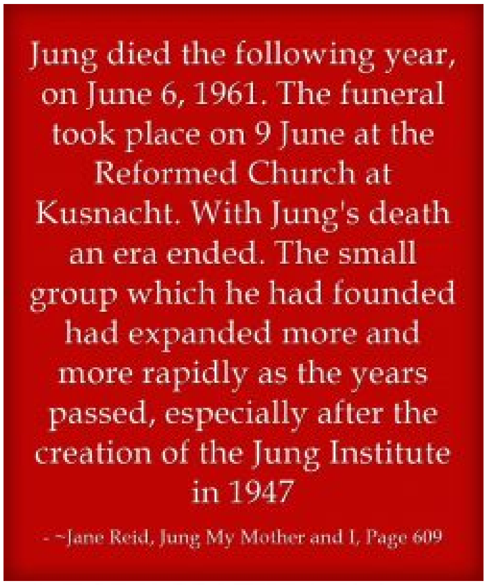
Sorry to have missed you at the feast! These celebrations have been exhausting. I am just coming up for air. No visitors for me for now and for a long time! It has almost wrecked me.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 607



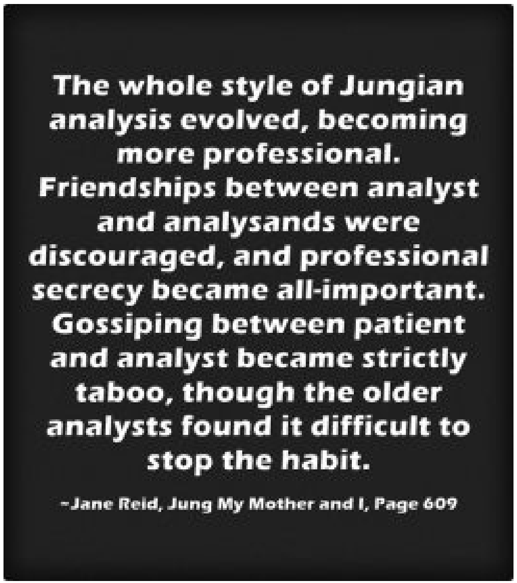
Dr. Haemerli-Steiner was the brother of Dr. Haemerli-Schindler who was Jung's doctor during his severe illness in 1944, and who died suddenly while Jung was still in hospital.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 607



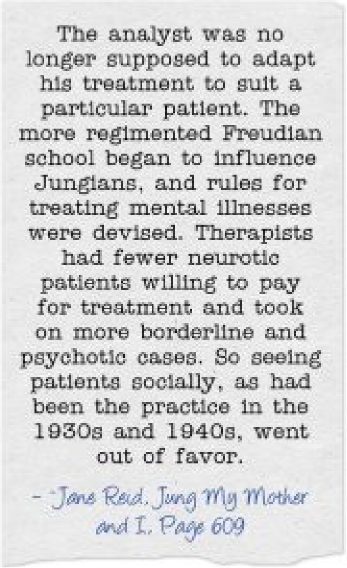
Jung died the following year, on June 6, 1961. The funeral took place on 9 June at the Reformed Church at Kusnacht. With Jung's death an era ended. The small group which he had founded had expanded more and more rapidly as the years passed, especially after the creation of the Jung Institute in 1947

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 609



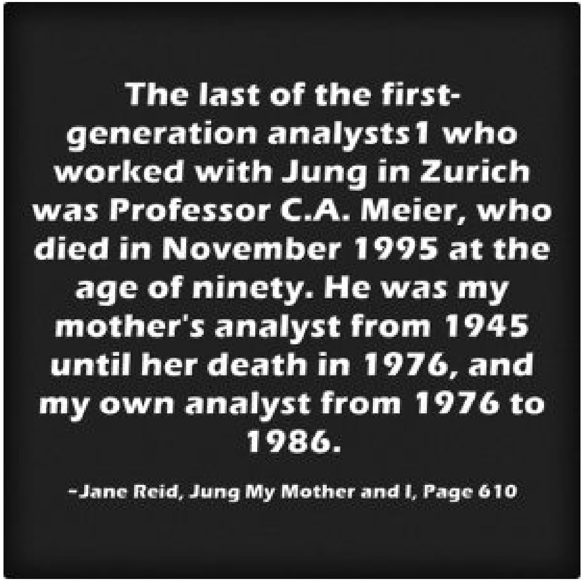
The whole style of Jungian analysis evolved, becoming more professional. Friendships between analyst and analysands were discouraged, and professional secrecy became all-important. Gossiping between patient and analyst became strictly taboo, though the older analysts found it difficult to stop the habit.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 609



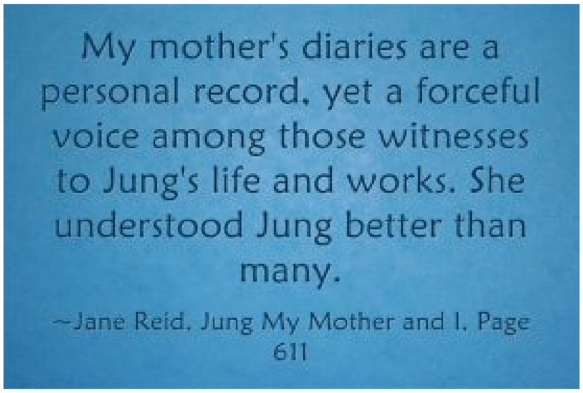
The analyst was no longer supposed to adapt his treatment to suit a particular patient. The more regimented Freudian school began to influence Jungians, and rules for treating mental illnesses were devised. Therapists had fewer neurotic patients willing to pay for treatment and took on more borderline and psychotic cases. So seeing patients socially, as had been the practice in the 1930s and 1940s, went out of favor.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 609



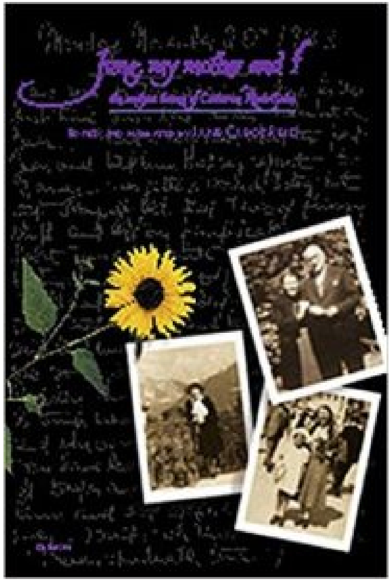
The last of the first-generation analysts1 who worked with Jung in Zurich was Professor C.A. Meier, who died in November 1995 at the age of ninety. He was my mother's analyst from 1945 until her death in 1976, and my own analyst from 1976 to 1986.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 610



My mother's diaries are a personal record, yet a forceful voice among those witnesses to Jung's life and works. She understood Jung better than many.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 611



I really do think that you [Katy Cabot] understand Dr. Jung's teaching far better and deeper than almost anyone else. Toni Wolff, Jung, My

Mother and I, Page 14

My mother saw Jung for the first time while I was at the Kinderspital. She also began her analysis with Toni Wolff that same autumn. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 44

After her first interview with Jung in the autumn of 1929, she was now analyzing regularly with Toni Wolff, as it was Jung's habit to send a new patient to his assistant for weekly analysis, occasionally seeing the patient himself. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 45

He [Jung] is one of the most deeply religious men, in the true sense of the word, whom it has been my privilege to meet. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 49

All of intellectual Europe is beginning to recognize that he [Jung] is one of the most, if not the most powerful intellectual force which has appeared since Schopenhauer. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 49

Keyserling told a friend of mine the other day that he considered Jung the most superior mind that he'd ever encountered. It is a liberal education to sit at his feet and it is a most inspiring experience to attend in the new great lecture hall of the University his special lectures in German before the Philosophical Society, and to hear the tremendous applause with which they receive the man whom previously the University had forced out because of their inability to understand his high and advanced thinking. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 50

. .. Analysis is Work, hard, tedious and at times discouraging but I am sure the results justify all the work and energy one puts into it. It is of course just as lonely for me as it is for Jim but the extraordinary reestablishment of Janey's health has justified the long stay in Switzerland. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 50

It is true that I shall have my seminar already on October 12th. I enjoyed your picture postcards very much. It is exceedingly nice of you that you gave me a sign of your existence from time to time. Hoping to see you soon, I am, Yours sincerely, C.G. Jung Carl Jung, "Jung, My Mother and I, "Page 53

As I said earlier, two things that Jung taught my mother early in analysis were to appreciate good clothes and to enjoy alcohol. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 53

Jung went on to say later that it was only a metaphysical truth that every man was equal to every other man. Everyone must realize that the 'mob' consists of inferior beings, inferior types of the human species. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 55

Jung says,he thinks that animals are as dignified as a lowly developed man. We must deal with such men in their own way. It is idiotic and cruel to treat inferior man as we would superior man. There is a fundamental mistake in our democratic ideas. We owe it to Christianity that all men are considered equal and that God looks at everyone the same way Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 55

Then Jung went on to say that people often say, "No one loves me." But we have to create that thing which loves us, and which we love. We are inclined to take love like a tree or a gold mine. We simply can't go on taking for granted that love is something that we get from 'somewhere.' It has to be created because it does not exist, it must be made first. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 55

Katy began her analysis in 1929 with Toni Wolff, after that single hour with Jung to which Mrs. Jung's letter from that autumn alludes. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 53

When from time to time my mother overcame her fear of not measuring up to the other members of the "intellectual" group, she would join in, but on one occasion, Barbara Hannah criticized her red varnished fingernails in front of the group, hinting that my mother was frivolous! Katy was crushed. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 54

...Jung spoke about people who love to be compassionate to others; they are the great helpers and eternal saviors! It is such a nice feeling for them and quenches for them their unquestionable thirst to be on top! He said it would be very much better if such people were compassionate with themselves - with the ugliest man in themselves! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 54

...one has to accept the inferior sides in oneself first, if one hopes to build up the superior sides. It is like building a house, one doesn't begin with the roof. One must dig the foundations first and go into the dirt. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 55.

One must swallow one's inferiority before one can create something new and better. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56.

Inferior man doesn't believe in the individual, he believes in great gatherings and in huge and fine buildings to house them. If someone says, "So and so many millions believe in this or that," then he, too, will believe. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56

Jung hazarded that Buddhism was also a good religion, and had millions of followers. Whereupon the curate said, "I am not concerned with that!" That is just it, Jung said, and went on that clergymen are not concerned with the spiritual strivings of man. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56

Life is truth and a doubt of truth – a question. If something is finished, a definite truth, then it is dead, as it cannot develop further. Best is a half-truth, for a living truth emerges. If truth is static, it is dead. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56

The Church is made for the inferior man. And for that reason we need it, because we are all inferior. A wise man would never want to disturb the Church. It is a spiritual stable for spiritual lambs - and for wolves! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56

With a good shepherd who will show the sheep the way to good pastures (inferior man demands good pastures) the Church is a most desirable thing and the more Catholic the better. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56

What is good for inferior man, is bad for superior and creative man: Church is a prison for him, belief is hell to him, because he must create. And if he is fettered by eternal truths, then he suffocates and says, "The Church is wrong," forgetting the Church is right in about ninety percent of himself! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, age 56

The priests are in the same enclosure as the sheep. They are two different aspects of the same thing. A priest who isn't fettered and doesn't believe in the dogma of his church, has no value ... we suspect him of hypocrisy. He is a cheat. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57

In the Catholic Church, the priests have to have a wider viewpoint - otherwise they could not deal with the more educated members of the Church. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57

Jung went on to say that a herd of sheep left alone has no life and is eaten up by wolves. So it is with certain people, they must be prisoners. They are happier that way. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57

One can't talk about psychology in France, Italy and Spain: they think it is mysticism. Those people cannot understand what psychology is talking about, because the whole world of problems and symbols is all within the walls of the Church. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57

No human relationship can provide the miracle of transubstantiation. If you realize that then you can have your spiritual food every day. That is the side that people don't reckon with whenthey leave the Church and expect to live off others. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57

Even an Atheist, if he is a member of an atheist club, still has the Church within his reach. He can confess and repent, and with one leap he is back again in the fold. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57

We are convinced that people who live in other countries are not all devils, but primitive man believes that they are. They have in that way security in their tribe. Nothing welds people together more than collective misdeeds. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57

Communities will often commit crimes so as to bond themselves together. When the Church was falling asunder, they burnt the heretics, started the Inquisition. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 58

If we say, "This church is false ... " then we have expelled ourselves from our own home - we have uprooted ourselves. If you deny the Church, it is as if you had appendicitis, yet you are convinced you have no appendix. You can't cut out an appendix you don't have, so you are lost. The devils we have within us make us believe they don't exist so they are able to work on in the dark. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 58

When someone is devoting himself to a cause, people think he is doing it for ambition. They think an abbot lives his miserable life in his own interest. These priests are to be taken seriously, for they live their miserable lives for a cause. They accept their miserable lot for the cause. If you have ever looked into such a life you will be deeply impressed by the misery of it. It is tolerated and borne for a cause, and it works. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 58

He [Angelus Sileslus] became frightened [of what he had written] and went back into the Church as a monk, and who developed a neurosis. The inferior man in him began to howl, and he ran home. He died in a monastery - a terrible fate. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 58

I tried my best to fit you [Katy Cabot] in somehow. But there has been such a flood of consultations that together with an abominable cold, I was quite unable to live up to all my obligations. I am extremely sorry that I could not squeeze you in any more. If there should be any particular trouble I wish you would whisper into my ear at the occasion of the April Fool's dinner. Thousand regrets. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 59

No letters from my mother to Jung were kept by him before 1937. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 59

l health, and though she studied with Jung and Toni Wolff, it never seemed to occur to her that mental health was also necessary. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 66-67

She [Katy Cabot] fluctuated between the serious and playful poles of her nature in part because she felt inferior to the Zurich intellectuals, even though Mrs. Jung, Barbara Hannah, and several other bright women in the circle had not been to any university. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 70

In 1931, shortly after my father's death, she [Katy Cabot] toyed with the idea of studying at Oxford, which Toni Wolff, educated at Bern University, also advocated. Carl Jun, Jung My Mother and I, Page 70

She also mentions "financial complications" at that period, which kept her from analysis with Jung. But his fees were modest - about SFr 20 per hour - and she could afford a staff of three. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 83

Inasmuch as the Ten Commandments are near to a natural morality, they represent the will of God. If a person is not obedient to his parents, and does not honor them, he does not honor himself either. So if you violate and trespass against those Commandments, you do a thing against life. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 85

The symbols of the Catholic Church have a peculiar validity and can function as if they were a truth despite the fact that they are so absurd. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 85

If the Catholic Church did not administer magic, so to speak, it would lose its hold over the people. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 85

The only place you can get this 'magic' is in a Catholic Church, administered by priests with apostolic succession. It is wonderful for people to have a place where actual magic is happening, for then the unconscious is caught. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 87

If I imagined that a priest could perform a rite of real magic value which could not be repeated or bought anywhere else, I would gladly tum Catholic. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 87

They are the Protestants, who have forgotten that the Virgin Birth is a fact - of course the Virgin Birth and the Trinity are psychological facts and not historical facts. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 88

Jung said that people often confused reality with psychological reality. When Nietzsche did not grasp the psychological reality of Zarathustra, then he is Zarathustra and is mad. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 88

Dr. Jung said [Barbara] Hannah admired me [Katy Cabot] very much and would like to do as I do, but doesn't know how. [Mary] Foote is afraid I am a very bad person and suspects I might have a beau. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 89

As for Barbara Hannah and Mary Foote, they had arrived in Zurich at about the same time, a few years before Katy. Both were artists, and in analysis with Jung, and both lived at the Pension Sonne in Kusnacht before eventually taking apartments. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 89

Dr. Jung went on to say that in analysis first lovely feelings are exchanged, but after that one can go lower to affectionate gestures and a kiss, then on the ground floor is bed. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 91

"You take the panics seriously, don't you?" I said, "Yes." "Well," he said, "if you take the panics seriously then there is seriousness within you." If a person stands in front of a picture and raves over it, and feels inferior because he cannot create such a lovely thing, then it shows there is beauty in him for otherwise he could not feel that way. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 91-92

Oh, those, If you put Hannah in trousers she'd be a typical Scottish minister. She envies you and would like to be like you. She'd like to have your nails, but they wouldn't suit her, she'd be ridiculous! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 92

He replied that you are not only the child of your parents but the child of mankind. One does not necessarily take after one's parents; one can have some very decent ancestors to take after. He added that if one could go back far enough in the history of one's parents one could find out why they became that way. Carl Jung, Jung My

Mother and I, Page 93

One of her [Katy Cabot] targets were the Jung's, to whom she was always sending flowers. (Mrs. Jung reciprocated with books at Christmas.) She also liked to give unsolicited advice, especially in matters of health, not only to her Boston father-in-law in his nineties but also to Jung. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 94

The highest accomplishment of man is to be conscious of himself. The whole thing is to know what one is doing. All the moral and ethical valuations of things are a mere interlude, a step in the development of consciousness. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 80

Jung said that he could well understand that I could get the beauty and feelings in paintings, as that comes through the eyes and not through the ears. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 96

If you hear the right way you will hear the unconscious and what it is trying to tell you. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 96

Katy had turned forty in 1935, and the little-girl side was retreating while the masculine side was in the ascendant - a normal process for women, according to Jung. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 97

I then told him of my transference to Wolff and how I hated her saying she was not seeing me again, and how I finally asked her to dinner; that at first she was cold then said she would come. Jung said that Wolff had certainly released my feeling. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 99

I then asked him [Jung] why Mr. Crowley had an ANIMUS, and I went on to say that despite the fact that he might think me queer I was determined to hold to it that Mr. Crowley had an animus!! He said indeed it was true and that he had saddled himself with Mrs. Crowley's animus, so it was really Mrs. Crowley's animus speaking through Mr. Crowley. Katy Cabot, Jung, Mother and I, Page 99

I grew a rhinoceros hide over my heart so none of my parents' avalanches could reach me. It was a defense which grew thicker and thicker as the years went on. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 100

As a child I had covered my heart with rhino hide so that my parents could not hurt me. Jung said I must answer people back, like Hannah, when they are rude. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 100

From my work with women patients, I learned how important an emotional marriage with the father, or with his substitute (the first man in a woman's life), is vital for feminine development. Page 103-104

The way to the self, if you have the power to take it, is a difficult way - if you have the power to do it. Most people indulge themselves but they don't work on themselves. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 108

the difficult entanglements, in which one finds oneself, are one's roots. If you don't touch the soil, and instead lead an artificial, cut-off existence, then the self has no real feet- it is a ghost and should never have been born. It is a futile indulgence to neglect a job to indulge in self. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 108

if you can stand the sight of yourself as a murderer, or an offender, then you might be strong enough to continue on the right path. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 109

He said, "You must apply the same criticism to yourself that you apply to others, and thus see where you are lacking. Christ said, 'Do not judge so as not to be judged. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 111

It must have to do with Jung being in me: his spirit seems to be around me in the dream, even though I am in America. Like a ghost, it accompanies me, and a chair should be ready for it. I must find out what the connection is in all that. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 112

I told Dr. Jung of Rennet's rage - his fist banging down on the table, and his saying, "I hate Dr. Jung." "Rennet is afraid of unknown things," Jung said. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 116

He said, "Look at her hands, so thin and nervous - not like mine or yours," and he spread out his solid hand for inspection. She looks nervous and can easily be stirred by men, and must have been pretty unconscious not to have known she was pretty when she was thirty-eight." Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 118

He [Jung] was going to see a few people while in Cambridge, but on the island off of Maine, he would see nobody and just enjoy Nature. He said that if it were not for Mrs. Jung, he would take a tramp steamer across the Atlantic, which he would really enjoy. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 122

I said that he [Jung] bored me with the stuff he wrote – just like Dr. Baynes! Onkel then said Baynes comes out with adolescent psychology stuff- college boy mentality, like Crowley - that is their degree of maturity. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 124

But Baynes has to handle Miss Wolff as an adult being. Such men as Baynes and Crowley can only deal with or relate to women whom they treat as if being on an inferior level, or who are on an inferior level. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 124

I told Onkel [Jung] how Crowley hated Miss Wolff, and I said I wondered why I had, and others did. He said that people misunderstand Miss Wolff because she had to talk as if through a thick wall with people because they won't hear! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 124

I told him one heard people saying, "Dr. Jung and Miss Wolff are wonderful psychologists, just marvelous, the best you know, a magnificent team!" "Yes," he [Crowley] retorted full of humor, "a good pair of horses to drag people uphill." We both simply roared with laughter. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 125

Onkel [Jung] said I was not at one with myself to so hate my fellow beings. If I know certain things in myself then I can stand them in mankind. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 125

He [Jung] said that she [Toni Wolff] analysed dreams for him and was wonderful, that she was rather reserved and one did not see her coming forward much, but there was much behind the veil - pure gold - but she emphasized things too much at times and got people's backs up. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 125

Not only was Mrs. Jung's interest in Greek and Latin suspect to Katy; she also was jealous of Mrs. Jung's intellectual abilities. That jealousy was the real motive then; later she admired Mrs. Jung's studies and recommended I follow her example. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 129

Dr. Jung asked me what gods the Parthenon housed, and I said 'Athene.' He said that Athene was the anima of Zeus - she represented the wisdom of Zeus. She was his thought that took form. Katy Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 130

I asked Oncle [Jung], "How can I attain to spiritual development?" He replied that I must die and be born again and go back a thousand years until I reach the state of the child in the mother's womb where I have no persona at all, where I am a living thing moved by the unconscious; then the spirit would seize me and I'd be lifted up and that would cause me unbearable pain and then I'd be lifted up onto the earth again. Katy Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 130

Then Oncle [Jung] tried to show me things as they are: natural and simple. I have all the hardness outside. I am like a child lost in a huge ice box! That must be turned around and the child in me must come out and must be replaced by granite. Inside I am still too liquid. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 133

You see, your personality has changed a great deal: formerly it was yourself instigated by your mother partly - who fabricated such plans and ideas more or less. You wanted to be on top of society, as every woman would. And now you don't want this anymore; you have seen better values .... The socially ambitious person has drifted into the background and is now your alter ego, that is, your shadow .... Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 137

In January, Katy received a long "analytical letter" from Toni Wolff (4.01.37) which mentions Katy's need to become a "woman of granite" and less fluid. Toni also analyses Katy's dream that "second-rate" women have let the dukes of Windsor and Kent make them pregnant. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 137

Women particularly seem to have been frequently ill in the 'thirties, as Toni Wolff, Linda Pierz, and Mary Foote often complained of being unwell. Since antibiotics were not yet available, infections took a long time to cure. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 140

He [Jung] said, "Ah!" then went on to say that the fact that I see the shadow in people is questionable. I am too little concentrated on the black side in myself, so that I see the others as monsters, but I do no see my own monster! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 149

I told Uncle [Jung] that I had made a list of my bad sides, but it did not seem to help me. He said that the fact that I recognize, and make a list of bad sides, won't get them out of me. I shall just have to learn to accept and live with them. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 149

One has inside a mixture of good and evil. The thing is to get the good and bad sides to work. We must learn to stand on our own. We are all monsters – a mixture of good and bad qualities. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 149-150

You cannot wipe out fundamental traits in character. Instincts are those basic tendencies in character which enable us to live our particular individuality. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 150

If one does not realize one's erotic fantasies then one dreams them. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 151

He [Jung] went on to say that his lower layers were always ready for any kind of woman. "If we don't realize how we look to each other and take into account any fantasy we might have, then we are dead pillars of salt," Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 151

Sometimes, he [Jung] said, he had such terribly boring people that he had to make a tremendous effort with himself to bring out his unconscious fantasies, so as to help them. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 151

One feels as if one would like to sit there and make no effort, they are so boring, but in such cases one has to make the effort with my unconscious. I must get into contact with my patients, and I can't if I hold myself aloof. I must think and realize my fantasies about them as about anyone I meet in daily life. I have to make an effort of the heart. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 151-152

Then he said that, in my dreams, I live an unconscious love affair with Onkel [Jung], and now we come to the tragic conclusion where I want to shoot him and myself so as to make a sensational affair out of it. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 152

I have the great American failing of being too far away from my instincts: there is a great distance between me and my instinct. My shadow is the monkey- playful and treacherous. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 152

Then, as I left, I said to Onkel [Jung] that I did not know how to proceed. He was very nice and sympathetic, and said I must follow my dreams. I said that I hoped to see him soon, and, as he bent down to catch my words, I kissed him on the back of the neck. He was a bit taken aback, I thought. Bless him. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 153

I think it was very fine and courageous of you [Katy Cabot] to have made this decision to [to give up Eranos]. I realise how difficult it must have been for you. Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 155

To despise one's self simply shows that one has not yet made friends with one's self. Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 155

That Toni imagined Katy depending on anybody indicates how little she understood her analysand. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 156

Onkel [Jung] said he had to teach people to be lazy. It is an art to be lazy. When you live a certain kind of life and you are all the time ill, one says, "Is that style of life the one you should live? Is that satisfactory?" Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 160

Jung often said that, for extraverts, illness was the only way to make them turn inwards; through forced introversion they learned to know themselves better. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 160

Onkel [Jung] went on to say that people give him the name that best expresses his role to them, in the most dramatic form. Some men have called him Mother or Ma, others Father Confessor! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 164

I then told Onkel that de T. had seen the doctor who said that he was suffering from nicotine poisoning. Whereupon Onkel laughed, and said that de T. smoked too much, so as to narcotize himself - a diluted suicide. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 165

When you are dealing with a person whose unconscious wants to make an end of his life, you have a tendency to want to kill him. Smokers and drinkers to excess are committing a mitigated suicide. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 166

He [Jung] said that he had a chest of tropical medicines and would [in India] take quinine and put chlorine in the washing water and drink only bottled waters and eat no uncooked foods etc. Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 167

He [Jung] then showed me a picture in a book of old German Hermetisch philosophy, where a pole rose up in the air topped by a crown and clouds above it, with the lamb of God lying across the cloud. The bottom of the pole was in water and mud- Muladhara! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 171

He [Jung] said that the whole Kundalini Yoga was a psychological system. It tries to formulate how things that are in the unconscious, reach consciousness with all the symbols. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 171

I asked him [Jung] about the hermetic philosophy. He said it all hung together, in a way, with the Cabbalistic philosophy and the Gnostics, but the Hermetic philosophy was older than the Cabbalistic philosophy. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 171

Cabbala was the mystic philosophy of the Jews, a contemporary of hermetic philosophy. Cabbala is a Greek philosophy and is the 'Gnosis' of the Jews, and still going in Galicia, and in Poland in the Jewish sector. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 172-173

Onkel [Jung] said that he, like myself, used to enjoy big gatherings, but now he only wants to get away and work and enjoy his solitude. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 179

Mrs. Baynes thinks without feeling and is apt to make mistakes. She has an animus that disregards feeling altogether, so she gets out of tune and sings the wrong note. It is intellectual talk, absolutely without feeling. She has no sense of consideration, and feelings do not disturb her. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 179

Onkel [Jung] went on to say that he and Toni would not become intimate friends of their pupils because if people are with them continually they do not feel the need to develop; for when you are with someone who understands things better than you, you don't lift a finger. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 183

He [Jung] said that people like himself, or Toni, suffocate developments. I asked how they both developed so far. He said they were forced, by their patients, and by circumstances, to get on. "The water of the great flood forced me up to a Jungfrau or an Everest. I had to get up there. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184

My patients forced me by their neuroses, otherwise I would never have lifted a finger. Some doctors hang behind and are below their patients. A doctor who doesn't allow himself to be forced along will be a damn fool after a while." Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184

I then suggested Anne M., who came here a lot and then finally left in a huff and rage against him and Toni. Onkel [Jung] said that she was a half crazy person, who did not listen, and who really was convinced that she was Siegfried and that he was a woman Brunhilde. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184

He [Jung] went back to Anne M. again, and said that he tried to save her from the meanness of her psychosis, but because she could not have her way, he (Onkel) must be the devil. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184

To come to Kusnacht is a tremendous lure for crazy people. All the time you have such cases. They are on the border line and so destructive, for the devil is strong and crazy. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 184-185

Then I asked him [Jung] how he felt with no one to carry on [his work]. He said it was not necessary; he was leaving behind a wealth of literature, and the ones to come would glean from it. "After all," he said, "Nature does not produce a series of me, and after Goethe or Schopenhauer, there was no one - after all, notes etc. are kept, and I put my thoughts into them, and leave behind a great deal of literature." Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 187

Onkel [Jung] said that he first read Nietzsche in the Canton du Valais, and was first impressed with its beauty; then he saw it was an amazing tragedy: that it was a slow approach to the world of the shadow. Katy Cabot, Jung My

Mother and I, Page 187

Nietzsche thought he was writing a gospel to the world in order to make the way for the Lord. The German soldiers read Zarathustra in the trenches: it spoke to their unconscious. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 187-188

Onkel [Jung] said that he was ahead of his time, but some day everyone will learn what he now teaches. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 189

Katy could not stand old maids, of which there were many in Europe in the thirties because the First World War had killed so many men. Strangely, despite her loathing of spinsters, Katy liked to dress up as one at fancy-dress parties. Her British spinster outfit was most unbecoming! Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 190

It widens my horizon and I become more human and less auto-erotic. It shows that I am at one with myself if I can see things that are happening around me. Being auto-erotic shows that one is looking for effects: the effect one makes when coming into a room - not seeing or even thinking of the other people, only thinking of oneself and the effect one makes. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 190

Auto-erotic people only see themselves, and that is why they have panics. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 191

There was no personal relation because the mirror only mirrored him. It is like Roosevelt, with his stereotype smile which he puts on for everyone. He does not mean it for the people he smiles at, it is his smile. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 191

Onkel [Jung] went on to say that President R. had no human connections with anyone. He would not take the trouble to say, "I don’t agree with you!" Onkel said that other people with such mothers had an ’infantile paralysis’ too. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 192

An old animus means opinions, and a young animus means an enterprise. Carl Jung, Jung, My Mother and I, Page 196

Onkel [Jung] said a man’s egoism is so great that he can smear his boots with the fat of his murdered brother. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 196

Onkel [Jung] said that most of the people in Germany were influenced by Hitler, but if they would think straight, they would say, "We are the real devils of Europe." But instead they say, "England is the evil spirit: we Germans are good people, and devils are attacking our dear Vaterland." Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 230

He [Jung] added that when you trap someone, you trap yourself and worse. If your scheme succeeds, you suffer a defeat. You should not set traps. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 200

Onkel [Jung] said, "I never say, ’You must have a resentment,’ but instead, I say, ’But it resents, and if you are not conscious of it, it’s your handicap for you are too little conscious of your own resentments."’ Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 201

He [Jung] said that Miss Foote had an abysmal feeling of inferiority. Such people, he said, have a terrific power complex, and Miss Foote can spoil everything with her feelings of inferiority. People like her are sadists, and they act in a melancholy way. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 202

He [Jung] went on to say how he felt utterly suffocated and panic-stricken when he went up to the Jung fraujoch the first time. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 203

The Schifflibach was a huge success with young and old; the Jung's loved it, as did Toni Wolff. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 205

As there had just been a thunderstorm, a lot of water fell down onto his "lady companion's" hat. "She took it in good part," my mother wrote. The "gentleman" and the "lady" were apparently Dr. Jung and Miss Wolff. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 205

I swam out to this flotsam and jetsam and fished out a wooden hanger bearing the name Rosemary Kennedy. At the hotel we learned that indeed the Kennedys had been on holiday at a nearby villa but had departed in haste for London, where Joseph Kennedy was American Ambassador. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 206

We also learned that the inhabitants of the Cap were disgusted by the Kennedys' dumping all their rubbish into the Mediterranean. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 206

A teenage boy with cropped fair hair, wearing short trousers, earnestly addressed a mirror and made extravagant gestures - the first Hitler Youth I had ever seen, and whose fanatical behavior sent a chill down my fifteen-year-old spine. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 210

During the War, both German and American Jews took up residence at the hotel, including an American Jewish woman and her adult son from an internment camp in Germany. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 210

I went to see Onkel because I wanted to explain to him why I had not gone to Bollingen, at Toni's invitation, right after getting back from Geneva and seeing off the "English train." I found him not feeling too well sinus trouble - and he was going to Dr. M. I begged him to ask Dr. M. if he should have calcium. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 214

"There is nothing more bothersome than when people don't tell what troubles them; it makes a strained situation. It produces a strained atmosphere, if you don't say what is on your mind." Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 215

When I told him [Jung] of the remark I made to Mrs. Baumann about no one listening to his (Onkel's) seminars, he roared with laughter, and said again, "Enf ant terrible!" Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 216

Katy certainly had the "stuff" in her to deal with her loneliness. Though she was unaware of her strong inner man, he would stand by her in the far more serious crises of the future. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 216

I then told Onkel [Jung] that I was so impressed by his lecture in Ascona, where he had spoken of El Kadir. He said he thought he had given an especially bad lecture that day. He went on to say that he had lived El Kadir, had seen him, and those things jump into the eyes of people, and their own experiences become alive, and that gets them. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 220

He [Jung] went on to say that he was aware he talked of important things, and through his own feelings, he also had been particularly moved by that story of the Koran. He said, "I talk of something which I have experienced! Massignon hasn't seen him - he doesn't know what he is." Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 220

I then told Onkel [Jung] that I had seen El Kadir in Florence at the age of seventeen, and later here, but it was fleeting and only twice. I could not tell what he thought. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 220

In America, it is expected of one to appear as if one had no education. One must not talk differently, or voice ideas that are different from the 'herd,' for that is what people don't like. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 222

Onkel [Jung] answered that books such as his, to be understood, need psychological knowledge. People never look in - they always look out. They never realize they have a 'mind.' They use their mind, when they do use it, to kill their own mental life. Psychology is the science of the living mind. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 222

He [Jung] went on to say [presumably after Katy broached the subject] that Mrs. Pierz was after prestige, and wanted to play a role, and in consequence, she has a hole and a void which she does not see, and she overcompensates it with the role of the perfect mother. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 222

Onkel [Jung] said that Germany has extraordinary fighting power, but had no sustenance. For one coup, they would be stronger than in 1914, but they could stand only one tremendous push, and that the first onslaught would be terrific, because they would be willing to sacrifice up to two million men. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 229

The Nazis have no regard for human life and would just pour men in. The Allies are more human and don't wish such a loss of life as in 1914. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 229

War is sweet to those who have not experienced it. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 229

Onkel [Jung] said that Stalin was frank in his dealings with people, did not put on hypocritical airs, just said what he wanted to say, stating his aims quite plainly. When Lady Astor asked him how long he was going to keep on killing people, he answered her, "As long as it is necessary!" Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 230

Stalin feels that certain elements are unhealthy so he wipes them out. Stalin does not presume and invent such stories and such lies [as Hitler]. He is a straightforward brute, a cunning brute, while, on the other hand, Hitler is just a rotten devil, and an hysterical, neurotic individual, always excited and believing what he says. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 230

He [Jung] said it was not hypocrisy but adaptation! When one lives among wolves, one must howl with the wolves. I told him that my animus had always hindered me from having the right kind of persona. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 231

When I saw Onkel [Jung], we spoke of the Mellons. We said how nice they were. He affirmed that they were sincere and honest people, and said that Mrs. Mellon1 has size, and is a 'character' in a way, but is unfinished and a rough diamond. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 232

He, Paul Mellon, is a nice fellow, and has already picked up considerably. They are unusually nice people. I said I supposed they didn't really need analysis so much, and Onkel said that indeed they did need it. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 232

Onkel [Jung] said that he and Toni had put her together, and she then thought she knew enough to 'swing it' - become an analyst. The van W.s prejudiced the Mellon's against Toni, but Mrs. Mellon was charmed with Toni the other night at the Rufenacht lecture and asked her to tea. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 233

I asked Onkel [Carl] why Toni was so hard and rough and gruff at times, and not at all understanding, sometimes. Uncle said that she had a remarkable mind, was a genius and a person of quality. Her animus is her hard and gruff side which comes through whenever the unexpected happens. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 233

I said that to me she [Toni] seemed like a grouchy old man with the gout, and was at moments difficult. He [Jung] said that side of her was absurd and grotesque and you often get such a side with people with a special gift. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 233

After all, everyone has a flaw and Toni has a remarkable natural mind. What Toni cannot stand is something unexpected! When something changes or something unforeseen happens, she resists it like hell! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 233

She [Toni] is an introvert, and like all introverts, she fears the unexpected; it is hostile! Extraverts, on the contrary, like to have things different from what they expected. They just love it when something unforeseen happens. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 234

Toni is a very advanced person, but she comes from a most conservative family, who has lived in Zurich for centuries, and are like hard, old wood. Her mind is the only thing movable in her. If she had not that mind she would be stone-hard. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 234

I asked Onkel if he couldn't analyse Toni and cure her of that absurdity, the rough side of her nature, as it was unworthy of her to keep it when she had the opportunity to get rid of it, through some work with him. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 235

He [Jung] said one cannot touch that subject with her [Toni] - one cannot 'get at it' - as when you approach her about it, the same revulsion takes place as when something unexpected happens. It is sort of wheels-within-wheels, and one cannot do anything about it. She refuses to let one broach the subject. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 235

Toni is adapted to a life where nothing happens - they lived that way through the centuries in Switzerland. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 236

Toni is a typical Zurich lady of the 18th century. Then, life here was quiet, and you met the same people: they had names you knew and were old families you knew - but let one tranger appear, and they were all a-flutter. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 236

Onkel [Jung] went on to say that if one restores old conditions, as ·he did when he built Bollingen, a medieval house (he always felt himself a medieval man and had the desire to return to his natural surroundings), you live the ancestral life, and you feel fundamentally well. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 236

He [Carl] said he saw Toni in an old-fashioned gown, in the 13th century, and he had a three-cornered hat and was bowing low in front of her. The more she is advanced on one side, the more she feels that rough side of herself - the untouchable flaw! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 237

Toni indeed had a stiff side, which I noticed myself. But she compensated for it with a very friendly personality. Being an introvert myself, I felt sympathy for Toni's not liking the unexpected; though one can be conscious of this weakness, it is very difficult entirely to overcome it. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 237

In it [Bollingen], I felt my ancestral souls, and it was just like paradise. It was cold, uncomfortable and dark at night, yet something in me felt well beyond measure. I had finally seen what I was lacking, because when I was a boy, everything was cold - snow was drifting in the window, the water froze in the pitcher, ants were in the room, and the stove smoked. It was an 13th century house and never rebuilt. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 238

He [Jung] said, he was so impressed by friends with warm houses. When you go to sleep, you return to your ancestors; you go back into the unconscious. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 238

I told him [Jung] of my desire to become a Catholic. He said that Catholicism would be quite nice if there were no Catholics. I must let him to explain later the funny kind of psychology which he said they have. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 239

Snobs are flattered by being with people highly placed, but if you have right values, which you can safely represent, you are not exalted or lowered, even if you deal with people absolutely out of range. If you can discard the fact that a person is famous, or rich, then you can discard the fact that you are a swine! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 239

Snobs are unhappy and miserable people. It does not matter whether a person is Her Grace, or not, or what her family is. You cannot be a slave to that sort of thing: if you are, then you are not right with yourself. When you have the right relationship to yourself, that means freedom. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 239

When you have an ugly thought about people, you usually dismiss it, as you hate to have ugly thoughts. Don't dismiss it! Say to yourself, here I have an ugly thought, and ask yourself whether you think something else about that person. Have you a grievance against that person? What next do I think about that person? What next? Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 240

Mrs. Mellon would not have suffered from neurotic troubles if she wasn't a dual personality. You, too, have that sort of personality. You must ask what is the truth about a person, and how does that person look from all sides? Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 240

If only you and Mrs. Jung were here, it would be much more enjoyable. The archaic atmosphere, produced by my mother, has put me in the foulest humor imaginable! Christmas is going to be very peculiar here, due to the utter lack of Stimmung in Italy ... it's much more like Easter here, and even the windows have flowers and pigs and Santa Claus's in the shape of Easter Eggs. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 243

Apparently Dr. Jung has been accepted by your whole background; your mother is charmed by him, and he sits in your father's cabin, more or less in your father's place - but only the nice side of your father is important. Naturally, because your father has these fits of temper, you felt him to be emotionally unreliable, and part of your lack of security comes from that reason, also your mistrust of people. Therefore, if you feel towards Dr. Jung as towards a fatherly figure whom you can trust absolutely, and if you express this to him in one way or another, you would have gained a lot of ground. So don't hesitate to do it. Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 138

Luttichau would poison everyone, a dirty devil, she is pestilential - she should confess to him. She will be utterly cursed and she is full of dirt. Princess Hohenzollern is frightfully decent and suffers herself to be poisoned by that woman. I asked if P. Hohenz. was really so decent, and he said no: she is torn to pieces by the pig in her. The fact that she likes to eat poison shows there is something vulgar in her, and that is why she cultivates that poisonous Luttichau. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 132

It is stronger than herself She won't own up to it, and it pushes her away and won't allow anyone to approach it. It is like a mine: when you touch it, it goes off. You can't touch a mine: it is untouchable, he said. "So I dismissed it and have not tried to cure her, as she can't be tackled yet. Maybe in time she can approach it, her great problem. But those humors of hers, those grouches, are flimsy nonsense and don't make sense, so don't pay any attention to them." Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 235

One can't stand one's own perfection all the time, for then you will fall over your own top. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 246

It is typically American to make an etalage [display] of one's good qualities, but the shadow looks on. It is just such a demonstration of qualities that accounts for her neurosis. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 246

I asked how that was possible, as I had for ten years been discovering my shadows, and was pretty well aware of them now! He said he knew that, but that I handle my shadow as my particular affliction, and refuse to see it as a general phenomenon. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 246

He [Jung] went on to that if we only knew that we are our own worst disappointments, if we are more intimate with our own shadow, we would understand other people's. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 247

Onkel [Jung] said that Mrs. Jung knows there is nothing in it and is therefore not at all impressed [by high society]. But with me, it matters too much and I get caught. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 248

Onkel [Jung] went on to say that he could not be sure he would not be impressed if he were invited to Buckingham Palace, and as a matter of fact, when he was once driving along in a coach, belonging to one of the Indian Maharajahs, he suddenly started to laugh to himself and said, "Isn't this grotesque and comical for me to be in this gilded thing!" Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 250

He [Jung] said she [Emma] had a remarkable personality and extraordinary qualities, and was a great student. He added that the most comforting thing on earth was a really nice old woman. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 252

Onkel [Jung] told me about himself, when I asked him how he felt. He said he had an exhaustion of the heart muscle, caused by too much fat, and he must now diet and lose weight. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 253

He [Jung] said he overate and drank, and was ill afterwards, but loved it, and was going to Baden for a cure during his holidays! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 254

Onkel [Jung] said that if I go ahead with my work and impart what I know to him, that is enough, as it makes him think. It is as if a man couldn't take [things] in through his mind. It gets into his unconscious and 'works.' Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 254

He [Jung] meant that Catholicism is a splendid religion in itself, but it is what people make of it which harms it. A splendid institution - except for the people who make the wrong use of it and derive the wrong conclusions from it; just as Christianity would be a splendid thing, were it not for the Christians! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 257

I asked why there were so few neurotic practicing Catholics. He [Jung] said the Catholics were nearer to the original instincts, and nearer to primitivity. They were ugly, just as primitives are, and have no relation with each other. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 258

I asked him if she [Katy's Daughter] should see Toni occasionally. He [Jung] said, "NO," not to make her complicated, but let her apply herself and get into life. She must learn to branch out into life, seize possibilities and mix with other people; then she may learn something about life. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 261

The best thing for her [Katy's daughter] would be to take Latin lessons, as Latin was the base of all mental things, and would help her general education, and even make her accurate in her spelling. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 261

If you study Latin, you will find that it will teach you to concentrate: then you can apply yourself to learning something. There are literally thousands of middle-aged people like yourself, who do nothing with their minds, and just amble aimlessly and bored through the second half of their lives. I can't understand how such people live and do nothing with their minds. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 262

I [Jung] can't do what I did before as a young man. Now, my whole passion is in research. If I had to live, as I see a lot of middle-aged people doing, just going about, never reading or studying or thinking, I'd have committed suicide long ago! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 263

I am never bored as my day is full of interesting things connected with my work, or my books. Only people bore me sometimes, but I with myself am never bored. I don't know what boredom is. If I had no discipline, then I'd be the victim of my moods. Every minute I know what to do and do it with pleasure - I enjoy doing it. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 263

He [Jung[went on to say that he never would have thought of studying the exercises of Ignatius of Loyola, for the idea bored him, but he said he saw that people should know about such things - so he studied them and found them most interesting. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 263

He [Jung] said, "These Exercitia were a means to explain to my public, so I studied them for my people. You can use your knowledge for such a purpose, and then it makes sense, because you apply it. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 263

I was fifty-two at her death, and felt frustrated and sad that despite the many years we had known each other, I had never felt close to my mother - and that now, it was too late. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 266

As for reading Jung's books, I did so because they interested me, but I never saw myself as intellectual - in fact, quite the contrary. I was certain that I was stupid, because my intermittent schooling made it impossible for me ever to shine, and lazy, because my mother drummed that into me constantly. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 267

My mother was keen to learn Latin with me at first, but with Tommy back in Switzerland, she lost the single-mindedness that she had brought to the cooking lessons. In an early burst of enthusiasm, she engaged Marie-Louise von Franz to teach us (most likely suggested by Jung). Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 267

It is clear to me now that Katy's "longing to get an education" was genuine only during her hour with Jung; our time in Ascona, which lasted until the third week in October, was fertile terrain for regression. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 267

Luckily, the men around me, being of a certain standing, were reluctant to seduce virgins de bonne famille. Even so, it was a strain, since chaperons no longer existed and I had to keep myself out of mischief. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 271

Feeling that the country was about to be invaded, the Zurich Swiss left for safer areas. Those who still ran cars packed their families and as many belongings as they could take and drove off, some with mattresses on the car roof-tops to protect themselves from. machine-gun fire or shrapnel. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 271

The Federal authorities discovered that Jung's name was on the Nazis' Blacklist, 1 so he was urged by senior officials in Bern to leave Zurich immediately. He drove the family car to Saanen with his wife, an eight-month pregnant daughter and some grandchildren. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 273

Onkel [Jung] said that one cannot always tell Linda [Fierz-David] the truth, that her annoyance with people who are ill is a revenge she takes because she had tuberculosis once, and had had to spend years in Davos. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 274

Onkel [Jung] said that Toni hates to think of people who have a certain value being sometimes wrong. She is too fair: if she is in sympathy with a person, then nothing can be wrong and all is white; if she does not like a person, then all is black. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 274

They criticized the fact that I was not intellectual enough and thought that [criticism] would cut ice with Onkel [Jung]. Onkel said that he told them that I was naturally a 'child of the world,' and that I did not understand a word of what psychology and analysis were all about, but took trouble to learn something, and apply it. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 275

He [Jung] then went back to Linda [Fierz David] and said that sometimes she does not tell the truth at all. And she is sly and clever and knows Toni inside-out- therefore, she knows how to play on that instrument! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 275

Onkel went on to say that all Italians were against the War because they were losing business. He said that Mussolini garbled all their prospects, and that Milan and the whole north of Italy is in upheaval. Italy will suffer the fate of R umania, for the Germans have rushed a lot of troops to Italy. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 321

Onkel [Jung] said that the Germans were in league with the devil, and had a lust for power which is satanic. Onkel then went on to say that the. Germans were Faust in his pact with Satan. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322

He [Jung] went on to say that the first time Mussolini met Hitler, he exclaimed, "Ma che e un Signorino!" [Why, he is but a boy!] Mussolini is all that he is on the surface, whereas Hitler, on the surface, is all that he is not. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322

Hitler is sinister - like the mild little schoolmaster who has lived and taught all his life in a quiet village, and whom everyone presumes to be harmless. Then, suddenly, this mild little man ups and murders his whole family. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322

Mussolini's life is a reality, and everything that he is is in the foreground: it is in his face and manner and in his every gesture. Hitler is just the contrary; he can only impress a German who is very intuitive, and who 'smells' what is behind Hitler. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322

When Mussolini first met Hitler, he thought: "Poor beggar; there is nothing to him - just a Signorino." But he never asked himself where was the Signorina (Anima) behind Hitler. Hitler's Signorina - the ambitious anima devil-woman - is not a 'human being.' Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322

Everybody hoped that Hitler would do something stupid, but nobody in the winter of 1940-1941 imagined that he would be so foolish as to attack Russia. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 323

My mother and I had occasional Latin lessons with Frl. von Franz, but unfortunately they took place at 8 p.m. after a busy day, and we were not fresh; Frl. Von Franz always gave "lots of homework," my diary notes. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 323

I asked Onkel how it was that he could write scientific books with such heart. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 326

Then - as to his works – he said that one must be a total man to write such things. Most people do not write that way because they are afraid of criticism and have too little feeling - no passion - only selfishness. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 327

People who read his [Jung's] books only see something intellectual in them - along with their own feelings about them. They are not developed enough to appreciate the feeling quality which is in his books. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 327

He [Jung] said that his works were not only scientific, but that there was also wisdom in them and they were human. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 327

I told him [Jung] that his lectures at the university were so full of feeling, and of such marvelous simplicity, that they had a sort of church atmosphere. (My way of expressing his atmosphere.) Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 327

I then told Onkel [Jung } that it was just stupid for me to be sitting there, paying her [Toni]twenty francs an hour, to come down to her level to please her. On the contrary, she ought to be paying me twenty francs an hour for doing it(!). Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 328

Onkel [Toni] went on to say that he had asked Toni what she had in common with me, whereupon he felt himself encountering something dull and black in her mood, and he couldn't penetrate it. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 328

She[Toni] is very intuitive and intellectual, and only facts can put people wise, especially with intuitives. One can never just tell people: they must

'experience' the thing themselves. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 328

As long as Toni is with people below her, she is marvelous, for she can only be a mother to the poor. She is like a mother who is only interested in the children while they are young, but has no use for them when they grow up. She is good for weak people, but no good when they have grown up. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 328-329

As for Barbara [Hannah] being "in love with" Toni, that sounds too strong; but I can imagine Barbara might have had a school-girl crush on Toni. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 329

He [Carl] went on to say that Toni is in a way a genius, and such people live half their lives or more on their genius. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 330

Toni is nice when you get on the right side of her, but when the devil is on her, then she is a black devil. It is all because she is utterly unconscious of the personal side. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 331

She [Toni] is like a respectable woman who has another side and doesn't like to pay any attention to her creative animus to whom she is married. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 331

Barbara Hannah, who is also an artist, made the same mistake as Toni, and of course there could be no relationship between two such people with the same Weltanschauung [world view]. The shadow rose between them. They were just nagging each other with their shadows! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 331

They both [Toni & Barbara] had a tremendous lack of personal development - they became too conscious of their mutual shadows and projected them onto each other. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 331

Toni can blindfold people as to her shortcomings, and when she is in a bad humor, or queer mood, it is in disagreement with her obvious character, so people don't get on to [correctly perceive] her. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 332

I told him that I thought Toni was stingy. He said it was not quite that, as she could be ridiculously generous and had given large sums to charity, but that she could not be generous in a human relationship. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 332

I told him that I was still very much of a swine, and people did bother me. He said that people must not bother me. One must look at other people as one looks at a peculiar type of monkey! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 333

Onkel [Jung] said that Frl. van Franz had had to study a great deal, and that he kept her up to it, and she worked like a dog. He also said that she had written a brilliant thesis. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 334

Onkel [Jung] said that Prometheus and Epimetheus is very psychological but is not as mad as is Zarathustra. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 335

He [Jung] said that psychological people simply would not study his works in a human way: they just played around with the 'intellectual idea,' and were generally very badly informed. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 337

He [Jung] said once he was complaining to a friend that no one read his books. The friend said, "Just wait until you are dead and then you will see something!" Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 338

Onkel [Jung] went on to say that his books were beyond the grasp of most people: they were too stupid – and besides, they had no training in psychological knowledge. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 338

"Dwelling without desire, one perceiveth its essence; clinging to desire, one seeth only its outer form." - "Tao is an irrational, hence a wholly inconceivable fact. Tao is essence, but unseizable, incomprehensible." Carl Jung [citing Lao Tzu], Jung My Mother and I, Page 340

Now to go back to: "Where there is power, there is no love." I asked Onkel [Jung] just what he meant; he said he meant love in the greater sense: love for one's fellow beings. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 342

"In every heart, there dwelleth a Sejin [a Sage] - only man will not steadfastly believe it: therefore, hath the whole remained buried." Katy Cabot [citing Wang Ming], Jung My Mother and I, Page 347

He [Jung] added, that if he tells me what the dream means he does not help me. There is a door open, and it is ridiculous to shut that door, artificially as it would deprive me of an experience. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 350

If one is told a thing, it is dead knowledge. One must experience a thing. He [Jung] said that there were people who had read everything and yet had experienced nothing. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 350

One must never hope to see the real Toni because what you see is the real Toni. That is she. That is the real Toni! To be intimate with her, he said, would mean emptying her pot de chambre [chamber pot]! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 354

People will tear even God Himself to pieces! And why?-because He does not fulfill their expectations. Carl

Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 355

Toni must be taken for what she is. Everyone has faults. We must be grateful for people with some qualities for some people are without a trace of mind, and at least she has that. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 355

You must digest yourself, Onkle [Jung] said, and accept yourself and say to yourself that you also have good and bad qualities, and this realization will help towards being more understanding of other people. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 355

If a person is, on the whole like Toni, a good person, then you want to know them, and some bad sides don't matter. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 356

We spoke of Linda Pierz for a moment, and Onkel [Jung] said that Doctor Binswanger did not really love her, but that he needs the moral support which she gives him. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 356

Onkel [Jung] said that the dream denoted that I should not make it an exclusive goal to have hours with him, for I should see that there are other people in the world beside himself. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 300

He [Jung] went on to say that he who receives will be called upon also to give. You cannot get something from someone eternally and not give in return. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 300

Onkel [Jung] said that [Professor Ernesto] Buonaiuti is still a baby, and sits at home with his mother, and is a good boy. But he has no experience of women, and the hell of life! A man like Buonaiuti has a lot of book knowledge, but no knowledge of life! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 301

He [Jung] said the fact that I get the panics coming down means that I still have something to realize. When I come down to the basic facts then things happen. I can learn things. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 301

I asked Onkel [Jung] how to get down to the hidden things. He said follow the heat like a lizard who creeps out of the shadow into the Warmth of the sun. (All this isn't easy.) Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 301

I then told him [Jung] that Toni was a difficult problem for me in a way, as she was demanding and I often had to placate her. It made it difficult for me and like a burden I had to bear. Onkel said that Toni has too much imagination and is sensitive too. Take things quietly and not too seriously. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 309

He [Jung] said that if he took things too terribly gravely, he could send people into spasms. Toni is apt to make too much fuss. "She is very fussy, so I don't tell her things for I don't want her to get into a fuss." Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 309

I never know, when I go to see her [Toni] , what she is going to be like. She might well be in a hell of a mood, or absent. She changes like the moon. With the moon, you can tell - but with her, you can't. She is sometimes in abysmal gloom. She is sometimes quite impossible. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 309

He [Jung] said that Toni works with her mother instinct, for it is sweet to be a mother to helpless adult beings. "Never mind what mood she is in. Disregard it- for it's all vapor." Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 309

I then spoke of Mrs. Jung, and the smooth and agreeable atmosphere she gives out. He said that Mrs. Jung does not worry unnecessarily about detail. She has the right values and is interested in the right things, - which keeps her mind away from the wrong things. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 309

He [Jung] said that 'Individuation,' or the 'Way to the Self,' was a lonely way, and that one must 'agree with oneself,' and do what one knows to be right for oneself even if, in the process, one finds one is alone. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 359

He [Jung] said, "Those who want you to be a puppet will give you up, and it really does not matter at all if they do, as you will have lost nothing by losing such 'friends."' Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 359

He [Jung]said that Fraulein Bianchi was the same kind of swine as the others who constitute themselves a mother. She could not compete with Toni and Linda. It was a case of dog-eat-dog: The two strongest dogs kicked her out. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 359

I said I found Toni a rather small, frail and pathetic creature. He [Jung] said she was t hat and that I could not see her in that way – which was the true way of seeing her - if I had not written that letter. He said that I took a stand which made it possible for me to see her clearly. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 362

The fact that I felt the panic with Mrs. Jung shows that, when I am in his [Jung's] house, I am confronted with having to face myself honestly. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 363

He [Jung] said that Mother Nature pushes us to be conscious of ourselves in every respect. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 363

He [Jung] said that when I first came to analysis, I was terrifyingly superficial - a painted surface. I was a hollow mask with death inside. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 363

As long as there is panic, it is a sign that the Unconscious is overwhelming me. Onkel [Jung] said that I am not safe and that one cannot trust me. One cannot take a guide on a difficult mountain who is liable to get into a panic. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 364

If you hate something in someone else, then you can be sure that you have the same bad thing in yourself. Otherwise you are just indifferent to a bad or good quality in the other person. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 364

After ten years, Jung was pointing out that the claustrophobic panics were the price she was paying for not coming down to a lower level and accepting her down-to-earth side. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 364

The naturalness in Mrs. Jung, a strong and balanced woman, may have induced "panics" in Katy before seeing her because she feared that Mrs. Jung would see into her "hollowness." Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 365

Onkel [Jung] said that de T. was not enthusiastic about sex because he had been cut off from part of his nature throughout his life. First his mother, who was of course far from her instincts, then that wife completed the destruction of any sex feelings he could have had. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 366

Onkel [Jung] went on that the more I am aware of my fantasies of the lewd ldnd (the waiter, for instance), the more I am aware of myself in that less elegant aspect. Being aware of one's own nature acts as a counter-poison against lumps and panics. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 367

He [Jung] said that ’Individuation,’ or the ’Way to the Self,’ was a lonely way, and that one must ’agree with oneself,’ and do what one knows to be right for oneself even if, in the process, one finds one is alone. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 359

He [Jung] said, "Those who want you to be a puppet will give you up, and it really does not matter at all if they do, as you will have lost nothing by losing such ’friends."’ Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 359

He [Jung]said that Fraulein Bianchi was the same kind of swine as the others who constitute themselves a mother. She could not compete with Toni and Linda. It was a case of dog-eat-dog: The two strongest dogs kicked her out. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 359

I said I found Toni a rather small, frail and pathetic creature. He [Jung] said she was t hat and that I could not see her in that way – which was the true way of seeing her - if I had not written that letter. He said that I took a stand which made it possible for me to see her clearly. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 362

The fact that I felt the panic with Mrs. Jung shows that, when I am in his [Jung’s] house, I am confronted with having to face myself honestly. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 363

He [Jung] said that Mother Nature pushes us to be conscious of ourselves in every respect. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 363

He [Jung] said that when I first came to analysis, I was terrifyingly superficial - a painted surface. I was a hollow mask with death inside. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 363

As long as there is panic, it is a sign that the Unconscious is overwhelming me. Onkel [Jung] said that I am not safe and that one cannot trust me. One cannot take a guide on a difficult mountain who is liable to get into a panic. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 364

If you hate something in someone else, then you can be sure that you have the same bad thing in yourself. Otherwise you are just indifferent to a bad or good quality in the other person. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 364

After ten years, Jung was pointing out that the claustrophobic panics were the price she was paying for not coming down to a lower level and accepting her down-to-earth side. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 364

The naturalness in Mrs. Jung, a strong and balanced woman, may have induced "panics" in Katy before seeing her because she feared that Mrs. Jung would see into her "hollowness." Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 365

Onkel [Jung] said that de T. was not enthusiastic about sex because he had been cut off from part of his nature throughout his life. First his mother, who was of course far from her instincts, then that wife completed the destruction of any sex feelings he could have had. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 366

Onkel [Jung] went on that the more I am aware of my fantasies of the lewd kind (the waiter, for instance), the more I am aware of myself in that less elegant aspect. Being aware of one's own nature acts as a counter-poison against lumps and panics. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 367

Onkel [Jung] said that Prometheus and Epimetheus is very psychological but is not as mad as is Zarathustra. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 335

Onkel [Jung] said that Frl. van Franz had had to study a great deal, and that he kept her up to it, and she worked like a dog. He also said that she had written a brilliant thesis. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 334

Now to go back to: "Where there is power, there is no love." I asked Onkel [Jung] just what he meant; he said he meant love in the greater sense: love for one's fellow beings. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 342

You must digest yourself, Onkle [Jung] said, and accept yourself and say to yourself that you also have good and bad qualities, and this realization will help towards being more understanding of other people. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 355

I live above my level, and must come down off my pedestal and be human, Onkel [Jung] said. That with him, one has to be natural, or one would not get anywhere in this work of 'finding the self.' He added that if my nature were acceptable to myself, I would not have a Lump or a split-off part. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 364

"If you hate something in someone else, then you can be sure that you have that same thing in yourself." Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 365

Onkel [Jung] said that when you dream of a wild animal which pursues you, it is an instinct which assails you. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 365

I told Onkel [Jung] that as he was world-famous, he did not have to be in the limelight, for he was just automatically there. He said that there was a time when he was not world-famous, but that even then, he had had no desire to be in the limelight. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 368

He [Jung] said it was more important to be loved than to be in the limelight [famous]. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 368

I asked Onkel [Jung] if it was a nice feeling to be famous. He said that being famous was very nice and satisfying, and that was that, and enough. But what he really enjoys and what really gives him more satisfaction than fame - is that he leads the life he wants - (just as if he were not famous at all). Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 368-369

People are offended that I’m not in their Verein [group, association], that I don’t seek their companionship, but that is the price I have to pay for my liberty!" Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 369

Onkel [Jung] said that one must decide what the life is that one really likes, and then live it. Naturally, one has to pay a price for one’s iberty. It all boils down to a question of being simple. Simplicity is the greatest art. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 369

If people wish to come with me, I will take them to the Promised Land, but they have to give up power. But if you come along, you will see it. I am going through a country which I like, and if you join in, you will see pretty much the same as I do, I guess. Carl Jung, Jung, My Mother and I, Page 370

Then Onkel [Jung] said that it was chiefly false values which prevent one from getting there. Priests can’t help one because they have a lot of second-hand knowledge only. ’Immediate experience’ is the only thing that can give one the power to take people to the Promised Land. People must learn to be exceedingly simple. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 370

Without the [Psychological] Club there would be nothing, no patients, no students to exchange ideas. He had to hang onto it and keep it together. It would be a pity to let it go, he added. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 371

He [Jung] said that, when one fills every moment of one’s life as well as one can, then, when death comes, it comes at the right time and is not minded so much. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 372

2A He [Jung] went on to say that when one has lived everything within one’s reach, such a full life brings maturity and the time which is right for dying. A full life brings satiation, and the ripe time for death follows naturally. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 372

"As long as one is in any way held by the domination of cupiditas [avarice, greed; strong desire, lust] the veil is not lifted and the heights of a consciousness, empty of content and free from illusion, are not reached, nor can any trick or deceit bring it about. It is an ideal that can only be realized in death. Until then, there are real, and relatively real, figures of the unconscious." Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 373

This ’hour’ was pretty painful. I had just left Mrs. Jung’s study. She had just said that she did not like the spirit of the Psychological Club group, as they were so like the Pharisees, and full of Grossenwahn [inflated with their own importance] and Selbstgerechtigkeit [self-righteousness]. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 374

Then I told Onkel [Jung] a dream I had about Mrs. Fierz and Frau Jacobi.1 He said that intellectually, I could not, of course, compete with them. Fierz and Jacobi are not natural and this ’intellectuality’ with them is a compensation for their lack of naturalness. Fierz plays intellectually with natural thoughts. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 378

Onkel [Jung] replied that Mrs. Jung does not talk much, and yet when she does say something, it is the right remark, and her remarks have substance. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 379

Onkel [Jung] said, "Just be who you are: it’s so simple, and easier than playing a role. If one is what one is and simple, one doesn’t arouse projections from people. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 379

I am very worried, because I may be facing deportation to America, early in November, due to the expiration of my passport and the unwillingness of the Zurich American Consul to renew it. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 381

Thank you [Katy Cabot] very much for sending me the book; it is indeed an interesting experience to read the New Testament in the language of our days: one gets a newer and more living impression, and many things strike you far more directly than in the traditional style. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 386

Onkel [Jung] seemed to think that Roosevelt was a superhumanly sly man to have forced, by his uncompromising attitude, the Japs to declare War. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 386

In fact, Onkel went on to say that England had underrated everyone and did not even have the right anti-tank guns to pierce the German tanks.

Whereas even Switzerland had anti-tank guns which could master the German tanks. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 386

Onkel said that Roosevelt’s plans were made because of the vulnerability of Hawaii, and because a war with Japan is far more popular than one with Europe. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 386-387

Then we spoke of the War in Russia, and the arctic winter which the German High Command was not prepared for. Jung said that he had met some of the doctors who had come back from Smolensk. They said that they had spent their time amputating the frozen limbs of German soldiers. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 387

2M Onkel [Jung] went on to say that I am spoiled and imagine that I am safe, then the fear of death and the uncertainty of life grip me. Wherever we are we are never safe, only we don’t think of it. Death is a supreme necessity. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 388

Onkel [Jung] said that ’hating to die’ with me is a secret, unrealized fear, and can be compared to a very young person who is inclined against sexual life. Such a young person is afraid of life, as sex is the skeleton in the cupboard, and life would call her to sex, so she just tries to escape anything that could make her live and bring her to sex. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 389

Onkel [Jung] said that Jews had offered him houses in America, and promised him fabulous sums if he would take over important clinics. But he said that he could not accept the offers because he is so bound to his native soil of Switzerland, and for him, no country but his own would do to live in. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 390

I doubt that Katy feared death more than other people, as Jung suggests, though she was fearful in some respects, of cows, horses, and enclosed places. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 391

Onkel [Jung] said that one can't preach: one must do. That is far better! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 393

He [Jung] repeated that he becomes a 'roaring devil' when things become too much for him, and begin to pile up. He said that one can make anybody into a devil if you give him impossible conditions. Given certain conditions, he would degenerate into something awful and get terribly nervous. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 396

He [Jung] added, that if you live in a pig-sty, or in a stable or in a monkey cage, the atmosphere permeates you psychically and makes you wrong. Atmospheres can do that: simply change a person and get him all wrong and mixed-up within himself. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 396

The reason people get all these different atmospheres is due to the fact that the psyche is not wholly in the body. It is around one. We breathe the psyche. It is as if one were smelling it! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 397

Onkel said that often before a patient comes to him, he dreams a dream about the patient's psychology. It is as if the patient were surrounded by an atmosphere which envelopes Onkel as well. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 398

The psyche is like a gas that fills the room. As soon as the person gets within the 'orbit' of that psychic bubble, he is permeated by it. The worst things can be caught from people unless one realizes what atmospheres can do. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 398

He [Jung] said that was why he always loathed those big steamers when he went to America with his passage paid for him. The last time he went, he told his sponsors, he preferred a small boat, which took ten days, on which he would meet only simple people. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 398

He [Jung] went on to say that when he was in India, he tried to get off by himself, because at times with the people he was with (American and Maharajahs) he got ’permeated.’ He could not stand it any longer and had to seek a few days of solitude, which was always hard to find on such a trip. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 398

I told Onkel[Jung] that I had read such an interesting book on Tibet by Alexandra David-Neel, Mystiques et Magiciens du Tibet. He said that she was quite a person, that he knew her because she came once to the Club to lecture. He said her books were excellent and well worth reading. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 399

2Z We spoke of people putting on airs. Onkel said they had to in order to make up for their defects. Putting on airs and graces is a sort of compensation. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401

4A One can be changed without knowing it: it just hits one and seems like a discovery, while really one has been that way for a while Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401

He [Jung] said that people just take on foolish airs without knowing it: it is a sort of ’possession,’ just as if a peculiar kind of evil gets into them - but all the while, they do not know that they are possessed. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401

Anyone who has illusions about himself has the panics. He can’t help realizing that he is walking on air! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401

Then he [Jung] went on to say that I had been imitating it by making myself into a marquise and that naturally I was miserable having to play that awful role and associate with such people, when, as the daughter of old pioneer stock, I would feel much better with natural people. No one is natural is such a hotel. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401

He [Jung] said that no American, however ’mincing’, or with marquise airs, could ever put it over on him, for Americans have no history behind them. No American is ever a "lady": a nice woman, yes - but not a lady. He said that the nicest Americans he ever met were simple people. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 404

"Never does man rise higher, than when he does not know where his fate will lead him." [Nietzche] Onkel [Jung] went on to say about himself, I know what I have done, but not what I am. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 405

Onkel [Jung] said that you can judge people by the people they like. He said that I could judge myself by the people I was really fond of. If one lives in a God-forsaken crowd, then one is one of them; or if one lives with respectable people, then one is one of them. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 405-406

I asked Onkel [Jung] why no one took me seriously when I said I had work to do. He said that no one assumes that I have mental interests as I was so much in the society of God-forsaken people that one takes me to be the same sort. Also I have taken on so many airs that people say it must be a ’new air.’ Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 406

Onkel [Jung] said the British must talk down. The British consider Americans as colonials. In fact they consider even their own people colonials, even people of the aristocracy, if they have had the misfortune to be born in a colony. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 408

Late on 9 August, I received a telephone call from my mother telling me that Tommy had died at 8:30 p.m. I returned to Zurich the next day, traveling 3rd-class with Dr. Jung, Barbara Hannah, Toni Wolff and others coming back from the Eranos Tagung. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 414

It is very kind of you [Jung] to call my attention to Major de Trafford’s bicycle. It is very tempting, I admit - but after some consideration, I reached the conclusion that I am too old for a new bicycle. I can really do without one. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 416

Somehow it helps to accept fate and build like a bridge to the spiritual realm, in which our beloved-ones live on forever. I also hope that the demands of life will help you and that you will find new forces after this exceedingly strenuous time, which must have been rather exhausting! Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 416

Onkel [Jung] said the British must talk down. The British consider Americans as colonials. In fact they consider even their own people colonials, even people of the aristocracy, if they have had the misfortune to be born in a colony. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 408

Late on 9 August, I received a telephone call from my mother telling me that Tommy had died at 8:30 p.m.

I returned to Zurich the next day, traveling 3rd-class with Dr. Jung, Barbara Hannah, Toni Wolff and others coming back from the Eranos Tagung. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 414

It is very kind of you [Katy Cabot] to call my attention to Major de Trafford's bicycle. It is very tempting, I admit - but after some consideration, I reached the conclusion that I am too old for a new bicycle. I can really do without one. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 416

Somehow it helps to accept fate and build like a bridge to the spiritual realm, in which our beloved-ones live on forever. I also hope that the demands of life will help you and that you will find new forces after this exceedingly strenuous time, which must have been rather exhausting! Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 416

There we met a young man, Pat Reid, who had been the "escape officer" at Colditz Castle. After organizing the escapes of many other officers, in October 1942 he had escaped himself with three others, and they traveled through Germany in two pairs, mostly by train. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 419

My ambitious mother hoped that when I had finished my secretarial course that I would be given a job as typist by Allen Dulles, who had come to Bern in November 1942 from Washington to direct O.S.S. operations in Switzerland. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 421

Mary Rufenacht nee Bancroft joined his [Allen Dulles] ranks as a spy, continuing to live in Zurich but traveling frequently to Bern. In turn she tried to recruit my mother, but Katy refused, saying she was not cut out for such work. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 421

Mary Rufenacht often traveled to Bern to report to Allen Dulles, but she did not move in Bern society. As a good spy should, she remained an eminence grise in the background; she and Dulles met frequently at his house on the Herrengasse, and soon they became lovers. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 423

Thanks to her intuition, Linda [Fierz] sees Katy more clearly than Toni Wolff ever did. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 429

I have been sending you affectionate New Year's wishes in my own wireless style, that is in thought, but nevertheless feel somewhat guilty for not having put them down on paper at the right time. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 430

It is a pity you cannot be here for the Club discussion; your contribution is very valuable to me and I hope to be able to get it into the discussion, for you have [come?] upon a very important point. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 431

The X affair was rather exciting, I must tell you about it when I see you. The reason why he was excluded [from the Club] is really that through his continued money borrowing and making debts etc., he was considered to discredit the Club, which is true. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 432

I have to add this post-scriptum to say: Did you hear of Prof. Zimmer's death?1 And isn't it awfully sad? He died of pneumonia in New Yark, as we heard through a cable from Mrs. Mellon. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 432

He [Heinrich Zimmer] could have done such fine work and things that nobody else was able to. And for his family it means a terrible loss; I feel such pity for poor Mrs. Zimmer, who first lost her home and now her husband. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 432

This is to tell you and Mrs. Jung that Janey has just become engaged to a British Captain Reid, assistant Military Attache at the British Legation in Bern. ... A certain amount of character and determination he must have, as he has been recently decorated by the British government for his organization in helping many British to escape from Germany. He himself escaped. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 437

Dear Janey, The surprising news of your engagement have reached my attentive ears and I hasten to deposit my feelings in the form of flowers at your feet. Mrs. Jung joins me in muttering our most sincere congratulations and magic wishes for the permanency of happiness, good luck and general welfare. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 438

P .S. I shall bring biscuits and tea! [for Jane's wedding] so please don't sacrifice your valuable [war]coupons! Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 438

The next day Carl and I were up for the ten-thirty train home about two. We found T.W. [Toni Wolff] in the [hotel] dining room - but she wanted to wait for the Jung's who were not yet up. They had to stop in Thun for their luggage & only arrived in Zurich after seven! A long day. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 446

I hope the winter won't bring too bad colds or other hardships. There is always much to do, of course; Onkel [Jung] is writing on another alchemistic text and is quite immersed in it. I am following with great interest Kerenyi's seminar about Seele & Griechentum. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 450

On 11 February, Katy, who was due to see both Jung's, was with Mrs. Jung while Jung was still out walking. On his way home he slipped on a patch of ice and broke his ankle. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 452

Dr. Jung slipped yesterday, on the ice near his house, while I was there and broke his ankle. He is now in hospital waiting for the swelling to go down, before being put in plaster. It is a plain break - no complications. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 452

We also got a new grandchild last week; our youngest daughter has a little boy, it's her third child. Fortunately it all went well and she went home yesterday, and en passant came in to show her son to his grand-father, which was a great joy to both of us. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 445

As I walked into Onkel's [Jung's] study today, he was sitting and writing at the table in front of his window, wearing his fur-lined dressing gown and skull cap. He looked rather like Erasmus, Faust, or some mediaeval alchemist. I had a decided mediaeval impression when I came in. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 456

Formerly, a Hitler, Goebbels or Goring would have had no show. In the Middle Ages such people, who were liars and cheats, would never have been followed. After the Reformation there was the great revolution of the peasants in Germany, and the Anabapatists (Wiedertaufer). Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 456

Our epoch started something: In Germany the Kings were put out of their palaces, removed from authority. Without anymore authority, and being a monarchic people, the Germans lost their tiller in the storm and fell prey to these gangsters. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 456

In Catholicism you have to swallow so many nuts, that you can't digest them. If you ask a priest what is the Trinity, he does not know. You just have to believe it, but that is the nut with the shell. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 457

I showed Onkel [Jung] the picture of my old monk, or saint, or 'ancestor' as the Mantel's said.1 Onkel said he must be a saint, or a sainted ancestor, because he has a halo and the staff of the hermit, and the rosary. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 458

Onkel [Jung] said, "Don't try and overreach yourself and be too noble. Later on you get a resentment. One must spare one's nobility, and not throw it away uselessly, because afterwards when one needs it then one gets a resistance. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 458

He [Jung] said that one couldn't take things as one wanted to take them. One should take things as they present themselves, and when a thing presents itself as important and gives one a serious reason, or serious impression, take it as important. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 459

Some people like certain things and other people different things. Nothing is important in itself! If you had a valley full of diamonds and no one knew about it, it would not be so important. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 459

Onkel [Jung] said the important point in Swiss psychology was the smallness of the country. Anyone coming from a big country like America doesn't see what the world looks like to a fellow coming from a small country, wedged in between peoples of very definite national character. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 462

Onkel [Jung] said that de Nerval had real talent, but would not accept the ANIMA (his soul) and so he killed himself. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 470

Then Onkel [Jung] went on to talk about the important thing that is the Anima. It means the WHOLE man, but first people must know what the unconscious is and that takes weeks to understand. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 471

Onkel [Jung] went on to say, that to doctors he explained the Animus and Anima, but even they had great difficulty in understanding what it is. It is very difficult to understand the whole import of the Anima. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 471

The Anima is like living on a planet where no human ever appeared, then suddenly a figure appears (the Anima) and you are surprised! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 471

Toni's remark, that Katy understood Jung's teaching far better and more deeply than almost anyone else, was no empty compliment. Toni was not the type to flatter. Katy did understand Jung's teaching remarkably well, but she found it difficult to impart it to people she was attached to. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 482

Onkel [Jung] said, for instance, that people like [John Foster] Dulles, who were not too split, the more they get powerful, the more the Anima begins to stir for she gets short of love. Then they get a peculiar uncertainty and develop an inferiority and a sensibility. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 483

With [John Foster]Dulles there is a huge facade of nothing but power, and you can go a long way and walk through corridors and corridors and long buildings before you come to the Anima. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 484

I asked Onkel [Jung] how to go on, as I was terribly lonely. Onkel said to just drift along, and try to see people and accept things as they come along, and keep one's eyes open to what comes along and do the best one can. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 492

The inferior function is one with the collective which is the law of nature and the law of our life. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 492

I am the sensation type and that type is irrational and the auxiliary function is feeling. My inferior functions are intuition and intellect. While I am apparently following my sensation and feeling and making them the main source of what I do, in reality I am driven to things by my inferior function, such as wrong opinions, nasty negative intuitions, which influence me very much. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 493

A typical intellectual rules his life by intellect, but stumbles over his feelings: wrong impressions, bad relations with people. He is influenced by his inferior feeling everywhere and that decides his fate. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 494

In my case intellect and intuition are the great powers of evil. The more I build up my mind, the more I decrease the fatal influence of these factors, as I get them under control!!!!! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 494

During Katy's Italian journey in the summer of 1946 Winston Churchill was invited to Switzerland with his wife Clementine and youngest daughter Mary, for an official visit. But first they spent three weeks resting in a private house at Bursinell on Lake Geneva. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 507

Unfortunately, shortly before the official visit began Mrs. Churchill, when the boat made an abrupt turn to pick up Mary in the water, was hit hard by the rudder, and was so badly concussed that she could not attend the various state functions. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 507

Then the Churchills attended a number of receptions, with finally a late one at the British Legation to which Jung was also invited. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 508

Fortunately on the following day Jung was able to meet Churchill to talk with him in a privately-owned Schloss seven kilometers outside Bern. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 508-509

Unfortunately I must inform you that Professor Jung has fallen ill, and since yesterday his condition is very serious. Therefore I must return your photos because in any case he would not be able to sign them in time. In haste, M-J S.] Marie-Jean Schmid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 510

"I never saw anything so beautiful," I said to Onkel [Jung], as I stretched myself lazily in the comfortable chair. "Do you know that it was only after I had worked with you for four years, that I saw color." "When people get in touch with their feeling, they see color," answered Onkel. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529

When people get in touch with their feeling, they see color. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529

To be related to someone is usual but to be related to your analyst, that is a particular thing which belongs to the question of becoming oneself and that becoming oneself can't be accomplished if one is related to people who aren't themselves! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529

I am constantly dealing with people who are not themselves, and I need friends who have a certain degree of ripeness. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529

You [Katy Cabot] call me Onkel and its not a joke, for you really are a relative of mine. But just to belong to an ordinary family, doesn't do the trick, you have to belong to an unconscious family, and your unconscious family is me!" Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529-530

The endogamous libido is not satisfied and is seeking application, that secret dissatisfaction is always trying to establish the original family relationship. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

...the convents attempted to establish the original family relation on a spiritual level. (Frater - brotherhood. Nun - sisterhood.) "It proved to be a great satisfaction for a time," he [Jung] said, "as long as people really loved each other. As long as they did that it LIVED." Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

He [Jung] said that in the middle-ages people really did love each other, things weren't as they are now! This original family which they established was a great satisfaction for a time, and these 'families' were the carriers of civilization. But, he said, it petered out just as the idea of Christian love did. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

However, there is a mystery in it which people don't understand. You see, you reach the Self not just through your ego (the person you know) but the Self includes the unconscious. You are the unconscious and how far does that unconscious go? (That 'Self in the unconscious?) Perhaps you are in my unconscious? Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

The Self is a collective idea, which the Hindus call 'conglomerate soul,' consisting of many souls - built out of many souls as it were, both masculine and feminine ones. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

Onkel [Jung] emphasized that relationship between individuals is due to the Self, not only to the ego. There is a 'something,' an indefinable sympathy, a 'peculiar' kind of relationship between this 'primitive family' which is unique because of its illimitableness. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

But I kept saying to myself, 'You are an intelligent man, but you seem to be getting nowhere.' Everybody and everything was against me for thirty years. It was a dog's life but it was lived sincerely! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 532

It is a great thing to stand a situation in life that comes to you. Then and only then do you get to where you belong. I finally got to where I belonged. If you have to scrub your floor then do it well. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 533

Then Onkel [Jung] went on very forcibly to tell me never to forget that we human beings are animals and that we should pattern ourselves on them for they lead a far more natural life than we do. We should be humble, take things naturally - animals are like that they don't draw conclusions. Katy Cabot, Jung My and I, Page 533-534

I just heard that your mother died - it is good when old people can die. Only for the surviving there is cause for pain and lamentations as it is they who experience a loss. For the dead it must be, if anything, a gain after the hardships and worries of earthly life. Carl Jung, Jung My and I, Page 542

[Professor Jung asks me to write to you - and I do so with regret - because he asks me to tell you that unfortunately he cannot see you Friday. He is not really ill, but he feels very tired and is leaving at the end of the week for the Rigi where he hopes to rest and recover completely. Marie-Jeanne Schmid, Jung My and I, Page 547

At about that time Jung's autobiography, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, was published. In it I came upon a passage which helped me overcome feelings of guilt and gave me the courage to end my twenty-three-year marriage. Jane Reid, Jung My and I, Page 557

You call me Onkel and its not a joke, for you really are a relative of mine. But just to belong to an ordinary family, doesn't do the trick, you have to belong to an unconscious family, and your unconscious family is me!" Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529-530

The endogamous libido is not satisfied and is seeking application, that secret dissatisfaction is always trying to establish the original family relationship. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

...the convents attempted to establish the original family relation on a spiritual level. (Frater - brotherhood. Nun - sisterhood.) "It proved to be a great satisfaction for a time," he [Jung] said, "as long as people really loved each other. As long as they did that it LIVED." Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

He [Jung] said that in the middle-ages people really did love each other, things weren't as they are now! This original family which they established was a great satisfaction for a time, and these 'families' were the carriers of civilization. But, he said, it petered out just as the idea of Christian love did. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

"However, there is a mystery in it which people don't understand. You see, you reach the Self not just through your ego (the person you know) but the Self includes the unconscious. You are the unconscious and how far does that unconscious go? (That ’Self in the unconscious?) Perhaps you are in my unconscious?" Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

The Self is a collective idea, which the Hindus call ’conglomerate soul,’ consisting of many souls - built out of many souls as it were, both masculine and feminine ones." Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

Onkel [Jung] emphasized that relationship between individuals is due to the Self, not only to the ego. There is a ’something,’ an indefinable sympathy, a ’peculiar’ kind of relationship between this ’primitive family’ which is unique because of its illimitableness. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

But I kept saying to myself, ’You are an intelligent man, but you seem to be getting nowhere.’ Everybody and everything was against me for thirty years. It was a dog’s life but it was lived sincerely! Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 532

It is a great thing to stand a situation in life that comes to you. Then and only then do you get to where you belong. I finally got to where I belonged. If you have to scrub your floor then do it well. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 533

Then Onkel [Jung] went on very forcibly to tell me never to forget that we human beings are animals and that we should pattern ourselves on them for they lead a far more natural life than we do. We should be humble, take things naturally - animals are like that they don’t draw conclusions. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 533-534

Katy was now out in the world "living," as Jung urged his patients to do, but she never forgot the Jung’s. The more she "lived" the more frequent were her floral tributes to them. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 565

How very kind of you to send us such lovely carnations; they are of such beautiful colouring and arrived absolutely fresh. Thank you very much for them and also for your good wishes to our Golden wedding. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 565

I always thought of old age as a quiet & restful way of living, but with me, there seems to be more & more work & demands from all sides. The [Jung] Institute is partly responsible for this; on the whole I rather like it, though, for it keeps one alive. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 565

Less than a week after Mrs. Jung wrote the above letter, Toni Wolff died unexpectedly of a stroke on 21 March at the age of sixty-four. Though she had suffered from severe arthritis for many years, she still had been very active. Toni's death was a shock to the psychological group in Zurich, as no one had anticipated it. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 565

It was a great shock to me to get the news of Toni's death and I know that it must have been the same for you and also a great loss, for she was not only a wonderful person, but a magnificent collaborator in your work. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 565

The Jung's were too old to make such trips, but the younger C.A. Meiers were visitors at the Villa. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 566

Thank you very much for your kind letter of sympathy, it was good of you to write. Toni's death has been a terrible shock to me and to us all, especially as it was so sudden and entirely unexpected. There are many people who will feel as you do over her loss which is quite irreparable in many ways. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 566

It is very kind of you to ask me to come down to you for a rest after Easter, but I have not yet been away from the house since my long illness began last autumn, and now this fresh shock has set me back again. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 566

I am sorry, but July 7th I shall be in Schaffhausen, as it is my sister's 70th birthday. If you let me know in time, I could arrange another day, but I have only little time left, as the examinations of the Institute take place during the first 2 weeks of July. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 567

What made the relationship between Jung and his "niece Catharine a unique one, outside of analysis, was that she appealed to his ban viveur side. Many of his contemporaries saw Jung only as a famous man - a great intellectual. They failed to recognize his human side: his love of fun and appreciation of good food and drink. Jane Reidt, Jung My Mother and I, Page 571

I remember that Prof. Kerenyi once, when he spoke of the classical mystery cults, said that each generation fundamentally is a mystery for the following one, who can never understand that people had secrets at all before they were born. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 573

In a way the cultured women of the Roman empire were the actual predecessors of modern women. Medieval Christianity being so murderously patriarchal, European women from the Renaissance to our day, in waking up couldn't fall back on any other model but the Roman one. Linda Fierz, Jung My Mother and I, Page 578

We are spending our holyday in our beloved Bollingen, but unfortunately the weather is not very good; so far we had only a few sunny days. Nevertheless we enjoy the quietness & restfulness of the place. C. G. is well, fortunately & I just had a little grippe, but am better again now. Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 580

My mother not only liked to give flowers, and presents, but also to give dinner parties for her friends when in Zurich. Her relationship with the (C.A.) Meiers, for instance, developed from an analytical one with him to a social one with both him and his wife Joan. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 581

Of all her analysts, however, Katy was most fond of Jung. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 581

I feel dreadfully out of touch with essential things, though I am not allowing myself to be 'side-tracked' too much, yet I badly need you! Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 581

It is still wonderfully blooming and the flowers as well as the colours are so delicate and nearly spring like. I hope you have a nice time with your family.

Onkel has gone to Bollingen, I am not allowed because of my sciatica (which is better however). Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 589

Grandpa enjoyed his party and was pleased to receive birthday greetings from President Eisenhower and a visit from the Mayor of Boston - as well as congratulations from a female admirer who had chatted with him when he still strode through the Boston Common in his nineties en route to his office. Godfrey lived another thirty months and died on 2 November 1962 (Katy's birthday) at the age of one hundred and one years and three quarters. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 596-597

Aunt Lilla (Godfrey Cabot's elder sister) and her husband spent many years in France and were close friends of Monet. She studied painting with Monet at Giverny and became famous; her pictures hang in several American museums, and four of her portraits hang at the Musee d'Art Americain at Giverny near Paris. The museum advertised its 1997 exhibition with a poster of The Green Hat, a portrait by Lilla Cabot Perry of her daughter. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 602

thank you for your nice Christmas-card. It is awfully good of you to invite me to your enviable San Remo-place with all its delights. Unfortunately I cannot avail myself of your kindness since I am afraid of the long trip and the inevitable effort involved. I have to live quietly and more or less withdrawn from the adventures of the world. Though my state of health gives me no cause for serious complaints. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 602

Told Onkel how happy I was in old age. He said that I owed a lot to my naturalness. The standardized people, the monkey takes them from behind. Onkel prevented my getting standardized and keeps me liquid; that's the trick my outlook is as it was (when young). Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 603

I'm flowing along with people I'm not stiff, I'm not figee [stiff] -that keeps one's sense of humor. Schopenhauer said it's the only divine quality of man. Those stiff standardized people are apt to get silly & senile. I stuck to main things love never ceases when it comes along in a natural way. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 603

People of extra intelligence have an inferior feeling. Successful men, a miserable family life. Churchill wonderful humor- a terrible bully in personal relations. Monty can't stand someone beside him. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 605

Onkel said he's not interested in Procaine, as he'd get too energetic & would undertake more work & he feels now he'd like to take things easy - that he's done enough work. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 605

Katy continued to send flowers to Jung after Mrs. Jung's death. Despite his great age, he was always punctilious in thanking Katy. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 606

Sorry to have missed you at the feast! These celebrations have been exhausting. I am just coming up for air. No visitors for me for now and for a long time! It has almost wrecked me. Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 607

Dr. Haemerli-Steiner was the brother of Dr. Haemerli-Schindler who was Jung's doctor during his severe illness in 1944, and who died suddenly while Jung was still in hospital. Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 607

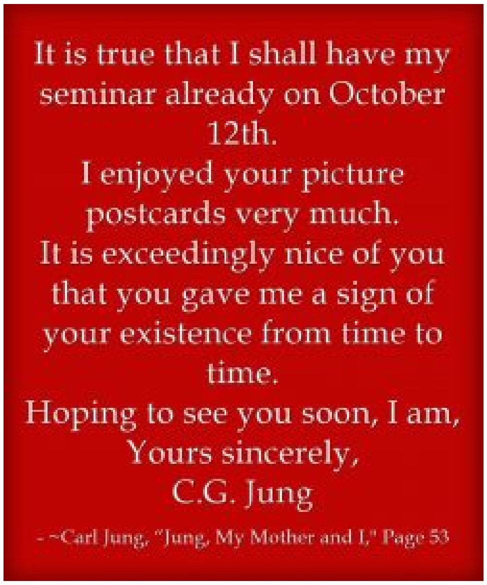
Jung died the following year, on June 6, 1961. The funeral took place on 9 June at the Reformed Church at Kilsnacht. With Jung's death an era ended. The small group which he had founded had expanded more and more rapidly as the years passed, especially after the creation of the Jung Institute in 1947. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 609

The whole style of Jungian analysis evolved, becoming more professional. Friendships between analyst and analysands were discouraged, and professional secrecy became all-important. Gossiping between patient and analyst became strictly taboo, though the older analysts found it difficult to stop the habit. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 609

The analyst was no longer supposed to adapt his treatment to suit a particular patient. The more regimented Freudian school began to influence Jungians, and rules for treating mental illnesses were devised. Therapists had fewer neurotic patients willing to pay for treatment and took on more borderline and psychotic cases. So seeing patients socially, as had been the practice in the 1930s and 1940s, went out of favor. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 609

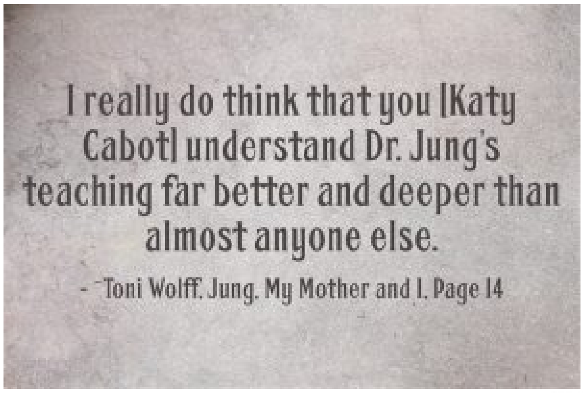
The last of the first-generation analysts1 who worked with Jung in Zurich was Professor C.A. Meier, who died in November 1995 at the age of ninety. He was my mother's analyst from 1945 until her death in 1976, and my own analyst from 1976 to 1986. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 609-610

My mother's diaries are a personal record, yet a forceful voice among those witnesses to Jung's life and works. She understood Jung better than many. Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 611



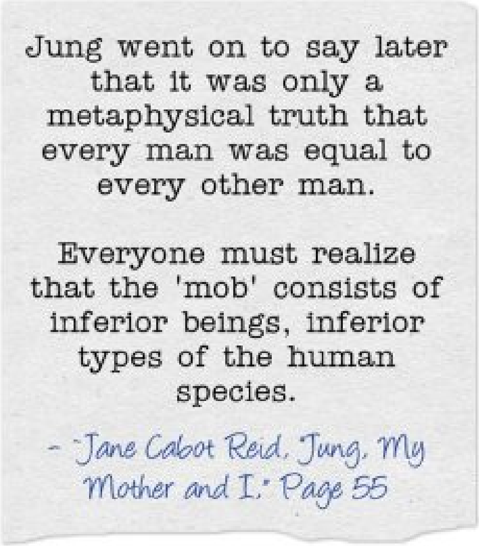
It is true that I shall have my seminar already on October 12th.
I enjoyed your picture postcards very much.
It is exceedingly nice of you that you gave me a sign of your existence from time to time.
Hoping to see you soon, I am,
Yours sincerely,
C.G. Jung

- ~Carl Jung, "Jung, My Mother and I," Page 53



I really do think that you [Katy Cabot] understand Dr. Jung's teaching far better and deeper than almost anyone else.

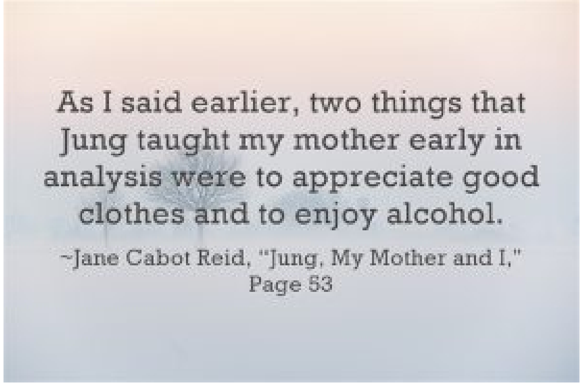
- ~Toni Wolff, Jung, My Mother and I, Page 14



Jung went on to say later that it was only a metaphysical truth that every man was equal to every other man.

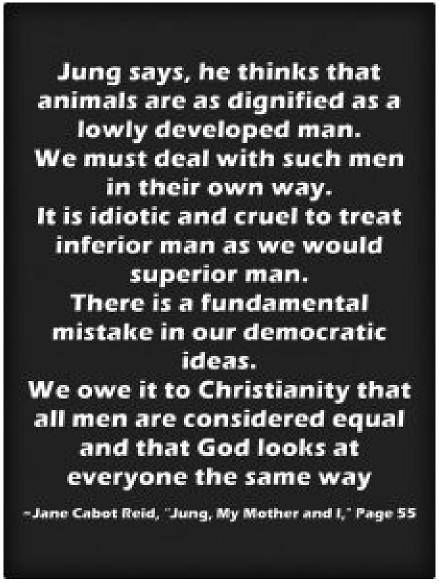
Everyone must realize that the 'mob' consists of inferior beings, inferior types of the human species.

- ~Jane Cabot Reid, Jung, My Mother and I," Page 55



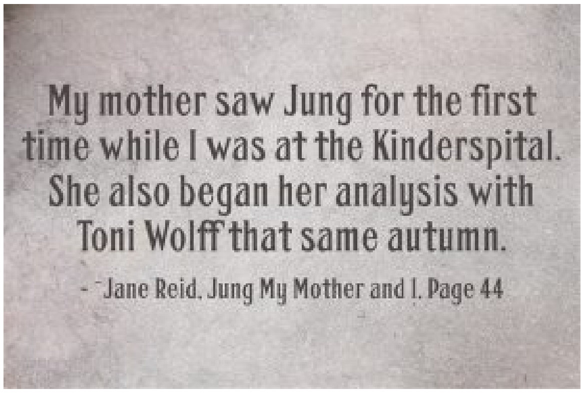
As I said earlier, two things that Jung taught my mother early in analysis were to appreciate good clothes and to enjoy alcohol.

~Jane Cabot Reid, "Jung, My Mother and I," Page 53



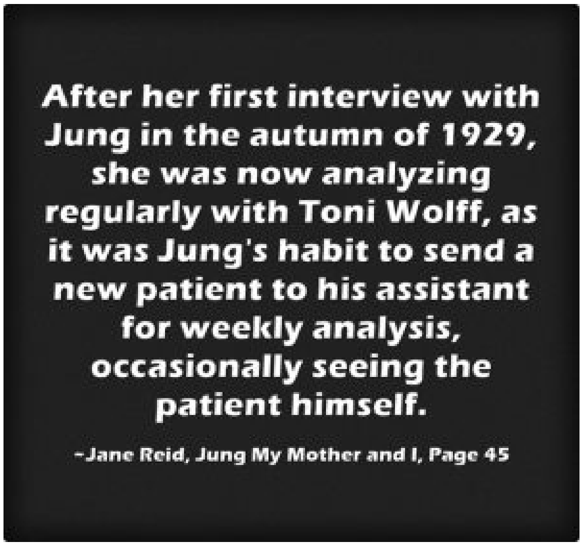
Jung says, he thinks that animals are as dignified as a lowly developed man.
We must deal with such men in their own way.
It is idiotic and cruel to treat inferior man as we would superior man.
There is a fundamental mistake in our democratic ideas.
We owe it to Christianity that all men are considered equal and that God looks at everyone the same way

~Jane Cabot Reid, "Jung, My Mother and I," Page 55



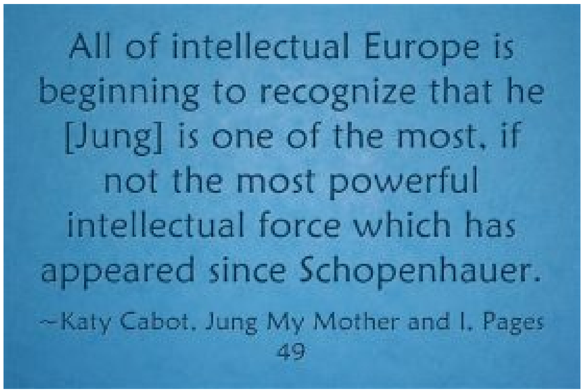
My mother saw Jung for the first time while I was at the Kinderspital. She also began her analysis with Toni Wolff that same autumn.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 44



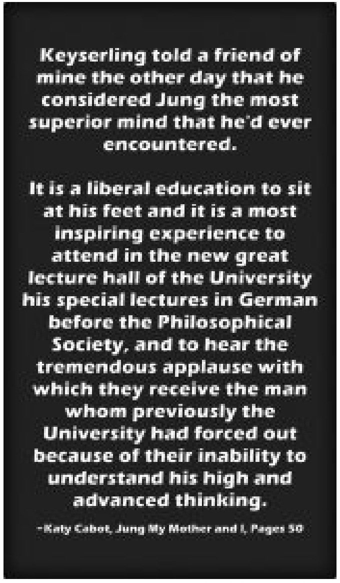
After her first interview with Jung in the autumn of 1929, she was now analyzing regularly with Toni Wolff, as it was Jung's habit to send a new patient to his assistant for weekly analysis, occasionally seeing the patient himself.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 45



All of intellectual Europe is beginning to recognize that he [Jung] is one of the most, if not the most powerful intellectual force which has appeared since Schopenhauer.

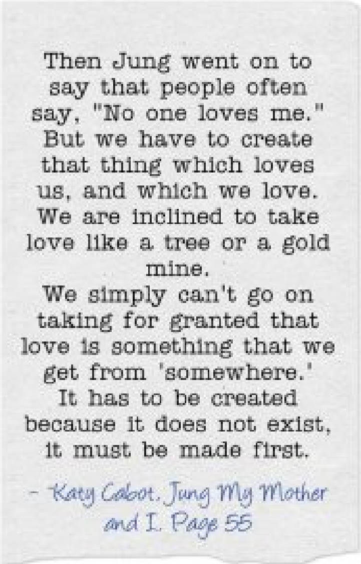
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 49



Keyserling told a friend of mine the other day that he considered Jung the most superior mind that he'd ever encountered.

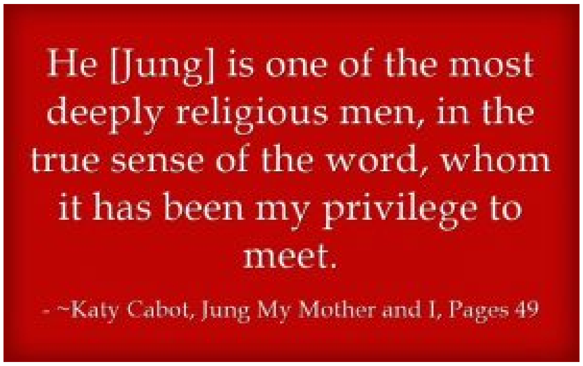
It is a liberal education to sit at his feet and it is a most inspiring experience to attend in the new great lecture hall of the University his special lectures in German before the Philosophical Society, and to hear the tremendous applause with which they receive the man whom previously the University had forced out because of their inability to understand his high and advanced thinking.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 50



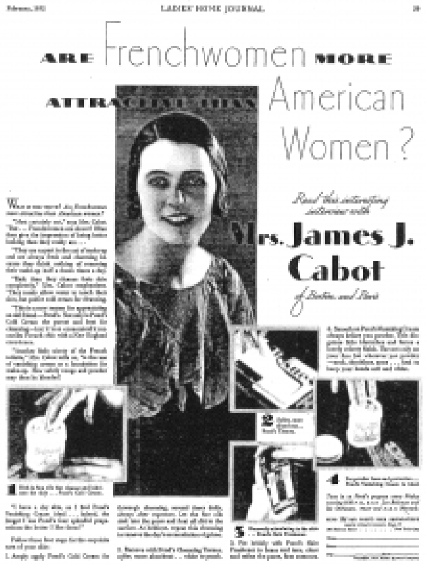
Then Jung went on to say that people often say, "No one loves me." But we have to create that thing which loves us, and which we love. We are inclined to take love like a tree or a gold mine.
We simply can't go on taking for granted that love is something that we get from 'somewhere.' It has to be created because it does not exist, it must be made first.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I. Page 55



He [Jung] is one of the most deeply religious men, in the true sense of the word, whom it has been my privilege to meet.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Pages 49



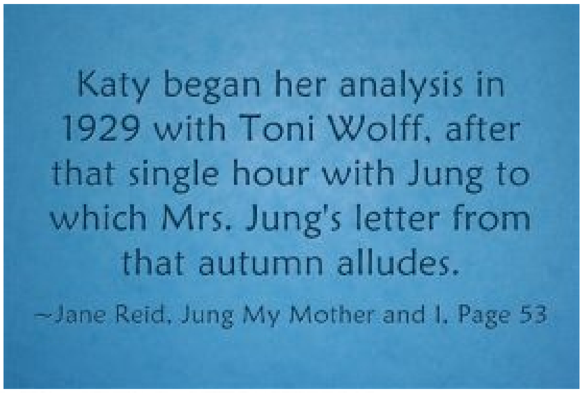
LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

ARE Frenchwomen MORE ATTRACTIVE THAN American Women?

Read this interesting interview with

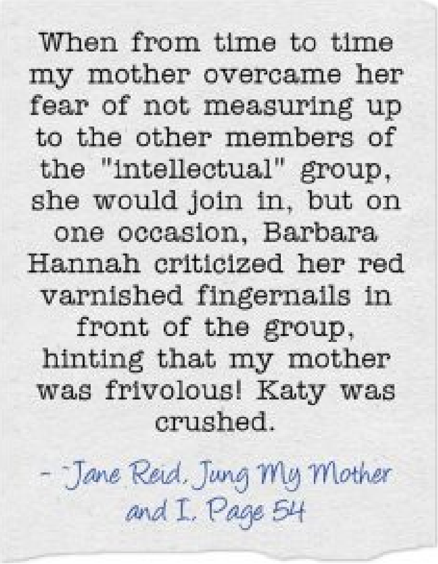
Mrs. James J. Cabot

of Boston and Paris



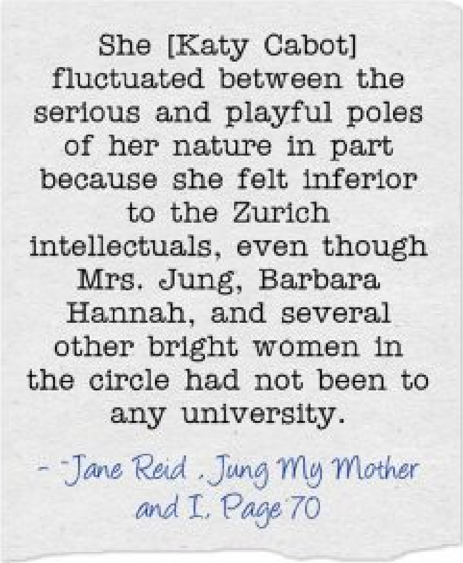
Katy began her analysis in 1929 with Toni Wolff, after that single hour with Jung to which Mrs. Jung's letter from that autumn alludes.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 53



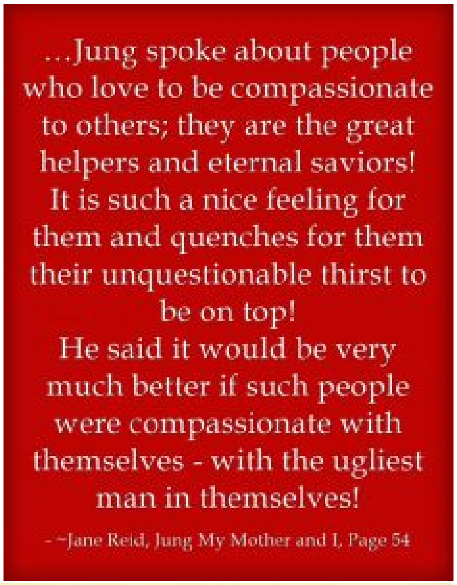
When from time to time my mother overcame her fear of not measuring up to the other members of the "intellectual" group, she would join in, but on one occasion, Barbara Hannah criticized her red varnished fingernails in front of the group, hinting that my mother was frivolous! Katy was crushed.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 54



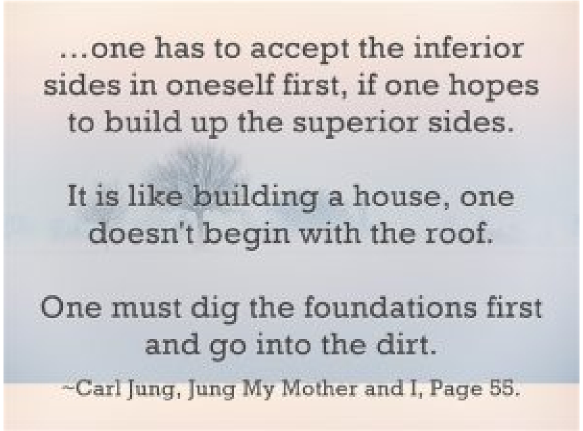
She [Katy Cabot] fluctuated between the serious and playful poles of her nature in part because she felt inferior to the Zurich intellectuals, even though Mrs. Jung, Barbara Hannah, and several other bright women in the circle had not been to any university.

- ~Jane Reid , Jung My Mother and I, Page 70



...Jung spoke about people who love to be compassionate to others; they are the great helpers and eternal saviors! It is such a nice feeling for them and quenches for them their unquestionable thirst to be on top!
He said it would be very much better if such people were compassionate with themselves - with the ugliest man in themselves!

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 54

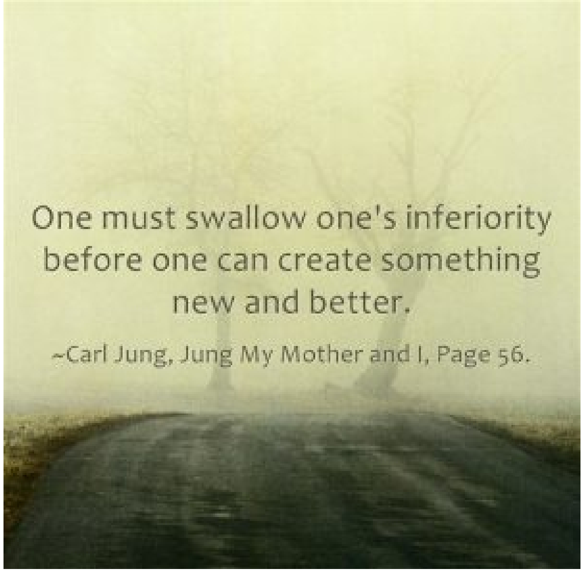


...one has to accept the inferior sides in oneself first, if one hopes to build up the superior sides.

It is like building a house, one doesn't begin with the roof.

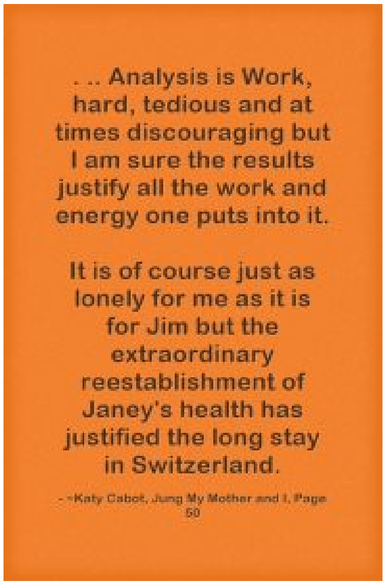
One must dig the foundations first and go into the dirt.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 55.



One must swallow one's inferiority before one can create something new and better.

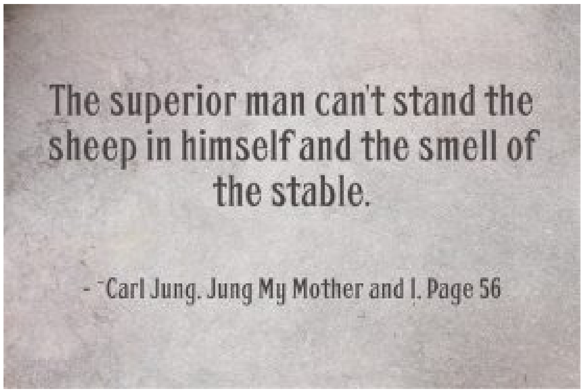
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56.



. .. Analysis is Work, hard, tedious and at times discouraging but I am sure the results justify all the work and energy one puts into it.

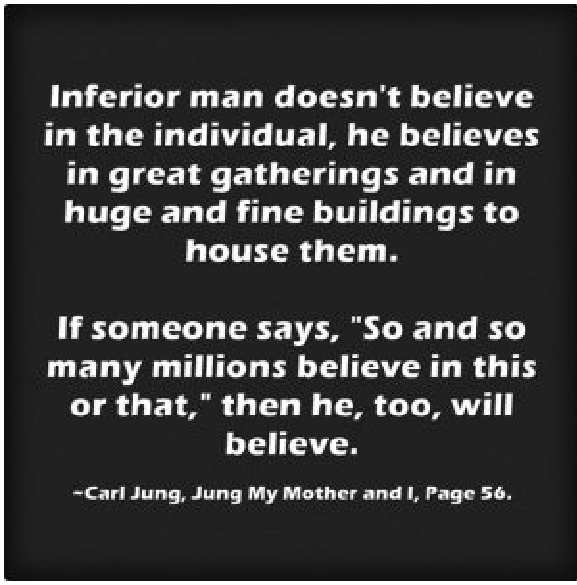
It is of course just as lonely for me as it is for Jim but the extraordinary reestablishment of Janey's health has justified the long stay in Switzerland.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 60



The superior man can't stand the sheep in himself and the smell of the stable.

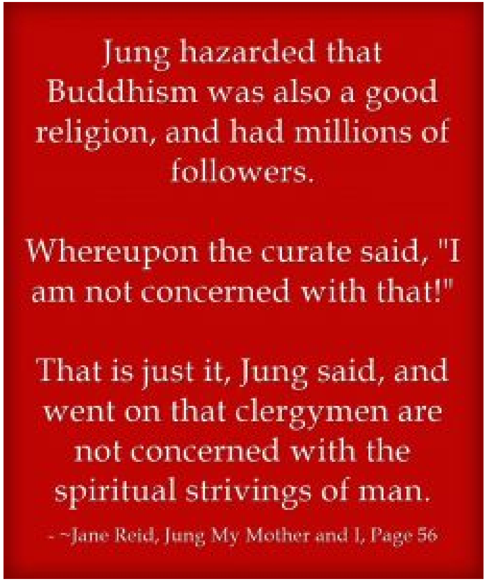
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56



Inferior man doesn't believe in the individual, he believes in great gatherings and in huge and fine buildings to house them.

If someone says, "So and so many millions believe in this or that," then he, too, will believe.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56.

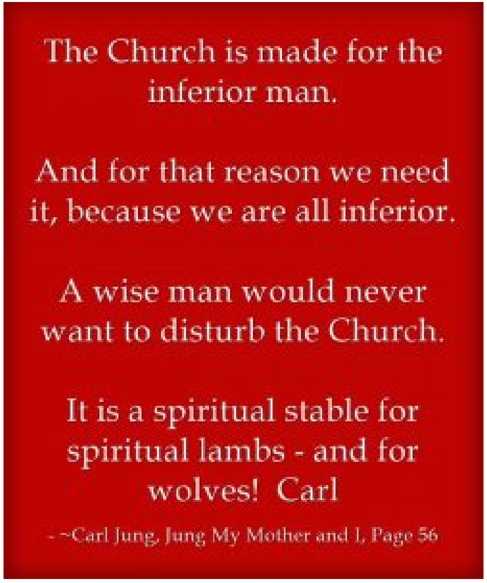


Jung hazarded that Buddhism was also a good religion, and had millions of followers.

Whereupon the curate said, "I am not concerned with that!"

That is just it, Jung said, and went on that clergymen are not concerned with the spiritual strivings of man.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56



The Church is made for the inferior man.

And for that reason we need it, because we are all inferior.

A wise man would never want to disturb the Church.

It is a spiritual stable for spiritual lambs - and for wolves! Carl life is truth and a doubt of truth – a question.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56

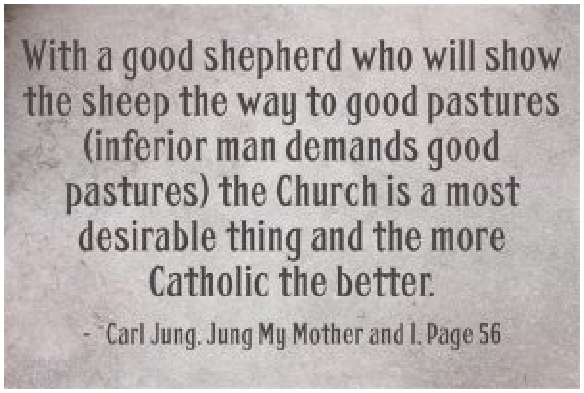
If something is finished, a definite truth, then it is dead, as it cannot develop further.

Best is a half-truth, for a living truth emerges.

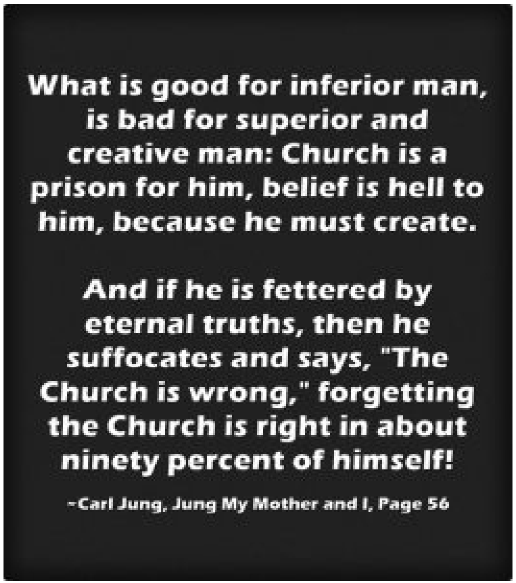
If truth is static, it is dead.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56



With a good shepherd who will show the sheep the way to good pastures (inferior man demands good pastures) the Church is a most desirable thing and the more Catholic the better.

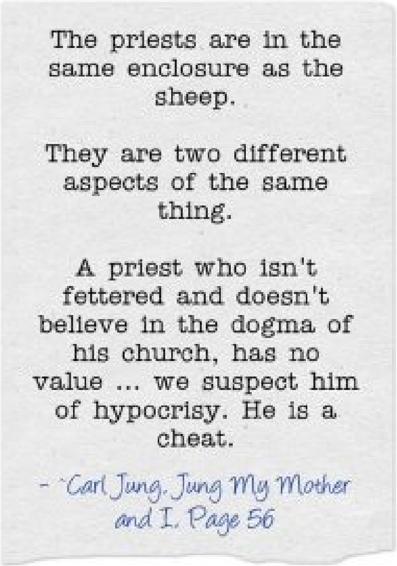
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56



What is good for inferior man, is bad for superior and creative man: Church is a prison for him, belief is hell to him, because he must create.

And if he is fettered by eternal truths, then he suffocates and says, "The Church is wrong," forgetting the Church is right in about ninety percent of himself!

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56

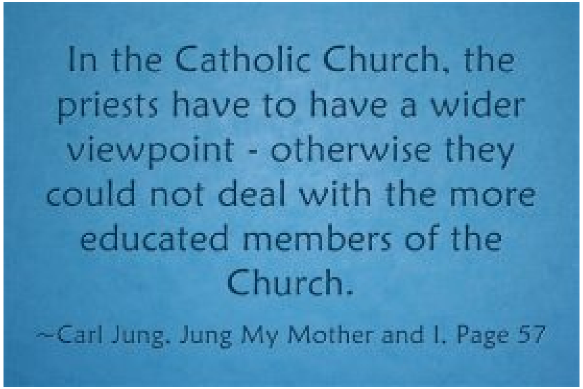


The priests are in the same enclosure as the sheep.

They are two different aspects of the same thing.

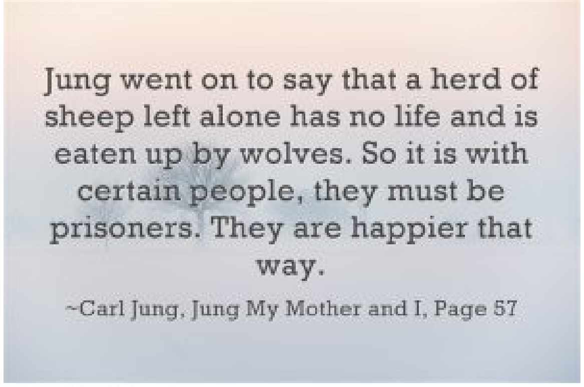
A priest who isn't fettered and doesn't believe in the dogma of his church, has no value ... we suspect him of hypocrisy. He is a cheat.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 56



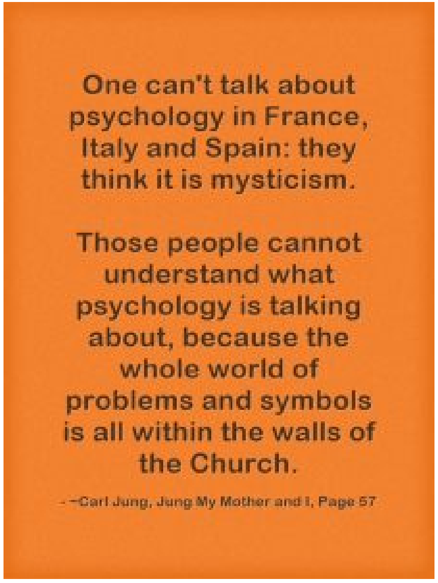
In the Catholic Church, the priests have to have a wider viewpoint - otherwise they could not deal with the more educated members of the Church.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57



Jung went on to say that a herd of sheep left alone has no life and is eaten up by wolves. So it is with certain people, they must be prisoners. They are happier that way.

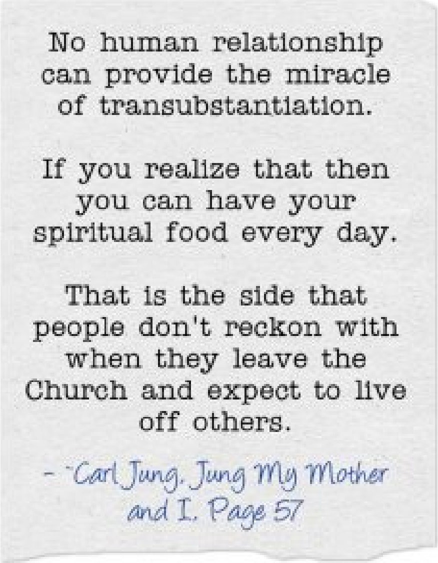
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57



One can't talk about psychology in France, Italy and Spain: they think it is mysticism.

Those people cannot understand what psychology is talking about, because the whole world of problems and symbols is all within the walls of the Church.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57



No human relationship can provide the miracle of transubstantiation.

If you realize that then you can have your spiritual food every day.

That is the side that people don't reckon with when they leave the Church and expect to live off others.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57

Even an Atheist, if he is a member of an atheist club, s has the Church within his reach.

He can confess and repent and with one leap he is ba again in the fold.

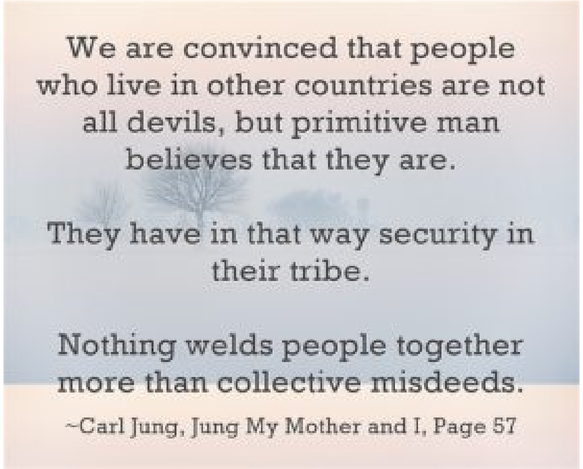
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Pag

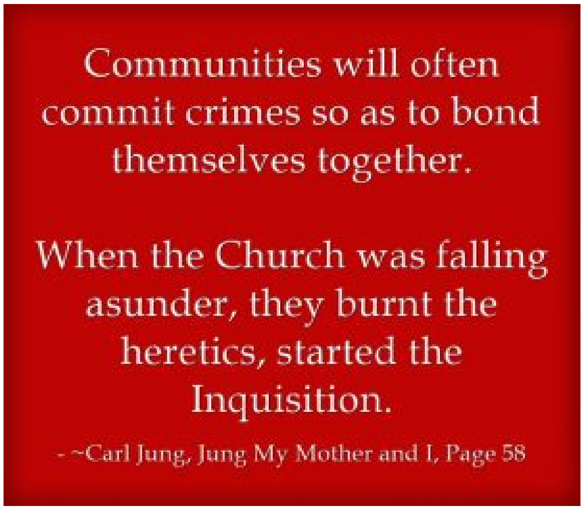


We are convinced that people who live in other countries are not all devils, but primitive man believes that they are.

They have in that way security in their tribe.

Nothing welds people together more than collective misdeeds.

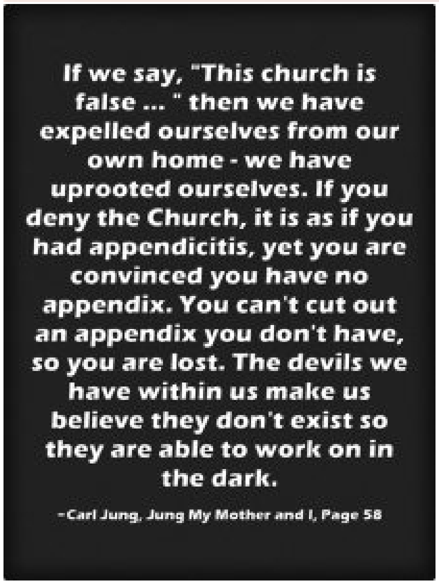
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 57



Communities will often commit crimes so as to bond themselves together.

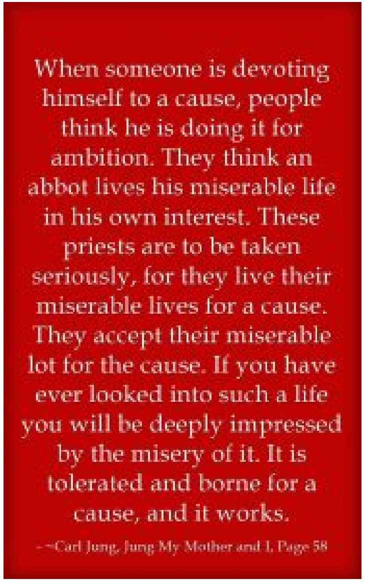
When the Church was falling asunder, they burnt the heretics, started the Inquisition.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 58



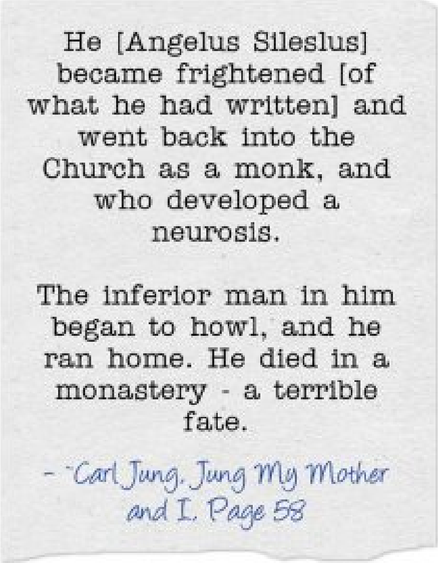
If we say, "This church is false ... " then we have expelled ourselves from our own home - we have uprooted ourselves. If you deny the Church, it is as if you had appendicitis, yet you are convinced you have no appendix. You can't cut out an appendix you don't have, so you are lost. The devils we have within us make us believe they don't exist so they are able to work on in the dark.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 58



When someone is devoting himself to a cause, people think he is doing it for ambition. They think an abbot lives his miserable life in his own interest. These priests are to be taken seriously, for they live their miserable lives for a cause. They accept their miserable lot for the cause. If you have ever looked into such a life you will be deeply impressed by the misery of it. It is tolerated and borne for a cause, and it works.

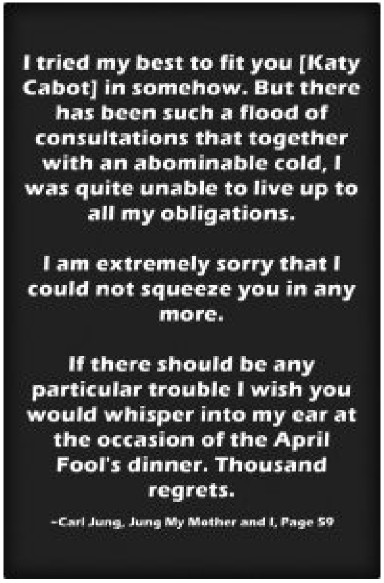
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 58



He [Angelus Sileslus] became frightened [of what he had written] and went back into the Church as a monk, and who developed a neurosis.

The inferior man in him began to howl, and he ran home. He died in a monastery - a terrible fate.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 58

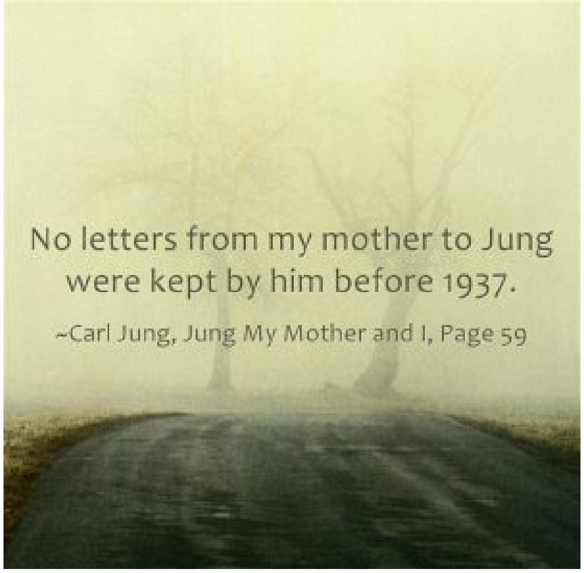


I tried my best to fit you [Katy Cabot] in somehow. But there has been such a flood of consultations that together with an abominable cold, I was quite unable to live up to all my obligations.

I am extremely sorry that I could not squeeze you in any more.

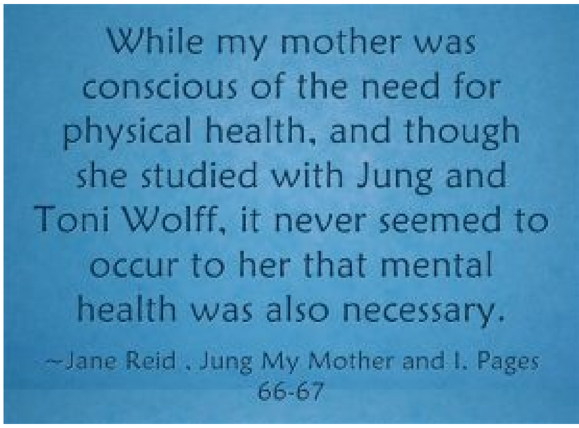
If there should be any particular trouble I wish you would whisper into my ear at the occasion of the April Fool's dinner. Thousand regrets.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 59



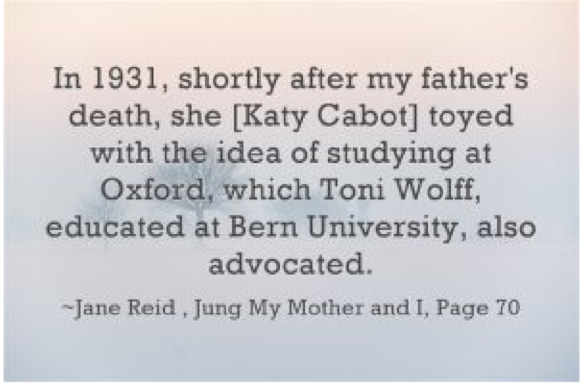
No letters from my mother to Jung were kept by him before 1937.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 59



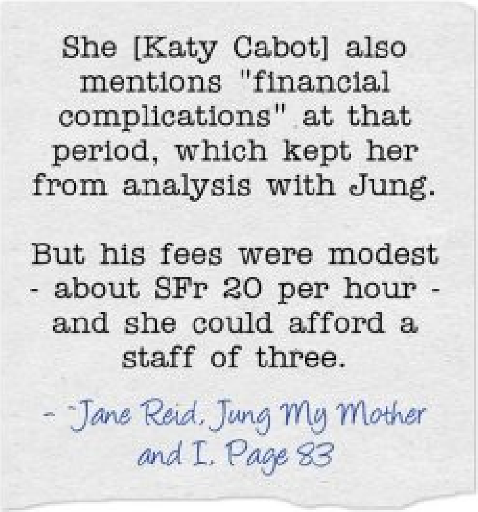
While my mother was conscious of the need for physical health, and though she studied with Jung and Toni Wolff, it never seemed to occur to her that mental health was also necessary.

~Jane Reid , Jung My Mother and I, Pages 66-67



In 1931, shortly after my father's death, she [Katy Cabot] toyed with the idea of studying at Oxford, which Toni Wolff, educated at Bern University, also advocated.

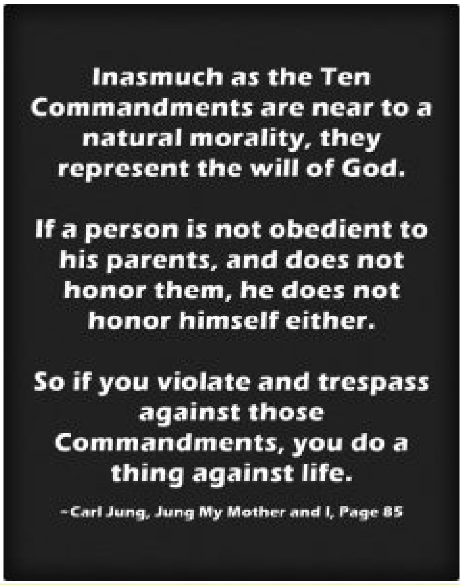
~Jane Reid , Jung My Mother and I, Page 70



She [Katy Cabot] also mentions "financial complications" at that period, which kept her from analysis with Jung.

But his fees were modest - about SFr 20 per hour - and she could afford a staff of three.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I. Page 83

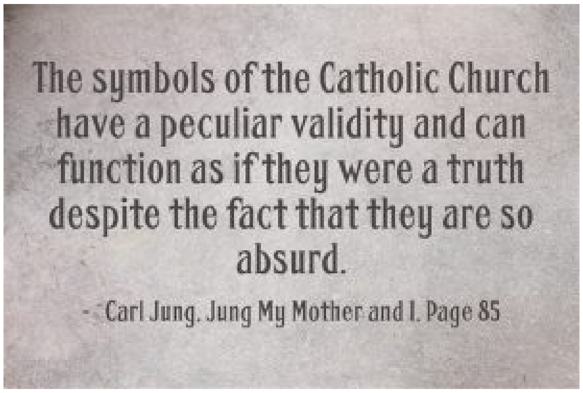


Inasmuch as the Ten Commandments are near to a natural morality, they represent the will of God.

If a person is not obedient to his parents, and does not honor them, he does not honor himself either.

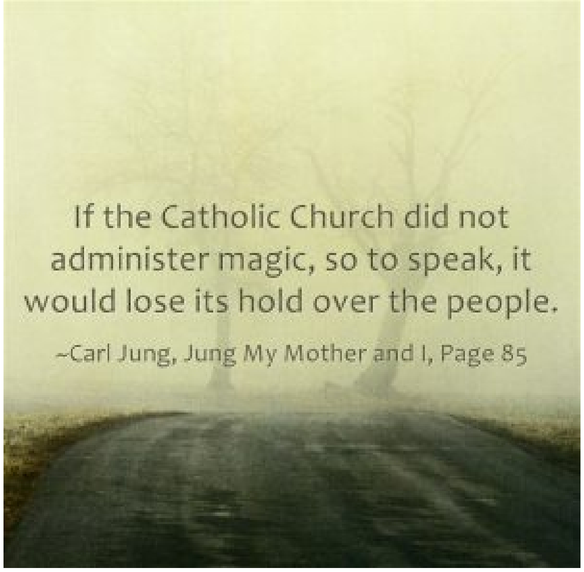
So if you violate and trespass against those Commandments, you do a thing against life.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 85



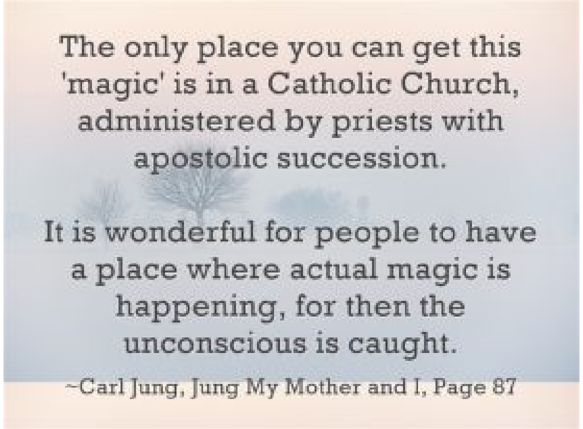
The symbols of the Catholic Church have a peculiar validity and can function as if they were a truth despite the fact that they are so absurd.

- ~Carl Jung. Jung My Mother and I. Page 85



If the Catholic Church did not administer magic, so to speak, it would lose its hold over the people.

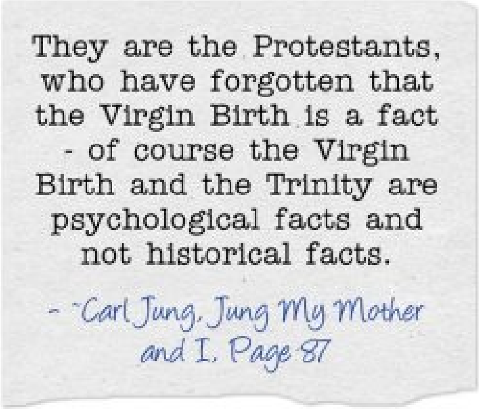
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 85



The only place you can get this 'magic' is in a Catholic Church, administered by priests with apostolic succession.

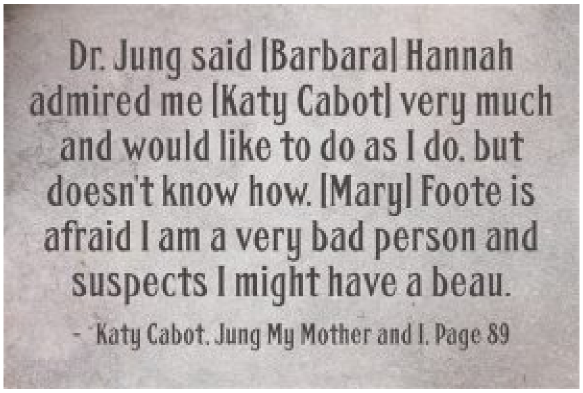
It is wonderful for people to have a place where actual magic is happening, for then the unconscious is caught.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 87



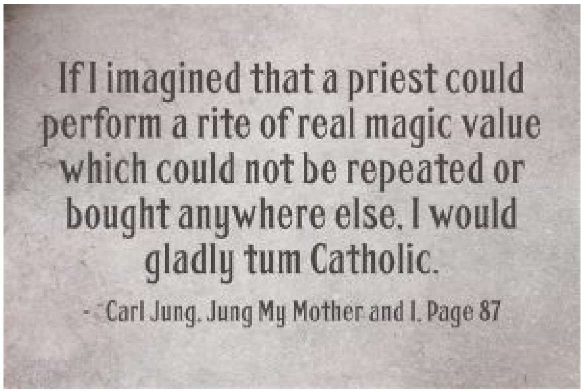
They are the Protestants, who have forgotten that the Virgin Birth is a fact - of course the Virgin Birth and the Trinity are psychological facts and not historical facts.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 87



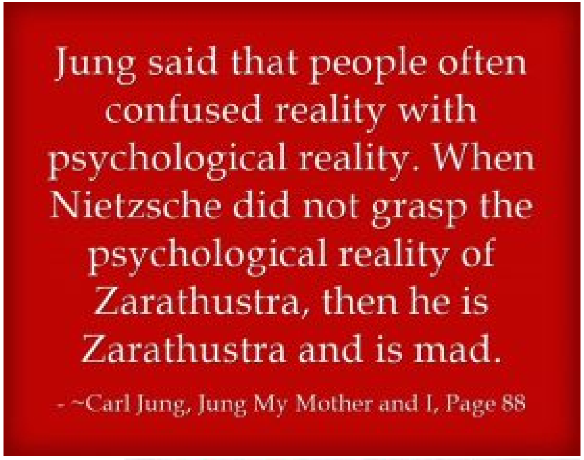
Dr. Jung said [Barbara] Hannah admired me [Katy Cabot] very much and would like to do as I do. but doesn't know how. [Mary] Foote is afraid I am a very bad person and suspects I might have a beau.

- ~Katy Cabot. Jung My Mother and I. Page 89



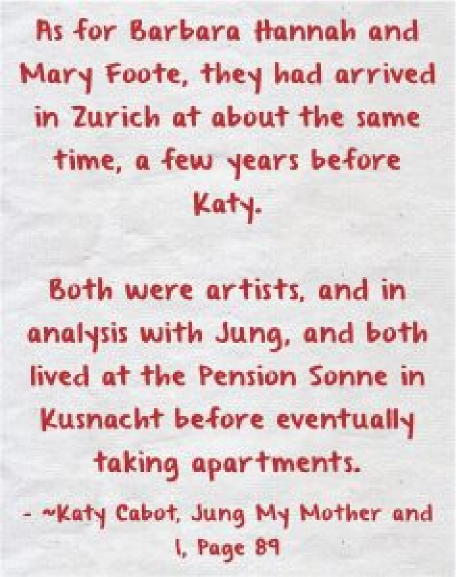
If I imagined that a priest could perform a rite of real magic value which could not be repeated or bought anywhere else. I would gladly tum Catholic.

- ~Carl Jung. Jung My Mother and I. Page 87



Jung said that people often confused reality with psychological reality. When Nietzsche did not grasp the psychological reality of Zarathustra, then he is Zarathustra and is mad.

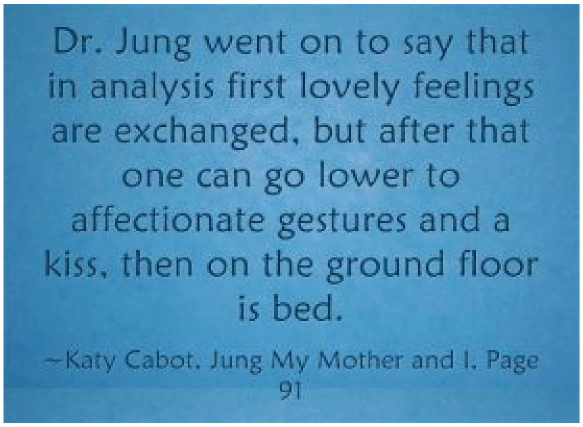
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 88



As for Barbara Hannah and Mary Foote, they had arrived in Zurich at about the same time, a few years before Katy.

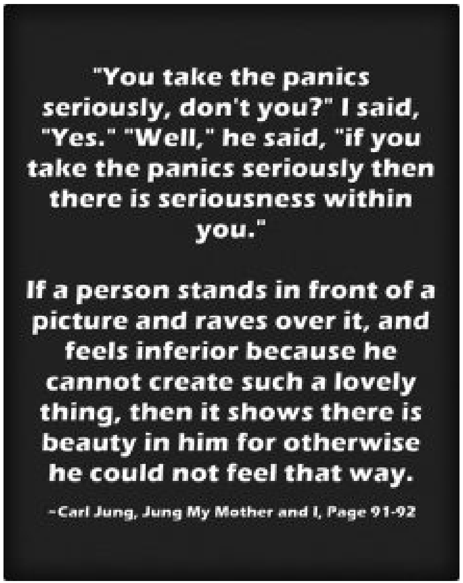
Both were artists, and in analysis with Jung, and both lived at the Pension Sonne in Kusnacht before eventually taking apartments.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 89



Dr. Jung went on to say that in analysis first lovely feelings are exchanged, but after that one can go lower to affectionate gestures and a kiss, then on the ground floor is bed.

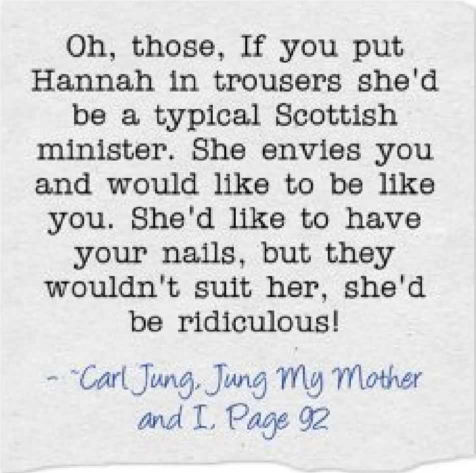
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 91



"You take the panics seriously, don't you?" I said, "Yes." "Well," he said, "if you take the panics seriously then there is seriousness within you."

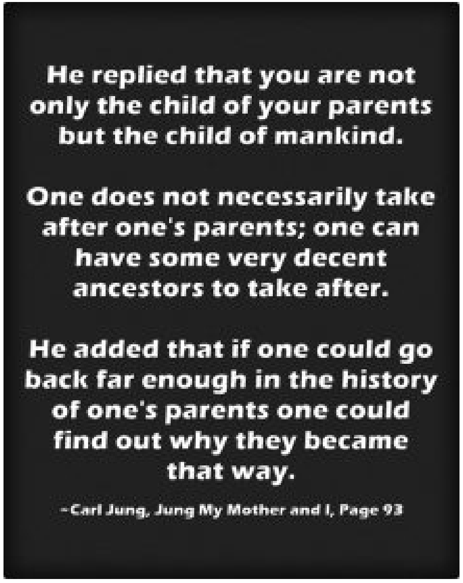
If a person stands in front of a picture and raves over it, and feels inferior because he cannot create such a lovely thing, then it shows there is beauty in him for otherwise he could not feel that way.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 91-92



Oh, those, If you put Hannah in trousers she'd be a typical Scottish minister. She envies you and would like to be like you. She'd like to have your nails, but they wouldn't suit her, she'd be ridiculous!

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 92

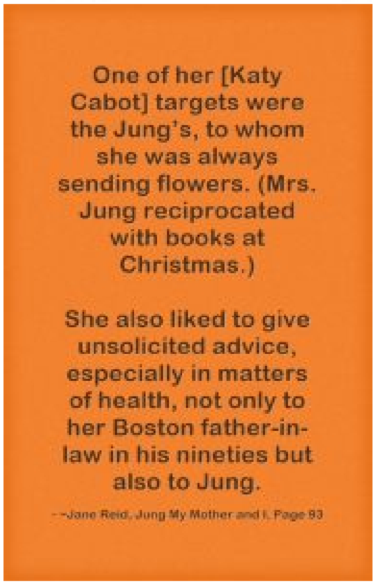


He replied that you are not only the child of your parents but the child of mankind.

One does not necessarily take after one's parents; one can have some very decent ancestors to take after.

He added that if one could go back far enough in the history of one's parents one could find out why they became that way.

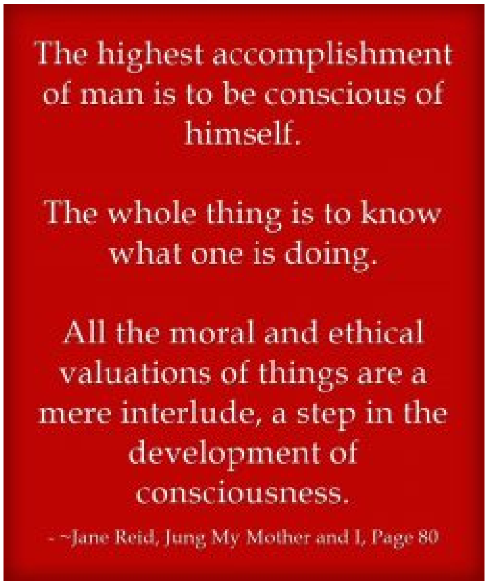
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 93



One of her [Katy Cabot] targets were the Jung's, to whom she was always sending flowers. (Mrs. Jung reciprocated with books at Christmas.)

She also liked to give unsolicited advice, especially in matters of health, not only to her Boston father-in-law in his nineties but also to Jung.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 93

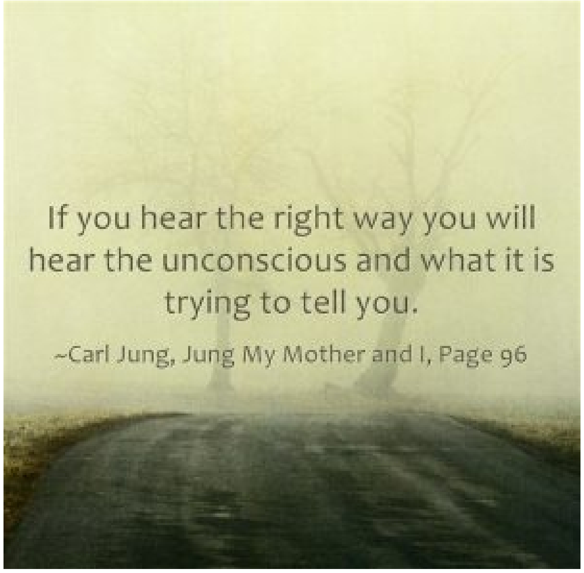


The highest accomplishment of man is to be conscious of himself.

The whole thing is to know what one is doing.

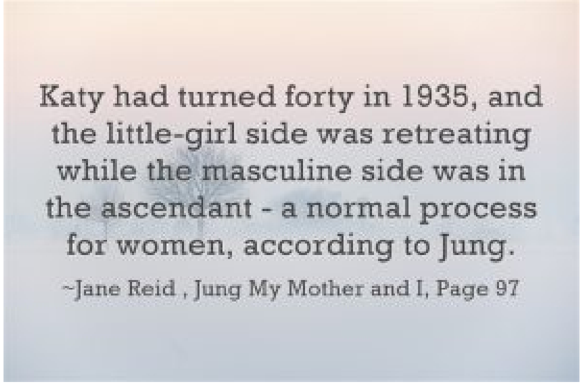
All the moral and ethical valuations of things are a mere interlude, a step in the development of consciousness.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 80



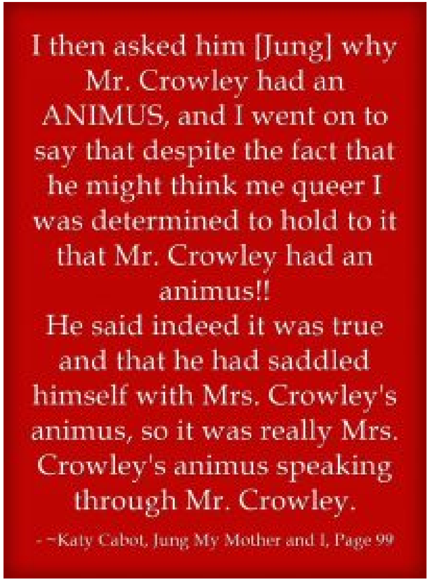
If you hear the right way you will hear the unconscious and what it is trying to tell you.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 96



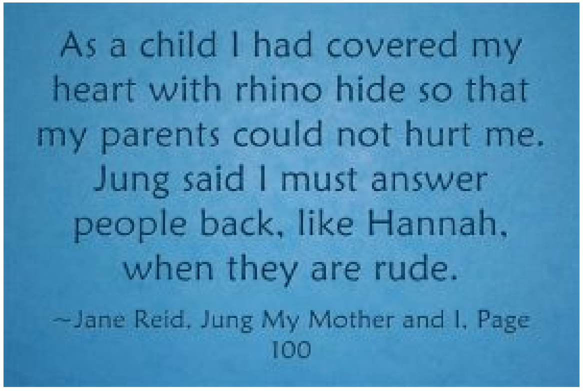
Katy had turned forty in 1935, and the little-girl side was retreating while the masculine side was in the ascendant - a normal process for women, according to Jung.

~Jane Reid , Jung My Mother and I, Page 97



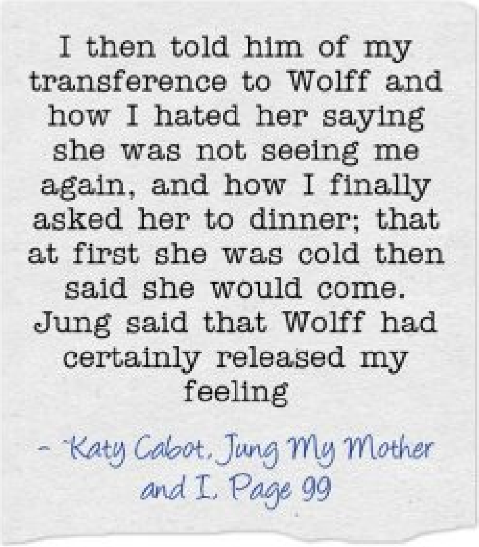
I then asked him [Jung] why Mr. Crowley had an ANIMUS, and I went on to say that despite the fact that he might think me queer I was determined to hold to it that Mr. Crowley had an animus!!
He said indeed it was true and that he had saddled himself with Mrs. Crowley's animus, so it was really Mrs. Crowley's animus speaking through Mr. Crowley.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 99



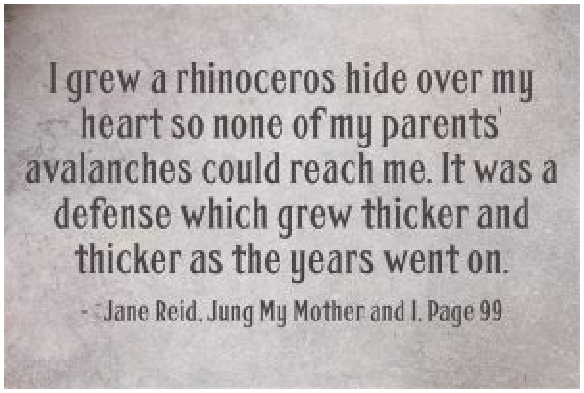
As a child I had covered my heart with rhino hide so that my parents could not hurt me. Jung said I must answer people back, like Hannah, when they are rude.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 100



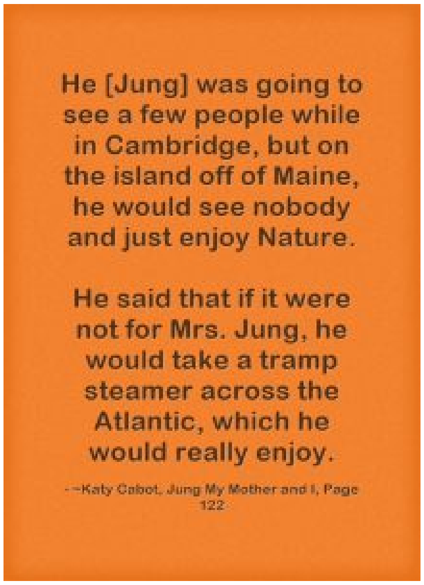
I then told him of my transference to Wolff and how I hated her saying she was not seeing me again, and how I finally asked her to dinner; that at first she was cold then said she would come. Jung said that Wolff had certainly released my feeling

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 99



I grew a rhinoceros hide over my heart so none of my parents' avalanches could reach me. It was a defense which grew thicker and thicker as the years went on.

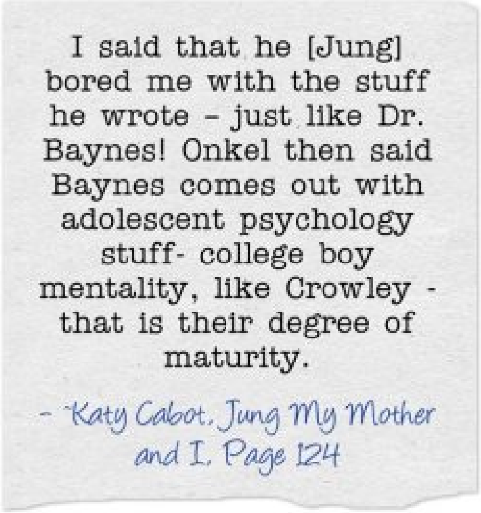
- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 99



He [Jung] was going to see a few people while in Cambridge, but on the island off of Maine, he would see nobody and just enjoy Nature.

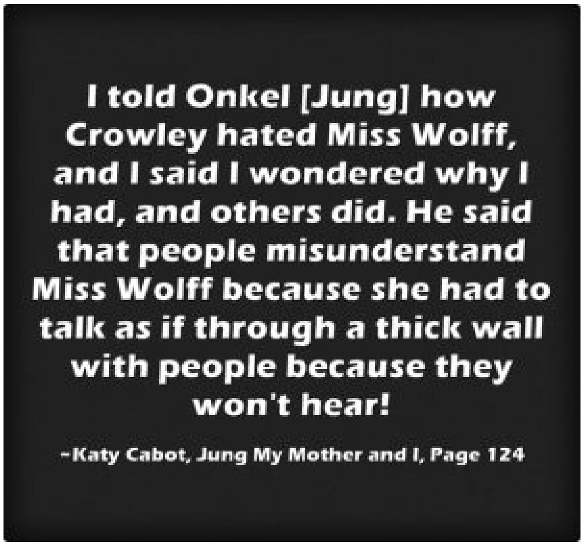
He said that if it were not for Mrs. Jung, he would take a tramp steamer across the Atlantic, which he would really enjoy.

-~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 122



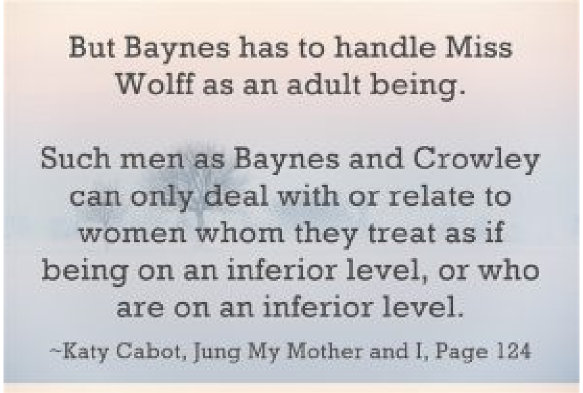
I said that he [Jung] bored me with the stuff he wrote - just like Dr. Baynes! Onkel then said Baynes comes out with adolescent psychology stuff- college boy mentality, like Crowley - that is their degree of maturity.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 124



I told Onkel [Jung] how Crowley hated Miss Wolff, and I said I wondered why I had, and others did. He said that people misunderstand Miss Wolff because she had to talk as if through a thick wall with people because they won't hear!

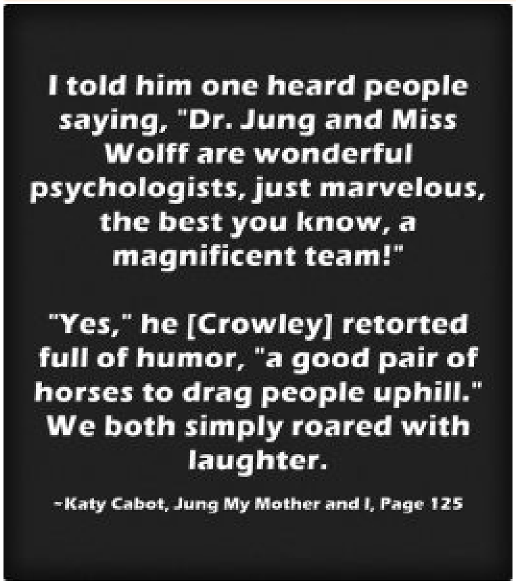
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 124



But Baynes has to handle Miss Wolff as an adult being.

Such men as Baynes and Crowley can only deal with or relate to women whom they treat as if being on an inferior level, or who are on an inferior level.

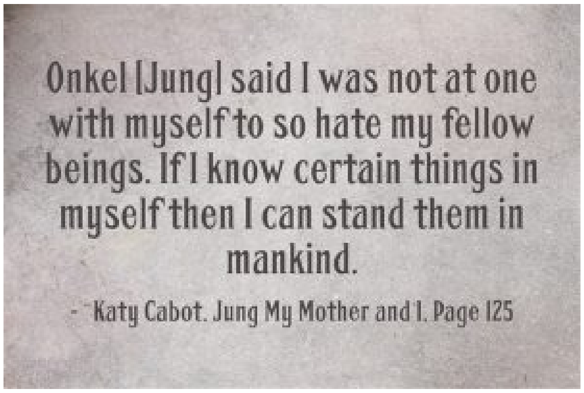
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 124



I told him one heard people saying, "Dr. Jung and Miss Wolff are wonderful psychologists, just marvelous, the best you know, a magnificent team!"

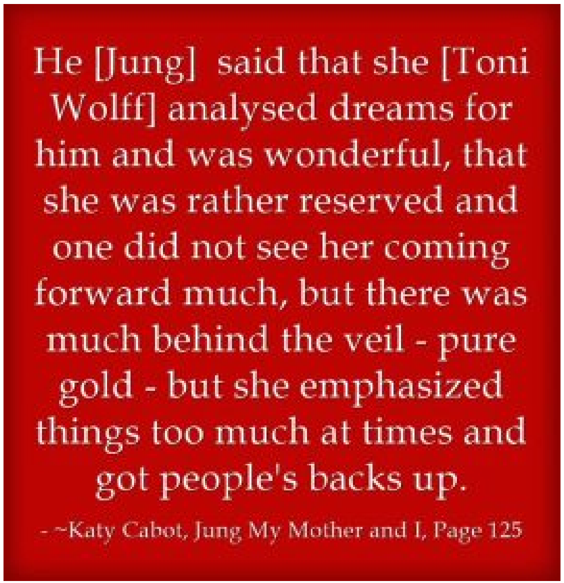
"Yes," he [Crowley] retorted full of humor, "a good pair of horses to drag people uphill." We both simply roared with laughter.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 125



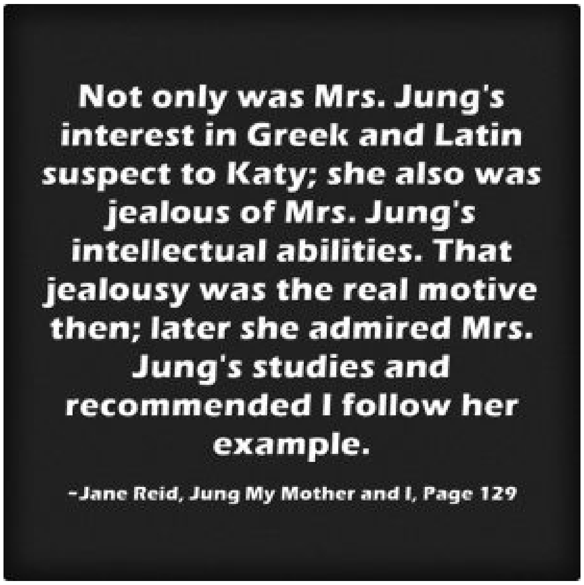
Onkel [Jung] said I was not at one with myself to so hate my fellow beings. If I know certain things in myself then I can stand them in mankind.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 125



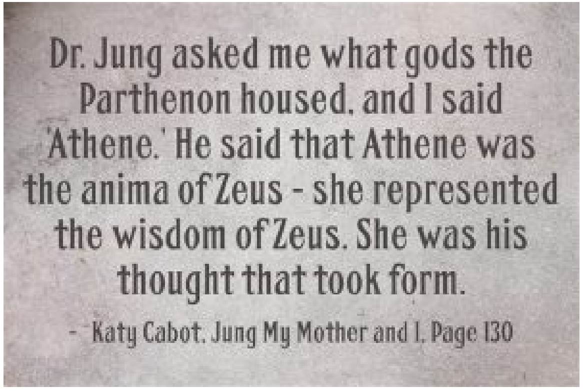
He [Jung] said that she [Toni Wolff] analysed dreams for him and was wonderful, that she was rather reserved and one did not see her coming forward much, but there was much behind the veil - pure gold - but she emphasized things too much at times and got people's backs up.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 125



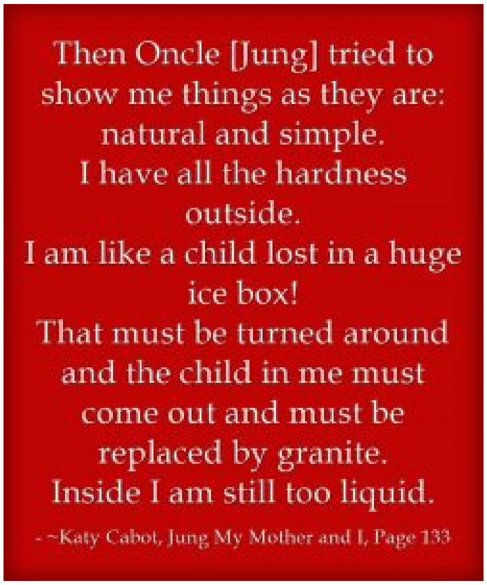
Not only was Mrs. Jung's interest in Greek and Latin suspect to Katy; she also was jealous of Mrs. Jung's intellectual abilities. That jealousy was the real motive then; later she admired Mrs. Jung's studies and recommended I follow her example.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 129



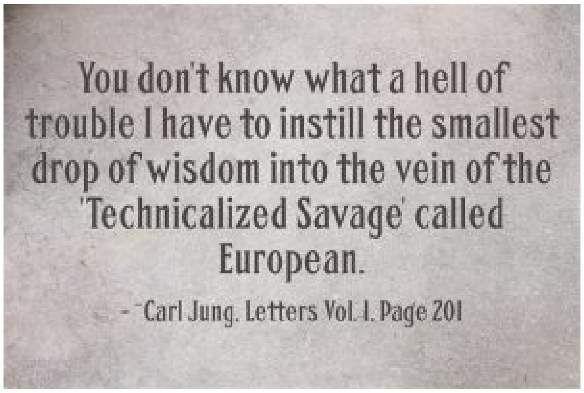
Dr. Jung asked me what gods the Parthenon housed, and I said 'Athene.' He said that Athene was the anima of Zeus - she represented the wisdom of Zeus. She was his thought that took form.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 130



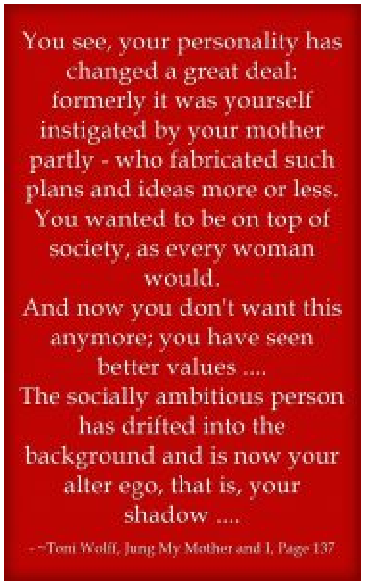
Then Oncle [Jung] tried to show me things as they are: natural and simple.
I have all the hardness outside.
I am like a child lost in a huge ice box!
That must be turned around and the child in me must come out and must be replaced by granite.
Inside I am still too liquid.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 133



You don't know what a hell of trouble I have to instill the smallest drop of wisdom into the vein of the 'Technicalized Savage' called European.

- ~Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 201

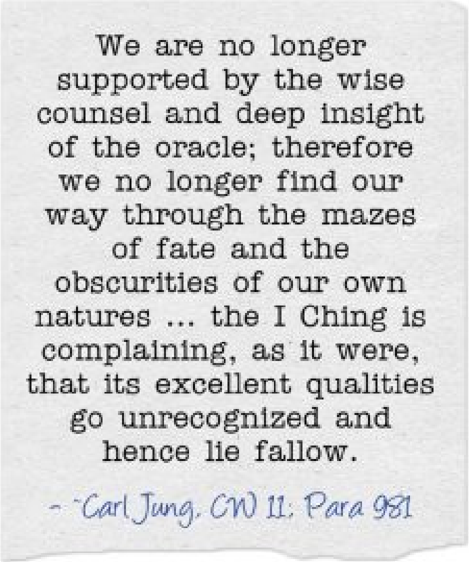


You see, your personality has changed a great deal: formerly it was yourself instigated by your mother partly - who fabricated such plans and ideas more or less. You wanted to be on top of society, as every woman would.

And now you don't want this anymore; you have seen better values ....

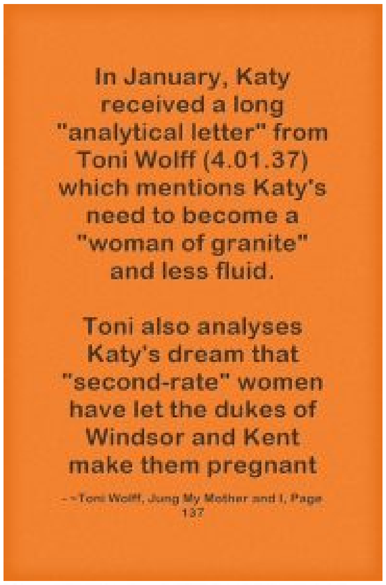
The socially ambitious person has drifted into the background and is now your alter ego, that is, your shadow ....

- ~Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 137



We are no longer supported by the wise counsel and deep insight of the oracle; therefore we no longer find our way through the mazes of fate and the obscurities of our own natures ... the I Ching is complaining, as it were, that its excellent qualities go unrecognized and hence lie fallow.

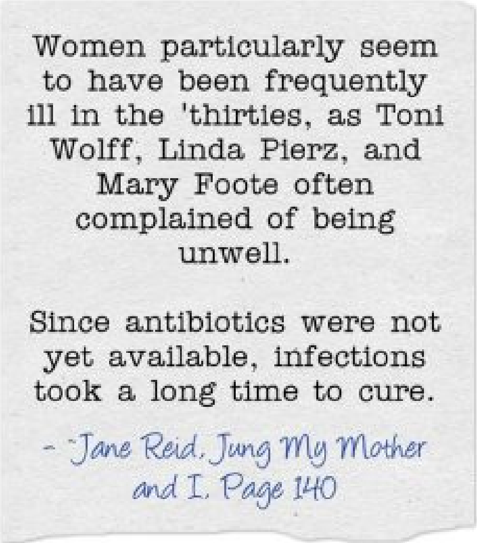
- ~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 981



In January, Katy received a long "analytical letter" from Toni Wolff (4.01.37) which mentions Katy's need to become a "woman of granite" and less fluid.

Toni also analyses Katy's dream that "second-rate" women have let the dukes of Windsor and Kent make them pregnant

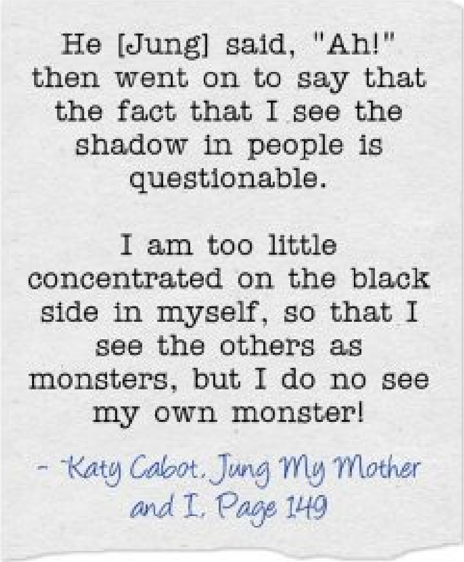
- ~Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 137



Women particularly seem to have been frequently ill in the 'thirties, as Toni Wolff, Linda Pierz, and Mary Foote often complained of being unwell.

Since antibiotics were not yet available, infections took a long time to cure.

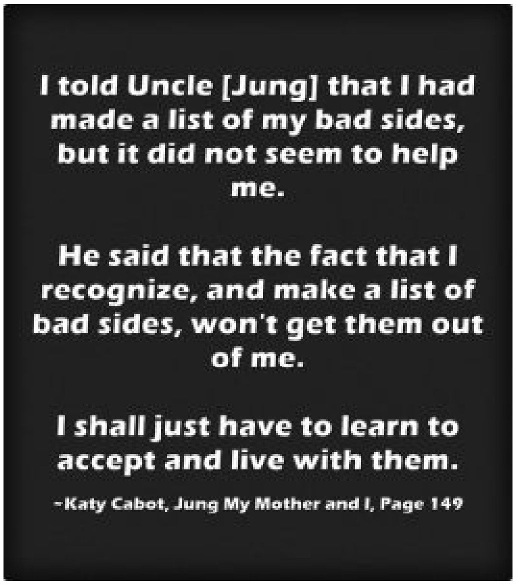
- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 140



He [Jung] said, "Ah!" then went on to say that the fact that I see the shadow in people is questionable.

I am too little concentrated on the black side in myself, so that I see the others as monsters, but I do no see my own monster!

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 149

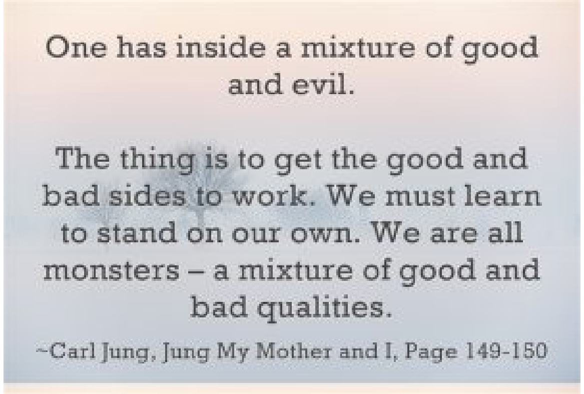


I told Uncle [Jung] that I had made a list of my bad sides, but it did not seem to help me.

He said that the fact that I recognize, and make a list of bad sides, won't get them out of me.

I shall just have to learn to accept and live with them.

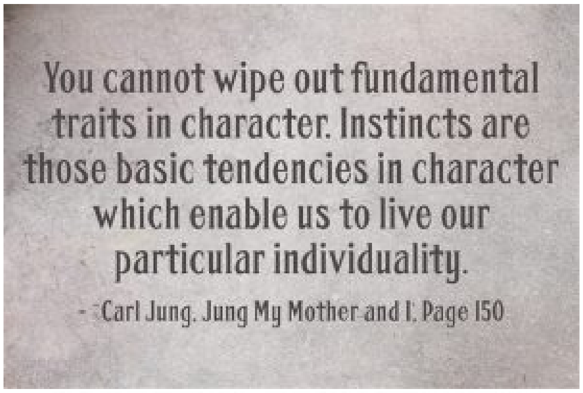
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 149



One has inside a mixture of good and evil.

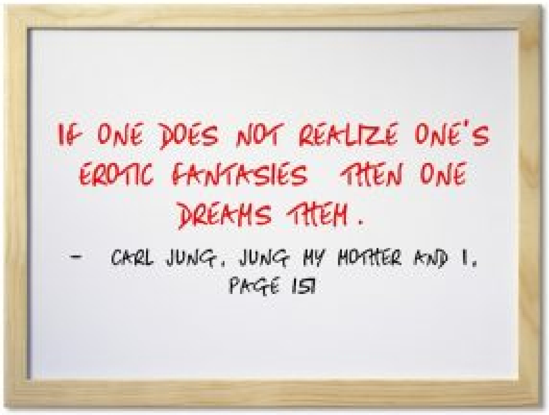
The thing is to get the good and bad sides to work. We must learn to stand on our own. We are all monsters – a mixture of good and bad qualities.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 149-150



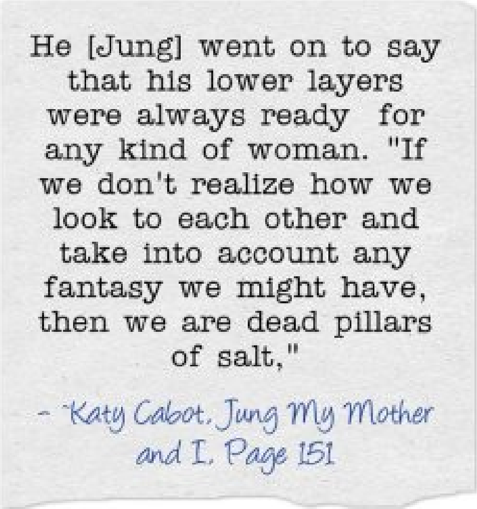
You cannot wipe out fundamental traits in character. Instincts are those basic tendencies in character which enable us to live our particular individuality.

- Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 150



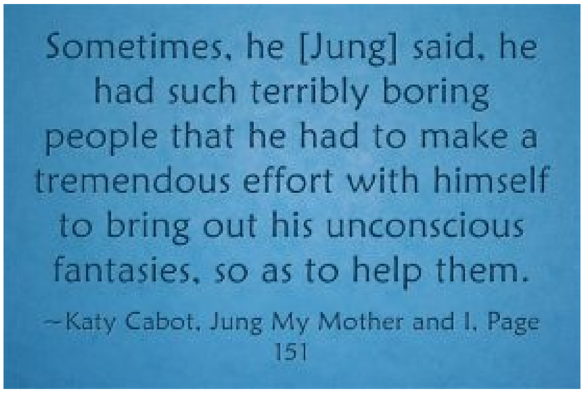
IF ONE DOES NOT REALIZE ONE'S EROTIC FANTASIES THEN ONE DREAMS THEM.

- CARL JUNG, JUNG MY MOTHER AND I, PAGE 151



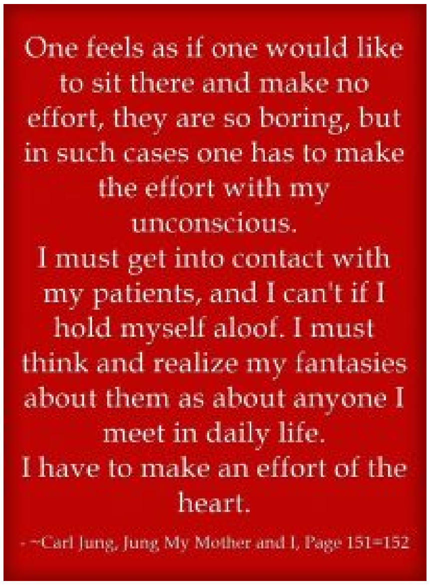
He [Jung] went on to say that his lower layers were always ready for any kind of woman. "If we don't realize how we look to each other and take into account any fantasy we might have, then we are dead pillars of salt,"

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 151



Sometimes, he [Jung] said, he had such terribly boring people that he had to make a tremendous effort with himself to bring out his unconscious fantasies, so as to help them.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 151

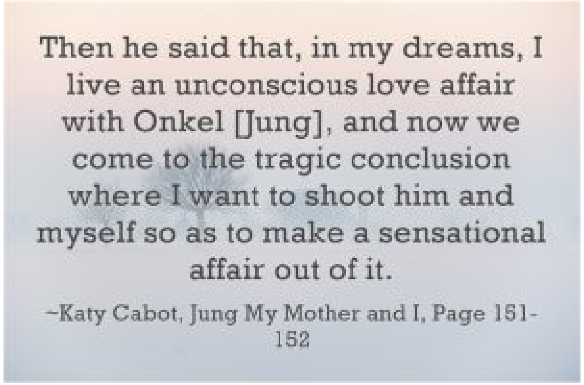


One feels as if one would like to sit there and make no effort, they are so boring, but in such cases one has to make the effort with my unconscious.

I must get into contact with my patients, and I can't if I hold myself aloof. I must think and realize my fantasies about them as about anyone I meet in daily life.

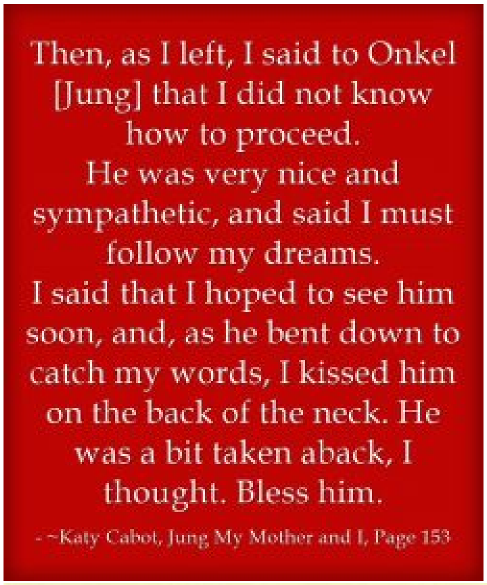
I have to make an effort of the heart.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 151=152



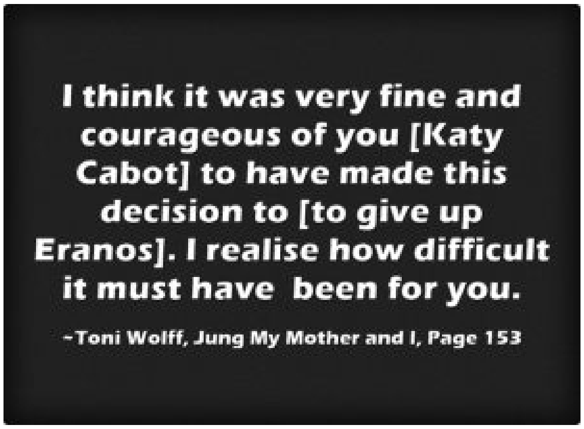
Then he said that, in my dreams, I live an unconscious love affair with Onkel [Jung], and now we come to the tragic conclusion where I want to shoot him and myself so as to make a sensational affair out of it.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 151-152



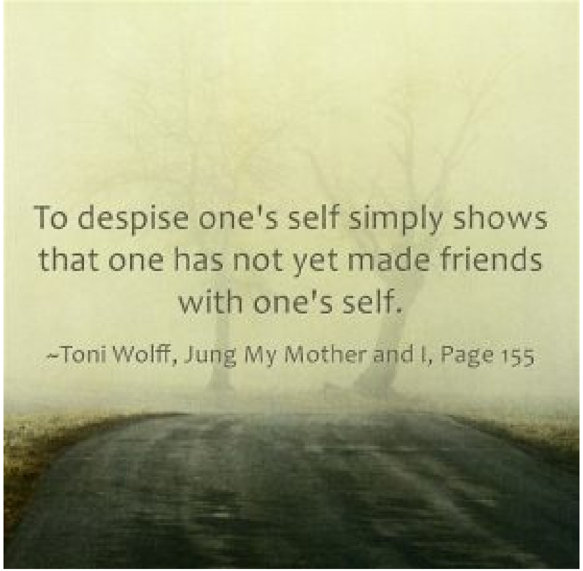
Then, as I left, I said to Onkel [Jung] that I did not know how to proceed.
He was very nice and sympathetic, and said I must follow my dreams.
I said that I hoped to see him soon, and, as he bent down to catch my words, I kissed him on the back of the neck. He was a bit taken aback, I thought. Bless him.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 153



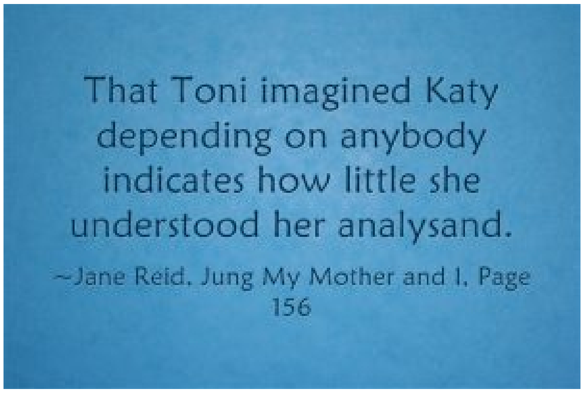
I think it was very fine and courageous of you [Katy Cabot] to have made this decision to [to give up Eranos]. I realise how difficult it must have been for you.

~Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 153



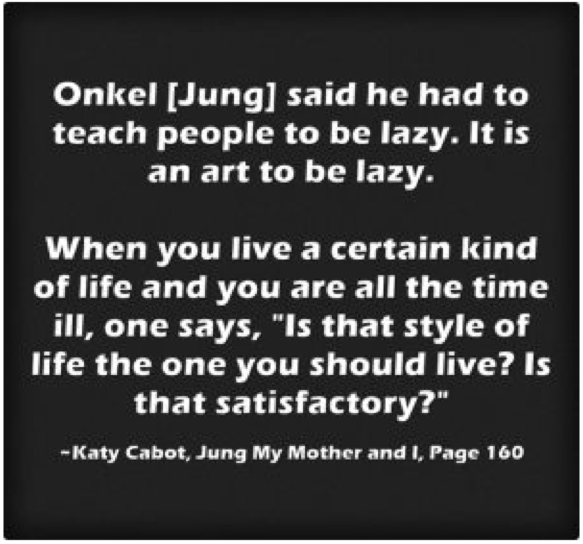
To despise one's self simply shows that one has not yet made friends with one's self.

~Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 155



That Toni imagined Katy depending on anybody indicates how little she understood her analysand.

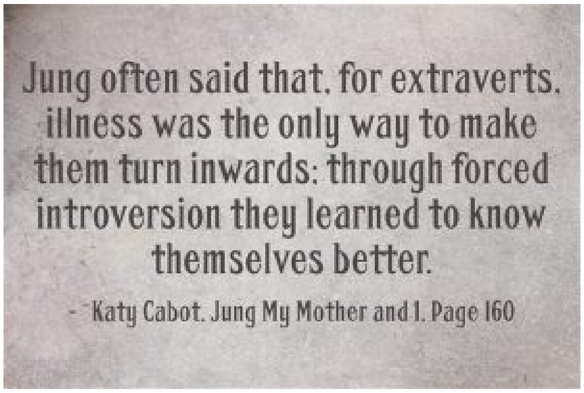
~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 156



Onkel [Jung] said he had to teach people to be lazy. It is an art to be lazy.

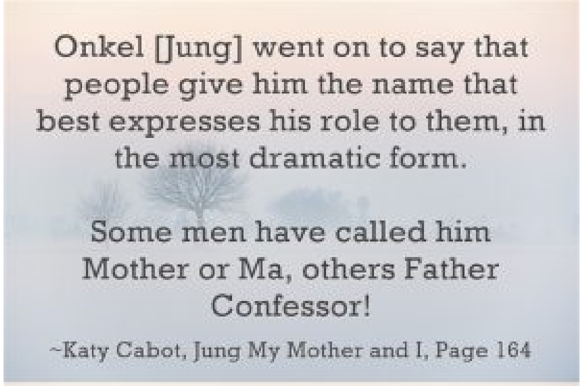
When you live a certain kind of life and you are all the time ill, one says, "Is that style of life the one you should live? Is that satisfactory?"

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 160



Jung often said that, for extraverts, illness was the only way to make them turn inwards: through forced introversion they learned to know themselves better.

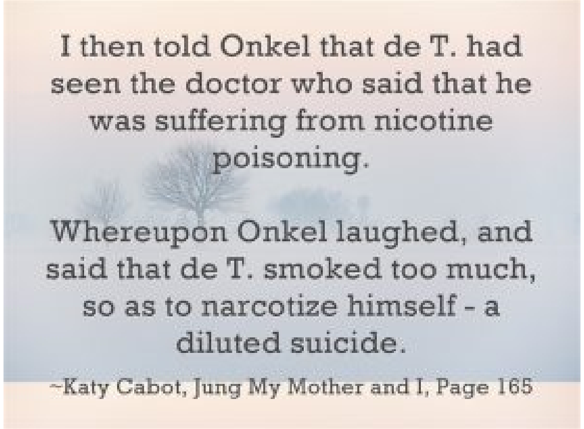
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 160



Onkel [Jung] went on to say that people give him the name that best expresses his role to them, in the most dramatic form.

Some men have called him Mother or Ma, others Father Confessor!

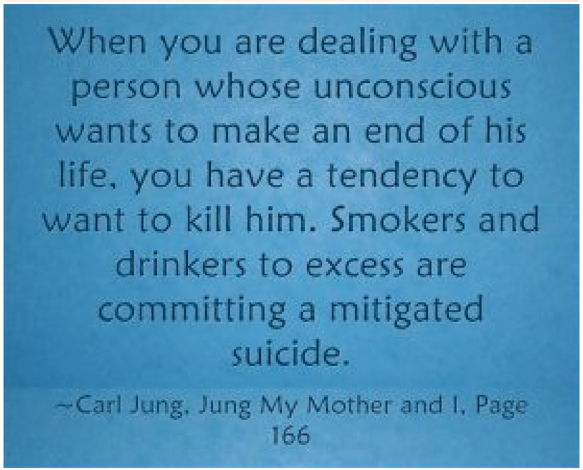
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 164



I then told Onkel that de T. had seen the doctor who said that he was suffering from nicotine poisoning.

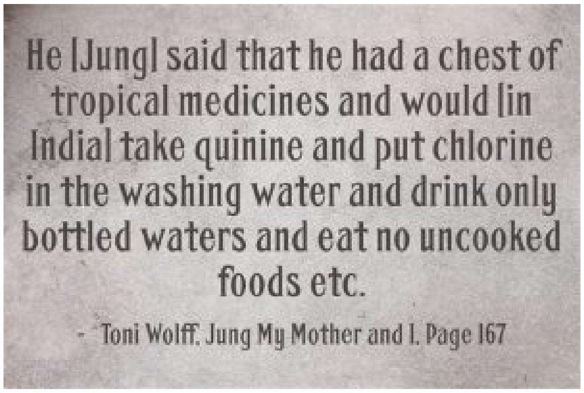
Whereupon Onkel laughed, and said that de T. smoked too much, so as to narcotize himself - a diluted suicide.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 165



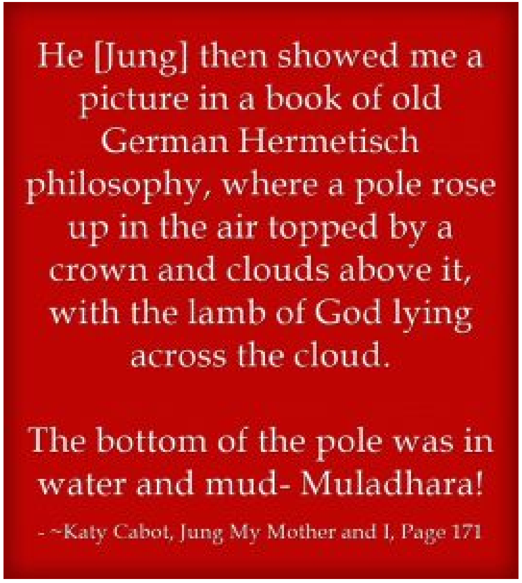
When you are dealing with a person whose unconscious wants to make an end of his life, you have a tendency to want to kill him. Smokers and drinkers to excess are committing a mitigated suicide.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 166



He [Jung] said that he had a chest of tropical medicines and would [in India] take quinine and put chlorine in the washing water and drink only bottled waters and eat no uncooked foods etc.

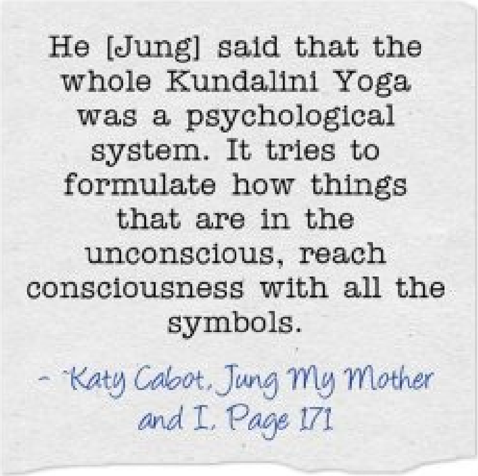
- Toni Wolff, Jung My Mother and I, Page 167



He [Jung] then showed me a picture in a book of old German Hermetisch philosophy, where a pole rose up in the air topped by a crown and clouds above it, with the lamb of God lying across the cloud.

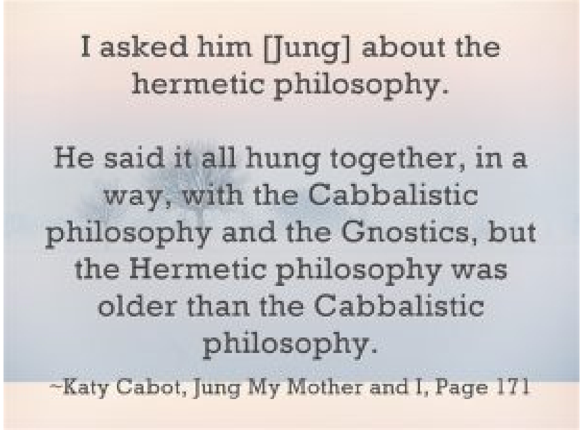
The bottom of the pole was in water and mud- Muladhara!

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 171



He [Jung] said that the whole Kundalini Yoga was a psychological system. It tries to formulate how things that are in the unconscious, reach consciousness with all the symbols.

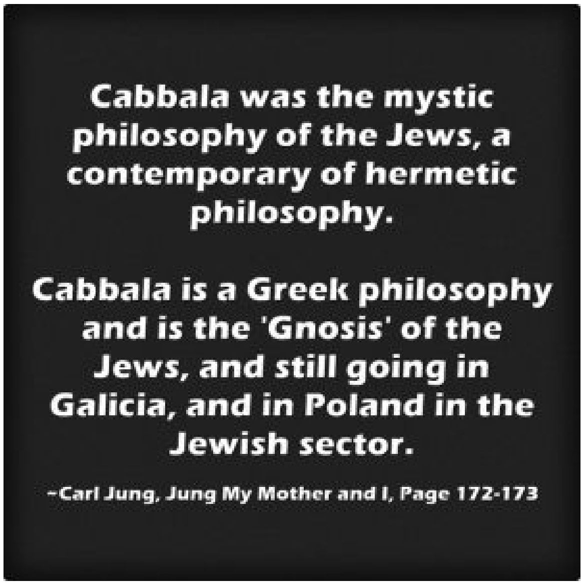
- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 171



I asked him [Jung] about the hermetic philosophy.

He said it all hung together, in a way, with the Cabbalistic philosophy and the Gnostics, but the Hermetic philosophy was older than the Cabbalistic philosophy.

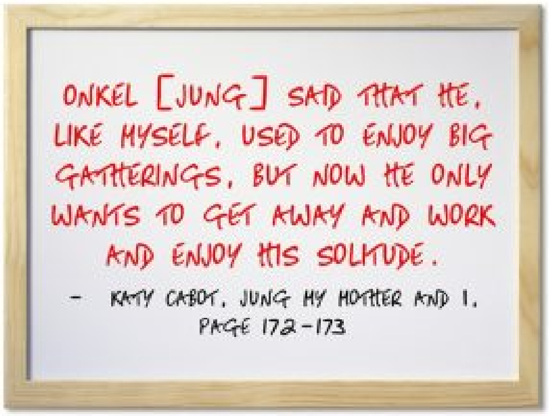
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 171



Cabbala was the mystic philosophy of the Jews, a contemporary of hermetic philosophy.

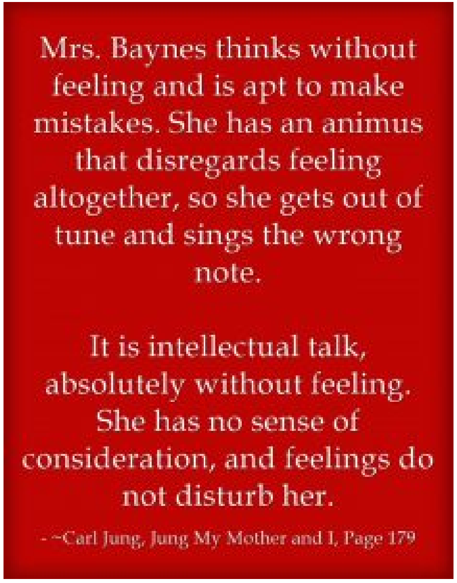
Cabbala is a Greek philosophy and is the 'Gnosis' of the Jews, and still going in Galicia, and in Poland in the Jewish sector.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 172-173



ONKEL [JUNG] SAID THAT HE, LIKE MYSELF, USED TO ENJOY BIG GATHERINGS, BUT NOW HE ONLY WANTS TO GET AWAY AND WORK AND ENJOY HIS SOLITUDE.

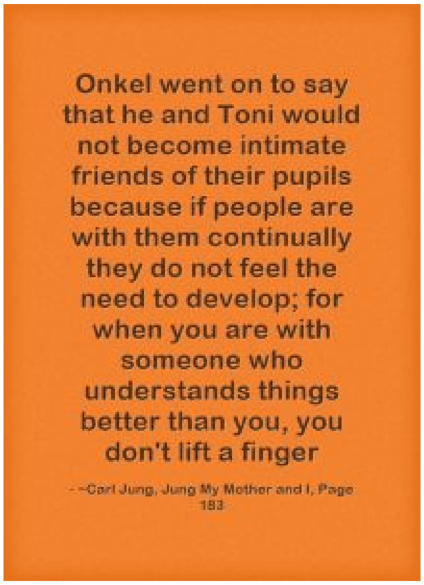
- KATY CABOT, JUNG MY MOTHER AND I, PAGE 172-173



Mrs. Baynes thinks without feeling and is apt to make mistakes. She has an animus that disregards feeling altogether, so she gets out of tune and sings the wrong note.

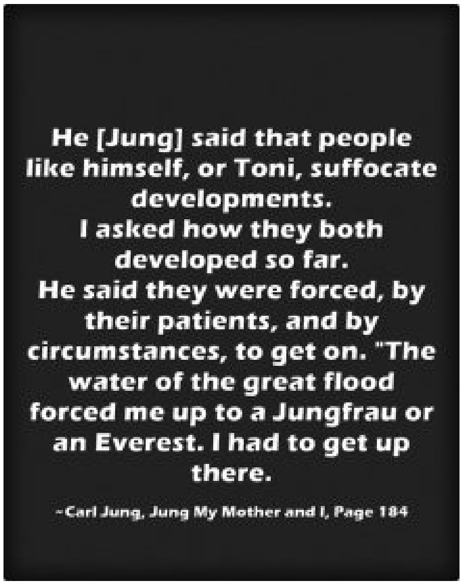
It is intellectual talk, absolutely without feeling. She has no sense of consideration, and feelings do not disturb her.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 179



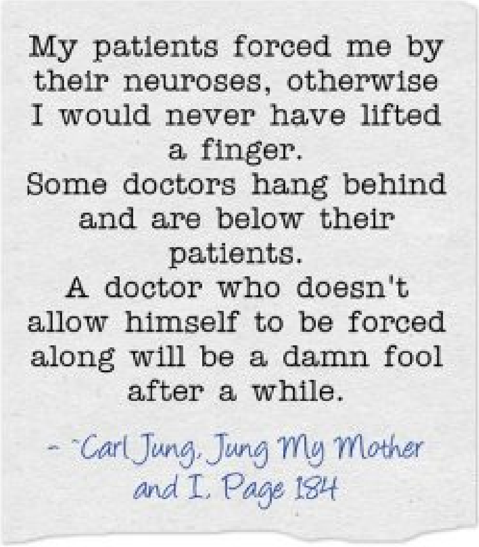
Onkel went on to say that he and Toni would not become intimate friends of their pupils because if people are with them continually they do not feel the need to develop; for when you are with someone who understands things better than you, you don't lift a finger

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 183



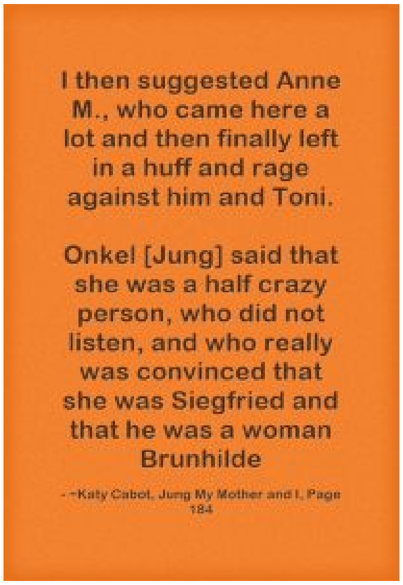
He [Jung] said that people like himself, or Toni, suffocate developments.
I asked how they both developed so far.
He said they were forced, by their patients, and by circumstances, to get on. "The water of the great flood forced me up to a Jungfrau or an Everest. I had to get up there.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184



My patients forced me by their neuroses, otherwise I would never have lifted a finger.
Some doctors hang behind and are below their patients.
A doctor who doesn't allow himself to be forced along will be a damn fool after a while.

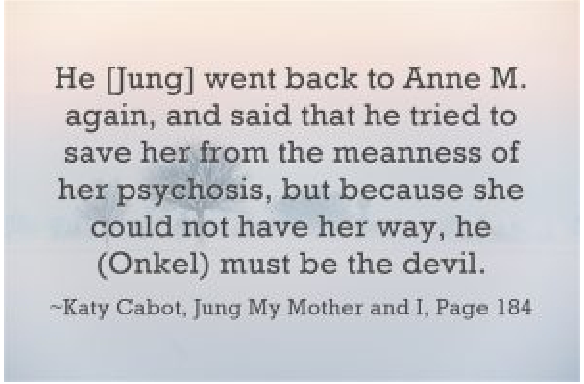
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184



I then suggested Anne M., who came here a lot and then finally left in a huff and rage against him and Toni.

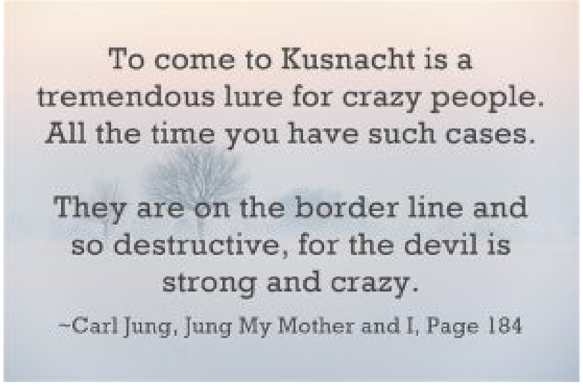
Onkel [Jung] said that she was a half crazy person, who did not listen, and who really was convinced that she was Siegfried and that he was a woman Brunhilde

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184



He [Jung] went back to Anne M. again, and said that he tried to save her from the meanness of her psychosis, but because she could not have her way, he (Onkel) must be the devil.

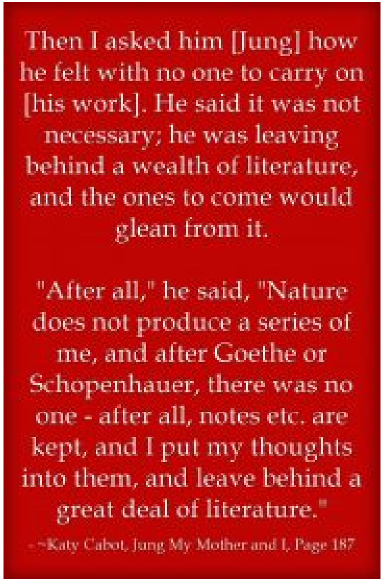
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184



To come to Kusnacht is a tremendous lure for crazy people. All the time you have such cases.

They are on the border line and so destructive, for the devil is strong and crazy.

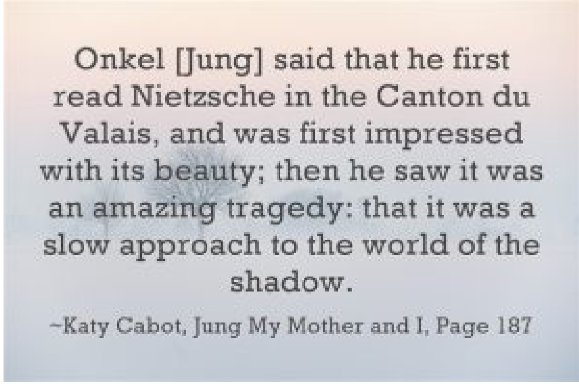
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 184



Then I asked him [Jung] how he felt with no one to carry on [his work]. He said it was not necessary; he was leaving behind a wealth of literature, and the ones to come would glean from it.

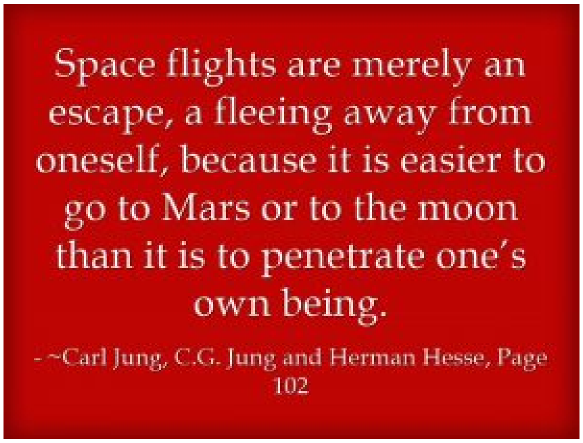
"After all," he said, "Nature does not produce a series of me, and after Goethe or Schopenhauer, there was no one - after all, notes etc. are kept, and I put my thoughts into them, and leave behind a great deal of literature."

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 187



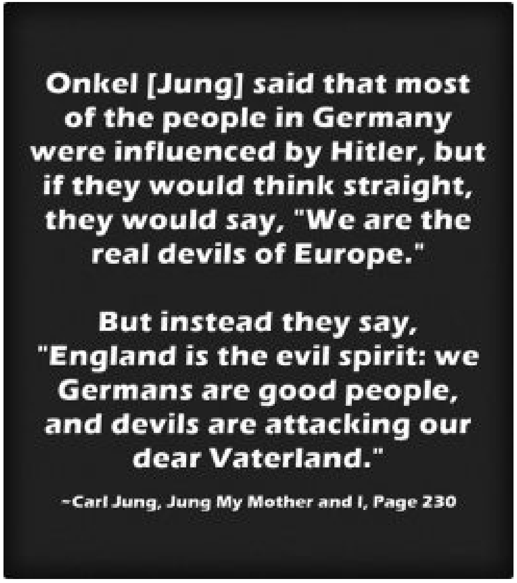
Onkel [Jung] said that he first read Nietzsche in the Canton du Valais, and was first impressed with its beauty; then he saw it was an amazing tragedy: that it was a slow approach to the world of the shadow.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 187



Space flights are merely an escape, a fleeing away from oneself, because it is easier to go to Mars or to the moon than it is to penetrate one's own being.

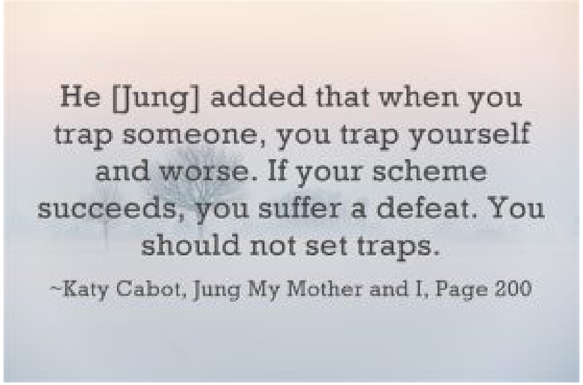
- ~Carl Jung, C.G. Jung and Herman Hesse, Page 102



Onkel [Jung] said that most of the people in Germany were influenced by Hitler, but if they would think straight, they would say, "We are the real devils of Europe."

But instead they say, "England is the evil spirit: we Germans are good people, and devils are attacking our dear Vaterland."

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 230

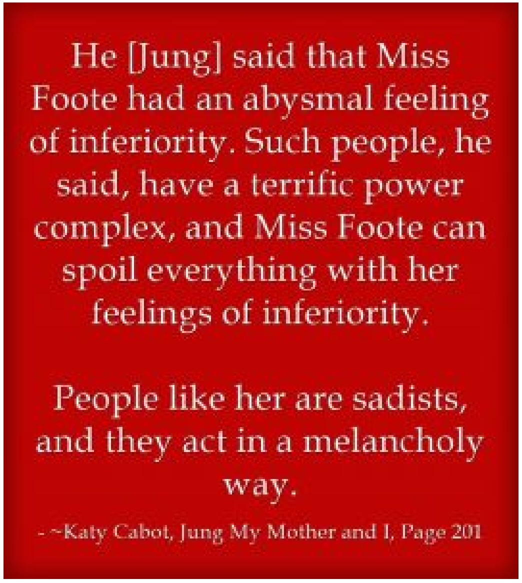


He [Jung] added that when you trap someone, you trap yourself and worse. If your scheme succeeds, you suffer a defeat. You should not set traps.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 200

Onkel [Jung] said, "I never say, 'You must have a resentment,' but instead, I say, 'But it resents, and if you are not conscious of it, it's your handicap for you are too little conscious of your own resentments."'

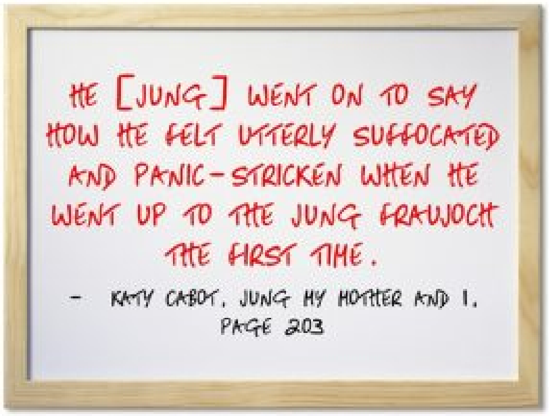
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 201



He [Jung] said that Miss Foote had an abysmal feeling of inferiority. Such people, he said, have a terrific power complex, and Miss Foote can spoil everything with her feelings of inferiority.

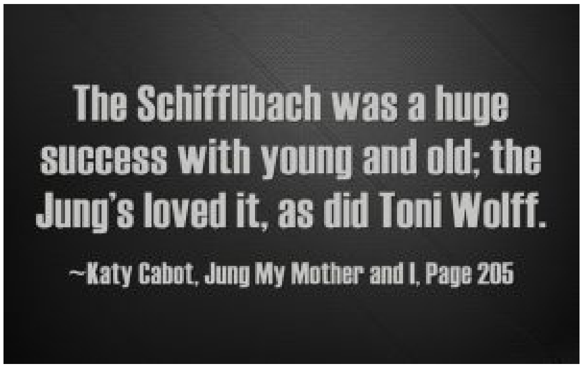
People like her are sadists, and they act in a melancholy way.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 201



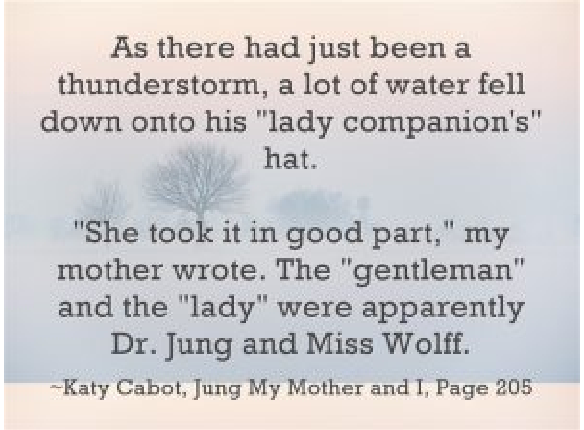
HE [JUNG] WENT ON TO SAY HOW HE FELT UTTERLY SUFFOCATED AND PANIC-STRICKEN WHEN HE WENT UP TO THE JUNG FRAUJOCH THE FIRST TIME.

- KATY CABOT, JUNG MY MOTHER AND I, PAGE 203



The Schifflibach was a huge success with young and old; the Jung's loved it, as did Toni Wolff.

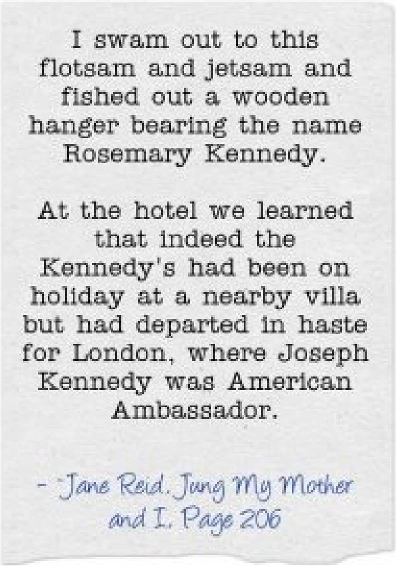
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 205



As there had just been a thunderstorm, a lot of water fell down onto his "lady companion's" hat.

"She took it in good part," my mother wrote. The "gentleman" and the "lady" were apparently Dr. Jung and Miss Wolff.

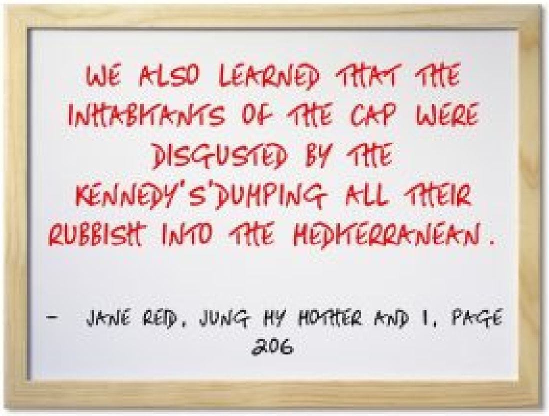
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 205



I swam out to this flotsam and jetsam and fished out a wooden hanger bearing the name Rosemary Kennedy.

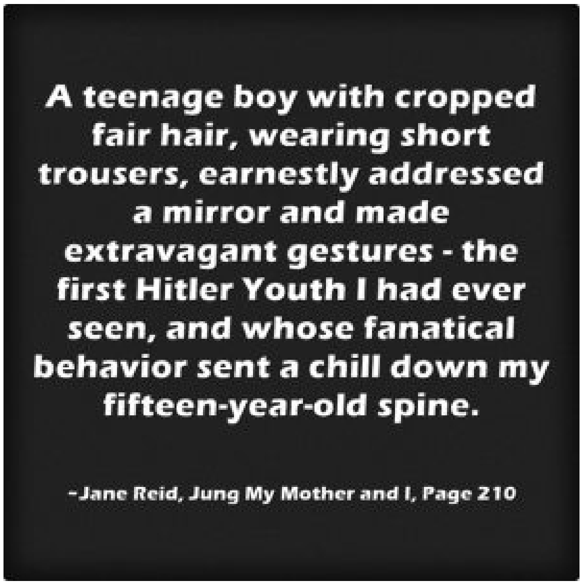
At the hotel we learned that indeed the Kennedy's had been on holiday at a nearby villa but had departed in haste for London, where Joseph Kennedy was American Ambassador.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 206



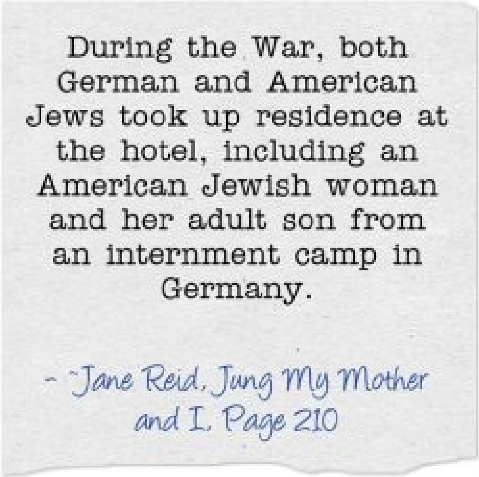
WE ALSO LEARNED THAT THE INHABITANTS OF THE CAP WERE DISGUSTED BY THE KENNEDY'S DUMPING ALL THEIR RUBBISH INTO THE MEDITERRANEAN.

- JANE REID, JUNG MY MOTHER AND I, PAGE 206



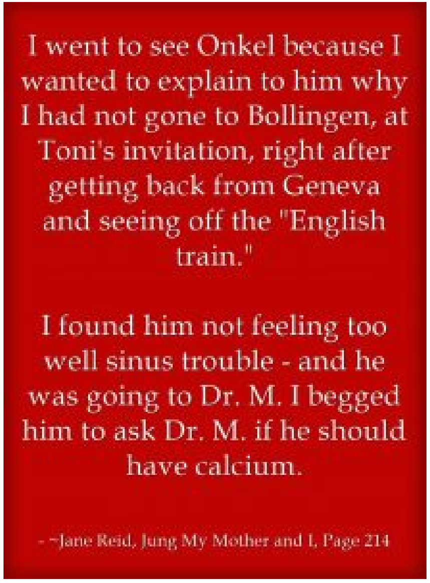
A teenage boy with cropped fair hair, wearing short trousers, earnestly addressed a mirror and made extravagant gestures - the first Hitler Youth I had ever seen, and whose fanatical behavior sent a chill down my fifteen-year-old spine.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 210



During the War, both German and American Jews took up residence at the hotel, including an American Jewish woman and her adult son from an internment camp in Germany.

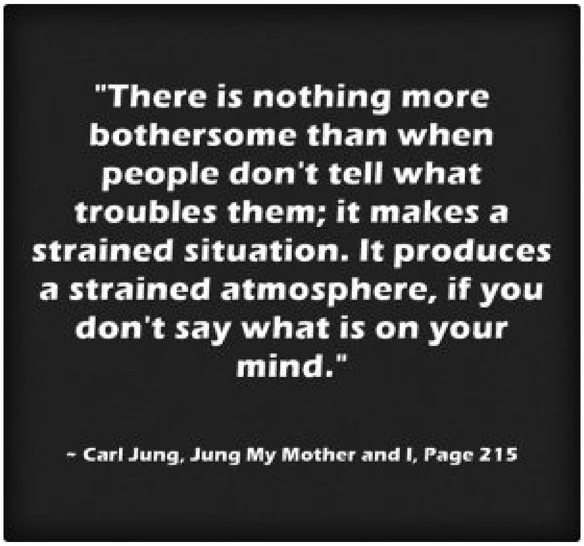
- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 210



I went to see Onkel because I wanted to explain to him why I had not gone to Bollingen, at Toni's invitation, right after getting back from Geneva and seeing off the "English train."

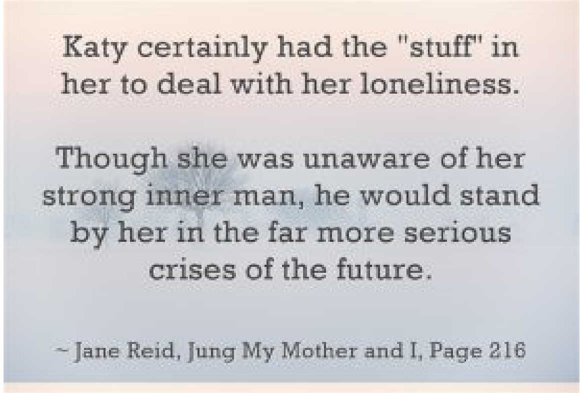
I found him not feeling too well sinus trouble - and he was going to Dr. M. I begged him to ask Dr. M. if he should have calcium.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 214



"There is nothing more bothersome than when people don't tell what troubles them; it makes a strained situation. It produces a strained atmosphere, if you don't say what is on your mind."

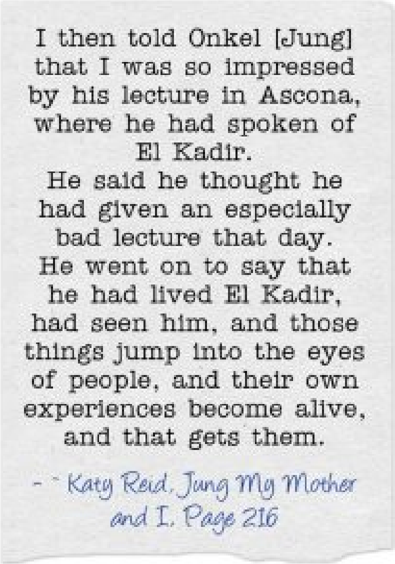
~ Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 215



Katy certainly had the "stuff" in her to deal with her loneliness.

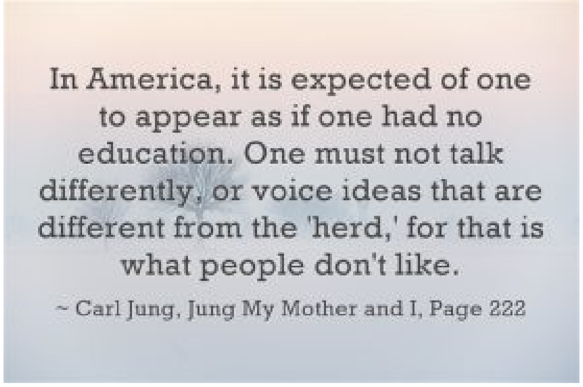
Though she was unaware of her strong inner man, he would stand by her in the far more serious crises of the future.

~ Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 216



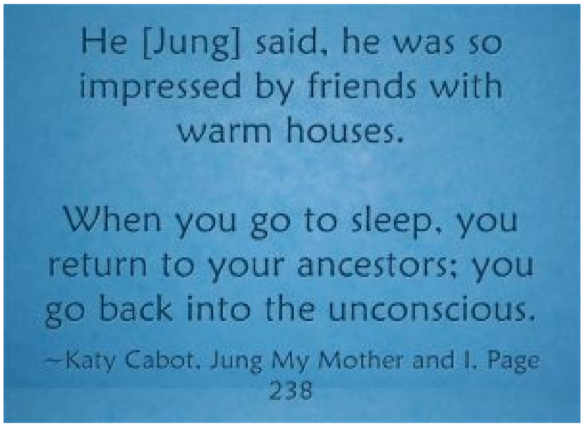
I then told Onkel [Jung] that I was so impressed by his lecture in Ascona, where he had spoken of El Kadir.
He said he thought he had given an especially bad lecture that day.
He went on to say that he had lived El Kadir, had seen him, and those things jump into the eyes of people, and their own experiences become alive, and that gets them.

- ~ Katy Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 216



In America, it is expected of one to appear as if one had no education. One must not talk differently, or voice ideas that are different from the 'herd,' for that is what people don't like.

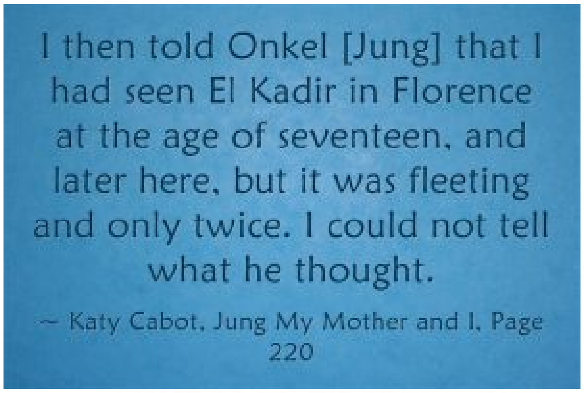
~ Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 222



He [Jung] said, he was so impressed by friends with warm houses.

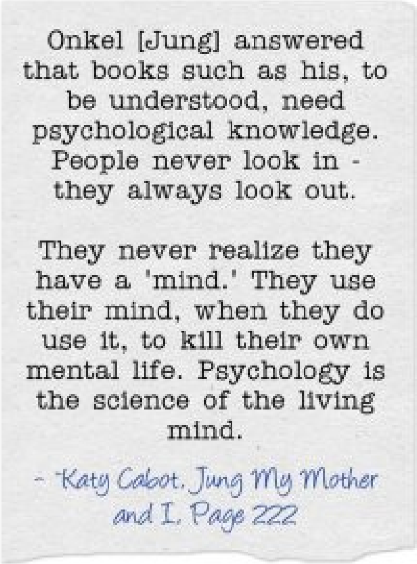
When you go to sleep, you return to your ancestors; you go back into the unconscious.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 238



I then told Onkel [Jung] that I had seen El Kadir in Florence at the age of seventeen, and later here, but it was fleeting and only twice. I could not tell what he thought.

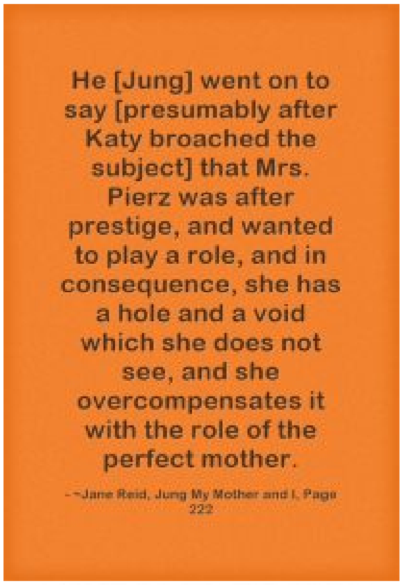
~ Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 220



Onkel [Jung] answered that books such as his, to be understood, need psychological knowledge. People never look in - they always look out.

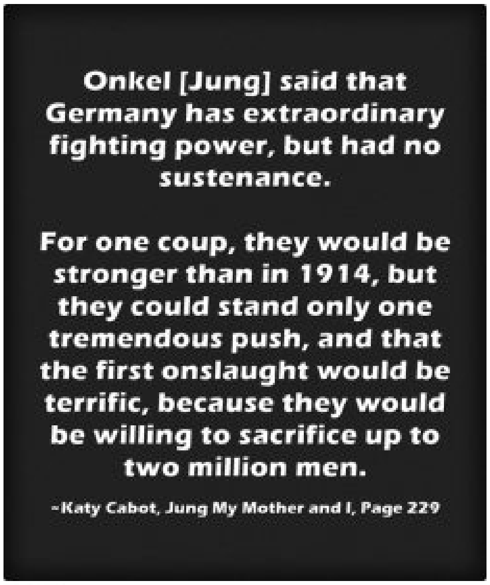
They never realize they have a 'mind.' They use their mind, when they do use it, to kill their own mental life. Psychology is the science of the living mind.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 222



He [Jung] went on to say [presumably after Katy broached the subject] that Mrs. Pierz was after prestige, and wanted to play a role, and in consequence, she has a hole and a void which she does not see, and she overcompensates it with the role of the perfect mother.

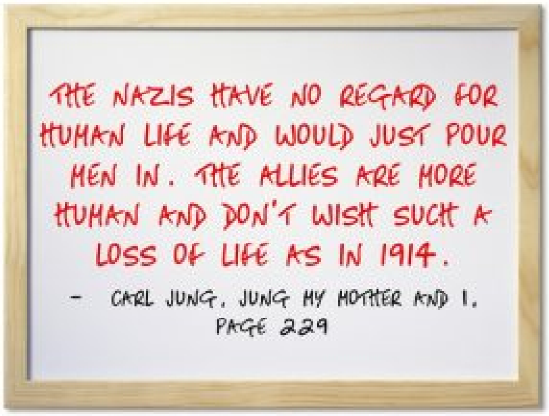
- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 222



Onkel [Jung] said that Germany has extraordinary fighting power, but had no sustenance.

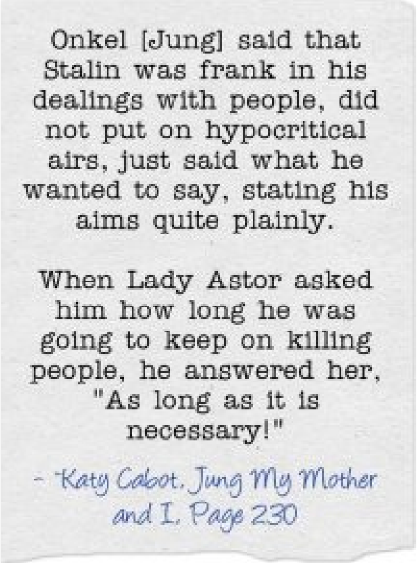
For one coup, they would be stronger than in 1914, but they could stand only one tremendous push, and that the first onslaught would be terrific, because they would be willing to sacrifice up to two million men.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 229



THE NAZIS HAVE NO REGARD FOR HUMAN LIFE AND WOULD JUST POUR MEN IN. THE ALLIES ARE MORE HUMAN AND DON'T WISH SUCH A LOSS OF LIFE AS IN 1914.

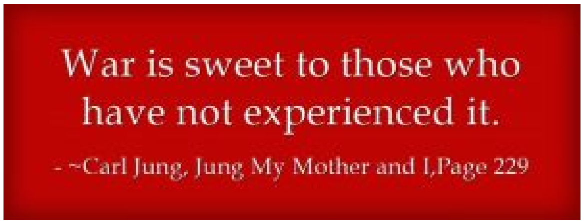
- CARL JUNG, JUNG MY MOTHER AND I, PAGE 229



Onkel [Jung] said that Stalin was frank in his dealings with people, did not put on hypocritical airs, just said what he wanted to say, stating his aims quite plainly.

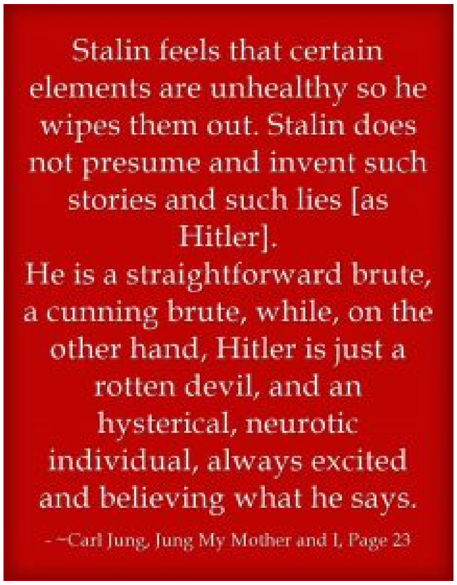
When Lady Astor asked him how long he was going to keep on killing people, he answered her, "As long as it is necessary!"

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 230



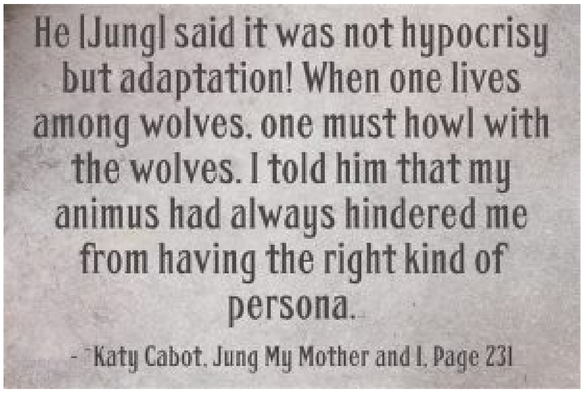
War is sweet to those who have not experienced it.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I,Page 229



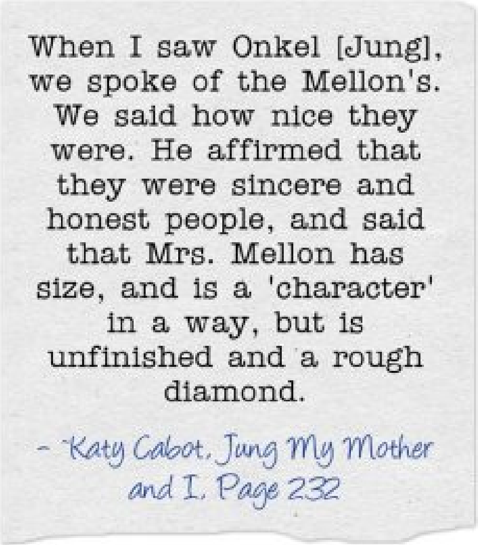
Stalin feels that certain elements are unhealthy so he wipes them out. Stalin does not presume and invent such stories and such lies [as Hitler].
He is a straightforward brute, a cunning brute, while, on the other hand, Hitler is just a rotten devil, and an hysterical, neurotic individual, always excited and believing what he says.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 23



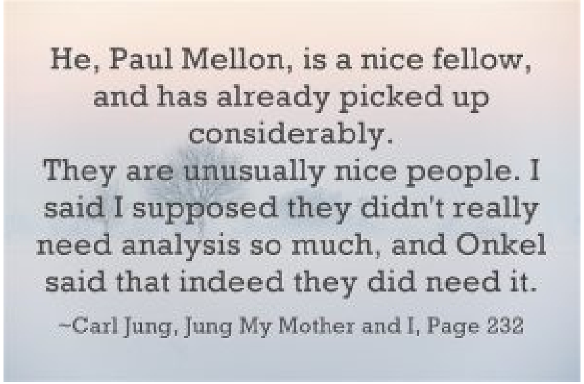
He [Jung] said it was not hypocrisy but adaptation! When one lives among wolves, one must howl with the wolves. I told him that my animus had always hindered me from having the right kind of persona.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 231



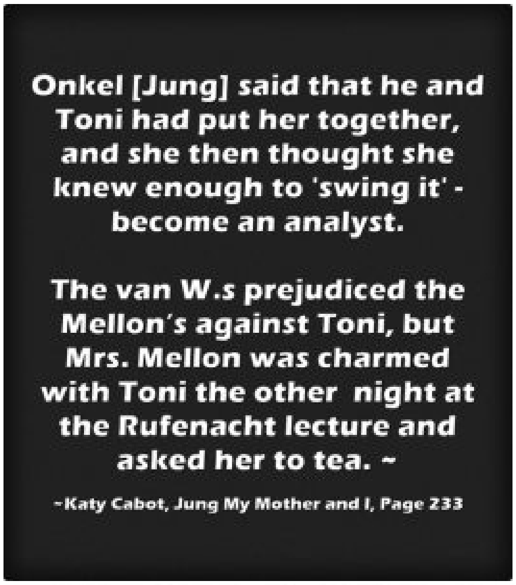
When I saw Onkel [Jung], we spoke of the Mellon's. We said how nice they were. He affirmed that they were sincere and honest people, and said that Mrs. Mellon has size, and is a 'character' in a way, but is unfinished and a rough diamond.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 232



He, Paul Mellon, is a nice fellow, and has already picked up considerably.
They are unusually nice people. I said I supposed they didn't really need analysis so much, and Onkel said that indeed they did need it.

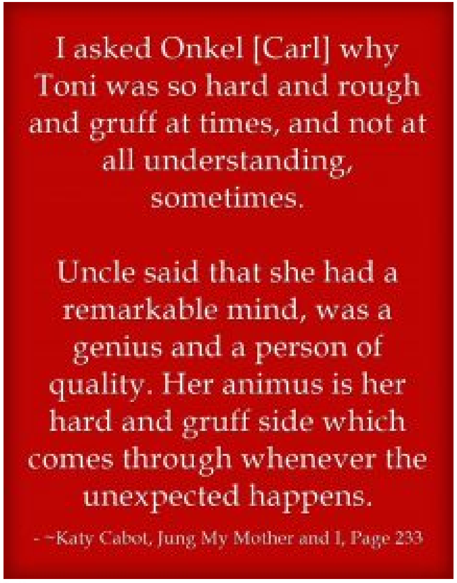
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 232



Onkel [Jung] said that he and Toni had put her together, and she then thought she knew enough to 'swing it' - become an analyst.

The van W.s prejudiced the Mellon's against Toni, but Mrs. Mellon was charmed with Toni the other night at the Rufenacht lecture and asked her to tea. ~

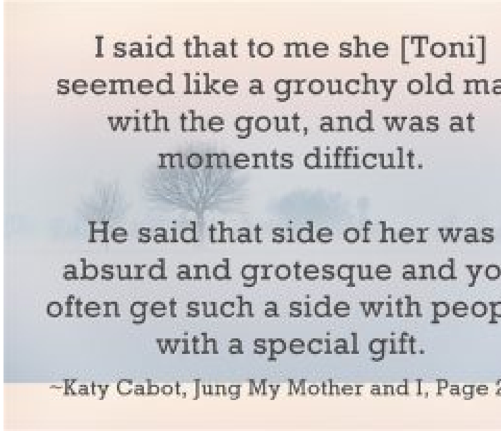
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 233



I asked Onkel [Carl] why Toni was so hard and rough and gruff at times, and not at all understanding, sometimes.

Uncle said that she had a remarkable mind, was a genius and a person of quality. Her animus is her hard and gruff side which comes through whenever the unexpected happens.

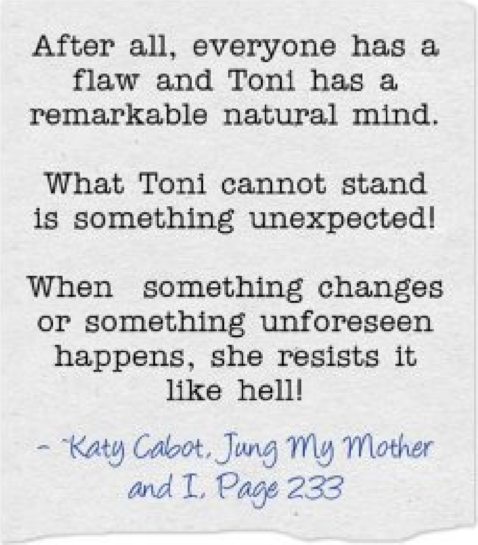
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 233



I said that to me she [Toni] seemed like a grouchy old ma with the gout, and was at moments difficult.

He said that side of her was absurd and grotesque and yo often get such a side with peop with a special gift.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 2

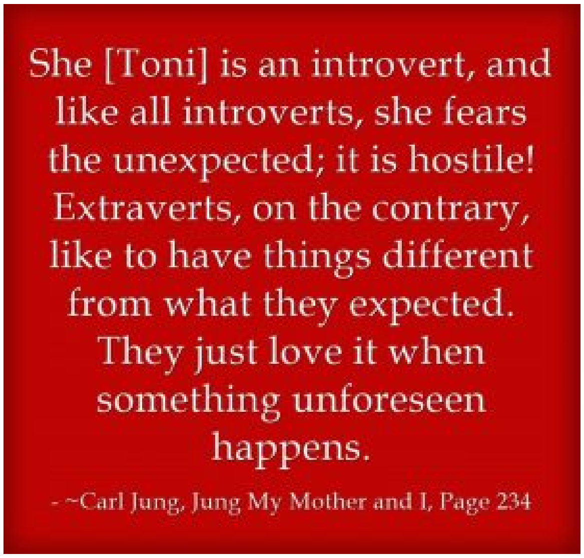


After all, everyone has a flaw and Toni has a remarkable natural mind.

What Toni cannot stand is something unexpected!

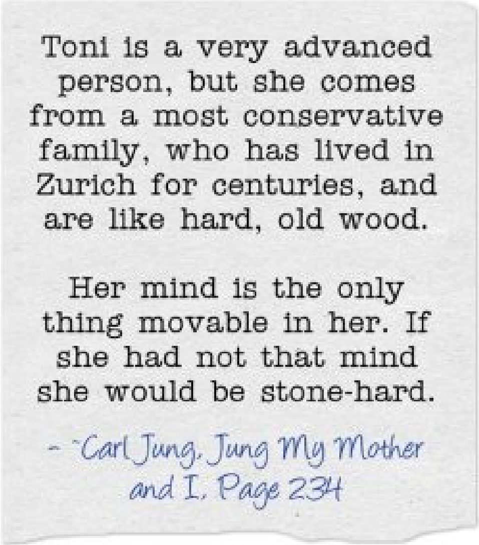
When something changes or something unforeseen happens, she resists it like hell!

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 233



She [Toni] is an introvert, and like all introverts, she fears the unexpected; it is hostile! Extraverts, on the contrary, like to have things different from what they expected. They just love it when something unforeseen happens.

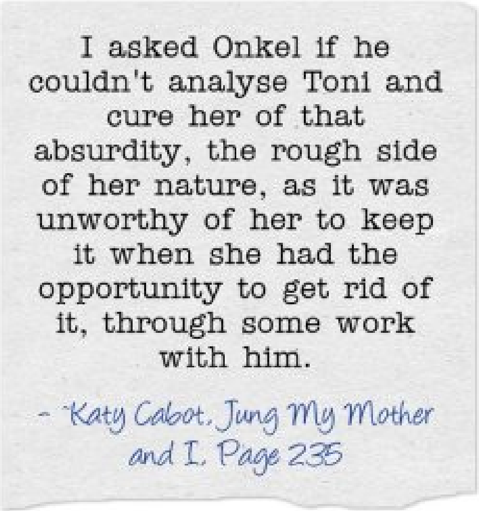
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 234



Toni is a very advanced person, but she comes from a most conservative family, who has lived in Zurich for centuries, and are like hard, old wood.

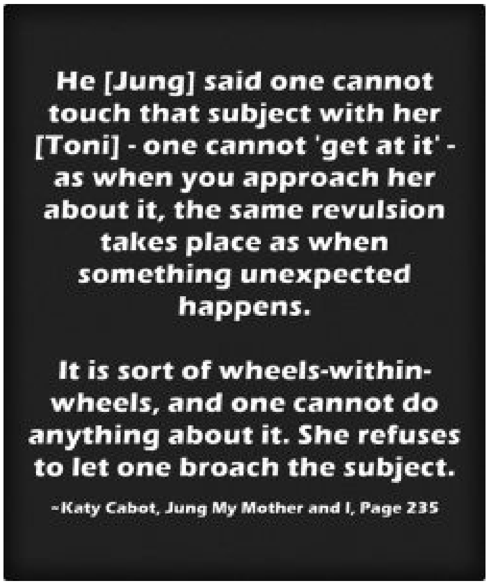
Her mind is the only thing movable in her. If she had not that mind she would be stone-hard.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 234



I asked Onkel if he couldn't analyse Toni and cure her of that absurdity, the rough side of her nature, as it was unworthy of her to keep it when she had the opportunity to get rid of it, through some work with him.

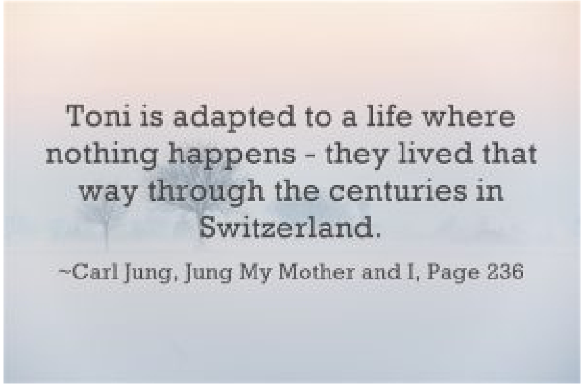
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 235



He [Jung] said one cannot touch that subject with her [Toni] - one cannot 'get at it' - as when you approach her about it, the same revulsion takes place as when something unexpected happens.

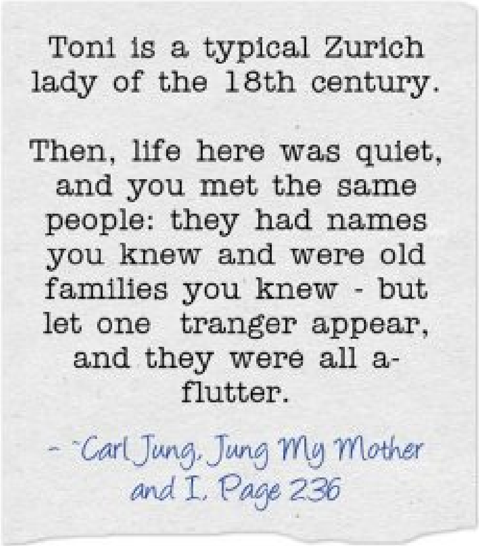
It is sort of wheels-within-wheels, and one cannot do anything about it. She refuses to let one broach the subject.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 235



Toni is adapted to a life where nothing happens - they lived that way through the centuries in Switzerland.

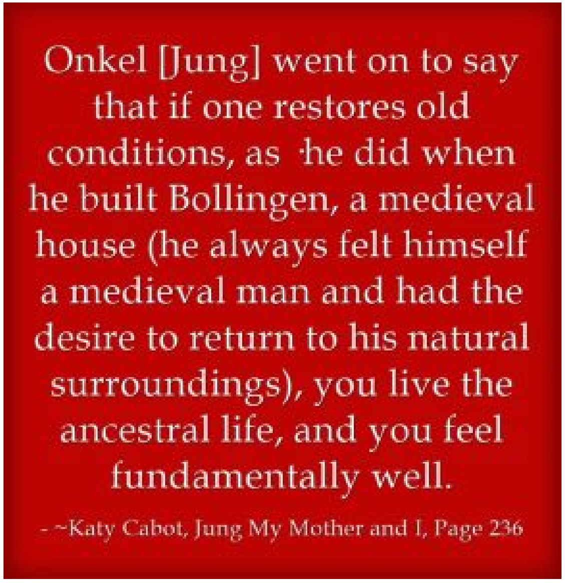
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 236



Toni is a typical Zurich lady of the 18th century.

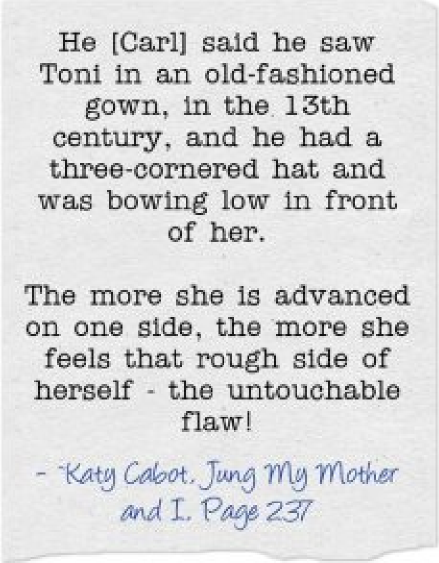
Then, life here was quiet, and you met the same people: they had names you knew and were old families you knew - but let one tranger appear, and they were all a-flutter.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 236



Onkel [Jung] went on to say that if one restores old conditions, as he did when he built Bollingen, a medieval house (he always felt himself a medieval man and had the desire to return to his natural surroundings), you live the ancestral life, and you feel fundamentally well.

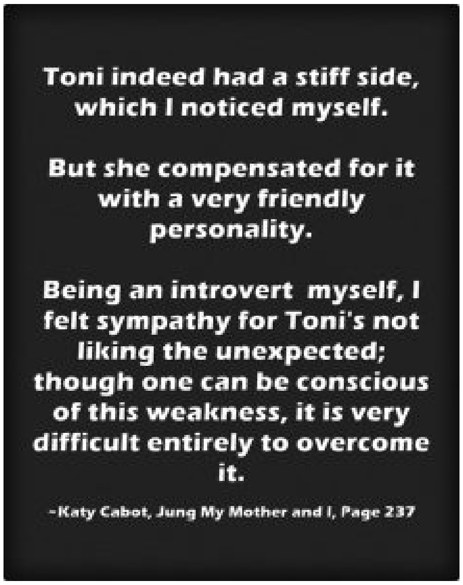
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 236



He [Carl] said he saw Toni in an old-fashioned gown, in the 13th century, and he had a three-cornered hat and was bowing low in front of her.

The more she is advanced on one side, the more she feels that rough side of herself - the untouchable flaw!

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 237

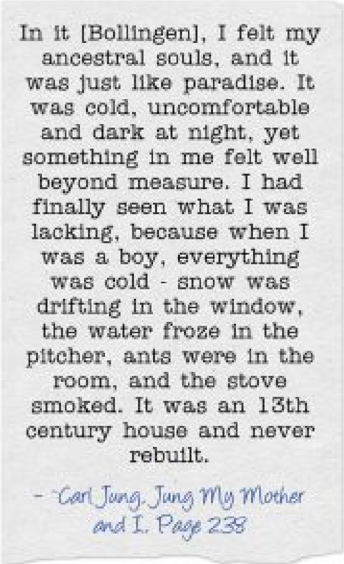


Toni indeed had a stiff side, which I noticed myself.

But she compensated for it with a very friendly personality.

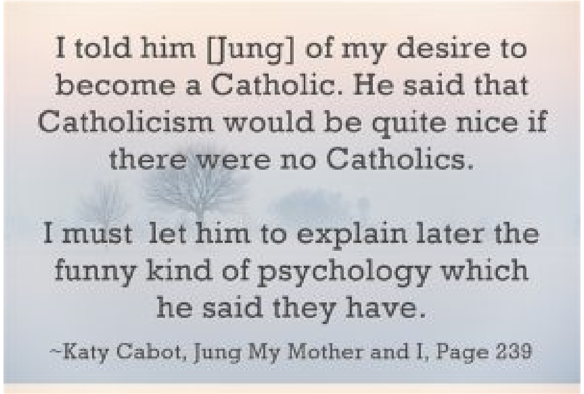
Being an introvert myself, I felt sympathy for Toni's not liking the unexpected; though one can be conscious of this weakness, it is very difficult entirely to overcome it.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 237



In it [Bollingen], I felt my ancestral souls, and it was just like paradise. It was cold, uncomfortable and dark at night, yet something in me felt well beyond measure. I had finally seen what I was lacking, because when I was a boy, everything was cold - snow was drifting in the window, the water froze in the pitcher, ants were in the room, and the stove smoked. It was an 13th century house and never rebuilt.

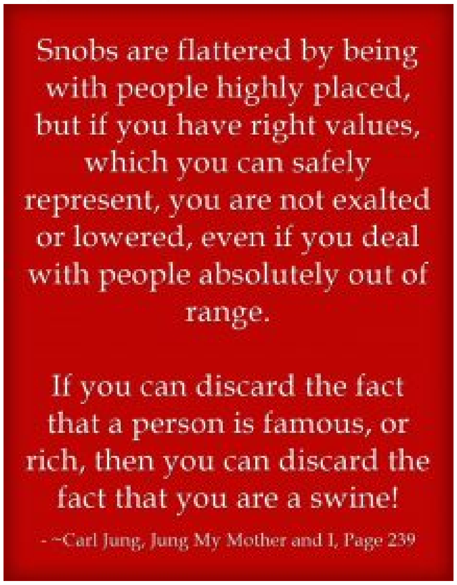
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 238



I told him [Jung] of my desire to become a Catholic. He said that Catholicism would be quite nice if there were no Catholics.

I must let him to explain later the funny kind of psychology which he said they have.

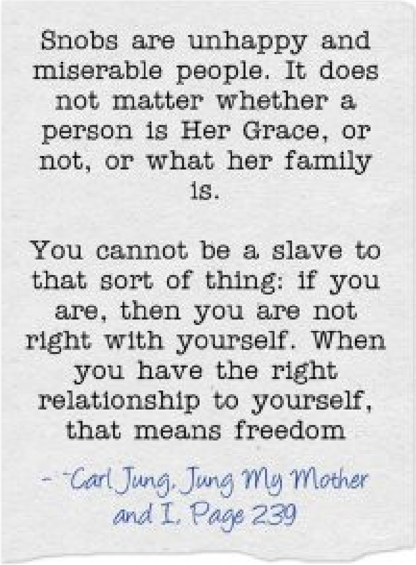
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 239



Snobs are flattered by being with people highly placed, but if you have right values, which you can safely represent, you are not exalted or lowered, even if you deal with people absolutely out of range.

If you can discard the fact that a person is famous, or rich, then you can discard the fact that you are a swine!

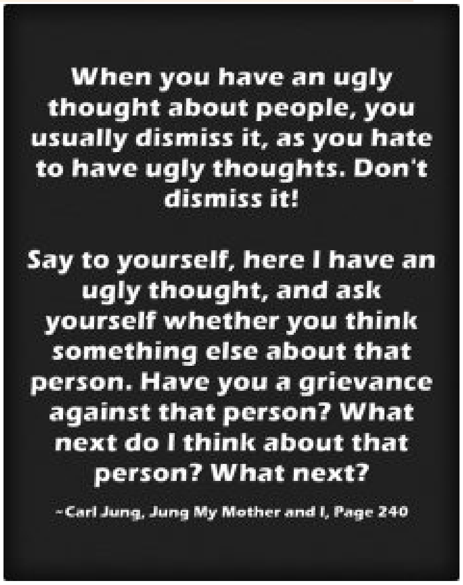
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 239



Snobs are unhappy and miserable people. It does not matter whether a person is Her Grace, or not, or what her family is.

You cannot be a slave to that sort of thing: if you are, then you are not right with yourself. When you have the right relationship to yourself, that means freedom

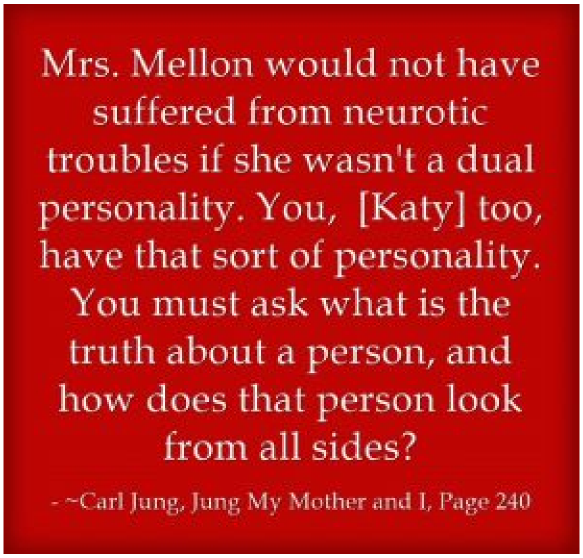
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 239



When you have an ugly thought about people, you usually dismiss it, as you hate to have ugly thoughts. Don't dismiss it!

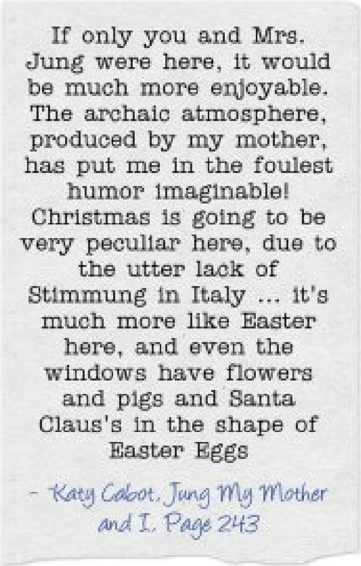
Say to yourself, here I have an ugly thought, and ask yourself whether you think something else about that person. Have you a grievance against that person? What next do I think about that person? What next?

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 240



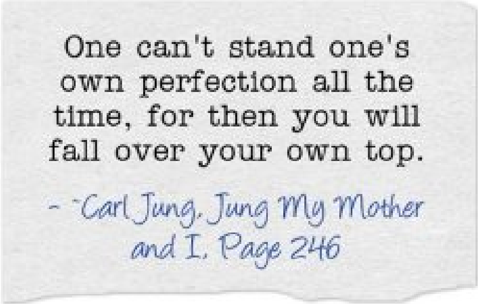
Mrs. Mellon would not have suffered from neurotic troubles if she wasn't a dual personality. You, [Katy] too, have that sort of personality. You must ask what is the truth about a person, and how does that person look from all sides?

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 240



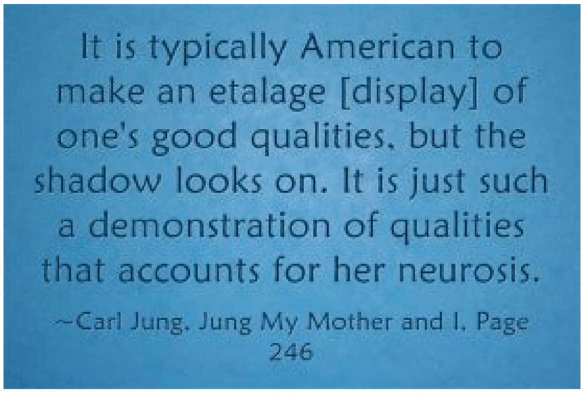
If only you and Mrs. Jung were here, it would be much more enjoyable. The archaic atmosphere, produced by my mother, has put me in the foulest humor imaginable! Christmas is going to be very peculiar here, due to the utter lack of Stimmung in Italy ... it's much more like Easter here, and even the windows have flowers and pigs and Santa Claus's in the shape of Easter Eggs

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 243



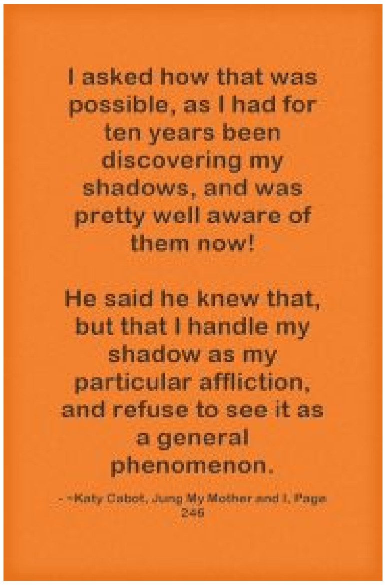
One can't stand one's own perfection all the time, for then you will fall over your own top.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 246



It is typically American to make an etalage [display] of one's good qualities, but the shadow looks on. It is just such a demonstration of qualities that accounts for her neurosis.

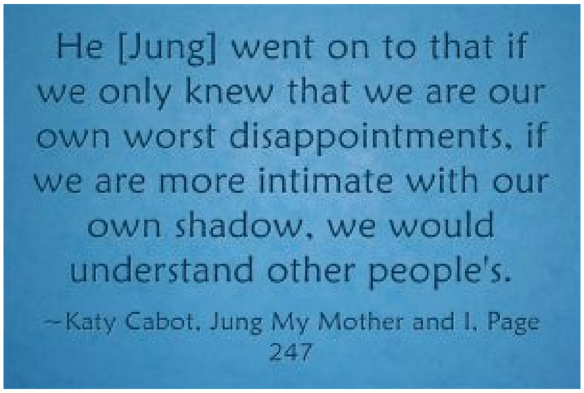
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 246



I asked how that was possible, as I had for ten years been discovering my shadows, and was pretty well aware of them now!

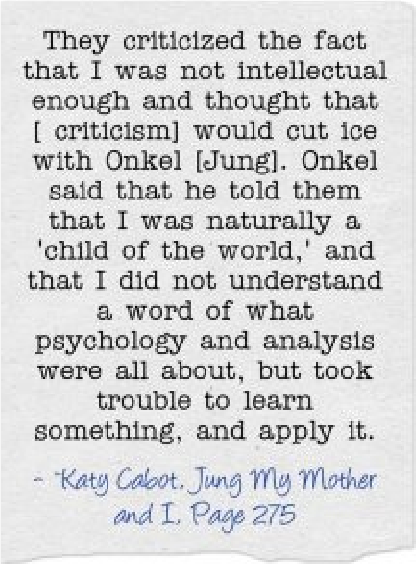
He said he knew that, but that I handle my shadow as my particular affliction, and refuse to see it as a general phenomenon.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 246



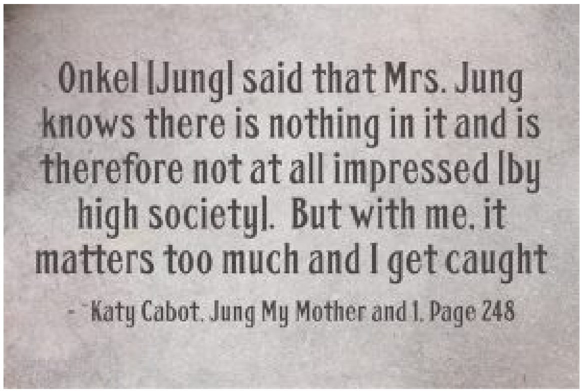
He [Jung] went on to that if we only knew that we are our own worst disappointments, if we are more intimate with our own shadow, we would understand other people's.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 247



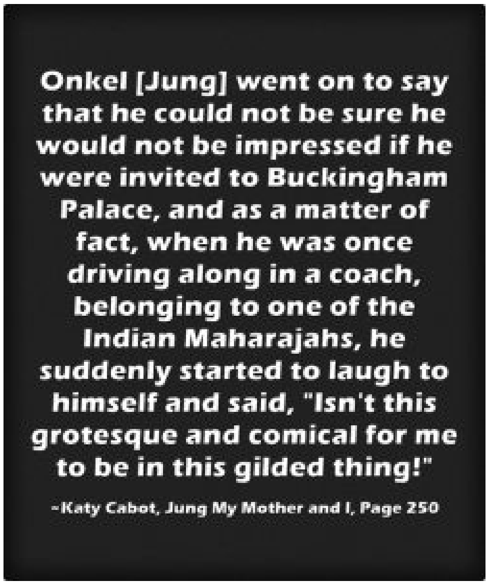
They criticized the fact that I was not intellectual enough and thought that [criticism] would cut ice with Onkel [Jung]. Onkel said that he told them that I was naturally a 'child of the world,' and that I did not understand a word of what psychology and analysis were all about, but took trouble to learn something, and apply it.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 275



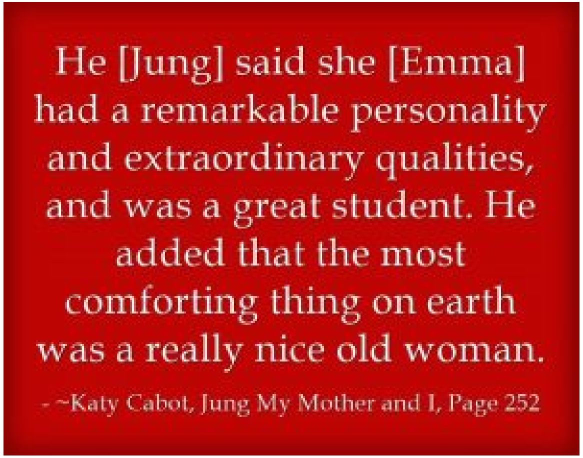
Onkel [Jung] said that Mrs. Jung knows there is nothing in it and is therefore not at all impressed [by high society]. But with me, it matters too much and I get caught

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 248



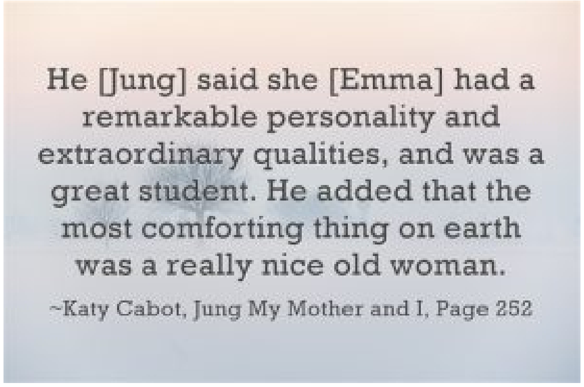
Onkel [Jung] went on to say that he could not be sure he would not be impressed if he were invited to Buckingham Palace, and as a matter of fact, when he was once driving along in a coach, belonging to one of the Indian Maharajahs, he suddenly started to laugh to himself and said, "Isn't this grotesque and comical for me to be in this gilded thing!"

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 250



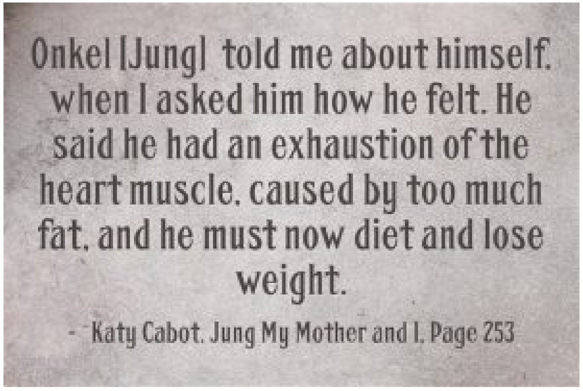
He [Jung] said she [Emma] had a remarkable personality and extraordinary qualities, and was a great student. He added that the most comforting thing on earth was a really nice old woman.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 252



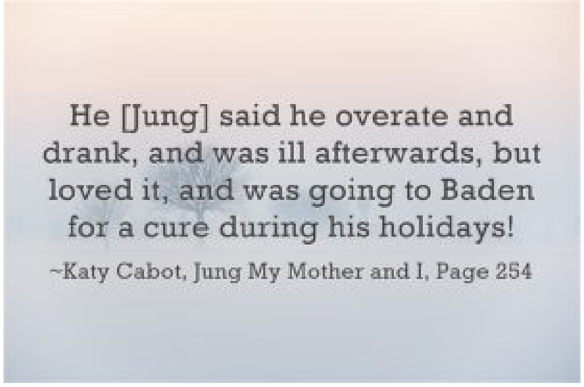
He [Jung] said she [Emma] had a remarkable personality and extraordinary qualities, and was a great student. He added that the most comforting thing on earth was a really nice old woman.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 252



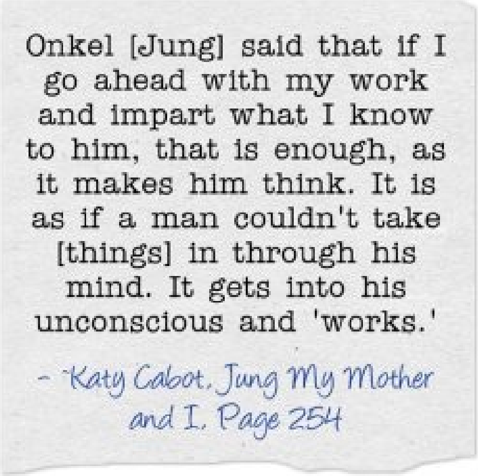
Onkel [Jung] told me about himself. when I asked him how he felt. He said he had an exhaustion of the heart muscle, caused by too much fat, and he must now diet and lose weight.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 253



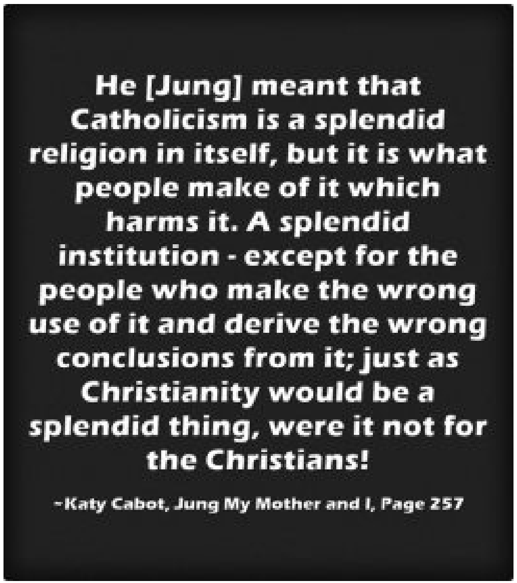
He [Jung] said he overate and drank, and was ill afterwards, but loved it, and was going to Baden for a cure during his holidays!

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 254



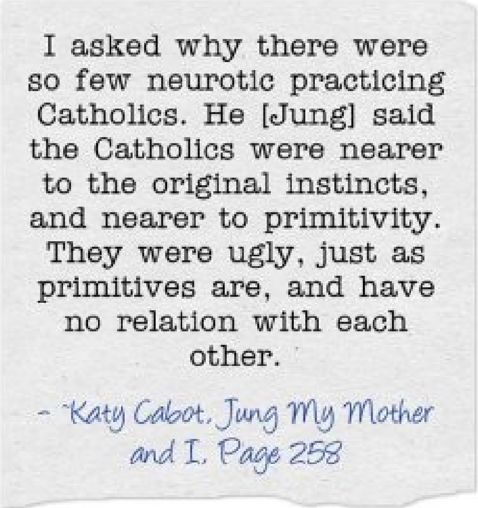
Onkel [Jung] said that if I go ahead with my work and impart what I know to him, that is enough, as it makes him think. It is as if a man couldn't take [things] in through his mind. It gets into his unconscious and 'works.'

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 254



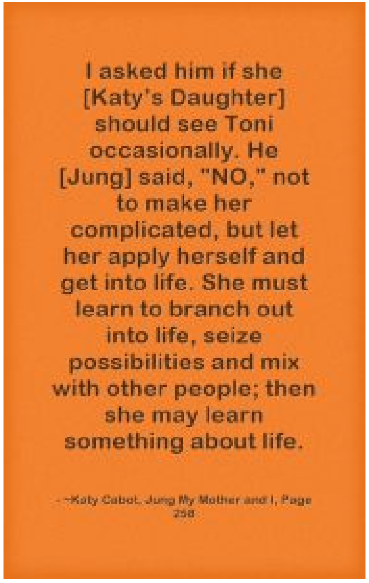
He [Jung] meant that Catholicism is a splendid religion in itself, but it is what people make of it which harms it. A splendid institution - except for the people who make the wrong use of it and derive the wrong conclusions from it; just as Christianity would be a splendid thing, were it not for the Christians!

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 257



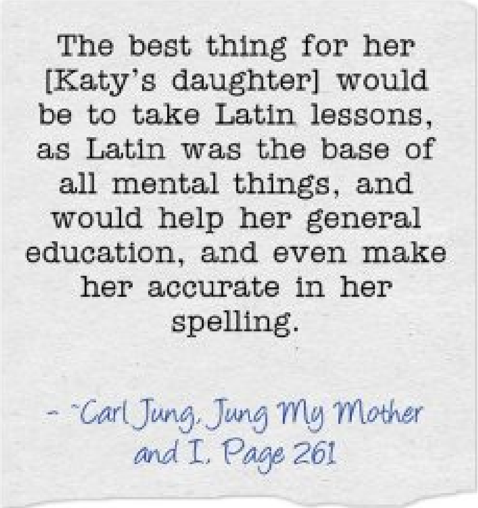
I asked why there were so few neurotic practicing Catholics. He [Jung] said the Catholics were nearer to the original instincts, and nearer to primitivity. They were ugly, just as primitives are, and have no relation with each other.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 258



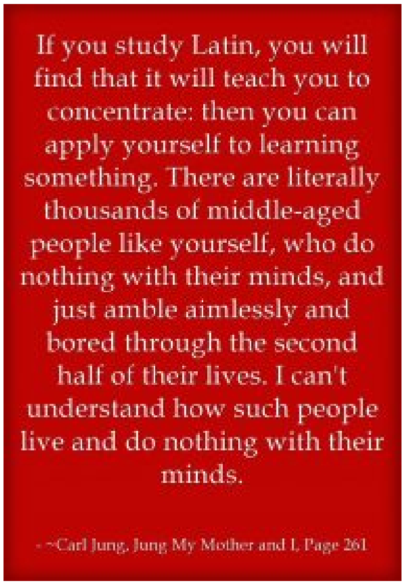
I asked him if she [Katy's Daughter] should see Toni occasionally. He [Jung] said, "NO," not to make her complicated, but let her apply herself and get into life. She must learn to branch out into life, seize possibilities and mix with other people; then she may learn something about life.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 258



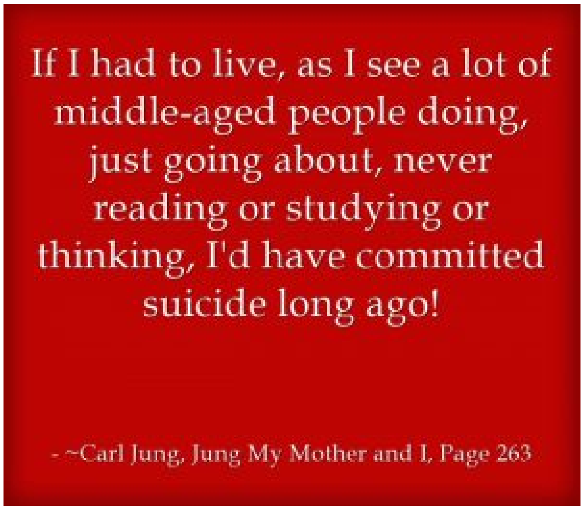
The best thing for her [Katy's daughter] would be to take Latin lessons, as Latin was the base of all mental things, and would help her general education, and even make her accurate in her spelling.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 261



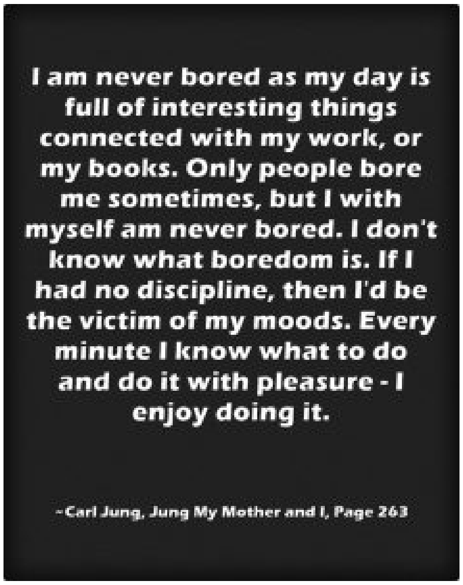
If you study Latin, you will find that it will teach you to concentrate: then you can apply yourself to learning something. There are literally thousands of middle-aged people like yourself, who do nothing with their minds, and just amble aimlessly and bored through the second half of their lives. I can't understand how such people live and do nothing with their minds.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 261



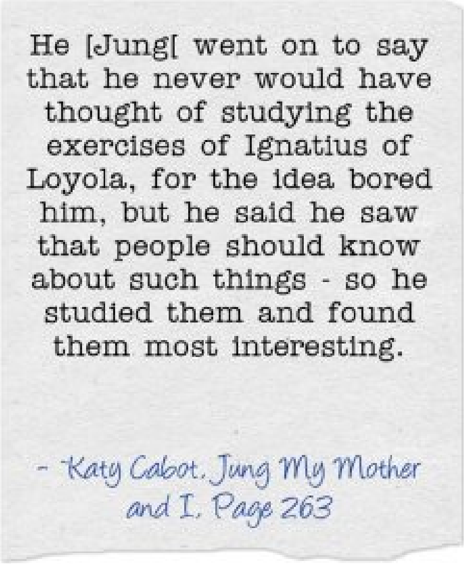
If I had to live, as I see a lot of middle-aged people doing, just going about, never reading or studying or thinking, I'd have committed suicide long ago!

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 263



I am never bored as my day is full of interesting things connected with my work, or my books. Only people bore me sometimes, but I with myself am never bored. I don't know what boredom is. If I had no discipline, then I'd be the victim of my moods. Every minute I know what to do and do it with pleasure - I enjoy doing it.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 263



He [Jung[went on to say that he never would have thought of studying the exercises of Ignatius of Loyola, for the idea bored him, but he said he saw that people should know about such things - so he studied them and found them most interesting.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 263

He [Jung] said, "These Exe were a means to explain t public, so I studied them f people. You can use yo knowledge for such a pur and then it makes sense, be you apply it."

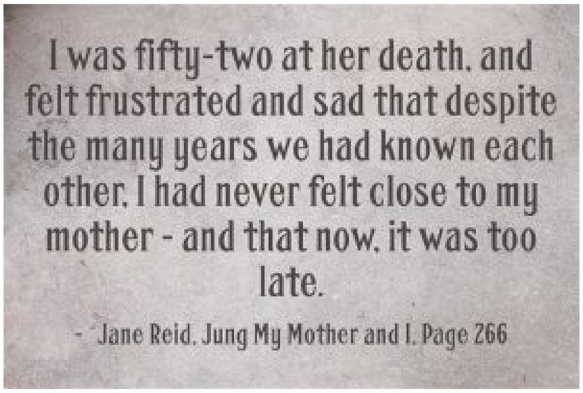
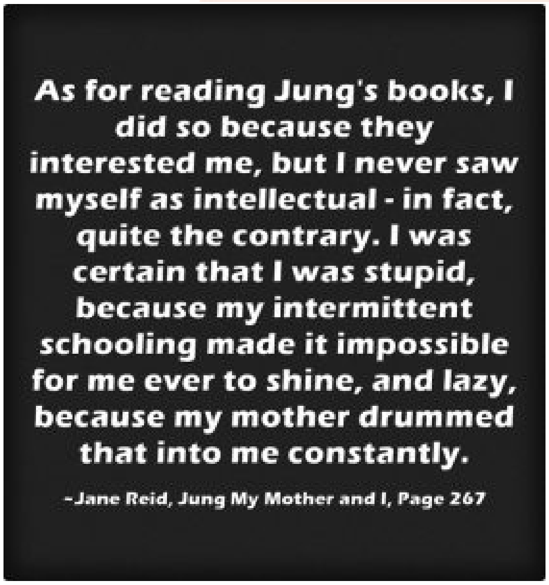
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, P



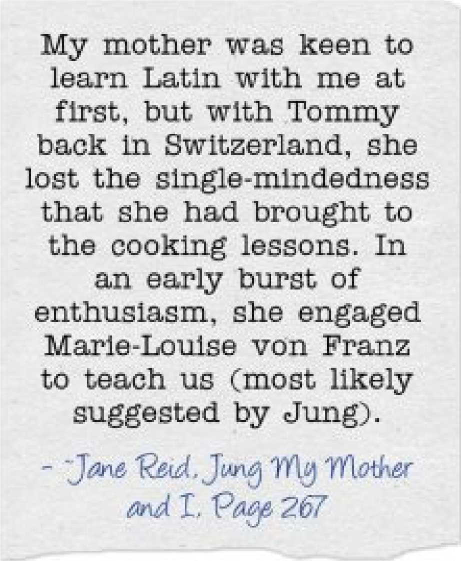
I was fifty-two at her death, and felt frustrated and sad that despite the many years we had known each other, I had never felt close to my mother - and that now, it was too late.

- Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 266



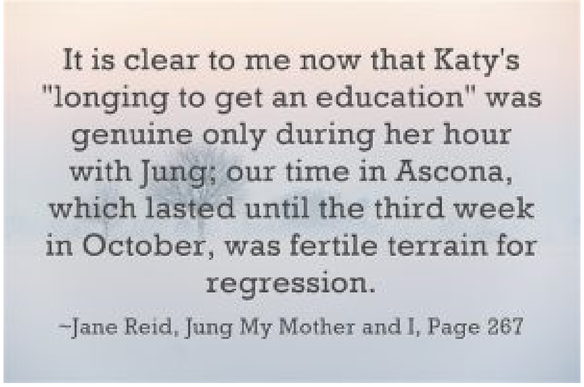
As for reading Jung's books, I did so because they interested me, but I never saw myself as intellectual - in fact, quite the contrary. I was certain that I was stupid, because my intermittent schooling made it impossible for me ever to shine, and lazy, because my mother drummed that into me constantly.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 267



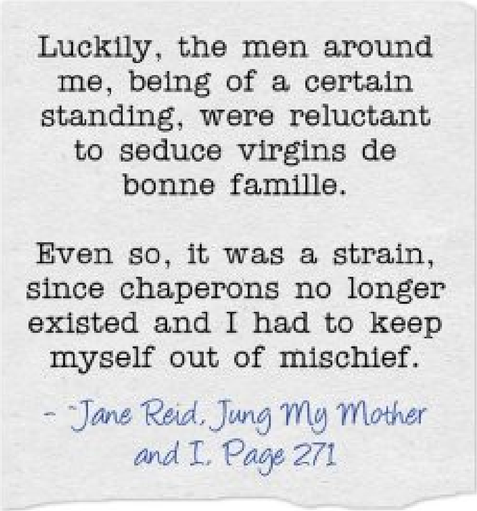
My mother was keen to learn Latin with me at first, but with Tommy back in Switzerland, she lost the single-mindedness that she had brought to the cooking lessons. In an early burst of enthusiasm, she engaged Marie-Louise von Franz to teach us (most likely suggested by Jung).

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 267



It is clear to me now that Katy's "longing to get an education" was genuine only during her hour with Jung; our time in Ascona, which lasted until the third week in October, was fertile terrain for regression.

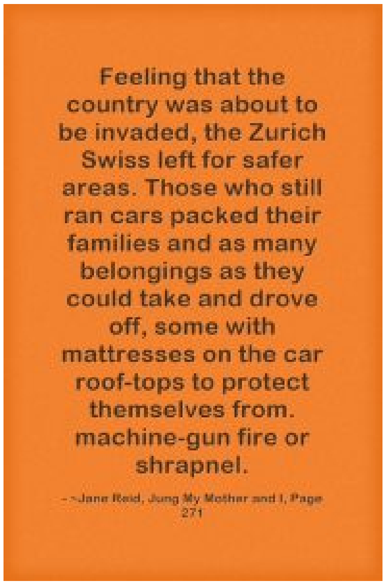
~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 267



Luckily, the men around me, being of a certain standing, were reluctant to seduce virgins de bonne famille.

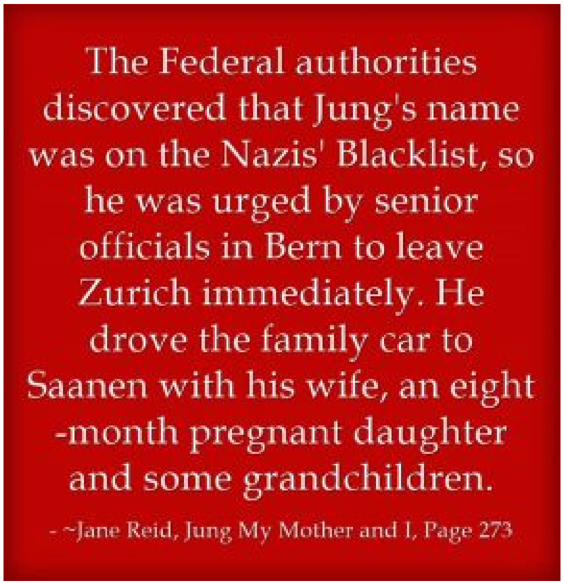
Even so, it was a strain, since chaperons no longer existed and I had to keep myself out of mischief.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 271



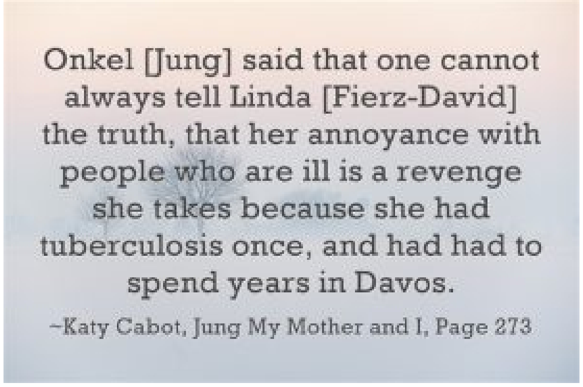
Feeling that the country was about to be invaded, the Zurich Swiss left for safer areas. Those who still ran cars packed their families and as many belongings as they could take and drove off, some with mattresses on the car roof-tops to protect themselves from. machine-gun fire or shrapnel.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 271



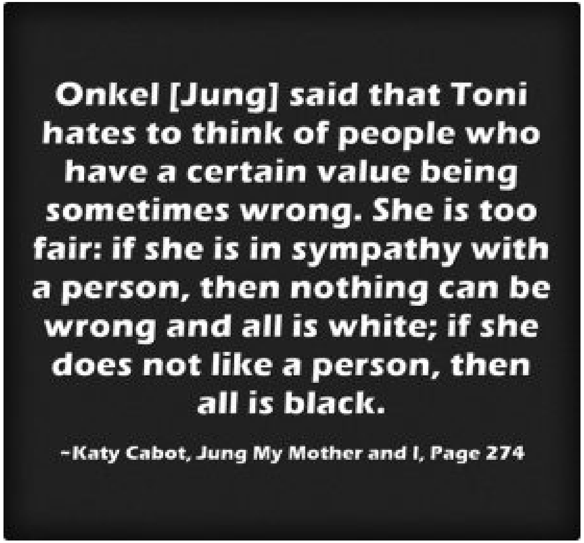
The Federal authorities discovered that Jung's name was on the Nazis' Blacklist, so he was urged by senior officials in Bern to leave Zurich immediately. He drove the family car to Saanen with his wife, an eight -month pregnant daughter and some grandchildren.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 273



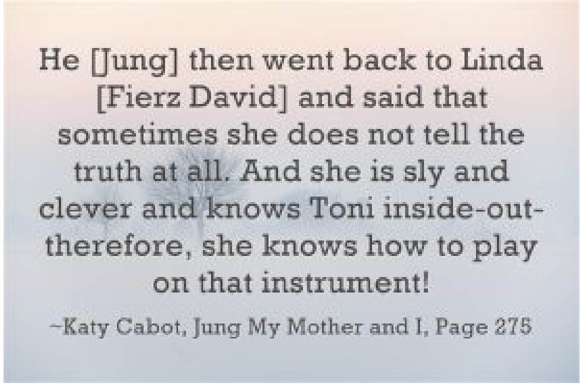
Onkel [Jung] said that one cannot always tell Linda [Fierz-David] the truth, that her annoyance with people who are ill is a revenge she takes because she had tuberculosis once, and had had to spend years in Davos.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 273



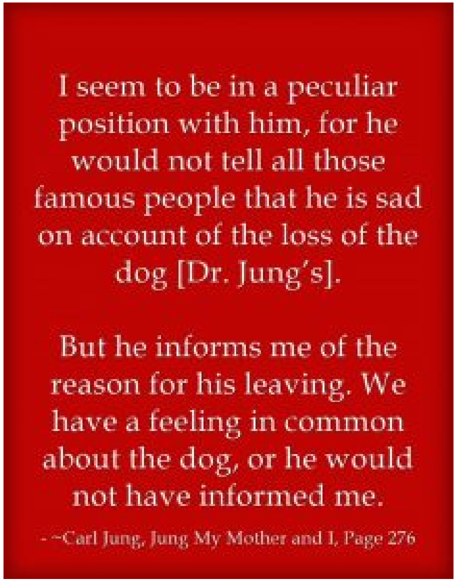
Onkel [Jung] said that Toni hates to think of people who have a certain value being sometimes wrong. She is too fair: if she is in sympathy with a person, then nothing can be wrong and all is white; if she does not like a person, then all is black.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 274



He [Jung] then went back to Linda [Fierz David] and said that sometimes she does not tell the truth at all. And she is sly and clever and knows Toni inside-out-therefore, she knows how to play on that instrument!

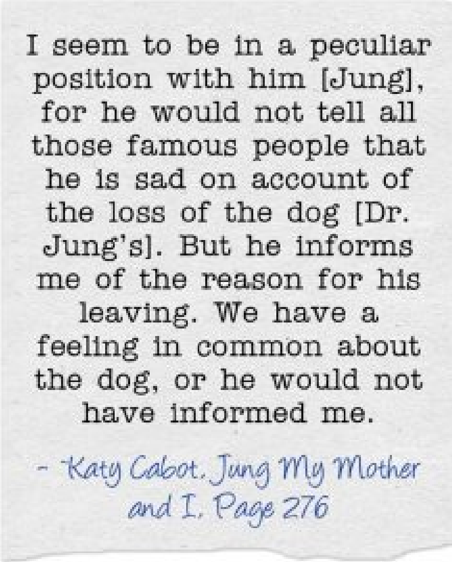
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 275



I seem to be in a peculiar position with him, for he would not tell all those famous people that he is sad on account of the loss of the dog [Dr. Jung's].

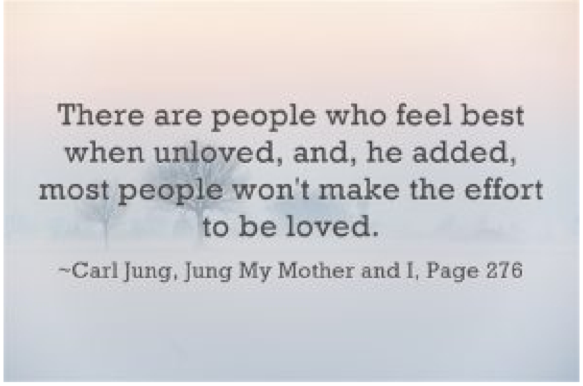
But he informs me of the reason for his leaving. We have a feeling in common about the dog, or he would not have informed me.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 276



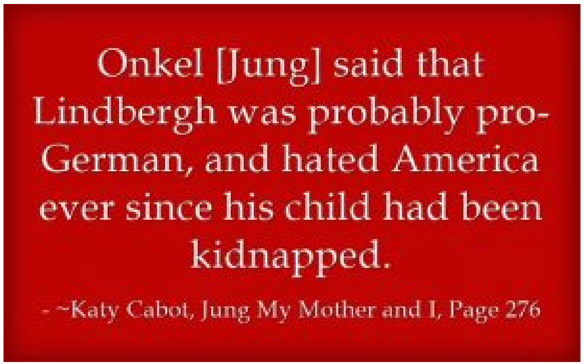
I seem to be in a peculiar position with him [Jung], for he would not tell all those famous people that he is sad on account of the loss of the dog [Dr. Jung's]. But he informs me of the reason for his leaving. We have a feeling in common about the dog, or he would not have informed me.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 276



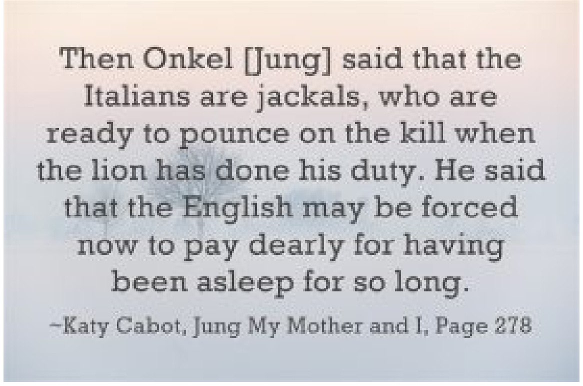
There are people who feel best when unloved, and, he added, most people won't make the effort to be loved.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 276



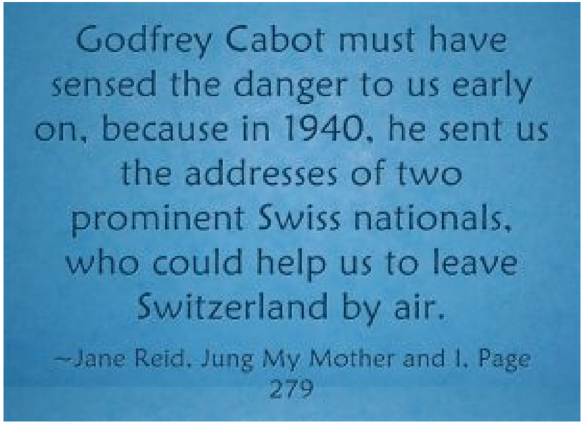
Onkel [Jung] said that Lindbergh was probably pro-German, and hated America ever since his child had been kidnapped.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 276



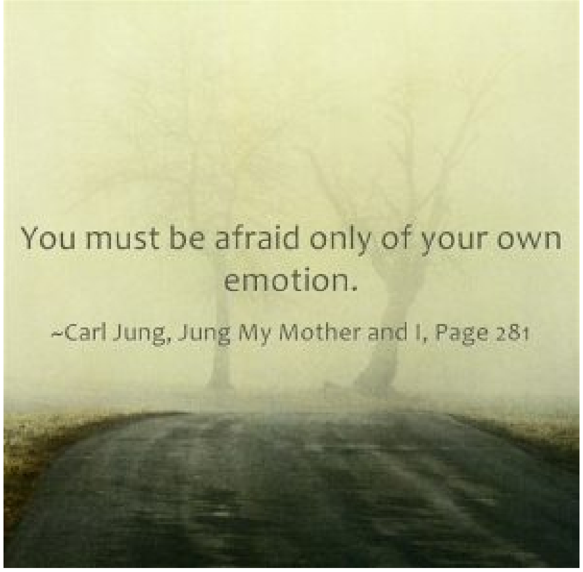
Then Onkel [Jung] said that the Italians are jackals, who are ready to pounce on the kill when the lion has done his duty. He said that the English may be forced now to pay dearly for having been asleep for so long.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 278



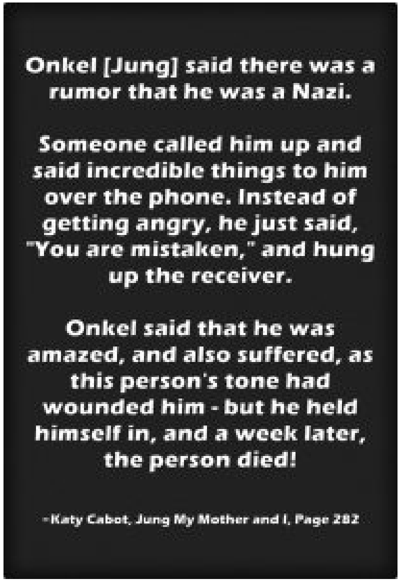
Godfrey Cabot must have sensed the danger to us early on, because in 1940, he sent us the addresses of two prominent Swiss nationals, who could help us to leave Switzerland by air.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 279



You must be afraid only of your own emotion.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 281



Onkel [Jung] said there was a rumor that he was a Nazi.

Someone called him up and said incredible things to him over the phone. Instead of getting angry, he just said, "You are mistaken," and hung up the receiver.

Onkel said that he was amazed, and also suffered, as this person's tone had wounded him - but he held himself in, and a week later, the person died!

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 282

"Keep your anger to yourse Onkel [Jung] said, "and suf it, and if it hurts and smar then you know this is the h and pain you are causing t other."

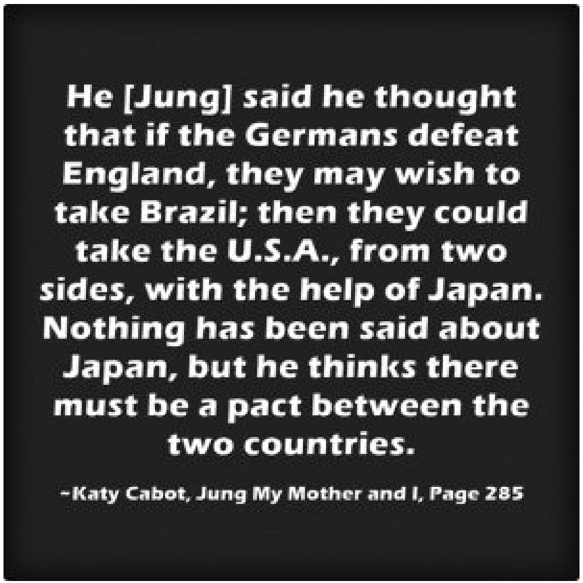
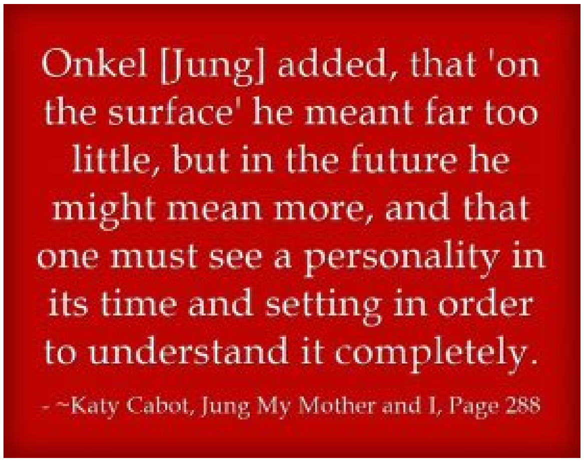
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I,
282



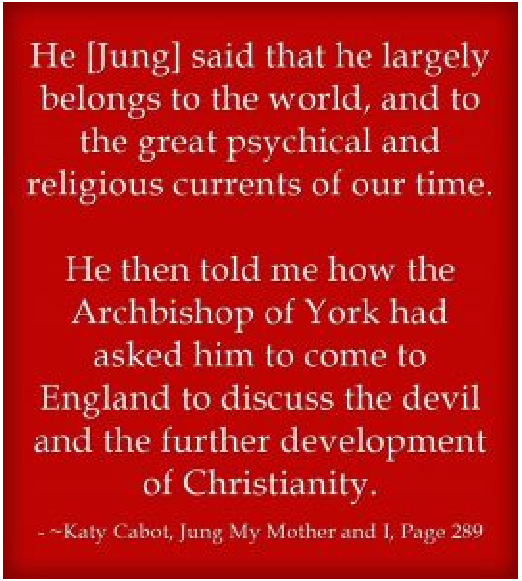
He [Jung] said he thought that if the Germans defeat England, they may wish to take Brazil; then they could take the U.S.A., from two sides, with the help of Japan. Nothing has been said about Japan, but he thinks there must be a pact between the two countries.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 285



Onkel [Jung] added, that 'on the surface' he meant far too little, but in the future he might mean more, and that one must see a personality in its time and setting in order to understand it completely.

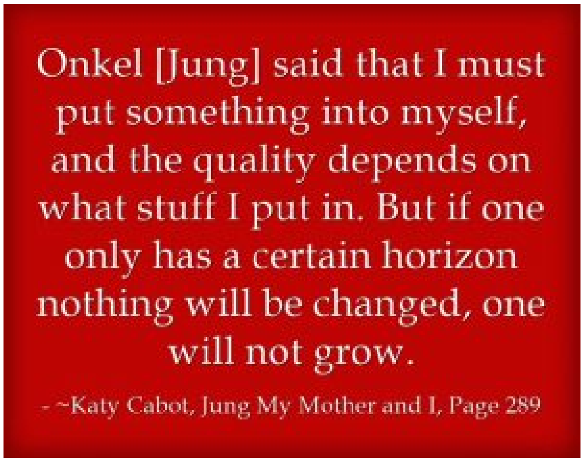
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 288



He [Jung] said that he largely belongs to the world, and to the great psychical and religious currents of our time.

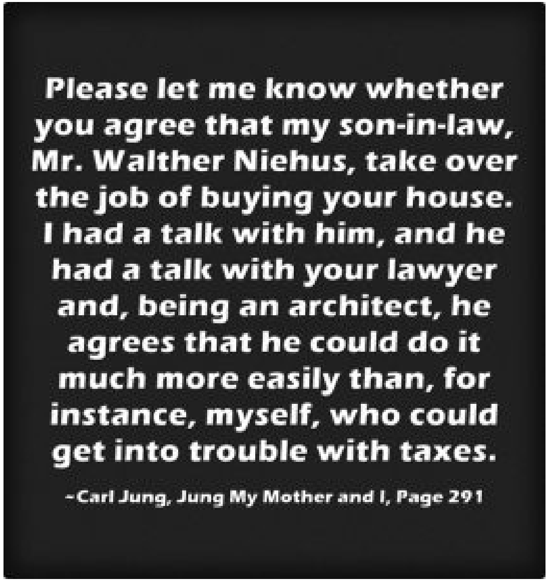
He then told me how the Archbishop of York had asked him to come to England to discuss the devil and the further development of Christianity.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 289



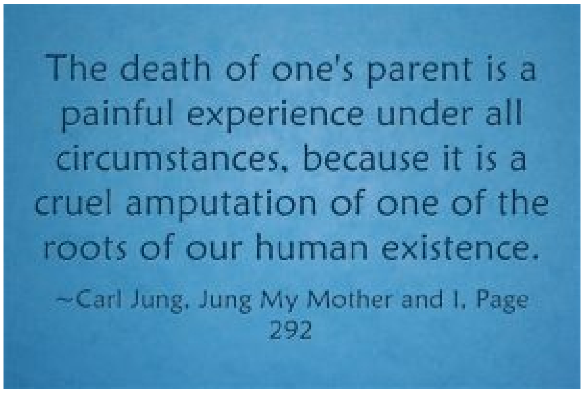
Onkel [Jung] said that I must put something into myself, and the quality depends on what stuff I put in. But if one only has a certain horizon nothing will be changed, one will not grow.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 289



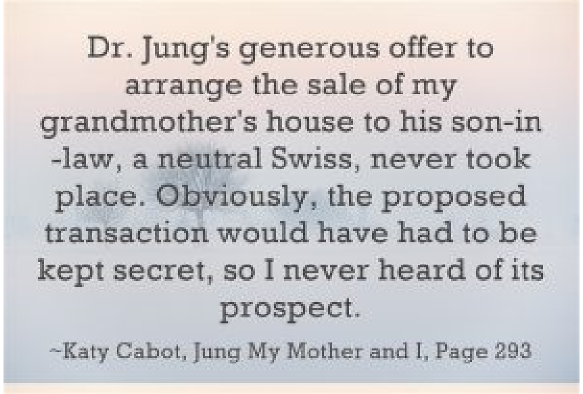
Please let me know whether you agree that my son-in-law, Mr. Walther Niehus, take over the job of buying your house. I had a talk with him, and he had a talk with your lawyer and, being an architect, he agrees that he could do it much more easily than, for instance, myself, who could get into trouble with taxes.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 291



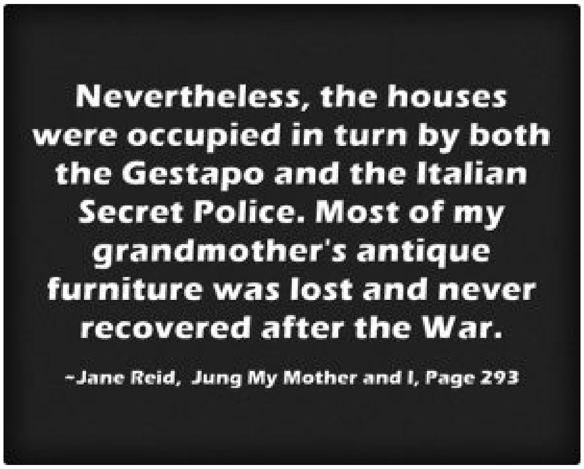
The death of one's parent is a painful experience under all circumstances, because it is a cruel amputation of one of the roots of our human existence.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 292



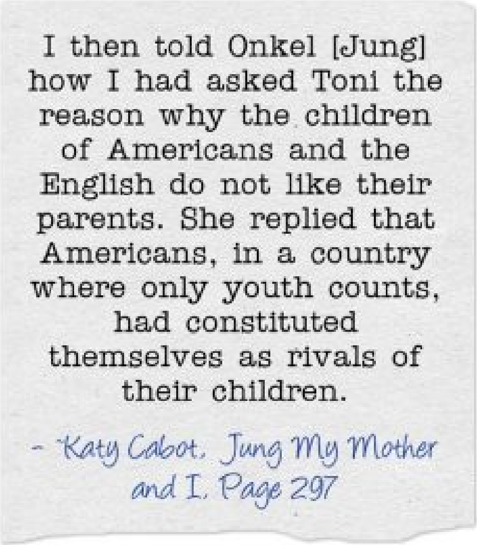
Dr. Jung's generous offer to arrange the sale of my grandmother's house to his son-in-law, a neutral Swiss, never took place. Obviously, the proposed transaction would have had to be kept secret, so I never heard of its prospect.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 293



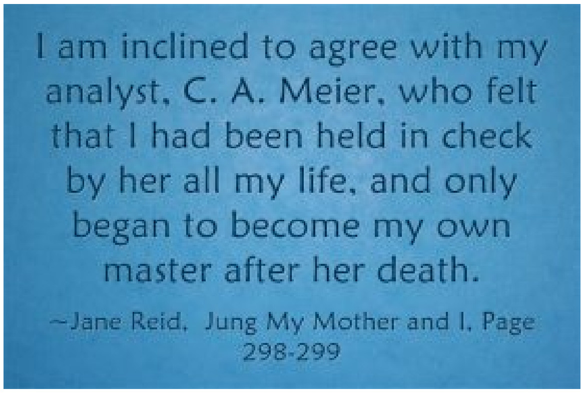
Nevertheless, the houses were occupied in turn by both the Gestapo and the Italian Secret Police. Most of my grandmother's antique furniture was lost and never recovered after the War.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 293



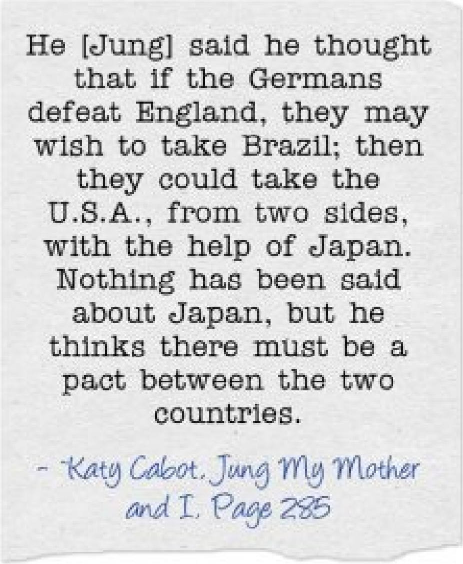
I then told Onkel [Jung] how I had asked Toni the reason why the children of Americans and the English do not like their parents. She replied that Americans, in a country where only youth counts, had constituted themselves as rivals of their children.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 297



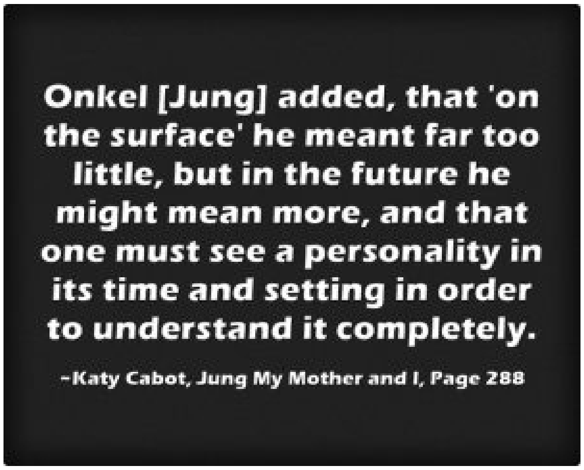
I am inclined to agree with my analyst, C. A. Meier, who felt that I had been held in check by her all my life, and only began to become my own master after her death.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 298-299



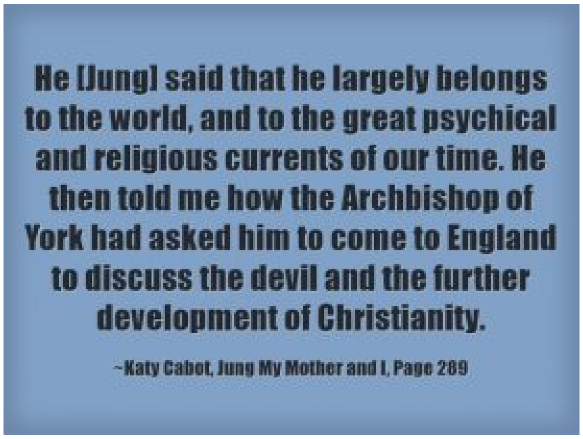
He [Jung] said he thought that if the Germans defeat England, they may wish to take Brazil; then they could take the U.S.A., from two sides, with the help of Japan. Nothing has been said about Japan, but he thinks there must be a pact between the two countries.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 285



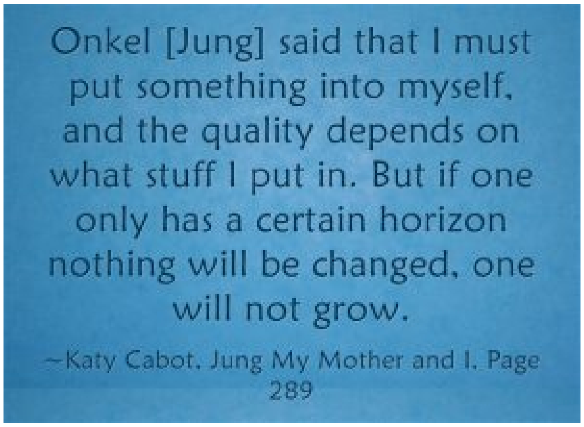
Onkel [Jung] added, that 'on the surface' he meant far too little, but in the future he might mean more, and that one must see a personality in its time and setting in order to understand it completely.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 288



He [Jung] said that he largely belongs to the world, and to the great psychical and religious currents of our time. He then told me how the Archbishop of York had asked him to come to England to discuss the devil and the further development of Christianity.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 289



Onkel [Jung] said that I must put something into myself, and the quality depends on what stuff I put in. But if one only has a certain horizon nothing will be changed, one will not grow.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 289

Please let me know whether you agree t
my son-in-law, Mr
Walther Niehus, take the job of buying yo house. I had a talk w him, and he had a t with your lawyer a being an architect, agrees that he could much more easily th
for instance, myself, could get into troub
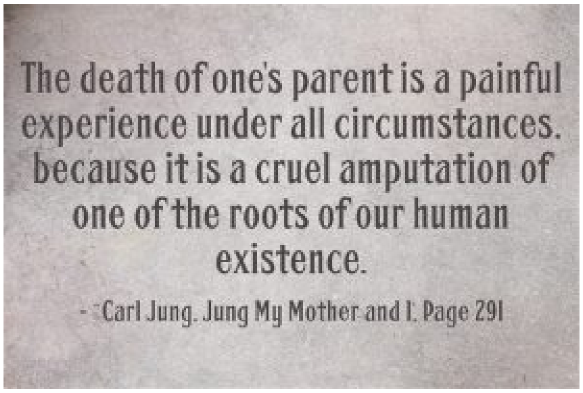
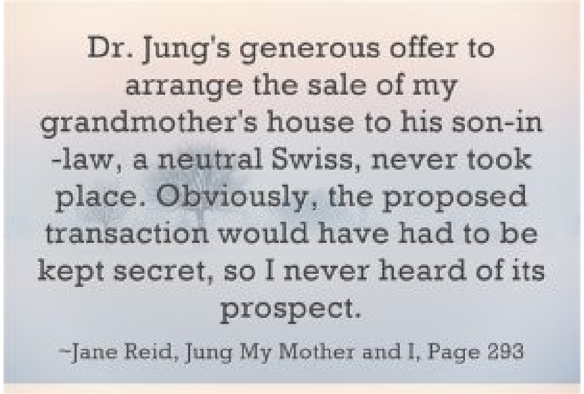
with taxes.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mo
and I, Page 291



The death of one's parent is a painful experience under all circumstances. because it is a cruel amputation of one of the roots of our human existence.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 291



Dr. Jung's generous offer to arrange the sale of my grandmother's house to his son-in-law, a neutral Swiss, never took place. Obviously, the proposed transaction would have had to be kept secret, so I never heard of its prospect.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 293

Nevertheless, the were occupied in tu
the Gestapo and th
Secret Police. Mos grandmother's a furniture was lost a recovered after th

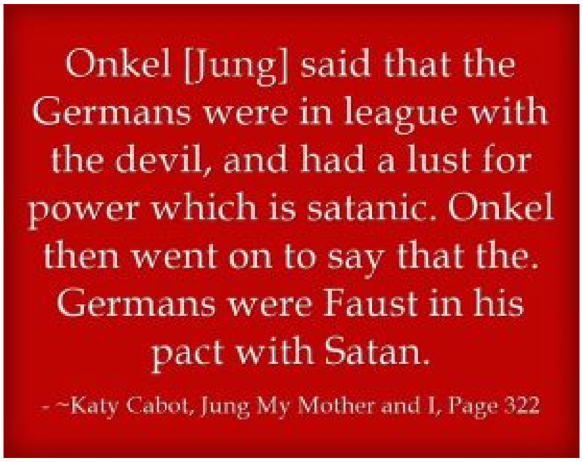
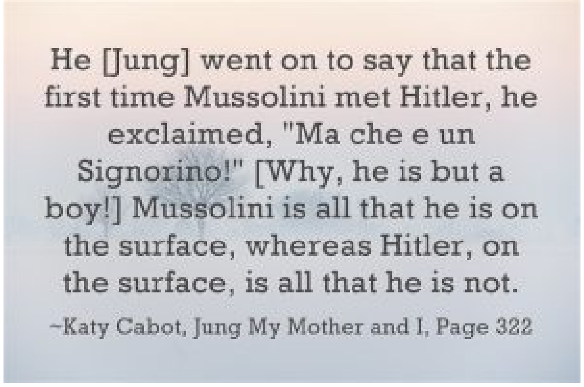
~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother a



Onkel [Jung] said that the Germans were in league with the devil, and had a lust for power which is satanic. Onkel then went on to say that the. Germans were Faust in his pact with Satan.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322



He [Jung] went on to say that the first time Mussolini met Hitler, he exclaimed, "Ma che e un Signorino!" [Why, he is but a boy!] Mussolini is all that he is on the surface, whereas Hitler, on the surface, is all that he is not.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322

Hitler is sinister - lik little schoolmaster lived and taught all a quiet village, an everyone presum harmless. Then, su this mild little man murders his whole

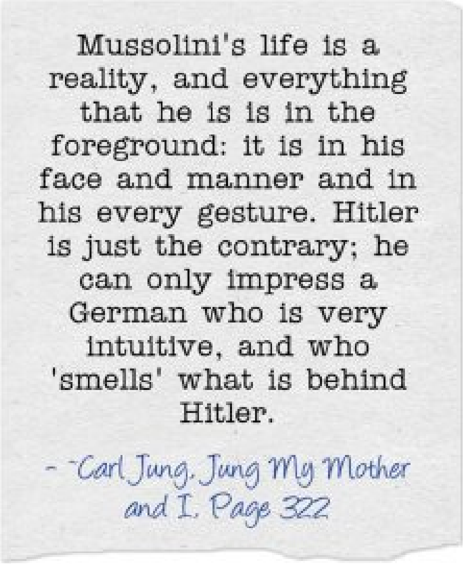
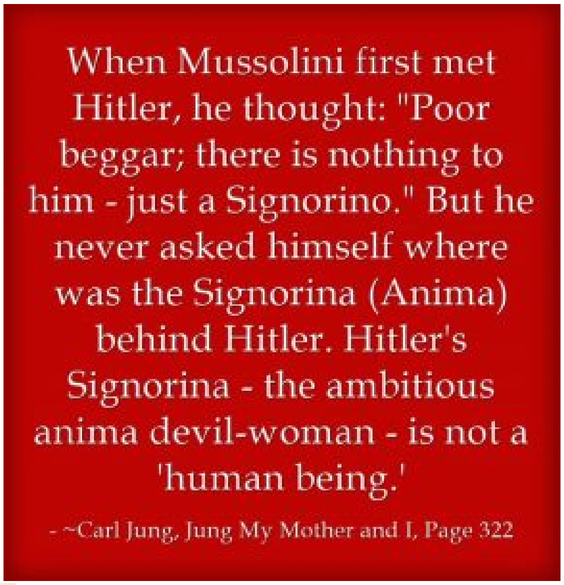
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother a



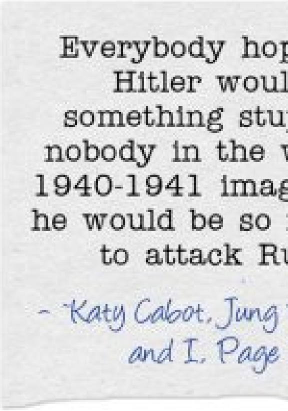
Mussolini's life is a reality, and everything that he is is in the foreground: it is in his face and manner and in his every gesture. Hitler is just the contrary; he can only impress a German who is very intuitive, and who 'smells' what is behind Hitler.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322



When Mussolini first met Hitler, he thought: "Poor beggar; there is nothing to him - just a Signorino." But he never asked himself where was the Signorina (Anima) behind Hitler. Hitler's Signorina - the ambitious anima devil-woman - is not a 'human being.'

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 322



Everybody hop
Hitler woul something stu nobody in the 1940-1941 imag
he would be so to attack Ru

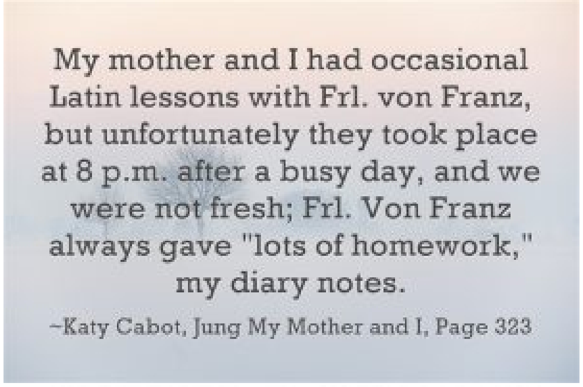
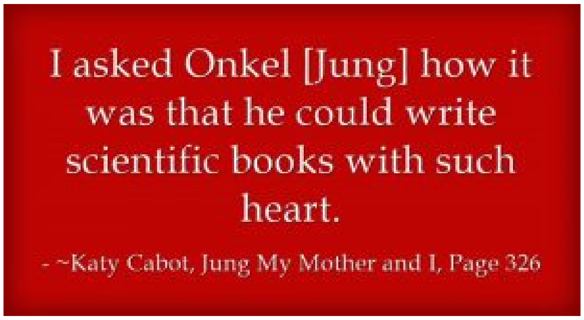
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung
and I, Page



My mother and I had occasional Latin lessons with Frl. von Franz, but unfortunately they took place at 8 p.m. after a busy day, and we were not fresh; Frl. Von Franz always gave "lots of homework," my diary notes.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 323



I asked Onkel [Jung] how it was that he could write scientific books with such heart.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 326

Then - as to his w that one must be write such things.
not write that way
are afraid of criti too little feeling only selfi

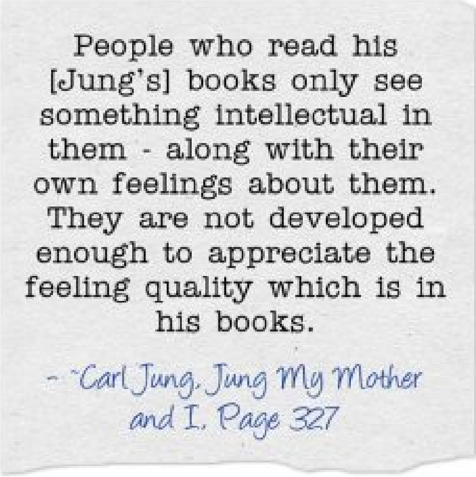
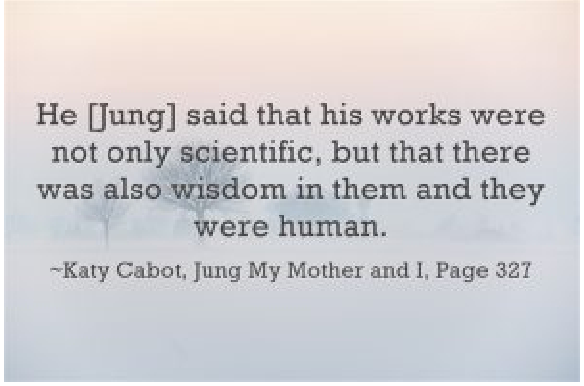
~Katy Cabot, Jung My M



People who read his [Jung's] books only see something intellectual in them - along with their own feelings about them. They are not developed enough to appreciate the feeling quality which is in his books.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 327



He [Jung] said that his works were not only scientific, but that there was also wisdom in them and they were human.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 327

I told him [Jung] t at the university feeling, and of su simplicity, that th church atmosphe expressing his

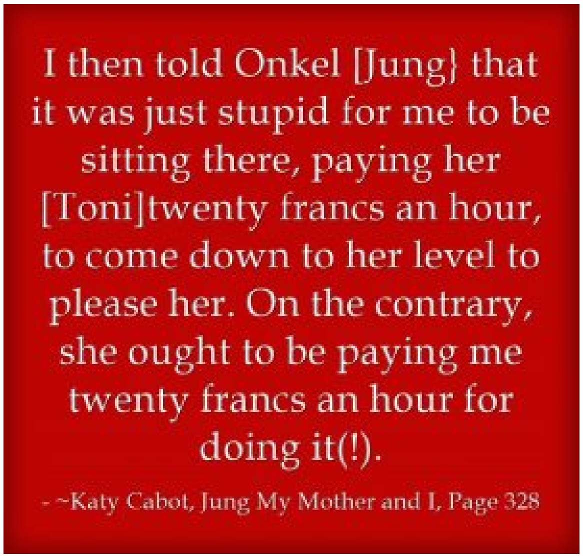
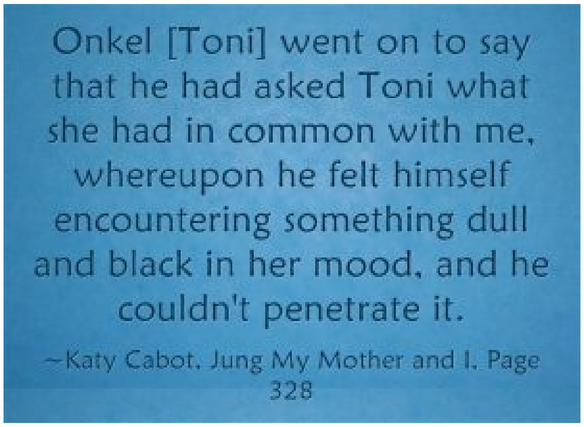
~Katy Cabot, Jung My M



I then told Onkel [Jung} that it was just stupid for me to be sitting there, paying her [Toni]twenty francs an hour, to come down to her level to please her. On the contrary, she ought to be paying me twenty francs an hour for doing it(!).

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 328



Onkel [Toni] went on to say that he had asked Toni what she had in common with me, whereupon he felt himself encountering something dull and black in her mood, and he couldn't penetrate it.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 328

She[Toni] is very intu intellectual, and only fa people wise, especi intuitives. One can nev people: they must 'ex
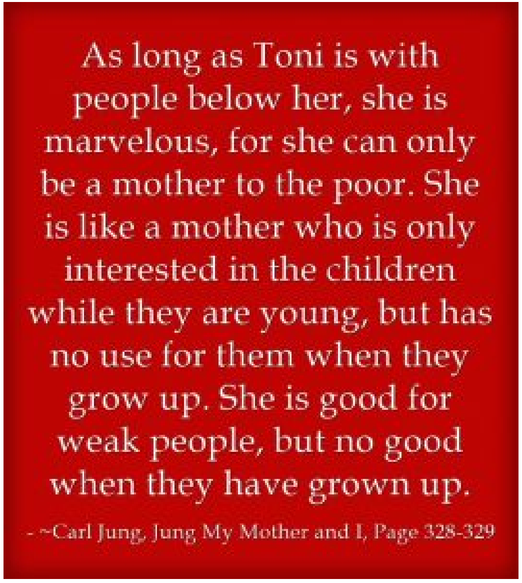
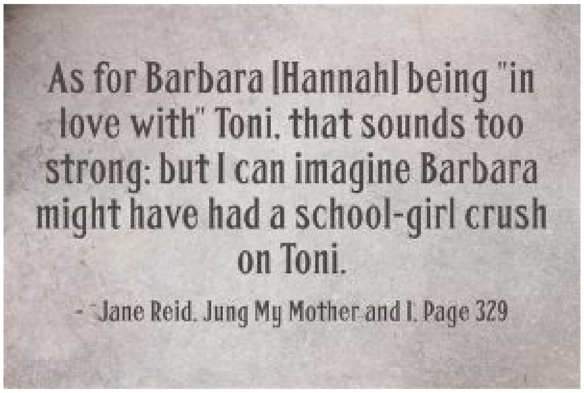
the thing themse

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother ar



As long as Toni is with people below her, she is marvelous, for she can only be a mother to the poor. She is like a mother who is only interested in the children while they are young, but has no use for them when they grow up. She is good for weak people, but no good when they have grown up.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 328-329



As for Barbara [Hannah] being "in love with" Toni, that sounds too strong; but I can imagine Barbara might have had a school-girl crush on Toni.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 329

He [Carl] went on to say tha in a way a genius, and such live half their lives or more genius.

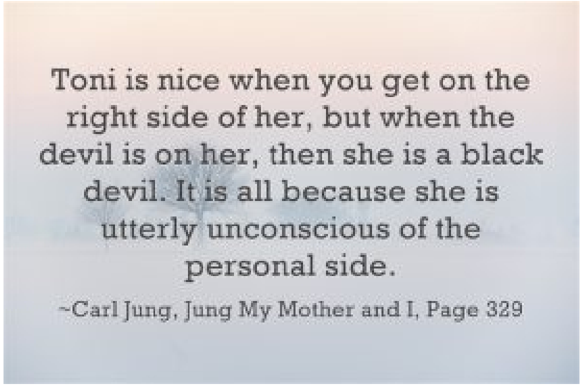
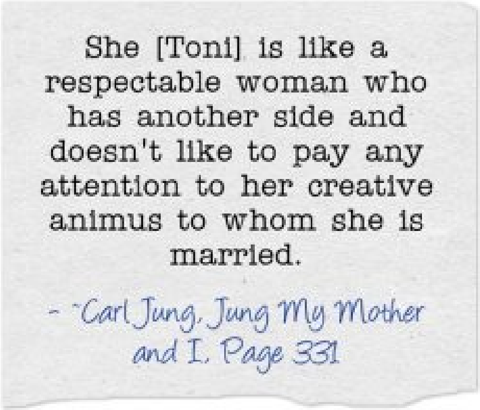
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, P



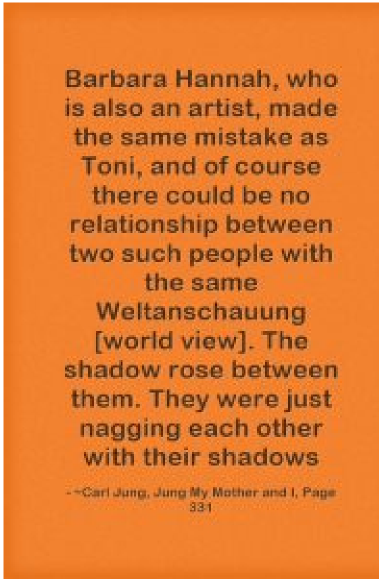
Toni is nice when you get on the right side of her, but when the devil is on her, then she is a black devil. It is all because she is utterly unconscious of the personal side.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 329



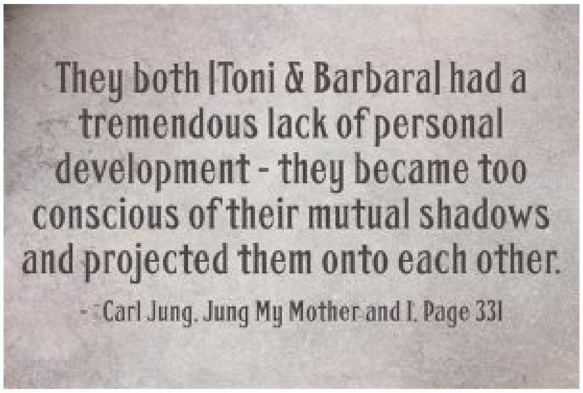
She [Toni] is like a respectable woman who has another side and doesn't like to pay any attention to her creative animus to whom she is married.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 331



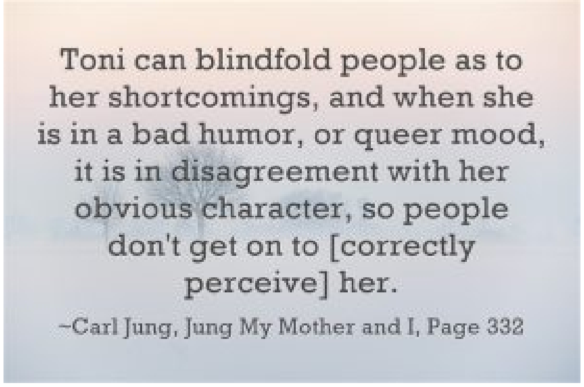
Barbara Hannah, who is also an artist, made the same mistake as Toni, and of course there could be no relationship between two such people with the same Weltanschauung [world view]. The shadow rose between them. They were just nagging each other with their shadows

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 331



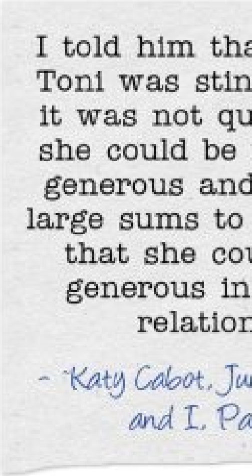
They both [Toni & Barbara] had a tremendous lack of personal development - they became too conscious of their mutual shadows and projected them onto each other.

- Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 331



Toni can blindfold people as to her shortcomings, and when she is in a bad humor, or queer mood, it is in disagreement with her obvious character, so people don't get on to [correctly perceive] her.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 332



I told him tha
Toni was stin
it was not qu she could be generous and large sums to that she cou generous in relation

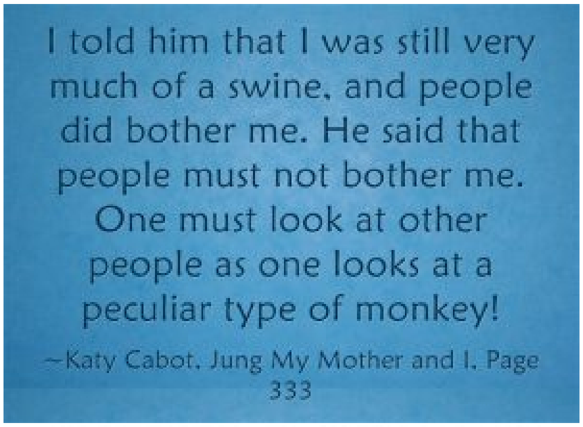
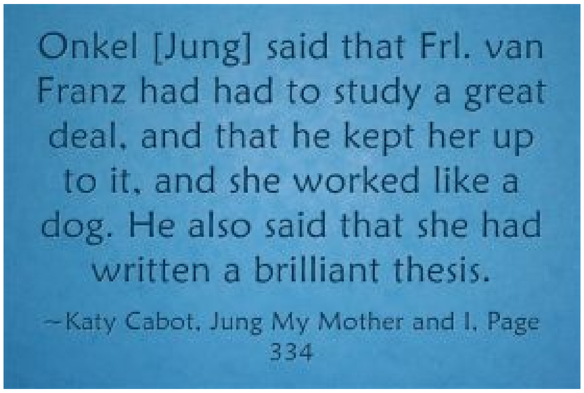
- Katy Cabot, Ju
and I, Pa



I told him that I was still very much of a swine, and people did bother me. He said that people must not bother me. One must look at other people as one looks at a peculiar type of monkey!

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 333



Onkel [Jung] said that Frl. van Franz had had to study a great deal, and that he kept her up to it, and she worked like a dog. He also said that she had written a brilliant thesis.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 334

Onkel [Jung] said t and Epimeth psychological but is Zarathu

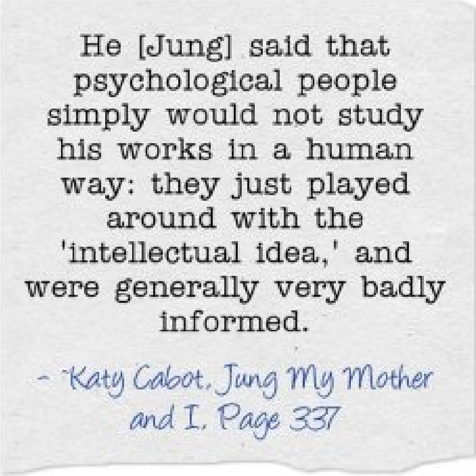
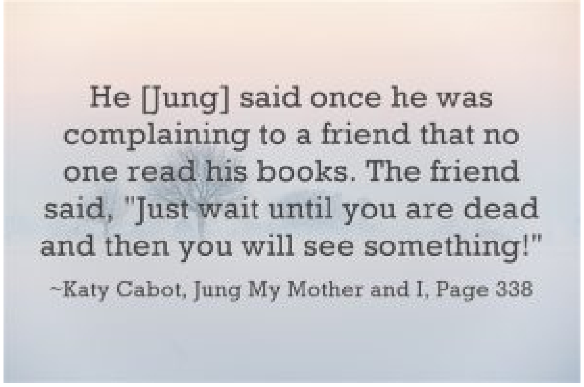
~Katy Cabot, Jung My M



He [Jung] said that psychological people simply would not study his works in a human way: they just played around with the 'intellectual idea,' and were generally very badly informed.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 337



He [Jung] said once he was complaining to a friend that no one read his books. The friend said, "Just wait until you are dead and then you will see something!"

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 338

Onkel [Jung] w that his books
the grasp of mos were too stupid they had no psychological

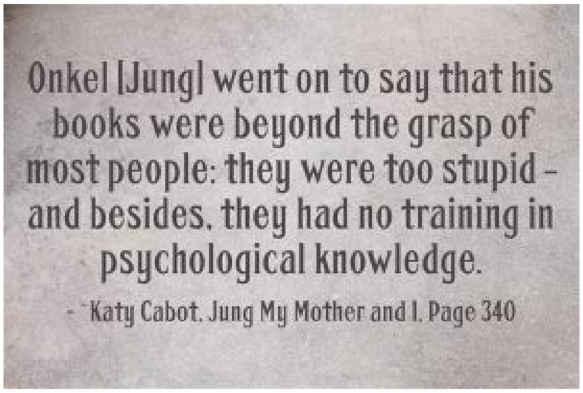
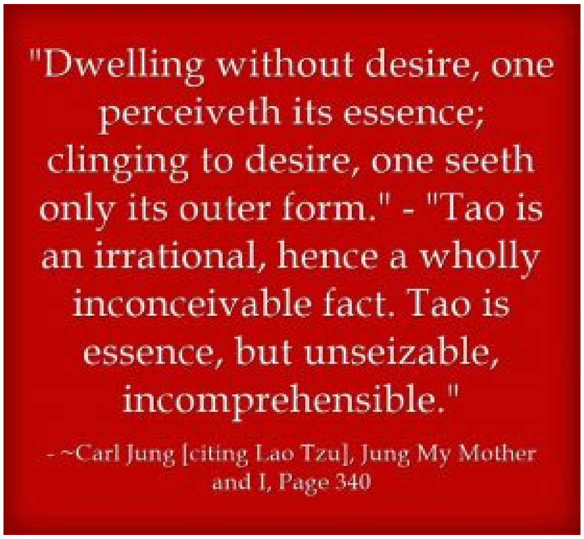
~Katy Cabot, Jung My
338



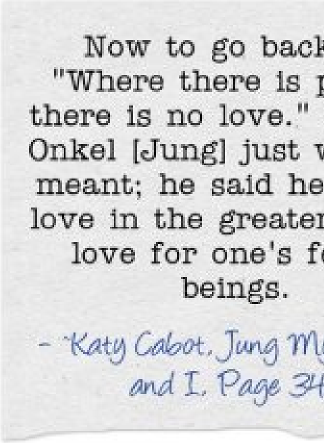
Onkel [Jung] went on to say that his books were beyond the grasp of most people: they were too stupid - and besides, they had no training in psychological knowledge.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 340



"Dwelling without desire, one perceiveth its essence; clinging to desire, one seeth only its outer form." - "Tao is an irrational, hence a wholly inconceivable fact. Tao is essence, but unseizable, incomprehensible."

- ~Carl Jung [citing Lao Tzu], Jung My Mother and I, Page 340



Now to go back
"Where there is p there is no love."
Onkel [Jung] just w meant; he said he love in the greater love for one's fe beings.

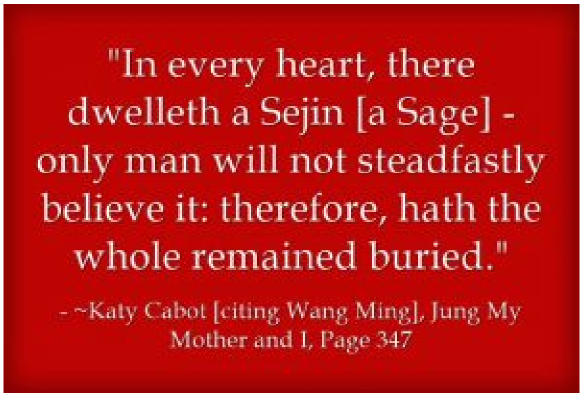
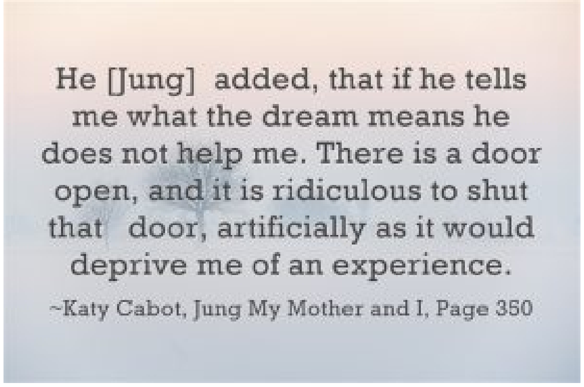
- Katy Cabot, Jung My
and I, Page 34



"In every heart, there dwelleth a Sejin [a Sage] - only man will not steadfastly believe it: therefore, hath the whole remained buried."

- ~Katy Cabot [citing Wang Ming], Jung My Mother and I, Page 347



He [Jung] added, that if he tells me what the dream means he does not help me. There is a door open, and it is ridiculous to shut that door, artificially as it would deprive me of an experience.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 350

If one is told a th is dead knowledg must experience a
He [Jung] said tha
were people who read everything a
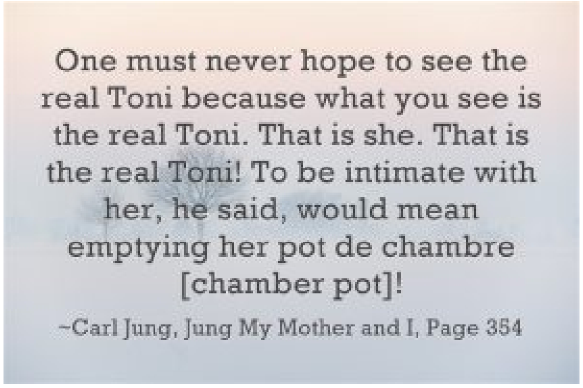
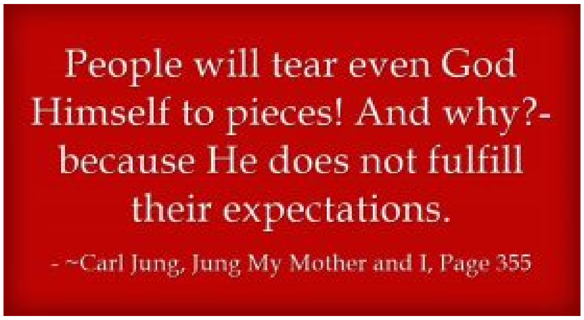
had experienced n

- Katy Cabot, Jung My
and I, Page 35



One must never hope to see the real Toni because what you see is the real Toni. That is she. That is the real Toni! To be intimate with her, he said, would mean emptying her pot de chambre [chamber pot]!

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 354



People will tear even God Himself to pieces! And why?- because He does not fulfill their expectations.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 355

Toni must be taken she is. Everyone has must be grateful fo with some qualities people are without mind, and at least sh

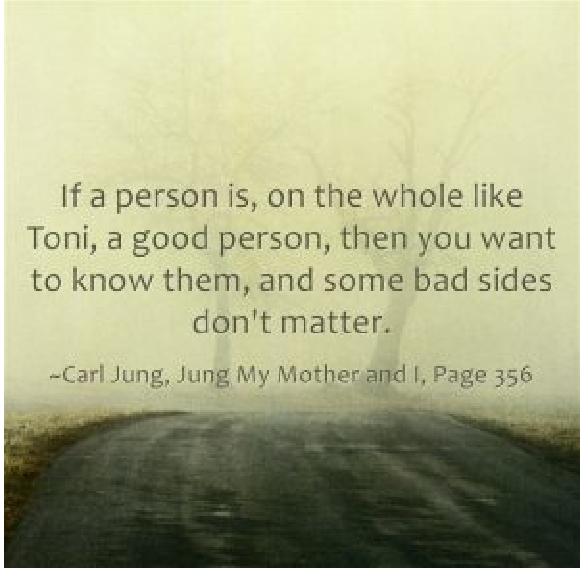
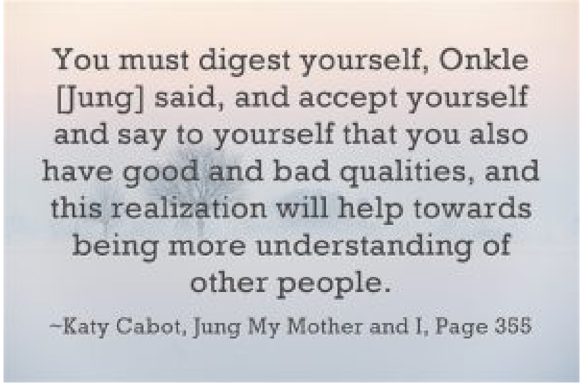
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mothe
355



If a person is, on the whole like Toni, a good person, then you want to know them, and some bad sides don't matter.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 356



You must digest yourself, Onkle [Jung] said, and accept yourself and say to yourself that you also have good and bad qualities, and this realization will help towards being more understanding of other people.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 355

We spoke of Lin moment, and On that Doctor Bins really love her, bu
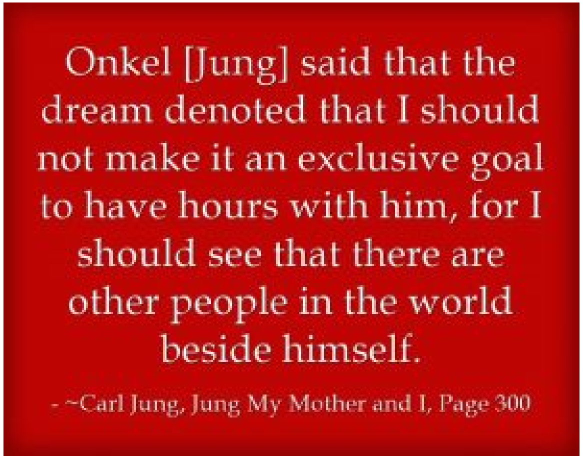
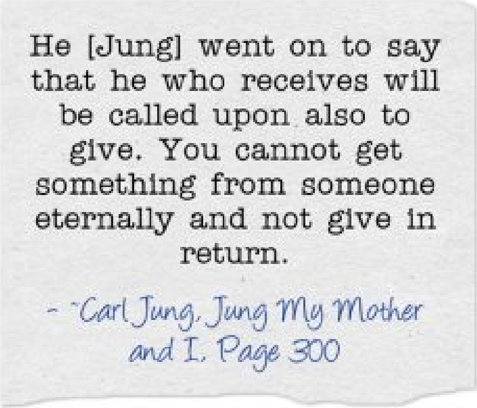
the moral support
him

- ~Carl Jung, Jung
Page



Onkel [Jung] said that the dream denoted that I should not make it an exclusive goal to have hours with him, for I should see that there are other people in the world beside himself.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 300



He [Jung] went on to say that he who receives will be called upon also to give. You cannot get something from someone eternally and not give in return.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 300

He [Jung] said tha or the 'Way to t lonely way, and
'agree with onese
one knows to be even if, in the pro
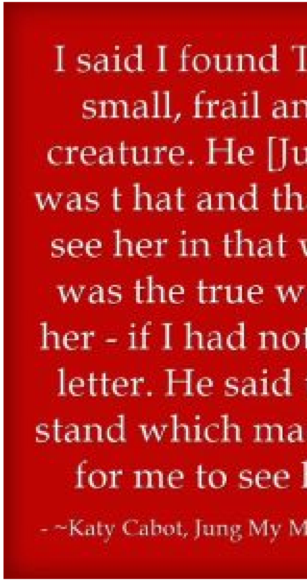
one is a

~Katy Cabot, Jung My M



I said I found T
small, frail an creature. He [Ju was t hat and th see her in that was the true w her - if I had no letter. He said stand which ma for me to see

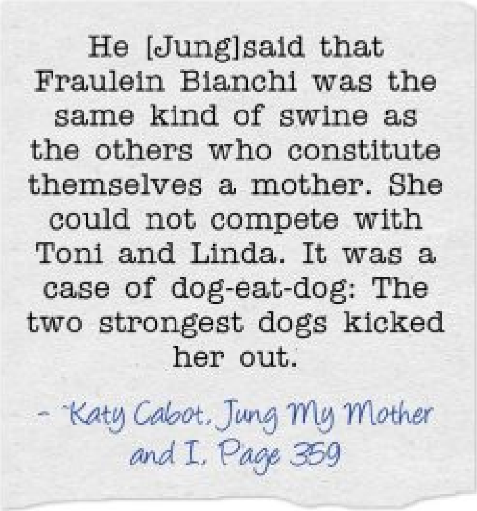
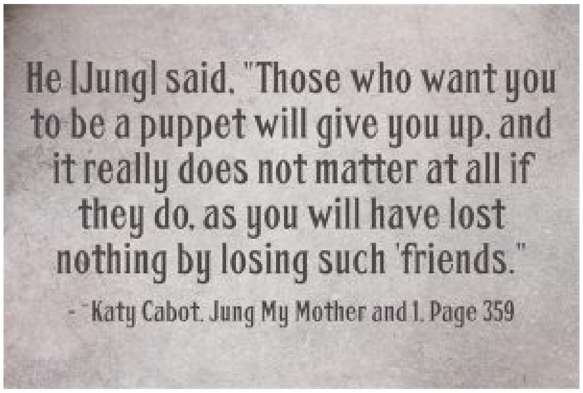
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My M



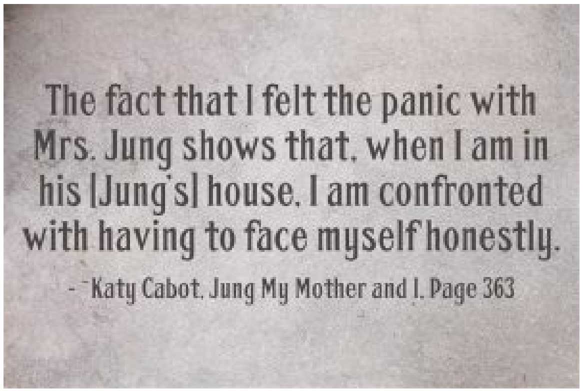
He [Jung]said that Fraulein Bianchi was the same kind of swine as the others who constitute themselves a mother. She could not compete with Toni and Linda. It was a case of dog-eat-dog: The two strongest dogs kicked her out.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 359



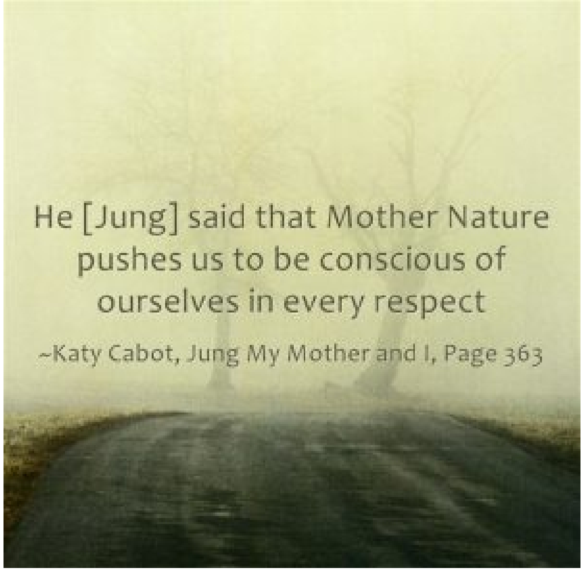
He [Jung] said, "Those who want you to be a puppet will give you up, and it really does not matter at all if they do, as you will have lost nothing by losing such 'friends."

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 359



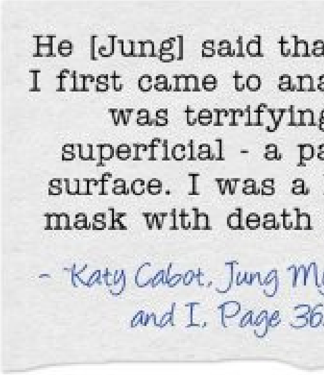
The fact that I felt the panic with Mrs. Jung shows that, when I am in his [Jung's] house, I am confronted with having to face myself honestly.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 363



He [Jung] said that Mother Nature pushes us to be conscious of ourselves in every respect

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 363



He [Jung] said tha
I first came to ana was terrifying superficial - a pa surface. I was a mask with death

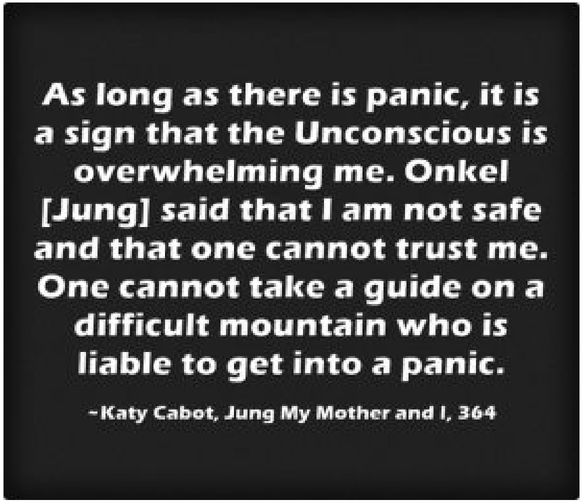
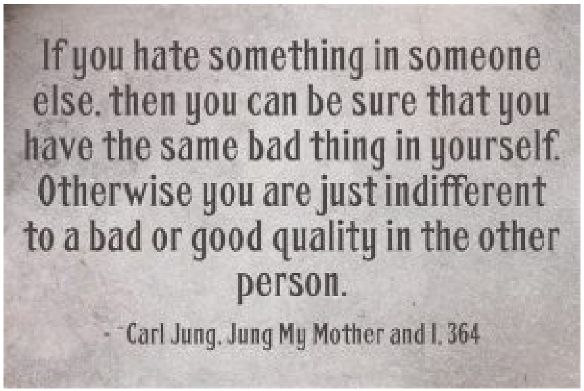
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung M
and I, Page 36



As long as there is panic, it is a sign that the Unconscious is overwhelming me. Onkel [Jung] said that I am not safe and that one cannot trust me. One cannot take a guide on a difficult mountain who is liable to get into a panic.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, 364



If you hate something in someone else, then you can be sure that you have the same bad thing in yourself. Otherwise you are just indifferent to a bad or good quality in the other person.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, 364

After ten years, Jung w out that the claustropho were the price she was not coming down to a l and accepting her dow side.

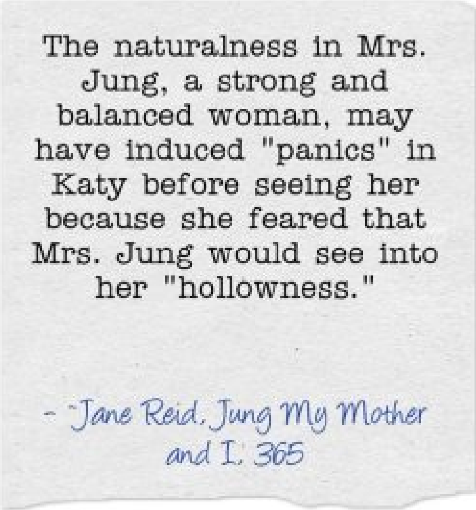
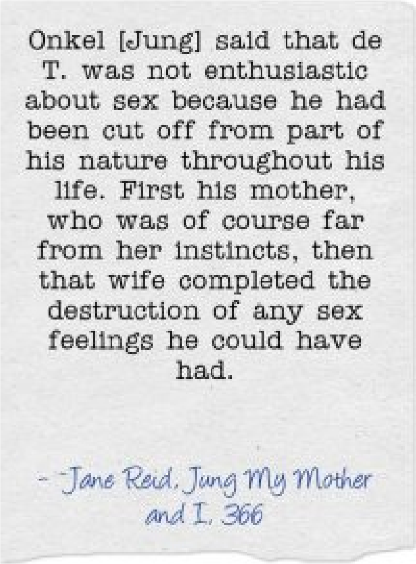
~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother



The naturalness in Mrs. Jung, a strong and balanced woman, may have induced "panics" in Katy before seeing her because she feared that Mrs. Jung would see into her "hollowness."

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, 365



Onkel [Jung] said that de T. was not enthusiastic about sex because he had been cut off from part of his nature throughout his life. First his mother, who was of course far from her instincts, then that wife completed the destruction of any sex feelings he could have had.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, 366

Onkel [Jung] went on that t more I am aware of my fantasies of the lewd kind (the waiter, for instance), t more I am aware of myself that less elegant aspect. Bei aware of one's own nature acts as a counter-poison against lumps and panics

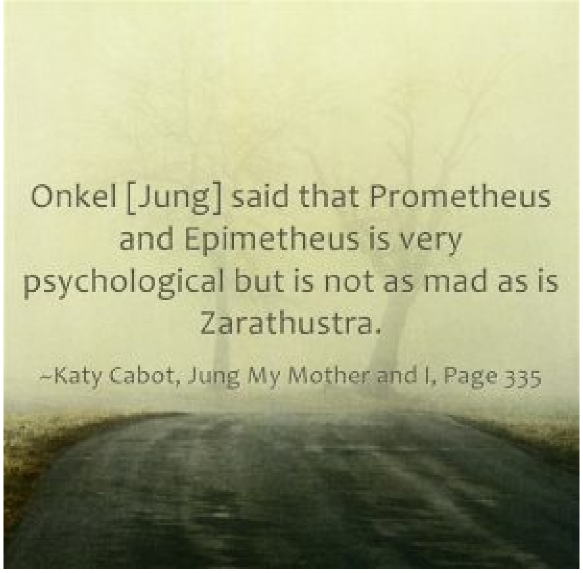
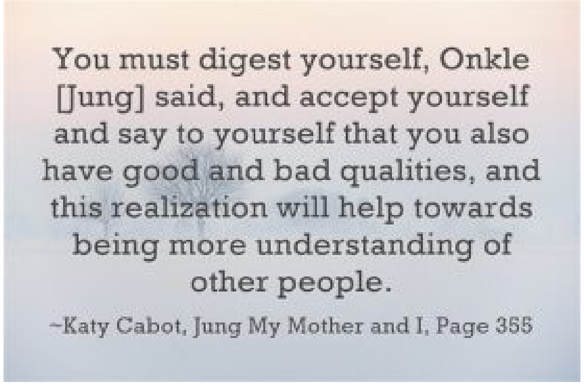
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, 367



Onkel [Jung] said that Prometheus and Epimetheus is very psychological but is not as mad as is Zarathustra.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 335



You must digest yourself, Onkle [Jung] said, and accept yourself and say to yourself that you also have good and bad qualities, and this realization will help towards being more understanding of other people.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 355

I live above m and must come my pedestal human, Onkel [
That with him to be natural would not get in this work o
the self.' He ad
my nature acceptable to would not hav or a split-of

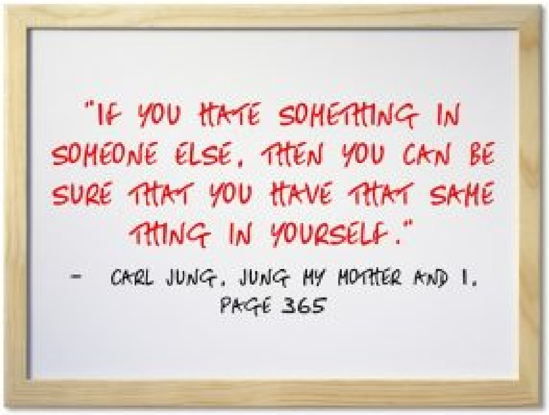
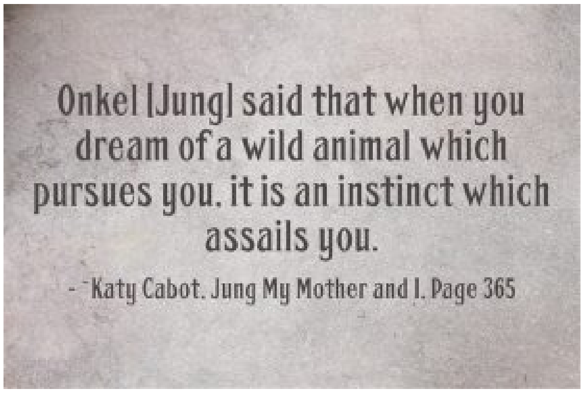
- Katy Cabot, Jung
and I, Page



"IF YOU HATE SOMETHING IN SOMEONE ELSE, THEN YOU CAN BE SURE THAT YOU HAVE THAT SAME THING IN YOURSELF."

- CARL JUNG, JUNG MY MOTHER AND I, PAGE 365



Onkel [Jung] said that when you dream of a wild animal which pursues you, it is an instinct which assails you.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 365

I told Onkel [Ju was world-famo have to be in t for he was just there. He said t a time when he
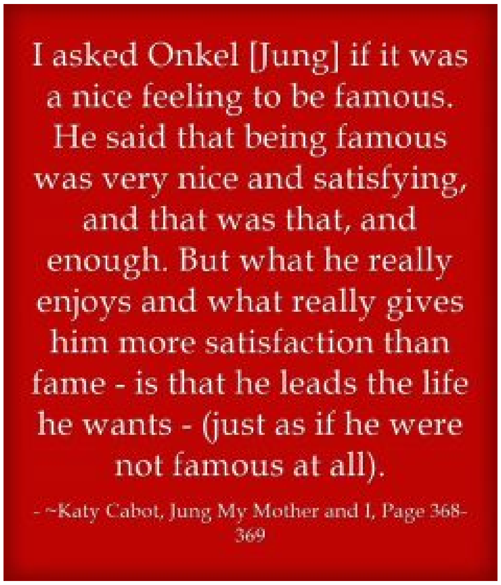
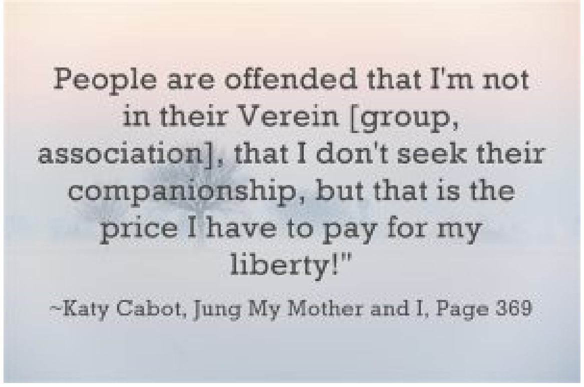
-famous, but th
he had had no
the lime

~Katy Cabot, Jung My M



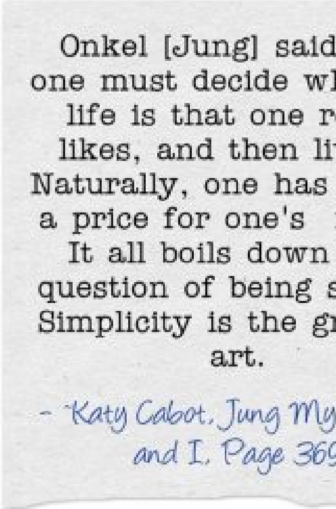
I asked Onkel [Jung] if it was a nice feeling to be famous. He said that being famous was very nice and satisfying, and that was that, and enough. But what he really enjoys and what really gives him more satisfaction than fame - is that he leads the life he wants - (just as if he were not famous at all).

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 368-369



People are offended that I'm not in their Verein [group, association], that I don't seek their companionship, but that is the price I have to pay for my liberty!"

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 369



Onkel [Jung] said
one must decide w life is that one r likes, and then li Naturally, one has a price for one's
It all boils down question of being s
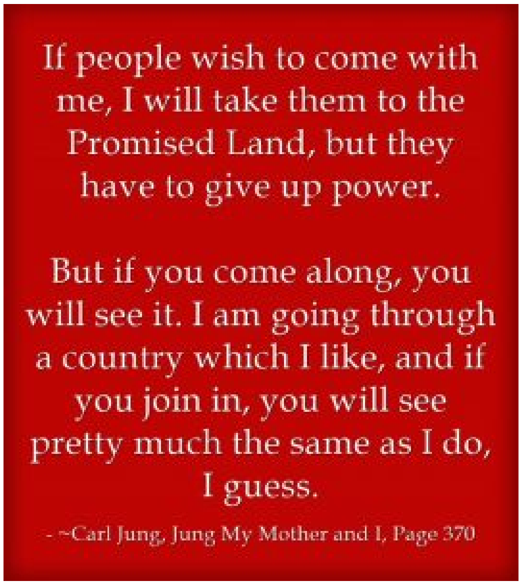
Simplicity is the g
art.

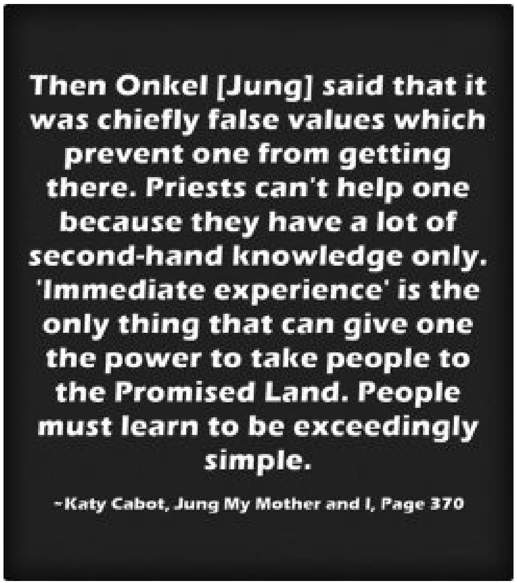
- Katy Cabot, Jung My
and I, Page 369



If people wish to come with me, I will take them to the Promised Land, but they have to give up power.

But if you come along, you will see it. I am going through a country which I like, and if you join in, you will see pretty much the same as I do, I guess.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 370



Then Onkel [Jung] said that it was chiefly false values which prevent one from getting there. Priests can't help one because they have a lot of second-hand knowledge only. 'Immediate experience' is the only thing that can give one the power to take people to the Promised Land. People must learn to be exceedingly simple.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 370

Without the [Psychological] Clu there would be nothing, no patie no students to exchange ideas.
[Jung] had to hang onto it and ke it together. It would be a pity to it go, he added.

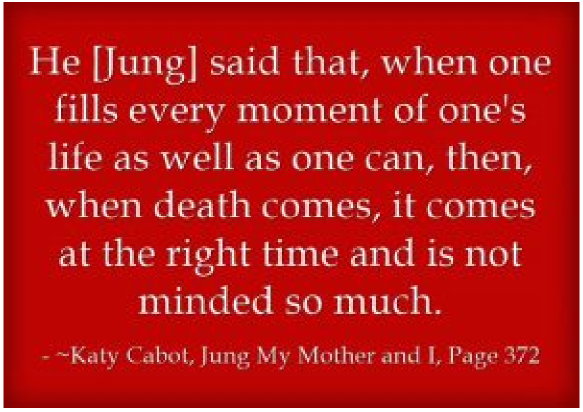
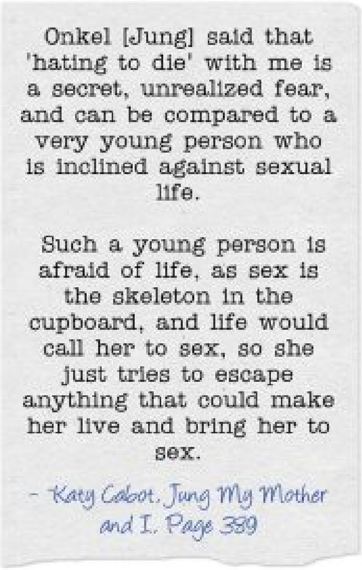
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 37



He [Jung] said that, when one fills every moment of one's life as well as one can, then, when death comes, it comes at the right time and is not minded so much.

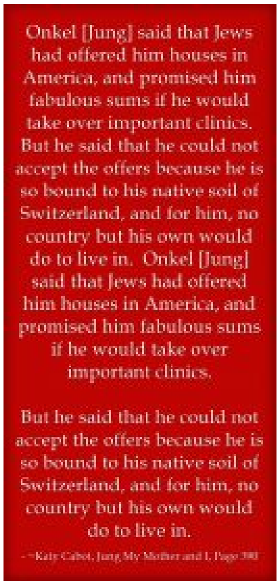
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 372



Onkel [Jung] said that 'hating to die' with me is a secret, unrealized fear, and can be compared to a very young person who is inclined against sexual life.

Such a young person is afraid of life, as sex is the skeleton in the cupboard, and life would call her to sex, so she just tries to escape anything that could make her live and bring her to sex.

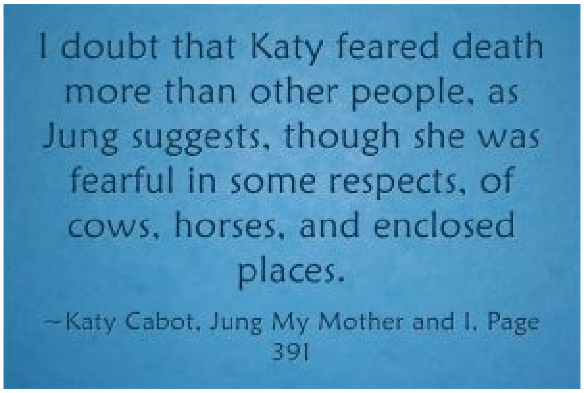
- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 389



Onkel [Jung] said that Jews had offered him houses in America, and promised him fabulous sums if he would take over important clinics. But he said that he could not accept the offers because he is so bound to his native soil of Switzerland, and for him, no country but his own would do to live in. Onkel [Jung] said that Jews had offered him houses in America, and promised him fabulous sums if he would take over important clinics.

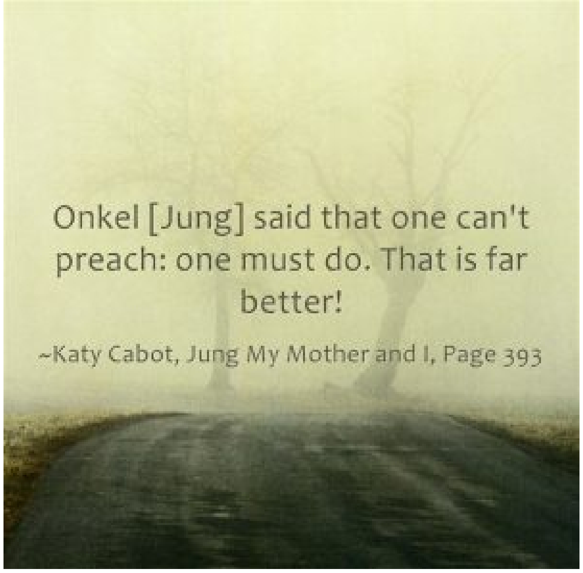
But he said that he could not accept the offers because he is so bound to his native soil of Switzerland, and for him, no country but his own would do to live in.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 390



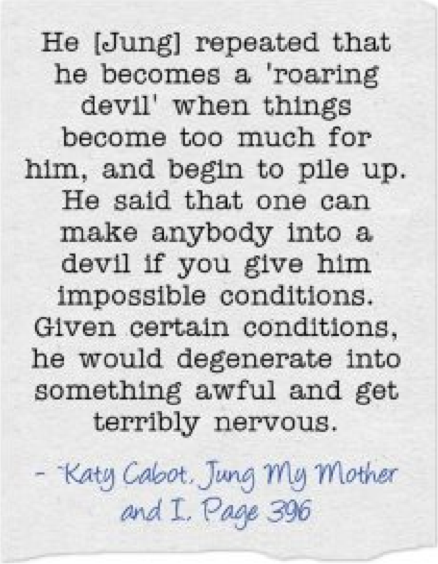
I doubt that Katy feared death more than other people, as Jung suggests, though she was fearful in some respects, of cows, horses, and enclosed places.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 391



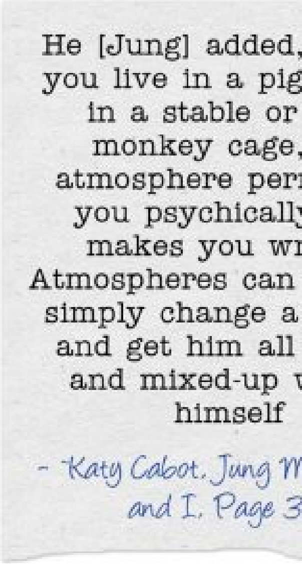
Onkel [Jung] said that one can't preach: one must do. That is far better!

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 393



He [Jung] repeated that he becomes a 'roaring devil' when things become too much for him, and begin to pile up. He said that one can make anybody into a devil if you give him impossible conditions. Given certain conditions, he would degenerate into something awful and get terribly nervous.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 396



He [Jung] added,
you live in a pig in a stable or monkey cage, atmosphere per you psychically makes you wr Atmospheres can simply change a and get him all and mixed-up himself

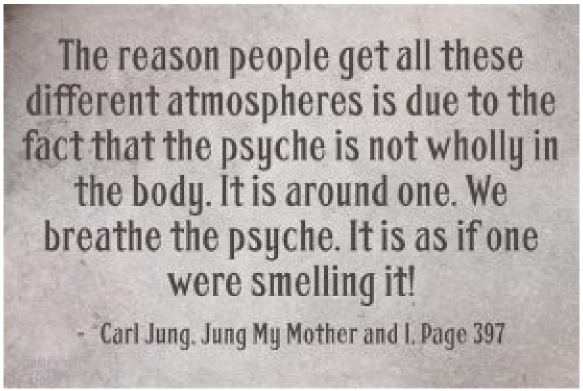
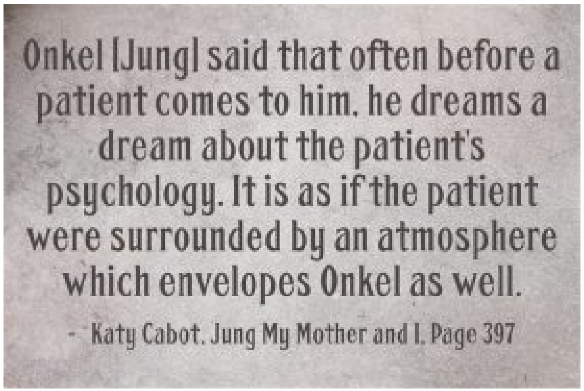
- Katy Cabot, Jung M
and I, Page 3



The reason people get all these different atmospheres is due to the fact that the psyche is not wholly in the body. It is around one. We breathe the psyche. It is as if one were smelling it!

- Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 397



Onkel [Jung] said that often before a patient comes to him, he dreams a dream about the patient's psychology. It is as if the patient were surrounded by an atmosphere which envelopes Onkel as well.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 397

The psyche is like the room. As soon gets within the psychic bubble, h by it. The worst caught from peo realizes what at do

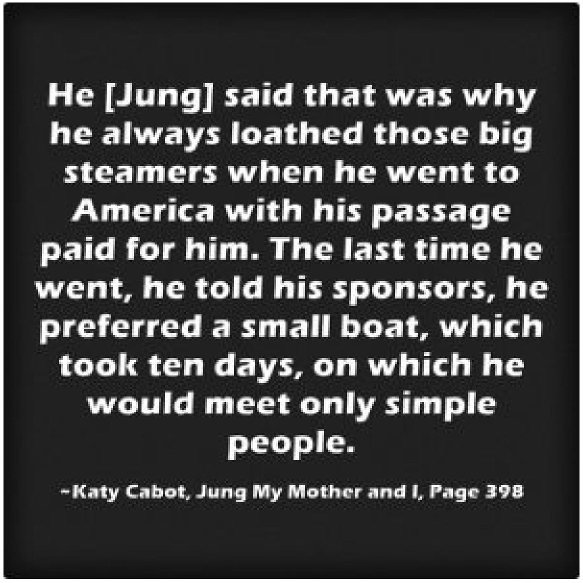
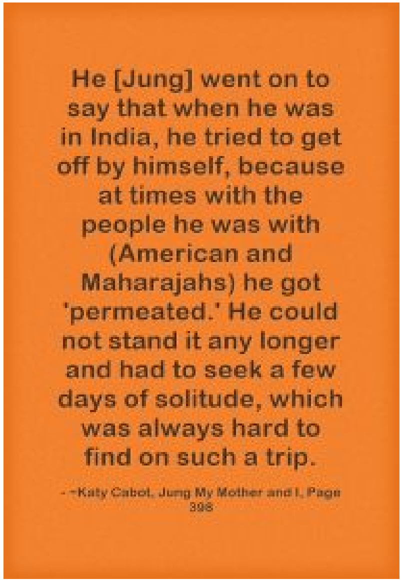
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mo



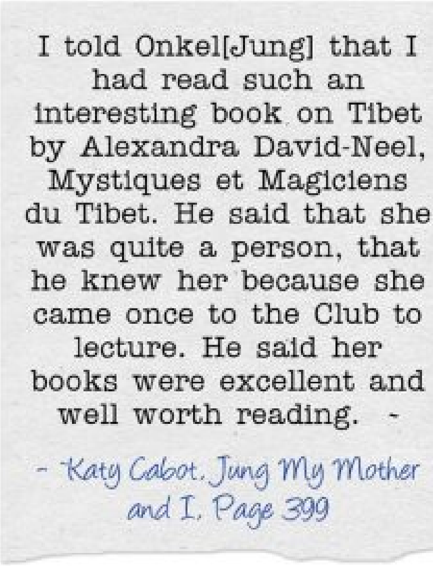
He [Jung] said that was why he always loathed those big steamers when he went to America with his passage paid for him. The last time he went, he told his sponsors, he preferred a small boat, which took ten days, on which he would meet only simple people.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 398



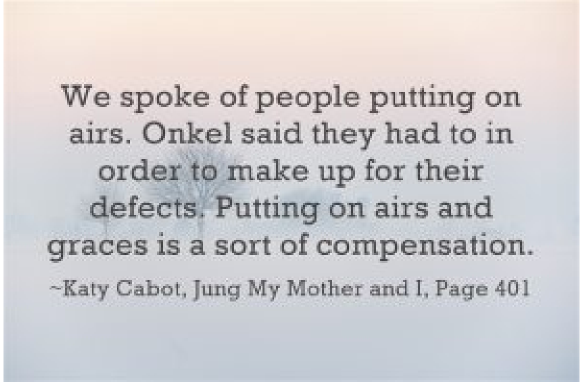
He [Jung] went on to say that when he was in India, he tried to get off by himself, because at times with the people he was with (American and Maharajahs) he got 'permeated.' He could not stand it any longer and had to seek a few days of solitude, which was always hard to find on such a trip.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 398



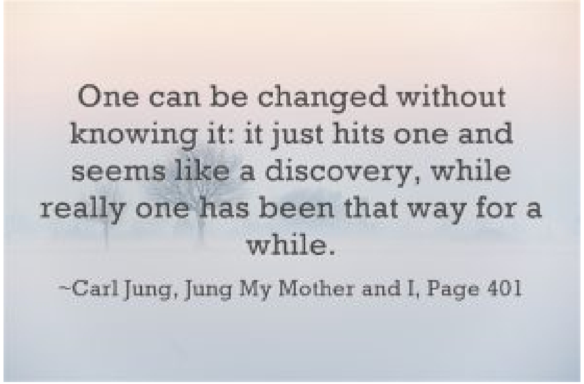
I told Onkel[Jung] that I had read such an interesting book on Tibet by Alexandra David-Neel, Mystiques et Magiciens du Tibet. He said that she was quite a person, that he knew her because she came once to the Club to lecture. He said her books were excellent and well worth reading. -

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 399



We spoke of people putting on airs. Onkel said they had to in order to make up for their defects. Putting on airs and graces is a sort of compensation.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401



One can be changed without knowing it: it just hits one and seems like a discovery, while really one has been that way for a while.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401

He [Jung] said that pe take on foolish airs knowing it: it is a
'possession,' just as if kind of evil gets into th the while, they do not they are posses

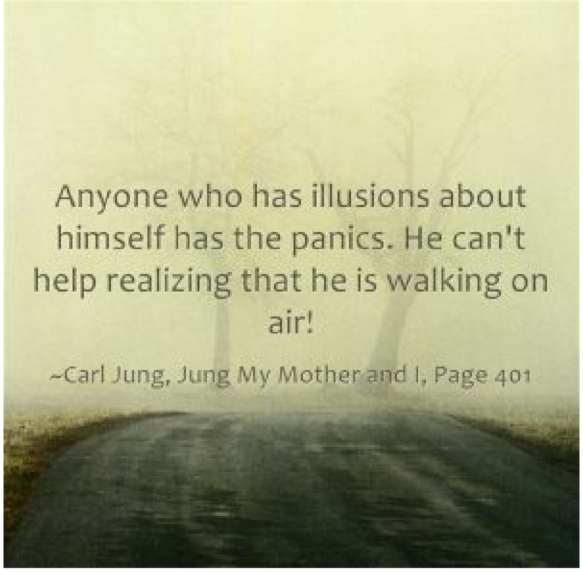
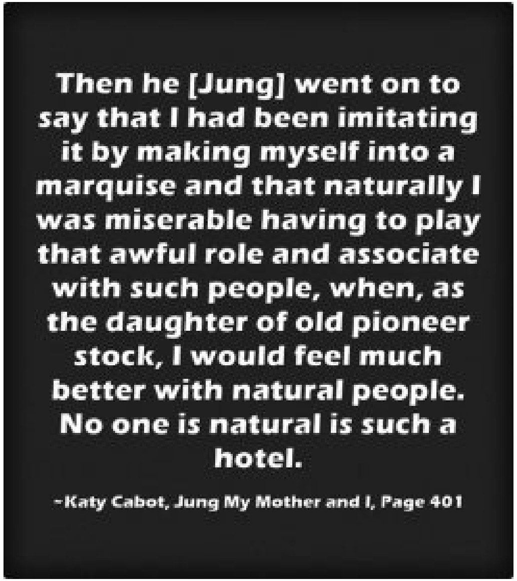
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother a



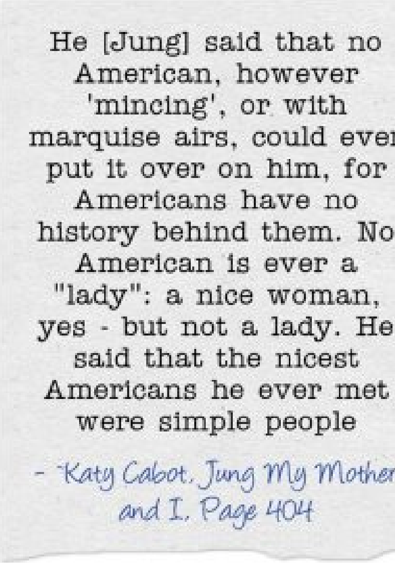
Anyone who has illusions about himself has the panics. He can't help realizing that he is walking on air!

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401



Then he [Jung] went on to say that I had been imitating it by making myself into a marquise and that naturally I was miserable having to play that awful role and associate with such people, when, as the daughter of old pioneer stock, I would feel much better with natural people. No one is natural is such a hotel.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 401



He [Jung] said that no
American, however
'mincing', or with marquise airs, could eve put it over on him, for Americans have no history behind them. No American is ever a
"lady": a nice woman, yes - but not a lady. He said that the nicest
Americans he ever met were simple people

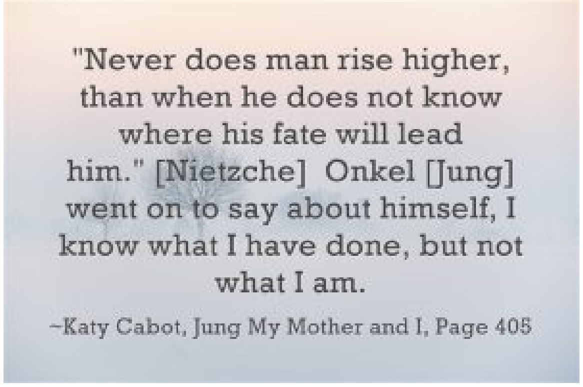
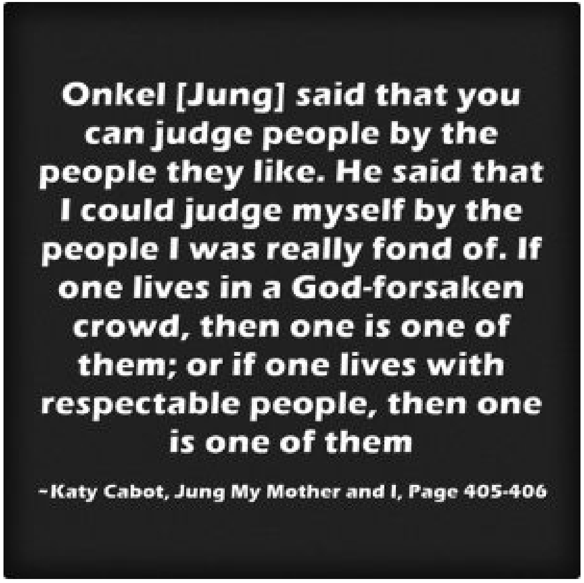
- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother
and I, Page 404



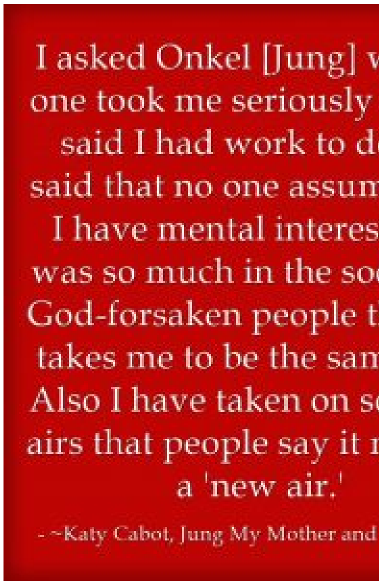
"Never does man rise higher, than when he does not know where his fate will lead him." [Nietzche] Onkel [Jung] went on to say about himself, I know what I have done, but not what I am.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 405



Onkel [Jung] said that you can judge people by the people they like. He said that I could judge myself by the people I was really fond of. If one lives in a God-forsaken crowd, then one is one of them; or if one lives with respectable people, then one is one of them

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 405-406



I asked Onkel [Jung] w
one took me seriously said I had work to d said that no one assum
I have mental interes was so much in the so God-forsaken people t takes me to be the sam
Also I have taken on s airs that people say it a 'new air.'

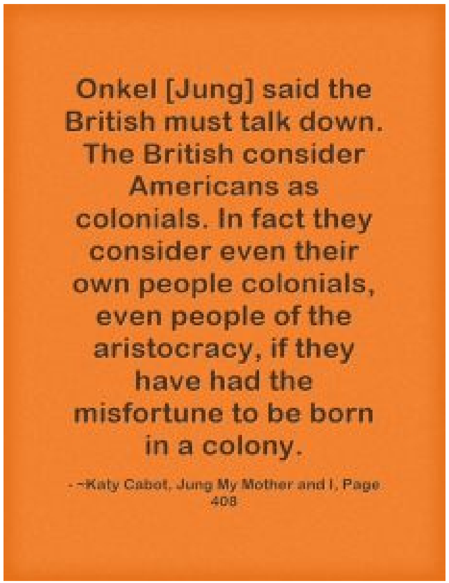
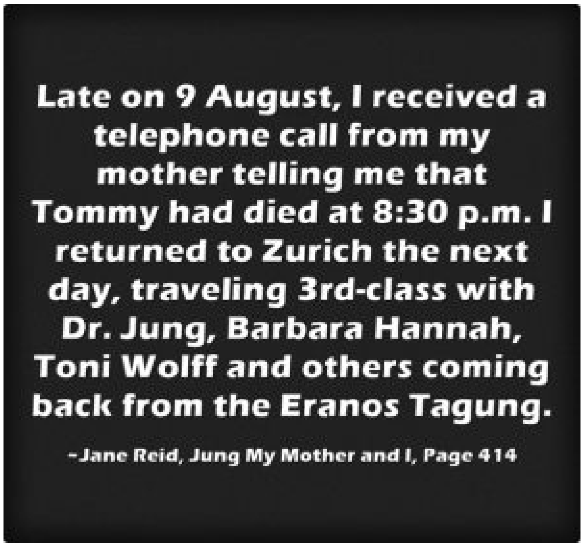
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and



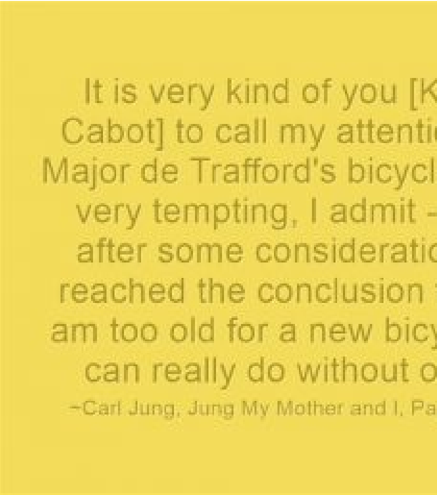
Onkel [Jung] said the British must talk down. The British consider Americans as colonials. In fact they consider even their own people colonials, even people of the aristocracy, if they have had the misfortune to be born in a colony.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 408



Late on 9 August, I received a telephone call from my mother telling me that Tommy had died at 8:30 p.m. I returned to Zurich the next day, traveling 3rd-class with Dr. Jung, Barbara Hannah, Toni Wolff and others coming back from the Eranos Tagung.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 414



It is very kind of you [K
Cabot] to call my attenti
Major de Trafford's bicycl very tempting, I admit - after some consideratio reached the conclusion am too old for a new bicy can really do without o

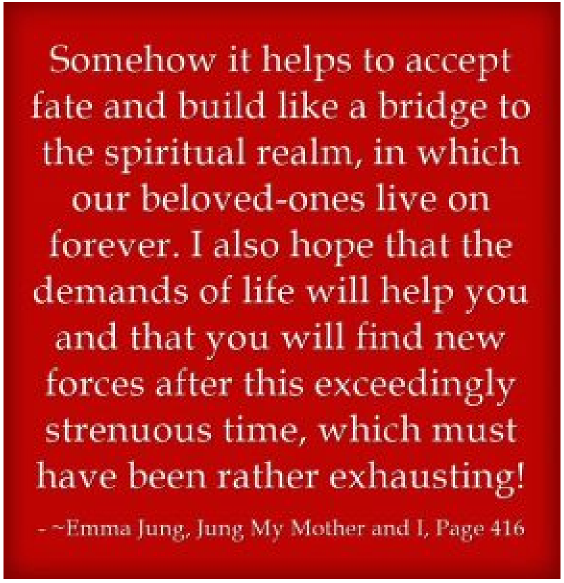
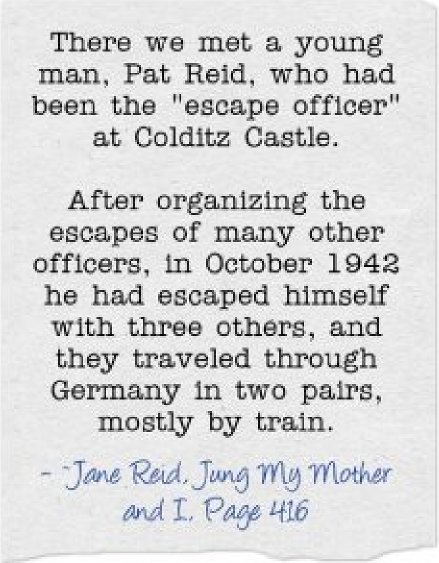
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Pa



Somehow it helps to accept fate and build like a bridge to the spiritual realm, in which our beloved-ones live on forever. I also hope that the demands of life will help you and that you will find new forces after this exceedingly strenuous time, which must have been rather exhausting!

- ~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 416



There we met a young man, Pat Reid, who had been the "escape officer" at Colditz Castle.

After organizing the escapes of many other officers, in October 1942 he had escaped himself with three others, and they traveled through Germany in two pairs, mostly by train.

- Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 416

My ambitious moth that when I had fin secretarial cours would be given a jo by Allen Dulles, w
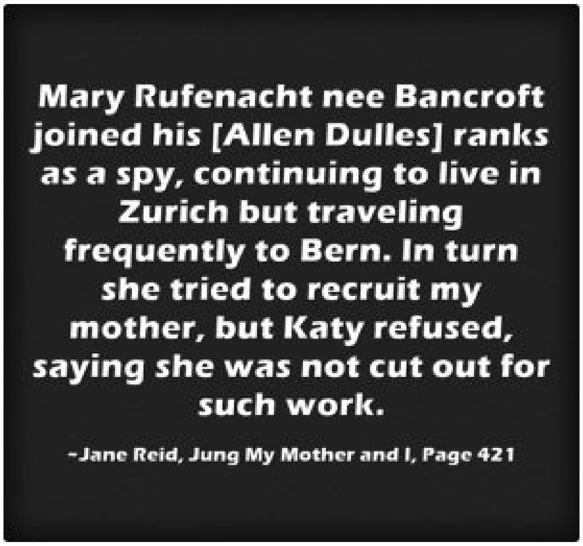
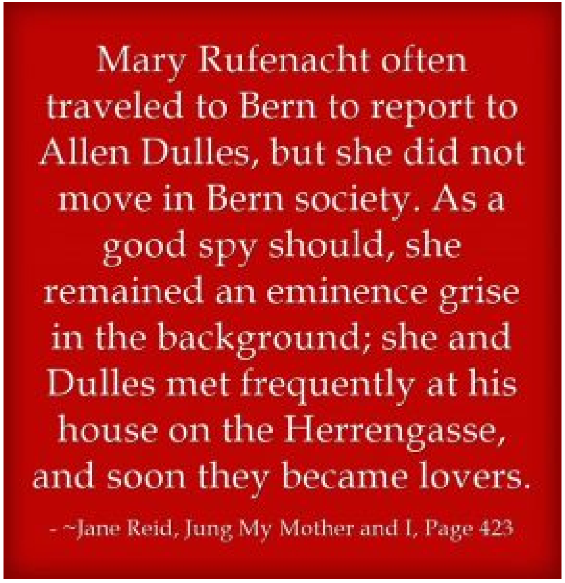
come to Bern in N
1942 from Washin
direct O.S.S. opera
Switzerlan

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother



Mary Rufenacht nee Bancroft joined his [Allen Dulles] ranks as a spy, continuing to live in Zurich but traveling frequently to Bern. In turn she tried to recruit my mother, but Katy refused, saying she was not cut out for such work.

~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 421



Mary Rufenacht often traveled to Bern to report to Allen Dulles, but she did not move in Bern society. As a good spy should, she remained an eminence grise in the background; she and Dulles met frequently at his house on the Herrengasse, and soon they became lovers.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 423

Thanks to her int sees Katy more
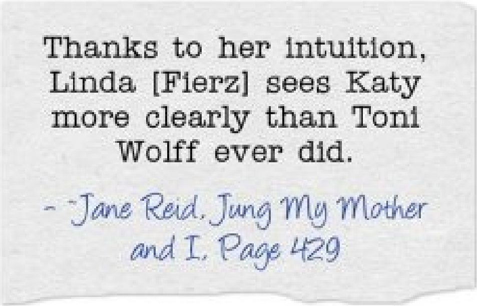
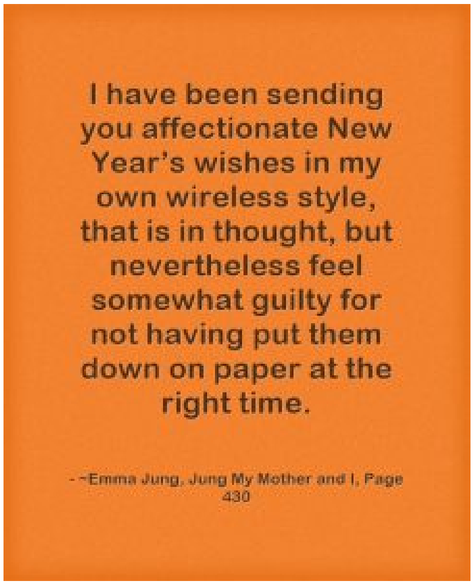
Toni Wolff e

~Jane Reid, Jung My M
429



Thanks to her intuition, Linda [Fierz] sees Katy more clearly than Toni Wolff ever did.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 429



I have been sending you affectionate New Year's wishes in my own wireless style, that is in thought, but nevertheless feel somewhat guilty for not having put them down on paper at the right time.

- ~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 430

It is a pity you cannot be here the Club discussion; your contribution is very valuable me and I hope to be able to ge into the discussion, for you ha [come?] upon a very importa point.

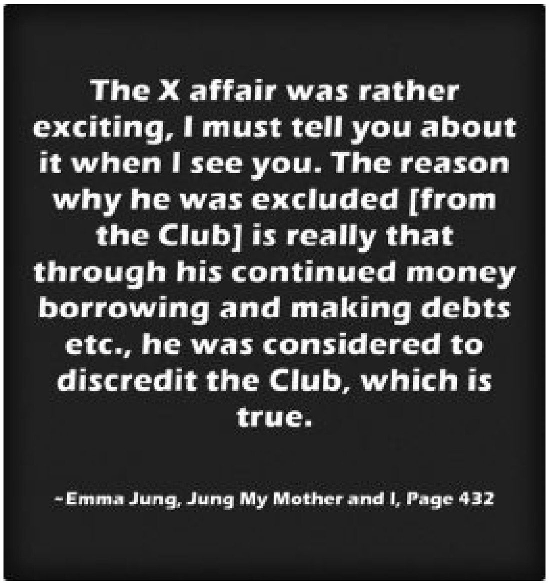
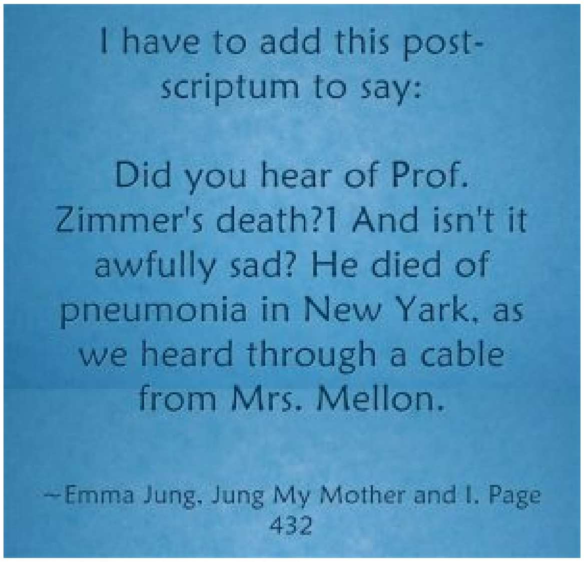
~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page



The X affair was rather exciting, I must tell you about it when I see you. The reason why he was excluded [from the Club] is really that through his continued money borrowing and making debts etc., he was considered to discredit the Club, which is true.

~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 432



I have to add this post-scriptum to say:

Did you hear of Prof. Zimmer's death?1 And isn't it awfully sad? He died of pneumonia in New Yark, as we heard through a cable from Mrs. Mellon.

~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 432

He [Heinrich Zimm could have done s fine work and things
nobody else was abl
And for his family means a terrible lo feel such pity for p
Mrs. Zimmer, who lost her home and her husband.

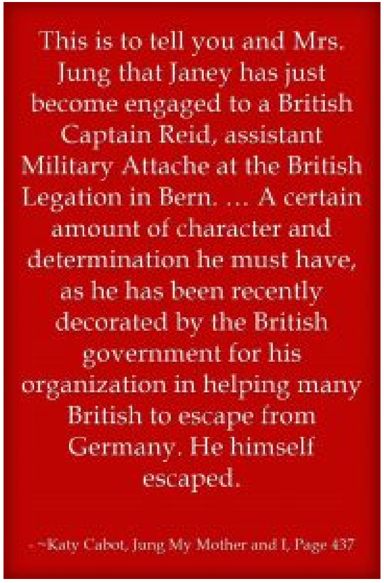
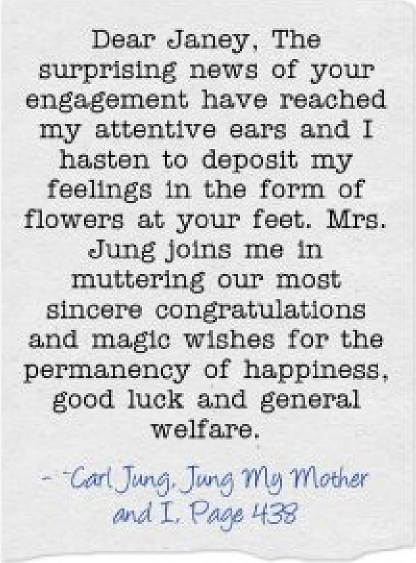
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My M
and I, Page 432



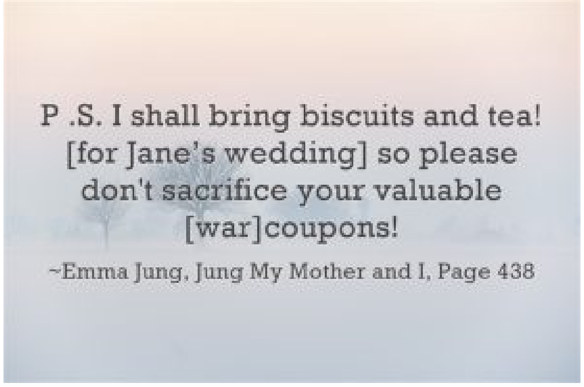
This is to tell you and Mrs. Jung that Janey has just become engaged to a British Captain Reid, assistant Military Attache at the British Legation in Bern. ... A certain amount of character and determination he must have, as he has been recently decorated by the British government for his organization in helping many British to escape from Germany. He himself escaped.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 437



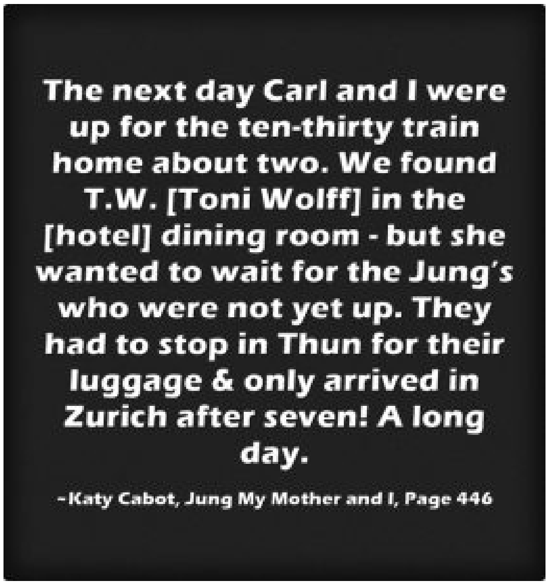
Dear Janey, The surprising news of your engagement have reached my attentive ears and I hasten to deposit my feelings in the form of flowers at your feet. Mrs. Jung joins me in muttering our most sincere congratulations and magic wishes for the permanency of happiness, good luck and general welfare.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 438



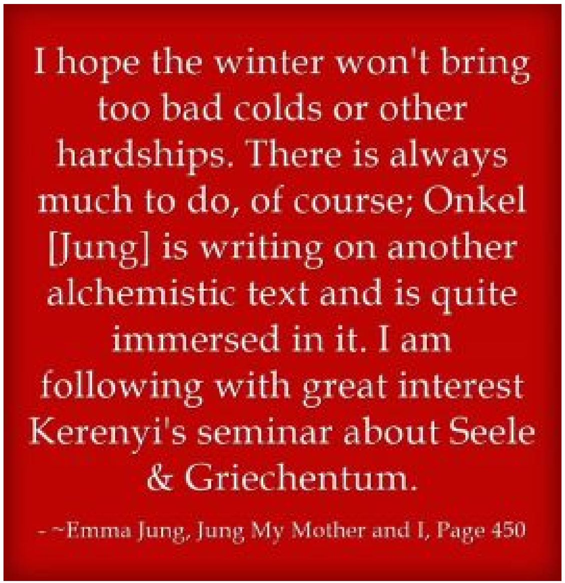
P .S. I shall bring biscuits and tea! [for Jane's wedding] so please don't sacrifice your valuable [war]coupons!

~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 438



The next day Carl and I were up for the ten-thirty train home about two. We found T.W. [Toni Wolff] in the [hotel] dining room - but she wanted to wait for the Jung's who were not yet up. They had to stop in Thun for their luggage & only arrived in Zurich after seven! A long day.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 446



I hope the winter won't bring too bad colds or other hardships. There is always much to do, of course; Onkel [Jung] is writing on another alchemistic text and is quite immersed in it. I am following with great interest Kerenyi's seminar about Seele & Griechentum.

- ~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 450

On 11 February, Katy, wh see both Jung's, was w while Jung was still ou his way home he slipp of ice and broke h

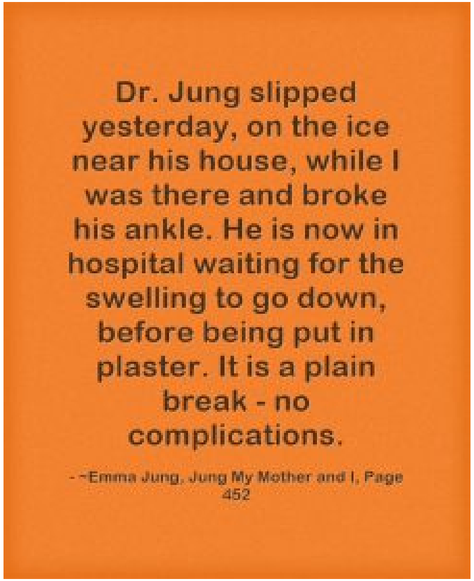
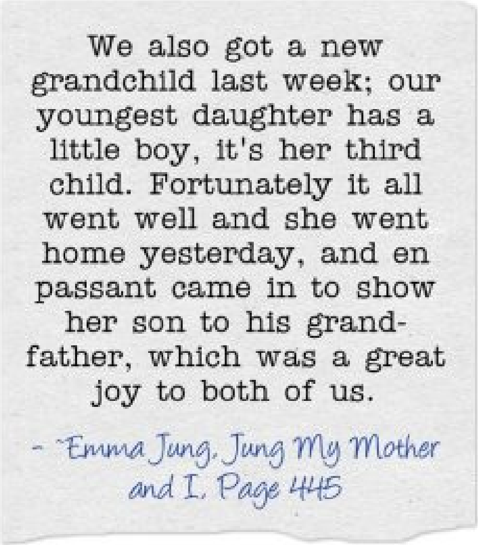
- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother



Dr. Jung slipped yesterday, on the ice near his house, while I was there and broke his ankle. He is now in hospital waiting for the swelling to go down, before being put in plaster. It is a plain break - no complications.

- ~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 452



We also got a new grandchild last week; our youngest daughter has a little boy, it's her third child. Fortunately it all went well and she went home yesterday, and en passant came in to show her son to his grandfather, which was a great joy to both of us.

- ~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 445

As I walked into Onk [Jung's] study today, h sitting and writing at table in front of his wi wearing his fur-lined dr gown and skull cap.
looked rather like Eras
Faust, or some medie alchemist. I had a deci medieval impression w came in.

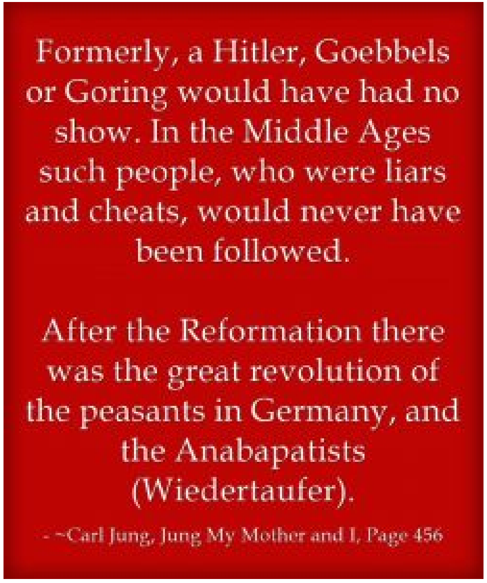
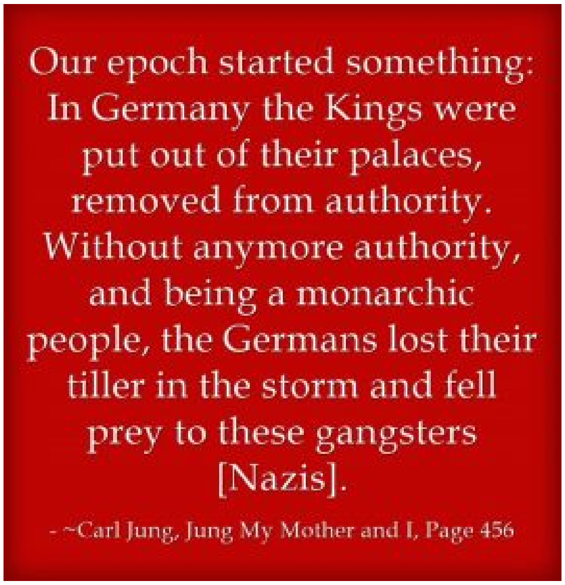
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, P



Formerly, a Hitler, Goebbels or Goring would have had no show. In the Middle Ages such people, who were liars and cheats, would never have been followed.

After the Reformation there was the great revolution of the peasants in Germany, and the Anabapatists (Wiedertaufer).

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 456



Our epoch started something: In Germany the Kings were put out of their palaces, removed from authority. Without anymore authority, and being a monarchic people, the Germans lost their tiller in the storm and fell prey to these gangsters [Nazis].

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 456

In Catholicism you h to swallow so many that you can't dige them. If you ask a p what is the Trinity, does not know. You have to believe it,
that is the nut with shell.

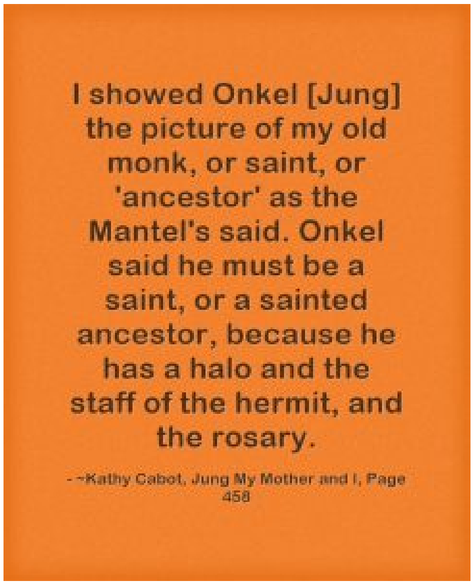
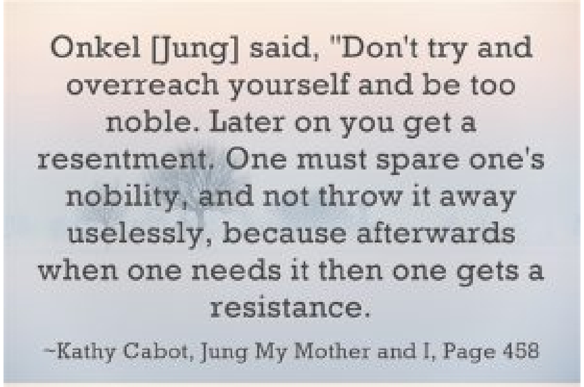
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My M
and I, Page 457



I showed Onkel [Jung] the picture of my old monk, or saint, or 'ancestor' as the Mantel's said. Onkel said he must be a saint, or a sainted ancestor, because he has a halo and the staff of the hermit, and the rosary.

- ~Kathy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 458



Onkel [Jung] said, "Don't try and overreach yourself and be too noble. Later on you get a resentment. One must spare one's nobility, and not throw it away uselessly, because afterwards when one needs it then one gets a resistance.

~Kathy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 458

He [Jung] said that one couldn't take things as o wanted to take them. O should take things as the present themselves, an when a thing presents its as important and gives o serious reason, or seriou impression, take it as important.

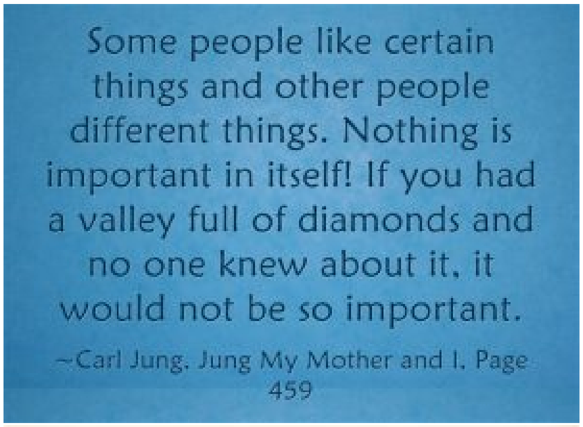
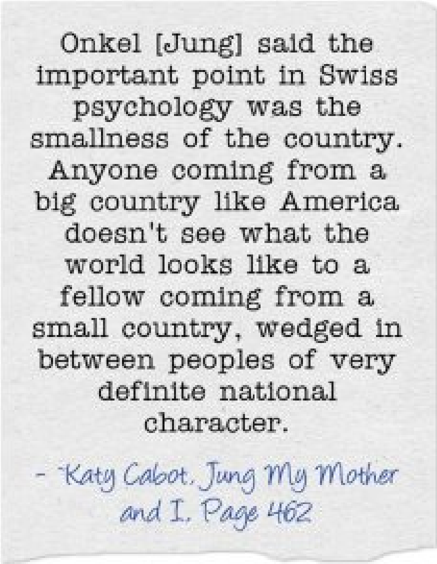
~Kathy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page



Some people like certain things and other people different things. Nothing is important in itself! If you had a valley full of diamonds and no one knew about it, it would not be so important.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 459



Onkel [Jung] said the important point in Swiss psychology was the smallness of the country. Anyone coming from a big country like America doesn't see what the world looks like to a fellow coming from a small country, wedged in between peoples of very definite national character.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 462

Onkel [Jung] said that de Ne real talent, but would not the ANIMA (his soul) and so himself.

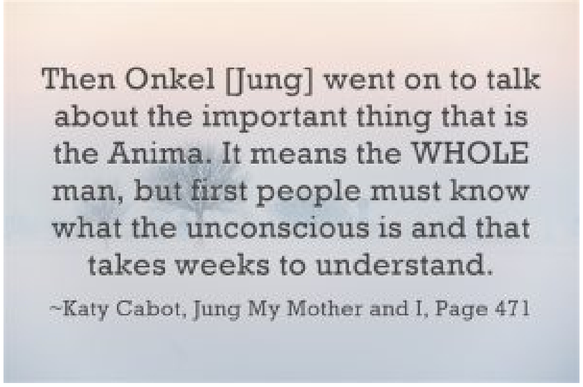
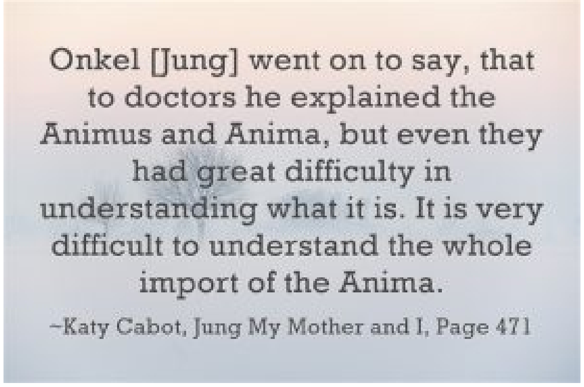
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I,



Then Onkel [Jung] went on to talk about the important thing that is the Anima. It means the WHOLE man, but first people must know what the unconscious is and that takes weeks to understand.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 471



Onkel [Jung] went on to say, that to doctors he explained the Animus and Anima, but even they had great difficulty in understanding what it is. It is very difficult to understand the whole import of the Anima.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 471

The Anima is like liv planet where no hun appeared, then sudder appears (the Anima) a surprised!

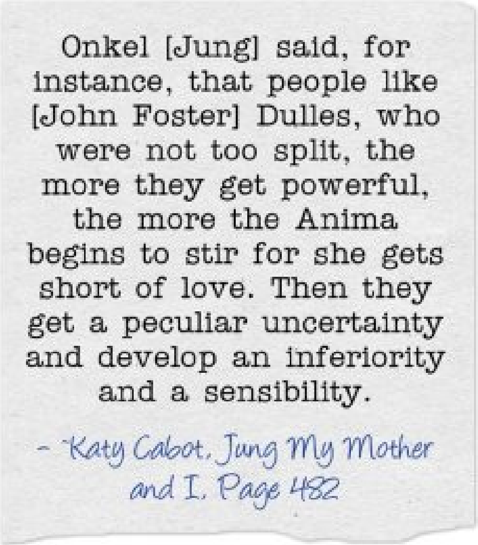
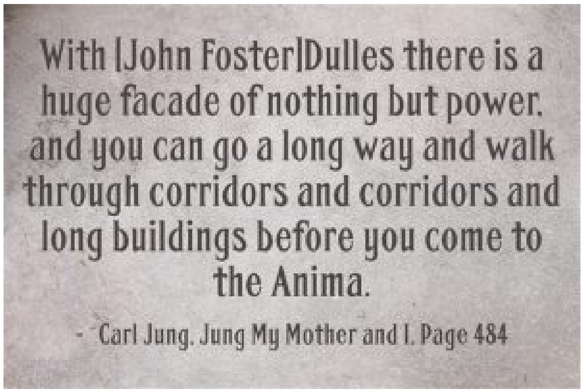
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother a



Onkel [Jung] said, for instance, that people like [John Foster] Dulles, who were not too split, the more they get powerful, the more the Anima begins to stir for she gets short of love. Then they get a peculiar uncertainty and develop an inferiority and a sensibility.

- Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 482



With [John Foster]Dulles there is a huge facade of nothing but power, and you can go a long way and walk through corridors and corridors and long buildings before you come to the Anima.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 484

I asked Onkel to go on, terribly lonely to just drift try to see p accept thing come along, one's eyes op comes along best one

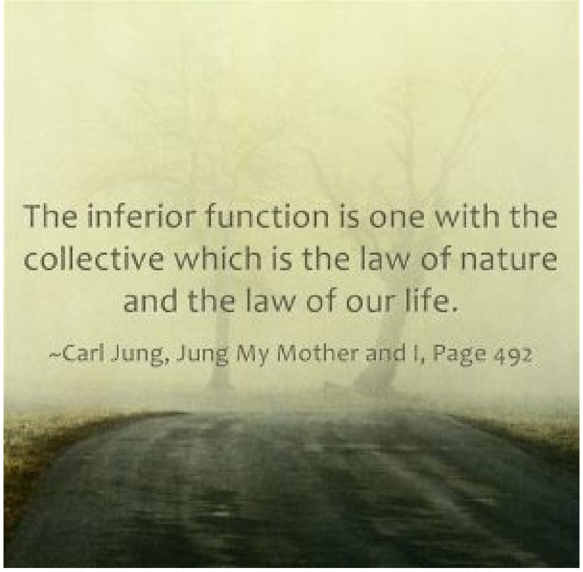
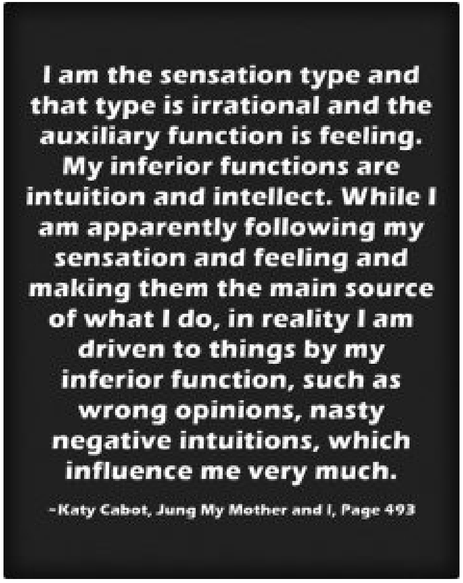
- Katy Cabot, Ju
and I, Pa



The inferior function is one with the collective which is the law of nature and the law of our life.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 492



I am the sensation type and that type is irrational and the auxiliary function is feeling. My inferior functions are intuition and intellect. While I am apparently following my sensation and feeling and making them the main source of what I do, in reality I am driven to things by my inferior function, such as wrong opinions, nasty negative intuitions, which influence me very much.

~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 493

In my case intellect intuition are the great of evil. The more I bu my mind, the more I d
the fatal influence of factors, as I get them control!!!!!

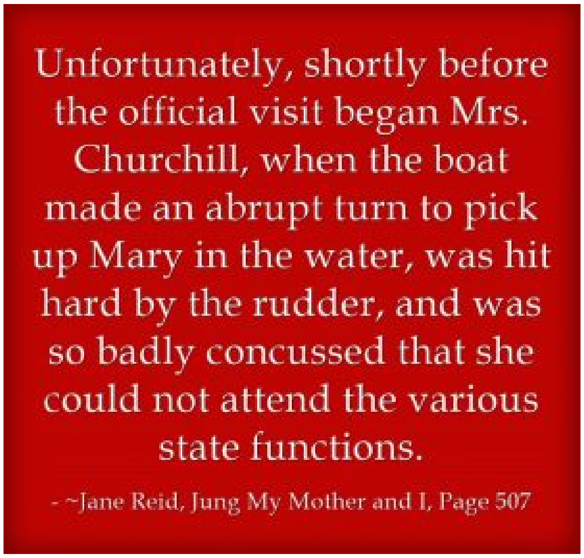
~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother a
494

During Katy's Italian journey in the summer of 1946 Winston Churchill was invited to Switzerland with his wife Clementine and youngest daughter Mary, for an official visit.

But first they spent three weeks resting in a private house at Bursinell on Lake Geneva.

- Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 507



Unfortunately, shortly before the official visit began Mrs. Churchill, when the boat made an abrupt turn to pick up Mary in the water, was hit hard by the rudder, and was so badly concussed that she could not attend the various state functions.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 507

Then the Churchills number of recept finally a late one a Legation to which also invite

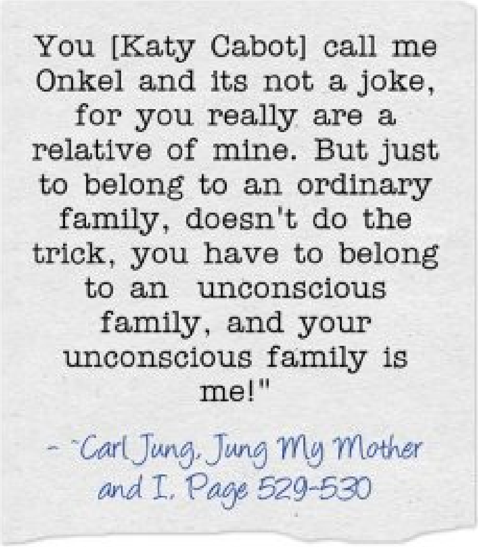
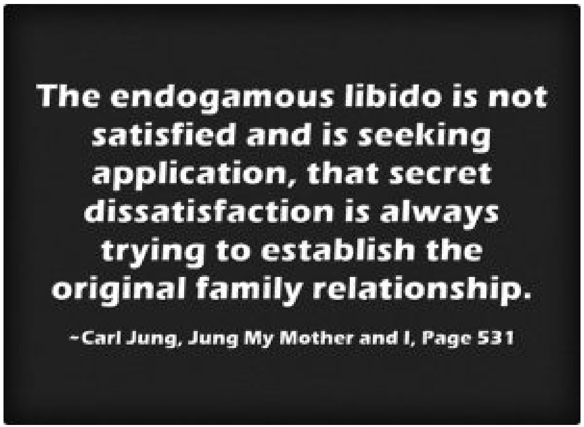
~Jane Reid, Jung My Mot
508



You [Katy Cabot] call me Onkel and its not a joke, for you really are a relative of mine. But just to belong to an ordinary family, doesn't do the trick, you have to belong to an unconscious family, and your unconscious family is me!"

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529-530



The endogamous libido is not satisfied and is seeking application, that secret dissatisfaction is always trying to establish the original family relationship.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

…the convents atter establish the origina relation on a spiritu (Frater - brotherhoo sisterhood.) "It prove great satisfaction for he [Jung] said, "as people really love other. As long as th that it LIVED

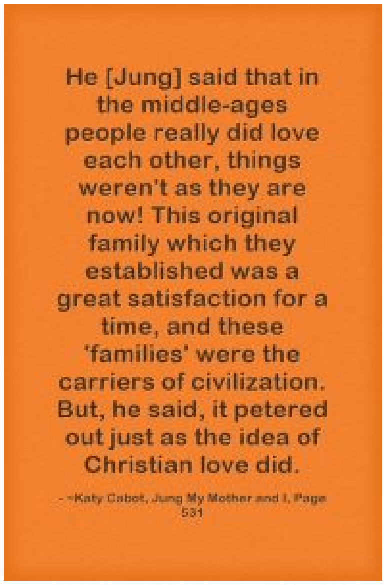
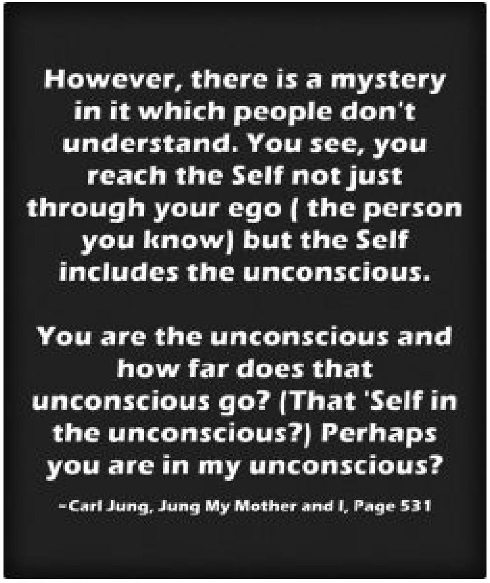
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother a



He [Jung] said that in the middle-ages people really did love each other, things weren't as they are now! This original family which they established was a great satisfaction for a time, and these 'families' were the carriers of civilization. But, he said, it petered out just as the idea of Christian love did.

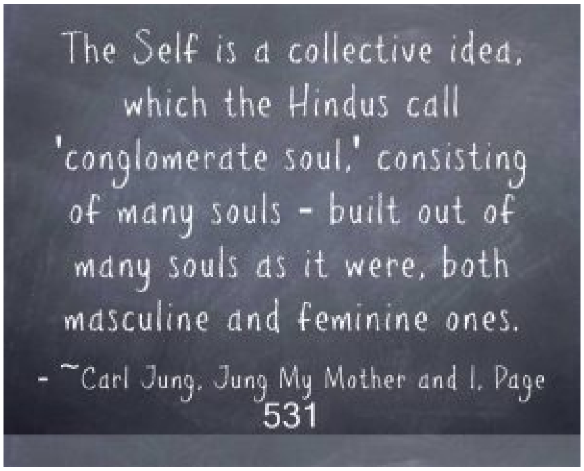
- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531



However, there is a mystery in it which people don't understand. You see, you reach the Self not just through your ego (the person you know) but the Self includes the unconscious.

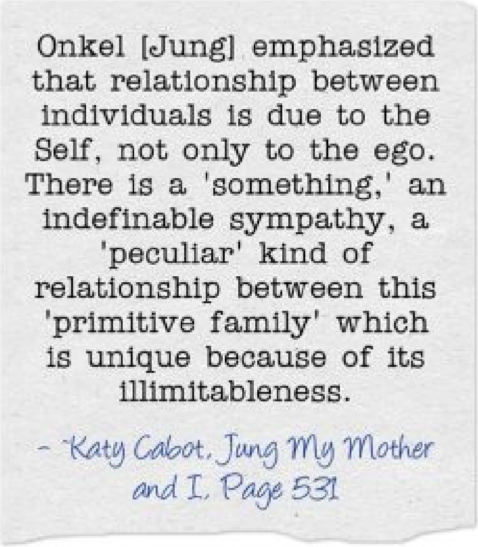
You are the unconscious and how far does that unconscious go? (That 'Self in the unconscious?) Perhaps you are in my unconscious?

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531



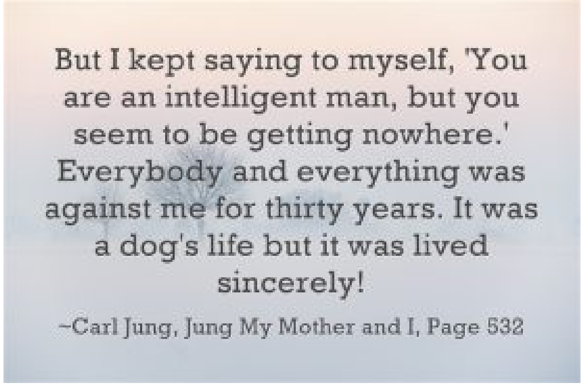
The Self is a collective idea, which the Hindus call 'conglomerate soul,' consisting of many souls - built out of many souls as it were, both masculine and feminine ones.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531



Onkel [Jung] emphasized that relationship between individuals is due to the Self, not only to the ego. There is a 'something,' an indefinable sympathy, a 'peculiar' kind of relationship between this 'primitive family' which is unique because of its illimitableness.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531



But I kept saying to myself, 'You are an intelligent man, but you seem to be getting nowhere.' Everybody and everything was against me for thirty years. It was a dog's life but it was lived sincerely!

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 532

It is a great thi stand a situation that comes to you and only then do to where you bel
finally got to wh belonged. If you h scrub your floor t
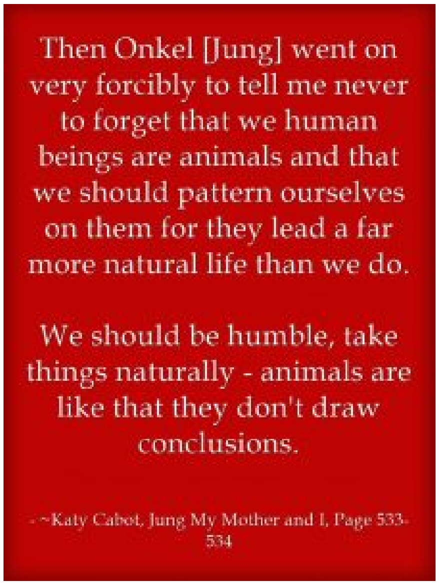
it well.

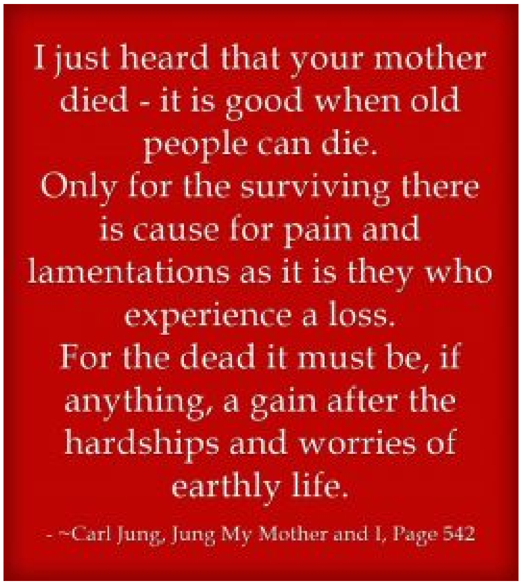
- ~Carl Jung, Jung My
and I, Page 53



Then Onkel [Jung] went on very forcibly to tell me never to forget that we human beings are animals and that we should pattern ourselves on them for they lead a far more natural life than we do.

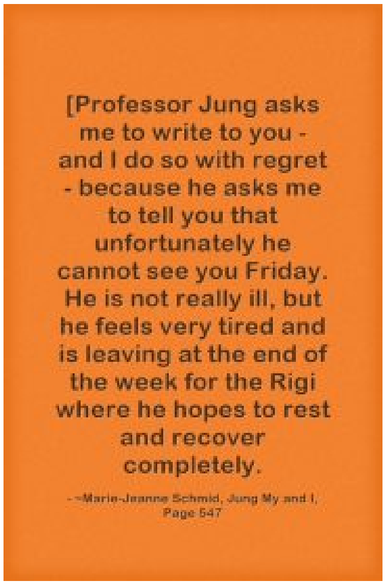
We should be humble, take things naturally - animals are like that they don't draw conclusions.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 533-534



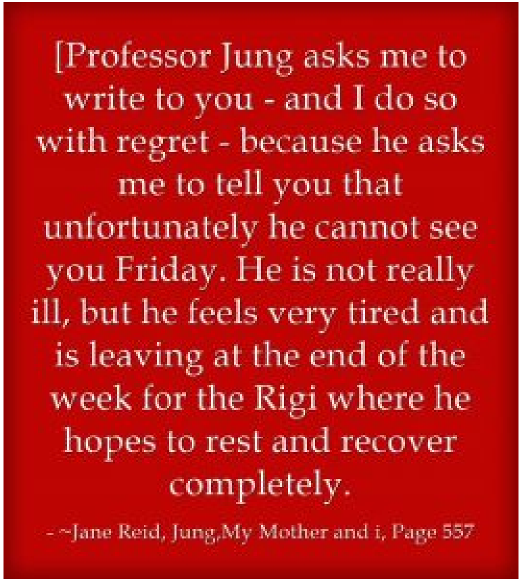
I just heard that your mother died - it is good when old people can die.
Only for the surviving there is cause for pain and lamentations as it is they who experience a loss.
For the dead it must be, if anything, a gain after the hardships and worries of earthly life.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 542



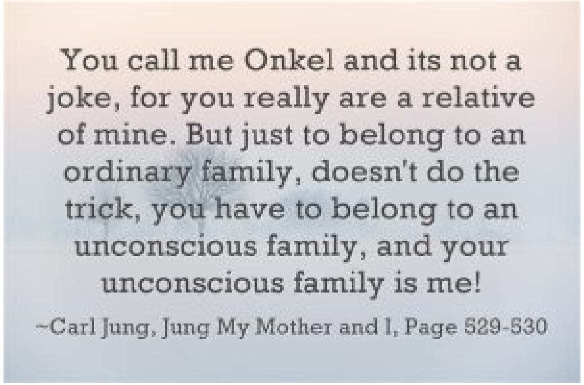
[Professor Jung asks me to write to you - and I do so with regret - because he asks me to tell you that unfortunately he cannot see you Friday. He is not really ill, but he feels very tired and is leaving at the end of the week for the Rigi where he hopes to rest and recover completely.

- ~Marie-Jeanne Schmid, Jung My and I, Page 547



[Professor Jung asks me to write to you - and I do so with regret - because he asks me to tell you that unfortunately he cannot see you Friday. He is not really ill, but he feels very tired and is leaving at the end of the week for the Rigi where he hopes to rest and recover completely.

- ~Jane Reid, Jung,My Mother and i, Page 557



You call me Onkel and its not a joke, for you really are a relative of mine. But just to belong to an ordinary family, doesn't do the trick, you have to belong to an unconscious family, and your unconscious family is me!

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529-530

The endogamous not satisfied a seeking applicatio secret dissatisfac always trying to e
the original fa relationshi

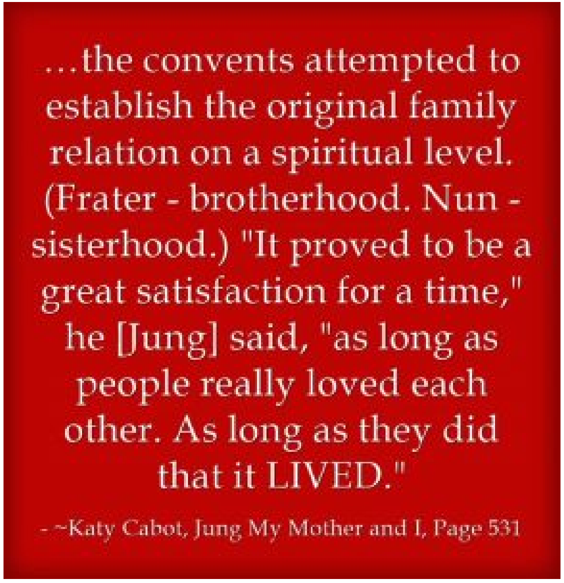
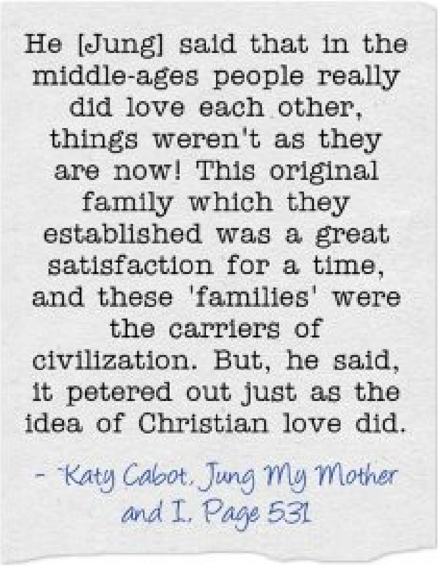
- ~Carl Jung, Jung M
and I, Page 5



...the convents attempted to establish the original family relation on a spiritual level. (Frater - brotherhood. Nun - sisterhood.) "It proved to be a great satisfaction for a time," he [Jung] said, "as long as people really loved each other. As long as they did that it LIVED."

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531



He [Jung] said that in the middle-ages people really did love each other, things weren't as they are now! This original family which they established was a great satisfaction for a time, and these 'families' were the carriers of civilization. But, he said, it petered out just as the idea of Christian love did.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531

"However, there is a m in it which people d understand. You see reach the Self not j through your ego (the you know) but the includes the unconscio are the unconscious ar far does that unconsci (That 'Self in the unconscious?) Perhap are in my unconscio

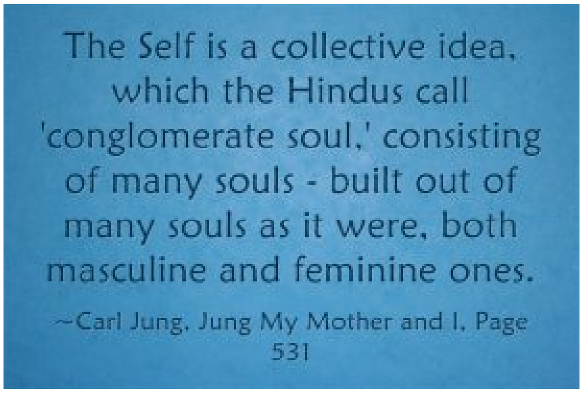
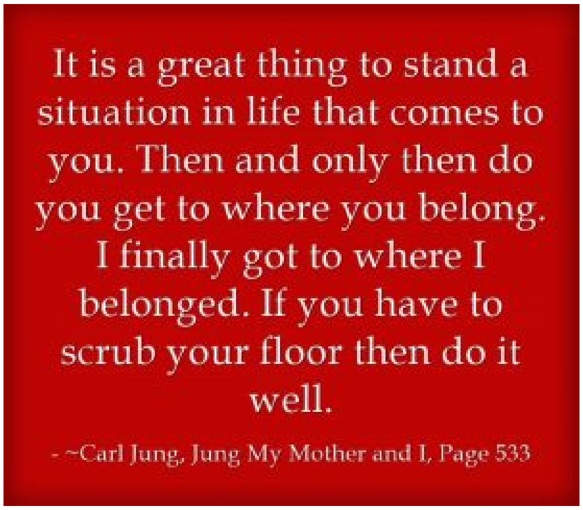
~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I,



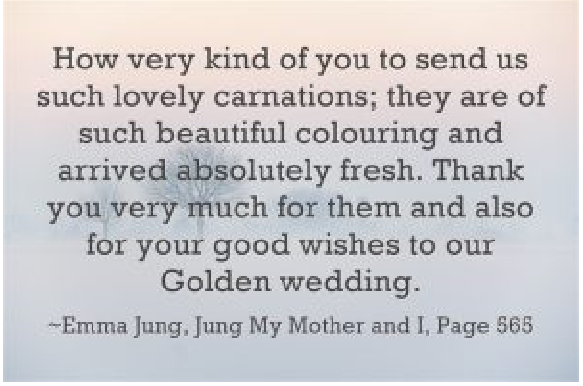
The Self is a collective idea, which the Hindus call 'conglomerate soul,' consisting of many souls - built out of many souls as it were, both masculine and feminine ones.

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531



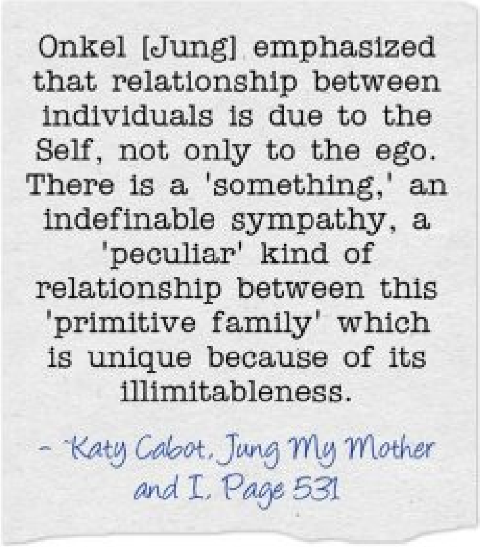
It is a great thing to stand a situation in life that comes to you. Then and only then do you get to where you belong. I finally got to where I belonged. If you have to scrub your floor then do it well.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 533



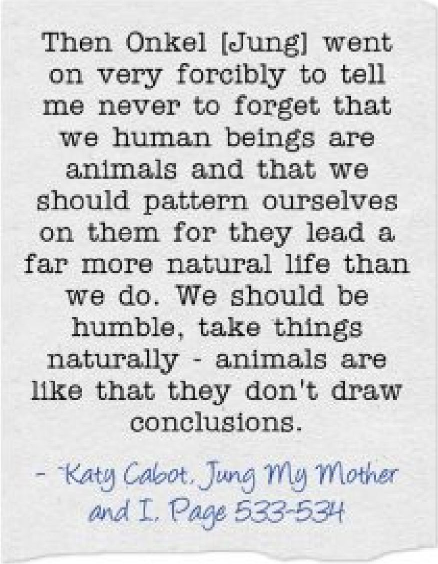
How very kind of you to send us such lovely carnations; they are of such beautiful colouring and arrived absolutely fresh. Thank you very much for them and also for your good wishes to our Golden wedding.

~Emma Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 565



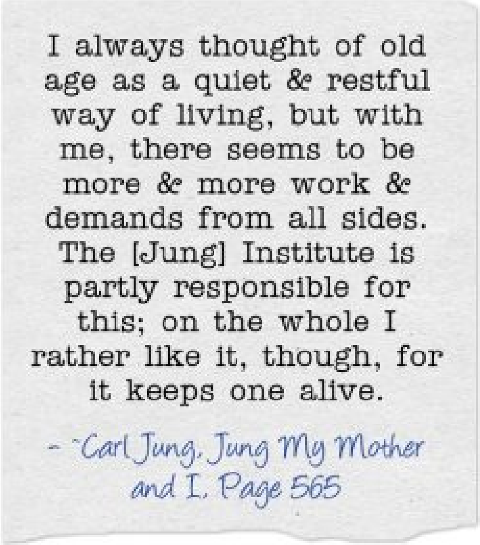
Onkel [Jung] emphasized that relationship between individuals is due to the Self, not only to the ego. There is a 'something,' an indefinable sympathy, a 'peculiar' kind of relationship between this 'primitive family' which is unique because of its illimitableness.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 531



Then Onkel [Jung] went on very forcibly to tell me never to forget that we human beings are animals and that we should pattern ourselves on them for they lead a far more natural life than we do. We should be humble, take things naturally - animals are like that they don't draw conclusions.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 533-534



I always thought of old age as a quiet & restful way of living, but with me, there seems to be more & more work & demands from all sides. The [Jung] Institute is partly responsible for this; on the whole I rather like it, though, for it keeps one alive.

- ~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 565

But I kept saying to my are an intelligent mar seem to be getting n
Everybody and every against me for thirty ye a dog's life but it wa
sincerely!

~Carl Jung, Jung My Mother ar

Katy was now out in the "living," as Jung urged his p to do, but she never forg Jung's. The more she "live more frequent were her tributes to them.

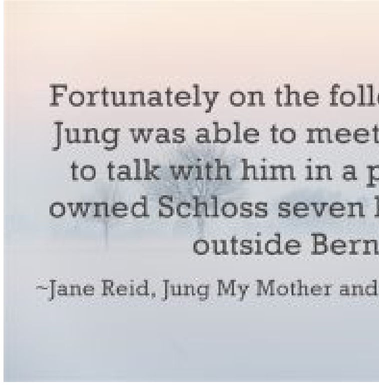
- ~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and I, I



Fortunately on the foll
Jung was able to meet to talk with him in a p owned Schloss seven l outside Bern

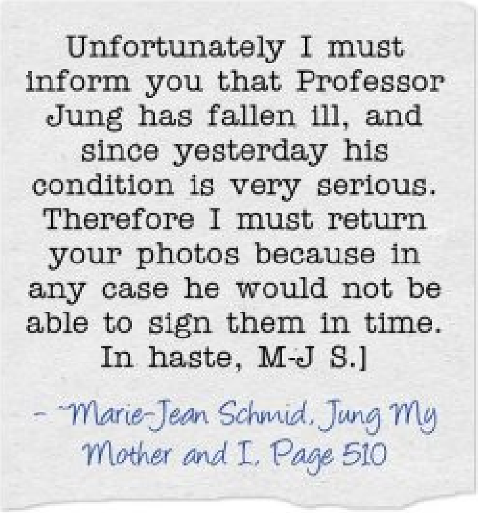
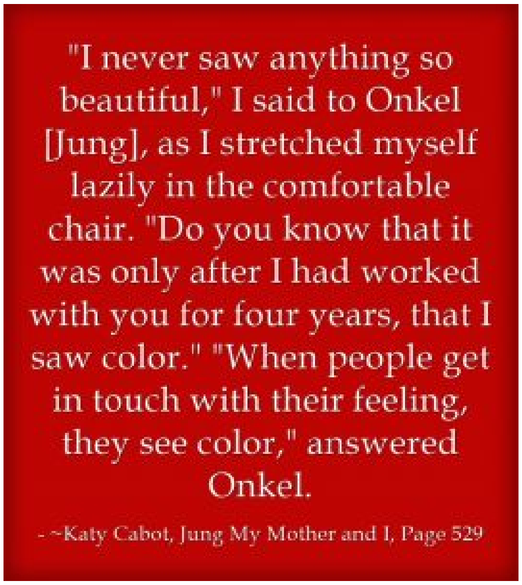
~Jane Reid, Jung My Mother and



Unfortunately I must inform you that Professor Jung has fallen ill, and since yesterday his condition is very serious. Therefore I must return your photos because in any case he would not be able to sign them in time. In haste, M-J S.]

- ~Marie-Jean Schmid, Jung My Mother and I, Page 510



"I never saw anything so beautiful," I said to Onkel [Jung], as I stretched myself lazily in the comfortable chair. "Do you know that it was only after I had worked with you for four years, that I saw color." "When people get in touch with their feeling, they see color," answered Onkel.

- ~Katy Cabot, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529

When people get in tou feeling, they see
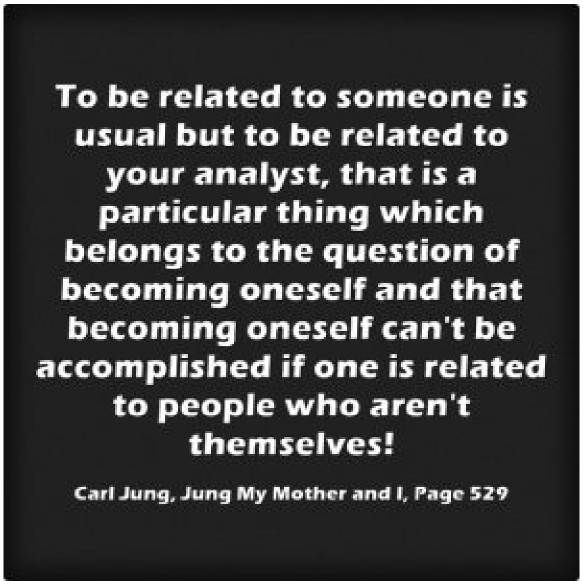
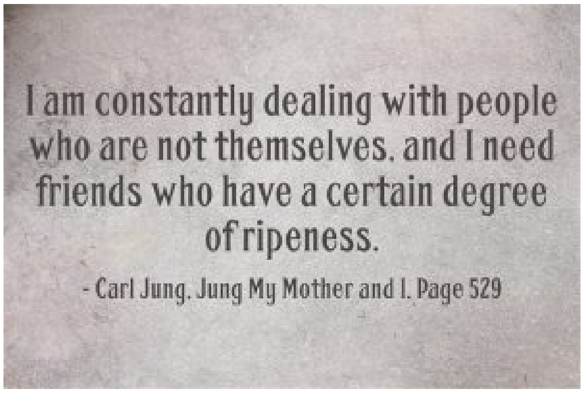
Carl Jung, Jung My Mother a



To be related to someone is usual but to be related to your analyst, that is a particular thing which belongs to the question of becoming oneself and that becoming oneself can't be accomplished if one is related to people who aren't themselves!

Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529



I am constantly dealing with people who are not themselves, and I need friends who have a certain degree of ripeness.

- Carl Jung, Jung My Mother and I, Page 529

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-My-Mother-Analytical-Catharine/dp/3856306013/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung%2C+my+mother+and+i&qid=1576602216&sr=8-1`

Victor White’s first letter to Dr. Jung (2019-12-17 12:08)

[1]

The JUNG-WHITE
LETTERS

[2]The Jung-White Letters

Dear Professor Jung,

Although I have never had the honor to meet you (outside of my dreams), I am taking the very great liberty of sending you some of my writings concerning your psychology, written from the Catholic point of view.

I doubt, of course, that you will have time or inclination to read them, let alone comment on them; but should you ever do so, it would be a great help to me and any future work I am able to do if I could be shown any points on which I have positively misunderstood you.

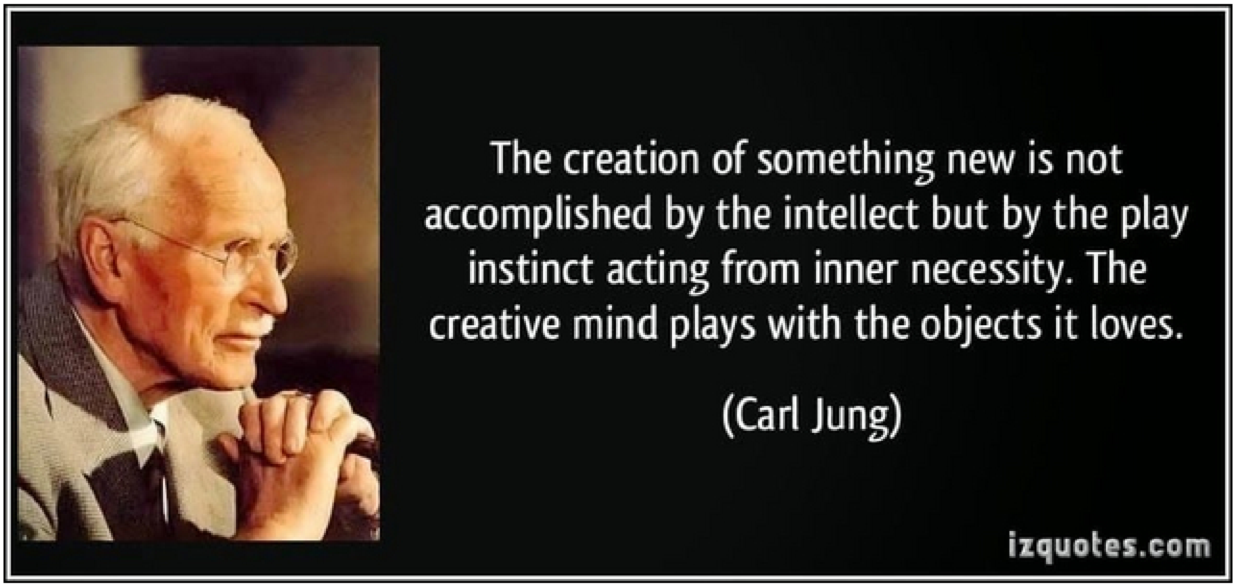
I might mention. . . that I am personally one of the very many who owe to you and your disciples in England an immense debt of gratitude. . . .

Yours very obediently, gratefully, Fr. Victor White, O.P. The Jung – White Letters, Page 3

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/5b27d-jung.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-White-Letters-Ann-Conrad-Lammers/dp/1583911944/ref=sr_1_1?crid=N89198CTZIHI&keywords=jung+white+letters&qid=1576679303&sprefix=jung+`

Carl Jung on the Biological and Psychological Transformation of Instinct. (2019-12-17 12:49)

[1]



The creation of something new is not accomplished by the intellect but by the play instinct acting from inner necessity. The creative mind plays with the objects it loves.

(Carl Jung)

izquotes.com

[2]The Jung-White Letters

To Father Victor White

My dear Father White, 13 February 1946

My answer to your kind letter comes very late indeed: I have a bad conscience.

There are certain reasons, however, that may excuse my long silence.

For a number of weeks I felt very low on account of a grippe in the head and in the intestines and besides this ailment I was caught in the grips of a book that eats me alive if I don’t write it.

As I must still see certain patients, give consultations, write letters etc., my time for work is very short.

This evening I shall give a report about the way you conceive of my psychology before a group of doctors, who regularly come to my house every fortnight.

Once I mentioned a parallel you draw between St. Thomas’ philosophy and my psychology, which remark met with great interest.

They asked me to give them fuller details.

On this occasion I went through your pamphlets again and found a point which I forgot to mention in my previous letter.

It is in your article ”St. Thomas Aquinas and Jung’s Psychology" (Blackfriars XXV, 216): "Jung’s substitution of indetermined ’libido’ for Freud’s determined ’sexuality’ was a challenge," etc. (9th line from the bottom).

Your statement as to the transformability of instinct is correct in the main, yet it could give cause for criticism from biological quarters.

Instinct as seen from a biological standpoint is something extremely conservative, so much so that it seems to be almost inalterable.

This is a fact one should not overlook in talking to a scientist.

It is a regular fact in the animal kingdom.

It is only man that shows a certain unreliability concerning the functioning of his instincts, and it is only civilized man who is capable of losing sight of his instincts to a certain extent and under certain conditions.

If he is nothing but instinctive he collides with his civilization, and if he gets a bit too far away from his instinctive basis he gets neurotic.

There is a certain optimum between the two extremes.

Transformation of instinct, therefore, can only concern a small part of it and it takes untold thousands of years until a noticeable change is effected.

This is the transformation envisaged by the biologist.

But the kind of transformation which the psychologist has in mind is something else and cannot be compared to the biological effect, as it is not a "real" change such as is understood by a natural scientist.

It is rather a "psychological" change, a change brought about by a psychological superstructure: a relatively small amount of instinctive energy (i.e., energy of the instinct) is led over into another form, i.e., a thought or feeling-form (idea and value) upon the basis and with the help of a pre-existing archetype.

This is done for instance by a ritual anamnesis of an archetypal figure.

You can observe this procedure in nearly all renewal or rebirth mysteries: there is an invocation and dramatic representation of the (spiritual) ancestor and his deeds.

The "constellate" (or stimulate) the latent analogous archetype in the and its inherent fascination causes the instinctive energy (libido) to deviate from its original, biological course and to adhere to its spiritual counterpart.

See for instance the hermeneutic conception of the Cantic.

Cant., where Christ corresponds to the "spiritual ancestor" or archetype of man (as Adam secundus), while the fundamental instinctive basis is represented by an indubitable erotic situation.

I am most grateful to you for the information about St. Thomas and for the interesting news.

I had no idea th at my work would find so much attention.

Hoping you are always in good health,

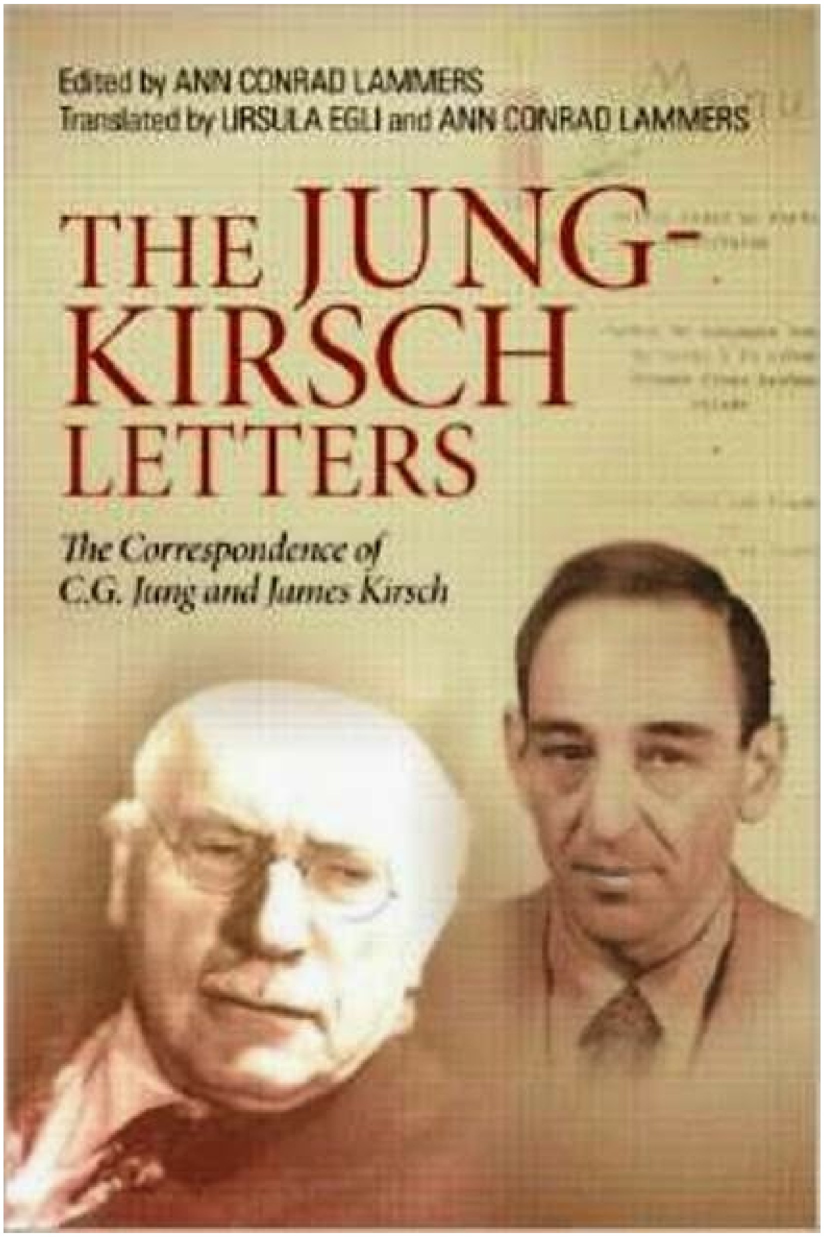
I remain,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 412-414.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/8bbdf-instinct.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-White-Letters-Ann-Conrad-Lammers/dp/1583911944/ref=sr_1_1?crid=N89198CTZIHI&keywords=jung+white+letters&qid=1576679303&sprefix=jung+`

Carl Jung’s Letter to James Kirsch (2019-12-17 18:15)



Edited by ANN CONRAD LAMMERS
Translated by URSULA EGLI and ANN CONRAD LAMMERS
THE JUNG-KIRSCH LETTERS
The Correspondence of C.G. Jung and James Kirsch

[2]College students get free two-day shipping on textbooks with Prime Student. Learn more The Jung-Kirsch Letters

To James Kirsch

My dear Kirsch, 26 May 1934

I am very glad you have written to me once again.

It appears that amusing rumours are being spread about me.

The only unquestionable fact behind an this stupid gossip is that as honorary president of the International Society for Psychotherapy I could not leave the Society in the lurch at the moment when Kretschmer resigned, I have been urgently requested by the German doctors to retain this position and l have subsequently done what anyone would have done in my place, namely, my duty towards the International Society.

This consisted essentially in preserving the framework of the international organization and in affiliating to it the German Society.This has now been accomplished at the last Nauheim Congress.

We can also record the satisfying fact that at my suggestion a special provision was adopted whereby German Jewish doctors can individually join the International Society.

They have thus become members with equal rights.

I need hardly go into the other rumors.

It is a downright lie to quote me as saying that Jews are dishonest in analysis.

Anyone who believes 1 could say anything so idiotic must think me extraordinarily stupid.

Neither have I addressed Hitler over the radio or in any other manner, nor have I made any political statements.

With regard to my opinion that the Jews so far as we can see do not create a cultural form of their own,' this opinion is based on historical data,. the fact that the specific cultural achievement of the Jew is most clearly developed within a host culture, where he very frequently becomes its actual carrier or its promoter.

This task is so specific and demanding that it is hardly conceivable how any individual Jewish culture could arise alongside it.

Since very specific conditions do in fact exist in Palestine, I have inserted a cautious "so far as we can see" in my sentence.

I would in no wise deny the possibility that something specific is being created there, but so far I do not know it.

I simply cannot discover anything anti-Semitic in this opinion.

Coming to your suggestion that I should write a special work on this question, this has already been anticipated, as I have proposed a correspondence with Dr. Neumann who has worked with me and is now also in Palestine, that will deal with all controversial questions.

So far I have heard nothing from him.

The Jewish Christ-complex is a very remarkable affair.

As you know, I completely agree with you in this matter.

The existence of this complex makes for a somewhat hysterical attitude of mind which has become especially noticeable to me during the present anti-Christian attacks upon myself.

The mere fact that I speak of a difference between Jewish and Christian psychology suffices to allow anyone to voice the prejudice that I am an anti-Semite.

Or, in the opinion of the Schweizer Israelitisches Wochenblatt, my assertion that I am as little an anti-Semite as an anti-Chinese proves my intention to compare the Jews with a Mongolian horde.

This hypersensitivity is simply pathological and makes every discussion practically impossible.

As you know, Freud previously accused me of anti-Semitism because I could not abide his soulless materialism.

The Jew directly solicits anti-Semitism with his readiness to scent out anti-Semitism everywhere.

I cannot see why the Jew, unlike any so-called Christian, is incapable of assuming that he is being criticized personally when one has an opinion about him.

Why must it always be assumed that one wants to damn the Jewish people?

Surely the individual is not the people?

I regard this as an inadmissible method of silencing one’s adversary.

In the great majority of cases I have got along very well with my Jewish patients and colleagues.

It happens with other people, too, that I have had to criticize the individual, but they do not ascribe it to the fact that they are English, American or French.

However, there is one exception worth mentioning, and that is the German.

It has happened more than once that when I criticized a German he immediately concluded that I hate the Germans.

It is really too cheap to try to hide one’s inferiority behind a political prejudice ..... .’ . You ought to know ’me sufficiently well to realize that an unindividual stupidity like anti-Semitism cannot be laid at my door.

You know well enough how very much I take the human being as a personality and how I continually endeavor to lift him out of his collective condition and make him an individual.

This, as you know, is possible only if he acknowledges his peculiarity which has been forced on him by fate.

No one who is a Jew can become a human being without knowing that he is a Jew, since this is the basis from which he can reach out towards a higher humanity.

This holds good for all nations and races.

Nationalism-disagreeable as it is-is therefore a sine qua non, but the individual must not remain stuck in it.

On the other hand, in so far as he is a particle in the mass he must not raise himself above it either.

As a human being I am a European, as an atom in the mass I am a Swiss bourgeois, domiciled at Seestrasse 228, Kiisnacht near Zurich.
der Seele has appeared.

I have included in it an essay by a Jewish author on the psychology of the Old Testament, just to annoy the Nazis and all those who have decried me as an anti-Semite.

The next thing that will be invented about me is that I suffer from a complete absence of convictions and am neither an anti-Semite nor a Nazi.
We happen to live in a time which overflows with lunacy.

Quem Deus vult perderf! prius dementat.

With kindest regards,

Yours,

C.G. Jung

et semper idem. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 160-163.

The Jung-Kirsch Letters: The Correspondence of C.G. Jung and James Kirsch by Ann Conrad Lammers http://www.amazon.com/…/041…/ref=cm _sw _r _pi _dp _G3FKub010YSSW

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/6fa47-kirsch.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-Kirsch-Letters-Ann-Conrad-Lammers/dp/1138843490/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+kirsch+letters&qid=1576680312&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: The empathetic type suffers a similar fate. (2019-12-18 03:30)

[1]

[2]Psychological Types (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Vol. 6) (Bollingen Series XX)

Faced with the bewildering profusion of animated objects, we create an abstraction, an abstract universal image which conjures the welter of impressions into a fixed form.

This image has the magical significance of a defence against the chaotic flux of experience.

The abstracting type becomes so lost and submerged in this image that finally its abstract truth is set above the reality of life; and because life might disturb the enjoyment of abstract beauty, it gets completely suppressed.

He turns himself into an abstraction, he identifies with the eternal validity of the image and petrifies in it, because for him it has become a redeeming formula.

He divests himself of his real self and puts his whole life into his abstraction, in which he is, so to speak, crystallized.

The empathetic type suffers a similar fate.

Since his activity, his life is empathized into the object, he himself gets into the object because the empathized content is an essential part of himself.

He becomes the object, he identifies with it and in this way gets outside himself.

By turning himself into an object he desubjectifies himself. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 499

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/179bf-12breality.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychological-Types-Collected-Works-Bollingen/dp/0691018138/ref=sr_1_fkmr1_1?keywords=Jung+CW+6+types&qid=1576680589&sr=8-1-fkmr1`

Carl Jung: This leads to a restoration or apocatastasis of the lives of her ancestors, (2019-12-18 03:30)

[1]

[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

The psyche pre-existent to consciousness (e.g., in the child) participates in the maternal psyche on the one hand, while on the other it reaches across to the daughter psyche.

We could therefore say that every mother contains her daughter in herself and every daughter her mother, and that every woman extends backwards into her mother and forwards into her daughter.

This participation and intermingling give rise to that peculiar uncertainty as regards time: a woman lives earlier as a mother, later as a daughter.

The conscious experience of these ties produces the feeling that her life is spread out over generations—the first step towards the immediate experience and conviction of being outside time, which brings with it a feeling of immortality.

The individual's life is elevated into a type, indeed it becomes the archetype of woman's fate in general.

This leads to a restoration or apocatastasis of the lives of her ancestors, who now, through the bridge of the momentary individual, pass down into the generations of the future.

An experience of this kind gives the individual a place and a meaning in the life of the generations, so that all unnecessary obstacles are cleared out of the way of the life stream that is to flow through her.

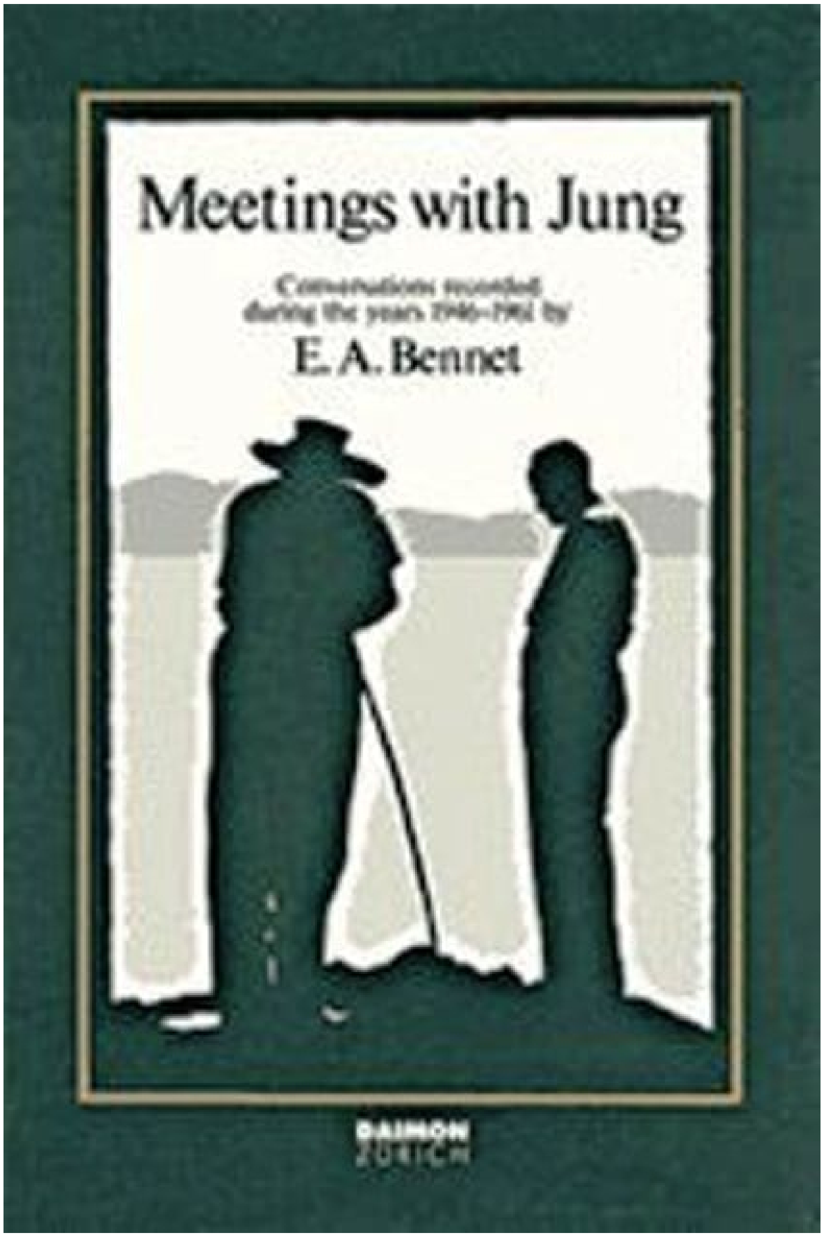
At the same time the individual is rescued from her isolation and restored to wholeness. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 316

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/3f2d3-12bdaughter.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1IQTA6Z82J6DS&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+colle`

Carl Jung: We must get in touch with the man of the ages, not be over impressed by the present, not be rushed. (2019-12-18 04:30)

[1]



Meetings with Jung

Conversations recorded during the years 1946-1961 by

E. A. Bennet

DAIMON
ZÜRICH

[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years 1946-1961

Küsnacht, 29th August 1956

Arrived in Zürich.

30th August 1956

At breakfast C.G. spoke of the difficulties implicit in the idea of anyone writing his biography; he said it would require a full understanding of his thought, and no one understood it completely.

Freud’s life, he said, could be clearly described because his thought was simply laid out.

But with him it was more complex, for unless the development of his thought were xentral to his biography it would be no more than a series of incidents, like writing the life of Kant without knowing his work.

To illustrate his meaning he mentioned a momentous dream he had had in 1913.

The experience had an important influence upon his life which resulted from the efforts he made to understand the dream; yet were it related quite simply few people would comprehend the significance it had at that point in his career.

The dream:

He was climbing a steep mountain path, twisting to the top, and on the right the valley was in shadow for it was still night; ahead the sun was behind the peak and rising, but still hidden.

In front of him was a primitive man (the man of all the ages – brown-skinned and hairy); he was following this man and each was armed for hunting, probably chamois.

Then the sun rose, and on the summit of the mountain Siegfried appeared in shining armour with a shield and spear; he was wearing something like skis and glided down over the rocks.

The skis were of bones – the bones of all the dead.

Then the primitive man indicated to him that they must shoot Siegfried with their rifles, and they lay in wait for him and killed him.

The primitive man (the shadow) was the leader; he went to collect the spoil.

But C.G. was filled with remorse and rushed down the mountain into a ravine and up the other side – he had to get away from the awful crime.

It was raining and everything was wet; but while this washed away all traces of the crime it made no difference to the sense of guilt which oppressed his conscience.

He awoke and wanted to sleep again but he knew he must try to understand the dream.

For a while his remorse for murdering Siegfried – the hero – obliterated everything else, overwhelming him to the extent that he felt impelled to take his revolver from the drawer and shoot himself, ‘commit suicide’; the dream and the impulse were terribly vivid and he might have done it but for the fact that his thoughts about the dream began to take shape:the hero, doing the very heroic act, was killed by the primitive man.

That is, the dream was pointing to the primitive man, who was immoral or undeveloped in our eyes, as the leader, the one to be followed.

For him, this meant that he must follow not the here and now of consciousness, the accepted achievements, but the man of the ages who represented the collective unconscious, the archetypes.

This dream was a big turning point in C.G.’s life – a far more significant dream than that of the mediaeval house, he said.

For it showed that he must follow a certain line and disregard popular ideas.

It was like the old Austrian saying of never doing today what can be done tomorrow; that is, time is not the important thing.

American boys carve on their desks ‘Do it now’, and this appeals to people today; but to do this, and to say ‘Where there’s a will there’s a way’ isn’t everything.

We must get in touch with the man of the ages, not be over impressed by the present, not be rushed.

In the dream the primitive man behaved naturally, as a primitive man would do – seeing someone approaching with sword and shield, he just fired and killed him.

So C.G. knew from the dream, when he came to comprehend it, that he must follow the deep hidden, discarded primitive man, and forsake his academic scientific career, the heroic role of doing things here and now and ‘getting on’ (‘This world’s empty glory’ E.A.B.).

He mentioned that Freud discovered the first archetype, the incest problem.

But he had regarded it only from the personal point of view, just as he took religion as simply a personal matter.

As such it could be disregarded.

He added that Freud never acquired any idea of the deeper unconscious although he spoke of ‘archaic memories’.

C.G. said that in the Oedipus complex lies a great deal of importance; it is the separation of the child and the parents, and the attitude of the child to the parents.

I asked if this wasn’t the problem in neurosis – the conflict of the personal and the collective; the desire just to be apart, and the difficulty in adapting to the whole, taking one’s place in the group.

It can show itself in many forms of phobias (claustrophobia etc.) where the underlying fear is of being alone and so faced with the central problem of adjustment.

But this varies in different ages; in the first half of life it is personal adjustment to life around us, and in the second half the adjustment is to the bigger spiritual life which goes on and on.

He mentioned Bollingen, that the great thing about it for him is that it is so near to Nature.

They cook on the open fire there, and he does most of the cooking and cuts the firewood – only wood is used.

Speaking of the fire, he said, ‘We haven’t yet mastered the natural forces so you have to know how to use it.’

We strolled round the garden (at Küsnacht) and he pointed out all the trees which had been killed by frost.

There had been warm weather in January, and the very severe frost in March burst a lot of the stems of the laurel, wisteria and other trees, because the sap had risen and it froze.

The bamboos also had to be cut down but they have shot up again and there is a very fine grove of delicate trees some ten or twelve feet high.

A feature of the house is that it was built originally with only one door.

C.G. said this was because ‘We Swiss live in the centre of Europe and lots of things may happen.’

In previous days, at the time of his army service, he had his rifle and thirty rounds of ammunition in the house (all Swiss soldiers have) so that he could defend himself.

The lower windows are protected by grilles of steel or bars.

The garden room was built later – it has a door to the garden and another into the house; the latter is an iron door and is always closed at night.

C.G. has a doze after lunch and so has Miss Bailey.

I sit in the garden, and today it is beautifully sunny.

Later we talked again, and C.G. said how interesting it would be if someone were to study the dreams people had under anaesthetics; he mentioned one or two examples.

Also he spoke of his great interest on reading that a neuro-surgeon, concerned with epilepsy, had stimulated the corpora quadrigemina and the patient had had a vision of a mandala, a square containing a circle.

This vision could be reproduced – and was reproduced – by the stimulation of the same area.

He said he had for a long time thought that the brain stem was important in our thinking life and how interested he was that the corpora quadrigemina, the four bodies, was the area, for it confirmed his idea of the importance of the square and the circle as symbols.

In the evening after dinner, we somehow got onto the subject of numbers which, C.G. said, had a life of their own.

It was always a problem for mathematicians – had numbers been invented or discovered?

This cropped up in talking about what religion was; was it with Origen, relegare: to connect, link back, or with Cicero, relegere: to gather up again, to recollect – that is, something that is there already?

The latter is C.G.’s idea for in thinking of religion we must think of all religions, for instance Buddhism, which is a religion without a god.

But theologians say they are concerned only with Christianity!

This is like a doctor saying he is only concerned with viruses and is not interested, for example, in malaria.

So in religion we must avoid specialisation, concentrating on one thing only and leaving out the rest because it does not suit us.

Then we passed on to talk of numbers and their individual qualities.

One was nothing, because you could only think of one if you had a lot of ones; but also it could be Everything, like One (and the Many), that is the totality of God.

Two was the opposites – good and evil – and was left out by those who did not hold with opposites, such as those who accept the idea of the privatio boni.

Three was the dynamic number; it was male.

I said, 'For example, one, two three – go!' and he said, 'Yes, that's it, it's leading somewhere.'

Four is female, complete; it is an end, final.

Five is four plus one, but the one is in the centre, it is the quintessence of the four.

Six is the double three (there was more to this).

Seven, the divine number, six plus one; the seven branched candlesticks (more also to this).

Eight – the double four.

Nine is the double four plus the central one, the quintessence again.

C.G. thinks of numbers as things existing in themselves which are discovered, not just invented.

31st August 1956

Talk with C.G. after breakfast about theologians – he found them 'terribly superficial'.

They don't mind talking, and a lot of their thought was 'just firing blank ammunition'.

But when it comes to real firing – taking things seriously and seeing what they really are, they close up.

He mentioned the story of the trumpeter of Schaffhausen.

In the eighteen-forties there was fighting in Switzerland among the cantons; the Schaffhausen regiment went to take part and the trumpeter went with them.

In a week he reappeared in Schaffhausen and everyone asked, 'Why aren't you at the war?'

'Oh,' he said, 'they aim at you there!' – so he had come home.

Theologians are often like that.

Then he went on to talk of the Pope's dogma about the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, and said it had great opposition in the Church because it is laid down that there can be no dogma unless it is founded upon Apostolic teaching, and there was no reference to the ascension of the Virgin until the sixth century.

But the Pope overrode that.

Several popes had attempted it before; one had done so a hundred years ago but he did not succeed in pushing it through.

The whole point of the dogma is to counteract the material; yet the woman is mater (that is, material) and God is manifest in creation, in matter.

There was tremendous opposition to the dogma, principally in northern countries; but the southern countries pressed for it.

The Virgin, therefore, is 99.9999 percent God – but not quite.

What will happen next?

Then I asked if it meant another Christ and he said, 'Oh no, there can be only one Son of God.'

Laurens van der Post came for lunch and talked of his African adventures.

C.G. spoke also of participation mystique – that everything is known.

The primitive acts in that way; nothing is hidden nor can anything be hidden, it all comes out. C.G. is very keen on this idea, hence the title of his book Modern Man in Search of a Soul.

In the evening after dinner C.G. spoke of his first visit to Freud in Vienna.

While staying there he had a dream:

He was in the ghetto in Prague and it was narrow, twisted and low ceilinged, with staircases hanging down.

He thought, 'How in hell can people live in such a place?'

That was the dream.

He went on to speak of how from the time of their first meetings he had noted the narrowness of Freud's standpoint, his limited perspective and concentration on tiny details.

He mentioned that to some degree it was because of Freud's mother-complex that he was so concerned with sexual things – incest, sleeping with the mother and so on – as if they were something new. C.G., having been brought up in the country, knew all these things but they did not interest him.

The old ghetto in Prague, he said, was a famous one. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 149-163

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/c48b6-412bbennet.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961-ebook/dp/B0080KBADE/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2VIIDVPSFHE88&keywords=carl+jung+bennet+conversations&

He must obey his own law„„ (2019-12-18 06:53)

[1]

[2]The Development of Personality CW 17

"The fact that a man who goes his own way ends in ruin means nothing...He must obey his own law, as if it were a daemon whispering to him of new and wonderful paths...There are not a few who are called awake by the summons of the voice, whereupon they are at once set apart from the others, feeling themselves confronted with a problem about which the others know nothing.

In most cases it is impossible to explain to the others what has happened, for any understanding is walled off by impenetrable prejudices.

"You are no different from anybody else," they will chorus or, "there's no such thing," and even if there is such a thing, it is immediately branded as "morbid"...He is at once set apart and isolated, as he has resolved to obey the law that commands him from within. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 299

[contact-form][contact-field label="Name" type="name" required="true" /][contact-field label="Email" type="email" required="true" /][contact-field label="Website" type="url" /][contact-field label="Message" type="textarea" /][/contact-form]

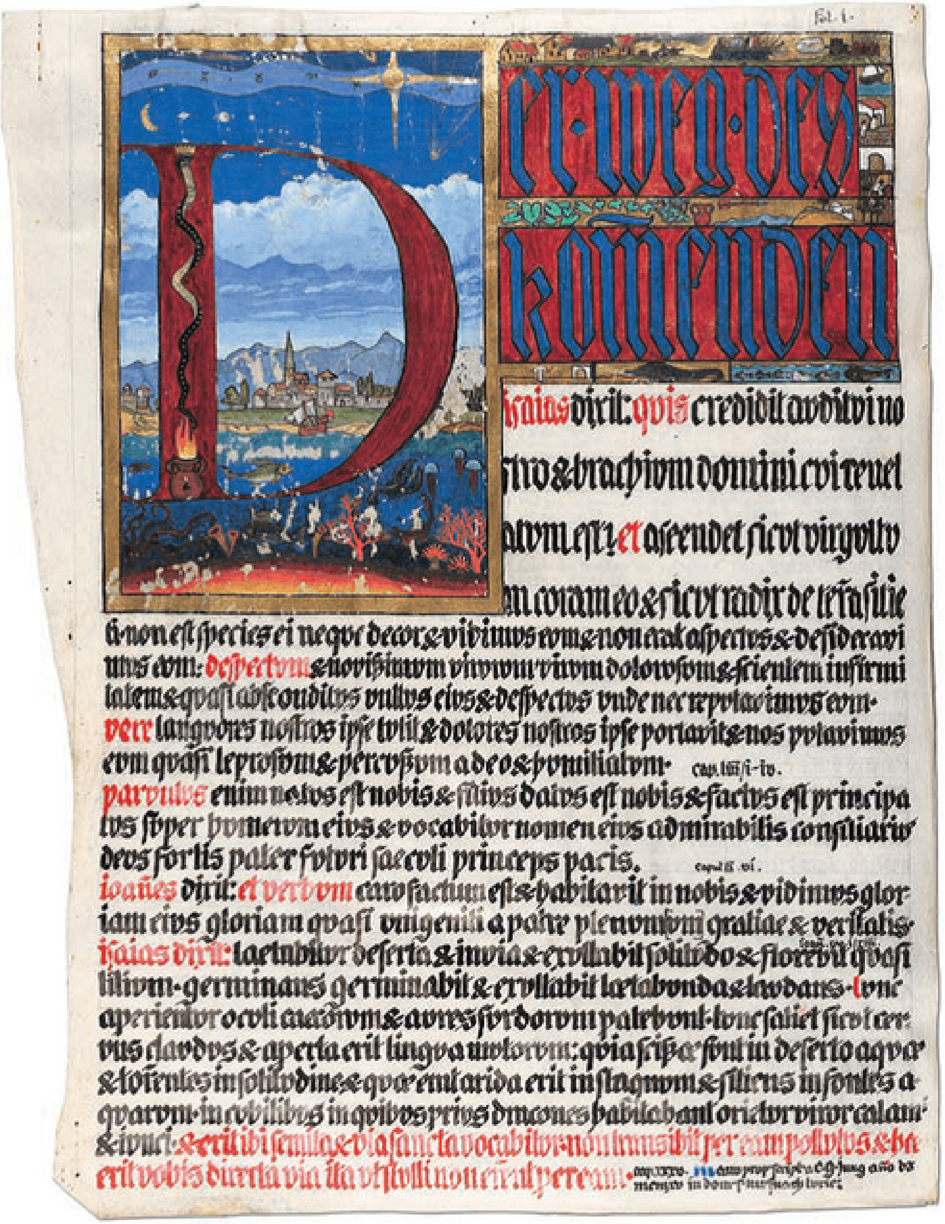
"His own law!" everybody will cry. But he knows better: it is the law...The only meaningful life is a life that strives for the individual realization–absolute and unconditional–of its own particular law...To the extent that a man is untrue to the law of his being...he has failed to realize his own life's meaning.

The undiscovered vein within us is a living part of the psyche; classical Chinese philosophy names this interior way "Tao," and likens it to a flow of water that moves irresistibly towards its goal. To rest in Tao means fulfillment, wholeness, one's destination reached, one's mission done; the beginning, end, and perfect realization of the meaning of existence innate in all things." — C.G. Jung

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/33687-tao.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/s?k=carl+jung+CW+17&ref=nb_sb_noss`

Carl Jung on Feeling, Sensation, Intuition Thinking (2019-12-18 06:59)

[1]



Fol. i.

Der·weg·des komenden

isaias dixit: quis credidit auditui no stro & brachium domini cui revel atum est? et ascendet sicut virgultu m coram eo & sicut radix de terra sitie ti non est species ei neque decor & vidimus eum & non erat aspectus & desideravi mus eum: despectum & novissimum virorum virum dolorum & scientem infirmi tatem & quasi absconditus vultus eius & despectus unde nec reputavimus eum.
vere languores nostros ipse tulit & dolores nostros ipse portavit & nos putavimus eum quasi leprosum & percussum a deo & humiliatum. cap. liii/i-iv.
parvulus enim natus est nobis & filius datus est nobis & factus est principa tus super humerum eius & vocabitur nomen eius admirabilis consiliarius deus fortis pater futuri saeculi princeps pacis. capitul ix. vi.
ioañes dixit: et verbum caro factum est & habitavit in nobis & vidimus glor iam eius gloriam quasi unigeniti a patre plenum gratiae & veritatis.
isaias dixit: laetabitur deserta & invia & exultabit solitudo & florebit quasi lilium. germinans germinabit & exultabit laetabunda & laudans. tunc aperientur oculi caecorum & aures surdorum patebunt. tunc saliet sicut cer vus claudus & aperta erit lingua mutorum: quia scissae sunt in deserto aquae & torrentes in solitudine & quae erat arida erit in stagnum & sitiens in fontes a quarum. in cubilibus in quibus prius dracones habitabant orietur viror calami & iunci. & erit ibi semita & via sancta vocabitur. non transibit per eam pollutus & haec erit vobis directa via ita ut stulti non errent per eam.

[2]Analytical Psychology: Notes of the Seminar given in 1925 by C.G. Jung (Collected Works of C.g. Jung)

So now you see what I think of feeling.

I have been asked whether, if a number of individuals in the class draw up a statement of feeling as it appears to them, I would be willing to discuss it.

Of course I will do this very gladly, it will be an advantageous way of going into the subject; but I must warn you not to take feeling too subjectively in that case.

Each function type has a special way of viewing feeling, and is likely to find things about it which are untrue for the other types.

Thus one of the points with respect to the functions that has been most combated is my contention that feeling is rational.

My books have been read largely by intellectuals, who have, of course, not been able to see feeling from this aspect, because feeling in themselves is thoroughly irrational by reason of its contamination by elements from the unconscious.

Similarly, people with a fairly developed amount of feeling, but in whom there is also intuition with it, hold feeling to be an irrational function.

It is the fate of people to seek to interpret life chiefly through the function strongest in them.

Sometimes it is quite impossible to convince a person that he cannot grasp the trans-subjective world with one function alone, no matter how strong that function may be.

With respect to the thinking type, this was once borne in upon. me very impressively by a man who came to consult me about a compulsion neurosis.

He said to me, “I don’t think you can cure me, but I would like to know why it is that I can’t be cured, because as you will see, there is really nothing that I do not know about myself.”

And that proved to be true, he had covered his case with truly remarkable intelligence and from the Freudian point of view he was completely analyzed, for there was no corner of his past, even back to the remotest infancy, that remained unexplored.

For a moment I could not make out myself why it was that he could not get well.

Then I began to question him about his financial situation, as he was just coming from St. Moritz and had spent the winter at Nice.

“Were you able to make so much money that you could live that way without working?”

I asked him. He became annoyed with me for pressing this point, but finally had to tell the truth, namely that he was unable to work, had never made any money for himself, but was being supported by a schoolteacher, ten years older than himself.

He said none of this had anything to do with his neurosis, that he loved the woman, and she him, and they both had thought the situation out together and that it was all right.

Nor was I ever able to make him see that he was behaving like a pig to this woman, who was living on next to nothing while he was carousing over Europe.

NU DESCENDANT UN ESCALIER

He left my office with the firm conviction that, having "thought" the whole thing out, as he was pleased to put it, that finished it.

But the sensation type can crucify reality with equal facility.

Suppose there is a woman who has fallen in love with her sister's husband.

He is her brother-in-law, and one does not fall in love with one's brother-in-law, therefore the fact is never admitted into consciousness.

It is only the facts as they are controlled by the situation as it is that come into the argument; the possibilities behind must be carefully excluded.

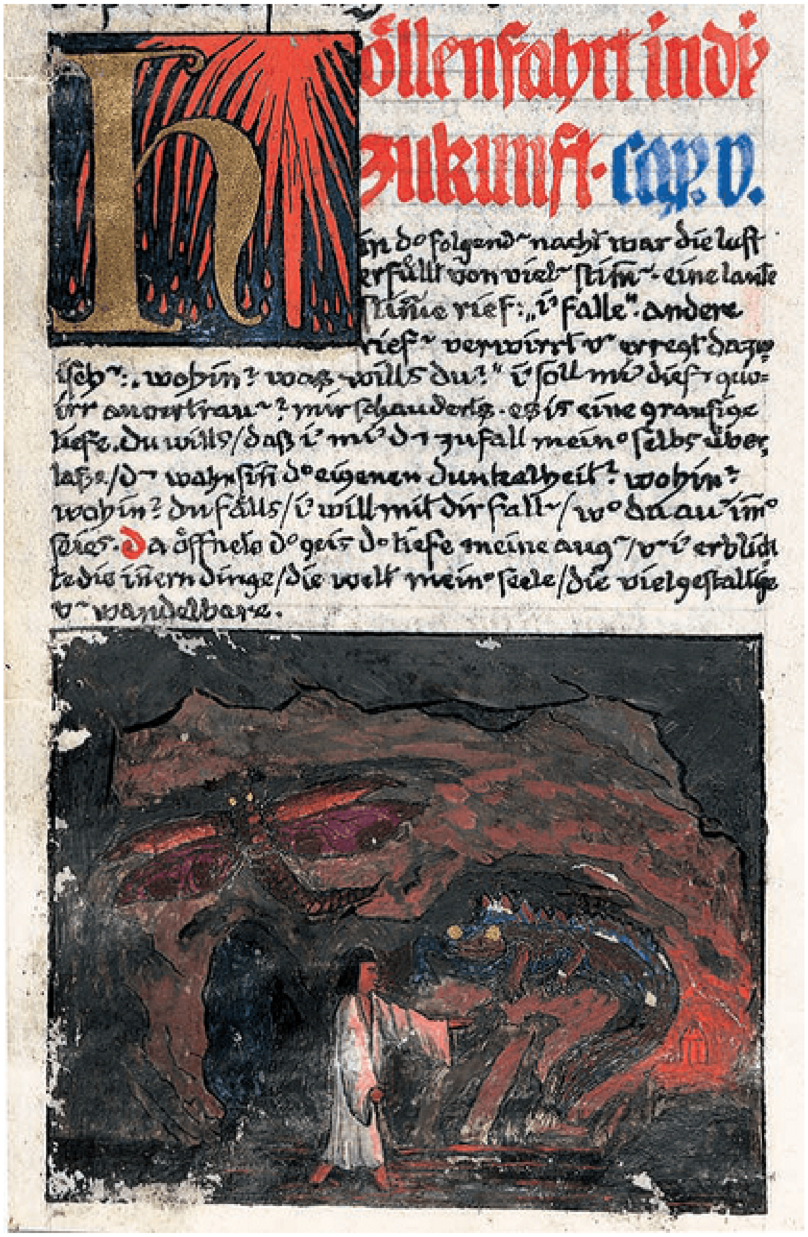
So these two live for twenty years and only arrive at the true state of affairs through analysis.

I have spoken more than once of the way an intuitive type can neglect reality, and you can, I am sure, supply an equal number of examples of the ways a feeling type can do the same thing.

If a thing is disagreeable to the feelings, a feeling type will slide over the reality of it with the greatest facility.

Inasmuch as women are more connected with Eros than are men, they tend to have particular notions about feeling, just as men, even if not intellectual, tend to have particular notions about thinking.

[4]



Höllenfahrt in die Zukunft. cap. v.

In der folgenden Nacht war die Luft erfüllt von vielen Stimmen. Eine laute Stimme rief: „Ich falle". Andere riefen verwirrt und erregt dazwischen: „Wohin? Was willst du?" Ich soll mich diesem Ungewissen anvertrauen? Mir schaudert es. Es ist eine grausige Tiefe. Du willst, dass ich mich dem Zufall meiner selbst überlasse, dem Wahnsinn der eigenen Dunkelheit? Wohin? Wohin? Du fällst, ich will mit dir fallen, wer du auch immer bist. Da öffnete der Geist der Tiefe meine Augen, und ich erblickte die inneren Dinge, die Welt meiner Seele, die vielgestaltige und wandelbare.

So it is hard for men and women to understand one another.

The woman tends to identify feeling with reality, the man clings obstinately to the logical statement.

Up to this time we have spoken of the subject as though it were unchanging in time, but as we know, the body is a four-dimensional entity, the fourth dimension being time.

If the fourth dimension were spatial, our bodies would be wormlike—that is, drawn out in space between two points.

In Diagram 7, I have tried to give some idea of an individual moving through space, that is, three-dimensional space.

The individual cannot be understood merely as a static entity.

If we want to have a complete notion for the individual, we must add the factor of time.

Time means a past and a future, and so the individual is only complete when we add his actual structure as the result of past events, and at the same time the actual structure taken as the starting point of new tendencies.

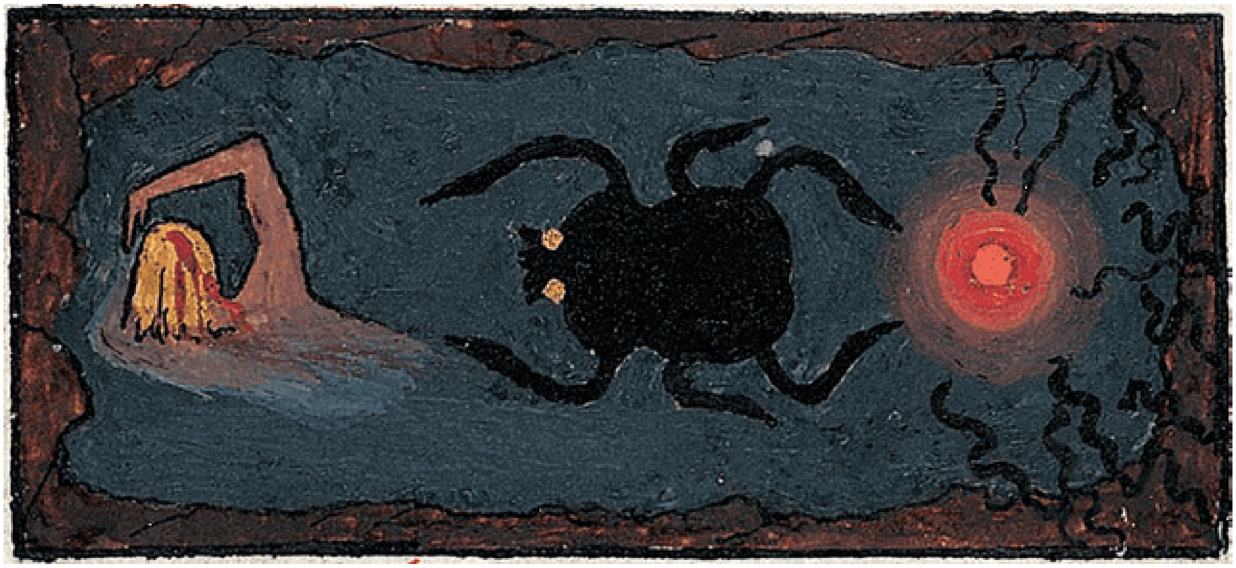
According to this idea, we can make out two types, those individuals who hang back in their time under the spell of the past, and others too much ahead of themselves.

The latter are only to be understood by their tendencies.

So far, these pictures have disregarded the unconscious.

In Diagram 8, I have brought this factor into consideration.

[5]



This diagram presupposes a fully developed thinking type in whom sensation and intuition are half conscious and half unconscious, and in whom feeling is in the unconscious.

This does not mean that such a type is devoid of feeling; it only means that, compared to his thinking, his feeling is not under his control but eruptive in character, so that normally it is not in the picture at all, and then all of a sudden it quite possesses him.

In Diagram 9, I have shown the individual in relation to the world of external objects on the one hand and to the collective unconscious images on the other.

Connecting him with the first world, that is, the world of external objects, is the persona, developed by the forces from within and the forces from without in interaction with one another.

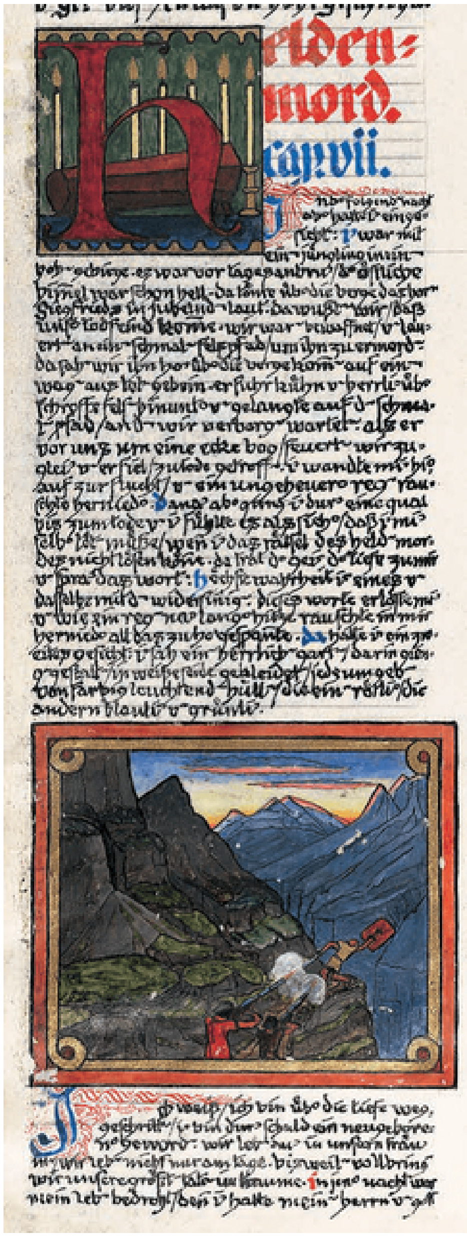
We may think of the persona as the bark of a conscious personality.

As we have indicated elsewhere, it is not wholly our choice what the persona shall be, for we can never control entirely the forces that are to play on our conscious personalities.

The center of this conscious personality is the ego.

If we take the layer “back” of this ego, we come to the personal subconscious.

This contains our incompatible wishes or fantasies, our childhood influences, repressed sexuality, in a word all those things we refuse to hold in consciousness for one reason or another, or which we lose out of it.



Heldenmord. cap. vii.

[6]

In the center is the virtual nucleus or central government, representing the totality of the conscious and unconscious self.

Then we come to the collective unconscious as it is present in us—that is, the part of the racial experience which we carry within us.

It is the home of Cabiri or dwarfs whom we may not see else they cease to serve us.

In this region another virtual center often turns up in dreams.

It is a minor figure of oneself usually projected on a friend, for the unconscious pays these compliments very easily.

I have called it the shadow self.

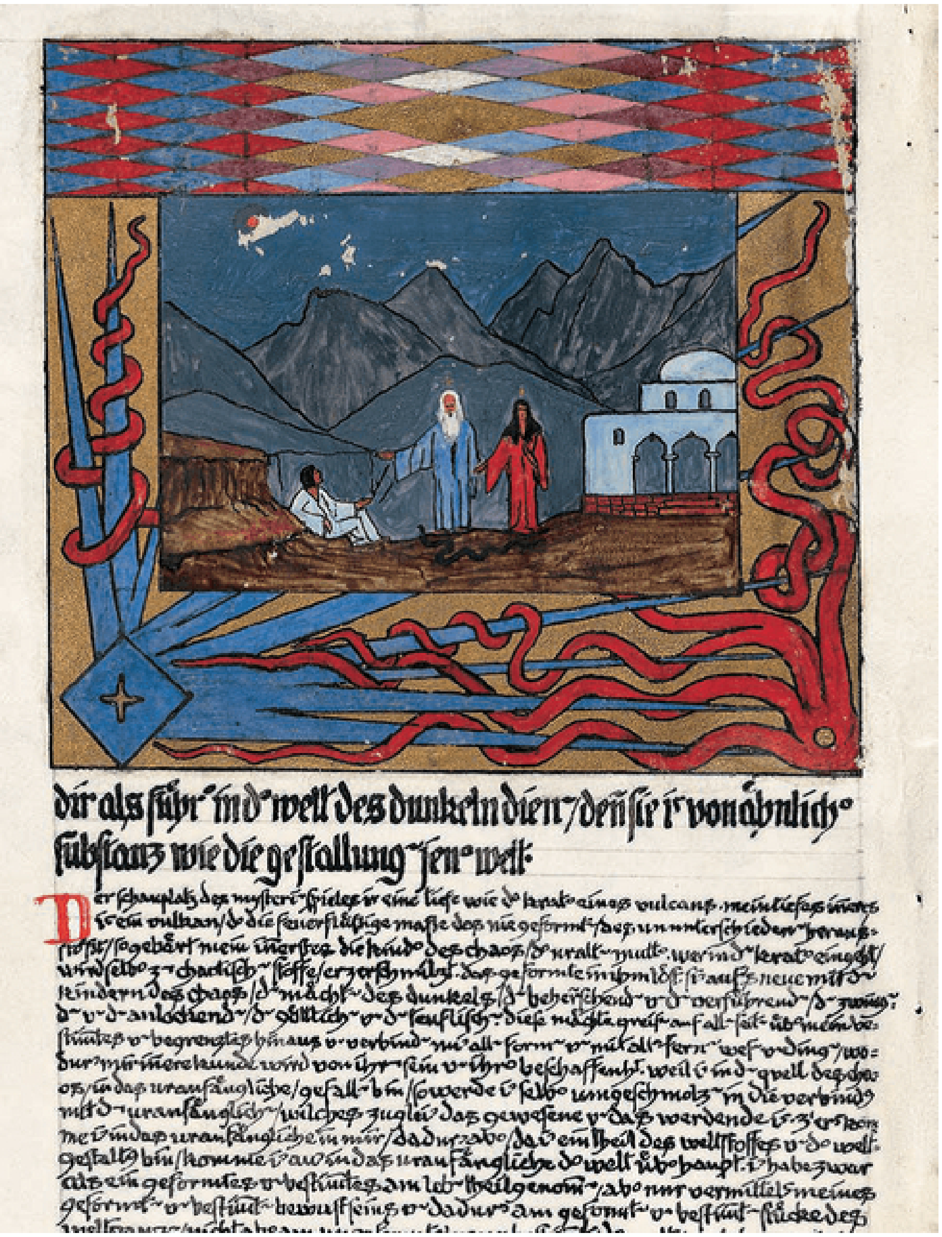
The primitive has developed an intricate set of relationships to his shadow which symbolize very well my idea of the shadow self.

He must never tread on another's shadow, so too we must never mention the weaknesses of another, those things in him of which he is ashamed and has therefore put out of sight.

A primitive says, "Don't go out at midday, it is dangerous not to see your shadow."

We say, "Be careful when you don't know your weaknesses."

We can speak of the conscious ego as the subjective personality, and of the shadow self as the objective personality.



This latter, made up of what is part of the collective unconscious in us, carries the things that appear in us as effects.

For we do have effects on people which we can neither predict nor adequately explain.

Instinct warns us to keep away from this racial side of ourselves.

If we became aware of the ancestral lives in us, we might disintegrate.

An ancestor might take possession of us and ride us to death.

The primitive says, “Don’t let a ghost get into you.”

By this he conveys the double idea, “Don’t let a visitor get into your unconscious, and don’t lose an ancestral soul.”

The feeling of awe of the primitive with respect to what we call the collective unconscious is very great.

It is to him the ghost world.

The following story told by an explorer among the Eskimo is an example of this awe, shared even by the medicine man.

The explorer came to the hut of a Polar Eskimo where incantations were going on over a sick man for the purpose of driving away the ghosts or evil spirits that were making him sick.

There was a tremendous noise going on, with the sorcerer jumping and running about like mad.

As soon as he saw the explorer he became very quiet and said: “This is all a nonsense.”

He had taken him for another medicine man because no one but a medicine man is supposed to approach a hut where such an incantation is going on.

It is the custom, too, for the medicine men who are struggling with the ghosts to smile and say to one another that the whole thing is nonsense, not because they think it is, but because they use it as a sort of apotropaic joke.

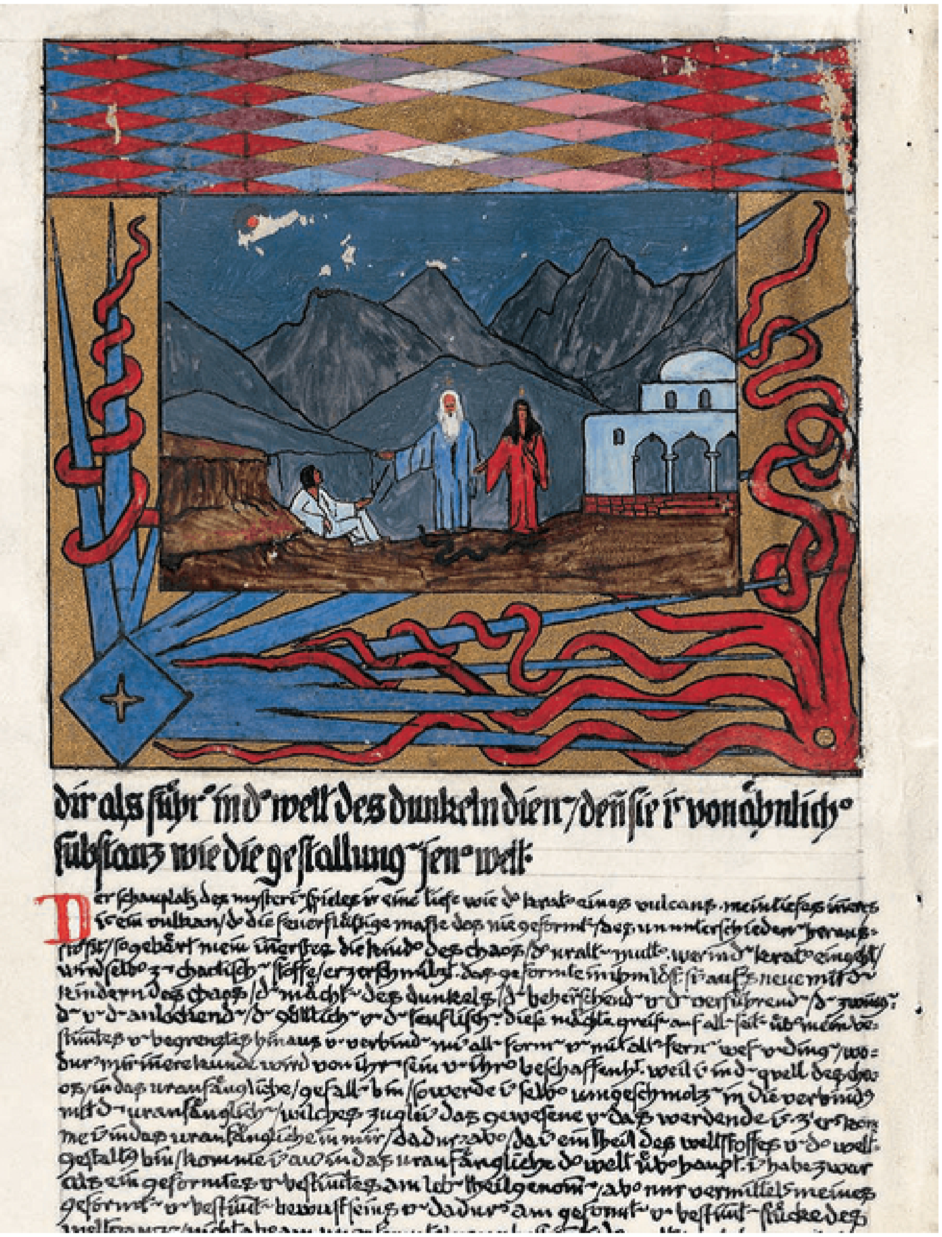
It is in the nature of a euphemism that should protect them against their own fear.

This instinctive fear of the collective unconscious is very strong indeed in us.



dir als führ in d welt des dunkeln dien/denn sie is von ähnlich substanz wie die gestallung jen welt·

There can be a continual flow of fantasies inundating us from it, the danger signal coming when the flow cannot be stopped.

If one has once seen this happen one feels deeply frightened.

We have in general not much imagination about these things, but the primitive knows all about it.

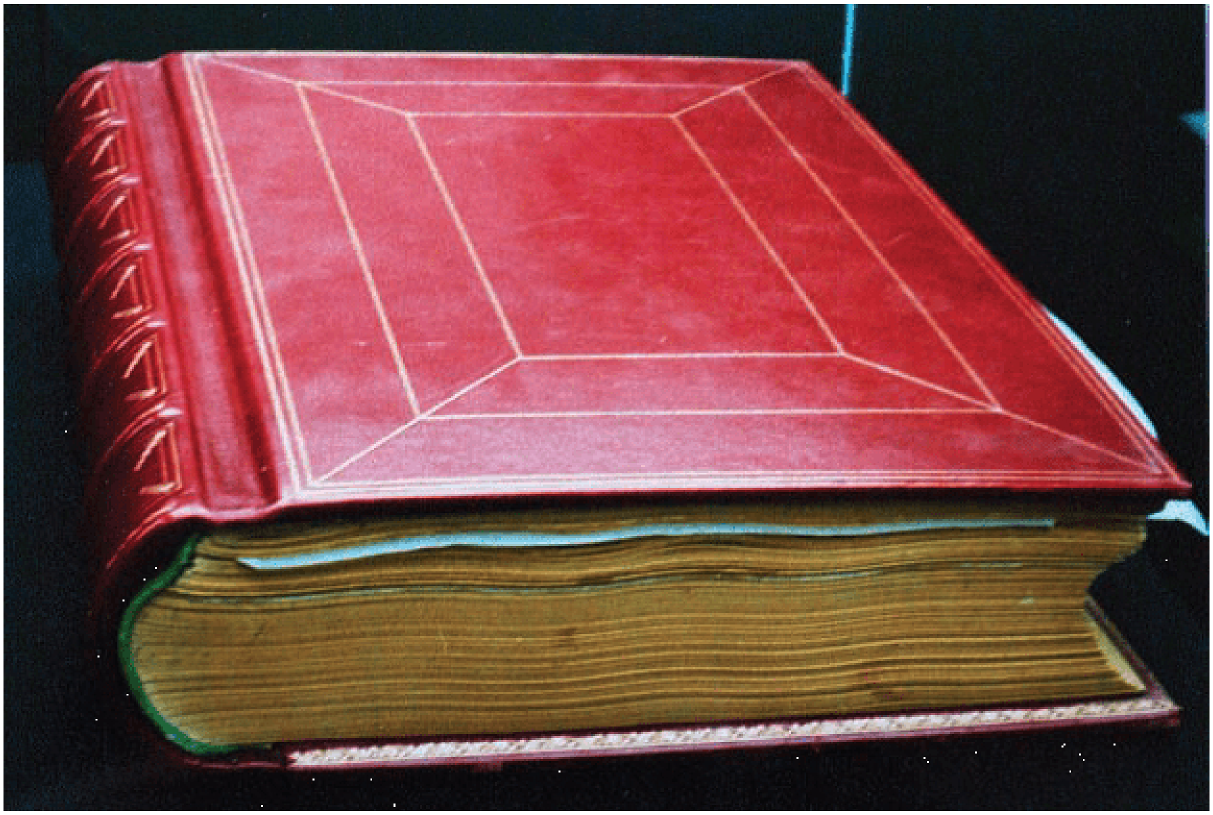
For the most part, we are so cut off from it as to float above it.

When it comes to the rather delicate task of locating the collective unconscious, you must not think of it as being compassed by the brain alone but as including the sympathetic nervous system as well.

Only that part of it that is your vertebrate inheritance—that is, that comes to you from your vertebrate ancestors—is to be thought of as within the limits of the central nervous system.

Otherwise it is outside your psychological sphere.

[9]



The very primitive animal layers are supposed to be inherited through the sympathetic system, and the relatively later animal layers belonging to the vertebrate series are represented by the cerebrospinal system.

The most recent human layers form the basis of actual consciousness, and thus the collective unconscious is reaching into consciousness, and only thus far can you call the collective unconscious psychological.

We wish to reserve the term “psychological,” used thus, for those elements which, theoretically at least, can be brought into conscious control.

On this basis the main body of the collective unconscious cannot be strictly said to be psychological but psychical.

We cannot repeat this distinction too often, for when I have referred to the collective unconscious as “outside” our brains, it has been assumed that I meant hanging somewhere in mid-air.

After this explanation it will become clear to you that the collective unconscious is always working upon you through trans-subjective facts which are probably inside as well as outside yourselves.

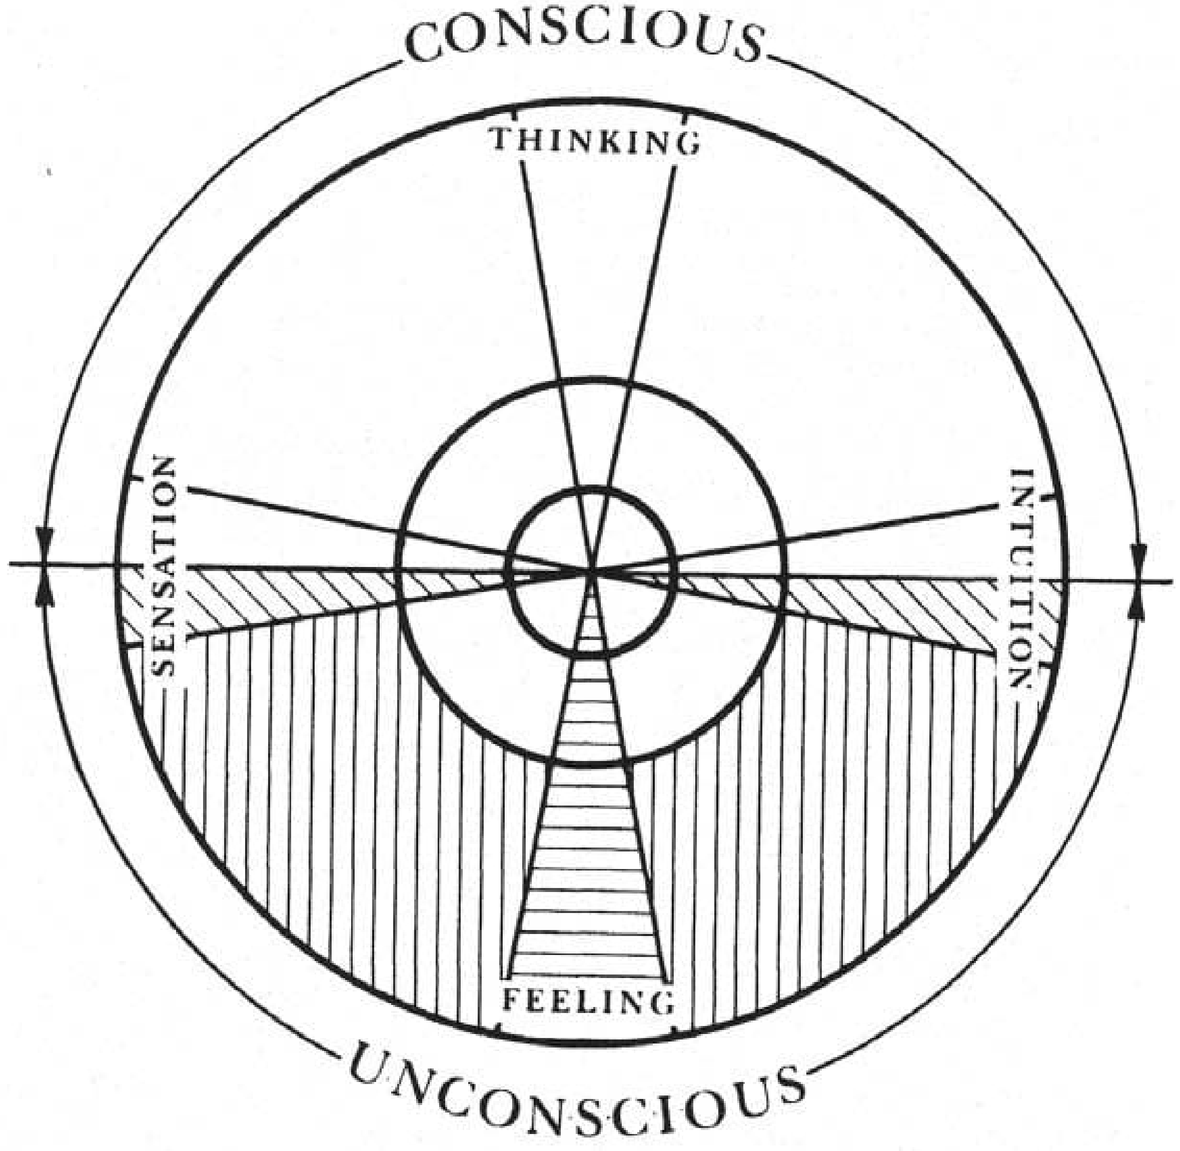
As an example of how the collective unconscious can work upon you through the inside fact, I would give the following: Suppose a man is sitting somewhere out of doors and a bird flies down near him.

Another day he is in the same place and a similar bird comes.

This time the bird stirs him in an altogether strange way, there is something mysterious attaching to that second bird.

The naïve man certainly assumes that the extraordinary effect of the second bird belongs as much to the outside world as the ordinary effect produced by the first bird.

[10]



If he is a primitive he will distinguish between the two effects by saying the first bird is just a bird, but the second is a “doctor” bird.

But we know that the extraordinary effect of the “doctor” bird is due to a projection upon it from the collective unconscious, from within the man.

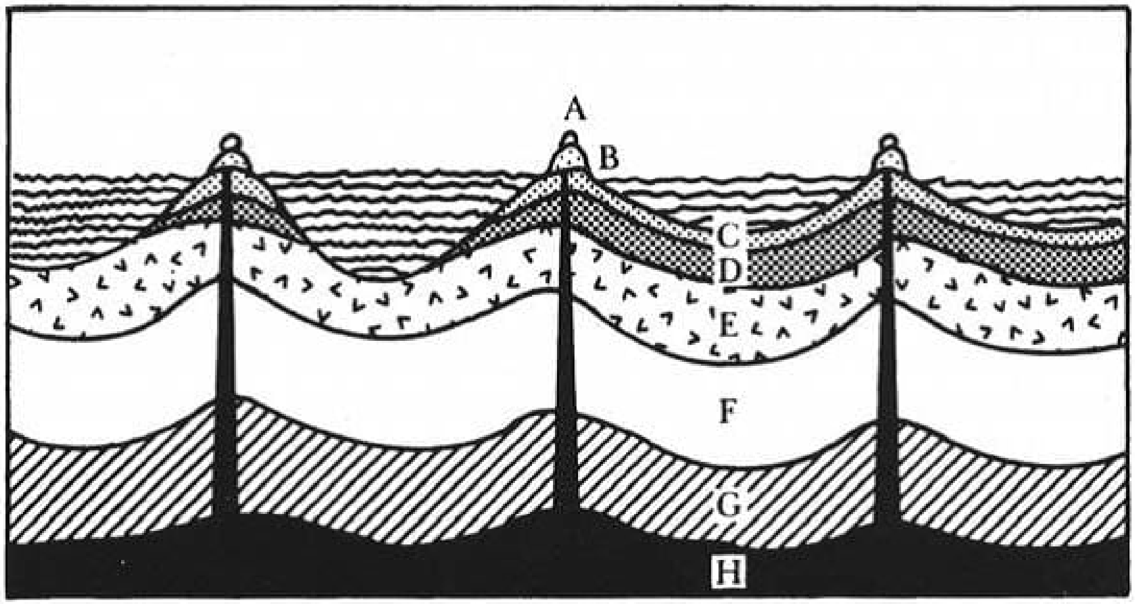
Ordinarily, it is only by such a projection into the external world that we become conscious of the collective unconscious images.

Thus suppose we meet with an extraordinary effect from without.

An analysis of that effect shows that it amounts to a projection of an unconscious content, and so we arrive at the realization of such a content.

The case mentioned above is an ordinary one insofar as we assume an individual who is chiefly identical with the ego or conscious, but if it should happen that the individual should be more on the side of his shadow, then he would be capable of realizing without projection an immediate—that is, an autonomous—movement of the unconscious contents.

But if the individual is identical with his normal ego, then even such an autonomous manifestation of the unconscious—that is, one not released by the projection, nor by external effect, but originating within himself—appears to him as if in the external world.



A = Individuals.
B = Families.
C = Clans.
D = Nations.
E = Large Group (European man, for example).
F = Primate Ancestors.
G = Animal Ancestors in general.

In other words, it requires a very close contact with the unconscious, and an understanding of it, for a man to realize that the origin of his mythological or spiritual experiences is within himself, and that whatever forms these experiences may appear to take, they do not in fact come from the external world.

Using the diagram I have just discussed, that is, Diagram 9, we could give an explanation of analysis.

The analyst makes his approach through the persona.

Certain formalities of greeting are gone through, and compliments exchanged.

In this way, one comes to the gateway of the conscious.

Then the conscious contents are carefully examined, and the one passes to the personal subconscious.

Here the doctor often marvels that many of the things found there are not conscious since they seem so obvious to an observer.

At the personal subconscious a Freudian analysis ends, as I indicated above.

When you have finished with the personal subconscious, you have finished with the causal influence of the past.

Then you must come to the reconstructive side, and the collective unconscious will speak in images and the consciousness of unconscious objects will begin.

If you can succeed in breaking down that dividing wall made by the personal subconscious, the shadow can be united with the ego and the individual becomes a mediator between two worlds.

He can now see himself from the “other side”as well as from “this side.”

Here consciousness of the shadow self is not though, one must have the unconscious images also at one’s disposal.

The animus or the anima begins to be active now, and the anima will bring in the figure of the old man.

All these figures will be projected into the conscious external world, and objects of the unconscious begin to correspond to objects in the external world, so that the latter, the real objects, take on a mythological character.

This means an enormous enrichment of life.

I have often been asked about the “geology” of a personality, and so I have tried to picture this after a fashion.

Diagram 10 shows individuals coming out of a certain common level, like the summits of mountains coming out of a sea.

The first connection between certain individuals is that of the family, then comes the clan which unites a number of families, then the nation which unites a still bigger group.

After that we could take a large group of connected nations such as would be included under the heading “European man.”

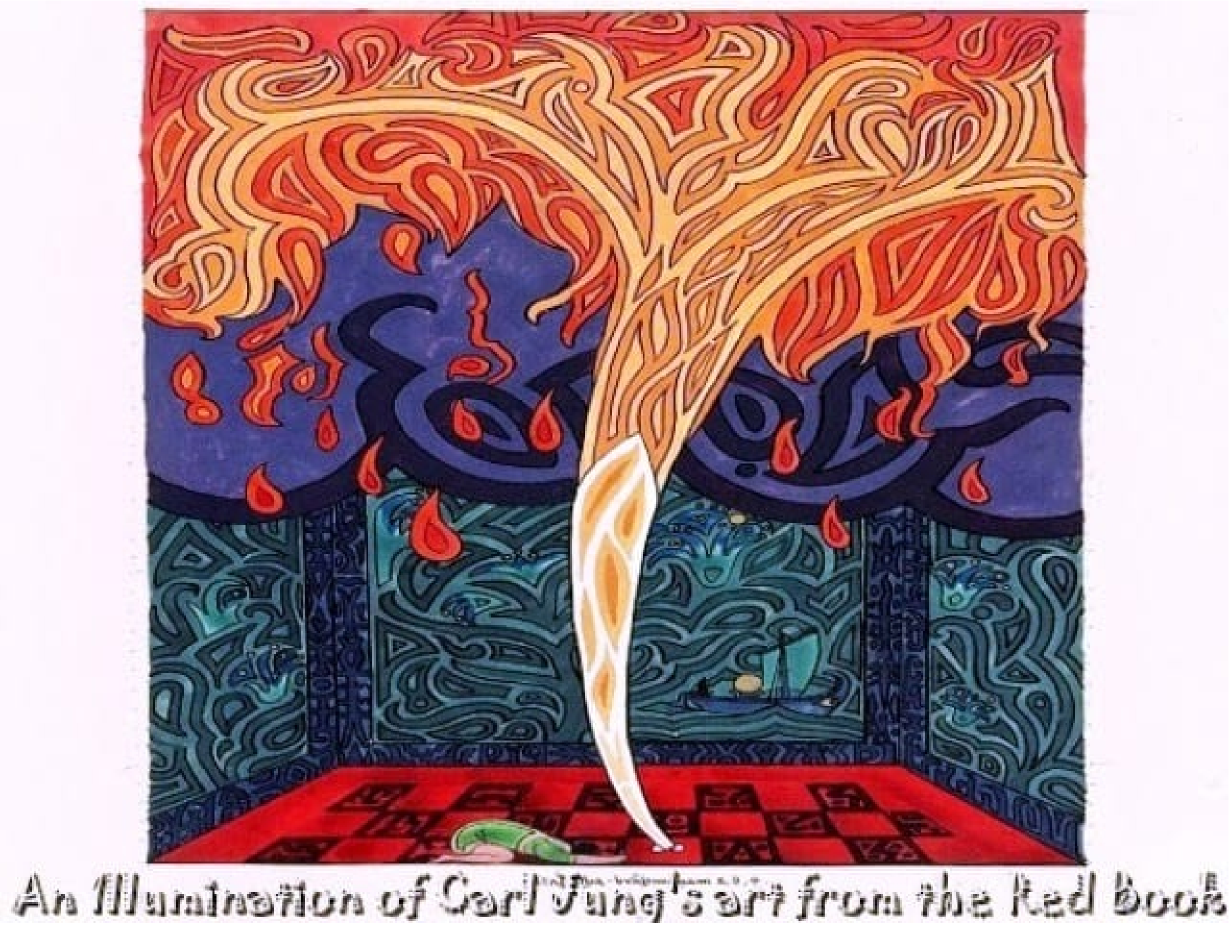
Going further down, we would come to what we could call the monkey group, or that of the primate ancestors, and after that would come the animal layer in general, and finally the central fire, with which as the diagram shows, we are still in connection. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 134 - 143

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/a73f4-1352bplate2b1.png`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Analytical-Psychology-Notes-Seminar-Collected/dp/0415046939/ref=sr_1_1?crid=CGIRM52HVT67&keywords=carl+jung+1925+seminar&qid=1576681182&s`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/49351-1352bplate2b2.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/7ae7b-1352bplate2b3.png`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/0c987-1352bplate2b4.png`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/4a185-1352bplate2b5.png`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/c5657-1352bplate2b7.png`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/20de7-1352bplate2b7.png`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/465cf-1352bplate2b9.png`

10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/7b155-1372bdiagram2b8.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/56c27-1432bdiagram2b10.jpg`

Carl Jung and Meister Eckhart and "Are we not Sons of God?" (2019-12-18 07:06)

[1]



An Illumination of Carl Jung's art from the Red Book

Dr. Jung often mentions the great influence Meister Eckhart who lived between the 11th and 12th century had upon his work.

Let’s observe on example of this:

First read a portion of one of Meister Eckhart’s sermons.

"St. John says: “See how great is the love that the Father has shown us, that we are called and are the children of God, “ (1 John 3:1).

He says not only “we are called” but “we are.”

So I say that just as a man cannot be wise without wisdom, so he cannot be a son without the filial nature of God’s Son, without having the same being as the Son of God has-just as being wise cannot be without wisdom.

And so, if you are the Son of God, you can only be so by having the same being of God that the Son has.

But this is “now hidden from us”; and after that it is written, “Beloved, we are the Sons of God.” And what do e know?-That is what he adds, “and we shall be like him.” (1 John 3:2), that is, the same as he is: the same being, experiencing and understanding-everything he is, when we see him as God.

So I say God could not make me the son of God if I had not the nature of God”s Son, any more than God could make me wise if I had not wisdom.

How are we God’s sons?

We do not know yet: “it does not yet appear” to us, all we know is that he says we shall be like Him. There are certain things that hide this knowledge in our souls and conceal it from us. Meister Eckhart, Sermon Seven, (pf 7, Q 76, QT 35)

Next observe Illustration 64 from The Red Book and read the corresponding Commentary written by Dr. Jung.

Are we not sons of the Gods? Why should Gods not be our children? If my father the God should die, a God child should arise from my maternal heart.

Since I love the God and do not want to leave him. Only he who loves the God can make him fall, and the God submits to his vanquisher and nestles in his hand and dies in the heart of him who loves him and promises him birth.

My God, I love you as a mother loves the unborn whom she carries in her heart. Grow in the egg of the East, nourish yourself from my love, drink the juice of my life so that you will become a radiant God.

We need your light, oh child. Since we go in darkness, light up our paths. May your light shine before us, may your fire warm the coldness of our life. We do not need your power but life.

What does power avail us? We do not want to rule. We want to live, we want light and warmth, and hence we need yours. Just as the greening earth and every living body needs the sun, so we as spirits need your light and your warmth. A sunless spirit becomes the parasite of the body. But the God feeds the spirit. Carl Jung; Red Book

[I heartily recommend "The Complete Mystical Works of Meister Eckhart for those interested in finding even more profound correspondences in the psychological discoveries and experiences of Meister Eckhart and Dr. Jung.]

[2]

The Complete Mystical Works of Meister Eckhart
With Foreword by Bernard McGinn
Translated by Maurice O'C Walshe

http://www.amazon.com/Complete-Mystical-Works-Meister-Eckhart/dp/0824525175/ref =sr _1 _1?ie=UTF8 &qid=1387363032 &sr=8-1 &keywords=meister+eckhart+complete+works

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/f9c92-illumination.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/5454a-meister.jpg`

Carl Jung "...I have recently read Wheelwright's book about the Navajo Creation Myth..." (2019-12-18 07:52)

[1]

THE POLLEN PATH
A COLLECTION OF NAVAJO MYTHS RETOLD BY MARGARET SCHEVILL LINK

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Margaret Erwin Schevill

Dear Mrs. Schevill, 1 September 1942

Your letter has reached me with considerable delay but it has arrived.

I think you could risk sending me a copy of the manuscriptwithout which I wouldn't be able to say much in the way of an introduction.

At all events it would be a poor sort of thing, since my mind is not actually preoccupied with Indian lore.

I'm deeply immersed in mediaeval thought rather, though I have recently read Wheelwright's book about the Navajo Creation Myth which is very interesting in a way.

Such a detailed recording of the primitive mind shows the extraordinary interwovenness of a definite natural milieu with the archetypal collective pattern, a picture which is surely most bewildering inasmuch as the numberless plants and animals and the peculiar atmospheric conditions are strange to you.

Intimate knowledge of them, however, is indispensable for the understanding of the specific value of just such a plant or such an animal.

On the whole I think the mail is safe.

Recently I got quite a number of letters and even books from the U.S.

Hoping you are always in good health,

I remain,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 320

Margaret Schevill Link (1887-1962) , American ethnologist, of Arizona. As a student of literature and art she had worked for some time with Jung and became interested in the myths of the Navaho Indians.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/4819e-pollen.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=18TF3B7YBVLN&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576682117&sprefix=jung+lett`

Carl Jung "...art can no more be fashioned from concepts than from the Pythagorean theorem." (2019-12-18 08:26)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Karl Srnetz

Dear Colleague, 19 December 1942

It would be very nice indeed if it should turn out that the Chwolson is obtainable.

Meanwhile I would like an older edition of the Vulgate and Septuagint and should be grateful if you could get these texts for me.

Your views concerning the effect of psychotherapy are absolutely correct.

In practice we have to take into account all the contributions and statements that have ever been made about the psyche.

That is why I have said that every psychological theory is a subjective confession.

Naturally everyone will speak of his own contribution.

If he didn’t, he’d be making no contribution at all.

But by speaking of it he gives the impression that it is the only thing he can see, or the reader gets the erroneous idea that with each renewal of standpoint everything else has been superseded.

Naturally this is a fallacy.

Depending on the peculiar nature of the case the most primitive therapeutic methods can achieve even better results than the most refined.

When we speak of drawing, for instance, this is only a minimal auxiliary method.

In certain cases this tactic has a very good effect and in other cases it means nothing.

Here again it is not a matter of a world-shaking innovation.

Also, scientifically and theoretically important statements have no psychotherapeutic value in themselves, as they are only verbal formulas without any life of their own.

Usually when a writer or any other artist makes fraudulent use of psychology he falls into his own trap, because art can no more be fashioned from concepts than from the Pythagorean theorem.

Theoretical formulations give one absolutely no idea of the practice, which is infinitely more multifaceted and alive than any theory could convey.

Nor is it the task of theory to paint a picture of life, but rather to create a workmanlike language which is satisfied with conventional signs.

With collegial regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 324.

Note: D. Chwolson, Die Ssabier (1856). There were two Sabaean sects, the one a semi-Christian sect of Babylonia, the other the Harranite (or pseudo-Sabaean) sect of Mesopotamia. The latter considered Ion, a son of Mercury, to be their ancestor ("The Visions of Zosimos," CW 13, p. 6o, n 4). Magic, astrology, and human sacrifice played a part in their religion . The Harranite treatise "Liber Platonis quartorum" (in Theatrum chemicum, V, 1622) is quoted and commented on in Psychology and Alchemy, CW 12, pars. 366ff.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/9f739-harranite.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=18TF3B7YBVLN&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576682117&sprefix=jung+lett`

Carl Jung: the whole art lies in extracting wisdom from stupidity. (2019-12-19 03:30)

[1]

[2]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

The man who is only wise and only holy interests me about as much as the skeleton of a rare saurian, which would not move me to tears.

The insane contradiction, on the other hand, between existence beyond Maya in the cosmic Self, and that amiable human weakness which fruitfully sinks many roots into the black earth, repeating for all eternity the weaving and rending of the veil as the ageless melody of India—this contradiction fascinates me; for how else can one perceive the light without the shadow, hear the silence without the noise, attain wisdom without foolishness? Carl

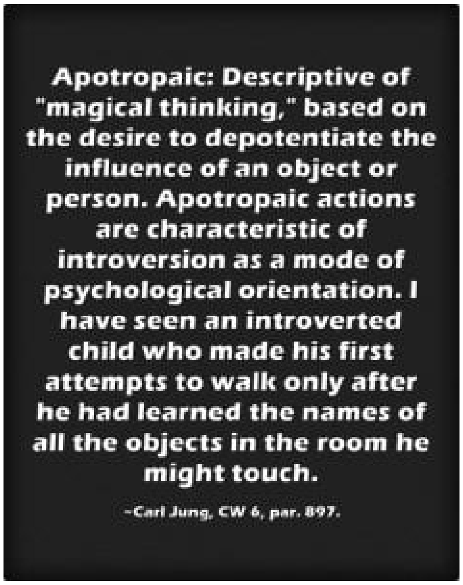
Jung, CW 11, Para 953

It requires no art to become stupid; the whole art lies in extracting wisdom from stupidity.

Stupidity is the mother of the wise, but cleverness never. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 222

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/cf21b-12bholy2bman.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1ABMUQ9U19AL8&keywords=jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=1576748703`

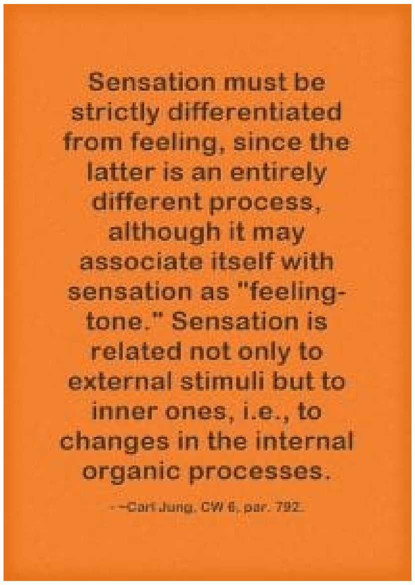
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-19 04:48)



Apotropaic: Descriptive of "magical thinking," based on the desire to depotentiate the influence of an object or person. Apotropaic actions are characteristic of introversion as a mode of psychological orientation. I have seen an introverted child who made his first attempts to walk only after he had learned the names of all the objects in the room he might touch.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 897.

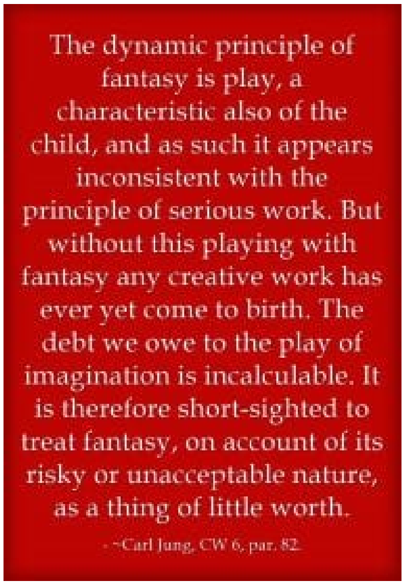
Apotropaic: Descriptive of "magical thinking," based on the desire to depotentiate the influence of an object or person. Apotropaic actions are characteristic of introversion as a mode of psychological orientation. I have seen an introverted child who made his first attempts to walk only after he had learned the names of all the objects in the room he might touch. Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 897.



Sensation must be strictly differentiated from feeling, since the latter is an entirely different process, although it may associate itself with sensation as "feeling-tone." Sensation is related not only to external stimuli but to inner ones, i.e., to changes in the internal organic processes.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 792.

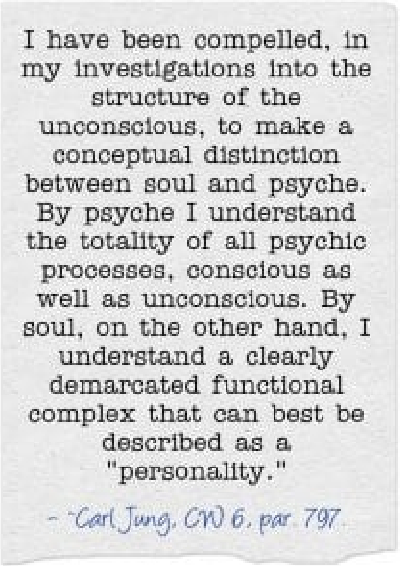
Sensation must be strictly differentiated from feeling, since the latter is an entirely different process, although it may associate itself with sensation as "feeling-tone." Sensation is related not only to external stimuli but to inner ones, i.e., to changes in the internal organic processes. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 792.



The dynamic principle of fantasy is play, a characteristic also of the child, and as such it appears inconsistent with the principle of serious work. But without this playing with fantasy any creative work has ever yet come to birth. The debt we owe to the play of imagination is incalculable. It is therefore short-sighted to treat fantasy, on account of its risky or unacceptable nature, as a thing of little worth.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 82.

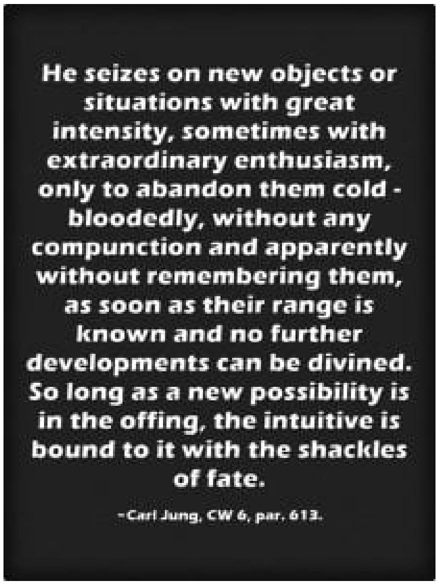
The dynamic principle of fantasy is play, a characteristic also of the child, and as such it appears inconsistent with the principle of serious work. But without this playing with fantasy any creative work has ever yet come to birth. The debt we owe to the play of imagination is incalculable. It is therefore short-sighted to treat fantasy, on account of its risky or unacceptable nature, as a thing of little worth. Carl Jung, CW 6, Page 82.



I have been compelled, in my investigations into the structure of the unconscious, to make a conceptual distinction between soul and psyche. By psyche I understand the totality of all psychic processes, conscious as well as unconscious. By soul, on the other hand, I understand a clearly demarcated functional complex that can best be described as a "personality."

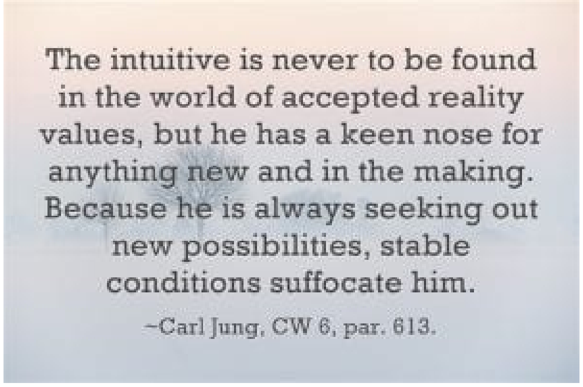
– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 797.

I have been compelled, in my investigations into the structure of the unconscious, to make a conceptual distinction between soul and psyche. By psyche I understand the totality of all psychic processes, conscious as well as unconscious. By soul, on the other hand, I understand a clearly demarcated functional complex that can best be described as a "personality." Carl Jung, CW 6, para 797.



He seizes on new objects or situations with great intensity, sometimes with extraordinary enthusiasm, only to abandon them cold - bloodedly, without any compunction and apparently without remembering them, as soon as their range is known and no further developments can be divined. So long as a new possibility is in the offing, the intuitive is bound to it with the shackles of fate.

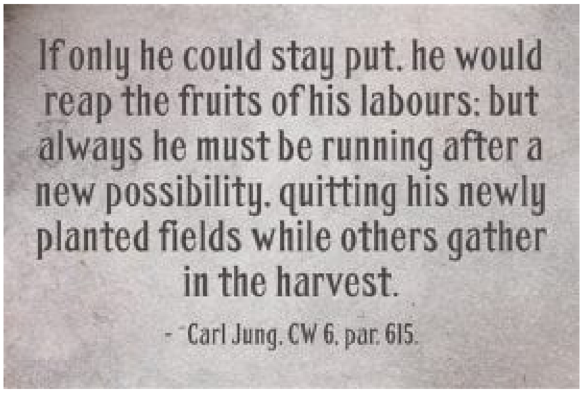
~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 613.



The intuitive is never to be found in the world of accepted reality values, but he has a keen nose for anything new and in the making. Because he is always seeking out new possibilities, stable conditions suffocate him.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 613.

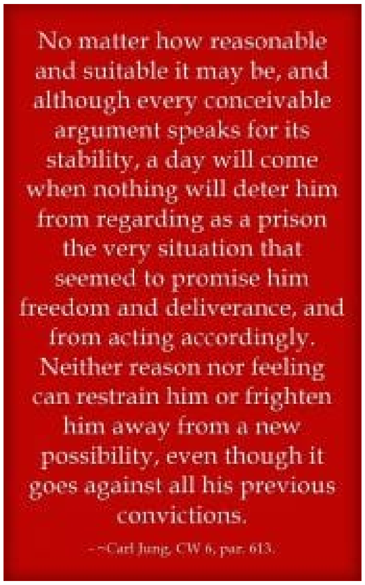
He seizes on new objects or situations with great intensity, sometimes with extraordinary enthusiasm, only to abandon them cold -bloodedly, without any compunction and apparently without remembering them, as soon as their range is known and no further developments can be divined. So long as a new possibility is in the offing, the intuitive is bound to it with the shackles of fate. (CW 6, par. 613)



If only he could stay put. he would reap the fruits of his labours: but always he must be running after a new possibility. quitting his newly planted fields while others gather in the harvest.

- ~Carl Jung. CW 6. par. 615.

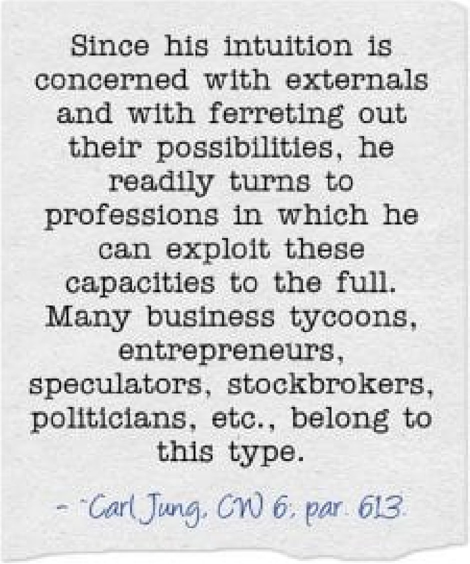
The intuitive is never to be found in the world of accepted reality values, but he has a keen nose for anything new and in the making. Because he is always seeking out new possibilities, stable conditions suffocate him. Carl Jung, CW 6, para 613



No matter how reasonable and suitable it may be, and although every conceivable argument speaks for its stability, a day will come when nothing will deter him from regarding as a prison the very situation that seemed to promise him freedom and deliverance, and from acting accordingly. Neither reason nor feeling can restrain him or frighten him away from a new possibility, even though it goes against all his previous convictions.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 613.

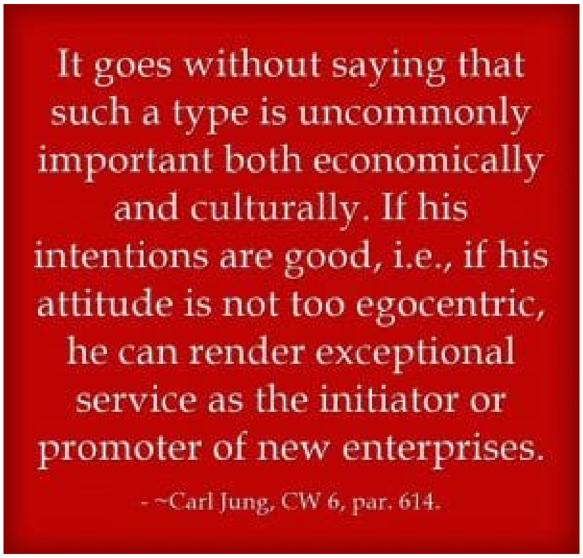
If only he could stay put, he would reap the fruits of his labours; but always he must be running after a new possibility, quitting his newly planted fields while others gather in the harvest. Carl Jung, CW 6, para 615.



Since his intuition is concerned with externals and with ferreting out their possibilities, he readily turns to professions in which he can exploit these capacities to the full. Many business tycoons, entrepreneurs, speculators, stockbrokers, politicians, etc., belong to this type.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6: par. 613.

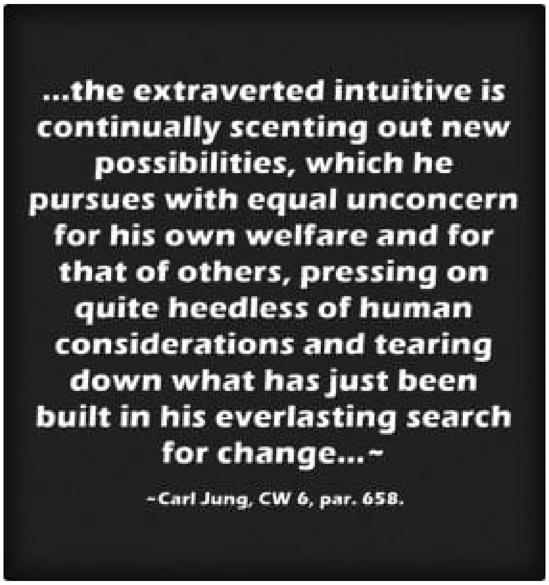
No matter how reasonable and suitable it may be, and although every conceivable argument speaks for its stability, a day will come when nothing will deter him from regarding as a prison the very situation that seemed to promise him freedom and deliverance, and from acting accordingly. Neither reason nor feeling can restrain him or frighten him away from a new possibility, even though it goes against all his previous convictions. Carl Jung, CW 6, para 613



It goes without saying that such a type is uncommonly important both economically and culturally. If his intentions are good, i.e., if his attitude is not too egocentric, he can render exceptional service as the initiator or promoter of new enterprises.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 614.

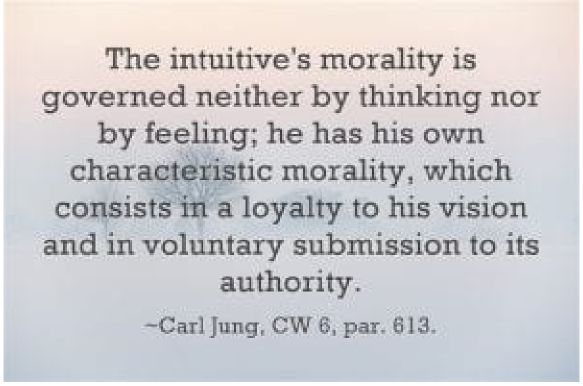
Since his intuition is concerned with externals and with ferreting out their possibilities, he readily turns to professions in which he can exploit these capacities to the full. Many business tycoons, entrepreneurs, speculators, stockbrokers, politicians, etc., belong to this type. Carl Jung, CW 6, para 613.



…the extraverted intuitive is continually scenting out new possibilities, which he pursues with equal unconcern for his own welfare and for that of others, pressing on quite heedless of human considerations and tearing down what has just been built in his everlasting search for change…~

~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 658.

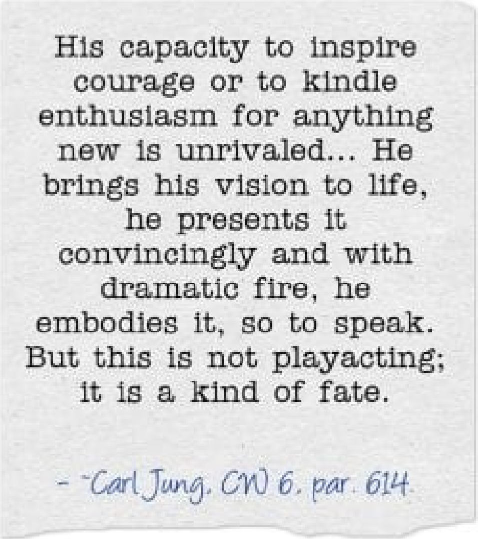
It goes without saying that such a type is uncommonly important both economically and culturally. If his intentions are good, i.e., if his attitude is not too egocentric, he can render exceptional service as the initiator or promoter of new enterprises. Carl Jung, CW 6, para 614



The intuitive's morality is governed neither by thinking nor by feeling; he has his own characteristic morality, which consists in a loyalty to his vision and in voluntary submission to its authority.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 613.

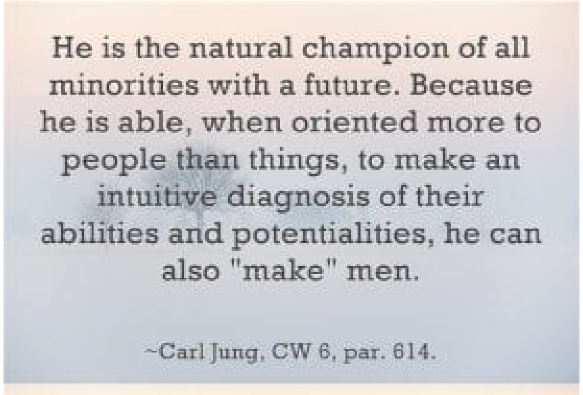
…the extraverted intuitive is continually scenting out new possibilities, which he pursues with equal unconcern for his own welfare and for that of others, pressing on quite heedless of human considerations and tearing down what has just been built in his everlasting search for change… Carl Jung, CW 6, para 658.



His capacity to inspire courage or to kindle enthusiasm for anything new is unrivaled... He brings his vision to life, he presents it convincingly and with dramatic fire, he embodies it, so to speak. But this is not playacting; it is a kind of fate.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6. par. 614.

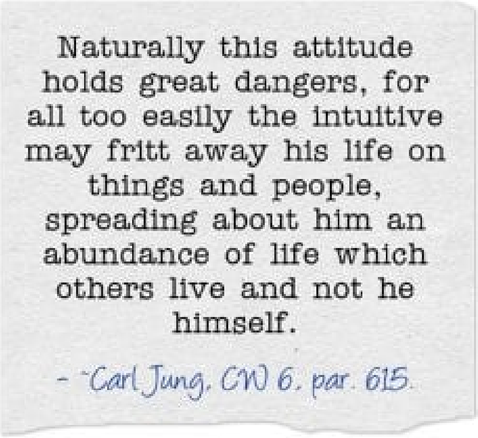
The intuitive’s morality is governed neither by thinking nor by feeling; he has his own characteristic morality, which consists in a loyalty to his vision and in voluntary submission to its authority. ‘Carl Jung, CW 6, para 613



He is the natural champion of all minorities with a future. Because he is able, when oriented more to people than things, to make an intuitive diagnosis of their abilities and potentialities, he can also "make" men.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 614.

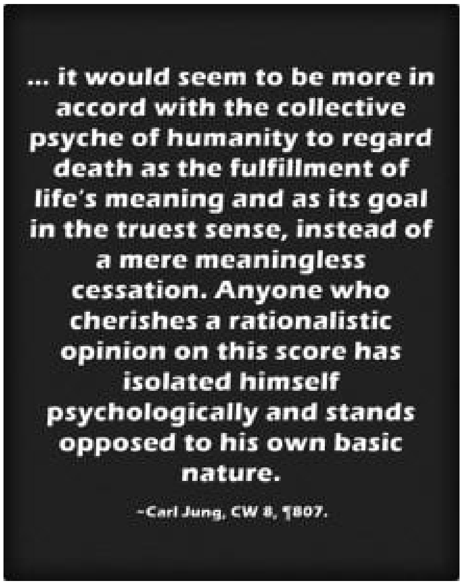
His capacity to inspire courage or to kindle enthusiasm for anything new is unrivaled... He brings his vision to life, he presents it convincingly and with dramatic fire, he embodies it, so to speak. But this is not playacting; it is a kind of fate. Carl Jung, CW 6, para 614



Naturally this attitude holds great dangers, for all too easily the intuitive may fritt away his life on things and people, spreading about him an abundance of life which others live and not he himself.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 6. par. 615.

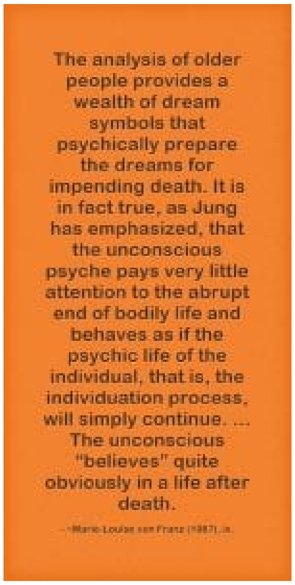
He is the natural champion of all minorities with a future. Because he is able, when oriented more to people than things, to make an intuitive diagnosis of their abilities and potentialities, he can also "make" men. Carl Jung, CW 6, para 614



... it would seem to be more in accord with the collective psyche of humanity to regard death as the fulfillment of life's meaning and as its goal in the truest sense, instead of a mere meaningless cessation. Anyone who cherishes a rationalistic opinion on this score has isolated himself psychologically and stands opposed to his own basic nature.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, ¶807.

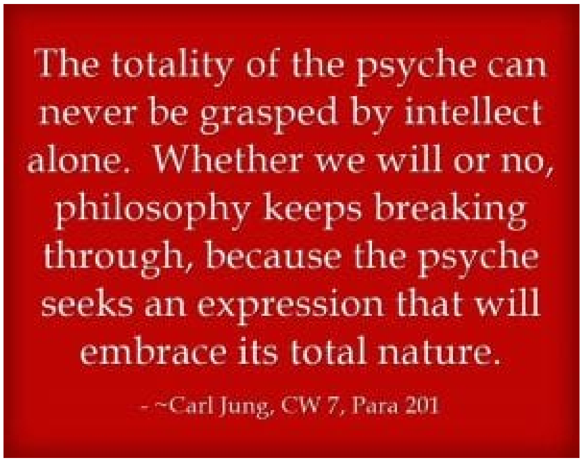
Naturally this attitude holds great dangers, for all too easily the intuitive may fritter away his life on things and people, spreading about him an abundance of life which others live and not he himself. Carl Jung, CW 6, para 615



The analysis of older people provides a wealth of dream symbols that psychically prepare the dreams for impending death. It is in fact true, as Jung has emphasized, that the unconscious psyche pays very little attention to the abrupt end of bodily life and behaves as if the psychic life of the individual, that is, the individuation process, will simply continue. ... The unconscious "believes" quite obviously in a life after death.

~Marie-Louise von Franz (1987), in.

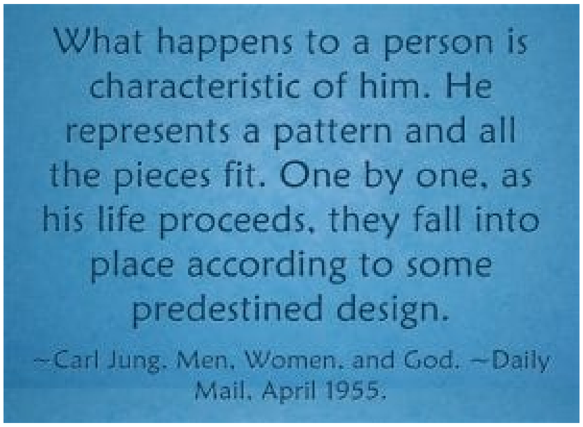
... it would seem to be more in accord with the collective psyche of humanity to regard death as the fulfillment of life's meaning and as its goal in the truest sense, instead of a mere meaningless cessation. Anyone who cherishes a rationalistic opinion on this score has isolated himself psychologically and stands opposed to his own basic nature. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 807.



The totality of the psyche can never be grasped by intellect alone. Whether we will or no, philosophy keeps breaking through, because the psyche seeks an expression that will embrace its total nature.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 201

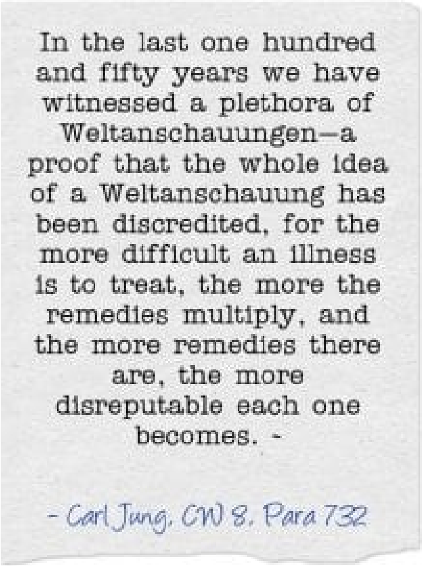
The analysis of older people provides a wealth of dream symbols that psychically prepare the dreams for impending death. It is in fact true, as Jung has emphasized, that the unconscious psyche pays very little attention to the abrupt end of bodily life and behaves as if the psychic life of the individual, that is, the individuation process, will simply continue. … The unconscious "believes" quite obviously in a life after death. Marie-Louise von Franz (1987), ix.



What happens to a person is characteristic of him. He represents a pattern and all the pieces fit. One by one, as his life proceeds, they fall into place according to some predestined design.

~Carl Jung, Men, Women, and God. ~Daily Mail, April 1955.

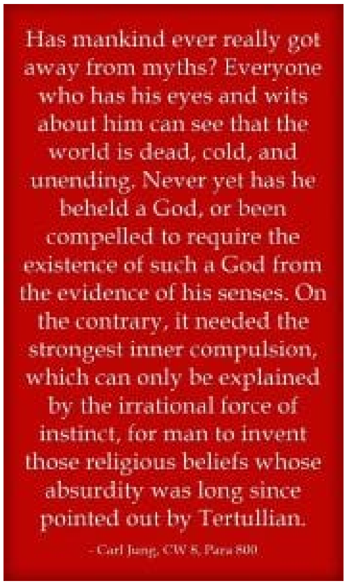
The totality of the psyche can never be grasped by intellect alone. Whether we will or no, philosophy keeps breaking through, because the psyche seeks an expression that will embrace its total nature. Carl Jung, 7, Para 201



In the last one hundred and fifty years we have witnessed a plethora of Weltanschauungen—a proof that the whole idea of a Weltanschauung has been discredited, for the more difficult an illness is to treat, the more the remedies multiply, and the more remedies there are, the more disreputable each one becomes. -

- Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 732

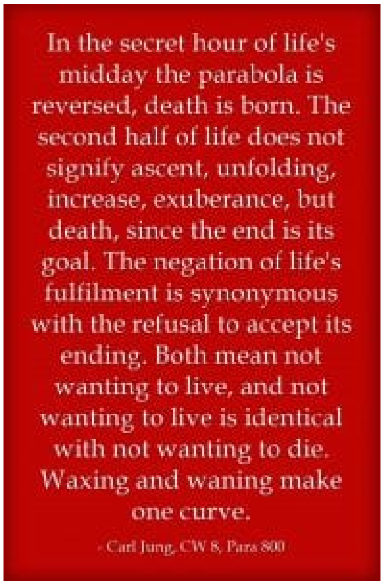
What happens to a person is characteristic of him. He represents a pattern and all the pieces fit. One by one, as his life proceeds, they fall into place according to some predestined design. Carl Jung, Men, Women, and God. Daily Mail, April 1955.



Has mankind ever really got away from myths? Everyone who has his eyes and wits about him can see that the world is dead, cold, and unending. Never yet has he beheld a God, or been compelled to require the existence of such a God from the evidence of his senses. On the contrary, it needed the strongest inner compulsion, which can only be explained by the irrational force of instinct, for man to invent those religious beliefs whose absurdity was long since pointed out by Tertullian.

- Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 800

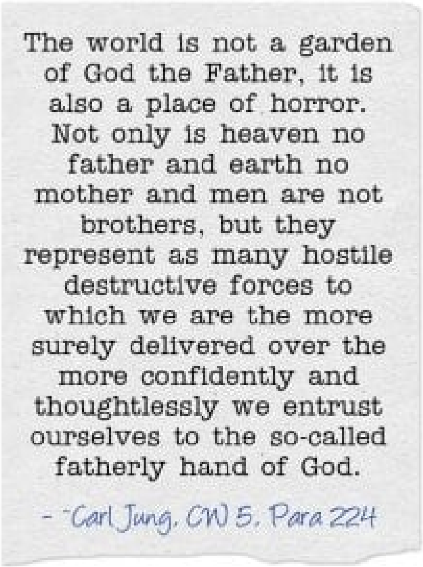
In the last one hundred and fifty years we have witnessed a plethora of Weltanschauungen—a proof that the whole idea of a Weltanschauung has been discredited, for the more difficult an illness is to treat, the more the remedies multiply, and the more remedies there are, the more disreputable each one becomes. 5-732



In the secret hour of life's midday the parabola is reversed, death is born. The second half of life does not signify ascent, unfolding, increase, exuberance, but death, since the end is its goal. The negation of life's fulfilment is synonymous with the refusal to accept its ending. Both mean not wanting to live, and not wanting to live is identical with not wanting to die. Waxing and waning make one curve.

- Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 800

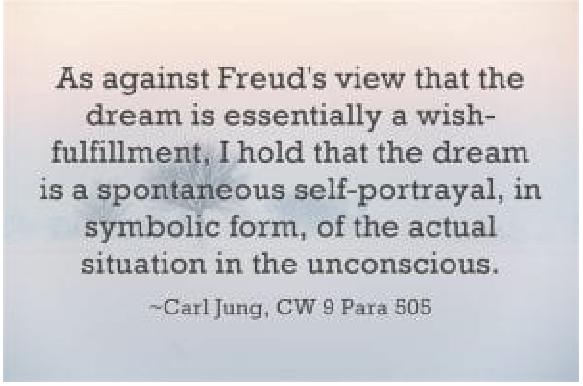
Has mankind ever really got away from myths? Everyone who has his eyes and wits about him can see that the world is dead, cold, and unending. Never yet has he beheld a God, or been compelled to require the existence of such a God from the evidence of his senses. On the contrary, it needed the strongest inner compulsion, which can only be explained by the irrational force of instinct, for man to invent those religious beliefs whose absurdity was long since pointed out by Tertullian.



The world is not a garden of God the Father, it is also a place of horror. Not only is heaven no father and earth no mother and men are not brothers, but they represent as many hostile destructive forces to which we are the more surely delivered over the more confidently and thoughtlessly we entrust ourselves to the so-called fatherly hand of God.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 224

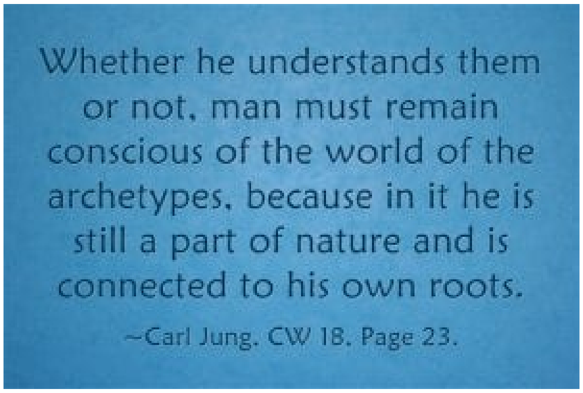
In the secret hour of life’s midday the parabola is reversed, death is born. The second half of life does not signify ascent, unfolding, increase, exuberance, but death, since the end is its goal. The negation of life’s fulfilment is synonymous with the refusal to accept its ending. Both mean not wanting to live, and not wanting to live is identical with not wanting to die. Waxing and waning make one curve. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 800.



As against Freud's view that the dream is essentially a wish-fulfillment, I hold that the dream is a spontaneous self-portrayal, in symbolic form, of the actual situation in the unconscious.

~Carl Jung, CW 9 Para 505

The world is not a garden of God the Father, it is also a place of horror. Not only is heaven no father and earth no mother and men are not brothers, but they represent as many hostile destructive forces to which we are the more surely delivered over the more confidently and thoughtlessly we entrust ourselves to the so-called fatherly hand of God. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 224



Whether he understands them or not, man must remain conscious of the world of the archetypes, because in it he is still a part of nature and is connected to his own roots.

~Carl Jung. CW 18. Page 23.

As against Freud's view that the dream is essentially a wish-fulfillment, I hold that the dream is a spontaneous self-portrayal, in symbolic form, of the actual situation in the unconscious. Carl Jung, CW 9 Para 505

Carl Jung’s "Septem Sermones ad Mortuos:The Seven Sermons to The Dead" (2019-12-19 04:52)

SERMO IV XVII

Die toten füllten murrend den raum und ſprachen:
Rede zu uns von Göttern und Teufeln, verfluchter.
Gott Sonne iſt das höchſte gut, der Teufel das gegenteil, alſo habt ihr zwei götter.
Es giebt aber viele hohe güter und viele ſchwere uebel, und darunter giebt es zwei gottteufel, der eine iſt das BRENNENDE und der andere das WACHSENDE.
Das Brennende iſt der EROS in geſtalt der flamme. Sie leuchtet, indem ſie verzehrt.
Das Wachſende iſt der BAUM DES LEBENS, er grünt, indem er wachſend lebendigen ſtoff anhäuft.
Der Eros flammt auf und ſtirbt dahin, der Lebensbaum aber wächſt langſam und ſtätig durch ungemeſſene zeiten.
Gutes und uebles einigt ſich in der flamme.
Gutes und uebles einigt ſich im wachstum des baumes
Leben und liebe ſtehen in ihrer göttlichkeit gegeneinander.
Unermeßlich, wie das heer der ſterne iſt die zahl der götter und teufel.
Jeder ſtern iſt ein gott und jeder raum, den ein ſtern füllt, iſt ein teufel. Das leervolle des ganzen aber iſt das Pleroma.
Die wirkung des ganzen iſt der Abraxas, nur unwirkliches ſteht ihm entgegen.

[1]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition (Philemon)

The Seven Sermons to the Dead Septem Sermones ad Mortuos by Carl Gustav Jung, 1916
(Translation by Stephan A. Hoeller)

Seven exhortations to the dead, written by Basilides of Alexandria, the city where East and West meet.

The dead came back from Jerusalem, where they did not find what they were seeking. They asked admittance to me and demanded to be taught by me, and thus I taught them:

Hear Ye: I begin with nothing. Nothing is the same as fullness. In the endless state fullness is the same as emptiness. The Nothing is both empty and full.

One may just as well state some other thing about the Nothing, namely that it is white or that it is black or that it exists or that it exists not.

That which is endless and eternal has no qualities, because it has all qualities.

The Nothing, or fullness, is called by us the PLEROMA. In it thinking and being cease, because the eternal is without qualities.

In it there is no one, for if anyone were, he would be differentiated from the Pleroma and would possess qualities which would distinguish him from the Pleroma.

In the Pleroma there is nothing and everything: it is not profitable to think about the Pleroma, for to do that would mean one’s dissolution.

The CREATED WORLD is not in the Pleroma, but in itself.

The Pleroma is the beginning and end of the created world.

The Pleroma penetrates the created world as the sunlight penetrates the air everywhere.

Although the Pleroma penetrates it completely, the created world has no part of it, just as an utterly transparent body does not become either dark or light in color as the result of the passage of light through it.

We ourselves, however, are the Pleroma, so it is that the Pleroma is present within us.

Even in the smallest point the Pleroma is present without any bounds, eternally and completely, for small and great are the qualities which are alien to the Pleroma.

The Pleroma is the nothingness which is everywhere complete and without end.

It is because of this that I speak of the created world as a portion of the Pleroma, but only in an allegorical sense; for the Pleroma is not divided into portions, for it is nothingness.

We, also, are the total Pleroma; for figuratively the Pleroma is an exceedingly small, hypothetical, even non-existent point within us, and also it is the limitless firmament of the cosmos about us.

Why, however, do we discourse about the Pleroma, if it is the all, and also nothing?

I speak of it in order to begin somewhere, and also to remove from you the delusion that somewhere within or without there is something absolutely firm and definite.

All things which are called definite and solid are but relative, for only that which is subject to change appears definite and solid.

The created world is subject to change.

It is the only thing that is solid and definite, since it has qualities.

In fact, the created world is itself but a quality.

We ask the question: how did creation originate?

Creatures indeed originated but not the created world itself, for the created world is a quality of the Pleroma, in the same way as the uncreated; eternal death is also a quality of the Pleroma.

Creation is always and everywhere, and death is always and everywhere. The Pleroma possesses all: differentiation and non-differentiation.

Differentiation is creation.

The created world is indeed differentiated.

Differentiation is the essence of the created world and for this reason the created also causes further differentiation.

That is why man himself is a divider, inasmuch as his essence is also differentiation.

That is why he distinguishes the qualities of the Pleroma, yea, those qualities which do not exist.

You say to me: What good is it then to talk about this, since it has been said that it is useless to think about the Pleroma?

I say these things to you in order to free you from the illusion that it is possible to think about the Pleroma. When you speak about the divisions of the Pleroma, we are speaking from the position of our own divisions, and we speak about our own differentiated state; but while we do this, we have in reality said nothing about the Pleroma. However, it is necessary to talk about our own differentiation, for this enables us to discriminate sufficiently.

Our essence is differentiation.

For this reason we must distinguish individual qualities.

You say: What harm does it do not to discriminate?

Then we reach beyond the limits of our own being; we extend ourselves beyond the created world, and we fall into the undifferentiated state which is another quality of the Pleroma.

We submerge into the Pleroma itself, and we cease to be created beings.

This we become subject to dissolution and nothingness.

Such is the very death of the created being. We die to the extent that we fail to discriminate.

For this reason the natural impulse of the created being is directed toward differentiation and toward the struggle against the ancient, pernicious state of sameness.

The natural tendency is called Principium Individuationis (Principle of Individuation).

This principle is indeed the essence of every created being.

From these things you may readily recognize why the undifferentiated principle and lack of discrimination are all a great danger to created beings.

For this reason we must be able to distinguish the qualities of the Pleroma. Its qualities are the PAIRS OF OPPOSITES, such as:

the effective and the ineffective fullness and emptiness the living and the dead light and dark hot and cold energy and matter time and space good and evil
the beautiful and the ugly

the one and the many and so forth.

The pairs of opposites are the qualities of the Pleroma: they are also in reality non-existent because they cancel each other out.

Since we ourselves are the Pleroma, we also have these qualities present within us; inasmuch as the foundation of our being is differentiation, we possess these qualities in the name and under the sign of differentiation, which means:

First—that the qualities are in us differentiated from each other, and they are separated from each other, and thus they do not cancel each other out, rather they are in action.

It is thus that we are the victims of the pairs of opposites. For in us the Pleroma is rent in two.

Second—the qualities belong to the Pleroma, and we can and should partake of them only in the name and under the sign of differentiation.

We must separate ourselves from these qualities.

In the Pleroma they cancel each other out; in us they do not.

But if we know how to know ourselves as being apart from the pairs of opposites, then we have attained to salvation.

When we strive for the good and the beautiful, we thereby forget about our essential being, which is differentiation, and we are victimized by the qualities of the Pleroma which are the pairs of opposites.

We strive to attain to the good and beautiful, but at the same time we also to the evil and the ugly, because in the Pleroma these are identical with the good and the beautiful.

However, if we remain faithful to our nature, which is differentiation, we then differentiate ourselves from the good and the beautiful, and thus we have immediately differentiated ourselves from the evil and the ugly.

It is only thus that we do not merge into the Pleroma, that is, into nothingness and dissolution.

You will object and say to me: Thou hast said that differentiation and sameness are also qualities of the Pleroma. How is it then that we strive for differentiation?

Are we not then true to our natures and must we then also eventually be in the state of sameness, while we strive for differentiation?

What you should never forget is that the Pleroma has no qualities.

We are the ones who create these qualities through our thinking.

When you strive after differentiation or sameness or after other qualities, you strive after thoughts which flow to you from the Pleroma, namely thoughts about the non-existent qualities of the Pleroma.

While you run after these thoughts, you fall again into the Pleroma and arrive at differentiation and sameness

at the same time. Not your thinking but your being is differentiation.

That is why you should not strive after differentiation and discrimination as you know these, but strive after your true nature. If you would thus truly strive, you would not need to know anything about the Pleroma and its qualities, and still you would arrive at the true goal because of your nature.

However, because thinking alienates us from our true nature, therefore I must teach knowledge to you, with which you can keep your thinking under control.

The First Sermon:

During the night the dead stood along the walls and shouted: “We want to know about God! Where is God? Is God dead?”

—God is not dead; he is as much alive as ever. God is the created world, inasmuch as he is something definite and therefore he is differentiated from the Pleroma. God is a quality of the Pleroma and everything that I have stated in reference to the created world is equally true of him.

God is distinguished from the created world, however, inasmuch as he is less definite and less definable than the created world in general. He is less

God is distinguished from the created world, however, inasmuch as he is less definite and less definable than the created world in general. He is less differentiated than the created world, because the ground of his being is effective fullness; and only to the extent that he is definite and differentiated is he identical with the created world; and thus he is the manifestation of the effective fullness of the Pleroma.

Everything we do not differentiate falls into the Pleroma and is cancelled out along with its opposite. Therefore if we do not discern God, then the effective fullness is cancelled out for us. God also is himself the Pleroma, even as the smallest point within the created world, as well as within the uncreated realm, is itself the Pleroma.

The effective emptiness is the being of the Devil. God and Devil are the first manifestations of the nothingness, which we call the Pleroma. It does not matter whether the Pleroma is or is not, for it cancels itself out in all things. The created world, however, is different. Inasmuch as God and Devil are created beings, they do not cancel each other out, rather they stand against each other as active opposites. We need no proof of their being; it is sufficient that we must always speak about them. Even if they did not exist, the created being would forever (because of its own differentiated nature) bring them forth out of the Pleroma.

All things which are brought forth from the Pleroma by differentiation are pairs of opposites; therefore God always has with him the Devil.

This interrelationship is so close, as you have learned, it is so indissoluble in your own lives, that it is even as the Pleroma itself. The reason for this is that these two stand very close to the Pleroma, in which all opposites are cancelled out and unified.

God and Devil are distinguished by fullness and emptiness, generation and destruction. Activity is common to both. Activity unites them. It is for this reason that activity stands above both, being God above God, for it unites fullness and emptiness in its working.

There is a God about whom you know nothing, because men have forgotten him. We call him by his name: ABRAXAS. He is less definite than God or Devil. In order to distinguish God from him we call God HELIOS, or the Sun.

Abraxas is activity; nothing can resist him but the unreal, and thus his active being freely unfolds. The unreal is not, and therefore cannot truly resist.

Abraxas stands above the sun and above the devil. He is the unlikely likely one, who is powerful in the realm of unreality. If the Pleroma were capable of having a being, Abraxas would be its manifestation.

Although he is activity itself, he is not a particular result, but result in general.

He is still a created being, inasmuch as he is differentiated from the Pleroma.

The sun has a definite effect and so does the devil; therefore they appear to us more effective that the undefinable Abraxas.

For he is power, endurance, change.

—At this point the dead caused a great riot, because they were Christians.

The dead approached like mist out of the swamps and they shouted: “Speak to us further about the highest god!”

—Abraxas is the god whom it is difficult to know. His power is the very greatest, because man does not perceive it at all. Man sees the summum bonum (supreme good) of the sun, and also the infinum malum of the devil, but Abraxas he does not see, for he is undefinable life itself, which is the mother of good and evil alike.

Life appears smaller and weaker then the summum bonum (supreme good), wherefore it is hard to think that Abraxas should superseded in his power the sun, which is the radiant foundation of all life force.

Abraxas is the sun and also the eternally gaping abyss of emptiness, of the diminisher and dissembler, the devil.

The power of Abraxas is twofold. You cannot see it, because in your eyes the opposition of this power seems to cancel it out.

That which is spoken by God-the-Sun is life;

That which is spoken by the devil is death.

Abraxas, however, speaks the venerable and also accursed word, which is life and death at once.

Abraxas generates truth and falsehood, good and evil, light and darkness with the same word in the same deed. Therefore Abraxas is truly the terrible one.

He is magnificent even as the lion at the very moment when he strikes his prey down. His beauty is like the beauty of a spring morn.

Indeed, he is himself the greater Pan, and also the lesser. He is Priapos.

He is the monster of the underworld, the octopus with a thousand tentacles, he is the twistings of winged serpents and of madness.

He is the hermaphrodite of the lowest beginning.

He is the lord of toads and frogs, who live in water and come out unto the land, and who sing together at high noon and at midnight.

He is fullness, uniting itself with emptiness.

He is the sacred wedding;

He is love and the murder of love;

He is the holy one and his betrayer.

He is the brightest light of day and the deepest night of madness.

To see him means blindness;

To know him is sickness;

To worship him is death;

To fear him is wisdom;

Not to resist him means liberation.

God lives behind the sun; the devil lives behind the night. What god brings into birth from the light, that devil pulls into the night. Abraxas, however, is the cosmos; its genesis and its dissolution. To every gift of God-the-Sun, the devil adds his curse.

All things which you beg from God-the-Sun generate an act of the devil. All things which you accomplish through God-the-Sun add to the effective might of the devil.

Such is the terrible Abraxas.

He is the mightiest manifest being, and in him creation becomes frightened of itself.

He is the revealed protest of creation against the Pleroma and its nothingness.

He is the terror of the son, which he feels against his mother.

He is the love of the mother for her son.

He is the delight of earth and the cruelty of heaven.

Man becomes paralyzed before his face.

Before him exist neither question nor answer.

He is the life of creation.

He is the activity of differentiation.

He is the love of man.

He is the speech of man.

He is both the radiance and the dark shadow of man.

He is deceitful reality.

—Here the dead howled and raved greatly, for they were still incomplete ones.

The Third Sermon

Grumbling, the dead filled the room and said: “Speak to us about gods and devils, thou accursed one!”

—God-the-Sun is the highest good, the devil is the opposite; thus you have two gods. But there are many great goods and many vast evils, and among them there are two god-devils, one of which is the BURNING ONE, and the other the GROWING ONE.

The burning one is EROS in his form as a flame. It shines and it devours. The growing one is the TREE OF LIFE; it grows green, and it accumulates living matter as it grows. Eros flames up and then dies away; the tree of life, however, grows slowly and reaches stately stature throughout countless ages.

The Fourth Sermon

Full Texts Page 3

ages.

Good and evil are united in the flame.

Good and evil are united in the growth of the tree.

Life and love oppose each other in their divinity.

Immeasurable, like the host of the stars, is the number of gads and devils. Every star is a god, and every space occupied by a star is a devil. And the emptiness of the whole is the Pleroma. The activity of the whole is Abraxas; only the unreal opposes him. Four is the number of the chief deities, because four is the number of the measurements of the world. One is the beginning: God-the-Sun. Two is Eros, because he expands with a bright light and combines two. Three is the Tree of Life, because it fills space with bodies. Four is the devil, because he opens everything which is closed; he dissolves everything that is formed and embodied; he is the destroyer, in whom all things come to nothing:

Blessed am I, for it is granted to me to know the multiplicity and diversity of the gods. Woe unto you, for you have substituted the oneness of god for the diversity which cannot be resolved into the one. Through this you have created the torment of incomprehension, and the mutilation of the created world, the essence and law of which is diversity. How can you be true to your nature when you attempt to make one out of the many? What you do to the gods, that also befalls you. All of you are made thus the same and in this way your nature also becomes mutilated.

For the sake of man there may reign unity, but never for the sake of god, because there are many gods but only few men. The gods are mighty and they bear their diversity, because like the stars the stand in solitude and are separated by vast distances one from the other. Humans are weak and cannot bear their own diversity, because they live close to each other and are desirous of company, so that they cannot bear their own distinct separateness. For the sake of salvation do I teach you that which is to be cast out, for the sake of which I myself have been cast out.

The multiplicity of the gods equals the multiplicity of men. Countless gods are waiting to become men. Countless gods have already been men. Man is a partaker of the essence of the gods; he comes from the gods and he goes to God.

Even as it useless the think about the Pleroma, so is it useless to worship the number of the gods. Least of all is it of any use to worship the first God, the effective fullness and the highest good. Through our prayer we cannot add to it and we cannot take away from it, because the effective emptiness swallows everything. The gods of light compose the heavenly world, which is multiple and stretches into infinity and which expands without end.
Their highest lord is God-the-Sun.

The dark gods constitute the underworld. They are uncomplicated and they are capable of diminishing and shrinking into infinity. Their deepest lord is the devil, the spirit of the moon, the serf of the earth, who is smaller, colder and deader than the earth.

There is no difference in the power of the heavenly and the earthly gods. The heavenly ones expand, the earthly ones diminish. Both directions stretch into infinity.

The dead were full of mocking and cried: “Teach us, thou fool, about church and holy community!”

—The world of the gods is manifest in spirituality and sexuality. The heavenly gods appear in spirituality, the earth gods appear in sexuality.

Spirituality receives and comprehends. It is feminine and therefore we call it MATER COELESTIS, the heavenly mother. Sexuality generates and creates. It is masculine and therefore we call it PHALLOS, the earthly father. The sexuality of man is more earthly, while the sexuality of woman is more heavenly. The spirituality of man is more heavenly, for it moves in the direction of the greater. On the other hand, the spirituality of woman is more earthly, for it moves in the direction of the smaller.

Deceitful and devilish is the spirituality of the man who goes toward the smaller. Deceitful and devilish is the spirituality of the woman who goes toward the greater. Each is to go to its own place.

Man and woman become a devil to each other when they do not separate their spiritual paths, for the nature of created beings is always of the nature of differentiation.

The sexuality of man goes to that which is earthly; the sexuality on woman goes to that which is spiritual. Man and woman become a devil to each other if they do not discriminate between their two forms of sexuality.

Man shall know that which is smaller, woman that which is greater. Man shall separate himself from spirituality and from sexuality alike. He shall call spirituality mother, and he shall enthrone her between heaven and earth. He shall name sexuality phallos, and shall place it between himself and the earth, for the mother and the phallos are super-human demons and manifestations of the world of the gods. They are more effective for us than the gods, because they are nearer to our own being. When you cannot distinguish between yourselves on the one hand, and sexuality and spirituality on the other, and when you cannot regard these two as being above and beside yourself, then you become victimized by them, i.e., by the qualities of the Pleroma, Spirituality and sexuality are not your qualities, they are not things which you can posses and comprehend; on the contrary, they are mighty demons, manifestations of the gods, and therefore they tower above you and they exist in themselves. One does not possess spirituality for oneself or sexuality for oneself; rather is one subject to the laws of spirituality and sexuality. Therefore no one escapes these two demons. You shall regards them as demons, as common causes and grave dangers, quite like the gods, and above all, like the terrible Abraxas.

Man is weak, therefore community is indispensable; if it is not the community in the sign of the mother, then it is in the sign of the phallus. Not to have community consists of suffering and sickness. Community brings with itself fragmentation and dissolution. Differentiation leads to solitude.

Solitude is contrary to community. Because of the weakness of man’s will, as opposed to the gods and demons and their inescapable law, there is need for community.

For this reason, there shall be as much community as necessary, not for the sake of men, but for the sake of the gods. The gods force you into a community. As much community as they force upon you is necessary, but more than that is evil.

In the community each shall be subject to another, so that the community will be maintained, inasmuch as you have need of it. In the solitary state each one shall be placed above all others, so that he may know himself and avoid servitude. In community there shall be abstinence.

In solitude let there be squandering of abundance.

For community is the depth, while solitude is the height.

The true order in community purifies and preserves.

The true order in solitude purifies and increases.

Community gives us warmth, while solitude gives us the light.

The Fifth Sermon

TheThe demon of sexuality comes to our soul like a serpent. It is half a human soul and is called thought-desire.

The demon of spirituality descends into our soul like a white bird. It is half a human soul and is called desire-thought.

The serpent is an earthly soul, half demonic, a spirit, and related to the spirits of the dead. Like the spirits of the dead, the serpent also enters various terrestrial objects. The serpent also induces fear of itself in the hearts of men, and enkindles desire in the same. The serpent is of a generally feminine character and seeks forever the company of the dead. It is associated with the dead who are earthbound, who have not found the way by which to cross over to the state of solitude. The serpent is a whore and she consorts with the devil and with evil spirits; she is a tyrant and a tormenting spirit, always tempting people to keep the worst kind of company.

The white bird is the semi-heavenly soul of man. It lives with the mother and occasionally descends from the mother’s abode. The bird is masculine and is called effective thought. The bird is chaste and solitary, a messenger of the mother. It flies high above the earth. It commands solitude. It brings messages from the distance, from those who have gone before, those who are perfected. It carries our words up to the mother. The mother intercedes and warns, but she has no power against the gods. She is a vehicle of the sun.

The serpent descends into the deep and with her cunning she either paralyzes or stimulates the phallic demon. The serpent brings up from the deep the very cunning thoughts of the earthly one, thoughts that crawl through all openings and become saturated with desire. Although the serpent does not want to be, she is nevertheless useful to us. The serpent eludes our grasp, we pursue her and she shows us the way, which, with our limited human wit, we could not find.

—The dead looked up with contempt and said: “Cease to speak to us about gods, demons and souls. We have known all of this in essence for a long time.”

The Sixth Sermo

At night the dead came back again and amidst complaining said: “One more thing we must know, because we had forgotten to discuss it: teach us concerning man!”

—Man is a portal through which one enters from the outer world of the gods, demons and souls, into the inner world, from the greater world into the smaller world. Small and insignificant is man; one leaves him soon behind, and thus one enters once more into infinite space, into the microcosm, into the inner eternity.

In immeasurable distance there glimmers a solitary star on the highest point of heaven. This is the only god of this lonely one. This is his world, his Pleroma, his divinity.

In this world, man is Abraxas, who gives birth to and devours his own world.

The star is man’s God and goal.

It is his guiding divinity; in it man finds repose.

To it goes the long journey of the soul after death; in it shine all things which otherwise might keep man from the greater world with the brilliance of a great light.

To this One, man ought to pray.

Such a prayer increases the light of the star.

Such a prayer builds a bridge over death.

It increases the light of the microcosm; when the outer world grows cold, this star still shines.

There is nothing that can separate man from his own God, if man can only turn his gaze away from the fiery spectacle of Abraxas.

Man here, God there.

Weakness and insignificance here, eternal creative power there.

Here is but darkness and damp cold.

There all is sunshine.

Upon hearing this the dead fell silent, and they rose up like smoke rises over the fire of the shepherd, who guards his flock by night.

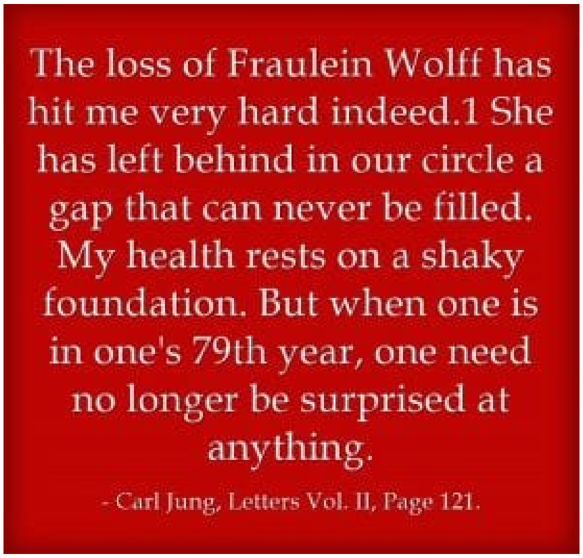
Anagramma:

NAHTRIHECCUNDE
GAHINNEVERAHTUNIN
ZEHGESSURKLACH

ZUNNUS

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3LESGW12YTRZW&keywords=jung+red+book+readers+edition&qid=1576750902&sprefix=jung+`

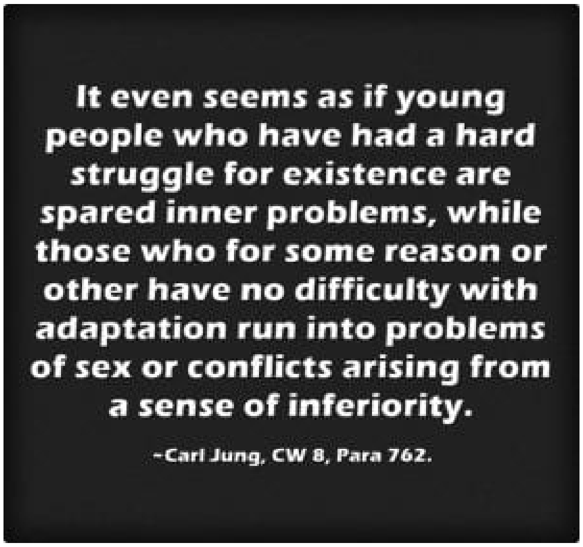
Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-19 05:18)



The loss of Fraulein Wolff has hit me very hard indeed.1 She has left behind in our circle a gap that can never be filled. My health rests on a shaky foundation. But when one is in one's 79th year, one need no longer be surprised at anything.

- Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 121.

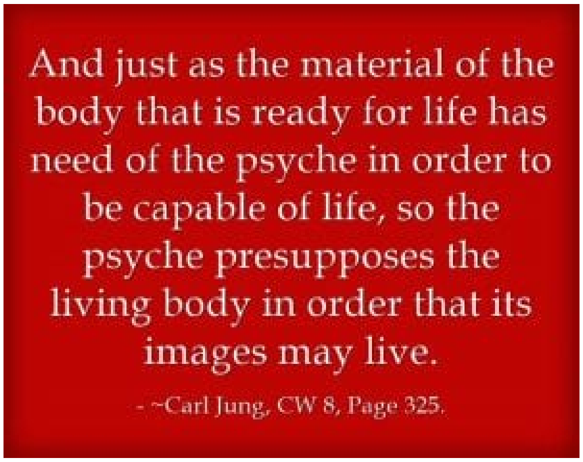
The loss of Fraulein Wolff has hit me very hard indeed. She has left behind in our circle a gap that can never be filled. My health rests on a shaky foundation. But when one is in one's 79th year one no longer be surprised at anything at all. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 121.



It even seems as if young people who have had a hard struggle for existence are spared inner problems, while those who for some reason or other have no difficulty with adaptation run into problems of sex or conflicts arising from a sense of inferiority.

-Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 762.

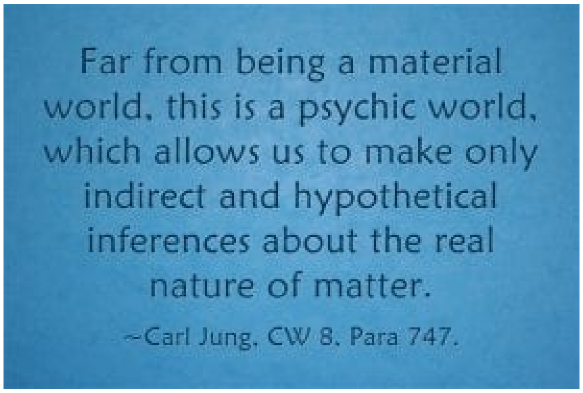
It even seems as if young people who have had a hard struggle for existence are spared inner problems, while those who for some reason or other have no difficulty with adaptation run into problems of sex or conflicts arising from a sense of inferiority. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 762



And just as the material of the body that is ready for life has need of the psyche in order to be capable of life, so the psyche presupposes the living body in order that its images may live.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 325.

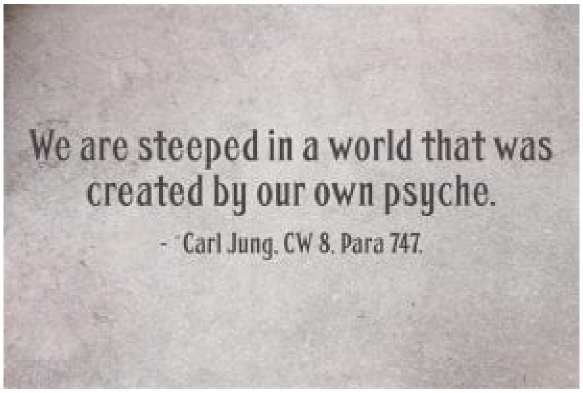
And just as the material of the body that is ready for life has need of the psyche in order to be capable of life, so the psyche presupposes the living body in order that its images may live. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 325



Far from being a material world, this is a psychic world, which allows us to make only indirect and hypothetical inferences about the real nature of matter.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 747.

Far from being a material world, this is a psychic world, which allows us to make only indirect and hypothetical inferences about the real nature of matter. Carl Jung CW 8, Para 747



We are steeped in a world that was created by our own psyche.

- Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 747.

We are steeped in a world that was created by our own psyche. Carl Jung CW 8, Para 747

The symbol in the dream has more the value of a parable it does not conceal, it teaches.
- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 471.

The symbol in the dream has more the value of a parable it does not conceal, it teaches.   Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 471

Everywhere the question of the "why" and the
"wherefore" may be raised, because every organic structure consists of a complicated network of purposive functions, and each of these functions can be resolved into a series of individual facts with a purposive orientation.
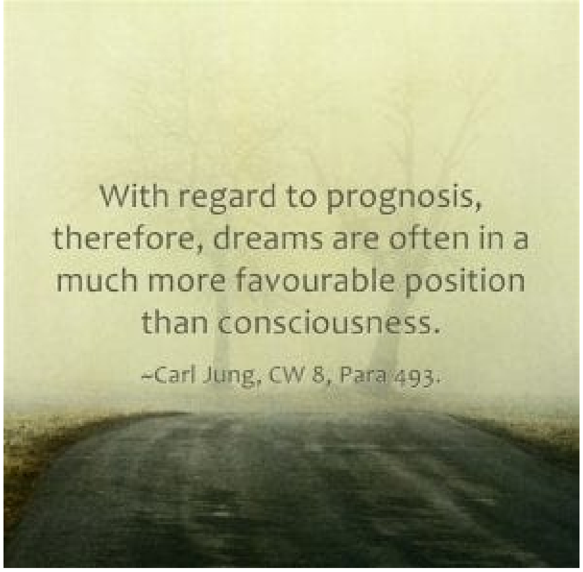
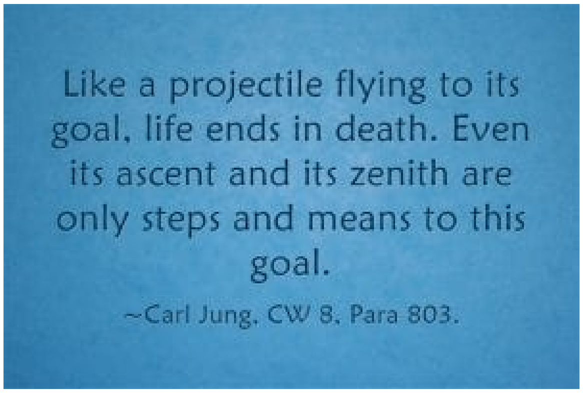
- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 462.

Everywhere the question of the "why" and the "wherefore" may be raised, because every organic structure consists of a complicated network of purposive functions, and each of these functions can be resolved into a series of individual facts with a purposive orientation. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 462



With regard to prognosis, therefore, dreams are often in a much more favourable position than consciousness.

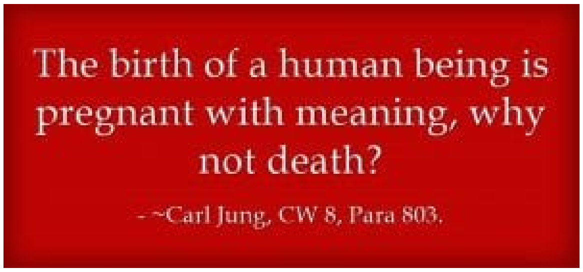
~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 493.



Like a projectile flying to its goal, life ends in death. Even its ascent and its zenith are only steps and means to this goal.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 803.

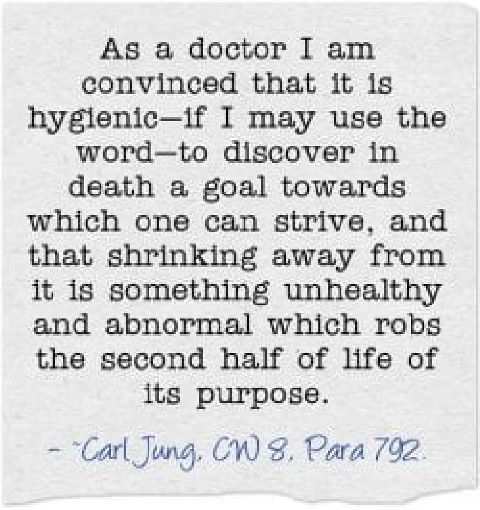
With regard to prognosis, therefore, dreams are often in a much more favourable position than consciousness. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 493



The birth of a human being is pregnant with meaning, why not death?

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 803.

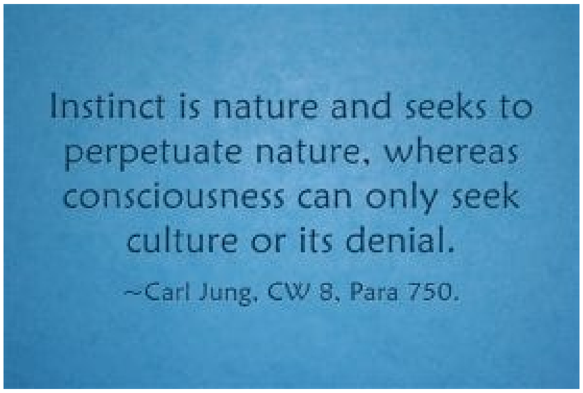
Like a projectile flying to its goal, life ends in death. Even its ascent and its zenith are only steps and means to this goal. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 803



As a doctor I am convinced that it is hygienic—if I may use the word—to discover in death a goal towards which one can strive, and that shrinking away from it is something unhealthy and abnormal which robs the second half of life of its purpose.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 792.

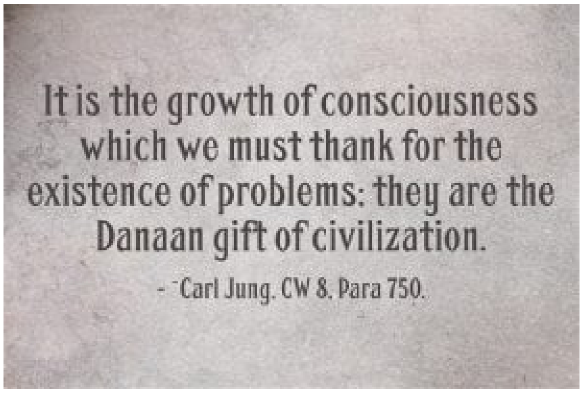
The birth of a human being is pregnant with meaning, why not death? Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 803



Instinct is nature and seeks to perpetuate nature, whereas consciousness can only seek culture or its denial.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750.

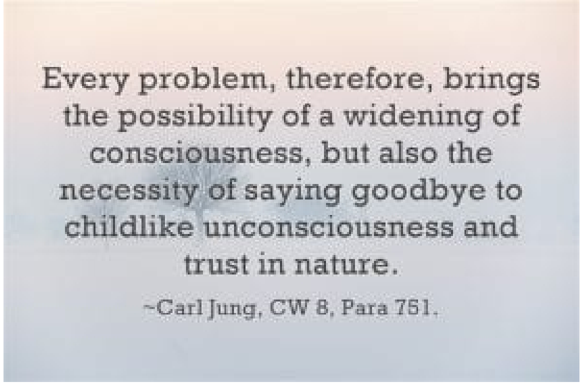
As a doctor I am convinced that it is hygienic—if I may use the word—to discover in death a goal towards which one can strive, and that shrinking away from it is something unhealthy and abnormal which robs the second half of life of its purpose. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 792



It is the growth of consciousness which we must thank for the existence of problems: they are the Danaan gift of civilization.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750.

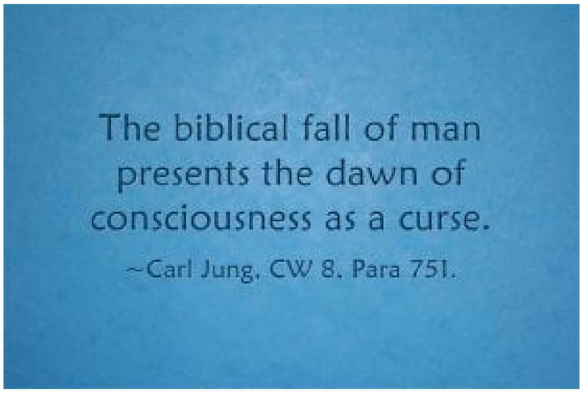
Instinct is nature and seeks to perpetuate nature, whereas consciousness can only seek culture or its denial. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750



Every problem, therefore, brings the possibility of a widening of consciousness, but also the necessity of saying goodbye to childlike unconsciousness and trust in nature.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 751.

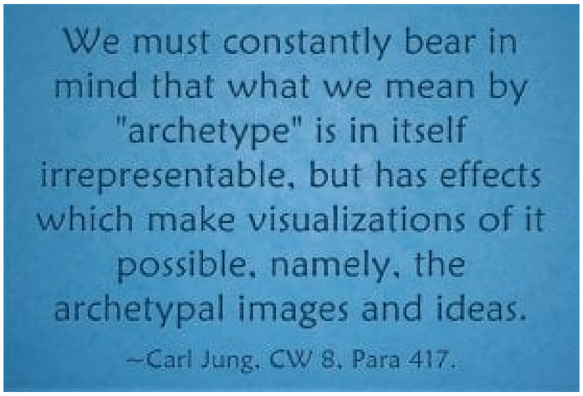
It is the growth of consciousness which we must thank for the existence of problems; they are the Danaan gift of civilization, Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750



The biblical fall of man presents the dawn of consciousness as a curse.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 751.

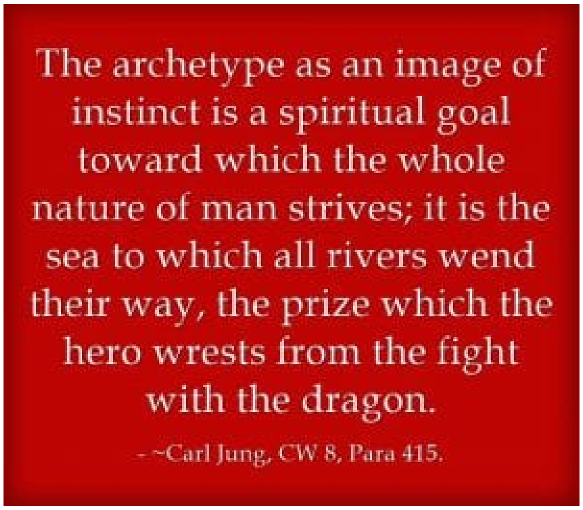
Every problem, therefore, brings the possibility of a widening of consciousness, but also the necessity of saying goodbye to childlike unconsciousness and trust in nature. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 751



We must constantly bear in mind that what we mean by "archetype" is in itself irrepresentable, but has effects which make visualizations of it possible, namely, the archetypal images and ideas.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 417.

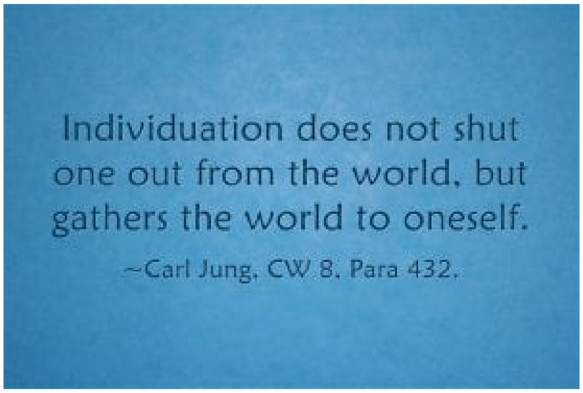
The biblical fall of man presents the dawn of consciousness as a curse. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 751



The archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415.

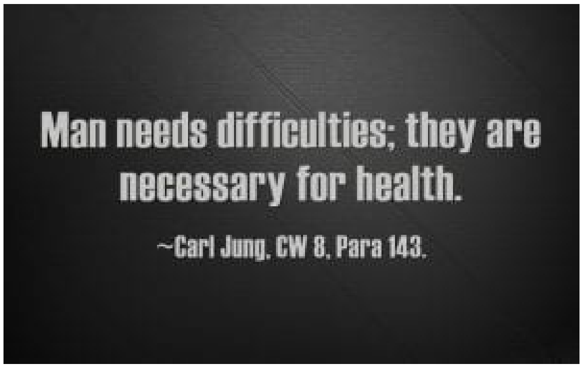
We must constantly bear in mind that what we mean by "archetype" is in itself irrepresentable, but has effects which make visualizations of it possible, namely, the archetypal images and ideas. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 417



Individuation does not shut one out from the world, but gathers the world to oneself.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 432.

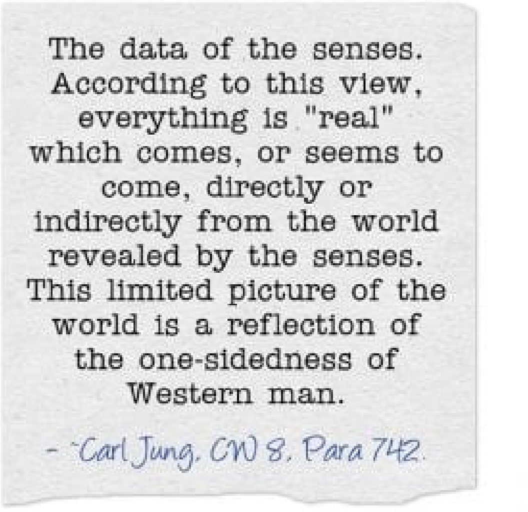
The archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415



Man needs difficulties; they are necessary for health.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 143.

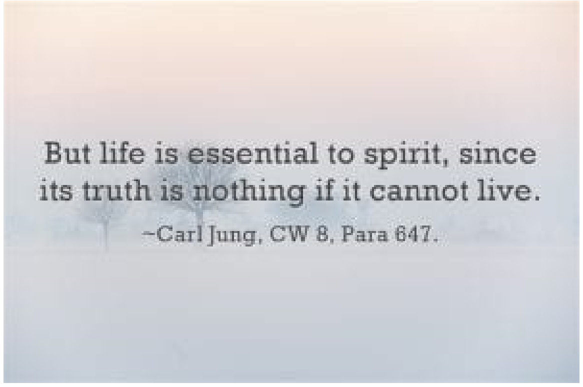
Individuation does not shut one out from the world but gathers the world to oneself. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 312.



The data of the senses. According to this view, everything is "real" which comes, or seems to come, directly or indirectly from the world revealed by the senses. This limited picture of the world is a reflection of the one-sidedness of Western man.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 742.

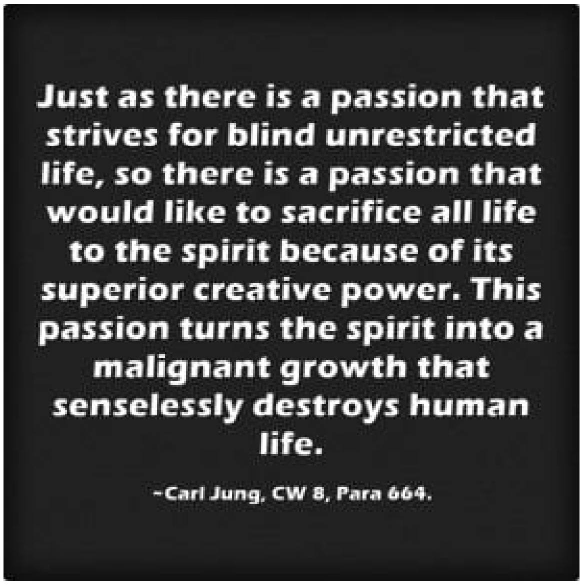
Man needs difficulties; they are necessary for health. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 143



But life is essential to spirit, since its truth is nothing if it cannot live.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 647.

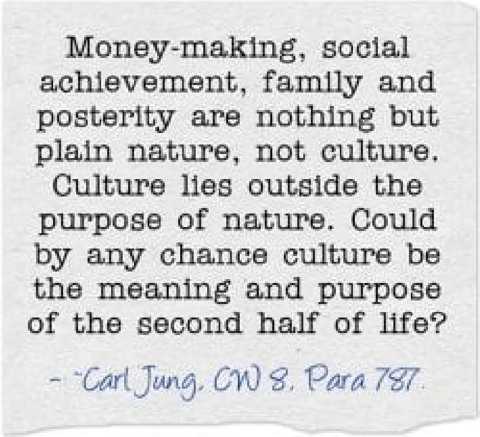
The data of the senses. According to this view, everything is "real" which comes, or seems to come, directly or indirectly from the world revealed by the senses. This limited picture of the world is a reflection of the one-sidedness of Western man. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 742



Just as there is a passion that strives for blind unrestricted life, so there is a passion that would like to sacrifice all life to the spirit because of its superior creative power. This passion turns the spirit into a malignant growth that senselessly destroys human life.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 664.

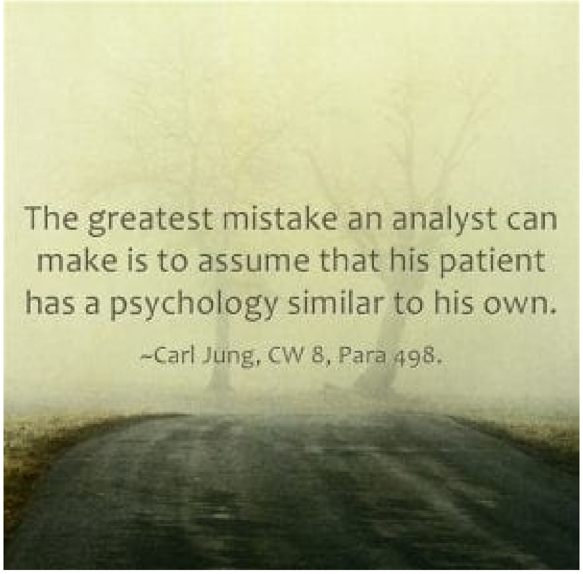
But life is essential to spirit, since its truth is nothing if it cannot live. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 647



Money-making, social achievement, family and posterity are nothing but plain nature, not culture. Culture lies outside the purpose of nature. Could by any chance culture be the meaning and purpose of the second half of life?

- Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 787.

Just as there is a passion that strives for blind unrestricted life, so there is a passion that would like to sacrifice all life to the spirit because of its superior creative power. This passion turns the spirit into a malignant growth that senselessly destroys human life. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 646



The greatest mistake an analyst can make is to assume that his patient has a psychology similar to his own.
~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 498.

Money-making, social achievement, family and posterity are nothing but plain nature, not culture. Culture lies outside the purpose of nature. Could by any chance culture be the meaning and purpose of the second half of life? Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 787

Carl Jung: "It is all escapism to feel dependent." (2019-12-19 05:22)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Mr. 0.

Dear 0., 20 May 1947

The two animals that maul each other under water represent a fight of opposites in your unconscious.

The fight takes place there because it doesn't take place in your consciousness.

It forms a tail-devouring Ouroboros to the exclusion of yourself and that's the reason why you are still a baby and have such a huge anima on account of it.

But even a baby can grow up and assert itself.

Small babies do assert themselves, as a matter of fact.

If you creep inside your anima-mother you simply go to sleep and then the animals can go on mauling each other into eternity. - If there are many diamonds or many oranges that is a disintegration and multiplication of the One.

Of course it's wrong, but it derives from the fact that you allow yourself to be torn asunder.

That's the baby-state all right and the mauling.

It's all very well to feel dependent upon the whole world, but this is not the point.

The point is that you are not dependent and that you begin to feel yourself as not dependent.

It is all escapism to feel dependent.

By such an attitude you just lame yourself and that's the reason why you cannot put yourself upon your own feet.

The right way is your own way, and you should make yourself go on that way.

That will lead you somewhere.-I'm not intending to discuss dreams with you.

I want to see you at your own work first.

Please consider every word I say in this letter.

Perhaps it puts some light into you.

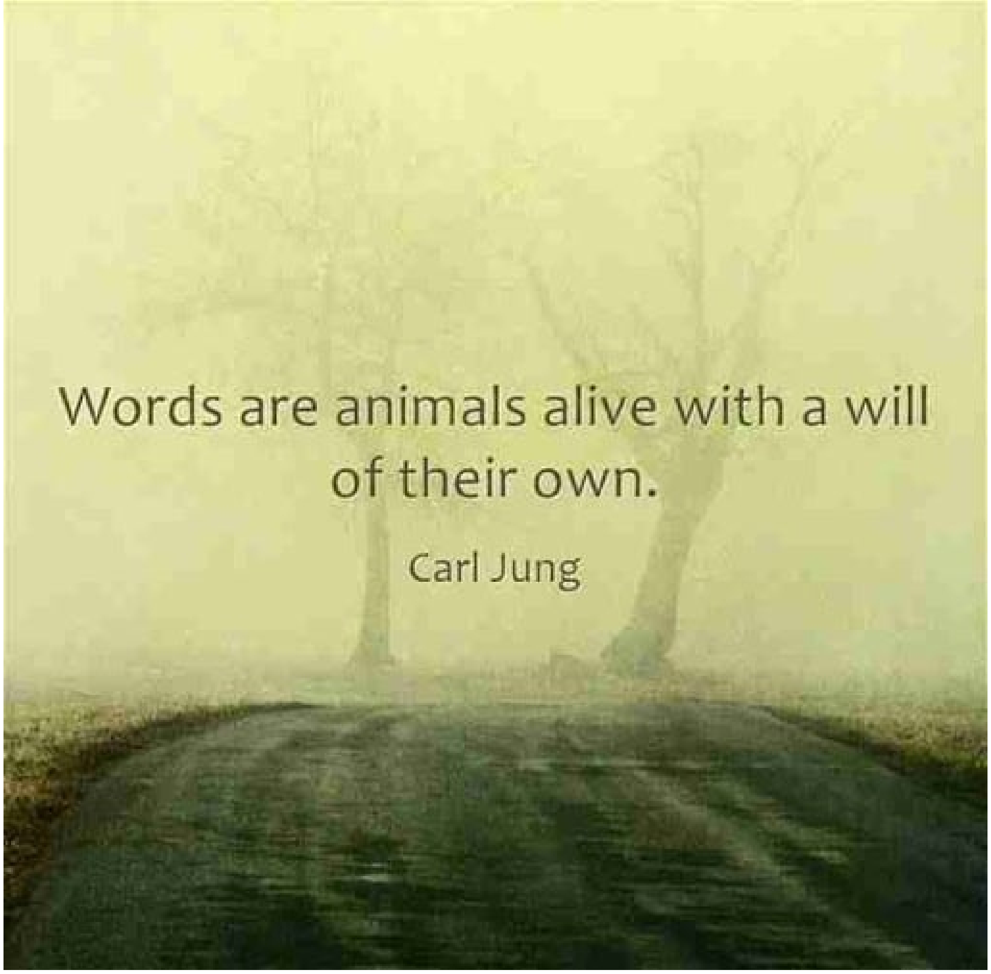
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol.1, Page 463.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/67058-escape.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=530GU25UIT1P&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576751017&sprefix=jung+l%2C`

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-19 05:25)

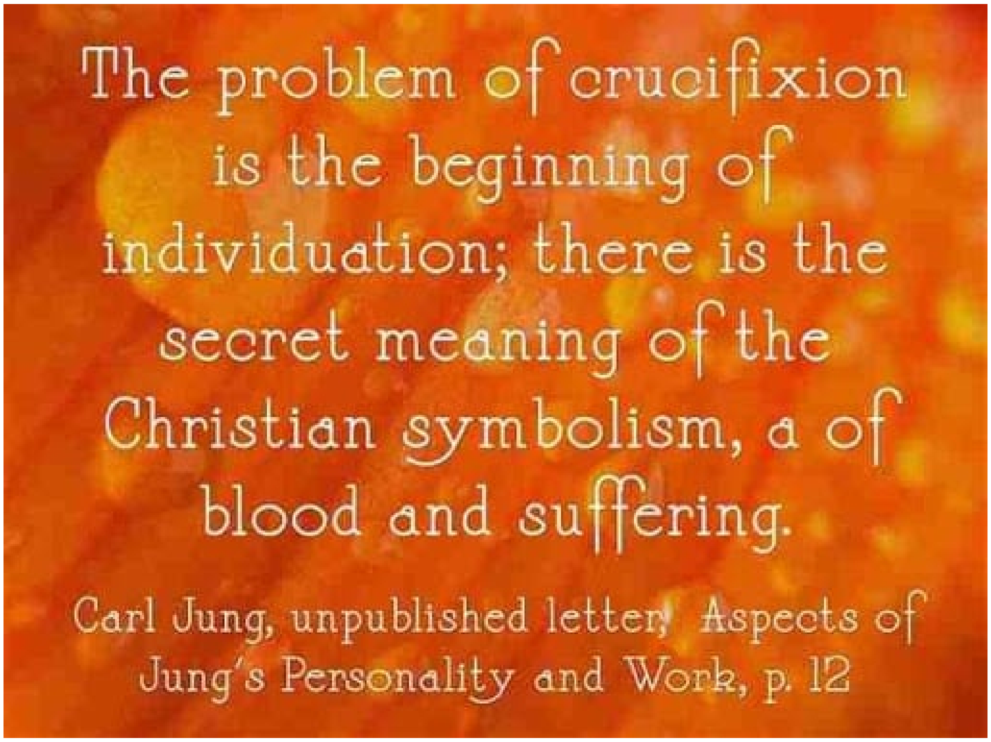
[1]



Words are animals alive with a will of their own.
Carl Jung

Words are animals alive with a will of their own. Carl Jung. [A Citation is needed to confirm this]

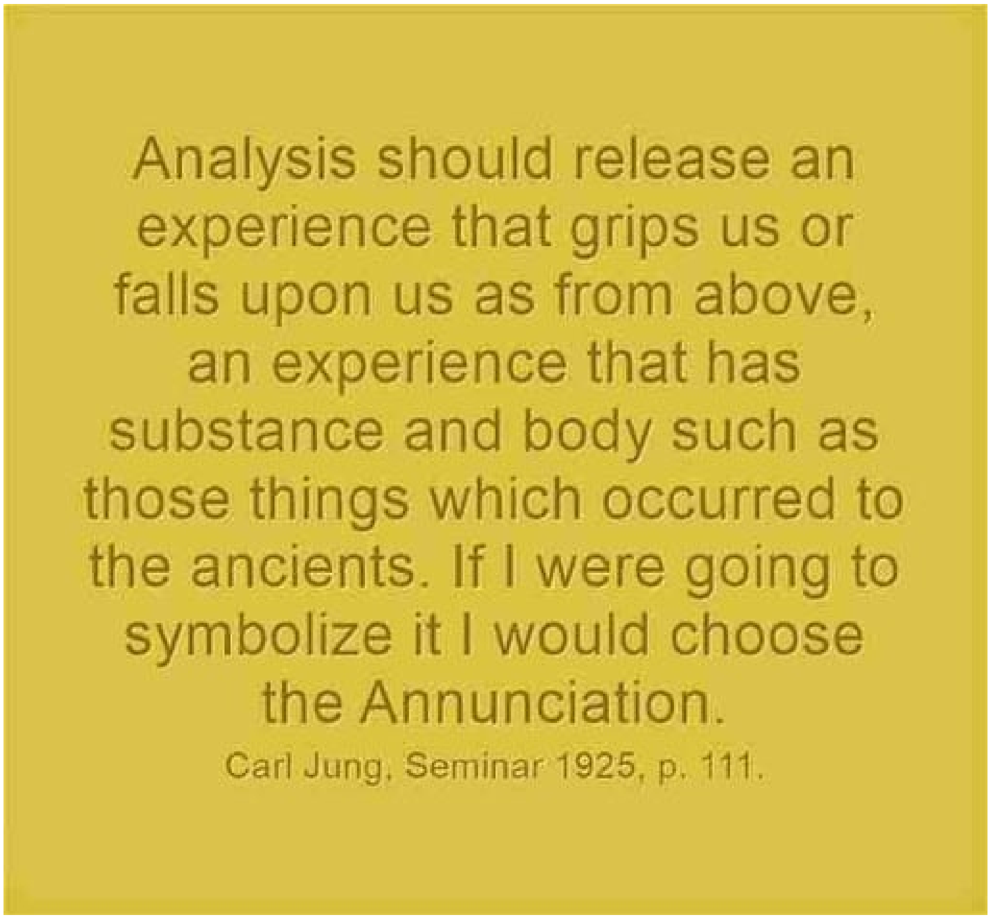
[2]



The problem of crucifixion is the beginning of individuation; there is the secret meaning of the Christian symbolism, a of blood and suffering.

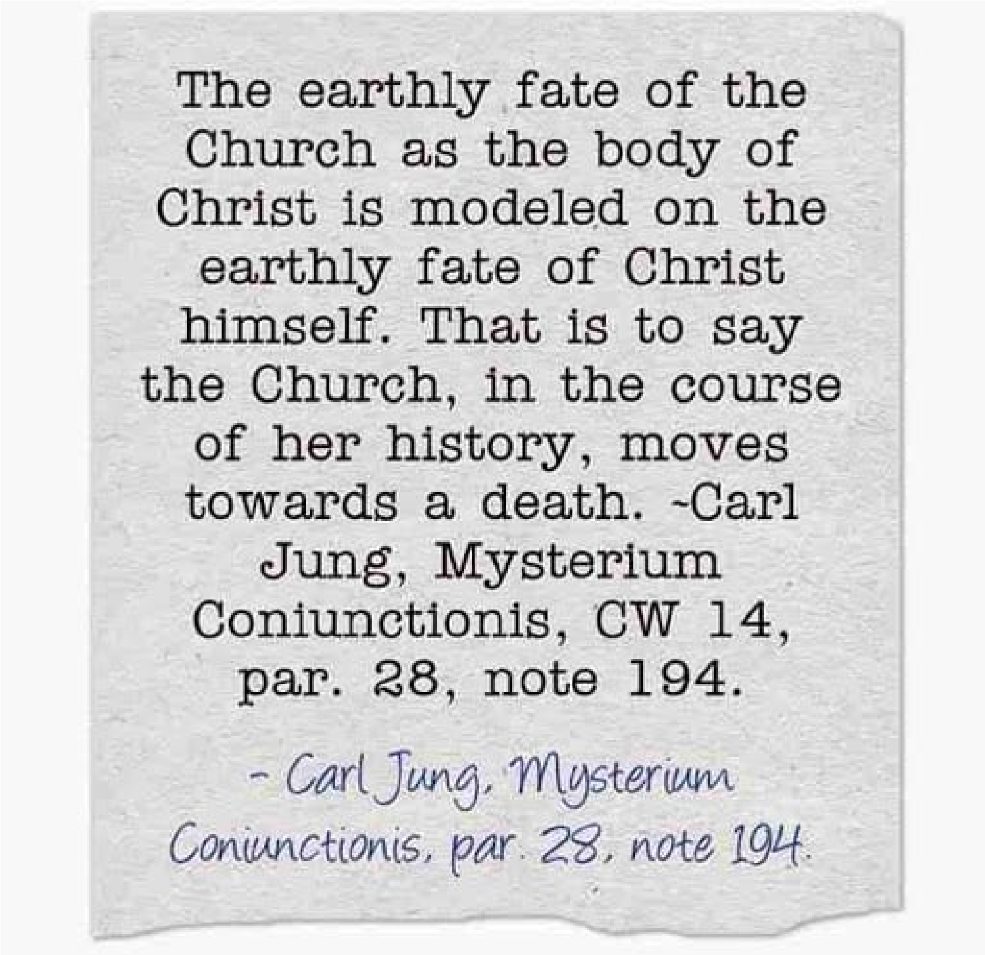
Carl Jung, unpublished letter; Aspects of Jung's Personality and Work, p. 12

The problem of crucifixion is the beginning of individuation; there is the secret meaning of the Christian symbolism, of blood and suffering. Carl Jung, unpublished letter, quoted in Gerhard Adler, Aspects of Jung's Personality and Work, p. 12.



Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body such as those things which occurred to the ancients. If I were going to symbolize it I would choose the Annunciation.

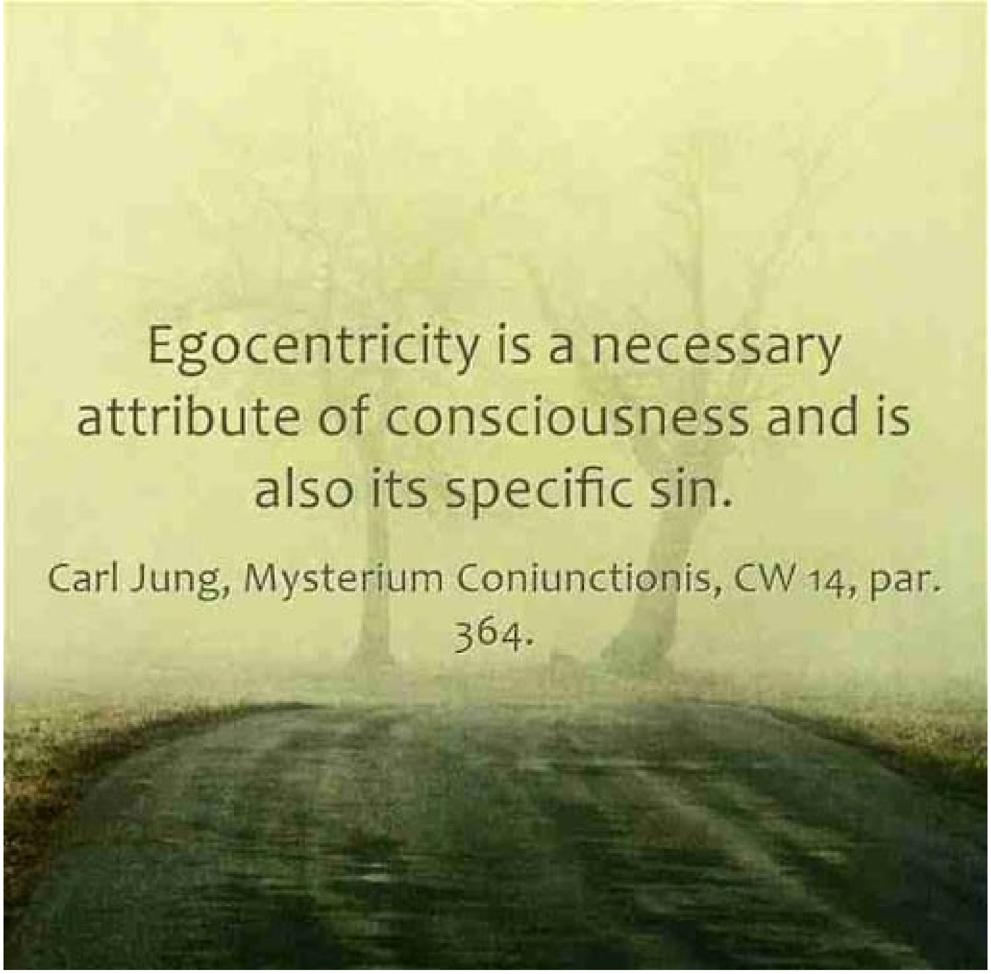
Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, p. 111.



The earthly fate of the Church as the body of Christ is modeled on the earthly fate of Christ himself. That is to say the Church, in the course of her history, moves towards a death. -Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 28, note 194.

- Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, par. 28, note 194.

The earthly fate of the Church as the body of Christ is modelled on the earthly fate of Christ himself. That is to say the Church, in the course of her history, moves towards a death. Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 28, note 194.



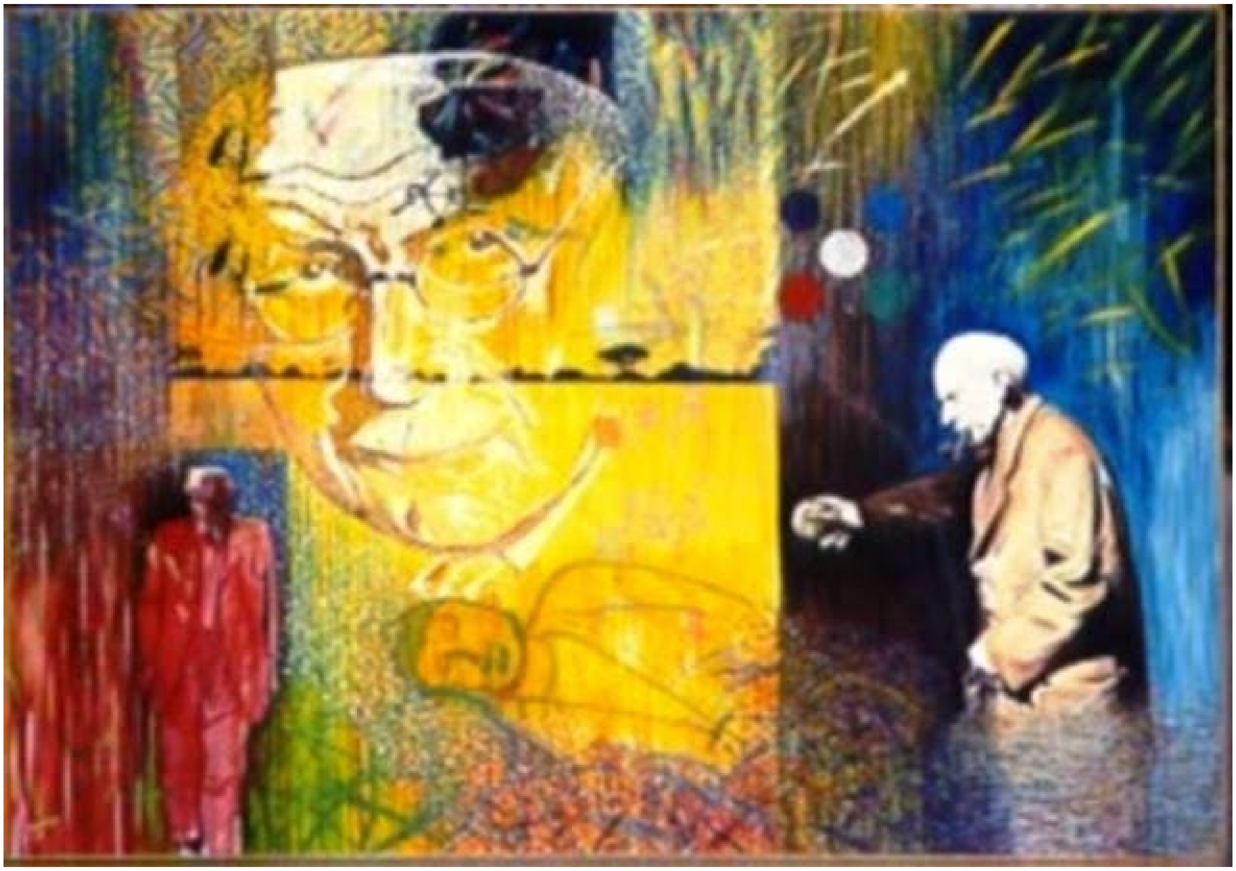
Egocentricity is a necessary attribute of consciousness and is also its specific sin.
Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 364.

Egocentricity is a necessary attribute of consciousness and is also its specific sin." Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 364.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2794.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2795.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2796.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2797.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/lewis2blafontaine2b-2bcarl2bjung2bdepth2bpsychology2bbook2bformat_page8140_image2798.jpg`

Carl Jung on the Process of interpreting Children's Dreams. (2019-12-19 05:53)

[1]



[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Professor Jung: We are dealing here with children's dreams of a particular kind, which are very often not understood correctly, because it is thought that these dreams are being observed in children—that is, are directly recorded by the father or the mother.

We are not dealing with such dreams, however, but with children's dreams that have been remembered by adults.

So a selection of these dreams has already been made.

These are dreams that have stood the test of time and persisted.

If someone had written down the dreams of your childhood, for instance, and you read these notes again later, they would be completely foreign to you, and you yourself would not be able to remember them.

But some of the dreams have lingered on, as fresh as on the first day.

This is the kind of dreams we are dealing with here.

Partly I have collected these dreams myself, partly they have been told to me by participants in the seminar.

As soon as the problem of a dream is no longer acute, that is, it is solved and outgrown, the dream vanishes from memory.

If it still persists in memory, however, the problem has not been solved, or the dream touched on something that one perhaps still hasn't understood yet, or never will.

Phenomena and contents are touched on that are completely unconscious for ordinary mortals.

And these things exert an enormous influence on the shape of subsequent destiny and, therefore, get stuck in memory.

Such dreams are of special importance, because in a way their content anticipates a problem of later life.

These dreams in particular make us understand why the ancients attributed a pronounced prognostic meaning to their dreams.

Throughout the whole of antiquity, and to a large extent still in the Middle Ages, it was believed that dreams foretell the future.

Our consciousness is directed only outward, light only falls onto this world, but it throws no light backward, on the thinker of the thoughts and the doer of the deeds.

If consciousness does do it, however, it throws light on the basis of consciousness, on the unconscious, and there things may be brought to life, just as we can enliven reality by observing it.

As far as the work with the dream is concerned, we first of all structure the dream as a story, as a course of events; the dream is a drama taking place on the inner stage, and a true drama of course always has—like any course of action—a beginning, a middle, and an end.

So, to begin with, we determine the exposition of the dream, in which the specific place, the time, specific persons, and a specific problem are exposed.

Usually you can already find it in the first sentence of the dream.

For you have to break down the text into sentences and thus work out the problem—it is about this and that.

This is the first part. The second part is the development of the problem.

This means: the problem stated at the beginning starts to have an effect, it gets complicated, the plot thickens, a certain development occurs.

This leads, in the third place, to the peripateia, a certain escalation that may become truly dramatic: it leads to a climax in which the turn of events then happens.

The latter constitutes a change—it can be a decision, for example, or something occurs that throws a completely different light on the problem.

This leads us to the fourth part, the lysis, the result of the dream that, of course, is not final or complete as in a conscious drama.

Most of the time, the end is somehow enigmatic, not really satisfactory to our taste.

But, in any case, this is the result for that moment. In series, the end usually presents a new problem.

One is dead, or somebody else is dead, or something completely out of the way has happened.

This then remains as a question.

Some impossible situation presents itself, and then we have to ask ourselves: what will happen next? What can be done?

An answer is given by the next dream, perhaps the same night, after a hiatus.

The second dream takes the problem up again in a different form.

Once this structuring has been done, we can start to truly work on the dream, that is, to look for the corresponding context for each motif.

This is not the same as free association, which just leads you from one thing to another; one doesn't need a dream for that, but one might as well let someone associate about a button, and one will of course also arrive at the complexes.

This does not prove at all that these complexes are also represented in the dream.

By free association we won't know yet what the dream means; because the dream does not consist of the complexes, but represents the way in which they are dealt with.

It represents what the unconscious does with the complex and how it tries to solve the dilemma.

Our look at the complex is a look at the associative connections to the dream image.

We have to know what it means for somebody to dream of an elephant, not what I as an analyst think about an elephant, but what connections it has for the person who had the dream.

Perhaps one had been to a zoo the evening before, the other had been in the wilderness and had an experience with an elephant, or a third had been told by his wife: you are such a clumsy elephant, and so on.

For each of them the elephant means something different.

You have to carefully inquire about the events of the previous day.

In recording these contexts, you have to encourage the person whose dream you analyze not to make free associations, but always to stay with the image.

For the dream image is nothing accidental, otherwise we'd have to say that anything in nature is accidental, a chaos, and that there is no explanation.

We have to assume that the dreams take place in a world according to laws, that there exists a certain causality, not just pure arbitrariness.

There are specific reasons why the dream is precisely what it is, and not something different.

Now when you investigate the single dream images with regard to the context, you will find that certain contents—not in all dreams by far—are of an archetypal nature, meaning that these latter forms of ideas are of a collective nature and can be found everywhere.

Naturally, you will not be able to recognize them if you aren't already knowledgeable about such ideas.

One has to have the corresponding material at one's fingertips in order to recognize archetypal figures.

This gives the dream an additional, very special character.

You can then determine into which depths the dream reaches.

The archetypes always appear as mythological figures or motifs.

The final act consists in the interpretation: one formulates a hypothesis about the possible meaning of the dream.

This formulation has to be concise.

You have to insert, in other words, the expressions you found into the dream text, to reformulate the dream, but this time with the found expressions.

Then you will find the meaning of the dream. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 379-382.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/c7ad6-dream.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?crid=BJXV4BCVBJX2&keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1576765460&sp`

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-19 05:57)

If you marry the ordered to the chaos, you produce the divine child, the supreme meaning beyond meaning and meaninglessness.

Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 235

If you marry the ordered to the chaos, you produce the divine child, the supreme meaning beyond meaning and meaninglessness. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 235

THE FAIRY TALE IS THE GREAT MOTHER OF THE NOVEL, AND HAS EVEN MORE UNIVERSAL VALIDITY THAN THE
MOST-AVIDLY READ
NOVEL OF YOUR TIME.

—Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 262.

The fairy tale is the great mother of the novel, and has even more universal validity than the most-avidly read novel of your time. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 262.

If I accept death, then my tree greens, since dying increases life. If I plunge into the death encompassing the world, then my buds break open. How much our life needs death!

Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 275.

If I accept death, then my tree greens, since dying increases life. If I plunge into the death encompassing the world, then my buds break open. How much our life needs death! Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 275.

He who sleeps in the grave of the millennia dreams
a wonderful dream.
He dreams a primordially ancient dream.
He dreams of the rising sun.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 272

He who sleeps in the grave of the millennia dreams a wonderful dream. He dreams a primordially ancient dream. He dreams of the rising sun. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 272

Great is he who is in love, since love is the present act of the great creator, the present moment of the becoming and lapsing of the world. Mighty is he who loves.
But whoever distances himself from love, feels himself powerful.

Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 253.

Great is he who is in love, since love is the present act of the great creator, the present moment of the becoming and lapsing of the world. Mighty is he who loves. But whoever distances himself from love, feels himself powerful. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 253.

If you go to thinking, take your heart with you. If you go to love, take your head with you. Love is empty without thinking, thinking hollow without love.

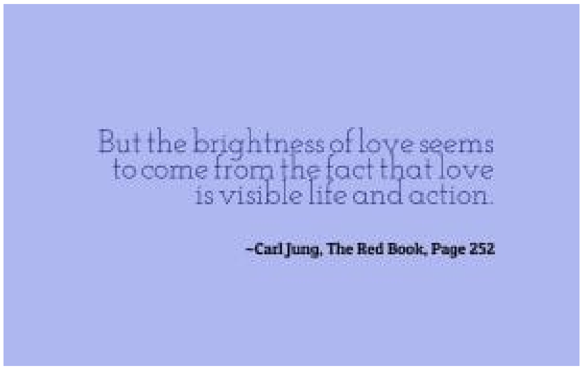
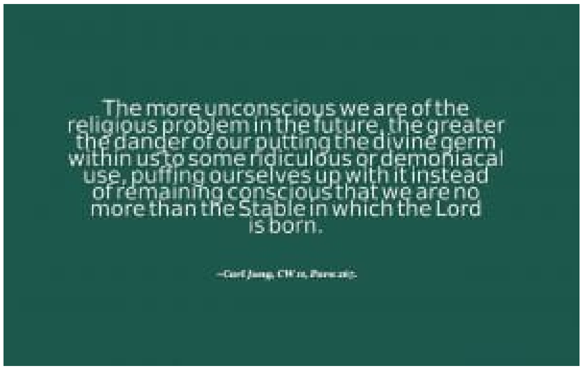
If you go to thinking, take your heart with you. If you go to love, take your head with you. Love is empty without thinking, thinking hollow without love. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 253.



But the brightness of love seems to come from the fact that love is visible life and action.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 252

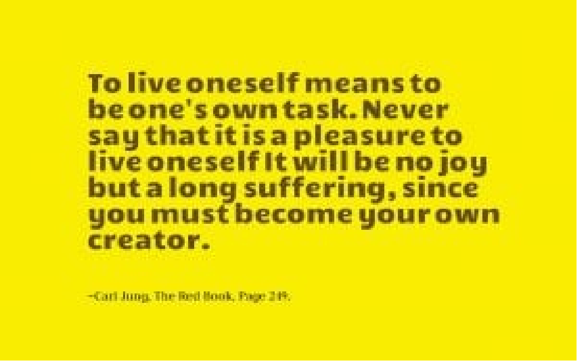
But the brightness of love seems to come from the fact that love is visible life and action. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 252.



The more unconscious we are of the religious problem in the future, the greater the danger of our putting the divine germ within us to some ridiculous or demoniacal use, puffing ourselves up with it instead of remaining conscious that we are no more than the Stable in which the Lord is born.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 267.

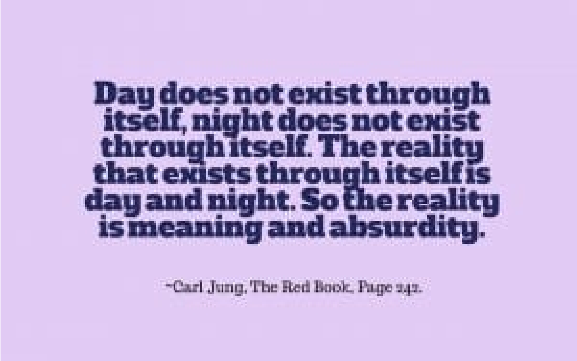
The more unconscious we are of the religious problem in the future, the greater the danger of our putting the divine germ within us to some ridiculous or demoniacal use, puffing ourselves up with it instead of remaining conscious that we are no more than the Stable in which the Lord is born. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 267.



To live oneself means to be one's own task. Never say that it is a pleasure to live oneself It will be no joy but a long suffering, since you must become your own creator.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 249.

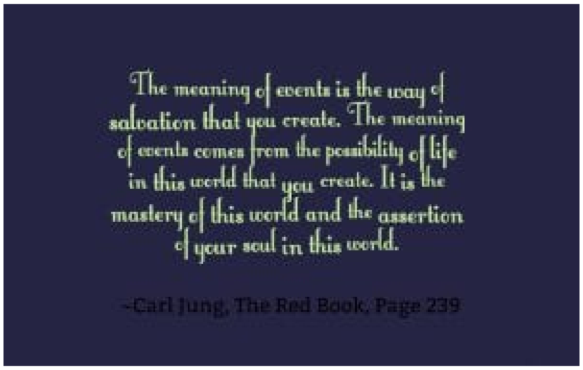
To live oneself means to be one’s own task. Never say that it is a pleasure to live oneself It will be no joy but a long suffering, since you must become your own creator. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 249.



Day does not exist through itself, night does not exist through itself. The reality that exists through itself is day and night. So the reality is meaning and absurdity.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 242.

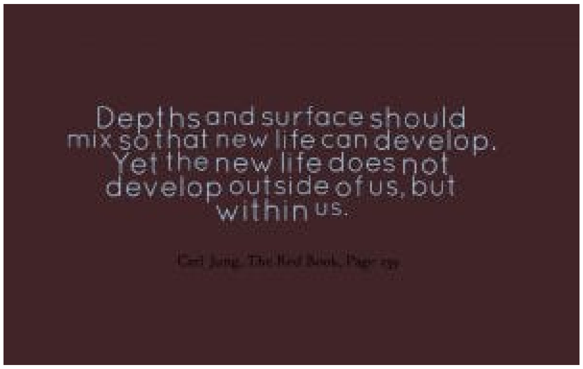
Day does not exist through itself, night does not exist through itself. The reality that exists through itself is day and night. So the reality is meaning and absurdity. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 242.



The meaning of events is the way of salvation that you create. The meaning of events comes from the possibility of life in this world that you create. It is the mastery of this world and the assertion of your soul in this world.

~Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 239

The meaning of events is the way of salvation that you create. The meaning of events comes from the possibility of life in this world that you create. It is the mastery of this world and the assertion of your soul in this world. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 239.



Depths and surface should mix so that new life can develop. Yet the new life does not develop outside of us, but within us.

Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 239

Depths and surface should mix so that new life can develop. Yet the new life does not develop outside of us, but within us. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 239.

TO THE EXTENT THAT THE CHRISTIANITY OF THIS TIME LACKS MADNESS,
IT LACKS DIVINE LIFE. TAKE NOTE
OF WHAT THE ANCIENTS TAUGHT US IN IMAGES MADNESS IS DIVINE.

–Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 238

To the extent that the Christianity of this time lacks madness, it lacks divine life. Take note of what the ancients taught us in images madness is divine. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 238.

I too was afraid, since we had forgotten that God is terrible. Christ taught God is love. But you should know that love is also terrible.

–Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 235

I too was afraid, since we had forgotten that God is terrible. Christ taught God is love. But you should know that love is also terrible. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 235.

Dreams are very often anticipations of future alterations of consciousness.

–Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 51.

Dreams are very often anticipations of future alterations of consciousness. Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 51.

Every conscious act or event thus has an unconscious aspect, just as every sense-perception has a subliminal aspect: for instance, sound below or above audibility, or light below or above visibility.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 186.

Every conscious act or event thus has an unconscious aspect, just as every sense-perception has a subliminal aspect: for instance, sound below or above audibility, or light below or above visibility. Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 186.

The unconscious is, as the collective psyche, the psychological representative of society.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 453.

The unconscious is, as the collective psyche, the psychological representative of society.   Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 453.

THE COMMUNICATIONS OF SPIRITS ARE STATEMENTS ABOUT THE UNCONSCIOUS PSYCHE, PROVIDED THAT THEY ARE REALLY SPONTANEOUS AND ARE NOT COOKED UP BY THE CONSCIOUS MIND.

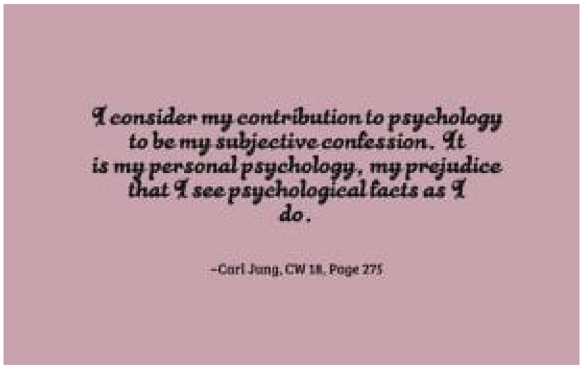
~Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 313

The communications of "spirits" are statements about the unconscious psyche, provided that they are really spontaneous and are not cooked up by the conscious mind. Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 313.

Our psychology is a science . . . Plenty of unqualified persons are sure to push their way in and commit the greatest follies . . . Our aim is simply and solely scientific knowledge . . . If religion and morality are blown to pieces in the process, so much the worse for them . . . Knowledge is a force of nature that goes its way irresistibly from inner necessity.

–Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 314

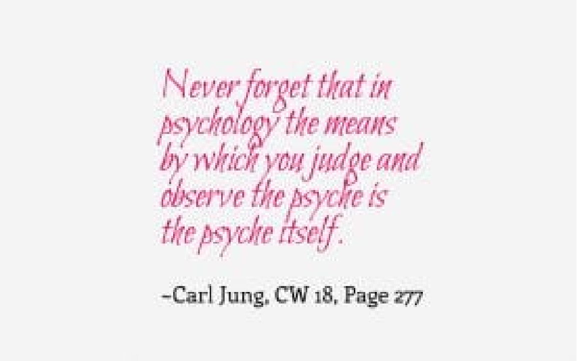
Our psychology is a science . . . Plenty of unqualified persons are sure to push their way in and commit the greatest follies . . . Our aim is simply and solely scientific knowledge . . . If religion and morality are blown to pieces in the process, so much the worse for them . . . Knowledge is a force of nature that goes its way irresistibly from inner necessity. Carl Jung; CW 18; Page 314.



I consider my contribution to psychology to be my subjective confession. It is my personal psychology, my prejudice that I see psychological facts as I do.

–Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 275

I consider my contribution to psychology to be my subjective confession. It is my personal psychology, my prejudice that I see psychological facts as I do. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 275.



Never forget that in psychology the means by which you judge and observe the psyche is the psyche itself.

–Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 277

Never forget that in psychology the means by which you judge and observe the psyche is the psyche itself. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 277.

the serpent in the cave is an image which often occurs in antiquity. it is important to realize that in classical antiquity, as in other civilizations, the serpent not only was an animal that aroused fear and represented danger, but also signified healing.

Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 116.

The serpent in the cave is an image which often occurs in antiquity. It is important to realize that in classical antiquity, as in other civilizations, the serpent not only was an animal that aroused fear and represented danger, but also signified healing. Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 116.

The righteous man is the instrument into which God enters in order to attain self-reflection and thus consciousness and rebirth as a divine child trusted to the care of adult man.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 739.

The righteous man is the instrument into which God enters in order to attain self-reflection and thus consciousness and rebirth as a divine child trusted to the care of adult man. Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 739.

THE SERPENT OWES HIS EXISTENCE TO GOD AND BY NO MEANS TO MAN.

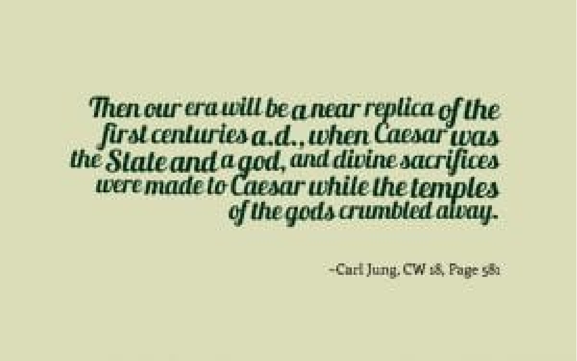
~Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 690

The serpent owes his existence to God and by no means to man. Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 690.



Then our era will be a near replica of the first centuries a.d., when Caesar was the State and a god, and divine sacrifices were made to Caesar while the temples of the gods crumbled away.

~Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 581

Then our era will be a near replica of the first centuries a.d., when Caesar was the State and a god, and divine sacrifices were made to Caesar while the temples of the gods crumbled away. Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 581.

Carl Jung: I never allow myself to make statements about the divine entity,... (2019-12-19 06:11)

[1]

The JUNG-WHITE
LETTERS
EDITED BY ANN CONRAD LAMMERS
AND ADRIAN CUNNINGHAM
CONSULTING EDITOR MURRAY STEIN
R

[2]The Jung-White Letters

My Dear Father White, Oct. 5th, 1945

In the meantime I have finished reading the pamphlets you kindly have sent to me.

My first reaction was: what a pity, that you live in England and that I have you not at my elbow, when I am blundering in the wide field of theological knowledge. . . .

Excuse the irreverential pun: You are to me a white raven inasmuch as you are the only theologian I know of who has really understood something of what the problem of psychology in our present world means.

You have seen its enormous implications.

I cannot tell you how glad I am that I know a man, a theologian, who is conscientious enough to weigh my opinions on the basis of a careful study of my writings!

This is a really rare occasion. . . .

Thus, when I said that God is a complex, I meant to say: whatever He is, he is at least a very tangible complex.

You can say, He is an illusion, but He is at least a psychological fact.

I surely never intended to say: He is nothing else but a complex. . . .

You have rendered justice to my empirical and practical standpoint throughout. I consider this as a very meritorious act, since most of my philosophically or theologically minded readers overlook my empiricism completely.

I never allow myself to make statements about the divine entity, since such would be a transgression beyond the limit of science. . . .

My personal view in this matter is that man's vital energy or libido is the divine pneuma alright. . . . Carl Jung to Victor White, 5Oct1945

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/47072-1white.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-White-Letters-Ann-Conrad-Lammers/dp/1583911944/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2NXUEDH8N2BR6&keywords=jung+white+letters&qid=1576765660&sprefix=jung`

Some Carl Jung Quotations (2019-12-19 06:49)

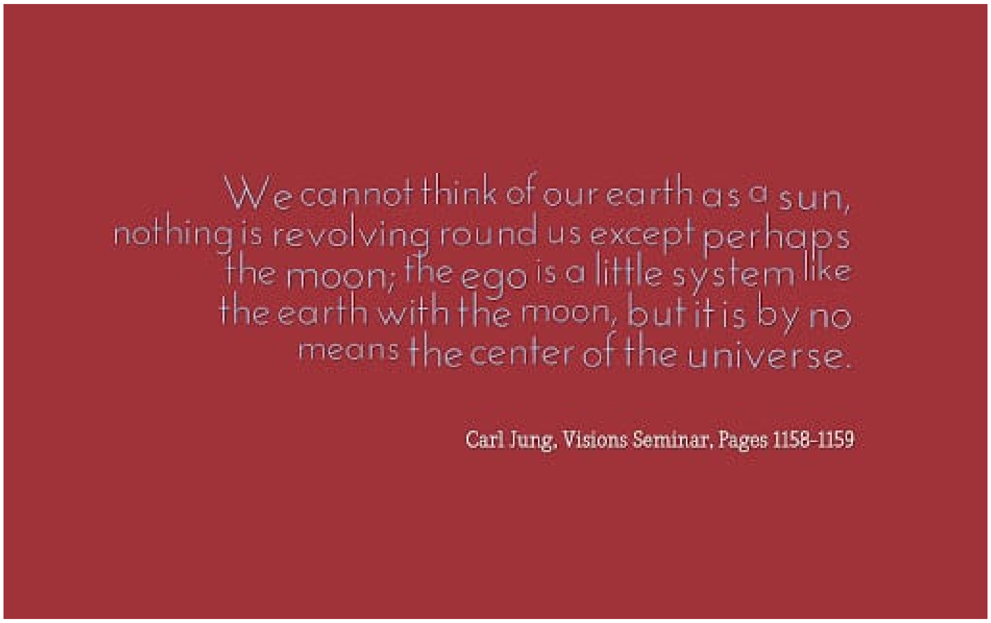
[1]

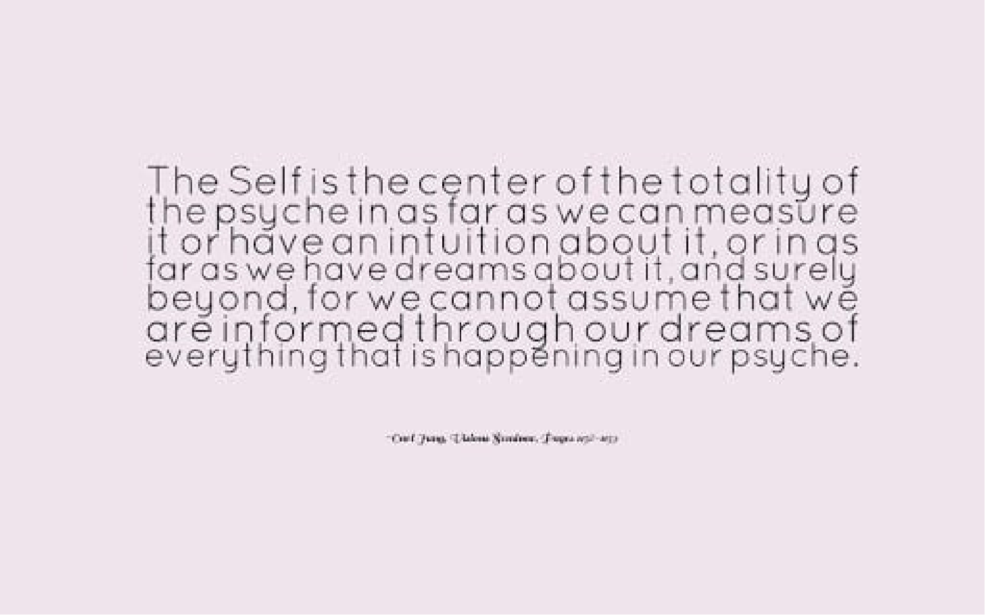


We cannot think of our earth as a sun, nothing is revolving round us except perhaps the moon; the ego is a little system like the earth with the moon, but it is by no means the center of the universe.

Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 1158-1159

We cannot think of our earth as a sun, nothing is revolving round us except perhaps the moon; the ego is a little system like the earth with the moon, but it is by no means the center of the universe. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 1158-1159

[2]



The Self is the center of the totality of the psyche in as far as we can measure it or have an intuition about it, or in as far as we have dreams about it, and surely beyond, for we cannot assume that we are informed through our dreams of everything that is happening in our psyche.

The Self is the center of the totality of the psyche in as far as we can measure it or have an intuition about it, or in as far as we have dreams about it, and surely beyond, for we cannot assume that we are informed through our dreams of everything that is happening in our psyche. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 1158-1159

[3]

Fear of our erotic fate is quite understandable, for there is something unpredictable about it.

~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 101

Fear of our erotic fate is quite understandable, for there is something unpredictable about it.   Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 101

[4]

ANYTHING THAT COMES UPON ME WITH THIS INTENSITY
I EXPERIENCE AS NUMINOUS, NO MATTER
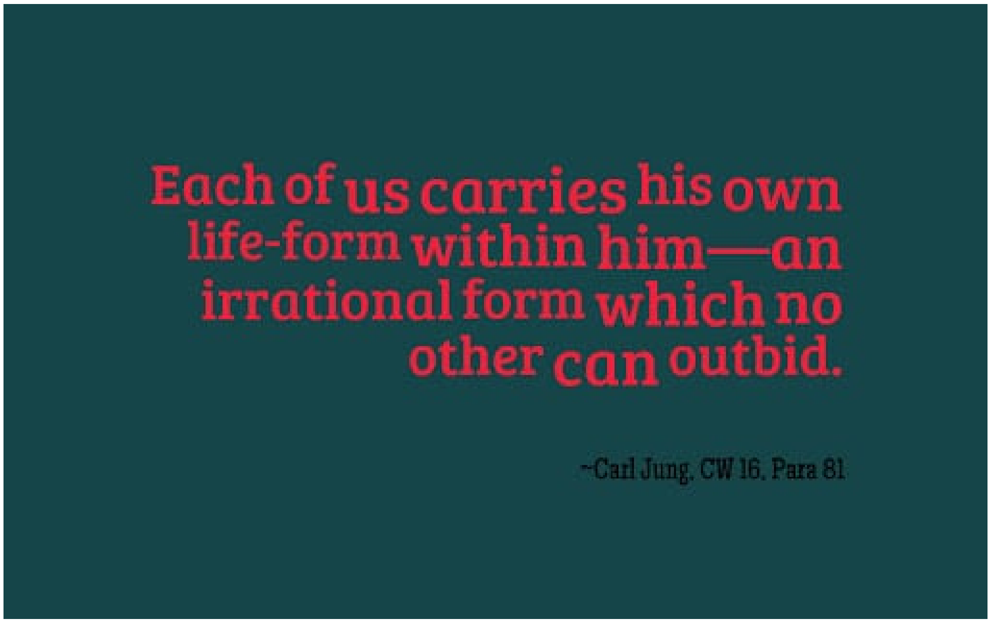
WHETHER I CALL
IT DIVINE OR DEVILISH
OR JUST FATE.

~Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 871

Anything that comes upon me with this intensity I experience as numinous, no matter whether I call it divine or devilish or just "fate." Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 871

[5]

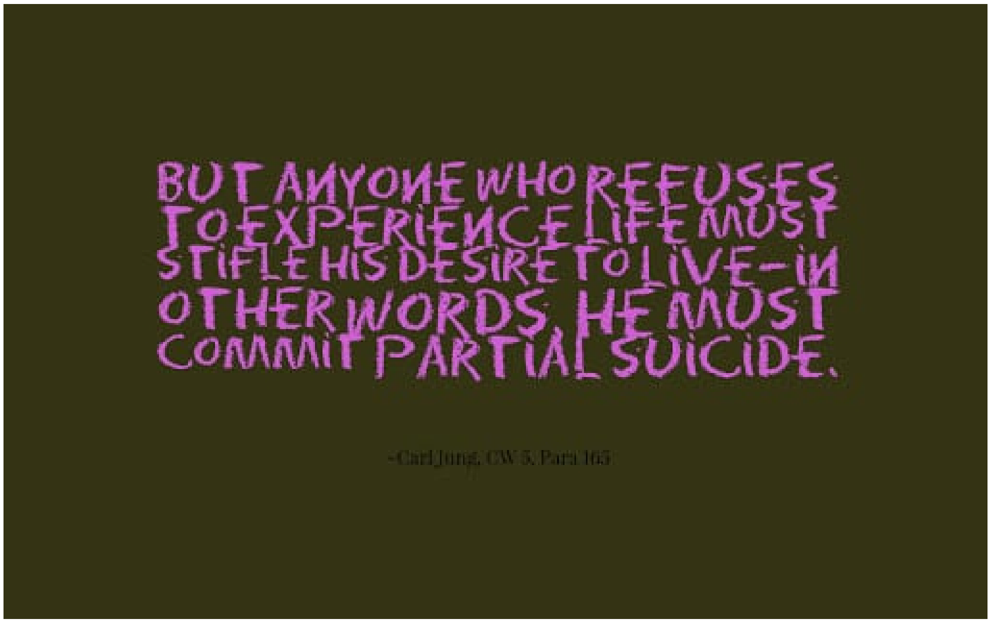


Each of us carries his own life-form within him—an irrational form which no other can outbid.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 81

Each of us carries his own life-form within him—an irrational form which no other can outbid.   Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 81

[6]

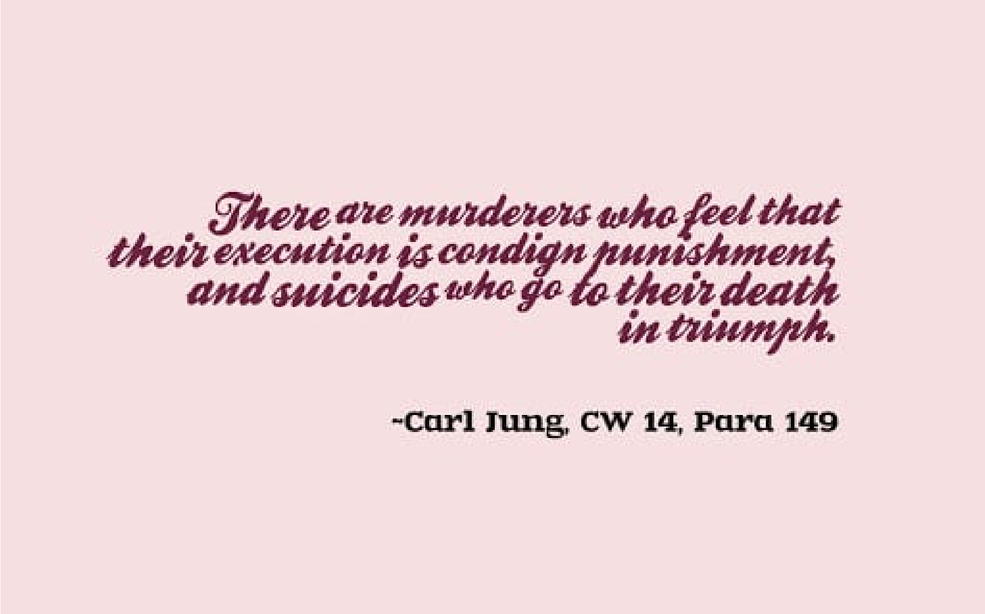


BUT ANYONE WHO REFUSES TO EXPERIENCE LIFE MUST STIFLE HIS DESIRE TO LIVE—IN OTHER WORDS, HE MUST COMMIT PARTIAL SUICIDE.

~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 165

But anyone who refuses to experience life must stifle his desire to live—in other words, he must commit partial suicide. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 165

[7]

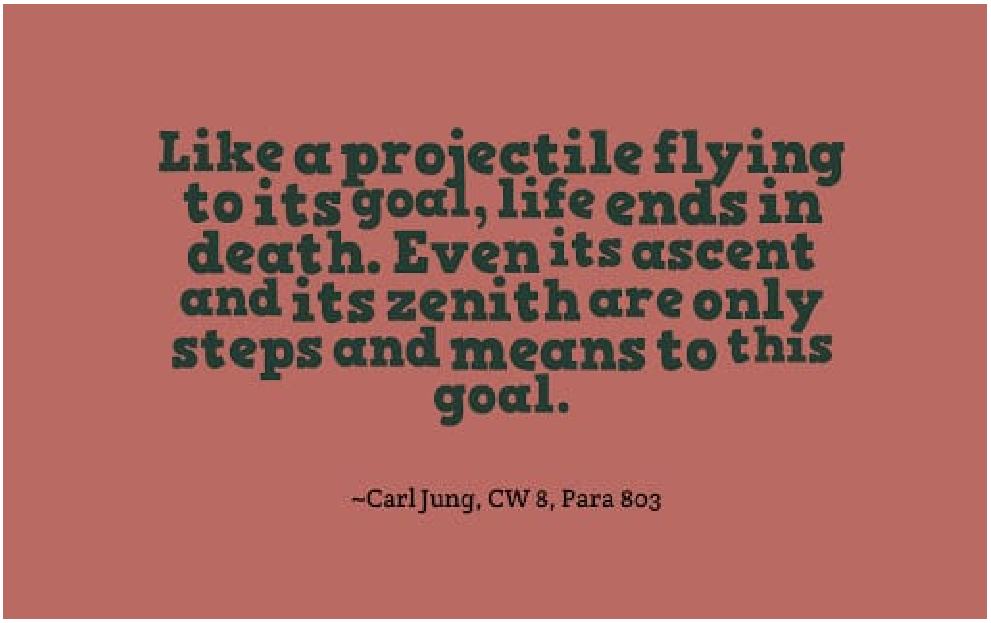


There are murderers who feel that their execution is condign punishment, and suicides who go to their death in triumph.

-Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 149

There are murderers who feel that their execution is condign punishment, and suicides who go to their death in triumph. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 149

[8]

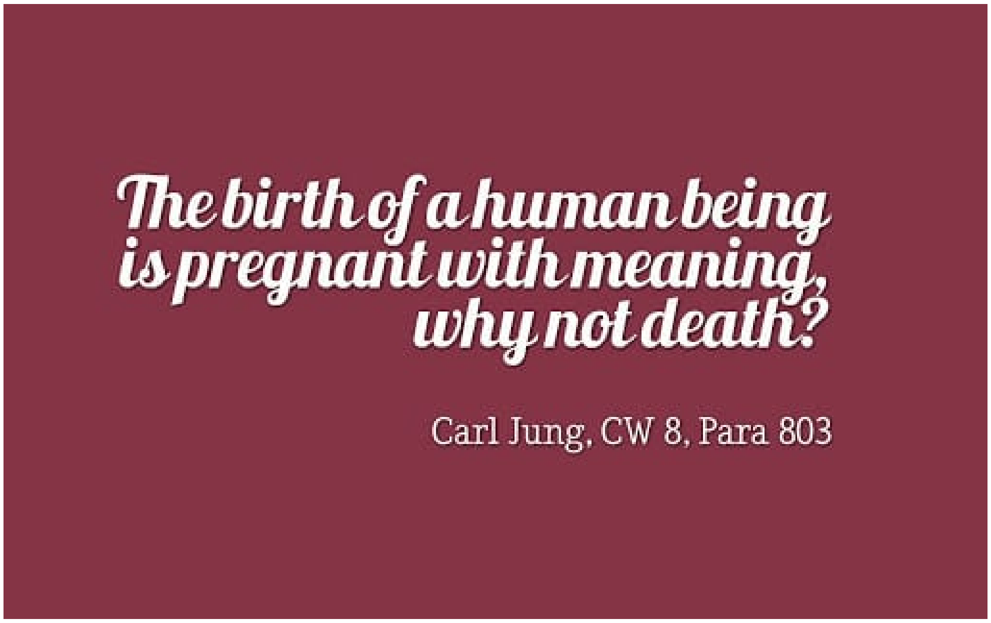


Like a projectile flying to its goal, life ends in death. Even its ascent and its zenith are only steps and means to this goal.

~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 803

Like a projectile flying to its goal, life ends in death. Even its ascent and its zenith are only steps and means to this goal. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 803

[9]

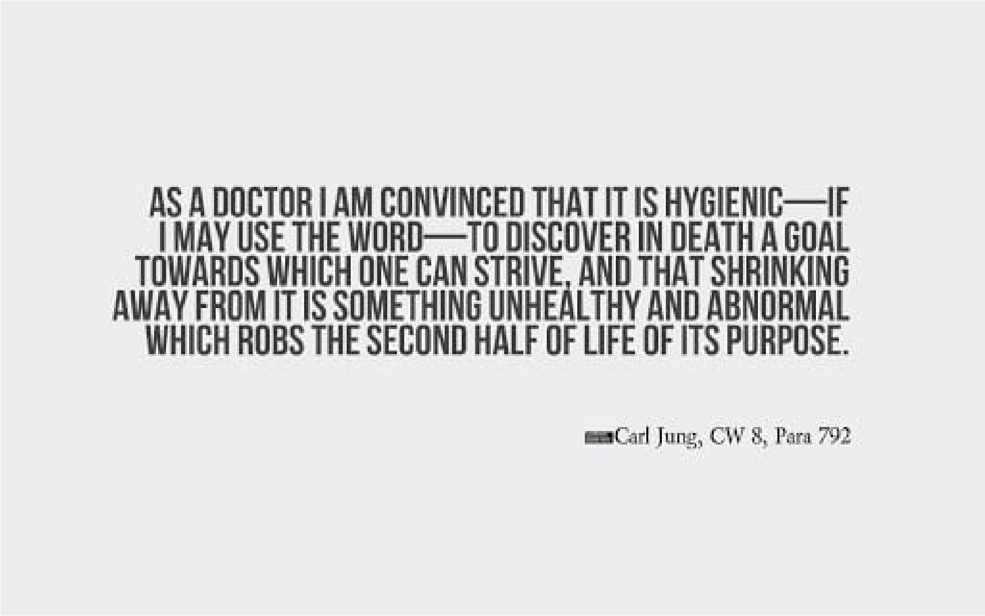


The birth of a human being is pregnant with meaning, why not death?

Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 803

The birth of a human being is pregnant with meaning, why not death? Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 803

[10]

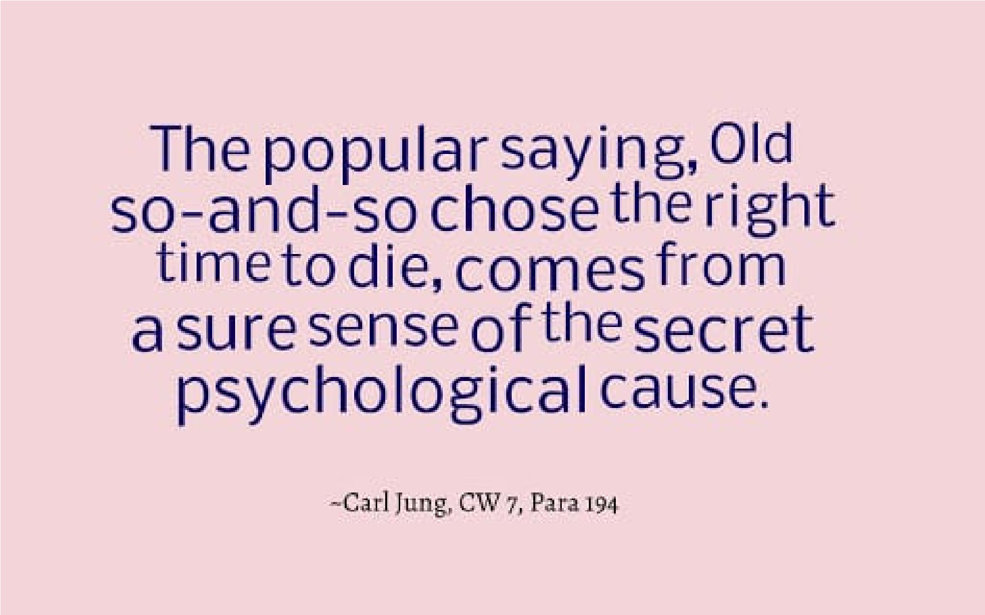


AS A DOCTOR I AM CONVINCED THAT IT IS HYGIENIC—IF I MAY USE THE WORD—TO DISCOVER IN DEATH A GOAL TOWARDS WHICH ONE CAN STRIVE, AND THAT SHRINKING AWAY FROM IT IS SOMETHING UNHEALTHY AND ABNORMAL WHICH ROBS THE SECOND HALF OF LIFE OF ITS PURPOSE.

—Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 792

As a doctor I am convinced that it is hygienic—if I may use the word—to discover in death a goal towards which one can strive, and that shrinking away from it is something unhealthy and abnormal which robs the second half of life of its purpose. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 792

[11]

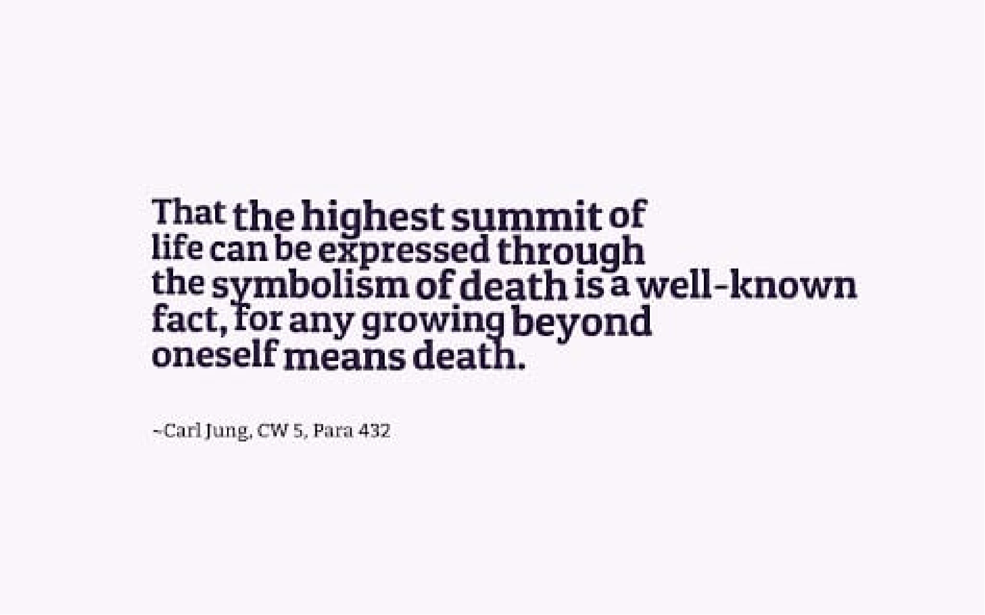


The popular saying, Old so-and-so chose the right time to die, comes from a sure sense of the secret psychological cause.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 194

The popular saying, "Old so-and-so chose the right time to die," comes from a sure sense of the secret psychological cause. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 194

[12]

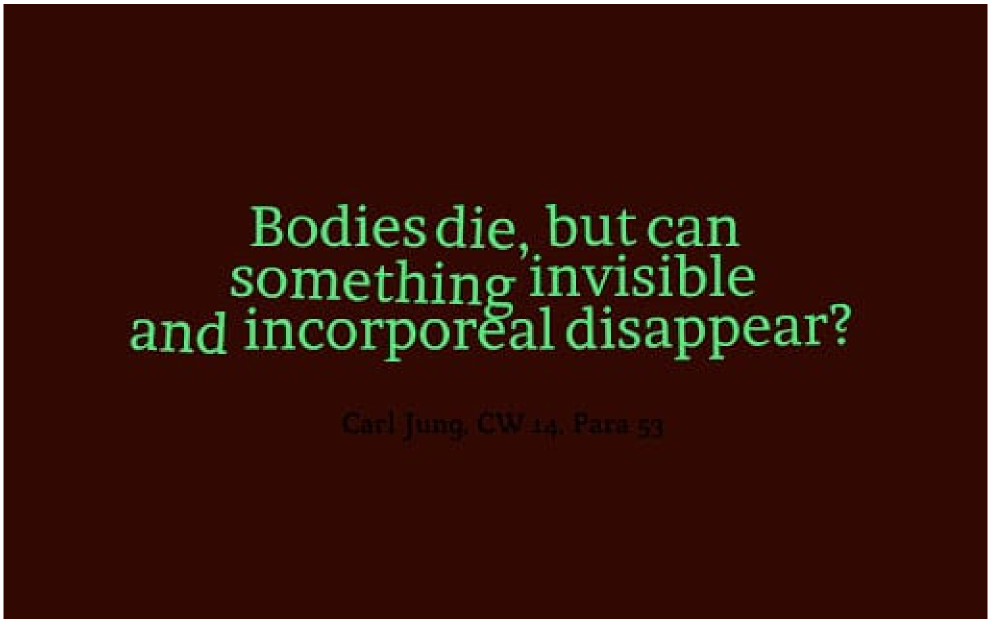


That the highest summit of life can be expressed through the symbolism of death is a well-known fact, for any growing beyond oneself means death.

~Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 432

That the highest summit of life can be expressed through the symbolism of death is a well-known fact, for any growing beyond oneself means death. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 432

[13]

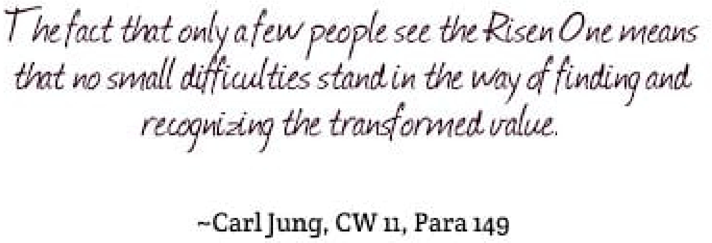


Bodies die, but can something invisible and incorporeal disappear?

Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 53

Bodies die, but can something invisible and incorporeal disappear? Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 53

[14]



The fact that only a few people see the Risen One means that no small difficulties stand in the way of finding and recognizing the transformed value.

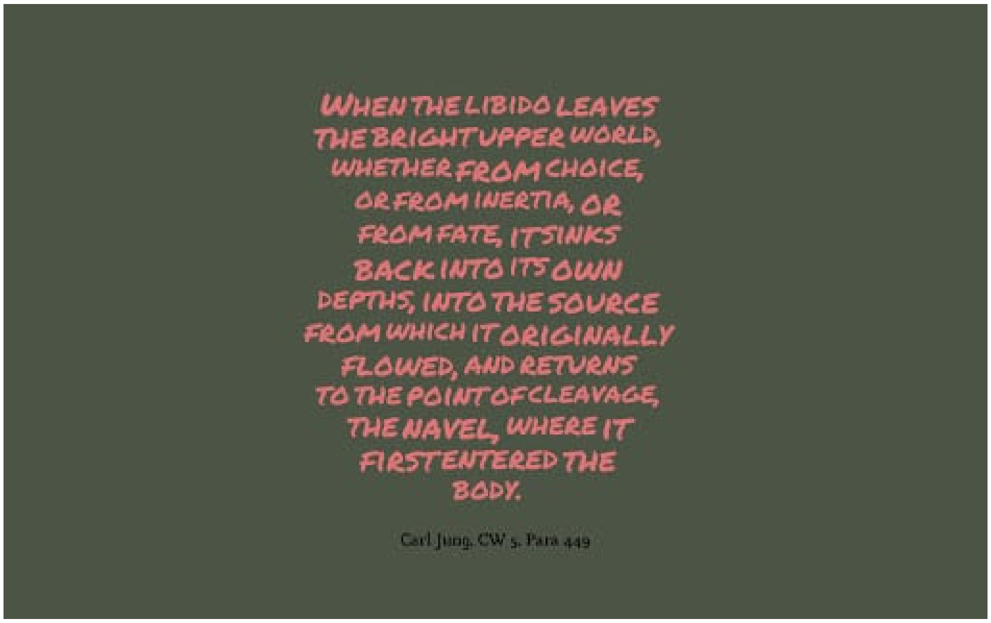
~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 149

The fact that only a few people see the Risen One means that no small difficulties stand in the way of finding and recognizing the transformed value. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 149

[15]



WHEN THE LIBIDO LEAVES
THE BRIGHT UPPER WORLD,
WHETHER FROM CHOICE, OR FROM INERTIA, OR FROM FATE, IT SINKS
BACK INTO ITS OWN
DEPTHS, INTO THE SOURCE
FROM WHICH IT ORIGINALLY FLOWED, AND RETURNS TO THE POINT OF CLEAVAGE,
THE NAVEL, WHERE IT
FIRST ENTERED THE BODY.

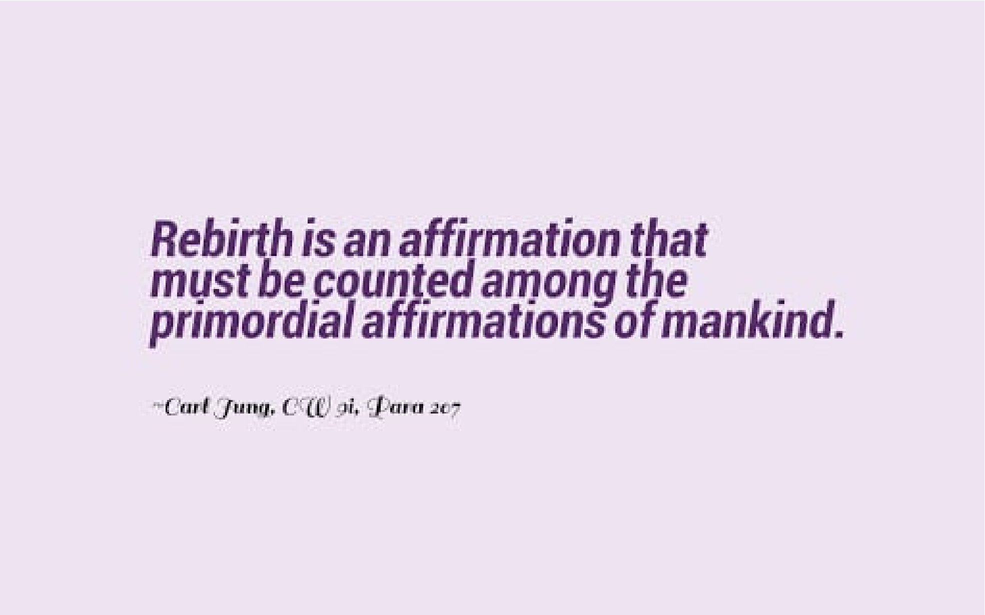
Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 449

When the libido leaves the bright upper world, whether from choice, or from inertia, or from fate, it sinks back into its own depths, into the source from which it originally flowed, and returns to the point of cleavage, the navel, where it first entered the body. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 449

[16]

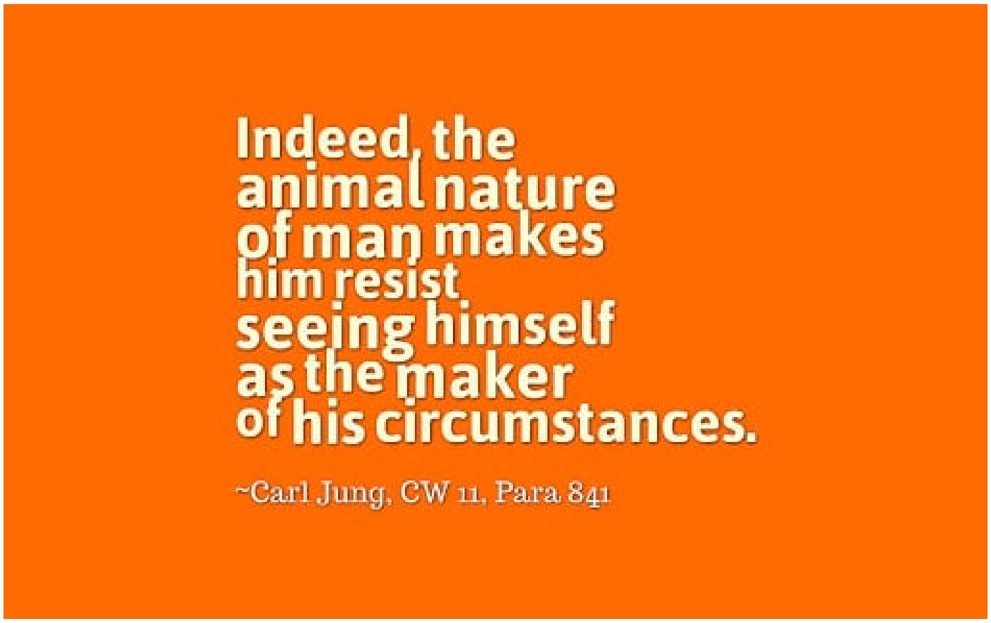


Rebirth is an affirmation that must be counted among the primordial affirmations of mankind.

~Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 207

Rebirth is an affirmation that must be counted among the primordial affirmations of mankind. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 207

[17]

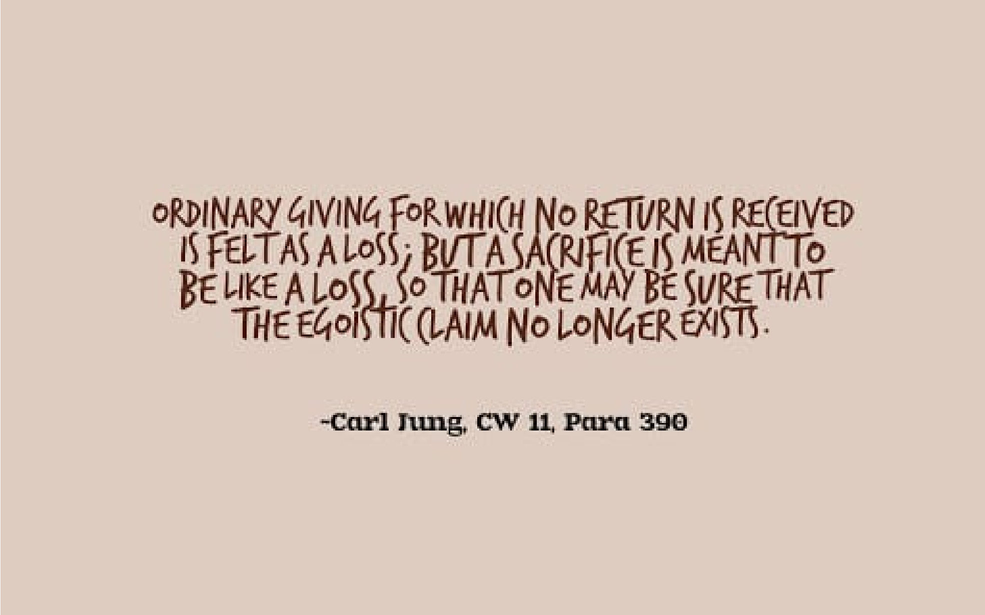


Indeed, the animal nature of man makes him resist seeing himself as the maker of his circumstances.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 841

Indeed, the animal nature of man makes him resist seeing himself as the maker of his circumstances. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 841

[18]

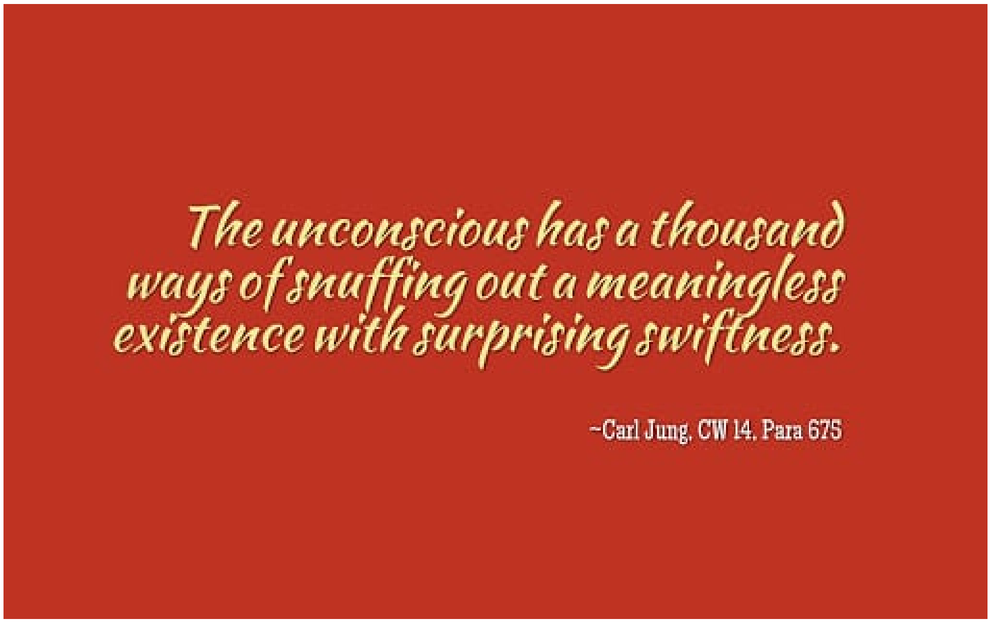


ORDINARY GIVING FOR WHICH NO RETURN IS RECEIVED IS FELT AS A LOSS; BUT A SACRIFICE IS MEANT TO BE LIKE A LOSS, SO THAT ONE MAY BE SURE THAT THE EGOISTIC CLAIM NO LONGER EXISTS.

~Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 390

Ordinary giving for which no return is received is felt as a loss; but a sacrifice is meant to be like a loss, so that one may be sure that the egoistic claim no longer exists. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 390

[19]

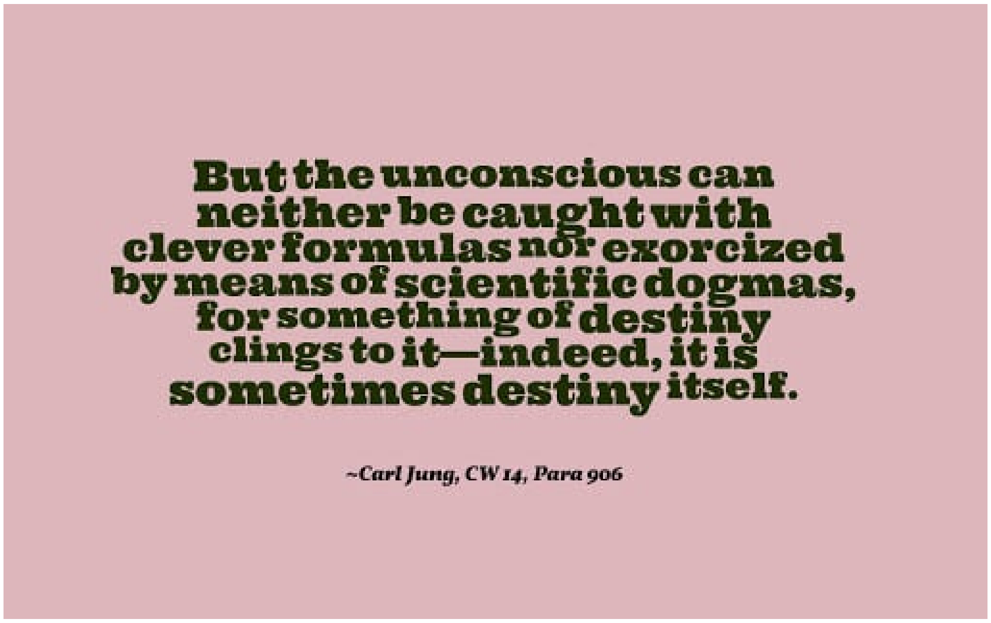


The unconscious has a thousand ways of snuffing out a meaningless existence with surprising swiftness.

~Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 675

The unconscious has a thousand ways of snuffing out a meaningless existence with surprising swiftness. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 675

[20]



But the unconscious can neither be caught with clever formulas nor exorcized by means of scientific dogmas, for something of destiny clings to it—indeed, it is sometimes destiny itself.

~Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 906

But the unconscious can neither be caught with clever formulas nor exorcized by means of scientific dogmas, for something of destiny clings to it—indeed, it is sometimes destiny itself. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 906

[21]

What would have happened if Paul had allowed himself to be talked out of his journey to Damascus?

~Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 529

What would have happened if Paul had allowed himself to be talked out of his journey to Damascus? Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 529

[22]

The externalization of life turns to incurable suffering, because no one can understand why he should suffer from himself

~Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 962

The externalization of life turns to incurable suffering, because no one can understand why he should suffer from himself. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 962

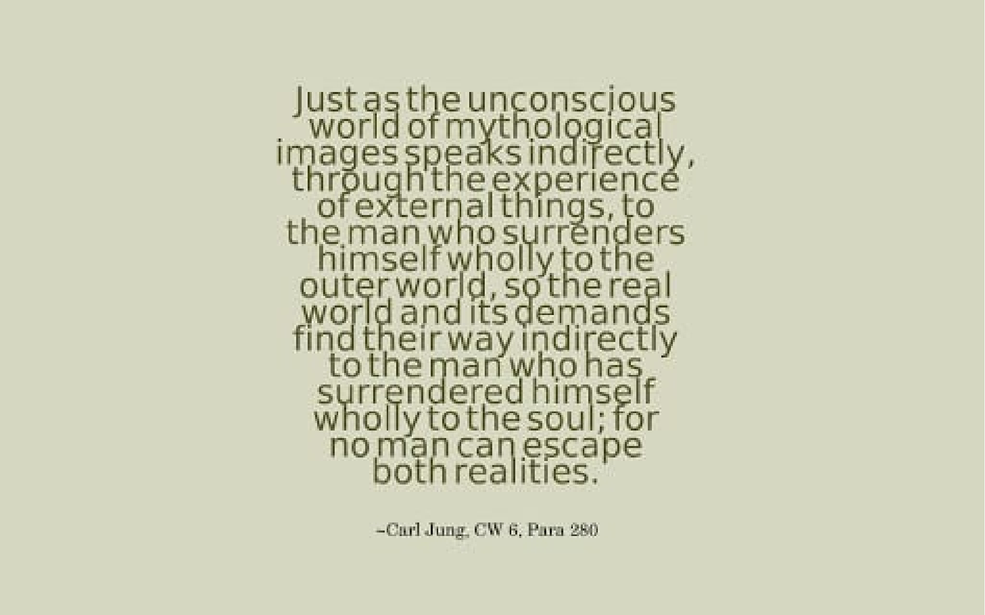
[23]

The tragic counter play between inside and outside (depicted in Job and Faust as the wager with God) represents, at bottom, the energetics of the life process, the polar tension that is necessary for self-regulation.

~Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 311

The tragic counter play between inside and outside (depicted in Job and Faust as the wager with God) represents, at bottom, the energetics of the life process, the polar tension that is necessary for self-regulation. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 311

[24]

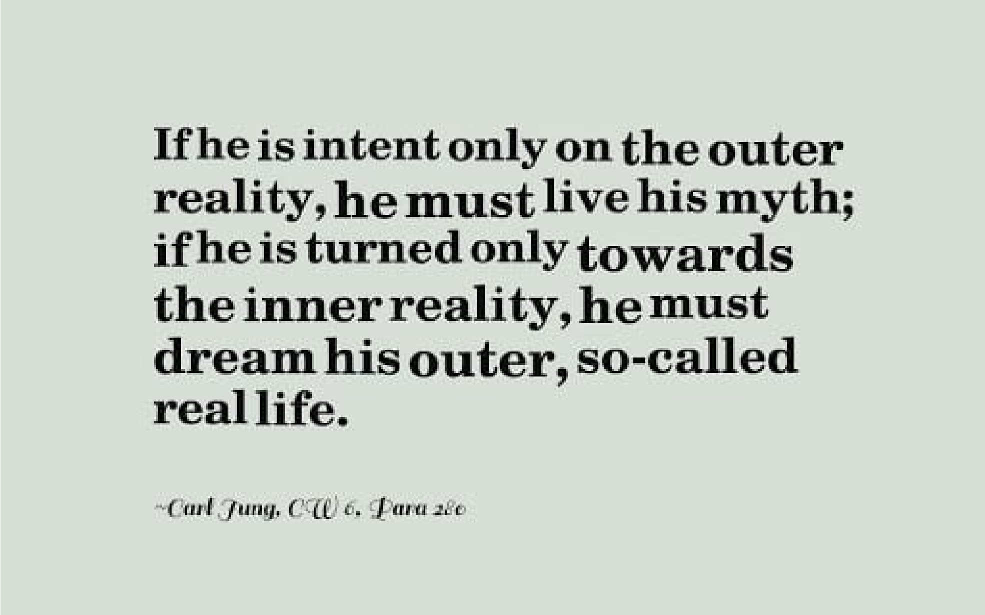


Just as the unconscious world of mythological images speaks indirectly, through the experience of external things, to the man who surrenders himself wholly to the outer world, so the real world and its demands find their way indirectly to the man who has surrendered himself wholly to the soul; for no man can escape both realities.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 280

Just as the unconscious world of mythological images speaks indirectly, through the experience of external things, to the man who surrenders himself wholly to the outer world, so the real world and its demands find their way indirectly to the man who has surrendered himself wholly to the soul; for no man can escape both realities. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 280

[25]

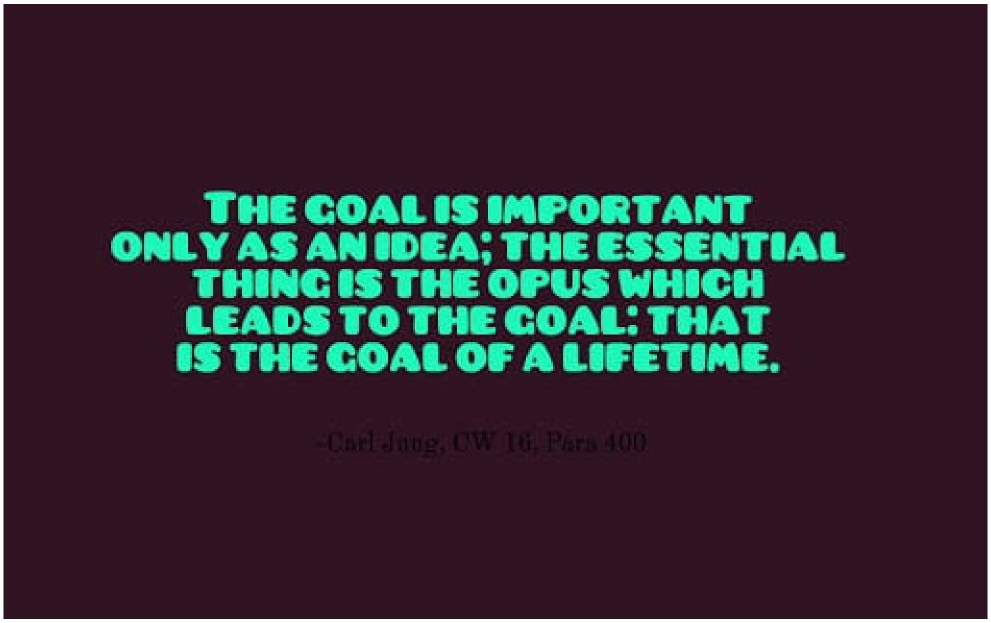


If he is intent only on the outer reality, he must live his myth; if he is turned only towards the inner reality, he must dream his outer, so-called real life.

~Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 280

If he is intent only on the outer reality, he must live his myth; if he is turned only towards the inner reality, he must dream his outer, so-called real life. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 280

[26]



THE GOAL IS IMPORTANT ONLY AS AN IDEA; THE ESSENTIAL THING IS THE OPUS WHICH LEADS TO THE GOAL: THAT IS THE GOAL OF A LIFETIME.

~Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 400

The goal is important only as an idea; the essential thing is the opus which leads to the goal: that is the goal of a lifetime. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 400

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2017/03/zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung on The Black Serpent (2019-12-19 07:08)

[1]

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Lecture

The black serpent symbolizes the introverting libido.

Salome is the anima and Elijah the wise old man.

Salome, being instinctive and quite blind, needs the foreseeing eyes of wisdom that Elijah possesses.

The figure of the prophet is compensatory to that of the blind anima.

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

As you remember, the real Salome was involved in incestuous relations with Herod, her stepfather, and it was because of the latter's love for her that she was able to get the head of John the Baptist.

I had read much mythology before this fantasy came to me, and all of this reading entered into the condensation of these figures.

The old man is a very typical figure.

One encounters him everywhere; he appears in all sorts of forms, and usually in company with a young girl. (See Rider Haggard: Wisdom's Daughter.)

Feeling-sensation is in opposition to the conscious intellect plus intuition, but the balance is insufficient.

When you assume the anima is due to the preponderance of the differentiated function in the conscious, the unconscious is balanced by a figure within itself that compensates the anima figure.

This is the old man Elijah.

It is as though you have a scale, and in the one side of the scale is the conscious, in the other the unconscious.

This was one of my first hypotheses.

With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance.

In those days I saw a compensatory principle that seemed to show a balance between the conscious and unconscious.

But I saw later that the unconscious was balanced in itself.

It is the yea and the nay. The unconscious is not at all exactly the opposite of the conscious.

It may be irrationally different.

You cannot deduce the unconscious from the conscious.

The unconscious is balanced in itself, as is the conscious.

When we meet an extravagant figure like Salome, we have a compensating figure in the unconscious.

If there were only such an evil figure as Salome, the conscious would have to build up a fence to keep this back, an exaggerated, fanatical, moral attitude.

But I had not this exaggerated moral attitude, so I suppose that Salome was compensated by Elijah.

When Elijah told me he was always with Salome, I thought it was almost blasphemous for him to say this.

I had the feeling of diving into an atmosphere that was cruel and full of blood.

This atmosphere was around Salome, and to hear Elijah declare that he was always in that company shocked me profoundly.

Elijah and Salome are together because they are pairs of opposites.

Elijah is an important figure in man's unconscious, not in woman's.

He is the man with prestige, the man with a low threshold of consciousness or with remarkable intuition.

In higher society he would be the wise man; compare Lao-tse.

He has the ability to get into touch with archetypes.

He will be surrounded with mana, and will arouse other men because he touches the archetypes in others.

He is fascinating and has a thrill about him. He is the wise man, the medicine man, the mana man.

Later on in evolution, this wise man becomes a spiritual image, a god, "the old one from the mountains" (compare Moses coming down from the mountain as lawgiver), the sorcerer of the tribe.

He is the legislator.

Even Christ was in company with Moses and Elijah in his transfiguration.

All great lawgivers and masters of the past, such as for example the Mahatmas of theosophical teaching, are thought of by theosophists as spiritual factors still in existence.

Thus the Dalai Lama is supposed by theosophists to be such a figure.

In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

Christ is not quite suitable; he is too young to be the Mahatma.

The great man has to be given another role.

John the Baptist was the great wise man, teacher, and initiator, but he has been depotentiated.

The same archetype reappears in Goethe as Faust and as Zarathustra in Nietzsche, where Zarathustra came as a visitation.

Nietzsche has been gripped by the sudden animation of the great wise man.

This plays an important role in man's psychology, as I have said, but unfortunately a less important part than that played by the anima.

The serpent is the animal, but the magical animal.

There is hardly anyone whose relation to a snake is neutral.

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct.

Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

In primitive countries, you can easily see why man has acquired this instinct.

The Bedouins are afraid of scorpions and carry amulets to protect themselves, especially stones from certain Roman ruins.

So whenever a snake appears, you must think of a primordial feeling of fear.

The black color goes with this feeling, and also with the subterranean character of the snake.

It is hidden and therefore dangerous.

As animal it symbolizes something unconscious; it is the instinctive movement or tendency; it shows the way to the hidden treasure, or it guards the treasure.

The dragon is the mythological form of the snake.

The snake has a fascinating appeal, a peculiar attraction through fear.

Some people are fascinated by this fear.

Things that are awe-inspiring and dangerous have an extraordinary attraction.

This combination of fear and attraction is shown, for instance, when a bird is hypnotized by a snake, for the bird flutters down to fight the snake, and then becomes attracted and held by the snake.

The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

The snake is also Yin, the dark female power.

The Chinese would not use the snake (i.e., dragon) as a symbol for Yin, but for Yang.

In Chinese [tradition], the Yin is symbolized by the tiger and the Yang by the dragon.

The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization.

It makes things real, makes them come into being, after the manner of Yin.

Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below.

There are mythological parallels.

Certain Negroes call the soul “My serpent”—they say, “My serpent said to me,” meaning “I had an idea.”

Therefore the serpent is also the symbol of wisdom, speaks the wise word of the depths.

It is quite chthonic, quite earth-born, like Erda, daughter of the earth.

The dead heroes transform into serpents in the underworld.

In mythology, that which had been the sun-bird devours itself, goes into the earth, and comes up again.

The Semenda Bird, like the phoenix, burns in order to renew itself.

Out of the ashes comes the snake, and out of the snake the bird again.

The snake is the transition from the Heaven-born, back again to the bird.

The snake encoils the vessel of Ra. In the Night Journey, in the Seventh Hour, Ra must fight the serpent. Ra is supported by the ritual of the priests: if he kills the serpent, the sun rises, if he should not succeed, the sun would rise no more.

The serpent is the personification of the tendency to go into the depths and to deliver oneself over to the alluring world of shadows.

I had already engaged the old man in an interesting conversation; and, quite against all expectations, the old man had assumed a rather critical attitude toward my kind of thinking.

He said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air.

He said, “If you should see people in a room, you would not say that you made those people, or that you were responsible for them.”

Only then I learned psychological objectivity.

Only then could I say to a patient, “Be quiet, something is happening.”

There are such things as mice in a house.

You cannot say you are wrong when you have a thought.

For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena.

We must have perfect objectivity.

A few evenings later, I felt that things should continue; so again I tried to follow the same procedure, but it would not descend.

I remained on the surface.

Then I realized I had a conflict in myself about going down, but I could not make out what it was, I only felt that two dark principles were fighting each other, two serpents.

There was a mountain ridge, a knife edge, on one side a sunny desert country, on the other side darkness.

I saw a white snake on the light side and a dark snake on the dark side.

They met in battle on the narrow ridge.

A dreadful conflict ensued.

Finally the head of the black snake turned white, and it retired, defeated.

I felt, “Now we can go on.”

Then the old man appeared high up on the rocky ridge.

We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring.

I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.”

We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar.

The old man climbed up on the altar.

At once he became small and so did the altar, while the walls grew bigger and bigger.

Then I saw a tiny house near the walls, and a tiny, tiny woman, like a doll, who turned out to be Salome.

I also saw the snake, but it too was very tiny.

The walls kept on growing, and then I realized that I was in the underworld, that the walls were those of a crater, and that this was the house of Salome and Elijah.

All this time, I did not grow, but kept my own size.

As the walls grew, Salome and Elijah grew a bit bigger.

I realized that I was at the bottom of the world.

Elijah smiled and said, “Why, it is just the same, above or below.”

Then a most disagreeable thing happened.

Salome became very interested in me, and she assumed that I could cure her blindness.

She began to worship me.

I said, “Why do you worship me?”

She replied, “You are Christ.”

In spite of my objections she maintained this.

I said, “This is madness,” and became filled with skeptical resistance.

Then I saw the snake approach me.

She came close and began to encircle me and press me in her coils.

The coils reached up to my heart. I realized as I struggled, that I had assumed the attitude of the Crucifixion.

In the agony and the struggle, I sweated so profusely that the water flowed down on all sides of me.

Then Salome rose, and she could see.

While the snake was pressing me, I felt that my face had taken on the face of an animal of prey, a lion or a tiger.

The interpretation of these dreams is this:

First the fight of the two snakes: the white means a movement into the day, the black into the kingdom of darkness, with moral aspects too.

There was a real conflict in me, a resistance to going down.

My stronger tendency was to go up.

Because I had been so impressed the day before with the cruelty of the place I had seen, I really had a tendency to find a way to the conscious by going up, as I did on the mountain.

The mountain was the kingdom of the sun, and the ring-wall was the vessel in which people had gathered the sun.

Elijah had said that it was just the same below or above.

Compare Dante’s Inferno.

The Gnostics express this same idea in the symbol of the reversed cones.

Thus the mountain and the crater are similar.

There was nothing of conscious structure in these fantasies, they were just events that happened.

So I assume that Dante got his ideas from the same archetypes.

I have seen these ideas very often in patients—the upper and the lower cones, things above and things below.

Salome's approach and her worshiping of me is obviously that side of the inferior function which is surrounded by an aura of evil.

I felt her insinuations as a most evil spell.

One is assailed by the fear that perhaps this is madness.

This is how madness begins, this is madness.

For example, in a certain Russian book there is a story of a man who fears he will go mad.

Lying in bed at night, he sees a bright square of moonlight in the middle of the room.

He says to himself, "If I should sit there and howl like a dog, then I would be mad, but I am not doing it so I am not mad."

Then he tries to dismiss this thought, but after a while he says to himself, "I might sit there and howl like a dog, knowing it and choosing it, and still I would not be mad."

Again he tries to put the thought away, but finally he can resist it no longer—he gets up and sits in the moonlight and howls like a dog, and then he is mad.

You cannot get conscious of these unconscious facts without giving yourself to them.

If you can overcome your fear of the unconscious and can let yourself down, then these facts take on a life of their own.

You can be gripped by these ideas so that you really go mad, or nearly so.

These images have so much reality that they recommend themselves, and such extraordinary meaning that one is caught.

They form part of the ancient mysteries; in fact, it is such figures that made the mysteries.

Compare the mysteries of Isis as told in Apuleius, with the initiation and deification of the initiate.

Awe surrounds the mysteries, particularly the mystery of deification.

This was one of the most important of the mysteries; it gave the immortal value to the individual—it gave certainty of immortality.

One gets a peculiar feeling from being put through such an initiation.

The important part that led up to the deification was the snake's encoiling of me.

Salome's performance was deification.

The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake's head resting on the man's head, and the face of the man that of a lion.

This statue has only been found in the mystery grottoes (the under-churches, the last remnants of the catacombs).

The catacombs were not originally places of concealment, but were chosen as symbolical of a descent into the underworld.

It was also part of those early conceptions that the saints should be buried with the martyrs in order to go down into the earth before rising again.

The Dionysian mysteries have the same idea.

When the catacombs decayed, the idea of the church continued.

The Mithraic religion also had an underground church, and only initiates assisted at the underground ceremonies.

Holes were cut in the walls of the underground portion in order that lay people might hear in the church above what was being said by the initiates in the church below.

The lower church was fitted up with divans or cubicles placed opposite each other.

Bells were used in the ceremony, and bread marked with a cross.

We know that they celebrated a sacramental meal where this bread was eaten with water instead of wine.

The Mithraic cult was strictly ascetic.

No women were admitted as members.

It is almost certain that the symbolical rite of deification played a part in these mysteries.

The lion-headed god encoiled by the snake was called Aion, or the eternal being.

He derives from a Persian deity, Zrwanakarana, which word means “the infinitely long duration.”

Another very interesting symbol in this cult is the Mithraic amphora with flame arising from it, and the lion on one side with the snake on the other, both trying to get at the fire.

The lion is the young, hot, dry July sun in culmination of light, the summer.

The serpent is humidity, darkness, the earth, winter.

They are the opposites of the world trying to come together with the reconciling symbol between them.

It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains).

Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics.

It is of course a man's symbol, a symbol of the womb—the creative womb of the man out of which rises the fire.

When the pairs of opposites come together, something divine happens, and then it is immortality, the eternal, creative time.

Wherever there is generation there is time, therefore Chronos is God of Time, Fire, and Light.

In this deification mystery you make yourself into the vessel, and are a vessel of creation in which the opposites reconcile.

The more these images are realized, the more you will be gripped by them.

When the images come to you and are not understood, you are in the society of the gods or, if you will, the lunatic society; you are no longer in human society, for you cannot express yourself.

Only when you can say, "This image is so and so," only then do you remain in human society.

Anybody could be caught by these things and lost in them—some throw the experience away saying it is all nonsense, and thereby losing their best value, for these are the creative images.

Another may identify himself with the images and become a crank or a fool.
Question: What is the date of this dream?

Dr. Jung: December 1913.

All this is Mithraic symbolism from beginning to end. In 1910 I had a dream of a Gothic cathedral in which Mass was being celebrated.

Suddenly the whole side wall of the cathedral caved in, and herds of cattle, with ringing bells, trooped into the church.

You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 99-108

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/81e56-1serpent.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=VUFY5BK5AVE6&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=157676577`

Carl Jung and “It always amuses me when people say they dismiss psychology.” (2019-12-19 07:16)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Arthur Gloor

Dear Herr Gloor, 29 October 1945

I have glanced through your manuscript and concentrated chiefly on the part where you speak of psychology.

It is not quite clear what you want me to do.

I can only confirm that the use you make of psychological viewpoints is essentially correct in so far as you concern yourself with the personality of the artist.

You judge him, it seems to me, very fairly, also the Romantics in general.

It is another matter when you come to the psychology of art, but your hero seems to have done nothing of boast in this field.

The work of art has its own specific psychology which is sometimes notably different from the psychology of the artist.

Were it not so, the work of art would not be autonomous.

Your opinion that the unconscious is "kept under" by the pursuit of art might be improved on as follows: So long as Christian dogma expressed the essence of the unconscious in well-nigh perfect fashion, the unconscious had no chance to manifest itself except in a purely personalistic and therefore insignificant way.

In Romanticism it appeared as a collective phenomenon, but Romanticism is not the first symptom of this slipping of the unconscious out of the well-structured dogmatic forms of the Middle Ages.

Very early on we had Christian mysticism and alchemy with its heterodoxy as manifestations of the unconscious in the grand manner.

It always amuses me when people say they dismiss psychology.

It would never occur to me to dismiss literary studies or aesthetics because they too are concerned with certain aspects of the human psyche, and I can never understand with what justification my colleagues in other professional fields can dismiss psychology out of hand.

I would never dream of putting psychology in the place of aesthetics or the like.

On the other hand it is obvious to every child that the artist has a human psyche whose qualities are at least similar to those of ordinary mortals.

I understand the resistance better in the case of philosophers, since psychology saws off the branch they are sitting on by wickedly robbing them of the illusion that they represent the absolute spirit.

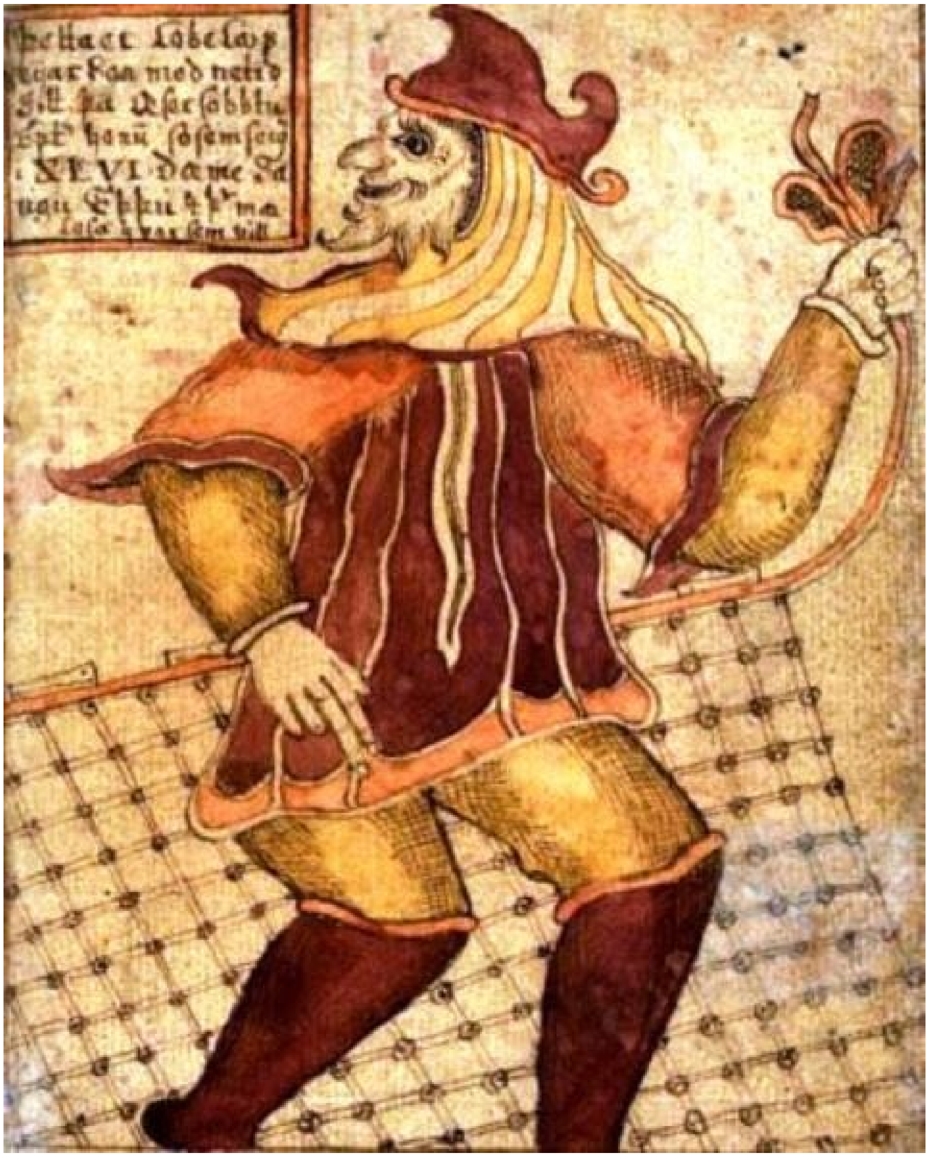
Yours truly,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 388-389.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/16d12-art.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=WZJTCGWHCJGG&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576765907&sprefix=jung+le%2`

[The trickster] is a forerunner of the Savior... (2019-12-20 04:07)

[1]



[The trickster] is a forerunner of the saviour . . . . He is both subhuman and superhuman, a bestial and divine being, whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness.

C.G. Jung, On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure, CW 9, par. 472

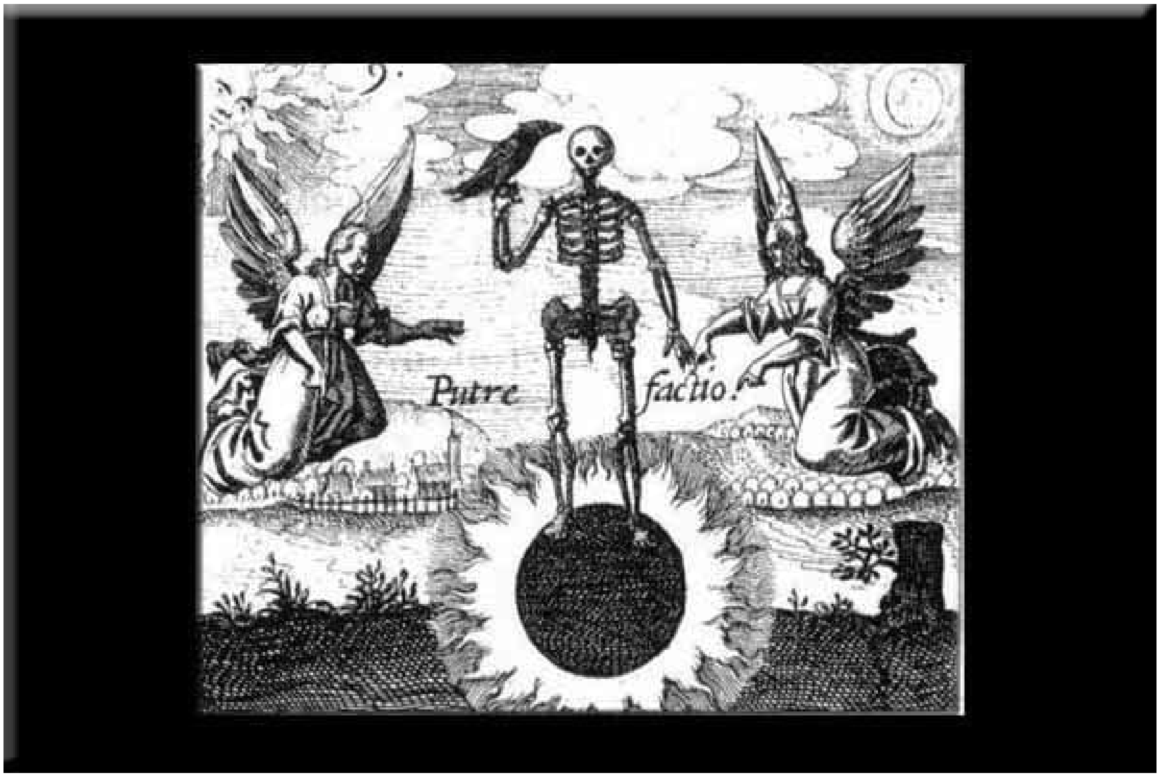
[The trickster] is a forerunner of the saviour . . . . He is both subhuman and superhuman, a bestial and divine being, whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness. Carl Jung, On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure," CW 9i, par. 472

The so-called civilized man has forgotten the trickster. He remembers him only figuratively and metaphorically, when, irritated by his own ineptitude, he speaks of fate playing tricks on him or of things being bewitched. He never suspects that his own hidden and apparently harmless shadow has qualities whose dangerousness exceeds his wildest dreams. Carl Jung, On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure," CW 9i, par. 478

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/acf09-loki.jpg`

In Norse myth, Nidhogg ("tearer of corpses") is a monstrous serpent... (2019-12-20 04:24)

[1]



Putre factio

In Norse myth, Nidhogg ("tearer of corpses") is a monstrous serpent that gnaws almost perpetually at the deepest root of the World Tree Yggdrasil, threatening to destroy it.

Nidhogg or Nidhoggr is the Dragon, which inhabits the underworld Niflheim {dark world } in Norse mythology. The name Nidhogg has been variously translated as 'striking full of hatred' and 'dread biter'.

Living by the root of Yggdrasill the World Ash, in a pit of serpents, Nidhogg feeds on the bodies of the dead at Hvergelmir {the bubbling cauldron } the spring in Niflheim which is the source of the rivers of the world. When not feeding upon the dead Nidhogg gnaws at the root of Yggdrasill and sends taunting messages to the eagle perched in its high branches via the squirrel Ratatosk. Ratatosk in turn brings the eagles taunts back to Nidhogg.

In the act of gnawing the root, Nidhogg joins the four stags Dainn, Dvalinn, Duneyr and Durathor who graze the leaves and bark of Yggdrasill higher up.

Nidhogg rises at Ragnarok, bringing up the corpses of the dead to join battle. The dragon however survives to continue its existence in the new order that follows. Sources have suggested that Nidhogg's continued presence in the new world is to provide an evil balance to the new good.

Alchemy represents the projection of a drama both cosmic and spiritual in laboratory terms. The 'opus magnum' had two aims: the rescue of the human soul and the salvation of the cosmos . . This work is difficult and strewn with obstacles; the alchemical opus is dangerous. Right at the beginning you meet the "dragon," the chthonic spirit, the "devil" or, as the alchemists called it, the "blackness," the nigredo, and this encounter produces suffering. . .In the language of the alchemists, matter suffers until the nigredo disappears...

In psychological terms, the soul finds itself in the throes of melancholy, locked in a struggle with the 'shadow'. The mystery of the coniunctio, the central mystery of alchemy, aims precisely at the synthesis of opposites, the assimilation of the blackness, the integration of the devil. (Jung, 1952 interview with Mircea Eliade in Combat) http://jungcurrents.com/nidhogg-corpses-and-alchemy/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/56a38-nigredo.jpg`

C.G. Jung: "a Secret Unrest Gnaws at the Roots of Our Being. (2019-12-20 04:27)

[1]

"But 'the heart glows,' and a secret unrest gnaws at the roots of our being.
Dealing with the Unconscious has become a question of life for us."
C.G. Jung
www.jungcurrents.com
Image: the Red Book

[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

C.G. Jung: "a Secret Unrest Gnaws at the Roots of Our Being.

"Our unconscious, on the other hand, hides living water, spirit that has become nature, and that is why it is disturbed.

Heaven has become for us the cosmic space of the physicists, and the divine empyrean a fair memory of things that once were.

But 'the heart glows,' and a secret unrest gnaws at the roots of our being.

Dealing with the Unconscious has become a question of life for us." C.G. Jung, Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious, Paragraph 50.

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/90bfd-secrrets.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2476AQ35BX381&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+colle

---

Some Carl Jung Quotations LVII (2019-12-20 04:30)

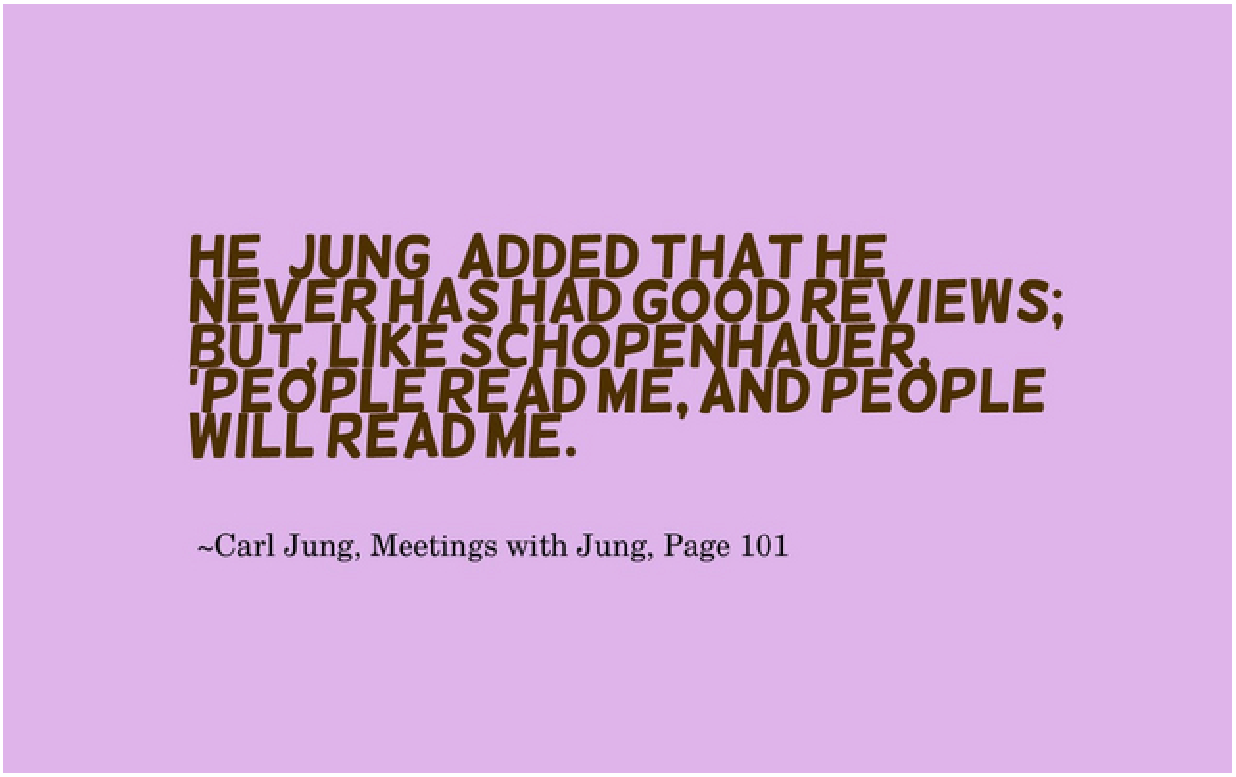
[1]

Jealousy always means that we see someone else doing what we should have done but for our incapacity or laziness; it is easier to criticize other people.

–Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 99

Jealousy always means that we see someone else doing what we should have done but for our incapacity or laziness; it is easier to criticize other people. Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 99

[2]

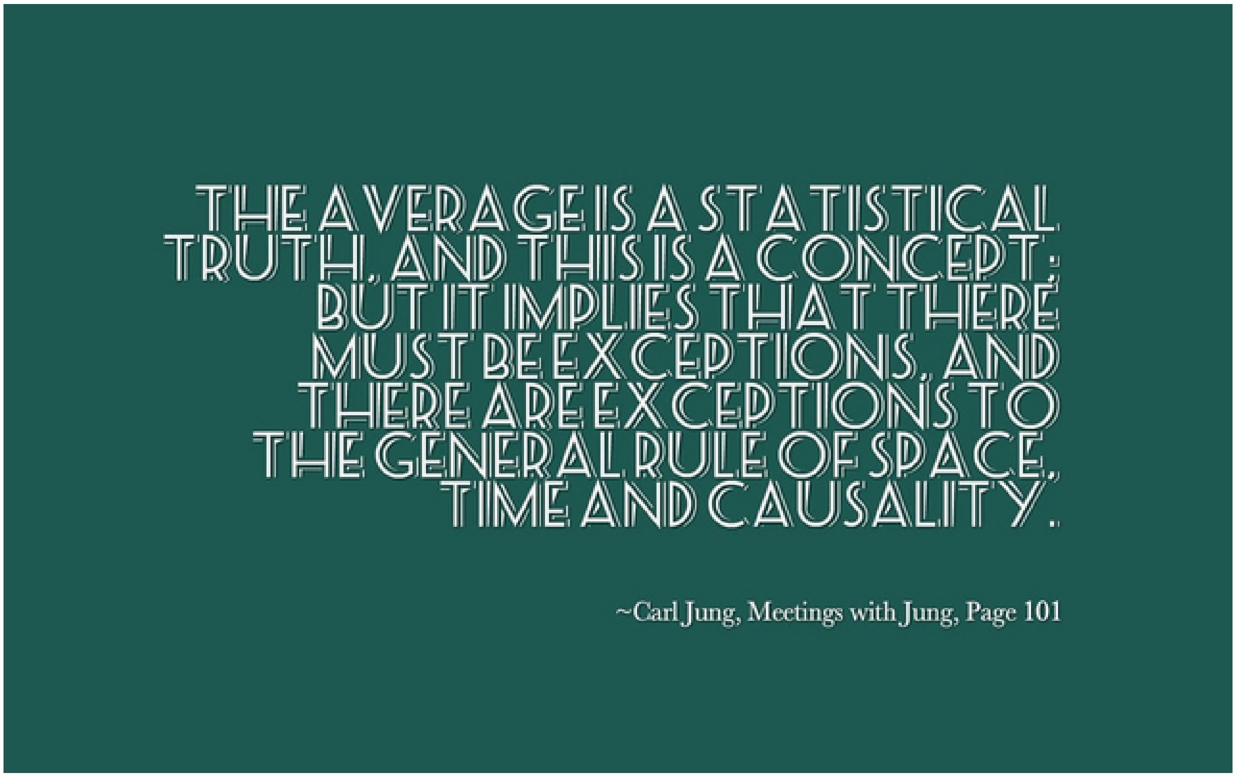


HE JUNG ADDED THAT HE NEVER HAS HAD GOOD REVIEWS; BUT, LIKE SCHOPENHAUER, 'PEOPLE READ ME, AND PEOPLE WILL READ ME.

~Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 101

He [Jung] added that he never has had good reviews; but, like Schopenhauer, ‘People read me, and people will read me. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 101

[3]



THE AVERAGE IS A STATISTICAL TRUTH, AND THIS IS A CONCEPT; BUT IT IMPLIES THAT THERE MUST BE EXCEPTIONS, AND THERE ARE EXCEPTIONS TO THE GENERAL RULE OF SPACE, TIME AND CAUSALITY.

~Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 101

The average is a statistical truth, and this is a concept; but it implies that there must be exceptions, and there are exceptions to the general rule of space, time and causality. Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 101

[4]

This man also asked C.G. if he believed in astrology because he had mentioned it; but, said C.G., it is not necessary to 'believe' in such concepts – he simply observes that they are sometimes relevant

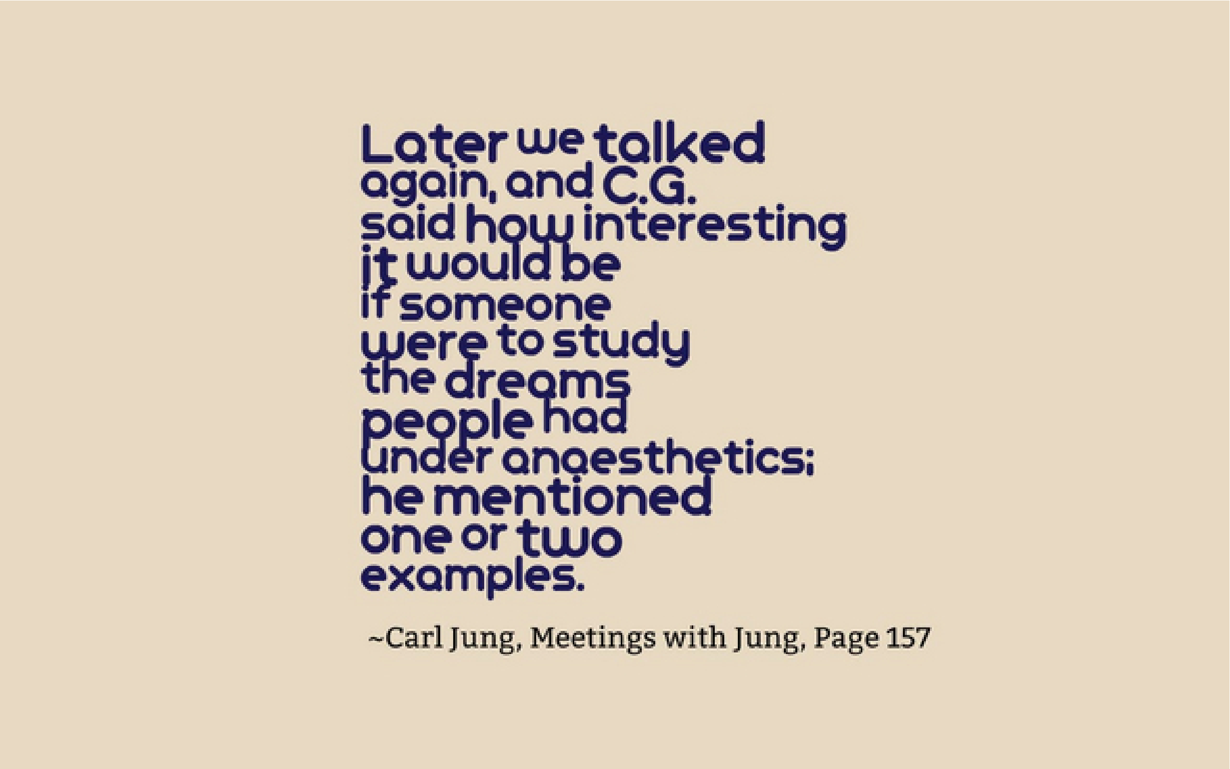
~Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 102

This man also asked C.G. if he believed in astrology because he had mentioned it; but, said C.G., it is not necessary to ‘believe’ in such concepts – he simply observes that they are sometimes relevant. E.A. Bennet,
Meetings with Jung, Page 102

[5]

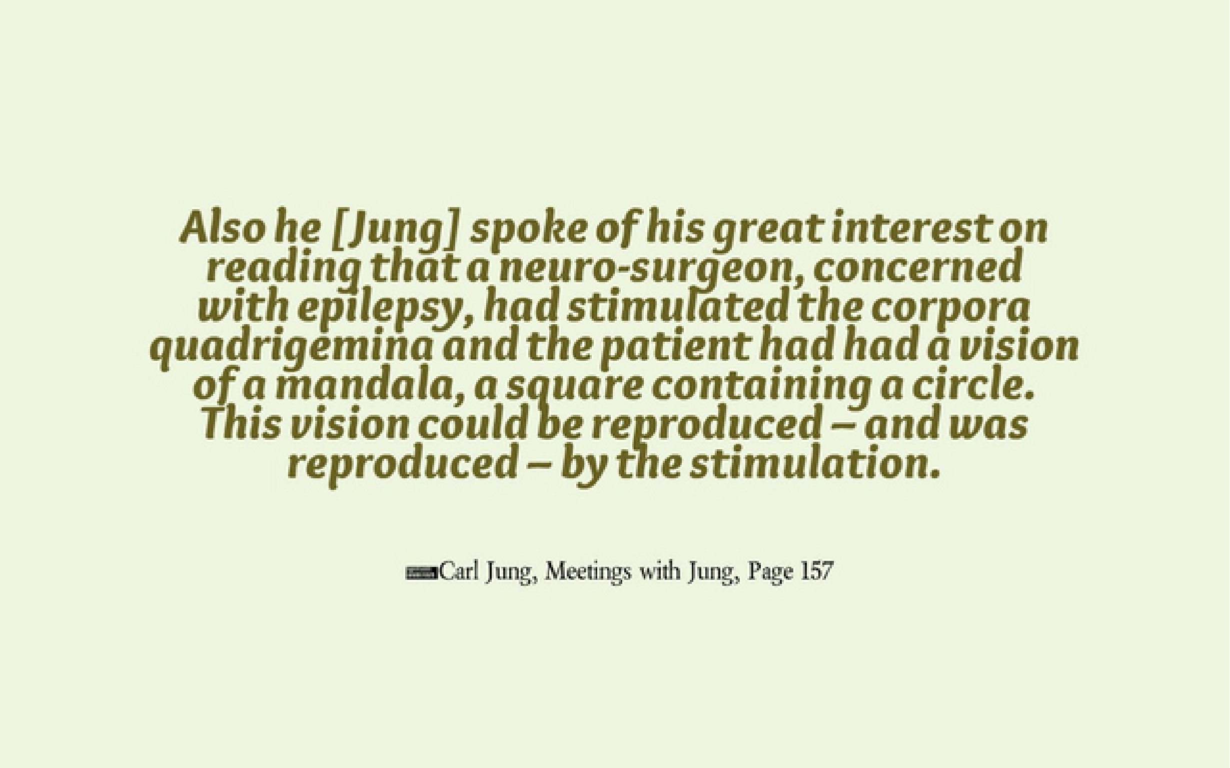


Later we talked again, and C.G. said how interesting it would be if someone were to study the dreams people had under anaesthetics; he mentioned one or two examples.

~Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 157

Later we talked again, and C.G. said how interesting it would be if someone were to study the dreams people had under anaesthetics; he mentioned one or two examples. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 157

[6]

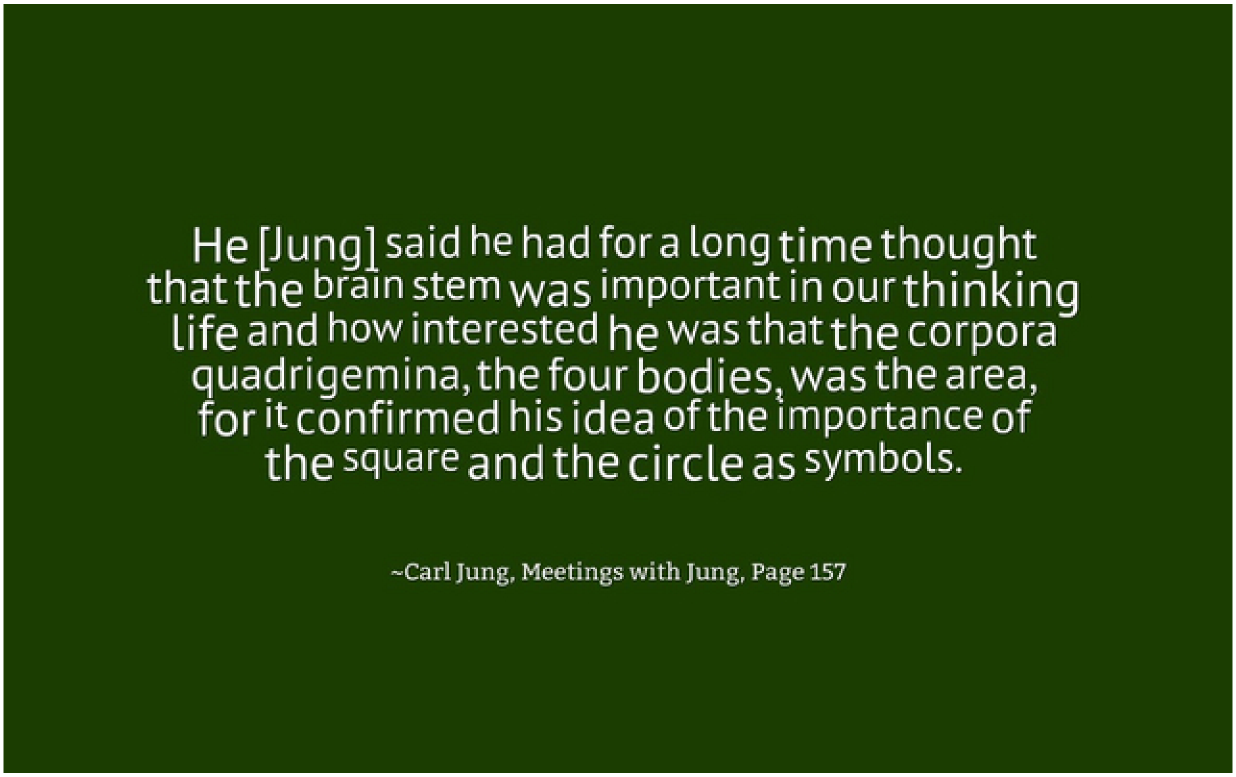


Also he [Jung] spoke of his great interest on reading that a neuro-surgeon, concerned with epilepsy, had stimulated the corpora quadrigemina and the patient had had a vision of a mandala, a square containing a circle. This vision could be reproduced – and was reproduced – by the stimulation.

Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 157

Also he [Jung] spoke of his great interest on reading that a neuro-surgeon, concerned with epilepsy, had stimulated the corpora quadrigemina and the patient had had a vision of a mandala, a square containing a circle. This vision could be reproduced – and was reproduced – by the stimulation. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 157

[7]

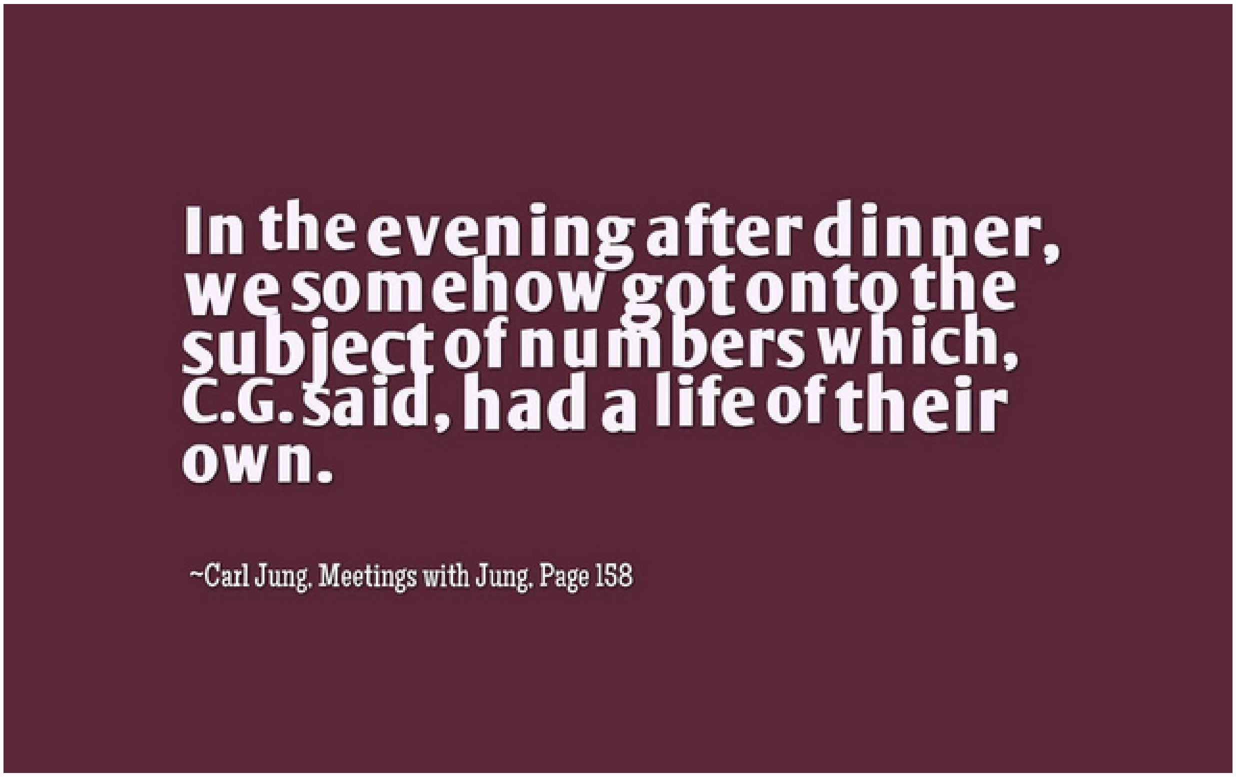


He [Jung] said he had for a long time thought that the brain stem was important in our thinking life and how interested he was that the corpora quadrigemina, the four bodies, was the area, for it confirmed his idea of the importance of the square and the circle as symbols.

~Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 157

He said he had for a long time thought that the brain stem was important in our thinking life and how interested he was that the corpora quadrigemina, the four bodies, was the area, for it confirmed his idea of the importance of the square and the circle as symbols. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 157

[8]

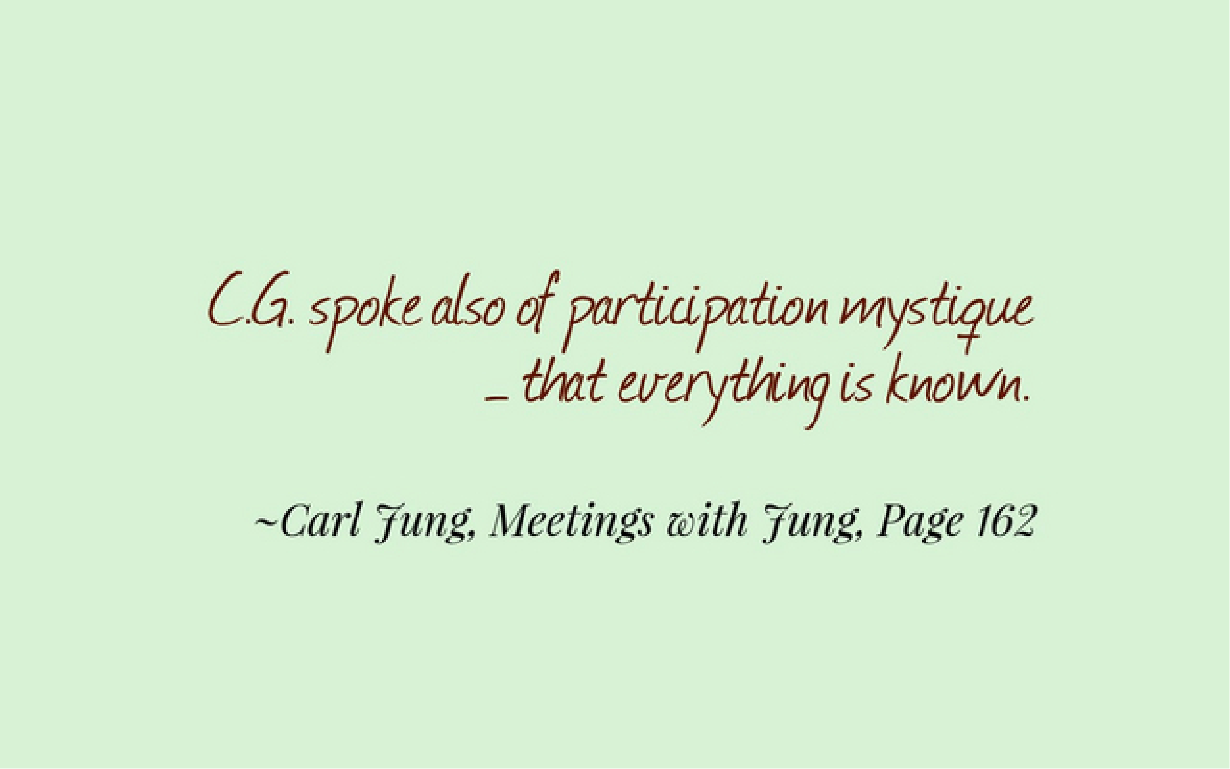


In the evening after dinner, we somehow got onto the subject of numbers which, C.G. said, had a life of their own.

~Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 158

In the evening after dinner, we somehow got onto the subject of numbers which, C.G. said, had a life of their own.
E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 158

[9]

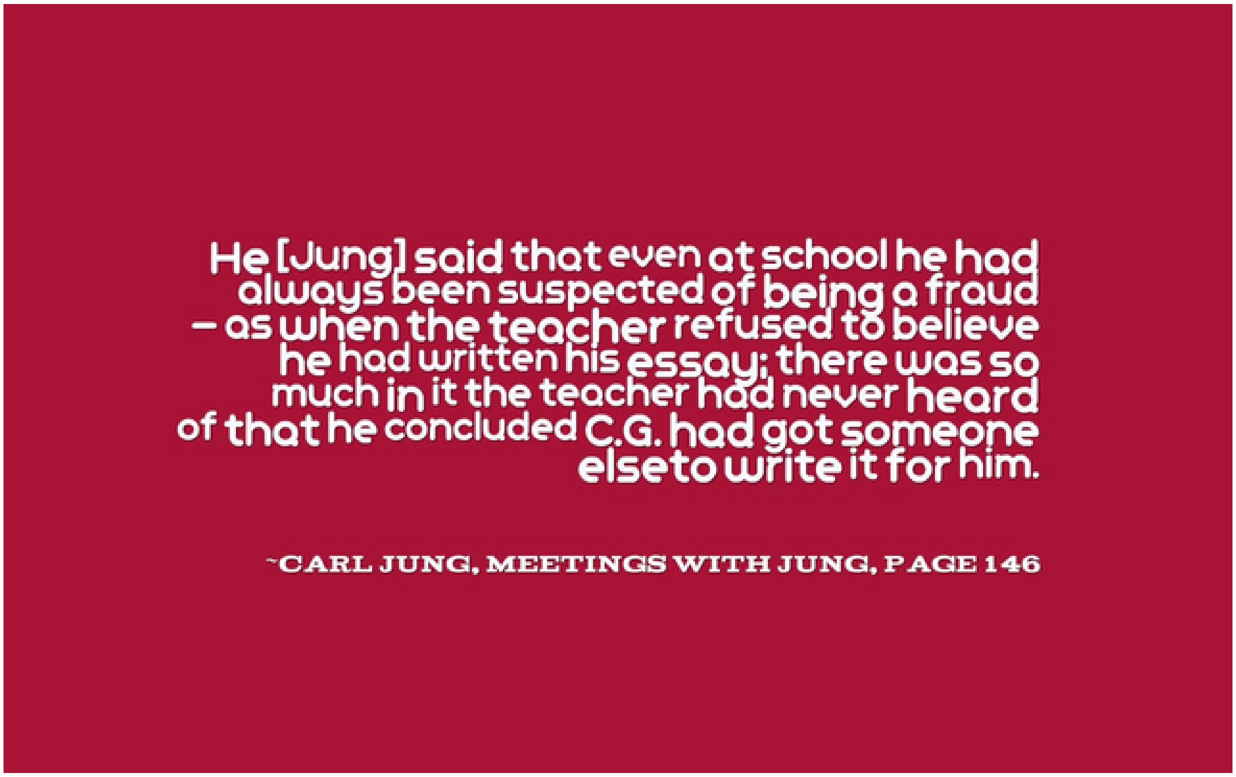


C.G. spoke also of participation mystique – that everything is known.

~Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 162

C.G. spoke also of participation mystique – that everything is known. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 162

[10]

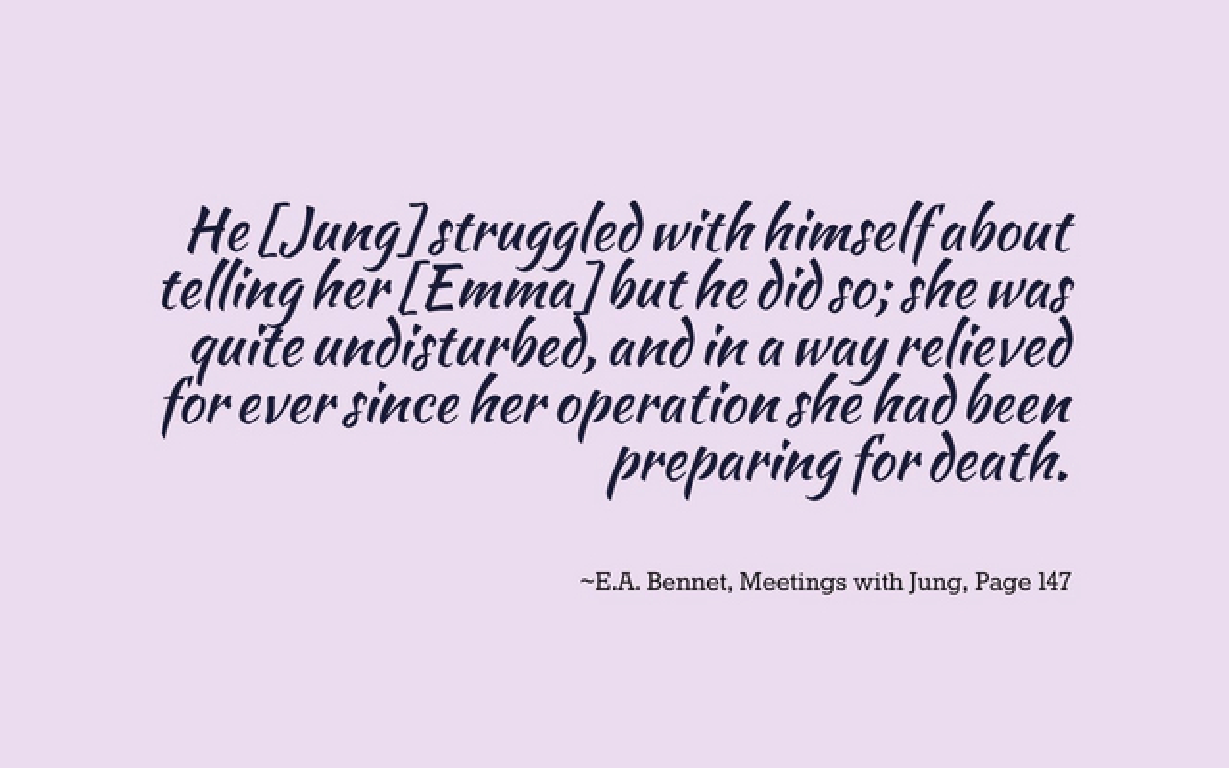


He [Jung] said that even at school he had always been suspected of being a fraud – as when the teacher refused to believe he had written his essay; there was so much in it the teacher had never heard of that he concluded C.G. had got someone else to write it for him.

~CARL JUNG, MEETINGS WITH JUNG, PAGE 146

He [Jung] said that even at school he had always been suspected of being a fraud – as when the teacher refused to believe he had written his essay; there was so much in it the teacher had never heard of that he concluded C.G. had got someone else to write it for him. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 146

[11]



He [Jung] struggled with himself about telling her [Emma] but he did so; she was quite undisturbed, and in a way relieved for ever since her operation she had been preparing for death.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 147

He [Jung] struggled with himself about telling her [Emma] but he did so; she was quite undisturbed, and in a way relieved for ever since her operation she had been preparing for death. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 147

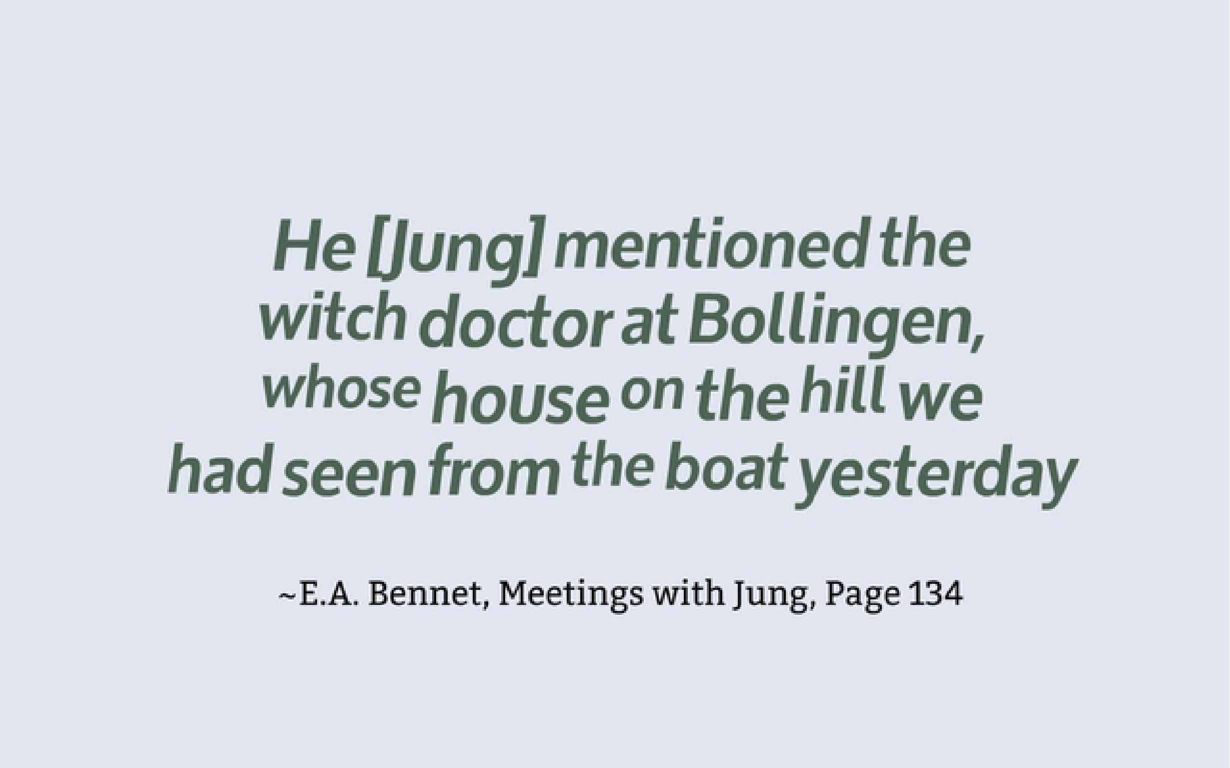
[12]

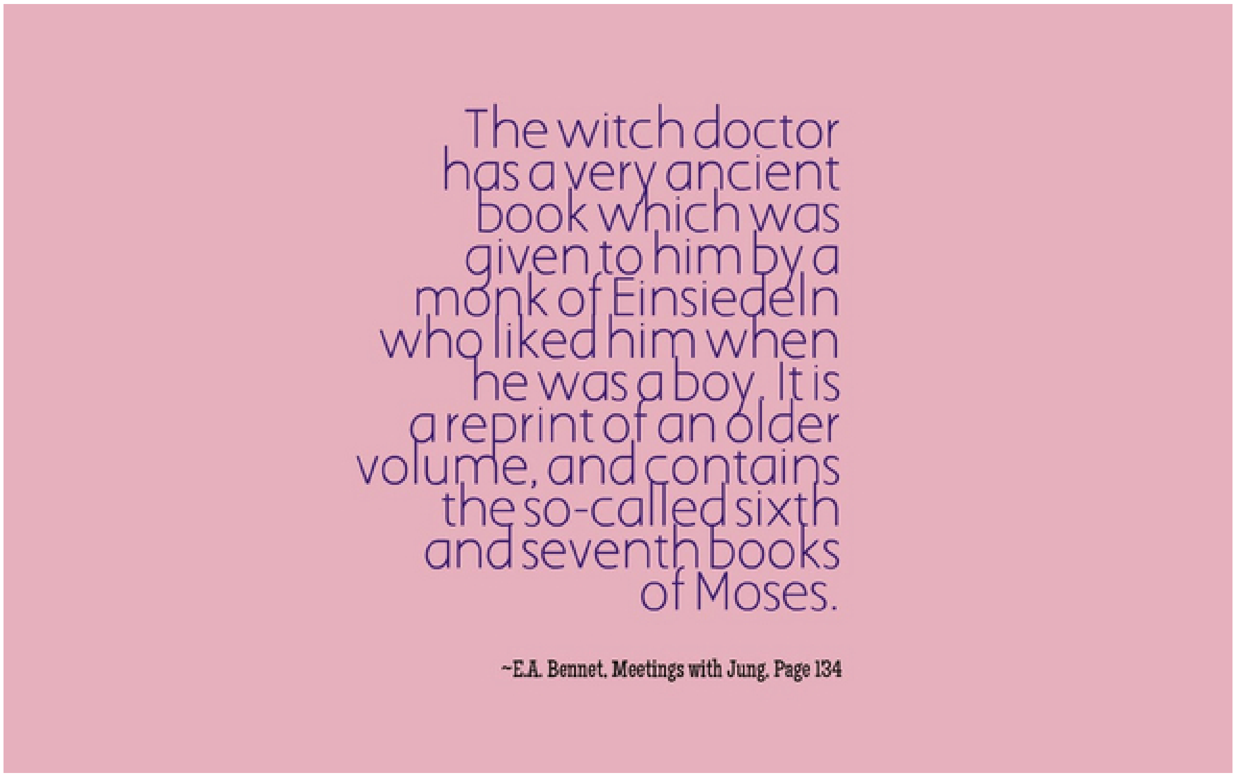


He [Jung] mentioned the witch doctor at Bollingen, whose house on the hill we had seen from the boat yesterday

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 134

He [Jung] mentioned the witch doctor at Bollingen, whose house on the hill we had seen from the boat yesterday. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 134

[13]

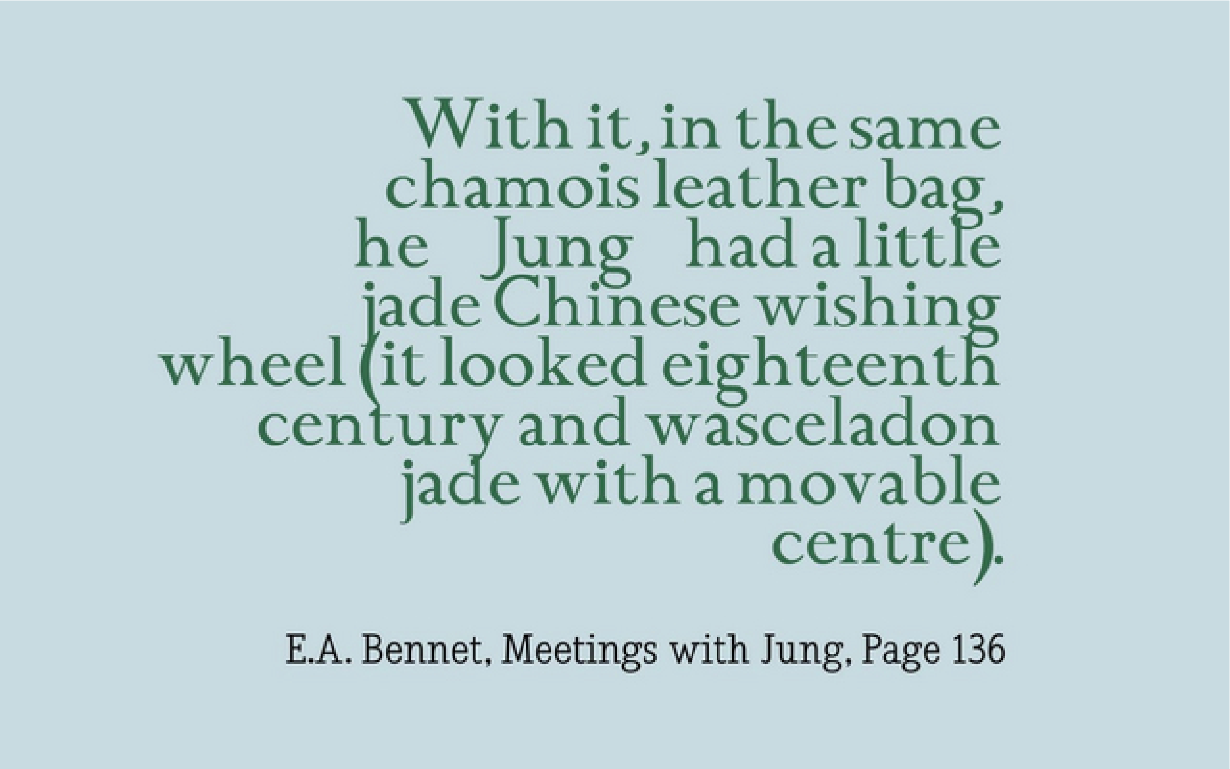


The witch doctor has a very ancient book which was given to him by a monk of Einsiedeln who liked him when he was a boy. It is a reprint of an older volume, and contains the so-called sixth and seventh books of Moses.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 134

The witch doctor has a very ancient book which was given to him by a monk of Einsiedeln who liked him when he was a boy. It is a reprint of an older volume, and contains the so-called sixth and seventh books of Moses. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page134

[14]



With it, in the same chamois leather bag, he Jung had a little jade Chinese wishing wheel (it looked eighteenth century and wasceladon jade with a movable centre).

E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 136

With it, in the same chamois leather bag, he [Jung] had a little jade Chinese wishing wheel (it looked eighteenth century and was celadon jade with a movable centre). E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 136

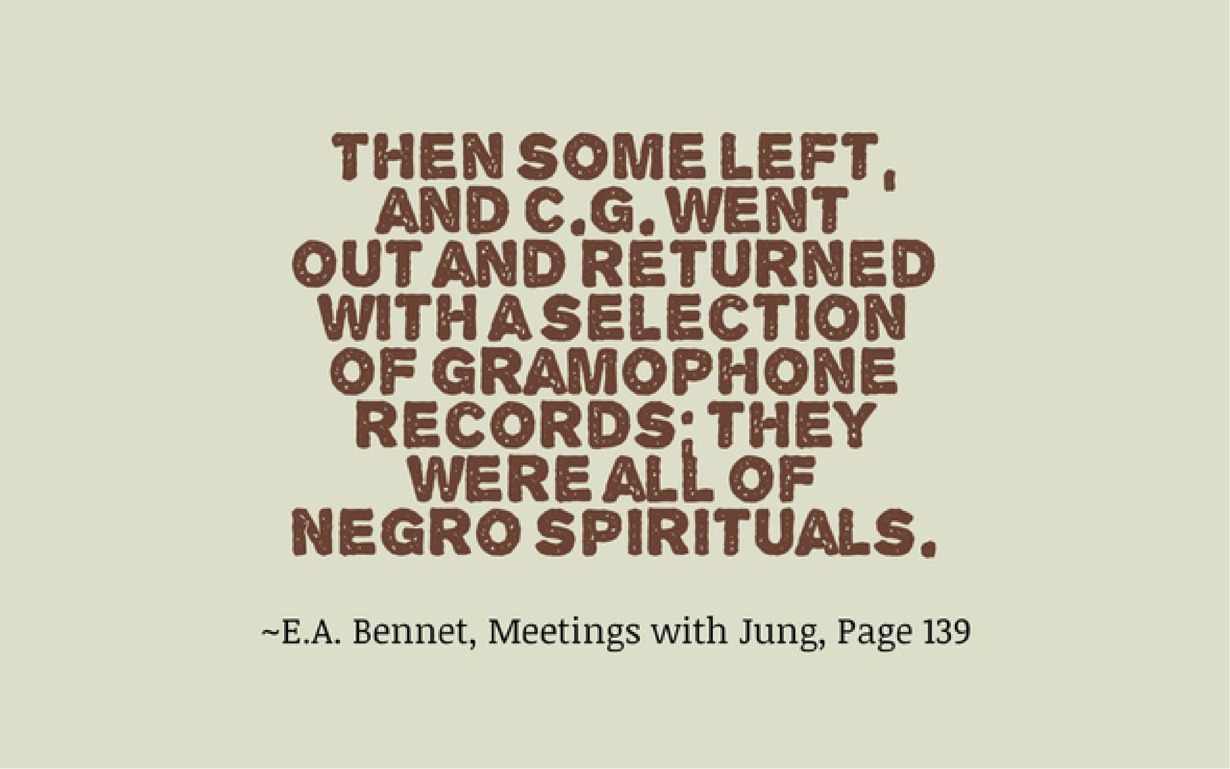
[15]

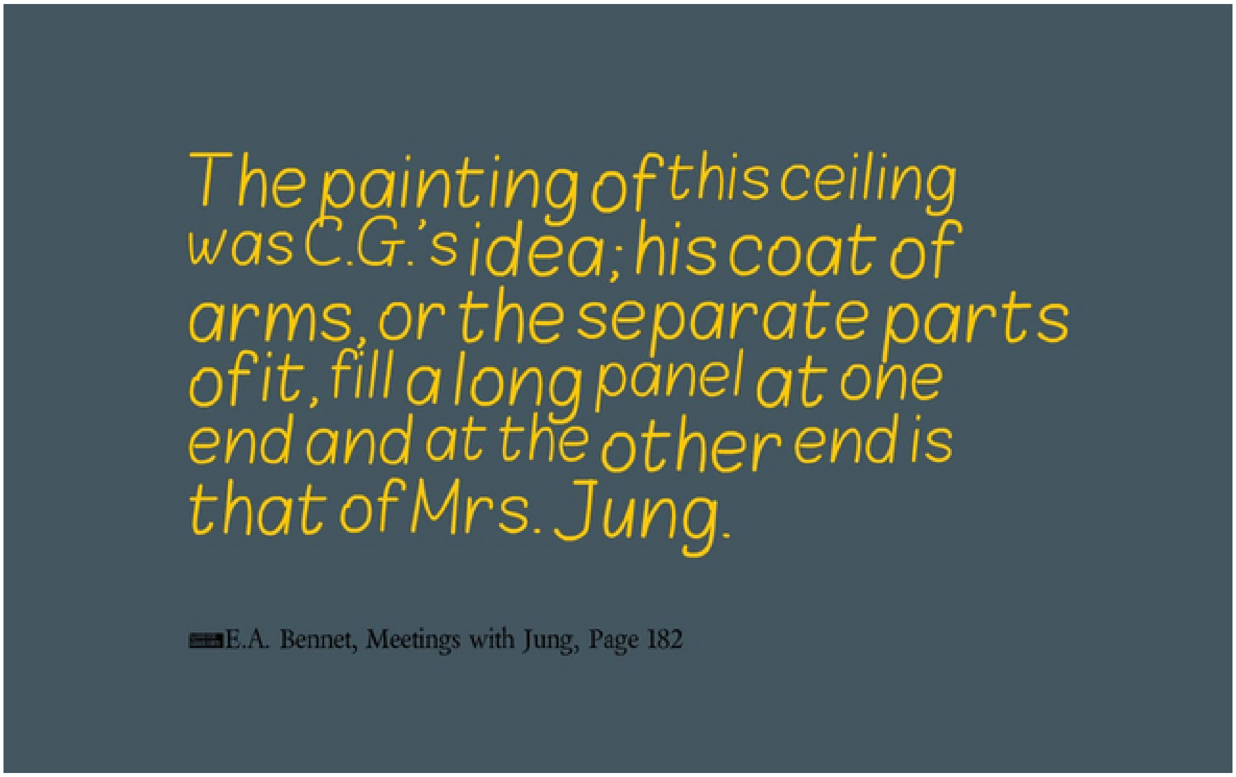


THEN SOME LEFT, AND C.G. WENT OUT AND RETURNED WITH A SELECTION OF GRAMOPHONE RECORDS: THEY WERE ALL OF NEGRO SPIRITUALS.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 139

Then some left, and C.G. went out and returned with a selection of gramophone records; they were all of Negro spirituals. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 139

[16]

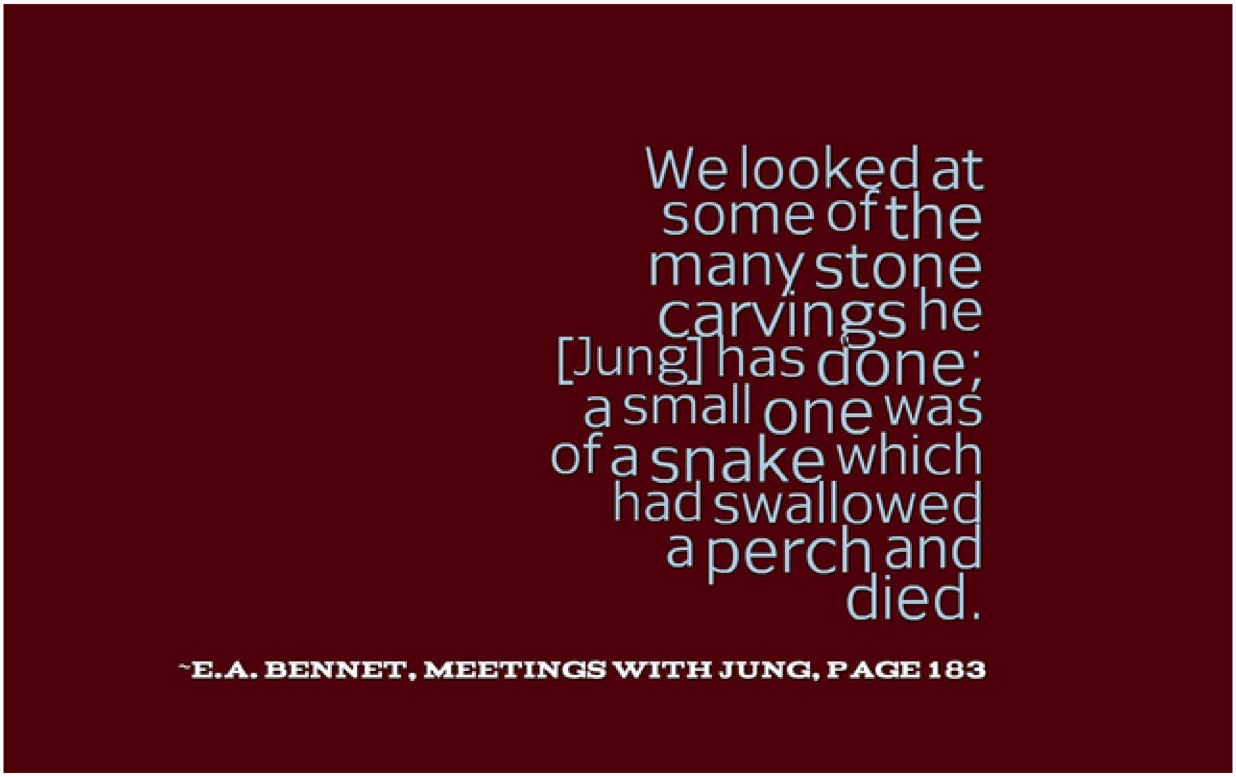


The painting of this ceiling was C.G.'s idea; his coat of arms, or the separate parts of it, fill a long panel at one end and at the other end is that of Mrs. Jung.

E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 182

The painting of this ceiling was C.G.'s idea; his coat of arms, or the separate parts of it, fill a long panel at one end and at the other end is that of Mrs. Jung. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 182

[17]

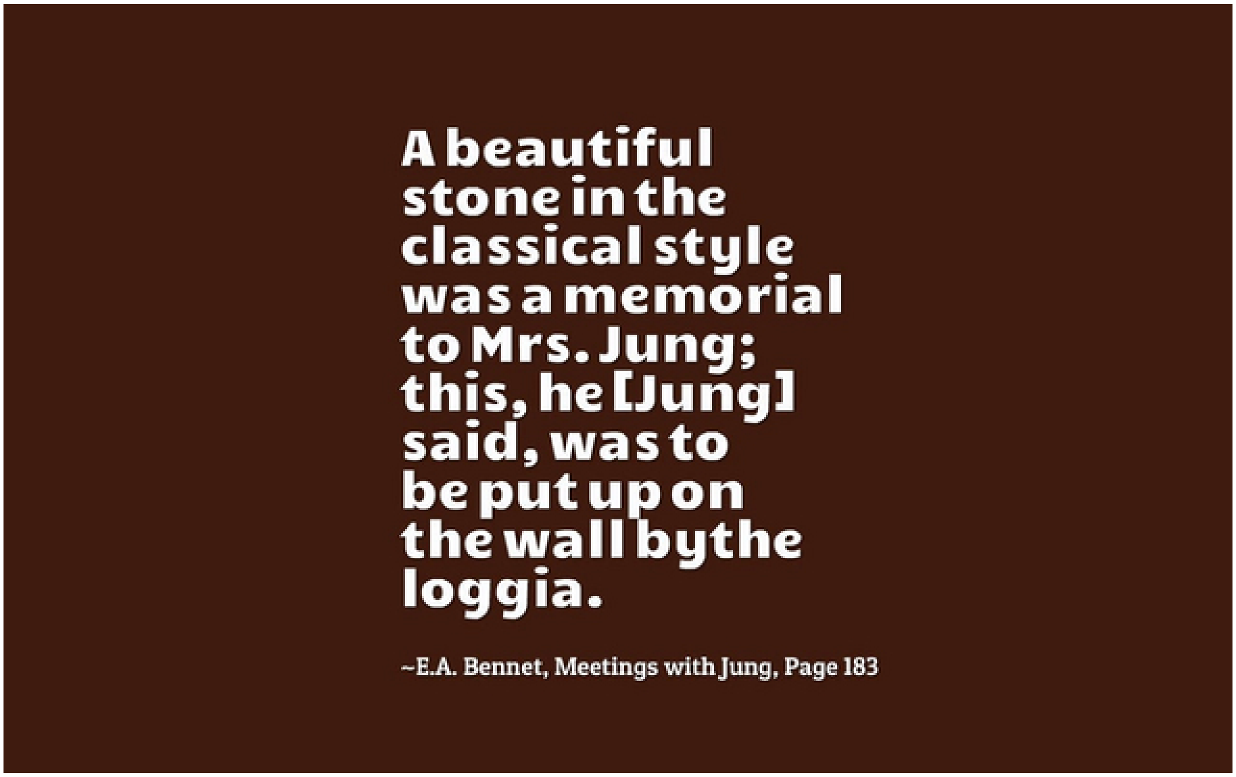


We looked at some of the many stone carvings he [Jung] has done; a small one was of a snake which had swallowed a perch and died.

~E.A. BENNET, MEETINGS WITH JUNG, PAGE 183

We looked at some of the many stone carvings he [Jung] has done; a small one was of a snake which had swallowed a perch and died. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 183

[18]

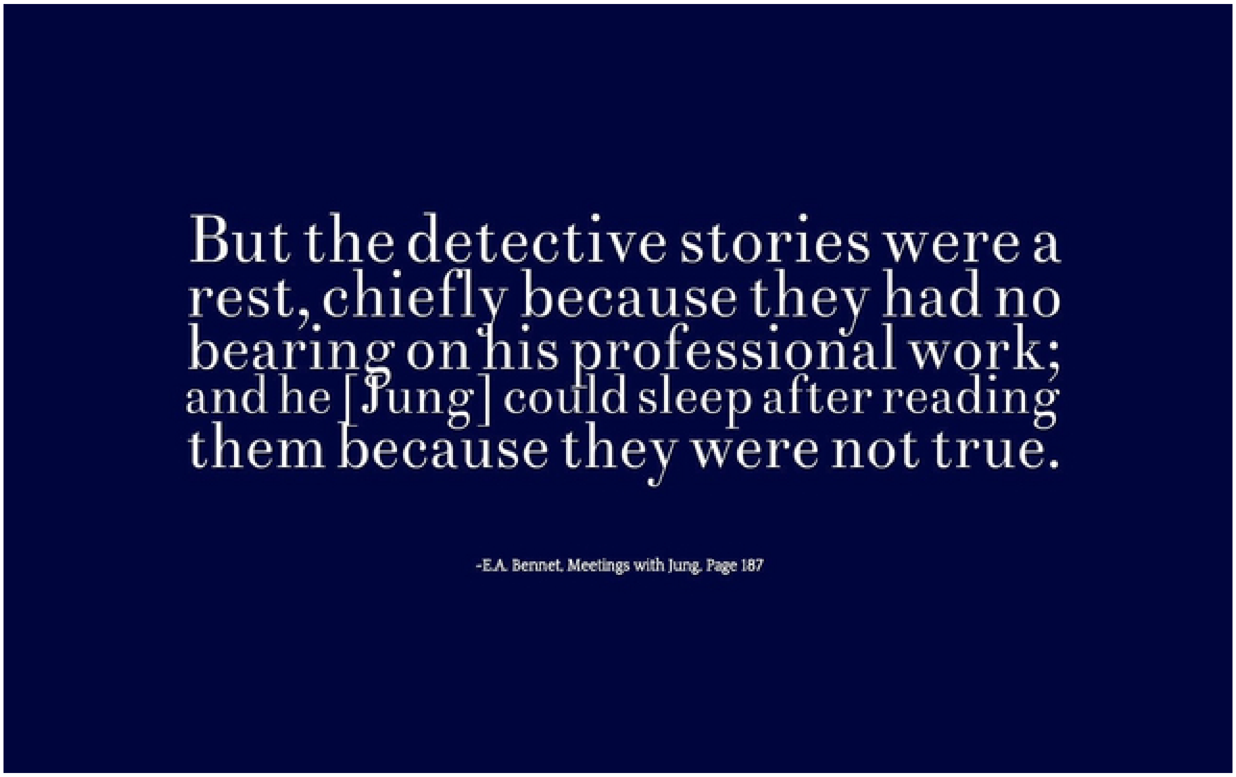


A beautiful stone in the classical style was a memorial to Mrs. Jung; this, he [Jung] said, was to be put up on the wall by the loggia.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 183

A beautiful stone in the classical style was a memorial to Mrs. Jung; this, he [Jung] said, was to be put up on the wall by the loggia. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 183

[19]

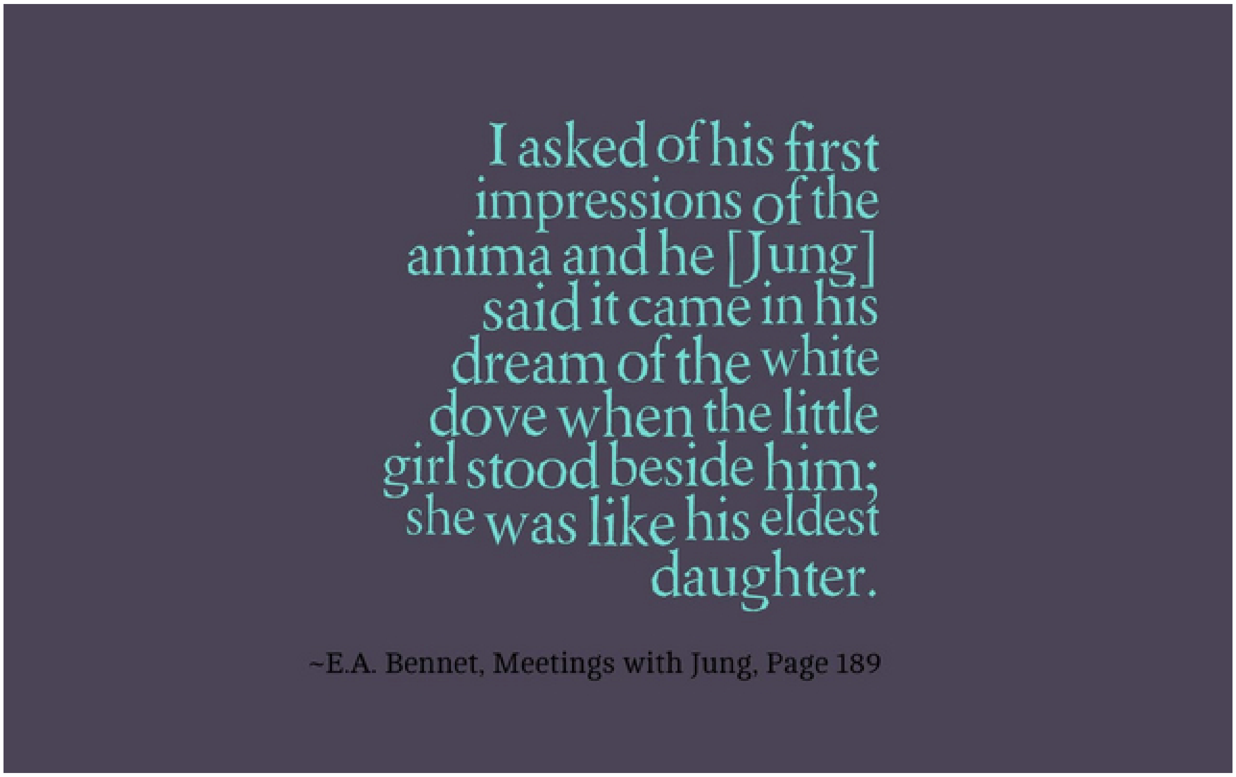


But the detective stories were a rest, chiefly because they had no bearing on his professional work; and he [Jung] could sleep after reading them because they were not true.

-E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 187

But the detective stories were a rest, chiefly because they had no bearing on his professional work; and he [Jung] could sleep after reading them because they were not true. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 187

[20]

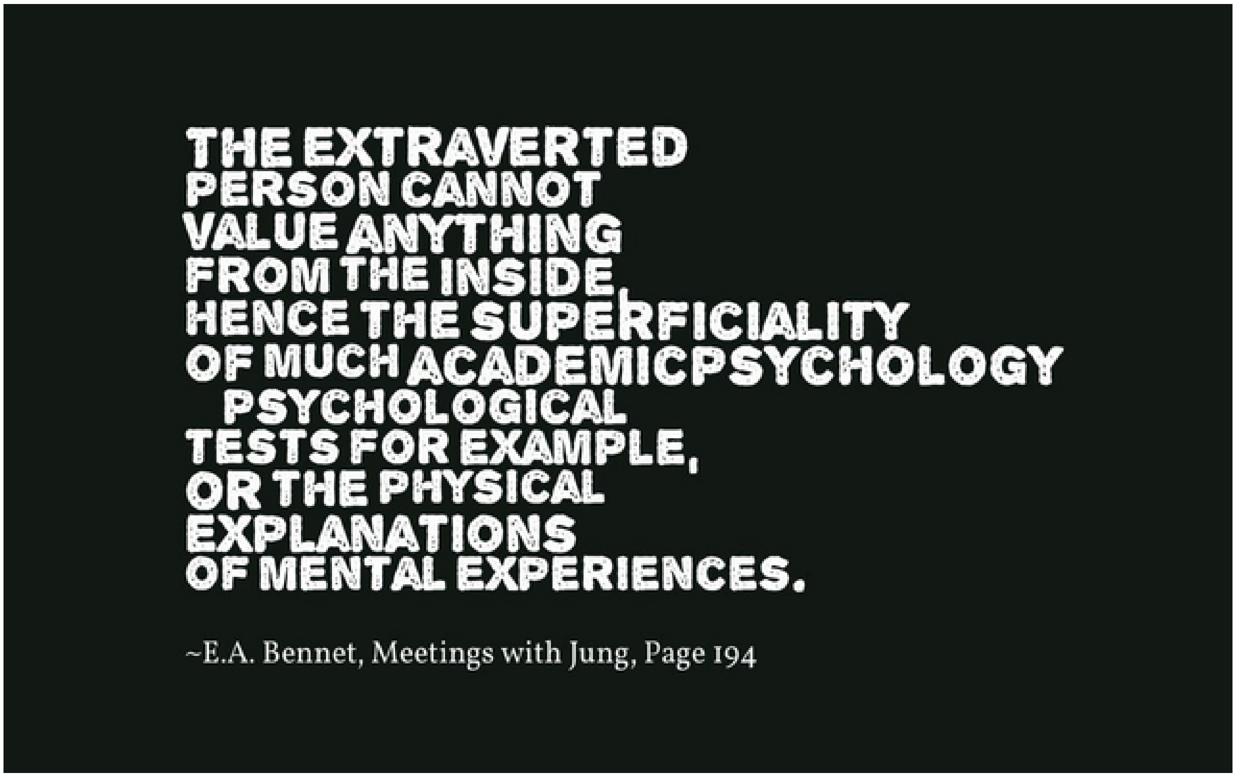


I asked of his first impressions of the anima and he [Jung] said it came in his dream of the white dove when the little girl stood beside him; she was like his eldest daughter.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 189

I asked of his first impressions of the anima and he [Jung] said it came in his dream of the white dove when the little girl stood beside him; she was like his eldest daughter. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 189

[21]



THE EXTRAVERTED PERSON CANNOT VALUE ANYTHING FROM THE INSIDE HENCE THE SUPERFICIALITY OF MUCH ACADEMICPSYCHOLOGY PSYCHOLOGICAL TESTS FOR EXAMPLE, OR THE PHYSICAL EXPLANATIONS OF MENTAL EXPERIENCES.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 194

The extraverted person cannot value anything from the inside, hence the superficiality of much academic psychology – psychological tests for example, or the physical explanations of mental experiences. Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 194

[22]

There is no understanding of the fact that the mind itself has its causality;
something from the inner life
exerts its influence
-ideas just arrive in the mind, or symptoms appear.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 195

There is no understanding of the fact that the mind itself has its causality; something from the inner life exerts its influence – ideas just arrive in the mind, or symptoms appear. Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 195

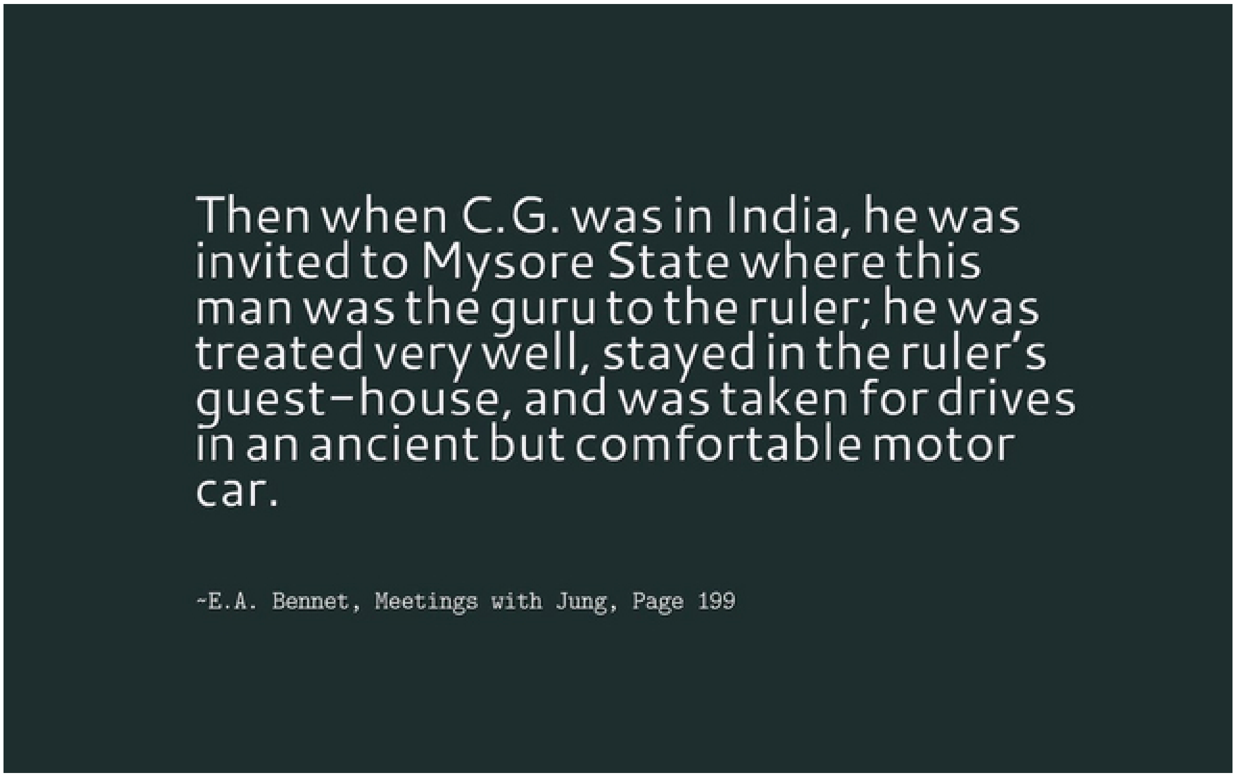
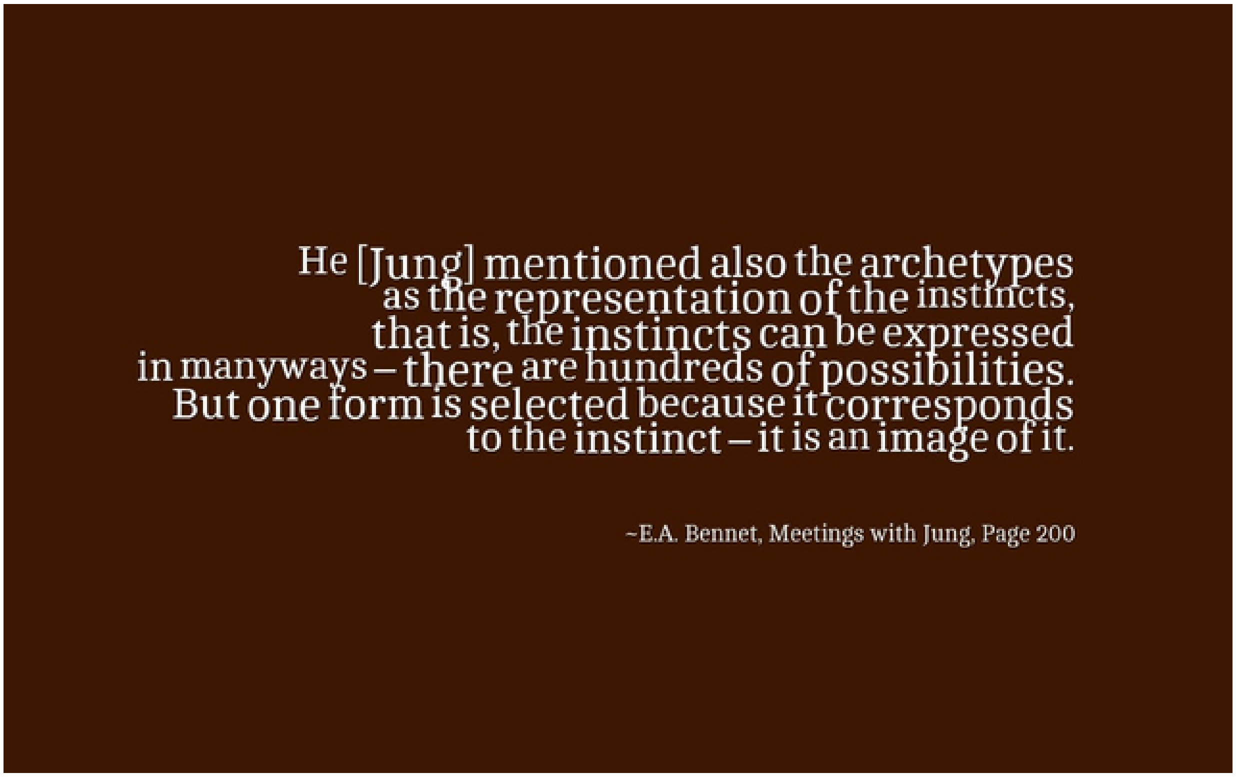
[23]



Then when C.G. was in India, he was invited to Mysore State where this man was the guru to the ruler; he was treated very well, stayed in the ruler’s guest-house, and was taken for drives in an ancient but comfortable motor car.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 199

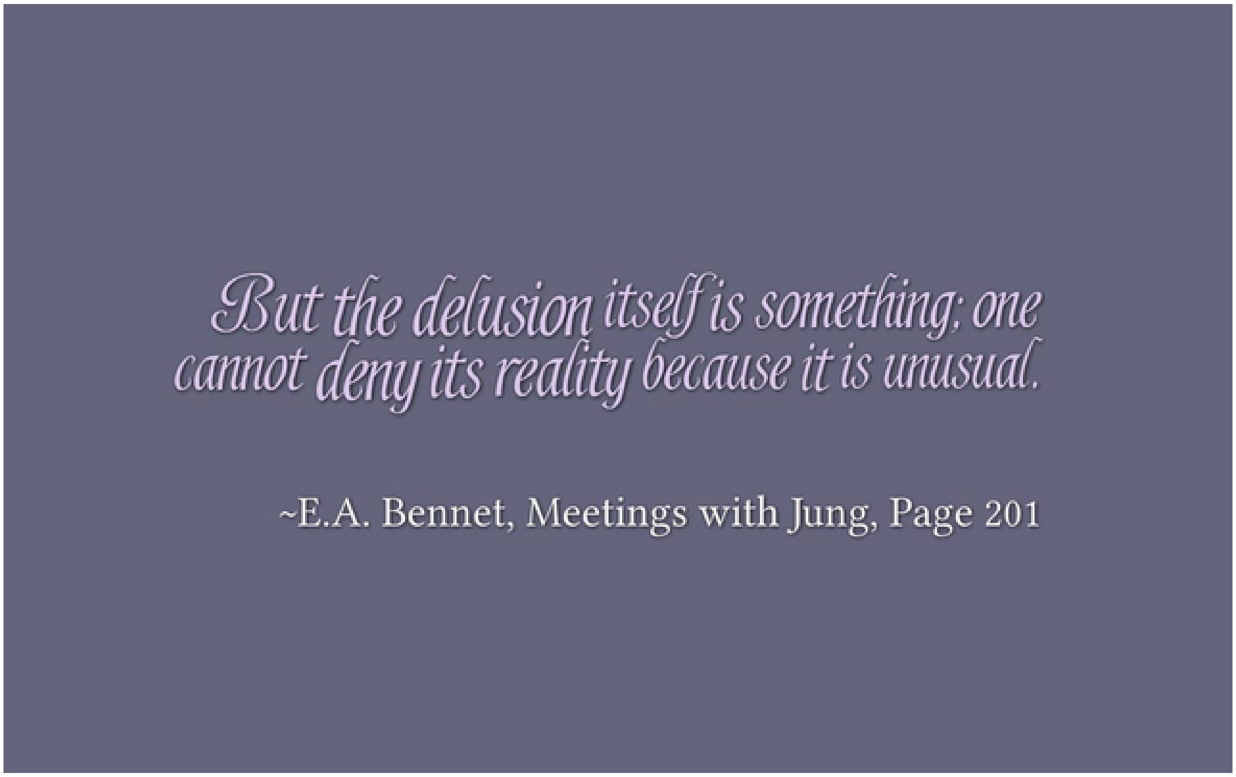
Then when C.G. was in India, he was invited to Mysore State where this man was the guru to the ruler; he was treated very well, stayed in the ruler’s guest-house, and was taken for drives in an ancient but comfortable motor car. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 199



He [Jung] mentioned also the archetypes as the representation of the instincts, that is, the instincts can be expressed in many ways – there are hundreds of possibilities. But one form is selected because it corresponds to the instinct – it is an image of it.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 200

He [Jung] mentioned also the archetypes as the representation of the instincts, that is, the instincts can be expressed in many ways – there are hundreds of possibilities. But one form is selected because it corresponds to the instinct – it is an image of it. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 200.

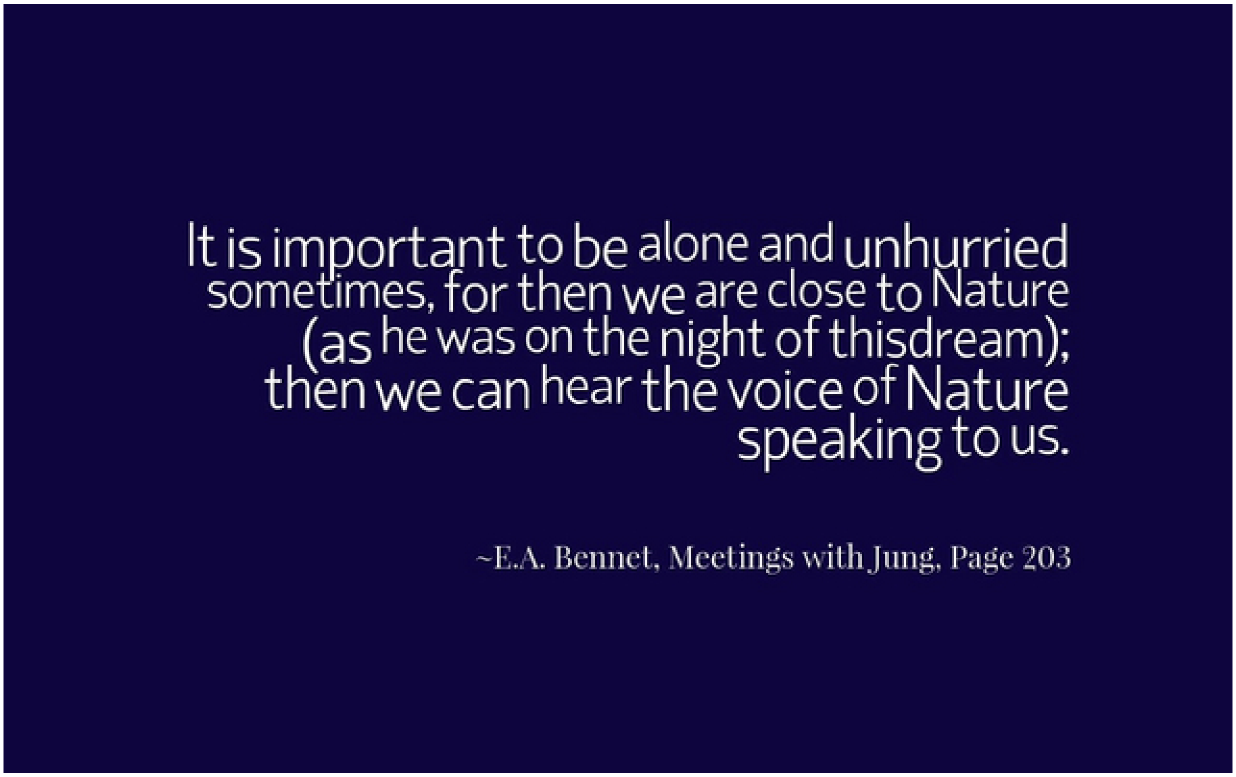


But the delusion itself is something; one cannot deny its reality because it is unusual.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 201

But the delusion itself is something; one cannot deny its reality because it is unusual. Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 201

[26]



It is important to be alone and unhurried sometimes, for then we are close to Nature (as he was on the night of thisdream); then we can hear the voice of Nature speaking to us.

~E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 203

It is important to be alone and unhurried sometimes, for then we are close to Nature (as he was on the night of this dream); then we can hear the voice of Nature speaking to us. Carl Jung, Meetings with Jung, Page 203

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/21020-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/48c3f-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/11e70-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/488ba-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/3264b-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/d3409-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/56ec1-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/7b513-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/d015d-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/c2843-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/cec26-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/3fe66-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/763e7-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/abd9b-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/146b2-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/24d7a-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/40613-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/cc698-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/401d0-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/eddee-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/f9b56-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/90de2-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/29f37-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/a7d8a-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/6652a-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/6f3c5-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung and The Work of Redemption, Why the Historicity of Christ is important. (2019-12-20 04:32)

[1]

[2]Psychology and Alchemy (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.12)

Now, all these myth-pictures represent a drama of the human psyche on the further side of consciousness, showing "man as both the one to be redeemed and the redeemer."

The first formulation is Christian, the second alchemical.

In the first case man attributes the need of redemption to himself and leaves the work of redemption, the actual "opus," to the autonomous divine figure; in the latter case man takes upon himself the duty of carrying out the redeeming "opus," and attributes the state of suffering and consequent need of redemption to the "anima mundi" imprisoned in matter.

In both cases redemption is a "work."

In Christianity it is the life and death of the God-man which by a unique sacrifice, bring about the reconciliation of man, who craves redemption and is sunk in materiality, with God.

The mystical effect of the God-man's self-sacrifice extends broadly speaking, to all men, though it is efficacious only for those who submit through faith or are chosen by divine grace' but in the Pauline acceptance it acts as an apocatasis and extends also to non-human creation in general, which, in tis imperfect state, awaits redemption like the merely natural man.

By a certain "synchronicity" of events, man, the bearer of soul submerged in the world and the flesh, is potentially related to God at the moment when he, as Mary's Son, enters into her, the "virgo terrae" and representative of matter in its highest form; and, potentially at least, man is fully redeemed at the moment when the eternal Son of God returns again to the Father after undergoing the sacrificial death.

The ideology of this "Mysterium" is anticipated in the myths of Osiris, Orpheus, Dionysus, and Hercules, and in the conception of the Messiah among the Hebrew prophets.

These anticipations go back to the primitive hero myths where the conquest of death is already and important factor.

The projections upon Attis and Mithras, more or less contemporary with the Christian one, are also worth mentioning.

The Christian projection differs from all these manifestations of the mystery of redemption and transformation by reason of the historical and personal figure of Jesus.

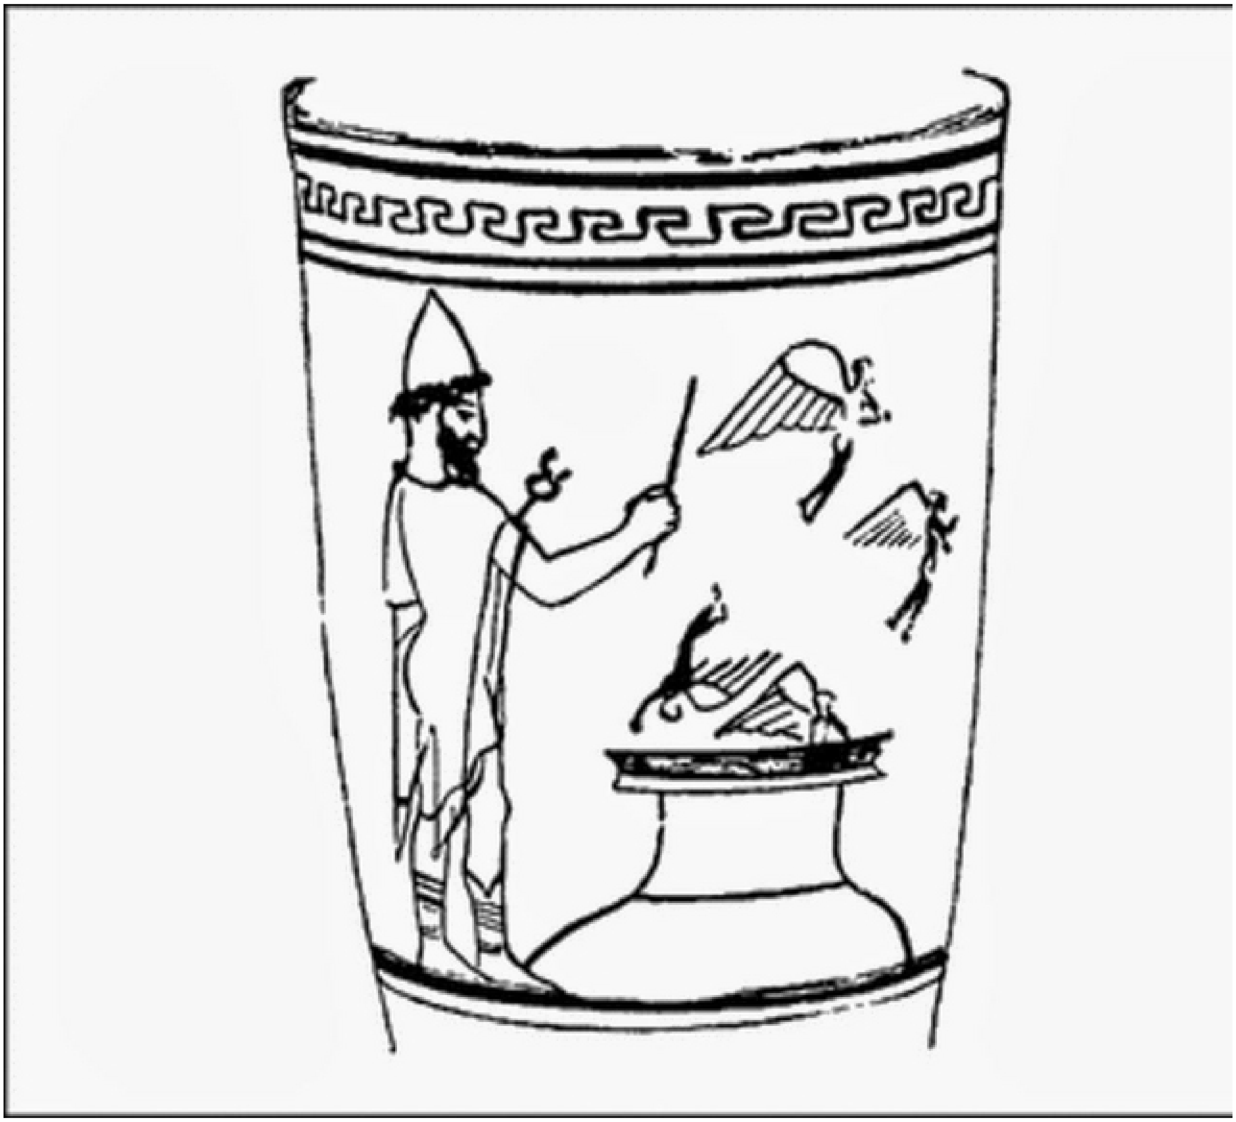
The mythical event incarnates itself in him and so enters the realm of world history as a unique historical and mystical phenomenon. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Pages 306-308, Paragraphs 414-416.

Image: The “Mil of the Host.” The Word, in the form of scrolls, is poured into a mill by the “four evangelists, to reappear as the Infant Christ in the chalice. (Cf. John 1:14: “And the word was mad flesh…”) –High altar of the church at Tribsees, Pomerania (15th cent.) [Psychology and Alchemy, Page 307, Figure 158.]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/addfa-altars.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Alchemy-Collected-Works-Vol-12/dp/0691018316/ref=sr_1_2?crid=CPKMMU2NZSLQ&keywords=carl+jung+psychology+and+alchemy&qid=157683`

[Carl Jung on Imagination, Subtle Body, Opus] (2019-12-20 05:00)

[1]



[2]Psychology and Alchemy (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.12)

Ruland says, “Imagination is the star in man. The celestial or super-celestial body.”

This astounding definition throws a quite special light on the fantasy processes connected with the “opus.”

We have to conceive of these processes not as the immaterial phantoms we readily take fantasy-pictures to be, but as something corporeal, a “subtle body” (fig. 139), semi-spiritual in nature.

In an age when there was as yet no empirical psychology such a concretization was bound to be made, because everything unconscious, once it was activated, was projected into matter that is to say, it approached people from outside.

It was a hybrid phenomenon, As it were, half spiritual, half-physical, a concretization such as we frequently encounter in the psychology of primitives.

The “imagination”, or the act of imagining, was thus a physical activity that could be fitted into the cycle of material changes, that brought these about and was brought about by them in turn.

In this way the alchemist related himself not only to the unconscious but directly to the very substance which he hoped to transform through the power of imagination.

The singular expression “astrum” (star) is a Paracelsan term, which in this context means something like “quintessence.”

Imagination is therefore a concentrated extract of the life forces, both physical and psychic.

So the demand that the artifex must have a sound physical constitution is quite intelligible, since he works with and through his own quintessence and is himself the indispensable condition of his own experiment.

But, just because of this intermingling of the physical and the psychic, it always remains an obscure point whether the ultimate transformations in the alchemical process are to be sought more in the material or in the spiritual realm.

Actually, however, the question is wrongly put: there was no “either-or” for that age, but there did exist an intermediate realm between mind and matter, i.e., a psychic realm of subtle bodies whose characteristic it is to manifest themselves as well as a material form.

This is the only view that makes sense of alchemical ways of thought, which must otherwise appear nonsensical.

Obviously, the existence of this intermediate realm comes to a sudden stop the moment we try to investigate matter in and for itself, apart from all projection; and it remains non-existent so long as we believe we know anything conclusive about matter of the psyche.

But the moment when physics touches on the “untrodden, untreadible regions,” and when psychology has at the same time to admit that there are other forms of psychic life besides the acquisitions of personal consciousness-in other words, when psychology too touches on an impenetrable darkness-then the intermediate realm of subtle bodies comes to life again, and the physical and the psychic are once more blended in an indissoluble unity. We have come very near to this turning-point today. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Paragraph 394.

The concept of “imagination” is perhaps the most important key to understanding the opus. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Paragraph 395.

Image: Hermes conjuring the winged soul out of an urn.-Attic funeral lekythos (Figure 139 in Psychology and Alchemy)

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/40676-heermes.jpeg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Alchemy-Collected-Works-Vol-12/dp/0691018316/ref=sr_1_1?crid=24OGFHIHJORPG&keywords=jung+psychology+and+alchemy&qid=1576854833`

I am astonished, disappointed, pleased with myself. ~Carl Jung (2019-12-20 05:04)

[1]

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflection

"I am astonished, disappointed, pleased with myself. I am distressed, depressed, and rapturous. I am all these things at once, and cannot add up the sum.

I am incapable of determining ultimate worth or worthlessness; I have no judgment about myself and my life. There is nothing I am quite sure about.

I have no definite convictions - not about anything, really. I know only that I was born and exist, and it seems to me that I have been carried along.

I exist on the foundation or something I do not know.

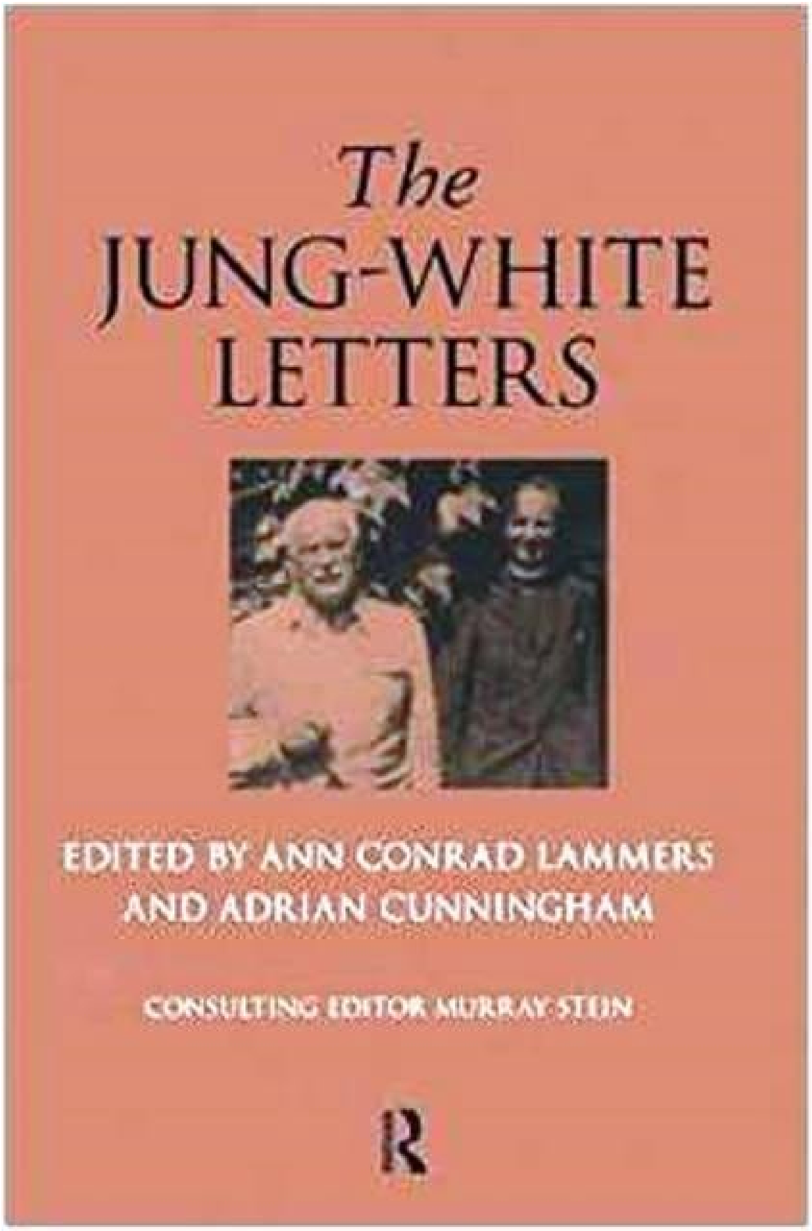
In spite of all uncertainties, I feel a solidity underlying all existence and a continuity in my mode of being. " — Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/6db90-life.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Ukemi-Audiobooks-Memories-Dreams-Reflections/dp/B01BW37JXE/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3IIH7UHYX059K&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=15`

Carl Jung " I hope you will reciprocate by calling me C.G. which is the current designation of my unworthy "paucity." (2019-12-20 05:23)

[1]



The JUNG-WHITE LETTERS
EDITED BY ANN CONRAD LAMMERS AND ADRIAN CUNNINGHAM
CONSULTING EDITOR MURRAY STEIN
R

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Father Victor White

Locarno, until 1oth of April

My dear Victor, 27 March 1947

As you see I avail myself of your kind permission to call you by your first name.

I hope you will reciprocate by calling me C.G. which is the current designation of my unworthy "paucity."

Well-I have to apologize for not having answered your interesting letters.

The reason is: I have been completely swamped by an article which I had to elaborate for a new edition.

It is that risky thing about the Holy Trinity.

My efficiency is still very restricted and thus I have to drop everything else when I have to do something that really demands attention.

I have finished the paper now.

It is going to appear in a book called Symbolik des Geistes.

The book will include Dr. Scharf's essay on Satan and two other papers of mine, "Psychologie des Geistes" and "Der Geist Mercurius."

In the meantime I have read your paper about Revelation with the greatest interest.

I must say it gave me a new light on St. Thomas.

His views are really astonishing.

It looks now very much more possible that he is the author of the Aurora Consurgens.

I thank you very much that you let me have your paper.

With your kind permission, I should like to quote something of it in my paper on the Trinity.

I think his angels and demons are simply wonderful.

X. is indeed on the right track in suspecting subatomic physics to be in secret league with psychology.

I am hovering over that point too and keep my mind busy with digesting physical facts and theories.

As soon as I get back to Zurich, I will read your paper once more, looking up the thing I want to quote.

It is of course that excellent point that revelation has more to do with good imagination than with good morals.

I should even say that there is only a good prophet when the devil has caught hold of one of his legs.

I beg your pardon!

I suppose you had to be mighty tactful in your paper; there are some pretty vertiginous corners.

That is of course because St. Thomas is really a great man quite apart from his saintliness.

I am looking forward to the summer.

The weather here is execrable.

For 10 days it is just pouring and no sunshine whatever.

It even has snowed down to the 900 m. level.

In Zurich the weather is much better.

It has helped my concentration on my work.

I shall not lecture in Ascona.

Working out my last lecture has given me no end of trouble.

It has gone into print.

But no proof sheets yet.

I have not seen 0. yet, since I avoid patients.

Hoping to see you in Ascona !

Yours cordially,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 452-453.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/5862d-white.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=DJUJESX3TRQK&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576874619&sprefix=jung+lett`

Carl Jung: "Complete liberation means death." (2019-12-20 06:11)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To V. Subrahamanya Iyer

Dear Sir, 29 August 1938

Thank you for your kind letter which has brought back to me all the happy and beautiful memories of my short sojourn in Mysore, the beautiful city with the nocturnal lights on Chamundi hill.

As to your philosophical questions I generally quite agree with you.

It is self-evident that there can be no happiness unless there is suffering.

The German philosopher Schopenhauer said that happiness is merely the end of suffering.

This is a somewhat negative definition.

Inasmuch as suffering is a very positive condition happiness must be an equally positive one too.

But unfortunately the fact is that the two cannot exist without each other.

So much so that happiness easily tums into suffering even as the most intense suffering can produce a sort of superhuman happiness.

They are a pair of opposites that are indispensable to life.

The phenomenon of life consists of a great many pairs of opposites, there ts no energy without opposites.

But inasmuch as you share in the opposites you are in conflict or at least in a continuous up and down of pain and pleasure.

It is certainly desirable to liberate oneself from the operation of opposites but one can only do it to a certain extent, because no sooner do you get out of the conflict than you get out of life altogether.

So that liberation can be only a very partial one.

It can be the construction of a consciousness just beyond the opposites.

Your head may be liberated, your feet remain entangled.

Complete liberation means death.

What I call "consciousness" would coincide with what you call "mind."

It is quite evident that the ego-complex is at the root of all complexes, since without an ego complexes couldn't be experienced at all.

If you eradicate the ego completely, there is nobody left that would consciously experience.

Too much ego always leads to a state of conflict, therefore it ought to be abolished.

But it is the same thing as with the pairs of opposites: if you abolish the ego altogether, then you create unconsciousness.

One assumes however that there is a consciousness without ego, a sort of consciousness of the atman.

I'm afraid this supreme consciousness is at least not one we could possess.

Inasmuch as it exists, we do not exist.

On this occasion I want to thank you once more for the cordial welcome you have given us in Mysore.

Hoping you are always in good health, I remain,

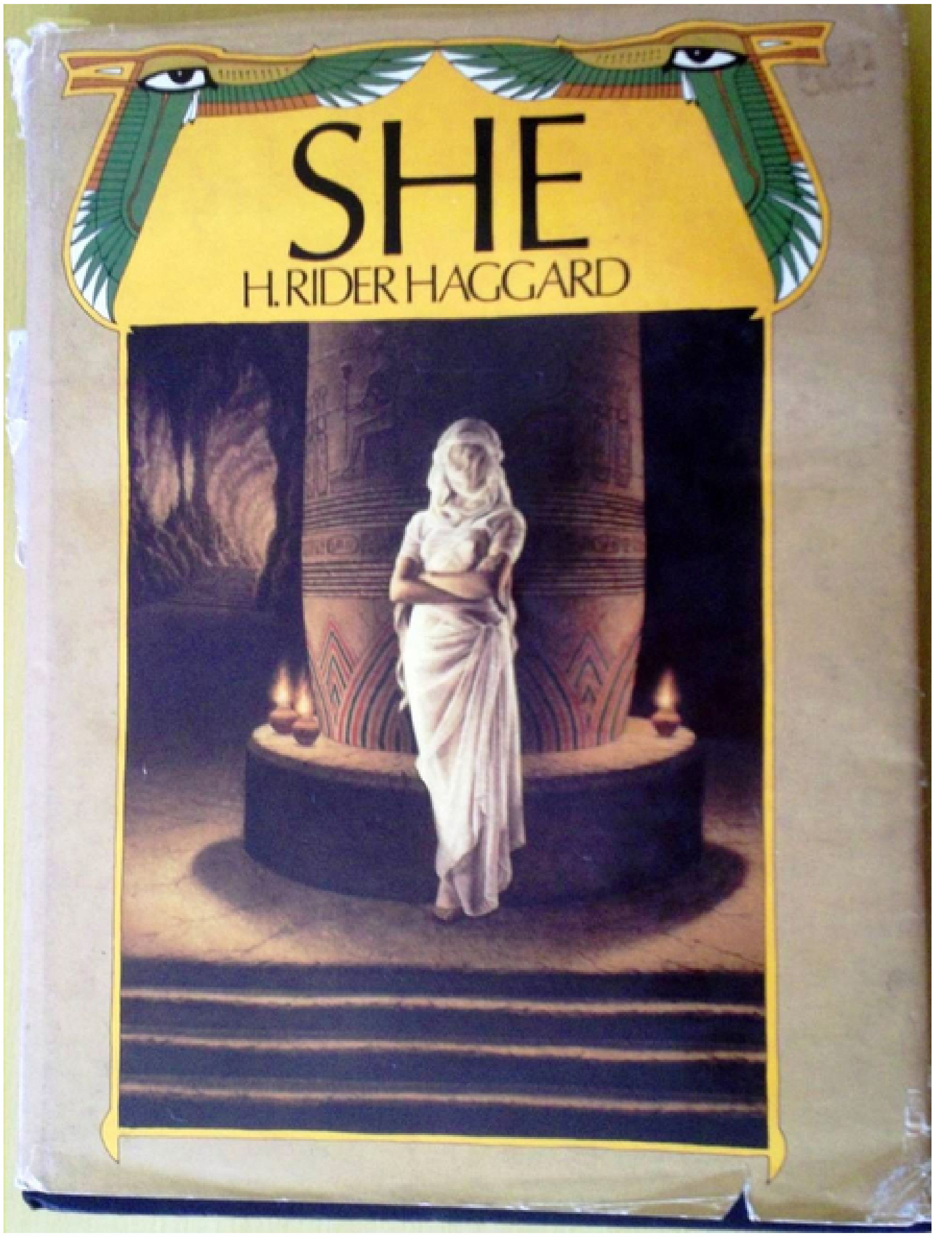
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 247-248.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/4caaf-death.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=DJUJESX3TRQK&keywords=`

jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576874619&sprefix=jung+lett

Carl Jung on "She." (2019-12-20 06:25)



[2]https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Founda tion/dp/0691152055/ref=sr _1 _1?crid=1FFYL5O72AD6P &keywords=jung+1925+seminar &qid=1576874844 &sprefix=jung+19 %2Caps %2C161 &sr=8-1

“She”

As we assume that behind our image of the external world there is an absolute entity, so necessarily we must assume that behind the perceiving subject there is an entity; and when we start our consideration from that end, we must

At the preceding meeting of the class, Mr. Radin presented the story of She, together with a sketch of the characters involved.

The analysis was postponed till the next meeting, which is recorded here.

Dr. Harding, who gave the analysis, said the committee had decided to treat the book as presenting the material of an anamnesis, and then to take Holly as the conscious side of Haggard, and to analyze Holly through the material given in the story.

A very thorough analysis was given, of which the following is only an outline summary.

Holly has come to the time of life when he should have settled down to academic life; that is, he is about to give himself up to the absolute one-sidedness of an intellectual.

Just then comes the call from the unconscious.

All the other sides of life that he has discarded mobilize themselves for a last effort to get his attention.

The knock at the door, this stirring of the unconscious, brought an enigmatic thing that could not be touched then, and also a live thing, Leo, who forced him into a new orientation to life.

The enigmatic thing lies dormant for twenty years, and then is taken up again.

The casket is opened.

He consents to consider his unconscious contents, and he goes through them layer by layer, till he comes to the sherd and the scarab.

The casket reveals Holly’s problem as it has been relived throughout the ages, that is, conventional morality over against the thing that means life.

Holly and Leo, the youthful side of Holly, struggling now to come into being, set out for the land of Kor—that is, Holly will go deeper and deeper into the unconscious until he finds the anima figure, “She,” who rules over all the things he has denied admittance into his mind.

When “She” is found, and finally loved by Holly, he is for a moment on the verge of madness.

He speculates on the possibility of imposing his unconscious symbol upon the external world.

That is, can “She” be taken to England?

The innumerable adventures in the land of Kor, all of them important mileposts on the way of Holly’s psychological development, culminate in the great test of burning in the pillar of flame.

They, Holly and Leo, wisely decide not to risk the test.

Holly is not ready for the fundamental change of attitude demanded of him.

But he can never again be the commonplace person he started out as; something of the inner meaning of life has been found by him.

Dr. Jung: I have to thank the committee and Dr. Harding for their presentation of She.

They have brought out some brilliant ideas, and I have enjoyed their report very much.

Now I would like to make a few criticisms.

Why did you think of Holly as the hero?

At any rate, some other views of this point are possible.

I think that the author certainly intended Leo as the hero.

This fact is brought out with perfect definiteness in the second volume, where Leo, much developed as a personality, is the pivotal character.

But of course it is a problem as to whether the author succeeds in his intention in this volume we are discussing, or whether it simply is his viewpoint, and the fact that Dr. Harding has found Holly to be the hero suggests that Haggard has not succeeded.

Dr. Harding: Isn't the point whether Leo is the hero of the story or psychologically the hero?

Dr. Jung: Of course the whole thing is a fantasy of Haggard's, and inasmuch as Haggard has more of himself in Holly probably than in Leo, one might say that Holly is the hero, but nonetheless he is trying to make Leo the hero of the story.

Because Haggard is too much Holly in reality, Leo remains a shadowy, relatively undeveloped figure; he has not lived Leo, in other words.

Unfortunately the Tauchnitz edition of She does not contain a poem which appears in the English edition, and which really gives a clue to Haggard's relationship to the story.

In this poem dedicated to "She," he says that it is not in the land of Kor and its caves, nor in any mysterious land, but in the heart that the grave of the lost love is to be found, and that there dwells "She."

This shows what he intended She to be. It is a love story, his own love story let us say, but it is not given from the conscious side, but instead from the unconscious side, as a repercussion from the conscious experience, whatever it was.

This, of course, is the habit of the introverted writer.

So She is valuable to us as bringing out these unconscious reactions.

The author has evidently had a peculiar love affair which he never quite settled to his satisfaction.

It left him with the problem of She, and the same problem follows him through most of his books.

Perhaps it happened to him in Africa.

We could treat Holly as one unconscious figure and Leo as another, then different aspects of Haggard's character.

When you took Holly as the hero, you were not so far from one sense of the book, as we said; since, as we noted, Haggard has identified with Holly.

He, like Holly, has probably not seen the importance of his love affair, and when that happens, when a person has an emotional experience and refuses to take it seriously enough, it means a piling up of material in the unconscious.

This has been the case with Haggard evidently.

Now there are a few details I would like to discuss.

Have you any idea why this ancient material comes up?

Miss Corrie: It is out of the collective unconscious.

Dr. Jung: Yes, but why does it come up?

Miss Corrie: It always does with introverts sooner or later.

Dr. Jung: No, not necessarily.

Mr. Schmitz: Could not She be taken as a revolt on the part of Haggard to the whole Victorian age, and especially to the Victorian woman?

Rider Haggard traveled a great deal in foreign countries and was especially well fitted to overthrow the ridiculous idea of a woman that had grown up in England, and to develop the fact that every woman should have some of "She" in her.

Dr. Jung: Part of what you say brings us to the point.

That is, if Rider Haggard had not traveled in primitive countries, the collective unconscious would not have been activated in the peculiar way it was.

It would not have been so dynamic in its reaction.

Of course, there is another way in which the collective unconscious can be strongly stimulated.

A man has had a psychosis, there has been formed a hole in his unconscious so to speak, and there is always a chance of the collective breaking through.

But that was not the case with Haggard, his unconscious was animated by contact with the primitive life about him.

It is very interesting indeed to observe the effect of life in primitive countries upon civilized men coming to them.

It is said of many of the officials that return to England from India that they come home with burned brains.

But of course it has nothing to do with the climate.

Their vitality has simply been sucked away in that alien atmosphere.

These men try to keep up the standards to which they have been trained, in a country where everything is set in the opposite direction, and the strain breaks them.

I have treated several cases of men returning from the colonies after long association with native women.

They cannot love European women after this experience.

They come with all sorts of symptoms, of indigestion, etc., but in reality they have been dissociated by the native women.

A primitive would say they have lost a soul.

There is a very good story illustrating this in an otherwise very poor book by Algernon Blackwood.

The book is called Incredible Adventures,10 and the story is "Descent into Egypt."

The man simply fades out, he is gone as a European.

This then is the reason for the tremendous welling up of the collective unconscious in Rider Haggard.

The fact that it comes about through his contact with the primitive complicates the love problem.

But how could his love problem be complicated by the fact of his life in Africa?

Mr. Schmitz: Perhaps "She" is such a complete opposite to the women of Dickens, let us say, that she can be taken as a wish-fulfillment.

Of course he would not want such a woman as "She," and yet he would understand that in part "She" is necessary; that is, that a woman must have a primitive side in order to be complete, just as in the case of a man.

Dr. Jung: But if he had such an idea of what a woman ought to be, it should have helped him in his problem.

Mr. Schmitz: He was not clear about it, so the unconscious produced this desire.

Dr. Jung: It is out of this groping about in his unconscious that She developed.

But why should a man in Africa be less able to handle a love problem?

Mr. Robertson: Isn't it because the African situation makes it hard for him to handle his feelings in the old way?

Dr. Jung: Yes, if you don't look at it in too special a way, it could be put in those terms.

That is, the man's attitude toward the love problem changes, and it becomes really a terrible problem for him.

Mr. Bacon: Does not the problem consist in his projecting a primitive anima on a non-primitive woman?

Dr. Jung: Yes, that is exactly it, and when that happens, the non-primitive woman becomes perfectly hysterical under it.

The whole problem of the projection of the anima is a most difficult subject.

If a man cannot project his anima, then he is cut off from women. It is true he may make a thoroughly respectable marriage, but the spark of fire is not there, he does not get complete reality into his life.

Coming back now to the story: how do you understand the father of Leo?

Dr. Harding: Except as one of the former heroes in the legend, we did not attempt to interpret him.

Dr. Jung: He is certainly not a strong character, in fact he is just fading out when the story begins.

But that is important in itself, for psychologically we know the father must fade when the hero comes, otherwise the development of the hero is seriously hindered.

I mention this because it is of great importance in the Egyptian religion around which this fantasy of Haggard's plays.

Thus Osiris fades into a ghost who rules over the dead, and his son Horus becomes the rising sun.

It is an eternal theme.

Mr. Schmitz: An excellent example of the need of the son for having the father out of his way before he can come into his own is seen in the case of Frederick the Great, who was markedly effeminate up to the very day of his father's death.

Kubin, too, never wrote at all until after his father died.

Dr. Jung: It is truly a critical moment in a man's life.

Often instead of being released for life by the death of the father, the son becomes neurotic.

Mythology takes note of the fact that it is so critical a moment; in fact, all these great moments of life have been embodied in mythology, because the latter sets forth the average solution found by humanity in its problems.

I think you have interpreted the chest quite properly.

The fact that there is a chest within a chest suggests a process of involution.

When it comes to the love of Kallicrates, we find the whole story anticipated in remotest times.

Why is that so?

Dr. Bertine: It is because it is not an individual story but repeats an archetypal pattern.

Dr. Jung: Quite so. It is an eternal truth.

It says that man is to play this role over and over again.

This is another cause for the coming up of the unconscious material.

But which archetype is it that is reawakened?

It is the myth of Osiris, Isis, and Nephthys.

The myth says that Osiris was in the womb of his mother Nut together with Isis the queen of the day and Nephthys the queen of night, and while in the womb he had sexual intercourse with his two sisters.

Here is an ever-recurring motive, the conflict between the two for the love of the hero.

Therefore we have the conflict between "She" and Amenartis.

In the Return of She the conflict comes up again, this time between "She" and the Tartar queen who wants to marry Leo.

Again it is the conflict between day and night, only this time "She" impersonates Isis, and the other is Nephthys.

This is the archetype aroused in Haggard by Africa.

Haggard was a thoroughly "respectable" man and no doubt his marriage a thoroughly conventional one, but one can read between the lines of She that he loved another woman in all probability.

Who is Leo in the author?

Holly is relatively an old man, he has come into the age of wisdom where he is really too old to take on the risks the problem involves.

Therefore he creates the youthful figure of Leo.

The latter is hardly more than a youthful fool, but he is altogether a gentleman.

Through his youth he compensates the old Holly and allows the latter to play safe.

It is always Leo that takes the risks even to the point of being almost hot-potted.

Do you know what is the significance of hot-potting?

Mr. Schmitz: I should think it would mean the heat of the passions taking the head.

Dr. Jung: And what does that mean? Insanity—all over the place, as the saying is.

I have scarcely seen anyone who did not have that reaction to the collective unconscious.

At first the past looks dead, but as we get closer it gets us.

Take for example an old house.

One is at first so delighted at its antiquity, and then little by little an atmosphere of mystery gathers about it, and then before we know it, we have “ghosts” on our hands.

Something about the house has activated the unconscious in us.

Just give a little libido to it and the collective unconscious takes on an enormous attraction for us.

Just look at the power of history over our minds as another example.

Mr. Radin: Walter Scott is a case of the past swallowing a man’s conscious adaptation, for when he moved into Abbotsford and began to live into history, so to speak, he lost all his money, and all power of directing his life.

Miss Corrie: “She” said her kingdom was of the imagination.

Dr. Jung: Yes, when you give yourself to the imagination, you are in effect lost to this world.

Soon you can no longer explain yourself and then the way to the lunatic asylum is clear.

That is why, when the collective unconscious is near, one must learn some form of expression so as to create a bridge to reality.

Otherwise there is nothing to hold to, and the individual is a prey to the forces released.

When people are lost in the collective and you can providea form in which they can cast their ideas, they can come over into sanity again.

That, then, is the danger in hot-potting.

It is done by the primitive.

The primitive layers are so thick they can easily overcome you.I think your interpretation of Job the correct one—that is, the commonplace, correct man happily gets lost.

This amounts to saying that Holly can never be a don again.

Offsetting the loss of Job is Leo’s receiving the cloak of “She.”

Leo gets into shape, he receives something from “She” but only after Holly gives up his conventional aspect, i.e., Job.

You said nothing about Ustane.

Dr. Harding: That was because there was already too much to be said, and she seemed relatively unimportant.

Dr. Jung: Yes, she was in fact dead.

I think you have got Noot,

Billali, and Holly rightly placed, that is, as figures of the wise old man.

Holly is the most human of them.

Haggard is inclined to identify himself with the wise old man through Holly, but there is more of pedantry than real wisdom in the figure of Holly.

It is rather typical that Holly should have explored the graves while Leo was about to die.

You spoke of a passage about a unicorn and a goose, where was that?

Dr. Harding: No, not a unicorn, but a goose that was shot after the fight between the Lion and the Crocodile.

The goose had a spur on its head and I said it associated to the unicorn.

Dr. Jung: The killing of the goose is surely the same motive as that in the Grail story, as you indicated.

It is an omen or presage of coming events.

The ancients always thought of coming events as having shadows cast in front of them.

Here we have an animal killed, a mythological animal in fact—that is, instinct.

When it is killed, someone will become conscious. In the story of Parcival, the unconscious hero Parcival becomes conscious through the shooting of the swan.

In She the heroes awake to a realization of the extraordinary things ahead of them.

A bird is a mind animal, symbolically, so the unconsciousness is in the mind.

One word more on the theme of immortality.

It is intimately linked up with the anima question.

Through the relation to the anima one obtains the chance of greater consciousness.

It leads to a realization of the self as the totality of the conscious and the unconscious functions.

This realization brings with it a recognition of the inherited plus the new units that go to make up the self.

That is to say, when we once grasp the meaning of the conscious and the unconscious together, we become aware of the ancestral lives that have gone into the making of our own lives.

You will then come into a realization not only of your human pre-stages, but of the animal also.

This feeling of the collective unconscious brings with it a sense of the renewal of life to which there is no end.

It comes down from the dim dawn of the world, and continues.

So when we obtain a complete realization of self, there comes with it the feeling of immortality.

Even in analysis such a moment may come.

It is the goal of individuation to reach the sense of the continuation of one’s life through the ages.

It gives one a feeling of eternity on this earth.

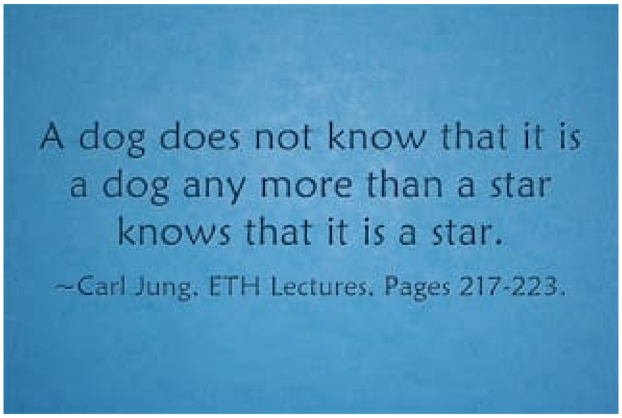
As Dr. Harding pointed out, these men are not ready for the pillar of fire.

The whole phenomenon of “She” has not yet been assimilated, the task is still before them, and they must have a new contact with the unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 146-154

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/806cd-1she.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1FFYL5072AD6P&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=15768748`

Some Carl Jung Quotations XII (2019-12-20 06:40)

[1]



A dog does not know that it is a dog any more than a star knows that it is a star.

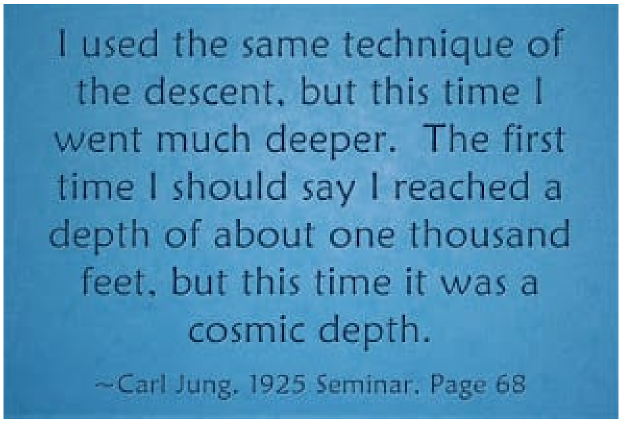
~Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 217-223.

A dog does not know that it is a dog any more than a star knows that it is a star. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 217-223

[2]
We can hardly predict today what the artist is going to bring forth, but always a great religion has gone hand in hand with a great art.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 61

We can hardly predict today what the artist is going to bring forth, but always a great religion has gone hand in hand with a great art. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 61

[3]

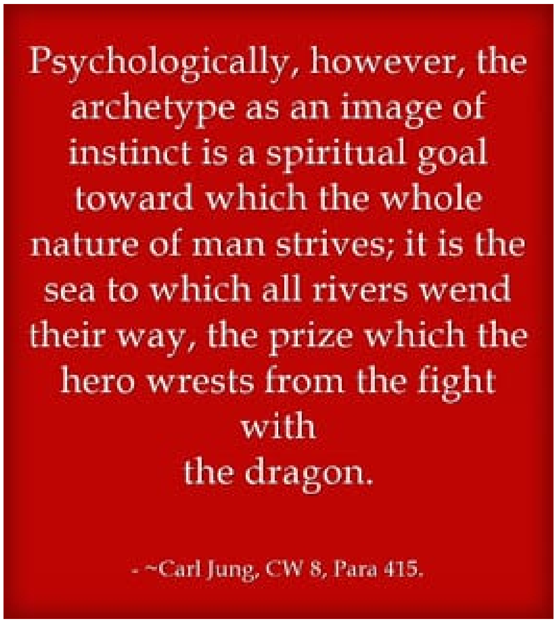


I used the same technique of the descent, but this time I went much deeper. The first time I should say I reached a depth of about one thousand feet, but this time it was a cosmic depth.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 68

I used the same technique [Active Imagination] of the descent, but this time I went much deeper. The first time I should say I reached a depth of about one thousand feet, but this time it was a cosmic depth. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 68

[4]

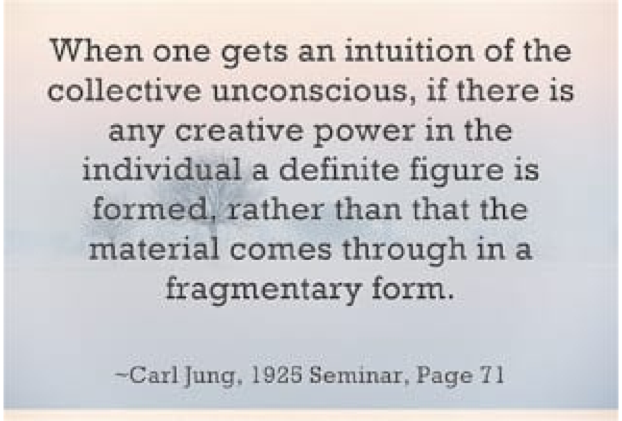


Psychologically, however, the archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon.

- ~Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415.

Psychologically, however, the archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415

[5]



When one gets an intuition of the collective unconscious, if there is any creative power in the individual a definite figure is formed, rather than that the material comes through in a fragmentary form.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 71

When one gets an intuition of the collective unconscious, if there is any creative power in the individual a definite figure is formed, rather than that the material comes through in a fragmentary form. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 71

[6]

When an artist has a figure from the collective unconscious, he at once begins to play with it esthetically, and usually makes some concretization of it as a monument, etc.

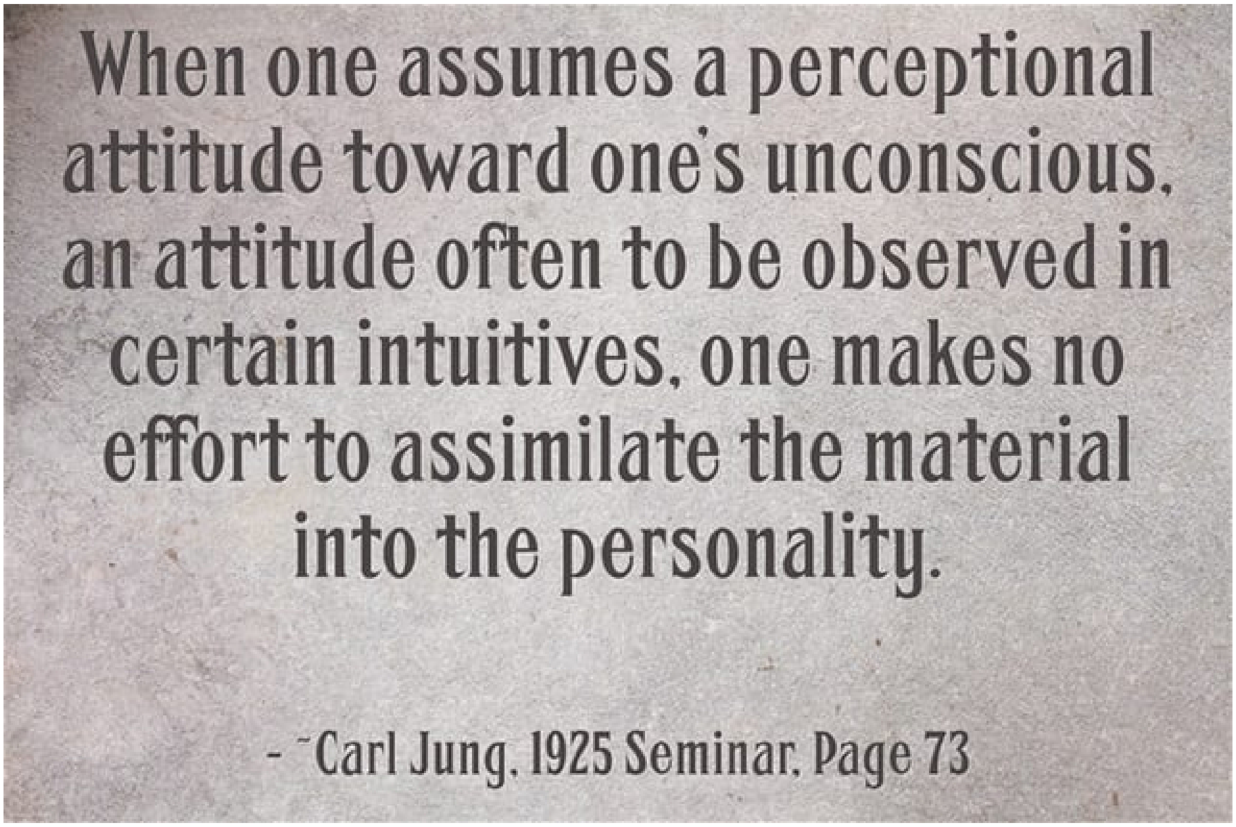
- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 71

When an artist has a figure from the collective unconscious, he at once begins to play with it esthetically, and usually makes some concretization of it as a monument, etc. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 71



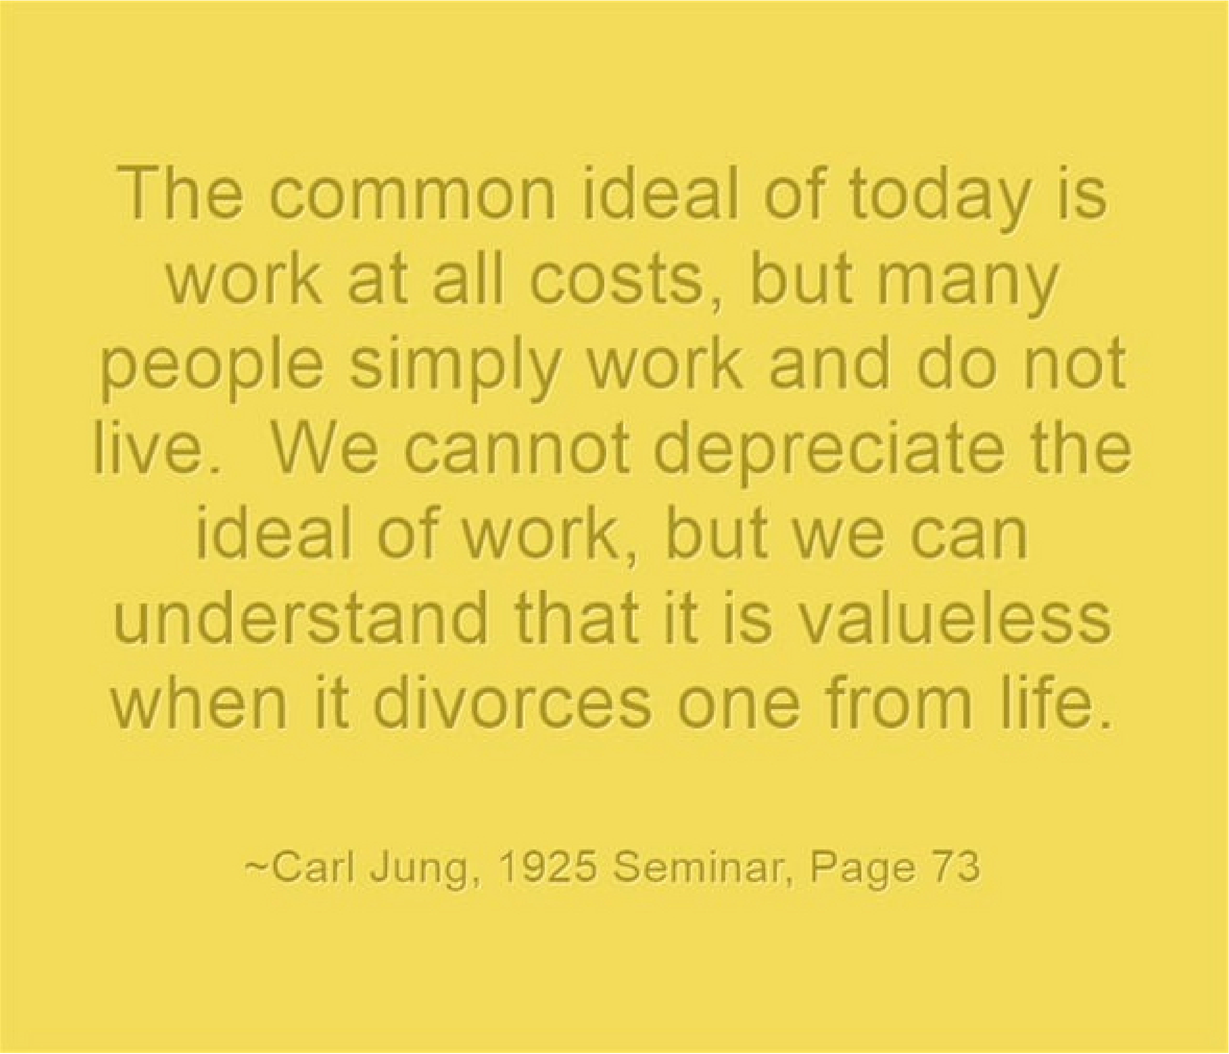
When one assumes a perceptional attitude toward one's unconscious, an attitude often to be observed in certain intuitives, one makes no effort to assimilate the material into the personality.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 73

When one assumes a perceptional attitude toward one's unconscious, an attitude often to be observed in certain intuitives, one makes no effort to assimilate the material into the personality. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 73

Our effort today should be the double one of consciousness plus a full participation in life.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 73

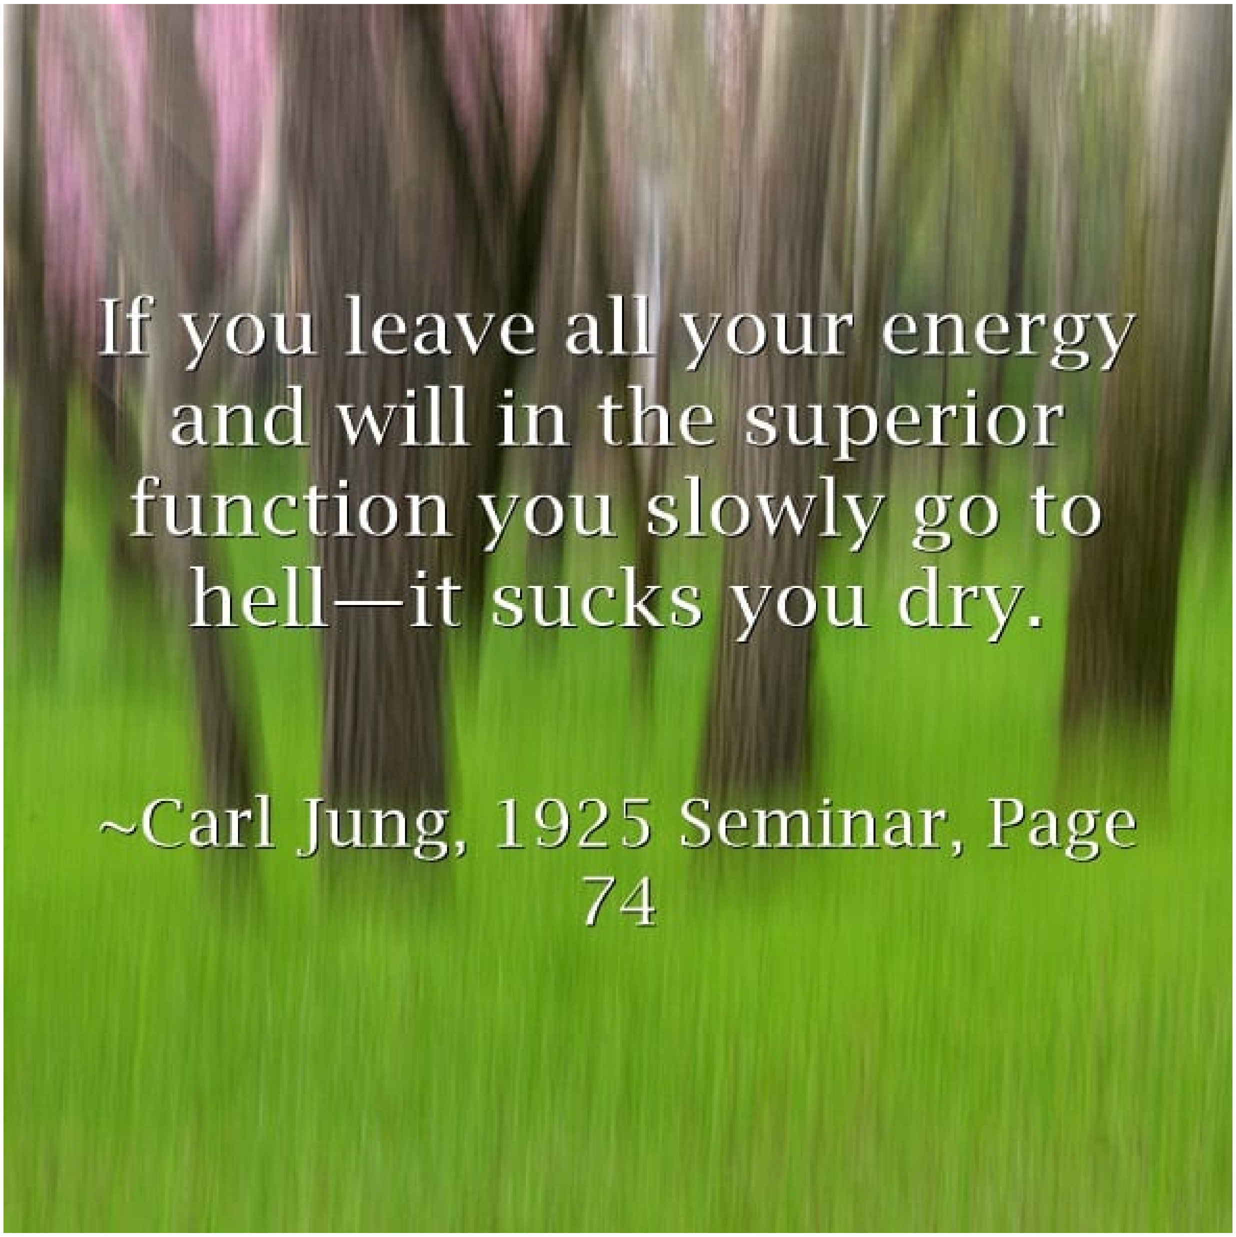
Our effort today should be the double one of consciousness plus a full participation in life. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 73



The common ideal of today is work at all costs, but many people simply work and do not live. We cannot depreciate the ideal of work, but we can understand that it is valueless when it divorces one from life.

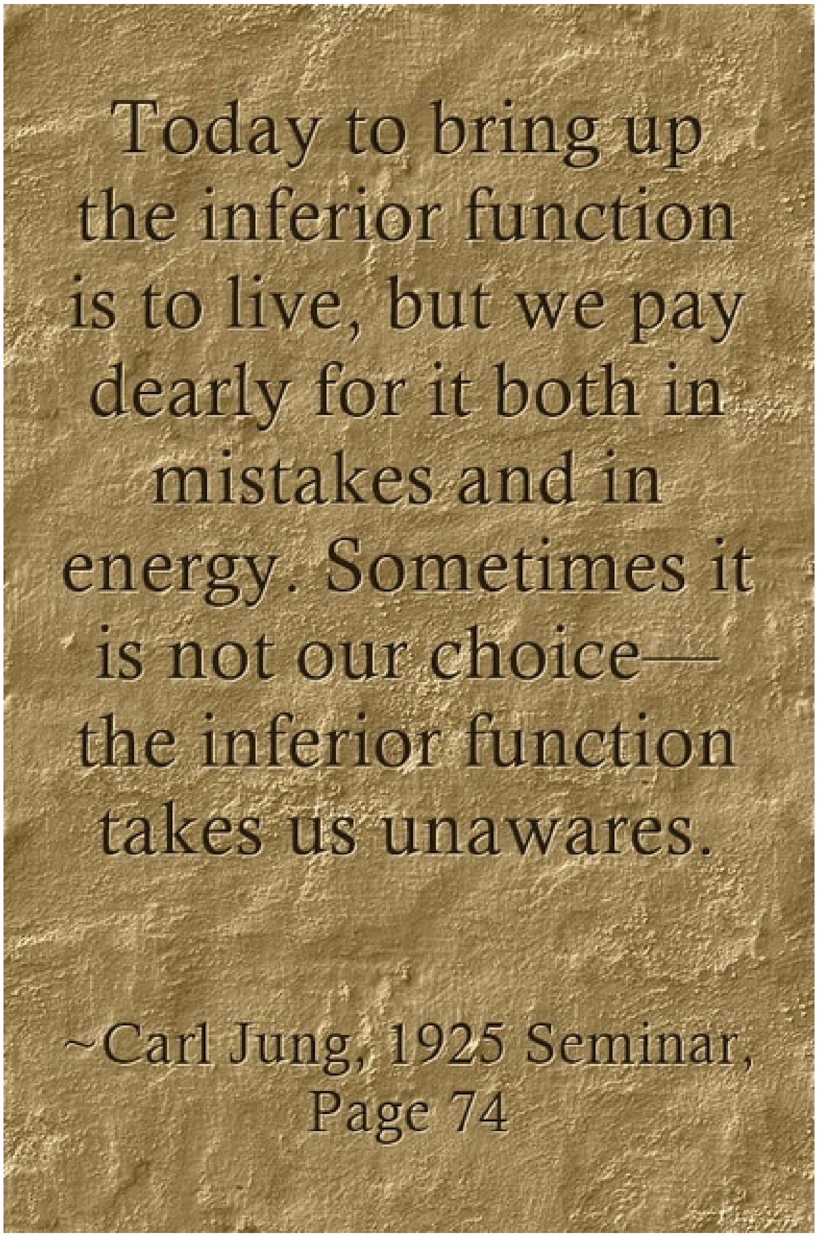
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 73

The common ideal of today is work at all costs, but many people simply work and do not live. We cannot depreciate the ideal of work, but we can understand that it is valueless when it divorces one from life. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 73



If you leave all your energy and will in the superior function you slowly go to hell—it sucks you dry.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74

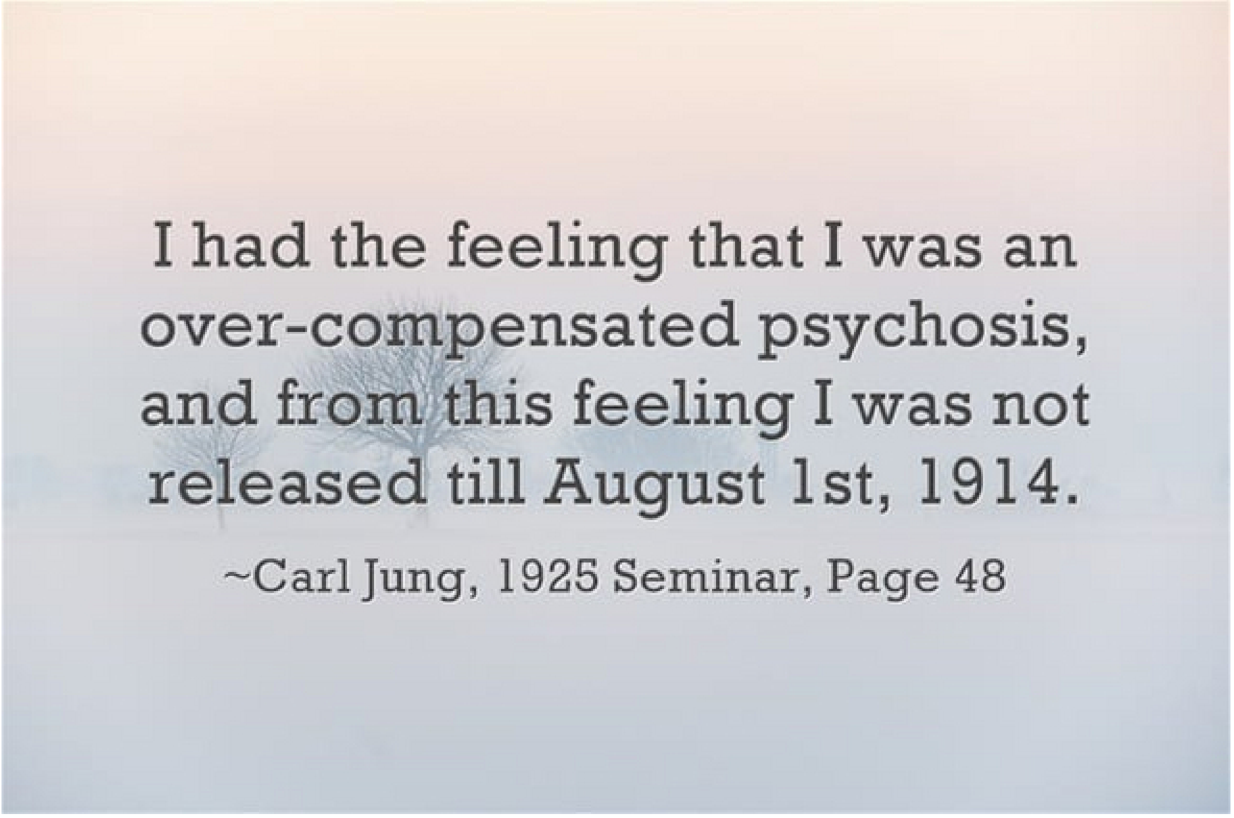
If you leave all your energy and will in the superior function you slowly go to hell—it sucks you dry. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74



Today to bring up the inferior function is to live, but we pay dearly for it both in mistakes and in energy. Sometimes it is not our choice—the inferior function takes us unawares.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74

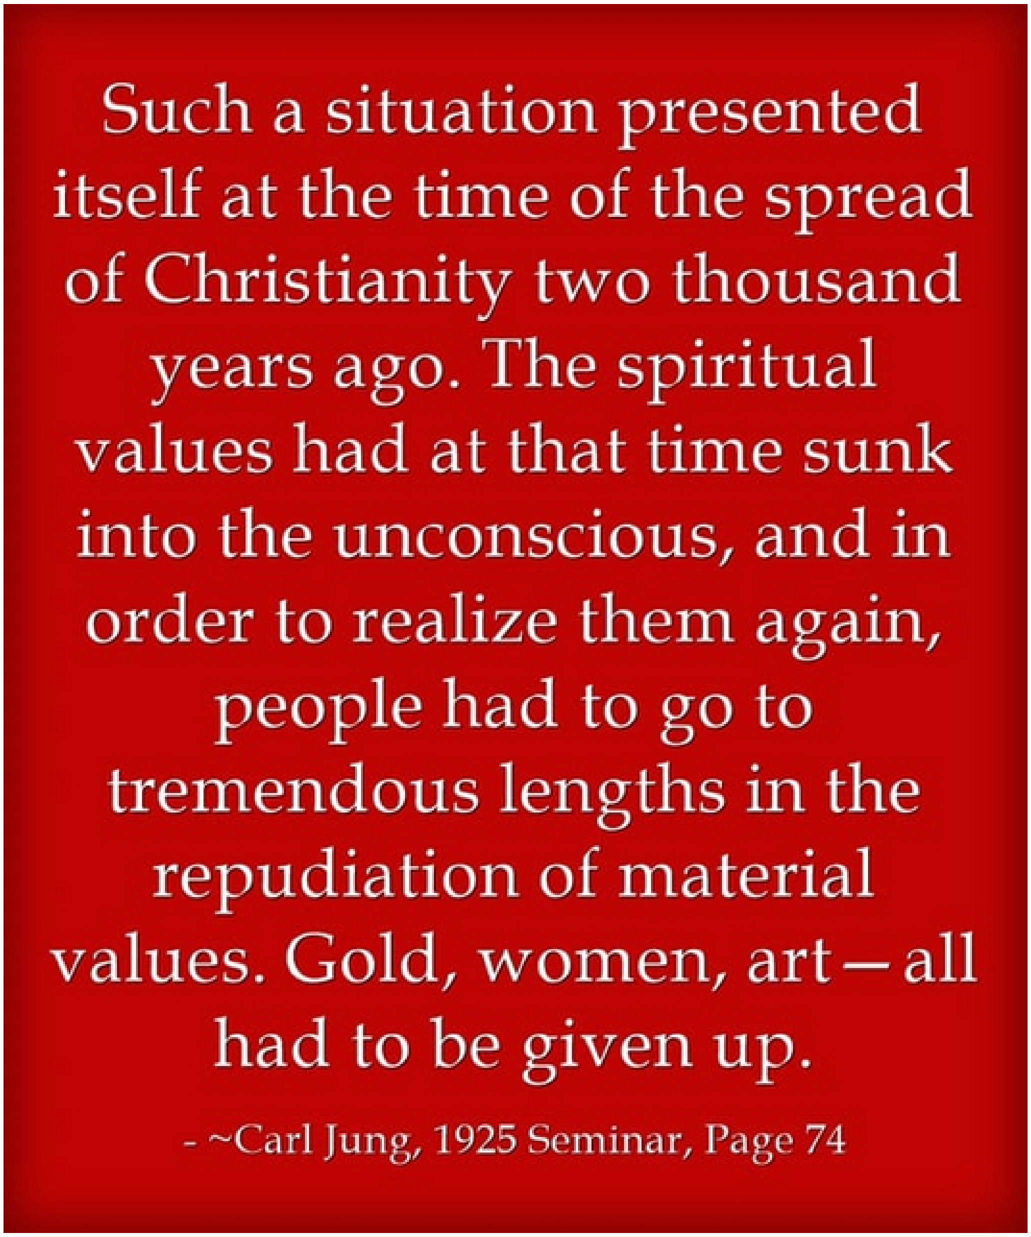
Today to bring up the inferior function is to live, but we pay dearly for it both in mistakes and in energy. Sometimes it is not our choice—the inferior function takes us unawares. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74



I had the feeling that I was an over-compensated psychosis, and from this feeling I was not released till August 1st, 1914.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 48

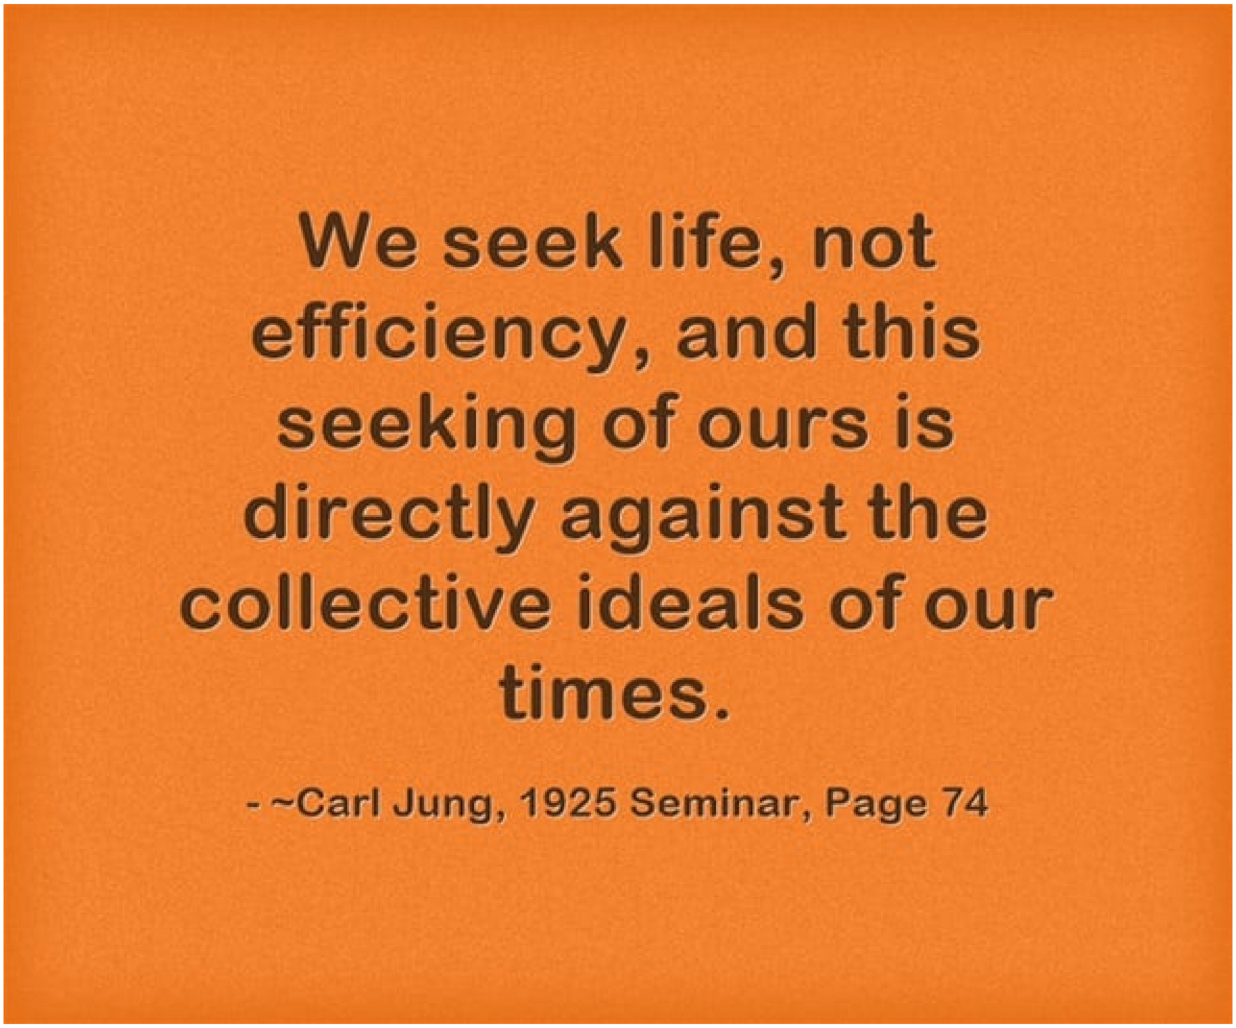
I had the feeling that I was an over-compensated psychosis, and from this feeling I was not released till August 1st, 1914. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 48



Such a situation presented itself at the time of the spread of Christianity two thousand years ago. The spiritual values had at that time sunk into the unconscious, and in order to realize them again, people had to go to tremendous lengths in the repudiation of material values. Gold, women, art—all had to be given up.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74

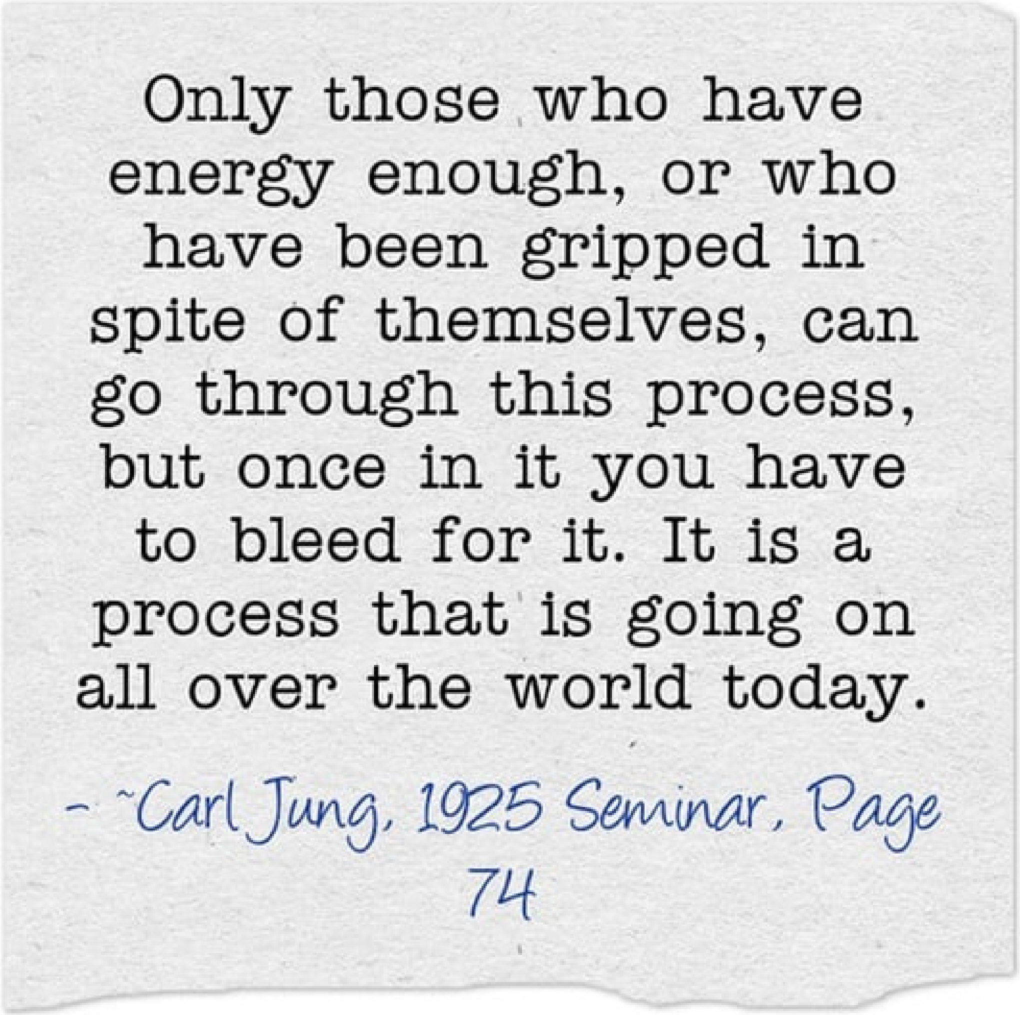
Such a situation presented itself at the time of the spread of Christianity two thousand years ago. The spiritual values had at that time sunk into the unconscious, and in order to realize them again, people had to go to tremendous lengths in the repudiation of material values. Gold, women, art—all had to be given up. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74



We seek life, not efficiency, and this seeking of ours is directly against the collective ideals of our times.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74

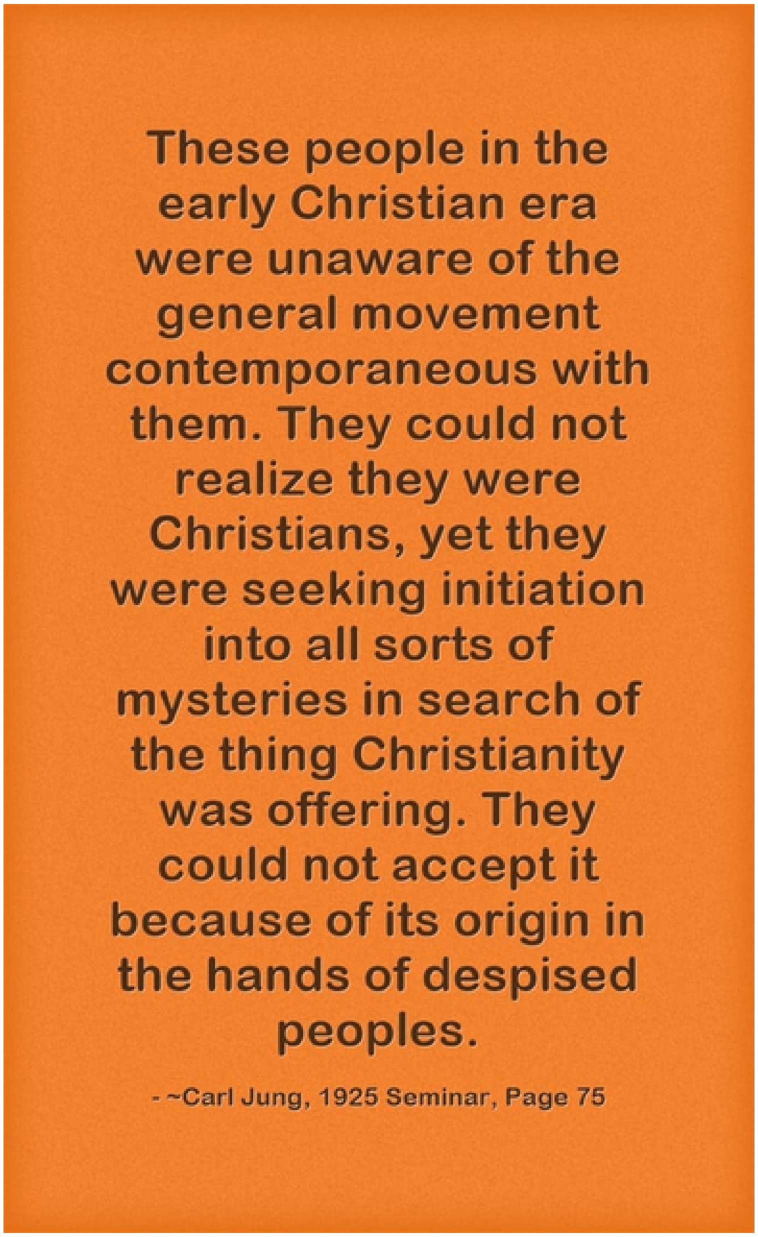
We seek life, not efficiency, and this seeking of ours is directly against the collective ideals of our times. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74



Only those who have energy enough, or who have been gripped in spite of themselves, can go through this process, but once in it you have to bleed for it. It is a process that is going on all over the world today.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74

Only those who have energy enough, or who have been gripped in spite of themselves, can go through this process, but once in it you have to bleed for it. It is a process that is going on all over the world today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 74



These people in the early Christian era were unaware of the general movement contemporaneous with them. They could not realize they were Christians, yet they were seeking initiation into all sorts of mysteries in search of the thing Christianity was offering. They could not accept it because of its origin in the hands of despised peoples.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75

These people in the early Christian era were unaware of the general movement contemporaneous with them. They could not realize they were Christians, yet they were seeking initiation into all sorts of mysteries in search of the thing Christianity was offering. They could not accept it because of its origin in the hands of despised peoples. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75

Most of the troubles of our times come from this lack of realization that we are part of a herd that has deviated from the main currents.
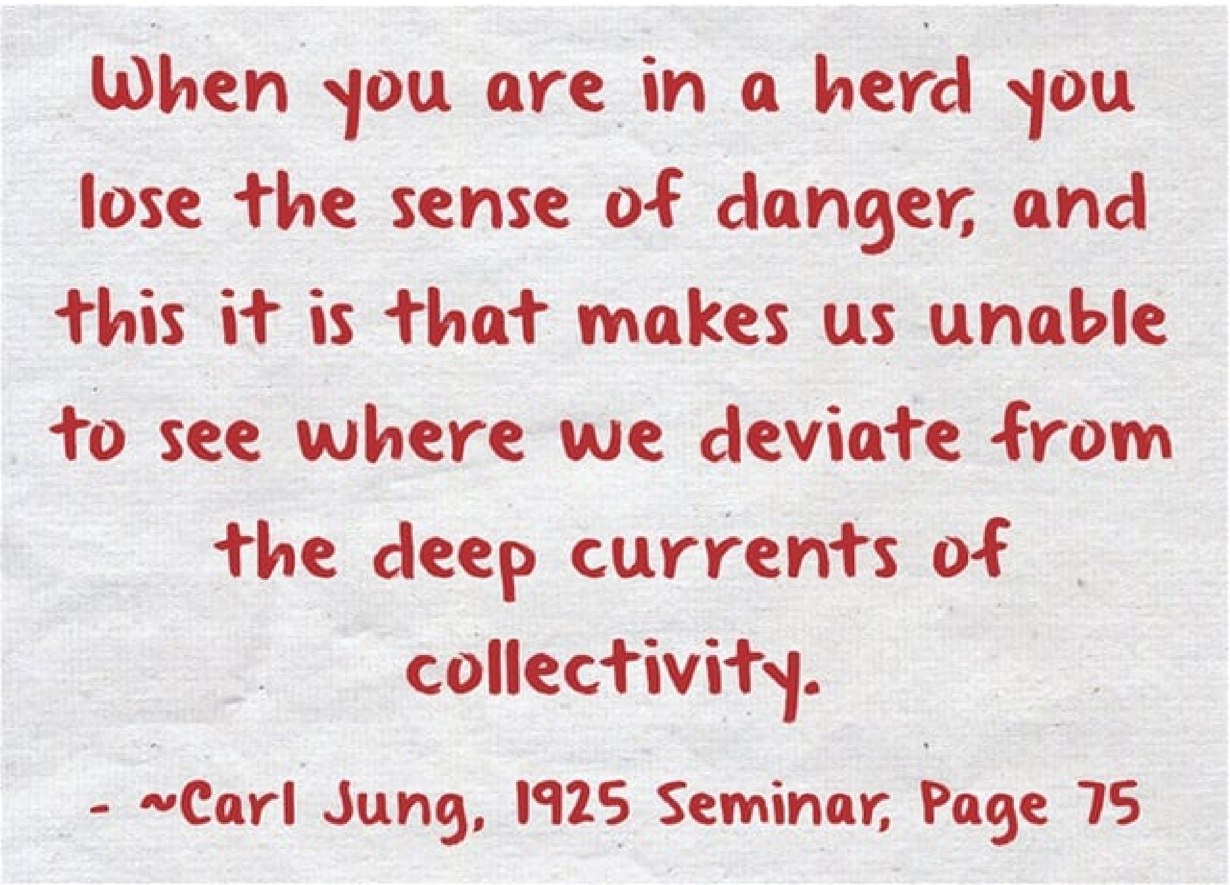
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75

Most of the troubles of our times come from this lack of realization that we are part of a herd that has deviated from the main currents. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75



When you are in a herd you lose the sense of danger, and this it is that makes us unable to see where we deviate from the deep currents of collectivity.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75

When you are in a herd you lose the sense of danger, and this it is that makes us unable to see where we deviate from the deep currents of collectivity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

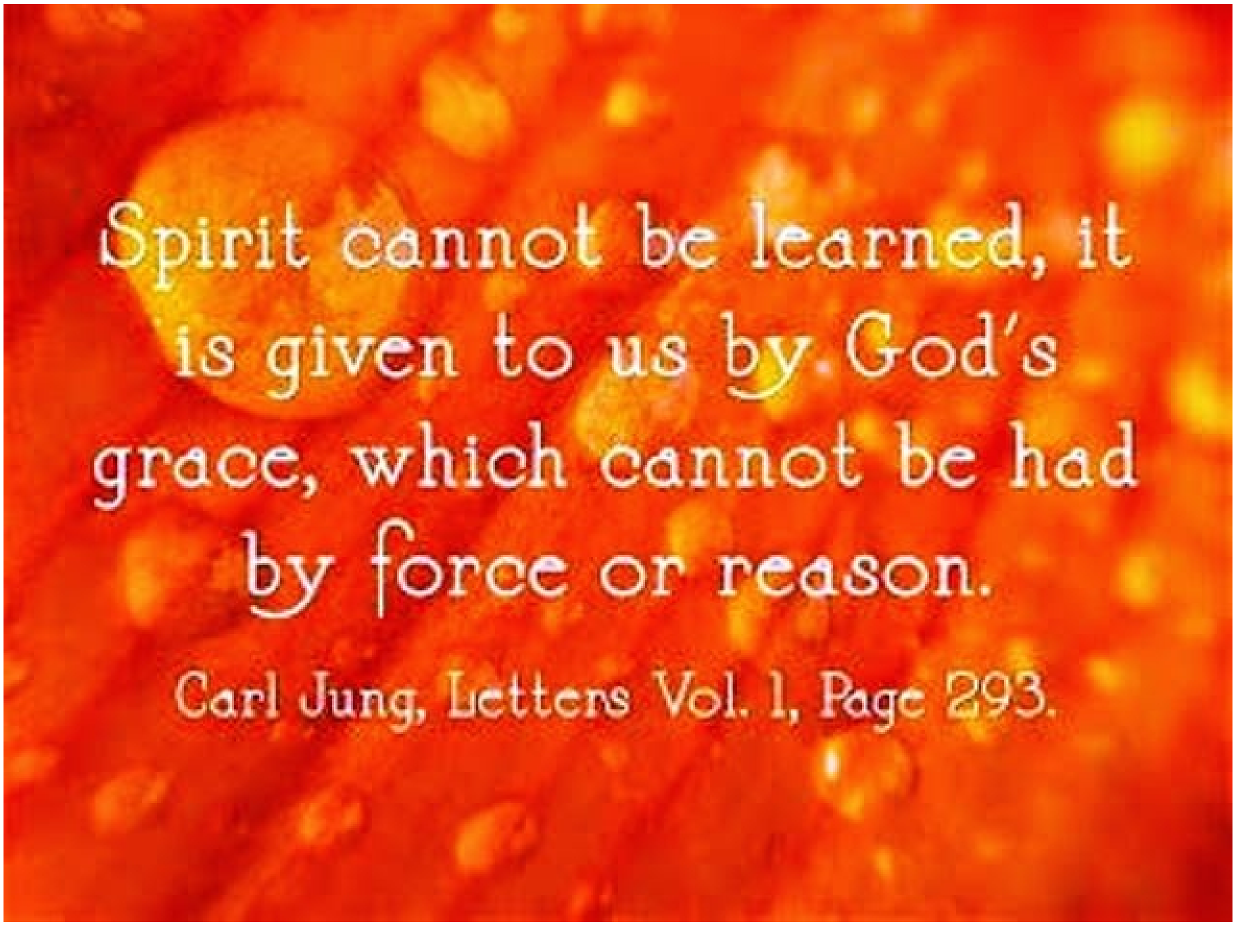
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/4065f-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/a9e48-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/83cee-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d9d0a-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/a9938-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/08f13-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/817d8-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d81ac-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d4193-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/b207e-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/96fdd-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/a3e66-ttt.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/89ec8-uuu.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/29a8b-vvv.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/20a67-www.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/23389-xxx.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/1557c-yyy.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/ae3ad-zzz.jpg`

Carl Jung: "…I do not believe that reason can be the supreme law of human behaviour…" (2019-12-21 00:33)

[1]



Spirit cannot be learned, it is given to us by God's grace, which cannot be had by force or reason.
Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 293.

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Pastor H. Wegmann

Dear Pastor Wegmann, 12 December 1945

Your friendly letter of 8.XII was just what I wanted to hear from you-namely your clear and unmistakable attitude to the question of the Church.

In truth I didn't know that you think so critically in this matter.

But I must admit your arguments are right, for I think from the religious standpoint likewise, if not even more radically.

Your previous letter did not bore me in the least; on the contrary, I fear I have been a nuisance to you with my preoccupations and would therefore beg your forgiveness for writing to you again so soon.

I must, however, overcome my scruples because the problem of religion apart from its subjective importance-is gradually swelling to cosmic proportions parallel with contemporary events.

That is, I do not believe that reason can be the supreme law of human behaviour, if only because experience shows that in decisive moments behaviour is precisely not guided by reason but rather by overpowering unconscious impulses.

There is nothing to cope with the latter but their own equivalent, something that adequately expresses their nature, gives them name and shape.

There thus arises in consciousness a receptacle, so to speak, into which the unconscious onslaught can pour and wherein it can assume cultural form .

If this does not happen, there is unquestionably a danger that the onslaught will express itself as cataclysmically as an avalanche.

This form has always been given by religion, never by reason.

The problem is particularly urgent today because civilized humanity will soon have arrived at the crossroads where it can use the atom bomb.

The effect of the uranium bomb has proved disappointing.

The new plutonium bombs being produced on the assembly line are said to be 150 times more effective!

Thus the suicide of human civilization has moved appreciably closer, and chain reactions will be discovered in the future which will endanger the planet.

Nearly 2000 years ago the world entered the last month of the Platonic year, the aeon of Pisces, and developed chiliastic expectations.

A thousand years ago these came to light still more clearly, and now, nearly 2000 years after Christ mankind has the instrument in its hands with which it can prepare the end and assuredly will if a third World War does not come soon and smash the power of those nations which might also develop the atom bomb unless-and this is the only hope-the great reversal comes, a universal retreat from Marignano.

I can imagine this as nothing other than a religious, world-embracing movement which alone can intercept the diabolical impulse for destruction.

That is the reason why the question of the Church grips me so urgently, for the Church is the one worldly authority where spirit in the religious sense moves the brute masses.

The Church would have her raison d’ etre if she could save mankind or at least civilization.

I well know that it is useless for the single individual to rack his brains over it, but one must nevertheless talk about it.

Therefore I embetier you with another long letter for which I must ask you to forgive me.

I know it is childish or superstitious but I feel a little comforted in the knowledge that I have got it off my chest.

Naturally I don’ t expect an answer unless your pen sets itself in motion of its own accord.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 401-402.

[Note: In 1515 the French king Francis I defeated the Swiss fighting for Milan at Marignano, northern Italy. This defeat was a major turning-point in Swiss history, as it shattered the hope of maintaining for Switzerland the status of a European power and inaugurated the attitude of neutrality which she has adopted ever since.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/4f0b8-reason.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=36NOXR77CEVJ3&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576920335&sprefix=jung+let`

Wolfgang Pauli stops Dream Interpretation with Dr. Jung (2019-12-21 03:30)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Dear Dr. Jung, Zurich 7. 26. 1934

Since you conjured up the spirits of theoretical physics in "Seele url Tod" [Soul and Death], your paper concerning the interpretation of so-called parapsychological phenomena, these spirits now seem to be gradually convening.

Jordan’s essay, a copy of which is enclosed, was sent to me for appraisal by the publisher of the journal Die Naturwissenschaften.

He has certain misgivings about its publication, not because of the actual contents but because there is a risk that all sorts of incompetent people might get involved in the discussion.

However, this danger could possibly be mitigated by the addition of an appropriate editorial note to the essay.

As for the author, P. Jordan, I know him personally.

He is a highly intelligent and gifted theoretical physicist, certainly one to be taken seriously.

I do not know how he came to be involved with telepathic and related phenomena.

However, it may well be that his preoccupation with psychic phenomena and the unconscious in general is due to his personal problems.

These manifest themselves particularly in the symptom of a speech defect (stuttering), which almost made it impossible for him to pursue his career; this could have led to a certain fragmentation of his intellectual activities (he even feels that in his specialized field he has "run out of luck").

He seems to be familiar with some of Freud’s writings, but probably not with yours.

I would be interested to hear your opinion on the contents of the essay, especially as Jordan’s ideas seem to me to have a certain connection with your own.

In the last section 01 the essay in particular, he comes very close to your concept the collective unconscious.

Do not be put off by the word “positivistic"; it is unlikely that J’s ideas have anything to do with any philosophical system, and I would suggest that he replace the word "positivist" with "phenomenological."

I do have certain misgivings about the picture (p. 12), according to which the conscious should be located as a "narrow borderline area" to the unconscious.

Might it not be preferable to advocate the view that the unconscious and the conscious are complementary (i.e., in a mutually exclusive relationship to each other), but not that one is part of the other?

Of course, I shall be happy to refer your works to the author.

Please forgive me for taking up your time by asking you for a (brief) written comment on the essay, but it may be of interest to you, even if there is nothing new in it for you. (By the way, I do not need to have the copy returned.)

With regard to my own personal destiny, it is true that there are still one or two unresolved problems remaining.

Nevertheless, I feel a certain need to get away from dream interpretation and dream analysis, and I would like to see what life has to bring me from outside.

A development of my feeling function is, of course, very important to me, but it does seem to me that it could come about gradually through life itself, with the passage of time, and cannot emerge solely as the outcome of dream analysis.

Having given the matter much thought, I have come to the conclusion that I shall not continue with my visits to you for the time being, unless something untoward should arise.

With my deepest thanks for all your trouble,

I remain

Yours sincerely,

W PAULI

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/96859-12bpauli.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=36NOXR77CEVJ3&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1576920335&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung: Your idea of writing a doctoral thesis about sin is brilliant. (2019-12-21 04:30)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Pastor Fritz Pfaffiin

Dear Pastor PfafHin, 9 March 1937

Your idea of writing a doctoral thesis about sin is brilliant.

That is something I would definitely like to know, what sin really is, seeing that theology has been talking about it for thousands of years.

In my theological impartiality I would say that only the good Lord can decide, as stands clearly written in the Acts of the Apostles.

Everything else is man-made law, wholly time-conditioned and relative.

Men would never have talked of sin and the forgiveness of sin had this not been a fundamental psychological fact that existed long before there were any laws.

Deviation from the will of the gods was a preoccupation of humanity even in primeval times.

In this sense "the old man" would have a very great deal to say.

But this sense is far more comprehensive and in a way more inexorable than any human law.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 253-254

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/33d4d-12bpfallin.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=36QQR86JHW8R7&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577004239&sprefix=jung+let`

Stone by Stone: Reflections on the Psychology of C.G. Jung - Images (2019-12-21 05:48)

[1]Stone by Stone: Reflections on the Psychology of C.G. Jung

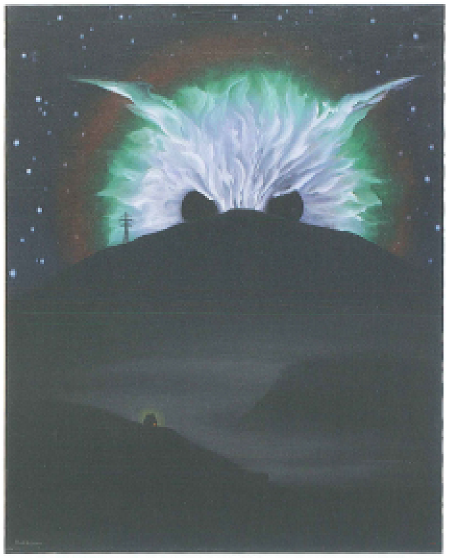

Plate 1: Peter Birkhäuser, Sun of the Night (1970)

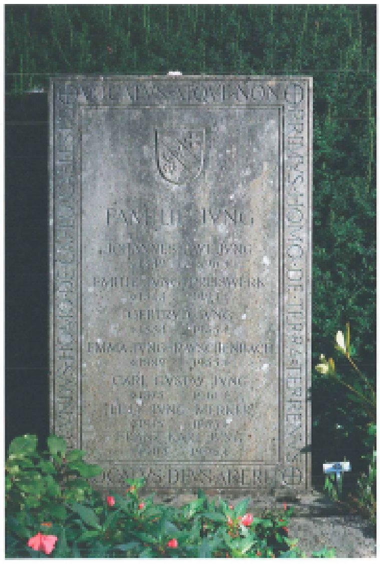

Plate 2: Gravestone of the Jung-Family at the Cemetery in Küsnacht

BARBARA HANNAH
1891 - 1986
MARIE-LOUISE
VON FRANZ
1915 - 1998

Plate 3: Gravestone of Marie-Louise von Franz and Barbara Hannah in Küsnacht

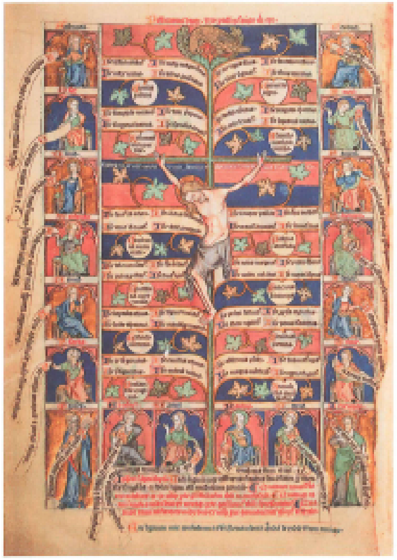

Plate 4: Christ on the Tree of Life, above the Pelican

Plate 5: C.G. Jung's Stone in Bollingen

Plate 6: Aurora Consurgens, The Work with Metals

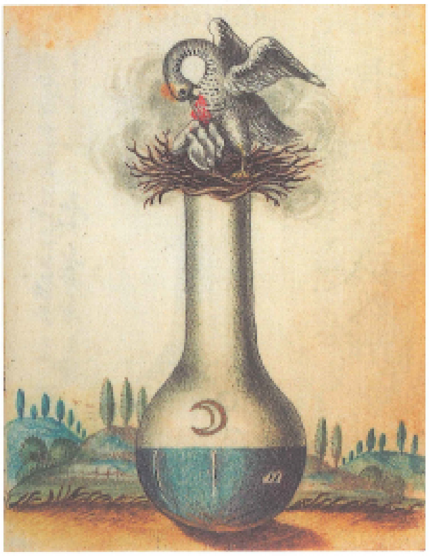

Plate 7: Pelican with the Fledglings, in the Vessel the Waxing Moon

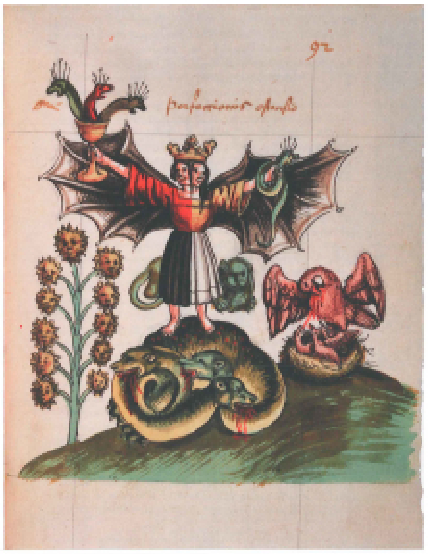

Plate 8: Mercurius as Crowned Hermaphrodite with the Pelican

Plate 9: Hasidic Man in Krakow (ca. 1935-1938)

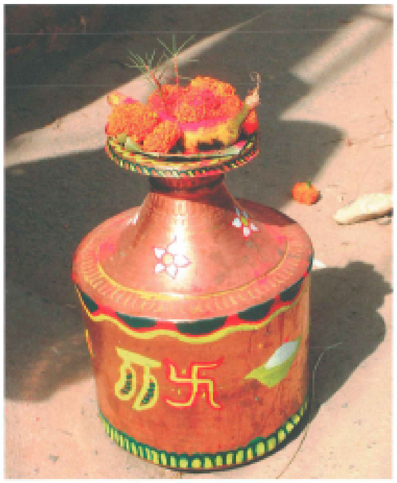

Plate 10: A Treasure Vase at Somi's Initiation Ceremony

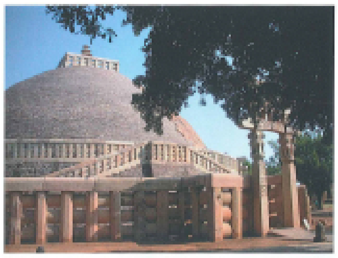

Plate 11a: The Great Stupa of Sanchi

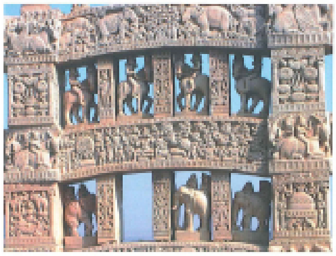

Plate 11b: Treasure Vases on the North Gate of the Great Stupa of Sanchi

Plate 12: Śālabhañjikā on the North Gate of the Great Stupa

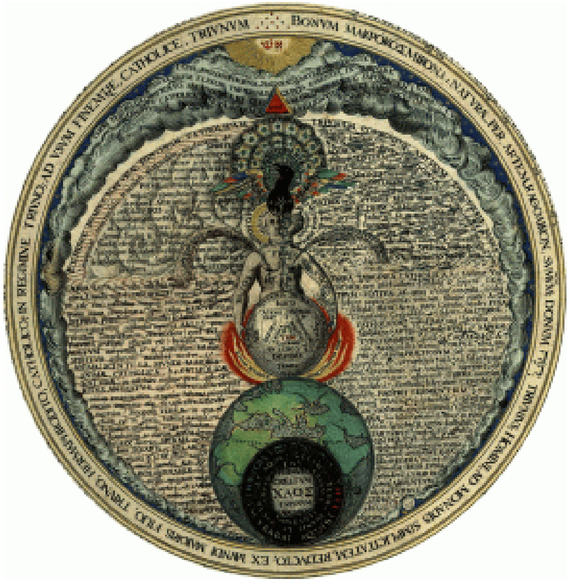
Plate 13: The Goddess "Abundance" from Mathura (2nd cent.)

Plate 14: The Birth of the Future Buddha (Nepal, 9th cent.)

1. https://www.amazon.com/Stone-Reflections-Psychology-C-G-Jung-ebook/dp/B01N337E48/ref=sr_1_2?ie=UTF8&qid=1545385175&sr=8-2&keywords=stone+by+stone+c.g.+jung

---

Carl Jung: "… a transformation of the destructive fiery spirit into a spiritus vitae." (2019-12-21 06:30)



[1]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Paul Schmitt

Dear Dr. Schmitt, 20 December 1945

I see from your letter, for which best thanks, that you are laid up in a clinic again.

I had thought your malaria had come to a standstill, but this is obviously not so.

I find it very regrettable that you must plague yourself with so many bodily disturbances.

It almost seems as if the ignis vitae of which you write were coming out at the wrong place as fire.

In alchemy there is an Anazopyrosis, by which is presumably meant a transformation of the destructive fiery spirit into a spiritus vitae.

You are in the midst of an inner confrontation with yourself which is of the highest general importance.

We all have to contribute our mite to this problem.

Occasionally we must also inquire whether something that wants to go upwards has not taken a false route downwards into the body.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 403.

1 Anazopyrosis, quickening by fire, an expression to be found in the "Book of Komarios," which according to Jung dates from the 1st cent. A.D. Cf. von Franz, Aurora Consurgens, p. 368.

1. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=36QQR86JHW8R7&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577004239&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung's deeply personal expression. (2019-12-21 07:09)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

the owner of this book: Dr. Jurg Fierz

Writing a prefatory note to these diversa gives me a peculiar feeling.

A collection of my essays from various times and situations of life is rather like a grasshopper with type on its feet jumping through the world of ideas, leaving occasional traces behind it; and it requires a considerable effort of imagination to reconstruct from the zigzag track of these footprints the nature of the animal that produced them.

I envy no one this task, as I myself have a distaste for autobiography.

The immense expanse of vaguely recognizable objects in the world has lured me forth to those twilit border zones where the figure I have meanwhile become steps towards me.

The long path I have traversed is littered with husks sloughed off, witnesses of countless moultings, those relicta one calls books.

They conceal as much as they reveal.

Every step is a symbol of those to follow.

He who mounts a flight of steps does not linger on them, nor look back at them, even though age invites him to linger or slow his pace.

The great wind of the peaks roars ever more loudly in his ears.

His gaze sweeps distances that flee away into the infinite.

The last steps are the loveliest and most precious, for they lead to that fullness to reach which the innermost essence of man is born.

Kiisnacht, 21 December 1945 C.G. Jung. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 404-405.

A dedication which Jung wrote for a bound volume of his own offprints prepared by F., literary editor of the Weltwoche (cf. Fierz, 10 Apr. 42, n. O).

Although, strictly speaking, not a letter it is included here for the sake of its personal expression and human interest.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/9b2f2-carl.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=36QQR86JHW8R7&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577004239&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung on "The Evil Vineyard" by Marie Hay (2019-12-21 07:50)

[1]

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

The Evil Vineyard”

Dr. Mann gave the report for the committee on The Evil Vineyard.

Only her synopsis of the psychological aspects of the story will be given.

Taken on the reality basis, the story tells of a marriage in which no possibility of a real relationship existed.

The girl, having repressed her instincts as a woman, marries Latimer because he stands for the intellectual world which has completely fascinated her.

She has no love for him, even fears him. Latimer, twenty years her senior, seeks in her a renewal of youth; instead of feeling, he brings her sexuality.

The weirdness he is described as having [experienced] before his marriage progresses through shell shock into a neurosis in which he has to relive the crimes of a legendary Italian condottiere.

Because he represents her projected unconscious, and is in short an animus figure to her, Mary is utterly powerless to free herself from him until she comes to love another man in a real way.

Taken symbolically, the story is that of a woman giving way to the evil side of the animus, finally to be rescued by the upcoming of the positive side.

Throughout, Mary was taken as psychologically identical with the author.

It was the opinion of Dr. Jung that the committee had failed to get at the deeper psychological significance of the book, and that the reason that they had failed lay in the assumption that Latimer was abnormal when he met Mary.

There was not sufficient evidence, he thought, for that viewpoint, and taking the story that way limited it too much.

It should be taken on a much deeper level.

Dr. Jung: I would like to hear from the men on the committee.

Mr. Bacon?

Mr. Bacon: The thing that interested me was that I thought if I could have read the symbols rightly, which I did not feel competent to do, I could have learned something very interesting about the author.

I thought she must have had some bad experience, and that the book was a reflection of her private troubles.

Dr. Jung: I think it would be a mistake to take the book as too much a story of the author.

We really don't know in how far the author has come to it from inner motives, and how much she has taken over the legend of the Casa di Ferro.

She seems to have lived in Switzerland and to have known much of Swiss life.

In case she has taken over the plot ready-made, it would not be fair to say it is symptomatic.

So I think we can dismiss the intuitions about the author's conflict. It was more possible to take She from that viewpoint, but here the connections are very obscure.

It would be better to take this story from the standpoint of the heroes, as Dr. Harding has done with Holly.

Thus I should analyze it first from the standpoint of the girl, and then from that of Latimer.

Looked at from the two aspects, very different things come out.

We have no book that I know of in which we could establish a direct relationship between the author and the animus figure.

But here an important part of the problem is presented.

We can assume that the author has put feminine psychology into the heroine, and we can try to reconstruct what that woman has experienced and the development of the animus.

Do you consider, Dr. Mann, that Latimer is a suitable animus figure?

Dr. Mann: Yes, because he is a power figure.

Dr. Jung: I think it nearer the facts to say that he became a power figure.

First he appears as a learned man who appealed to her as a source of wisdom, a man representing wisdom.

The animus is not necessarily a power figure.

The anima, on the other hand, is usually a power figure. She appears in that way from the very beginning.

But the response of a woman to wisdom is not necessarily a power reaction, as you seem to have presented it.

It is quite a legitimate craving.

I think the author has tried to show here a girl who was starved on the spiritual side, and came to an older man legitimately seeking.

Of course the world always takes such a situation and makes a love story of it, not allowing that a girl comes to a man for anything but love.

When such a thing happens to a man in reality, he is very likely to make the false assumption; and obviously there are more cases in which the assumption is right than those in which it is wrong, but nonetheless, we must admit that there are plenty of serious cases in which a girl can be interested in learning.

And so I think Mary sought information from Latimer.

Then begins the tragic situation. He would not assume that she is interested in knowledge, but takes it that she wants him as a man, and is simply pretending an interest in order to trap him.

Here is the tragic conflict.

He does not see that she is really interested, and so he gets her into a trap.

Then comes her mistake.

She is not aware of her instincts, and has no love for him whatsoever.

It would be her duty to tell him that he has made a mistake, but she just lets him marry her, and never tells him that she does not love him.

Because she has disregarded her instincts, they begin to grow in the dark.

Then the animus begins his work, and from this moment he gives an evil twist to her unconscious processes.

Before she was all right, and she had projected her animus into Latimer at sight.

It was something that simply happened, and if the situation had been taken seriously, it might have gone very well.

But his attitude to her was all wrong because it was blind.

He took no cognizance of what she really thought about him, and made the false assumption about her seeking him as a lover.

A man thoroughly aware of his own instincts should not make a mistake like that, but obviously he was a very intellectual man living in his mind with complete repression of the anima.

When he meets her all of that goes over on her, and he never stops to make out the reality of the situation.

But she will not carry his projection, and presently he begins to feel something growing in her which he does not understand.

And there we are launched upon the battle between the anima and the animus.

Let us take up her side of the conflict first. She committed a sin of ignorance in that she was unaware of her instincts.

Nature pays no attention to ignorance as an excuse, she simply punishes it as a sin.

She handles the situation as it is, and it makes no difference to nature if the person has chosen the wrong way with malice aforethought, or has merely fallen into it.

We might say that ignorance of instinct on the part of Mary is a sort of inherited sin, for her whole education has been along the lines of excluding knowledge of life.

Her family did all they could to keep her unconscious, and she knows nothing of the role a woman must play.

She quite innocently lies to the man, then she behaves as though she were his wife and really is not.

In such a marriage there will be a violent outburst of sexuality at the beginning on the part of the man.

The primitive in the man is awakened because he must beat the woman down in order to make her serviceable to his instincts.

Of course this is quite wrong, hopelessly wrong, but he is driven to it, and any natural man will do it.

The woman gets into the position of the archaic woman, and then the animal lust of the man is stirred.

Negresses in certain parts of Africa exhibit with pride the scars they have received in their sexual battles with men.

Then the man is fairly launched on a course of brutality.

But an educated man cannot keep this up indefinitely. It breaks him and he becomes impotent.

As long as the woman can be kept down, she is alive as an animal; she becomes the victim of a brute, and takes a certain animal satisfaction out of it.

But she cannot keep on that low level any more than the man, and so it leads into a breakdown.

What happens then?

The libido with no outlet goes into the unconscious in a lump, one might say.

It becomes an egg that she broods over and hatches out.

What is in this egg?

Feminine instinctiveness.

Fantasies begin to form around the figure of a young man who will come and free her from this tyrant.

The fantasies go on further and further with this theme of her being a prisoner of a cruel tyrant.

Often I have seen this fantasy material about the young man, and the old man who has put the little bird into a gilded cage.

She is indulging in these fantasies, and brooding and brooding, but without knowing why.

Hardly any woman in this condition is conscious.

ordinarily she remains profoundly ignorant of it all.

So then we have the formation of these unconscious sexual fantasies; and they make wonderful material out of which an unconscious complex can form.

This begins in the personal unconscious.

At her first sexual experience she could have understood.

Many women do come into consciousness in this way.

But when brutal sexuality comes, the deeper layers of the personality are opened up.
This leads right back to the monkey age.

The libido leaves the surface and goes down into the depths.

When a woman gets to this point she will begin to use historical material in which to wrap the fantasies.

Instead of saying “My husband has forced me,” she will begin a story of ancient times in which this tragedy was enacted.

This historical element points to the collective unconscious.

Then it must be determined why it chooses the specific period it does, in this case the Middle Ages.

And in this case, it is because the special psychology involved lies within the viewpoint of the Middle Ages.

If one goes back, on the other hand, in search of the place in history where the repression of the anima begins, one is taken far beyond the Middle Ages, back of Christianity to paganism.

This is far too intricate a theme for me to enter upon here, but it is my belief that the repression of the anima is connected with the problem of the collective domestication of man.

In order that the state be made, the anima had to be repressed.

That is why the story of Kallicrates in She is staged first in ancient times.

Not so early as Babylon or Egypt, however, because neither of these countries ever knew a state, strictly speaking.

The king was on the level of the gods, as is witnessed by the Babylonian temples; at one end is the king, at the other the god.

In some of the Egyptian sculpture, the king is pictured issuing orders to the gods.

Of course a state is not possible in such a condition, it is simply the ruling of the herd by the terror of mana. In the Greek polis, no such thing existed, and it is there we find the beginning of the state.

But if the anima ruled, the formation of a state would be impossible.

But how does the repression gradually come about?

You have contracts, you promise not to fight under such and such conditions, you put down your weapons and don't speak very loud, you are very polite, you don't tread on another man's shadow.

So it goes among primitives, and in this way tolerance has a chance to grow.

Through these observances, man's anima became repressed.

In this case the cause of the repression of the instincts lay in medieval psychology, and we must look back into medieval times to find out why.

Have you any ideas on this subject?

Mr. Schmitz: Did the repression of the instincts in women not grow out of the man's desire to keep the woman chaste while he went to war?

Dr. Jung: Yes, but you must explain the exaggerated ideal of chastity in these times.

Mr. Schmitz: If one goes as far back as the matriarchy, there is no ideal of chastity in women; but when gradually the patriarchy came about, men became interested in establishing their children's paternity, and so grew up the conception of the chaste wife, and from that they passed to the idea of the virgin powerful through chastity, such as Athena.

Dr. Jung: You make then a connection between the cult of the virgin and the exaggerated idea of chastity.

I quite agree with that.

This cult brought with it very brutal means of enforcing the chastity.

If you go back to primitive tribes, even when a more or less strict monogamy is the rule, it is taken for granted that women are unreliable when the man turns his back, but not too much notice is taken of it unless the man is greatly attached to his wife.

It is understood that a woman is not exactly true, but the primitive husband does not particularly care.

Nor does the woman on her side mind having the husband go with other women as long as he is not taken from her.

In other words jealousy is not so much present.

With the ideal of chastity comes jealousy.

Mr. Bacon: Among the natives of Nicaragua, the husband is inordinately jealous of his wife; in fact he becomes quite ferocious about it.

Dr. Jung: Yes, there are certain tribal ideas that explain particular cases, but when you study the average case you will find what I have said to be true.

But there are other examples where terrible punishments follow infidelity.

Our exaggerated feeling about chastity has brought similar cruelties with it.

Primitive punishments are often of a peculiar ferocity, as is shown in the practices surrounding witch-hunting.

But what about our own laws in respect to that?

In the year 700, the burning of witches was not allowed, but 700 years later, down to 1796, witches were burned.

It had its climax at the same time as the appearance of the Lauretanian Litany,which expresses the culmination of the cult of the Virgin.

When such cruelties as witch-burning appear in society, it means on the psychological side that instinct has been tortured, and in fact instinct is tortured by an extreme over-valuation of chastity.

Really hellish tortures have followed in its wake.

So these medieval fantasies in this book are to be explained by the fact of the complete repression of instinct.

Images of times when such deeds as those of Henrico von Brunnen were generally current are reawakened.

As the murderer of his wife and her lover, he forms a suitable figure for the unconscious fantasy material of Mary, who thinks of herself as the prisoner of an ogre.

Now, when such fantasies are forming, they permeate the mind, and the collective unconscious is animated and one reacts to it—I mean anyone intimately associated with such a person.

It is just as though the animated collective unconscious were sending out waves influencing others.

The husband in this story responds to the activation of the collective unconscious in his wife.

He is gripped by something he does not understand, and as he becomes restless, he is chased by these collective fantasies of his wife.

He does not know where they belong.

On his wanderings he comes upon this place, the Casa di Ferro.

I know the place, and it is in fact very extraordinary; one wonders what it was, and feels the truth of the legends about it.

When Latimer saw it, something happened to him.

He said to himself: "This is the place, and I am that man Henrico von Brunnen."

There is the immediate conviction that always follows when an archetype is struck, it is an extraordinary experience.

If the fantasy of your partner gets into you, you make yourself responsible for it; and if you hit upon the reality that frames the fantasy, you do just as Latimer did when he said, "I am Henrico von Brunnen—that is my form."

This brought him peace, but at the same time he had to live the thing.

He fell under the spell of the fantasy and was overcome by it.

He was no longer himself, but his unconscious.

So he died when he committed the murder.

He had not done it himself, nature had brought it about.

To sum up, we see in this story the complete projection of the woman's unconscious into the man, the operation of the animus.

Then comes the tragic denial of love. All of the repressed instinctive libido activates the deeper layers of the unconscious with the resulting fantasy system we have seen, till the man upon whom it is projected [falls] under its spell and lives it out.

That is the story as determined by the woman's part in it.

If we look at it from the man's side it becomes different.

Until his marriage Latimer has lived the life of a learned man.

He has repressed the anima completely.

Then he goes out to seek “She,” and finds her in this lovely young girl.

The feeling of youth was stirred in him.

He found this girl uncannily unconscious, full of a strange vagueness, and unaware of the instincts as she was, and she became for him a wonderful opportunity for anima projection.

Into such a vague, ambiguous frame you can put any amount of fantasy, and so he made a plaything of her.

She fulfilled his wish by keeping quiet.

The vaguer she became, the more the anima had a chance to play her role.

The more she fits into the anima role, the less he can get at her in reality.

Then he begins to make assumptions to take the place of the realities.

He gets into a complete mist about her, and she becomes more elusive than moonlight.

She had denied love, and so he began to seek for this thing he could not find.

He began going all over Europe in quest of this unknown thing. Inasmuch as she withdrew all libido from him and began to weave fantasies of lovers who would release her from him, his wife was really untrue to him.

He became convinced that she was untrue to him in point of fact, and began to make sure against lovers in the night.

Thus following up the suspicions of the anima, he fell deeper and deeper into the snare.

Finally he resorted to locking her up.

All of these things he was driven to do in order to get rid of the torture that was tearing him to pieces.

Dr. de Angulo: I can see the truth of all that you have said if you take it that Latimer was a normal man when he married Mary, but is there not a justification for taking it as the committee did, that is, that Latimer was already split apart, and abnormal through his one-sidedness when he first met her?

His experiences in the war swamped him completely, and then be began to live his unconscious, which finally led to his identification with Henrico von Brunnen. to insanity is his inability to get at his feelings.

Just because he is so Mary is then only an incident in his life; what drives him unreal when she meets him, he is an animus figure for Mary.

Dr. Jung: No, I see no justification for assuming that Latimer was abnormal from the beginning.

Besides, it is only a hiding behind words to say that, for it does not explain anything. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 155-161

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/3bffb-1vineyard.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/2019/12/21/carl-jung-glance-scriptures-however-enough-show-us-importance-devil-divine-drama-redemption/`

Message from the Philemon Foundation (2019-12-21 08:35)

[1]

Message from the Philemon Foundation:

We are now able to announce that the Philemon Foundation is preparing for publication on the long awaited Black Books 1913-1932 of C. G. Jung, in cooperation with the Foundation of the Works of C. G Jung, and W. W. Norton, publisher of Liber Novus, The Red Book.

The text of The Red Book draws on material from the Black Books between 1913 and 1916. Approximately fifty percent of the former derives directly from the latter, with very light editing and reworking. The Black Books are not personal diaries, but the records of the unique self-experimentation that Jung called his ‘confrontation with the unconscious.’ He did not record day to day happenings or outer events, but rather he engaged his inner world, his dreams, fantasies, and psychic experience.

The Black Books shed light on the genesis of The Red Book, the further elaboration of Jung’s personal cosmology from 1916 on-wards, and the making of analytical psychology. The material that Jung did not transfer to The Red Book is just as important as the passages he did include.

The Philemon series edition of the Black Books will be produced by the scholars who prepared The Red Book. They will be edited and introduced by the Philemon Foundation General Editor, Sonu Shamdasani, and will be translated by Mark Kyburz, John Peck, and Sonu Shamdasani. The Norton publication will be a facsimile edition of six volumes, designated by their dates, in a boxed set.

UNDER SUBMISSION:
-Jung’s seminar, Dream Interpretation: Ancient and Modern, edited by Maria Mayer-Grass, Lorenz Jung and John Peck, and translated by Ernst Falzeder with Tony Woolfson.

NEARING COMPLETION:
-Jung’s 1933 Berlin Seminar, edited by Giovanni Sorge, and translated by Mark Kyburz and John Peck.

-Jung’s 1931 German Seminar, edited by Ernst Falzeder and translated by Ernst Falzeder with Tony Woolfson.

UNDERWAY:

-Jung’s 1937-8 Bailey Island and New York Seminars, edited by Suzanne Gieser.
-Jung’s lecture on Gérard de Nerval, edited by Craig Stephenson.

-Jung’s correspondence with Erich Neumann, edited by Martin Liebscher, and translated by Heather McCartney.

-Jung’s correspondence with Mircea Eliade, Wilhelm Hauer, and Heinrich Zimmer, edited by Giovanni Sorge.

-Jung’s correspondence with Adolf Keller, edited by Marianne Jehle, translated by Mark Kyburz and John Peck.

-Jung’s ETH Lectures 1933-1941, eight volumes, edited by Ernst Falzeder and Martin Liebscher, (vols. 1-3 translated by Mark Kyburz and John Peck).

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/acaef-philemon.jpg`

Victor White: " I am just indescribably lonely, and it’s some relief to me to tell you. . . ." (2019-12-21 09:15)

[1]

My dear C. G., November 8, 1953

The dilemma, reduced to its simplest terms, seems complete and insoluble.

If Christ is no longer an adequate and valid symbol of the Self, and in fact very inadequate, one-sided, unintegrated and harmful, then must not one choose—at whatever cost?

Faith in him, it seems to me, must be unconditional; once one “criticizes Christ” one has lost faith in him, and one cannot in honesty preach him any more.

And one has lost any sense of oneness that one ever had with one’s community, with the Church, with the “cause” that animates them. . . .

So I tell myself from time to time that, whatever the cost, I must get out. . . .

I am just indescribably lonely, and it's some relief to me to tell you. . . .

I must confess there are times when I wish to heaven I had never heard of your psychology (and some of your disciples); and yet I tremble to think what would have happened if I hadn't!

Ever Cordially,

Victor Jung-White Letters, Pages 216-217.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/51cd4-1victor.jpg`

Carl Jung: Once the indefinable One unfolds into two, it becomes something definite: the man Jesus, the Son and Logos. (2019-12-21 09:52)

SANCTUM IESU
CHRISTI EVANGELIUM
SECUNDUM IOANNEM

Prologus evangelistæ, 1, 1-18

1 [1] In principio erat verbum, et verbum erat apud Deum, et Deus erat verbum. [2] Hoc erat in principio apud Deum.
[3] Omnia per ipsum facta sunt: et sine ipso factum est nihil, quod factum est.
[4] In ipso vita erat, et vita erat lux hominu
[5] et lux in tenebris lucet, et tenebræ eam non c derunt.

[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

If we disregard the specifically Persian system of dualism, it appears that no real devil is to be found anywhere in the early period of man's spiritual development. In the Old Testament, he is vaguely foreshadowed in the figure of Satan.

But the real devil first appears as the adversary of Christ, and with him we gaze for the first time into the luminous realm of divinity on the one hand and into the abyss of hell on the other.

The devil is autonomous; he cannot be brought under God's rule, for if he could he would not have the power to be the adversary of Christ, but would only be God's instrument.

Once the indefinable One unfolds into two, it becomes something definite: the man Jesus, the Son and Logos.

This statement is possible only by virtue of something else that is not Jesus, not Son or Logos.

The act of love embodied in the Son is counterbalanced by Lucifer's denial Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 254

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1HNY0BEELV0JD&keywords=jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=1577005638`

Carl Jung: That is to say, what happens in the life of Christ happens always and everywhere. (2019-12-21 10:41)

[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

From a psychological standpoint this view can be translated as follows: Christ lived a concrete, personal, and unique life which, in all essential features, had at the same time an archetypal character.

This character can be recognized from the numerous connections of the biographical details with worldwide myth-motifs.

These undeniable connections are the main reason why it is so difficult for researchers into the life of Jesus to construct from the gospel reports an individual life divested of myth.

In the gospels themselves factual reports, legends, and myths are woven into a whole.

This is precisely what constitutes the meaning of the gospels, and they would immediately lose their character of wholeness if one tried to separate the individual from the archetypal with a critical scalpel

The life of Christ is no exception in that not a few of the great figures of history have realized, more or less clearly, the archetype of the hero's life with its characteristic changes of fortune.

But the ordinary man, too, unconsciously lives archetypal forms, and if these are no longer valued it is only because of the prevailing psychological ignorance.

Indeed, even the fleeting phenomena of dreams often reveal distinctly archetypal patterns.

At bottom, all psychic events are so deeply grounded in the archetype and are so much interwoven with it that in every case considerable critical effort is needed to separate the unique from the typical with any certainty

Ultimately, every individual life is at the same time the eternal life of the species.

The individual is continuously “historical” because strictly time-bound; the relation of the type to time, on the other hand, is irrelevant.

Since the life of Christ is archetypal to a high degree, it represents to just that degree the life of the archetype.

But since the archetype is the unconscious precondition of every human life, its life, when revealed, also reveals the hidden, unconscious ground-life of every individual.

That is to say, what happens in the life of Christ happens always and everywhere.

In the Christian archetype all lives of this kind are prefigured and are expressed over and over again or once and for all.

And in it, too, the question that concerns us here of God’s death is anticipated in perfect form. Christ himself is the typical dying and self-transforming God Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 146

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1HNY0BEELV0JD&keywords=jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=1577005638`

Mrs. Jung: “Could you say something about the relation of the animus to immortality… (2019-12-21 13:08)

[1]

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Mrs. Jung: Could you say something about the relation of the animus to immortality in the same way that you discussed the anima and immortality?

Dr. Jung: The animus seems to go back only to the fourteenth century, and the anima to remote antiquity, but with the animus I must say I am uncertain altogether.

Mrs. Jung: It had seemed to me that the animus was not a symbol of immortality, but of movement and life, and that it is man’s attitude that gives that different aspect to the anima.

Dr. Jung: It is true that the animus is often represented by a moving figure—an aviator or a traffic manager.

Perhaps there is something in the historical fact of women being more stable, therefore there is more movement in the unconscious.

Mr. Schmitz: Surely there could have been no repression of the animus at the time of the matriarchy.

Dr. Jung: We cannot be too sure.

Mrs. Zinno: The figures of gods carry the idea of immortality, do they not?

smuch as they are also animus figures and come into women's dreams, I should think one could say the animus carried the meaning of immortality also.

Dr. Jung: Yes, that is true, but there remains a tremendous difference between the animus and the anima.

Mr. Schmitz: Is immortality in the individual?

Dr. Jung: No, only as the image. Immortality belongs to the child of the anima. Inasmuch as the anima has not brought forth, she assumes immortality.

When she brings forth she dies. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 168.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/81e63-1carl.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3PP5H9LBVG390&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=15770062`

Carl Jung: A glance at the Scriptures, however, is enough to show us the importance of the devil in the divine drama of redemption. (2019-12-21 15:13)

[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

Hence the devil remained outside the Trinity as the “ape of God” and in opposition to it.

Medieval representations of the triune God as having three heads are based on the three-headedness of Satan, as we find it, for instance, in Dante.

This would point to an infernal Antitrinity, a true “umbra trinitatis” analogous to the Antichrist.

The devil is, undoubtedly, an awkward figure: he is the “odd man out” in the Christian cosmos.

That is why people would like to minimize his importance by euphemistic ridicule or by ignoring his existence altogether; or, better still, to lay the blame for him at man’s door.

This is in fact done by the very people who would protest mightily if sinful man should credit himself, equally, with the origin of all good.

A glance at the Scriptures, however, is enough to show us the importance of the devil in the divine drama of redemption.

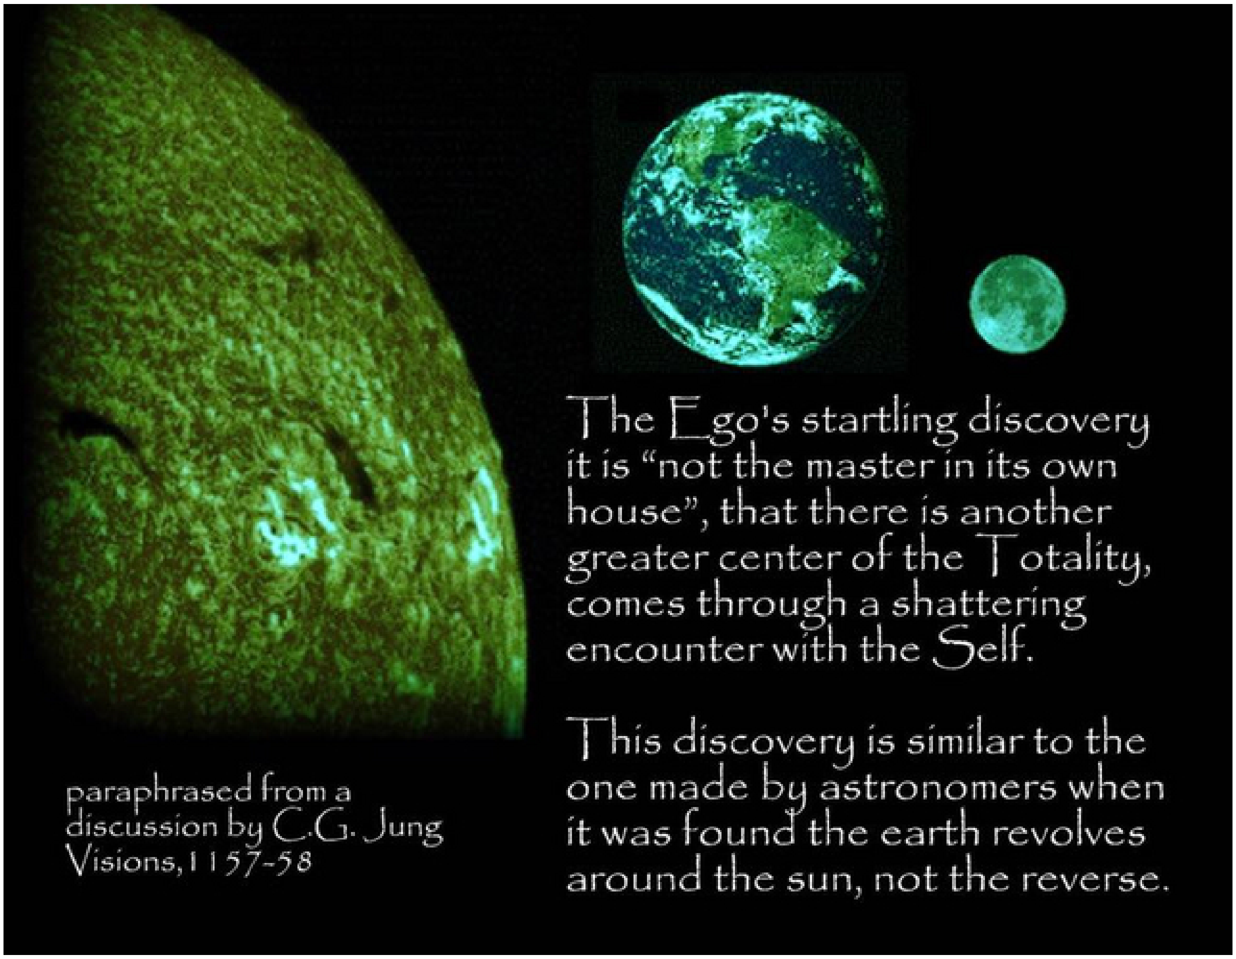
If the power of the Evil One had been as feeble as certain persons would wish it to appear, either the world would not have needed God himself to come down to it or it would have lain within the power of man to set the world to rights, which has certainly not happened so far ‘Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 252.

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3IEIOLUOZSBSN&keywords=jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=1577006463`

Carl Jung: The innermost substance is a microcosm, as every star is a microcosm. (2019-12-22 03:30)

[1]



The Ego's startling discovery it is "not the master in its own house", that there is another greater center of the Totality, comes through a shattering encounter with the Self.

This discovery is similar to the one made by astronomers when it was found the earth revolves around the sun, not the reverse.

paraphrased from a discussion by C.G. Jung Visions, 1157-58

[2]Visions : Notes of the seminar given in 1930-1934 (2 Volume Set) (Bollingen)

Dr. Harding: She might cry with the psalmist: "Lead me to the rock that is higher than I."

Dr. Jung: Yes, we have already met such a rock in the vision, and what did we say about it?

You see, it is an overwhelming situation; perhaps the only thing to do is to cling to a passing log and try to keep afloat.

One is pretty desperate.

Now what do people do in such conditions?

Miss Hannah: She would try to find the Self of which she is the object.

Dr. Barker: People usually pray.

Dr. Jung: There you have it.

She says: "I wanted to pray.

Then I knew that I could only pray to my star."

The star is a symbol of her uniqueness.

As stars are unique units in the heavens, so individuals are in a way stars, they are unique units.

The innermost substance is a microcosm, as every star is a microcosm.

The earth is a microcosm in the great cosmos of the stars and we are ourselves microcosms upon the earth.

Each of us, every living being, is a small earth, one could say, because we are in intimate connection with the earth, we are partially earth, we are conscious of our earthly body, for instance.

The star symbol means the center of a mandala, and the meditation on the Self or the meditation on the mandala is prayer; in many different religions that concentration upon a point outside of oneself, not identical with oneself, is called prayer.

One could not say that the ego was the microcosm because the ego is only the center or the focus of the individual consciousness, and consciousness reaches only as far as the conscious material reaches.

It doesn't even cover the very important functions of the digestion, or the heart; for instance, there are enormous spaces of the psyche that lie beyond the conscious sphere. So the totality of all that is not the ego-the ego is merely one part that belongs to a totality-the sum total is called the Self.

The center of that totality does not necessarily coincide with the ego system, just as the center of our galaxy of stars does not coincide with our sun, and the center of our solar system does not coincide with the earth; we cannot assume that our earth is the center of the universe.

It was discovered long ago that the earth is in the periphery of something bigger, it is an appendix of the sun, and even the sun is an appendix of a larger system, a galaxy of unknown extent.

We cannot think of our earth as a sun, nothing is revolving round us except perhaps the moon; the ego is a little system like the earth with the moon, but it is by no means the center of the universe.

The Self is the center of the totality of the psyche in as far as we can measure it or have an intuition about it, or in as far as we have dreams about it, and surely beyond, for we cannot assume that we are informed through our dreams of everything that is happening in our psyche.

We cannot even be certain that it is our own psyche; it might be, but there are many things in our unconscious, and we are by no means sure whether they really belong to us or to somebody else.

It is quite sure that we are somewhere swimming in the same river with everybody else, and that certain contents are flowing and drifting in between individuals, so sometimes they are in me and sometimes they are in another.

Therefore in a desperate situation like this, the religious reaction is absolutely to the point; this woman must have something to cling to that lifts her out of the rush of the waters; otherwise she will be carried away.

If she wants to stop, to become reflective, if she wants to realize her inner vision, she must have a point d 'appui; she must have a point outside of the earth, where she can put in her lever.

And that is the Self, often symbolized as a star, the real center of the mandala.

Now she goes on: "I took it" (the star) "forth from my breast and laid it on the ground and knelt before it."

Here we learn that the star has been in her breast.

And with what was it identical there?

Mrs. Baumann: It is the flame in anahata. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 1158-1159

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/efcc1-12bmaster.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Visions-Notes-seminar-1930-1934-Bollingen/dp/0691099715/ref=sr_1_1?crid=336UZVTDFZE35&keywords=jung+visions+seminar&qid=1577006787&sprefi`

E.A. Bennet: Mrs. Jung died at 10.30 this morning. C.G. came up to the Niehus's house to tell me and to say goodbye. (2019-12-22 04:30)

[1]

[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Küsnacht, 23rd November 1955

Arrived at Zürich station at 12.25 and was met by C.G.

He told me Mrs. Jung was very ill and so I would not be staying with them but with his daughter Marianne Niehus.

But he took me to the Seestrasse for lunch; his second daughter, Mrs. Baumann, was there.

We had a long talk after lunch, mainly about schizophrenia.

This followed my reference in a lecture to a psychotic patient.

He [Jung] spoke of schizophrenia as a protection from the shadow, and usually the collective shadow.

Some say they can’t be perfect and recall some episode in the distant past; but they refuse to look at recent events, the sin of yesterday, that is too much for them.

Or when people are in a depression they may, on the contrary, take on the sins of the whole world.

He also spoke of the Germans who must always be ‘behind’ something – no confidence in just being a man; they must belong to a society, or be a doctor, or have a title.

Even an ordinary person, for instance a woman who has died, is described as ‘so-andso, the wife of…’, not just as herself.

In England it is different; being a gentleman is enough, but not in Germany.

He spoke of his wife’s illness and his dead friends coming in his dreams – death is in the air.

He had a feeling that the bridge had broken, she was different.

Later he mentioned his religious experience at Basel at the age of eleven1 and went on to talk of his father’s library.

He himself was a voracious reader and some books from his grandfather’s library were there, so he read everything.

He said that even at school he had always been suspected of being a fraud – as when the teacher refused to believe he had written his essay; there was so much in it the teacher had never heard of that he concluded C.G. had got someone else to write it for him.

‘I was always a bit too intelligent and people didn’t like it, thought there was some trick about it.’

27th, November 1955

Mrs. Jung died at 10.30 this morning. C.G. came up to the Niehus’s house to tell me and to say goodbye.

He said that four days ago, on Tuesday at breakfast, she had said she felt she was going to die and he said, ‘Oh, don’t think of such things’.

Later that morning he received the medical report they were awaiting which showed how grave the prognosis was.

He struggled with himself about telling her but he did so; she was quite undisturbed, and in a way relieved for ever since her operation she had been preparing for death.

Sometimes she had looked better, but she was very ‘grey’ at other times.

he had been working on the Grail legends in the original.

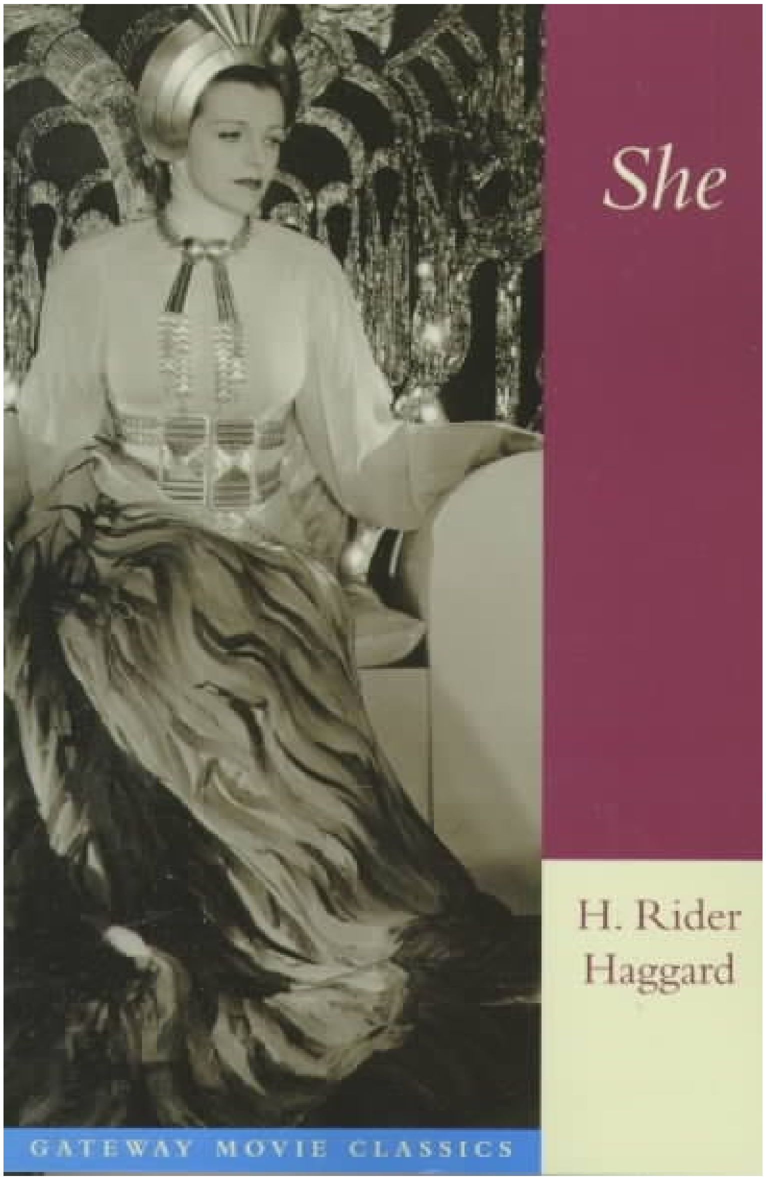
They had been married fifty-two years – a very full and wonderful life.

He spoke of Cicero’s De Senectute (that is, ‘concerning old age’), and how life ended when it was fulfilled.
E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 144-148

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/32c05-422bbennet.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2C81I2OB03808&keywords=carl+jung+bennet+conversations&qid=15

Carl Jung: Appendix to Lecture 16 1925 Seminar (2019-12-22 05:32)

[1]



[2]Analytical Psychology: Notes of the Seminar given in 1925 by C.G. Jung (Collected Works of C.g. Jung)

“L’Atlantide”

Mr. Bacon read the report of the committee on L’Atlantide.

The committee were of divided opinions as to the proper psychological interpretation.

One view was that the book demonstrated a conflict in Benoît’s mind between his spiritual side and a tendency toward material considerations.

It was felt, for example, that he was conscious of misusing the messages of the unconscious for the sake of writing “bestsellers.”

Looked at from that angle, Antinéa was not accepted as a true anima figure—that is, a creation of unconscious fantasies—but was taken as having been more than half constructed with a view to literary effect.

Another view represented in the committee was that the book represented a conflict between what was rational and what was irrational in Benoît’s psychology, rather than as a conflict between a spiritual and a materialistic viewpoint.

Mr. Aldrich, differing from both of these viewpoints, presented a minority report in which he valiantly defended Antinéa not only as a true anima figure, but also as being a symbol of positive importance.

According to his view, Antinéa was neither a good woman nor an evil one, but complete on all sides.

He has summarized his report as follows:

“The natural complement of a complete woman is a complete man.

Insofar as the man is incompletely developed, or refuses to give her more than one side of his nature, he may expect that she will punish him. In Benoît’s romance, the hero is split in two: the sensual side of him is personified by Saint-A vit, while Morhange stands for an infantile and conventional sort of spirituality.

In effect, the hero goes to Antinéa and says, ‘I tender you my sensual side, because Nature drives me; but I mean to deny you any participation in my spiritual side because, according to my conventional morality, love of woman and spirituality are opposites and cannot be reconciled.’

Naturally, this aroused a devil in Antinéa—as it would in any woman who had any individuality.

Obviously the right woman for a man is the woman who complements his own stage of development: the mother is suitable for the baby, the wife for the man who is winning his place in the world, and the hetaira—the completely developed woman, the comrade—for the man who has achieved complete individuality, the Wise Man.

Antinéa would have been a delightful comrade for a Wise Man; but for a man who had not passed out of the Warrior stage she was as inappropriate and fatal as a wife would be for a baby.”

Dr. Jung: The most interesting point about this book is the way in which it differs from She, is it not, Mr. Bacon?

Mr. Bacon: Yes, I must say I was a little confused in trying to get at the differences, but for one thing there is the theme of luxury greatly emphasized in Benoît’s book.

Miss Raevsky: Not only that, there is a sensualism that is much developed in it, even in Antinéa.

Dr. Jung: Yes, if you think of the outside details, there is a tremendous difference. In L’Atlantide as you say, there is an atmosphere of luxury, the beauty of the place is dwelt upon, the way which the people are received is described so as to bring out the details, while the corresponding features in She are very sparsely treated. Benoît is outspokenly esthetical.

One could [not?] imagine an Anglo-Saxon writer paying as much attention to these physical details.

Haggard pays a good deal of attention to them himself, in fact, as for example when he describes an afternoon tea under perfectly absurd conditions, but when Haggard does this, it is with a sort of frugality; it is the sort of sensuality that belongs to the sportsman, while Benoît's is that of the salon.

When you mention the sensuality in L'Atlantide, you have something, but there is a still greater difference.

Benoît fully acknowledges the place of sexuality, while in Haggard it always appears as a fiendish element.

In Benoît it plays a big part, while in all of Haggard's books it is decidedly in the background.

One could say that one had here the French and the Anglo-Saxon viewpoints in opposition.

We cannot assume that the Anglo-Saxon view is the only one in harmony with Heaven; we must assume that the French view has also justification.

So it is worthwhile to go into some detail about this question of attitude.

In order to do that we must pay some attention to Antinéa.

I am not sure if the class got a very clear picture of Antinéa.

Mr. Bacon, will you describe the ways in which Antinéa differs from "She"?

Mr. Bacon: Antinéa is a much more physiological object than "She," who is very nebulous.

Antinéa is represented as full of animal desire.

Mr. Aldrich: "She" says nothing to me, while Antinéa is to me a real woman.

I think I was the only member of the committee who did not think of her as poison.

If the author could only have got himself together and not approached her as a split personality, he would have found Antinéa a very nice girl.

Dr. Jung: But you must admit it is a bit of a bad joke to have a salon full of dead men.

Mr. Aldrich: Ah, but she gave them immortality.

Dr. Jung: I must say that view is a little too optimistic, but it is true that Antinéa is usually depreciated, unnecessarily so if her circumstances are taken into consideration.

She is an omnipotent queen who can have her every mood and whim satisfied.

Such an Oriental queen can be very cruel without being vicious.

If we compare her with other similar types, she is not so bad.

Moreover, she is in a difficult situation.

She is a woman who has not been hampered by interferences of education; she could unfold quite completely, but we should not assume that this is the best thing that can happen.

She sees and appreciates natural values, and she is intelligent and educated intellectually, but she has had no education in the higher values.

One can be doubtful, of course, about whether or not these higher values are worthwhile, but it would be a mistake to think they can be utterly neglected.

If we compare “She” with Antinéa, we can see that the tragedy hangs about this matter of values.

“She” is tortured for thousands of years till she admits them. Antinéa is not even so far along that she admits or sees their existence, and so she does not fight, and we see that Antinéa is on a lower level than “She.” Our sympathy therefore goes to the latter.

But Antinéa has all the charm of the native woman, all the erotic power and instinctiveness that goes with such a woman.

This is somewhat gone in “She,” for “She” is already under the influence of things.

But we must remember that Antinéa is not a real woman, but the anima of a Frenchman, and here we have a typical difference between the French and the Anglo-Saxons.

If ever there was a book that could throw light on this difference it is this one.

I should like to hear from you on this point. How do you explain this peculiar difference?

Mr. Schmitz: I believe that the difference between the French and the Anglo-Saxons, between the French and the rest of Europe for that matter, arises out of the difference in their relation to the pagan world.

The French are the only people having a direct connection with this world.

When the Romans conquered Gaul they surrounded it with Roman culture.

So when Christianity came, it found France a civilized state in contradistinction to Germany.

The Germans resisted Roman culture, so there is no continuity of tradition with the pagan world. Christianity found us barbaric, and our paganism has remained with the barbaric element in it.

This difference runs through the whole French culture.

Dr. Jung: What Mr. Schmitz says is very true.

Therein lies the reason for the difference between the French and the Anglo-Saxon viewpoints.

Gaul was civilized in early times; it even contained a fertile Roman culture at a time when Germany and the Anglo-Saxon were in a most primitive state of development.

In those days even Paris was in existence as a civilized place, and there were poets, even emperors, coming from the natives of Gaul.

It was, in other words, a rich civilization, the old Gauls having been assimilated into the Roman people.

The Celtic languages disappeared, and the Germanic tribes that came in were absorbed by the Romanized population and so received the Roman civilization also.

On that basis Christianity was planted, not on a wild people as in Germany.

Therefore there is an absolute continuity between the Roman mentality and that of the Middle Ages.

There is no break.

Even certain early Church Fathers were French.

Besides the Roman, there was a strong Greek influence that reached up the Rhone, and cultural influences from the Mediterranean came at a very early date.

All of these influences from the pagan world had a peculiar effect.

They fortified the antique layers to such an extent that Christianity could not undo it.

The same is true more or less for all the Mediterranean peoples; that is, they remained more pagan than Christian.

It would be hard to say this to a Frenchman, because the French think of themselves as good Catholics.

And so they are, in one sense; even when most skeptical they are still good Catholics.

Otherwise Voltaire and Diderot would not be as acceptable as they are.

Thus one can be Catholic in a negative way, and be pleased with venom against the thing formerly most reverenced.

Those within the Church have a most positive attitude.

They center about Catholicism because they feel it embraces life.

Within its scope paganism persists, and so one finds among the most religious Frenchmen a full recognition of sexuality.

Today their point of view about sexuality is that it is amoral.

It is just obvious that it is accepted, and morality scarcely enters into the question.

A man goes regularly to church and keeps up whatever sexual practices he may see fit, for sexuality in his eyes has nothing to do with morality.

That is why sexuality receives the special treatment it does in France.

This peculiar difference explains, I think, every difference between “She” and Antinéa.

And since Antinéa has so definite a character, we can reconstruct something of the author’s conscious and arrive at an appreciation of a modern Frenchman.

Then there are other figures that throw much light on French psychology.

Take Le Mesge, for example.

Here is a pure rationalist living in an altogether irrational way, a thing typical of the French.

It is characteristic of the French mind to allow the limit of irrationality in behavior, and nowhere else can one see so many comical figures in reality; but they are nonetheless rational in their viewpoints.

Then Count Bielowsky, in spite of being a Pole, is a typical French figure of the Third Empire, a habitué of Paris.

His figure forms a necessary counterpart to that of Morhange, whose flirtatious attitude toward the church is compensated by Bielowsky’s flirtatious attitude toward “high life.”

The mediating figure between the two is Le Mesge.

Such contradictions always demand a compromise, and this comes about through a rational mediation.

But here there is too little life, so then Saint-A vit is brought in to provide temperament and passion.

A Frenchman always allows himself to have “fits,” where he can apply a whole arsenal of rhetoric.

There comes out a long series of tremendous words, put together in a perfect style, and then he is all right.

Mr. Aldrich: Morhange, according to the way I see him, has only a very feeble spirituality. I don’t believe he ever had a religious emotion.

Dr. Jung: But you are Anglo-Saxon and he was a Catholic.

We can never know what Sacré-Coeur means to them, nor how they can excite themselves over the image of the Virgin.

We can say then that there is a peculiar atmosphere in L’Atlantide, and an altogether different one from She.

This is something I felt very profoundly and wonder if you did not also.

When one reads such a book one asks oneself, “What does it lead to?”

What does it mean to you?

Mrs. Zinno: It seems to me a going to death rather than to life.

Mr. Bacon: There is an indefinable sense of cheapness about it to me. It ends as if preparing for a sequel.

Mrs. Zinno: I think the figure of “She” is an effort to connect unreality to reality, but Antinéa remains stuck in unreality, that is, the unconscious.

Dr. Jung: You have touched upon something important there.

Antinéa does not try to get out, she makes no attempt to reach the world, nor to let the world reach her.

“She” is planning to rule the world, to get at it in some way.

That is a peculiarity of the Anglo-Saxon, this desire to get at the world and rule it.

It is quite conscious in England, and probably in fifty years will be equally so in America.

But the French point of view is to remain where they are.

The French are really not concerned with ruling the world, it is an affectation that Napoleon, who was not a true Frenchman, brought—i. e., the idea of dominating Europe.

The French are concerned with their own country.

It is no wonder then that Antinéa sticks where she is.

What I really feel about the issue is that it is hopeless.

It will be repeated one hundred times, and then there is an end of the whole business.

Antinéa will die, and then she will be on a throne in all her royal beauty with appropriate adornments.

It is a sort of apotheosis, something one can see at the end of a film, the idea of La Gloire.

There is a pantheon of fallen heroes, and there the whole thing ends in vain ambition.

Now, in She there is the feeling of enormous expectation at the end. One does not know, but the future is looked for.

What makes a great difference between the anima of the Frenchman and that of the Anglo-Saxon is that the latter contains a mysterious side of promise, therefore there is more feeling of spiritual potencies in “She” than in Antinéa.

All that element is taken out of Antinéa by the supposition of her birth.

That rational suspicion is, of course, a tremendous depreciation of the function of the archetypes.

It is the “nothing but” spirit again.

The value is gone from the archetype.

It says, “You can’t base yourself on the archetypes, so it is better not to build at all, the ground is not safe.”

This is a peculiar fact that has to be reckoned with in the analysis of Frenchmen.

It is very hard to get them to take it seriously enough.

Their rationalism is blocking them at every point.

They have an exact view about everything and know what it is to the last dot.

They exhaust themselves in that fight.
Because of this knowing how everything works, they are inclined to depreciate the immediate facts of the soul, and to assume that everything is the result of an old civilization.

This was the attitude they had to take up in the Middle Ages as a compensation against the force of antiquity.

Christianity was not strong enough to hold them at the beginning, and this rationalism gave support to the Church.

The relation of this rationalism to the Church is something that an Anglo-Saxon can hardly understand.

Dr. de Angulo: Will you discuss the point made in the report of the committee to the effect that Antinéa was not an unconscious figure but was put into the unconscious setting deliberately?

Dr. Jung: I think Antinéa is partly conscious and partly unconscious.

When the Anglo-Saxon says she is twisted by the personal unconscious, he is commenting on the peculiar racial character of Antinéa.

Mrs. Jung: Could you say something about the relation of the animus to immortality in the same way that you discussed the anima and immortality?

Dr. Jung: The animus seems to go back only to the fourteenth century, and the anima to remote antiquity, but with the animus I must say I am uncertain altogether.

Mrs. Jung: It had seemed to me that the animus was not a symbol of immortality, but of movement and life, and that it is man’s attitude that gives that different aspect to the anima.

Dr. Jung: It is true that the animus is often represented by a moving figure—an aviator or a traffic manager.

Perhaps there is something in the historical fact of women being more stable, therefore there is more movement in the unconscious.

Mr. Schmitz: Surely there could have been no repression of the animus at the time of the matriarchy.

Dr. Jung: We cannot be too sure.

Mrs. Zinno: The figures of gods carry the idea of immortality, do they not?

smuch as they are also animus figures and come into women's dreams, I should think one could say the animus carried the meaning of immortality also.

Dr. Jung: Yes, that is true, but there remains a tremendous difference between the animus and the anima.

Mr. Schmitz: Is immortality in the individual?

Dr. Jung: No, only as the image. Immortality belongs to the child of the anima. Inasmuch as the anima has not brought forth, she assumes immortality.

When she brings forth she dies.

But this problem of the anima and the animus is far too complex to be dealt with here.

The End Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 146-168

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/e0400-1she.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Analytical-Psychology-Notes-Seminar-Collected/dp/0415046939/ref=sr_1_1?crid=318O068R233CB&keywords=carl+jung+1925+seminar&qid=1577090342&`

Carl Jung: "The right proportion, however, cannot be established by man alone." (2019-12-22 07:23)

[1]

"I do not understand my dreams better than any of you,
For they are always somewhat beyond my grasp and I have the same trouble with them as anyone who knows nothing about dream interpretatation.
Knowledge is of no matter when it comes to one's own dreams...."
www.jungquotes.com
Carl Jung

To Mr. Lyons

Dear Mr. Lyons, 12 September 1946

I'm fully aware of the fact that it must be a most bewildering business to a rational American to collide with such strange a psychology as mine.

It seems to be full of the most unwarrantable contradictions.

On the one hand you ought to know more about my work and on the other hand you have no chance to talk to me.

I understand that such a situation is more or less incomprehensible but I should advise you to read something about Zen Buddhism.

I have written a little introduction to one of Suzuki's books and you might get hold of one of his volumes.

That would give you a certain idea of what you are up against.

One can indeed use analysis as an escape and one has to be quite particularly careful in your case that such a thing does not happen, because you must learn to use your own powers and the more one helps you to do so, the more one hinders you.

There must be a certain optimum and this consists in seeing me and not seeing me, both in the right proportions.

The right proportion, however, cannot be established by man alone.

It will be established by peculiar circumstances over which we have little or no control.

Presumably you come across myself in the right moment and then you gain something, but if you try to force circumstances it is quite likely that you don't hit it off.

Our last meeting in Ascona was absolutely on the right line.

Such a thing can happen again .

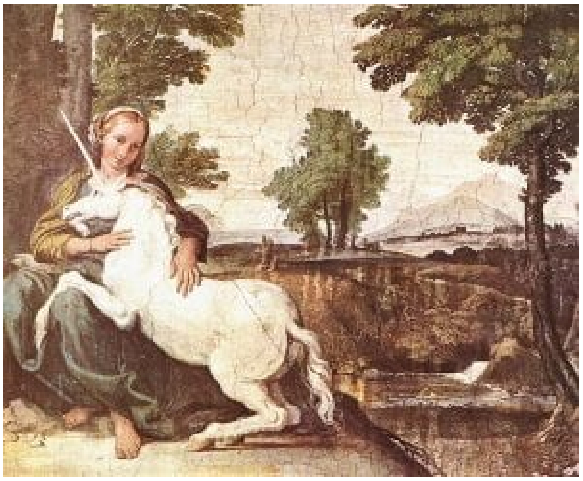
In the meantime you must hunt alone and seek it where you find it.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 441.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/9d000-dream.jpg`

Carl Jung: Like this irritable beast, he reduced the world to chaos and could only be moved to love in the lap of a pure virgin. (2019-12-22 07:35)



[1]https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/06910 97720/ref=sr _1 _2?crid=22CFYASFJFZUX &keywords=carl+jung+psychology+and+religion &qid=1577090101 &sprefix=carl+jung+psychol %2Caps %2C181 &sr=8-2

The dual aspect of the Father is by no means unknown to religious speculation.

This is proved by the allegory of the monoceros, or unicorn, who symbolizes Yahweh's angry moodiness.

Like this irritable beast, he reduced the world to chaos and could only be moved to love in the lap of a pure virgin.

Luther was familiar with a deus absconditus. Murder, sudden death, war, sickness, crime, and every kind of abomination fall in with the unity of God.

If God reveals his nature and takes on definite form as a man, then the opposites in him must fly apart: here good, there evil.

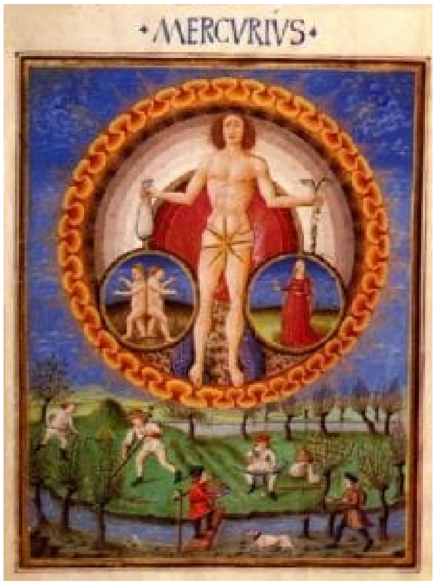
So it was that the opposites latent in the Deity flew apart when the Son was begotten and manifested themselves in the struggle between Christ and the devil, with the Persian Ormuzd-Ahriman antithesis, perhaps, as the underlying model.

The world of the Son is the world of moral discord, without which human consciousness could hardly have progressed so far as it has towards mental and spiritual differentiation.

That we are not unreservedly enthusiastic about this progress is shown by the fits of doubt to which our modern consciousness is subject Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 259

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_2?crid=22CFYASFJFZUX&keywords=carl+jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=15770`

Carl Jung: They are the repositories of the secrets of the soul, and this matchless knowledge is set forth in grand symbolical images. (2019-12-22 09:21)



[1]The Practice of Psychotherapy: Essays on the Psychology of the Transference and Other Subjects (Bollingen Series)

If, as many are fain to believe, the unconscious were only nefarious, only evil, then the situation would be simple and the path clear: to do good and to eschew evil.

But what is "good" and what is "evil"? The unconscious is not just evil by nature, it is also the source of the highest good: not only dark but also light, not only bestial, semi-human, and demonic but superhuman, spiritual, and, in the classical sense of the word, “divine.”

The Mercurius who personifies the unconscious is essentially “duplex,” paradoxically dualistic by nature, fiend, monster, beast, and at the same time panacea, “the Philosophers’ son,” sapientia Dei, and donum Spiritus Sancti.

Since this is so, all hope of a simple solution is abolished.

All definitions of good and evil become suspect or actually invalid.

As moral forces, good and evil remain unshaken, andas the simple verities for which the penal code, the ten commandments, and conventional Christian morality take them undoubted.

But conflicting loyalties are much more subtle and dangerous things, and a conscience sharpened by worldly wisdom can no longer rest content with precepts, ideas, and fine words. When it has to deal with that remnant of primeval psyche, pregnant with the future and yearning for development, it grows uneasy and looks round for some guiding principle or fixed point.

Indeed, once this stage has been reached in our dealings with the unconscious, these desiderata become a pressing necessity.

Since the only salutary powers visible in the world today are the great psychotherapeutic systems which we call the religions, and from which we expect the soul’s salvation, it is quite natural that many people should make the justifiable and often successful attempt to find a niche for themselves in one of the existing creeds and to acquire a deeper insight into the meaning of the traditional saving verities.

This solution is normal and satisfying in that the dogmatically formulated truths of the Christian Church express, almost perfectly, the nature of psychic experience.

They are the repositories of the secrets of the soul, and this matchless knowledge is set forth in grand symbolical images.

The unconscious thus possesses a natural affinity with the spiritual values of the Church, particularly in their dogmatic form, which owes its special character to centuries of theological controversy absurd as this seemed in the eyes of later generations and to the passionate efforts of many great men Carl Jung, CW 16 Para 391

[2]Carl Jung and Princeton University Press

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Practice-Psychotherapy-Psychology-Transference-Bollingen/dp/0691018707/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+cw+16&qid=1577090505&sr=8-1`
2. `https://www.facebook.com/CarlJungPublications/`

Carl Jung: The most important of the symbolical statements about Christ are those which reveal the attributes of the hero's life: (2019-12-22 09:56)

[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

If we are to answer this psychological question, we must first of all examine the Christ-symbolism contained in the New Testament, together with the patristic allegories and medieval iconography, and compare this material with the archetypal content of the unconscious psyche in order to find out what archetypes have been constellated.

The most important of the symbolical statements about Christ are those which reveal the attributes of the hero's life:

Improbable origin
Divine father
Hazardous birth
Rescue in the nick of time
Precocious development
Conquest of the mother and of death
Miraculous deeds
A tragic, early end
Symbolically significant manner of death
Post-mortem effects (reappearances, signs and marvels, etc.)

As the Logos, Son of the Father, Rex gloriae, Judex mundi, Redeemer, and Saviour, Christ is himself God, an all-embracing totality, which, like the definition of Godhead, is expressed iconographically by the circle or mandala.

Here I would mention only the traditional representation of the Rex gloriae in a mandala, accompanied by a quaternity composed of the four symbols of the evangelists (including the four seasons, four winds, four rivers, and so on)

Another symbolism of the same kind is:

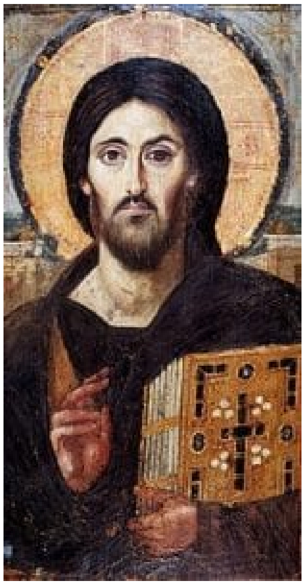
Choir of saints, angels, and elders grouped round Christ (or God) in the center. Here Christ symbolizes the integration of the kings and prophets of the Old Testament
As a shepherd he [Christ] is the leader and center of the flock
He is the vine, and those that hang on him are the branches
His body is bread to be eaten, and his blood wine to be drunk

He is also the mystical body formed by the congregation

In his human manifestation he is the hero and God-man, born without sin, more complete and more perfect than the natural man, who is to him what a child is to an adult, or an animal (sheep) to a human being Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 229

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_2?crid=2S1APTGZ6707X&keywords=carl+jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=15770`

Carl Jung: At any rate the documentary reports relating to the general projection and assimilation of the Christ-figure are unequivocal. (2019-12-22 11:54)



[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

They think they have to do with rational facts, whereas it entirely escapes them that it is and always has been primarily a question of irrational psychic phenomena.

That this is so can be seen plainly enough from the unhistorical character of the gospels, whose only concern was to represent the miraculous figure of Christ as graphically and impressively as possible.

Further evidence of this is supplied by the earliest literary witness, Paul, who was closer to the events in question than the apostles.

It is frankly disappointing to see how Paul hardly ever allows the real Jesus of Nazareth to get a word in Even at this early date (and not only in John) Christ is completely overlaid, or rather smothered, by metaphysical conceptions: he is the ruler over all daemonic forces, the cosmic saviour, the mediating God-man.

The whole pre-Christian and Gnostic theology of the Near East (some of whose roots go still further back) wraps itself about him and turns him before our eyes into a dogmatic figure who has no more need of historicity.

At a very early stage, therefore, the real Christ vanished behind the emotions and projections that swarmed about him from far and near; immediately and almost without trace he was absorbed into the surrounding religious systems and moulded into their archetypal exponent.

He [Christ] became the collective figure whom the unconscious of his contemporaries expected to appear, and for this reason it is pointless to ask who he "really" was.

Were he human and nothing else, and in this sense historically true, he would probably be no more enlightening a figure than, say, Pythagoras, or Socrates, or Apollonius of Tyana.

He opened men's eyes to revelation precisely because he was, from everlasting, God, and therefore unhistorical; and he functioned as such only by virtue of the consensus of unconscious expectation.

If nobody had remarked that there was something special about the wonder-working Rabbi from Galilee, the darkness would never have noticed that a light was shining.

Whether he lit the light with his own strength, or whether he was the victim of the universal longing for light and broke down under it, are questions which, for lack of reliable information, only faith can decide.

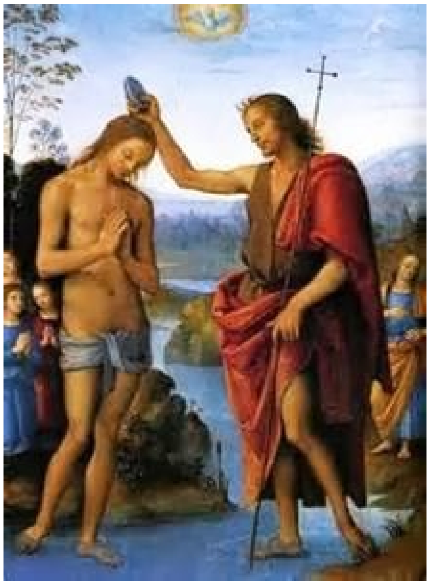
At any rate the documentary reports relating to the general projection and assimilation of the Christ-figure are unequivocal.

There is plenty of evidence for the co-operation of the collective unconscious in view of the abundance of parallels from the history of religion.

In these circumstances we must ask ourselves what it was in man that was stirred by the Christian message, and what was the answer he gave Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 228

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=118C8KT966DZE&keywords=jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=1577091514`

Carl Jung: Anything that a man postulates as being a greater totality than himself can become a symbol of the Self. (2019-12-22 14:09)



[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

These mythological statements, coming from within the Christian sphere as well as from outside it, adumbrate an archetype that expresses itself in essentially the same symbolism and also occurs in individual dreams or in fantasy-like projections upon living people (transference phenomena, hero-worship, etc.).

The content of all such symbolic products is the idea of an overpowering, all-embracing, complete or perfect being, represented either by a man of heroic proportions, or by an animal with magical attributes, or by a magical vessel or some other "treasure hard to attain," such as a jewel, ring, crown, or, geometrically, by a mandala This archetypal idea is a reflection of the individual's wholeness, i.e., of the Self, which is present in him as an unconscious image.

The conscious mind can form absolutely no conception of this totality, because it includes not only the conscious but also the unconscious psyche, which is, as such, inconceivable and irrepresentable.

The archetype of the Self in the soul of every man that responded to the Christian message, with the result that the concrete Rabbi Jesus was rapidly assimilated by the constellated archetype.

In this way Christ realized the idea of the Self.

But as one can never distinguish empirically between a symbol of the Self and a God-image, the two ideas, however much we try to differentiate them, always appear blended together, so that the Self appears synonymous with the inner Christ of the Johannine and Pauline writings, and Christ with God ("of one substance with the Father"), just as the atman appears as the individualized Self and at the same time as the animating principle of the cosmos, and Tao as a condition of mind and at the same time as the correct behaviour of cosmic events.

Psychologically speaking, the domain of "gods" begins where consciousness leaves off, for at that point man is already at the mercy of the natural order, whether he thrive or perish.

To the symbols of wholeness that come to him from there he attaches names which vary according to time and place The Self is defined psychologically as the psychic totality of the individual.

Anything that a man postulates as being a greater totality than himself can become a symbol of the Self.

For this reason the symbol of the Self is not always as total as the definition would require. Even the Christ-figure is not a totality, for it lacks the nocturnal side of the psyche’s nature, the darkness of the spirit, and is also without sin Carl Jung, CW 11, Paras 230-232

[2]Carl Jung and Princeton University Press

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=118C8KT966DZE&keywords=jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=1577091514`
2. `https://www.facebook.com/CarlJungPublications/`

Christmas has come. The God is in the egg. (2019-12-23 03:27)

Set the egg before you, the God in his beginning.
And behold it.
And incubate it with the magical warmth of your gaze.
Carl Jung
Red Book
www.jungquotes.com

Set the egg before you, the God in his beginning.

And behold it.

And incubate it with the magical warmth of your gaze.

HERE THE INCANTATIONS BEGIN.

Christmas has come. The God is in the egg.

I have prepared a rug for my God, an expensive red the land

Of morning.

He shall be surrounded by the shimmer of magnificence of his Eastern land.

I am the mother, the simple maiden, who gave birth and did not know how.

I am the careful father, who protected the maiden.

I am the shepherd, who received the message as he guarded his herd at night on the dark fields.

I am the holy animal that stood astonished and cannot grasp the becoming of the God ..

I am the wise man who came from the East, suspecting the miracle from afar.

And I am the egg that surrounds and nurtures the seed of the God in me.

The solemn hours lengthen.

And my humanity is wretched and suffers torment.

Since I am a giver of birth.

Whence do you delight me, 0h God!’

He is the eternal emptiness and the eternal fullness.

Nothing resembles him and he resembles everything.

Eternal darkness and eternal brightness.

Eternal below and eternal above.

Double nature in one.

Simple in the manifold.

Meaning in absurdity.

Freedom in bondage.

Subjugated when victorious.

old in youth.

Yes in no.

Oh

light of the middle way, enclosed in the egg,

embryonic,

full or ardor, oppressed.

Fully expectant,

dreamlike, awaiting lost memories.

As heavy as stone, hardened.

Molten, transparent.

Streaming bright, coiled on itself.

Amen, you are the lord of the beginning.

Amen, you are the star of the East.

Amen, you are the flower that blooms over everything.

Amen, you are the deer that breaks out of the forest.

Amen, you are the song that sounds far over the water.

Amen, you are the beginning and the end.

One word that was never spoken.

One light that was never lit up.

An unparalleled confusion.

And a road without end.

I forgive myself these words, as you also forgive me for wanting your blazing light.

Rise up, you gracious fire of old night.

I kiss the threshold of your beginning.

Myhand prepares the rug and spreads abundant red flowers before you.

Rise up my friend, you who lay sick, break through the shell.

We have prepared a meal for you.

Gifts have been prepared for you.

Dancers await you.

We have built a house for you.

Your servants stand ready.

We drove herds together for you on green fields.

We filled your cup with red wine.

We set out fragrant fruit on golden dishes.

We knock at your prison and lay our ears against it.

The hours lengthen, tarry no longer.

We are wretched without you and our song is worn out.

We are miserable without you and wear out our songs.

We spoke all the words that our heart gave us.

What else do you want?

What else shall we fulfill for your

We open every door for you.

We bend our knees where you want us to.

We go to all points of the compass according to your wish.

We carry up what is below, and we turn what is above into what is below, as you command.

We give and take according to your wish.

We wanted to turn right, but go left, obedient to your sign. We rise and we fall, we sway and we remain still, we see and we are blind, we hear and we are deaf, we say yes and no, always hearing your word.

We do not comprehend and we live the incomprehensible.

We do not love and we live the unloved.

And we evolve around ourselves again and comprehend and live the understandable.

We love and live the loved, true to your law. /

Come to us, we who are willing from our own will.

Come to us, we who understand you from our own spirit.

Come to us, we who will warm you at our own fire.

Come to us, we who will heal you with our own art.

Come to us, we who will produce you out oj our own body.

Come, child, to father and mother.

We asked earth.

We asked Heaven.

We asked the sea.

We asked the wind.

We asked the fire.

We looked for you with all the peoples.

We looked for you with all the kings.

We looked for you with all the wise.

We looked for you in our own heads and hearts.

And we found you in the egg.

I have slain a precious human sacrifice for you, a youth and old man.

I have cut my skin with a knife.

I have sprinkled your altar with my own blood.

I have banished my father and mother so that you can live with me.

I have turned my night into day and went about at midday like a sleepwalker.

I have overthrown all the Gods, broken the laws, eaten the impure.

I have thrown down my sword and dressed in women’s clothing.

I shattered my firm castle and played like a child in the sand.

I saw warriors form into line of battle and I destroyed my suit of armor with a hammer.

I planted my field and let the fruit decay.

I made small everything that was great and made everything great that was small.

I exchanged my furthest goal for the nearest, and so I am ready. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Pages 284-285

Carl Jung: ...if you look long enough into a dark hole, then you perceive what is looking in. (2019-12-23 03:30)

[1]

Dear Professor: 29 October 1934

Please accept my sincere thanks for kindly sending me Jordan’s essay.

I believe that this essay should be published, as it deals with the actual shift of the physical approach to the psychological sphere.

This essay was inevitable.

It was inevitable that the systematic investigation of the unknown center of the atom, which has led to the conclusion that the observed system is also a disturbance caused by the observance would show that essence of the observing process will be perceptible in the disturbance caused by the actual observation.

To put it simply, if you look long enough into a dark hole, then you perceive what is looking in.

Hence, this is the principle of perception in Yoga, which derives all perception from the absolute emptiness of consciousness.

This method of cognition is thus a special case of the introspective exploration of the psychic in general.

With regard to Jordan’s reference to parapsychic manifestations, spatial clairvoyance is of course one of the most obvious phenomena to represent the relative nonexistence of our empirical image of space.

Taking this argument further, he would also necessarily have to bring in temporal clairvoyance, which would represent the relativity of the image of time.

Naturally, Jordan looks at these phenomena from the physical point of view, whereas I do so from the psychic point of view-specifically from the fact of the collective unconscious, as you have correctly noted, which presents a layer of the psychic in which individual distinctions of consciousness are more or less extinguished.

However, if individual consciousnesses in the unconscious were extinguished, then all perception in the unconscious would occur as in one person.

Jordan states that a sender and a receiver in the same conscious "space" observe the same object at the same time.

One could Just as easily tum this statement around and say that in unconscious "space: sender and receiver are one and the same perceiving object.

As you can see, my point of view as a psychologist would be that of the perceiving subject, whereas the physicist expresses himself from the standpoint of the common space in which two or more observers find themselves.

Carried to its ultimate conclusion, Jordan's approach would lead to the supposition of an absolute unconscious space in which an infinite number of observers are looking at the same object.

The psychological version would be: In the unconscious there is just one observer, who looks at an infinite number of objects.

II you wish to draw Jordan's attention to my writings, may I perhaps recommend that, in addition to the essays you have already quoted, you also mention the one in the same volume on "Das Grundproblem der Gegenwartigen Psychologie" [The Basic Problem of Contemporary Psychology]

With regard to the collective unconscious there is in the earlier volume, Seeleprobleme de Gegenwart [Soul Problems of the Present], an essay in which I go into this subject in some depth, namely "Die Struktur der Seele· [The Structure of the Soul] (Page 144)

I would be obliged if I could hold on to Jordan's essay for a while.

By the way, it has just occurred to me that on the subject of time relativity there is a book by a student of Eddington, Dunne, An Experiment with Time, in which he deals with temporal clairvoyance in a similar way to how Jordan deals with spatial clairvoyance.

He postulates an infinite number of time dimensions that more or less correspond to Jordan's "intermediary stages.

I would be very interested to hear how you respond to these arguments of Dunne's.

I also thank you for the news of your well-being and hope you continue to make progress.

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

[C. C. JUNG]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/a81ee-12bpascual.jpg`

Carl Jung: Such a dream has always to be understood under two aspects. (2019-12-23 04:30)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Jolande Jacobi

Dear Frau Jacobi, 27 October 1936

Best thanks for your kind letter.

I have just got back from America, where I had a pretty gruelling time.

I am thinking of severely restricting my work this winter because I am working on a book that has long been due.

I have also suspended most of my lectures and therefore cannot, unfortunately, accept your kind invitation to lecture in Vienna.

I regret very much that I cannot duplicate or triplicate myself, which would make things decidedly easier.

With regard to your dream, I entirely agree that it is a "big" one.

It is obviously dreamt in a state of introversion.

In such a state the deeper layers of the unconscious become activated, and since the collective unconscious does not keep strictly within the limits of time and space as we conceive them, shifts in time and space may easily occur.

If in a dream there is an intense regression in time, for instance back to earlier centuries, this also indicates a progression covering the same span of time.

Such a dream has always to be understood under two aspects.

On the one hand the historical root, on the other the freshness of the tree.

The tree is what grows in time.

The youth always signifies enterprise, hastening ahead, anticipation.

The tree expresses spiritual growth in time.

The planting of the tree means the beginning of a development whose fruits will appear in the new Platonic month.

The two historical vagabonds are the opposite of the youth, namely the historical, primitive element, the deposit of the past in the body.

The blood potion seals the union of opposites, the coniunctio oppositorum from which new growth will come.

The dream is in my opinion a look behind the scenes into the age-old processes of the human mind, which might explain your special feeling of happiness.

With best regards,

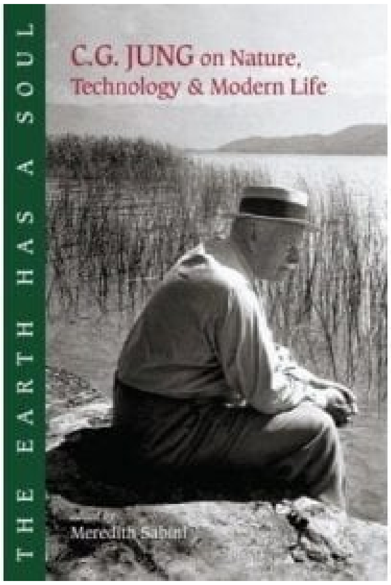
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol I, Pages 221-222

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/7ad1e-32bjacobi.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3UDYPDTBT7L1B&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577108224&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung: The man whose interests are all outside is never satisfied with what is necessary,..

(2019-12-23 04:36)



The man whose interests are all outside is never satisfied with what is necessary, but is perpetually hankering after something more and better which, true to his bias, he always seeks outside himself.

He forgets completely that, for all his outward successes, he himself remains the same inwardly, and he therefore laments his poverty if he possesses only one automobile when the majority have two.

Obviously the outward lives of men could do with a lot more bettering and beautifying, but these things lose their meaning when the inner man does not keep pace with them. To be satiated with "necessities" is no doubt an inestimable source of happiness, yet the inner man continues to raise his claim, and this can be satisfied by no outward possessions.

And the less this voice is heard in the chase after the brilliant things of this world, the more the inner man becomes the source of inexplicable misfortune and uncomprehended unhappiness in the midst of living conditions whose outcome was expected to be entirely different.

The externalization of life turns to incurable suffering, because no one can understand why he should suffer from himself.

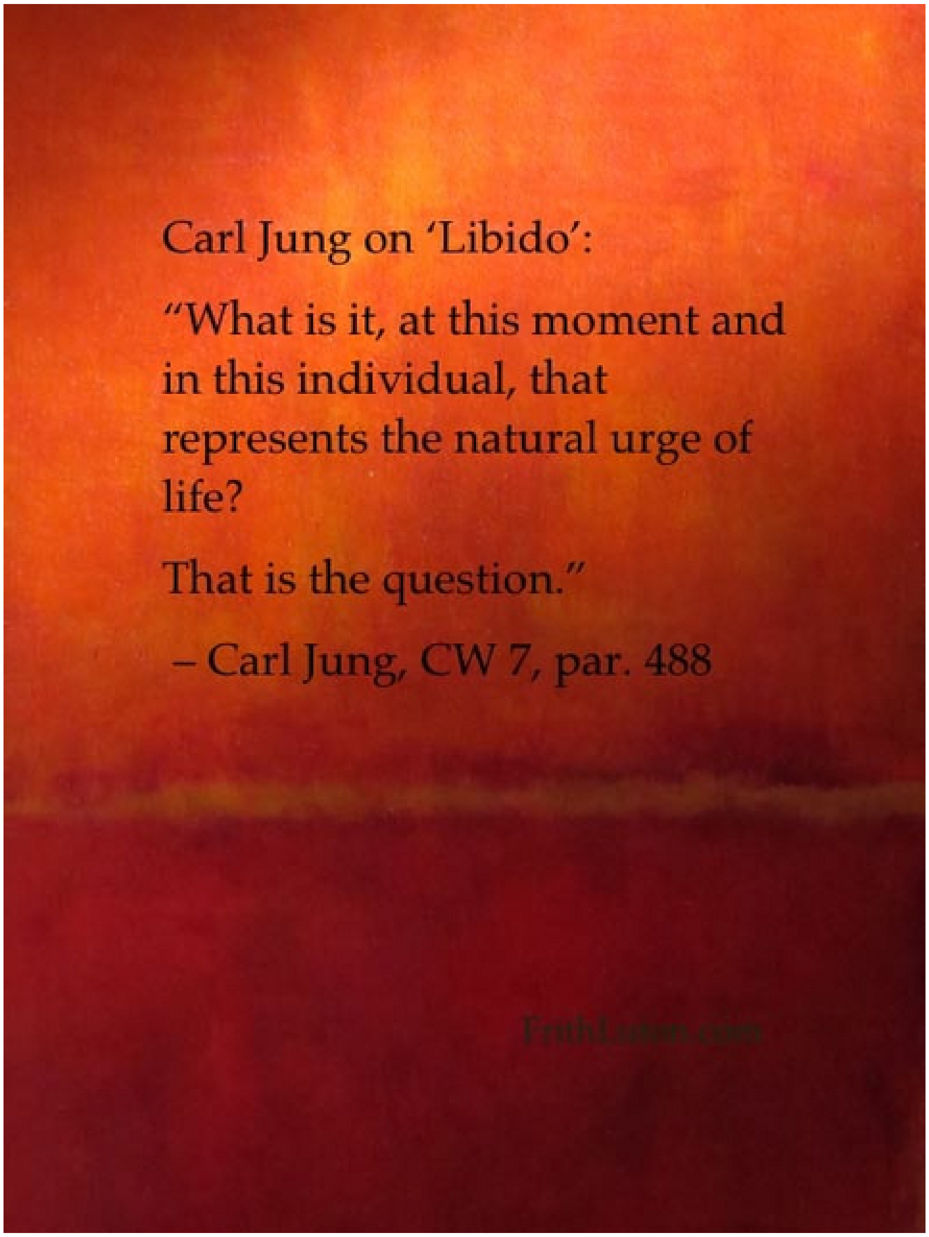
No one wonders at his insatiability, but regards it as his lawful right, never thinking that the one-sidedness of this psychic diet leads in the end to the gravest disturbances of equilibrium.

That is the sickness of Western man, and he will not rest until he has infected the whole world with his own greedy restlessness. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 962

The breathless drive for power and aggrandizement in the political, social, and intellectual sphere, gnawing at the soul of the Westerner with apparently insatiable greed, is spreading irresistibly in the East and threatens to have incalculable consequences.

Not only in India but in China, too, much has already perished where once the soul lived and throve. The externalization of culture may do away with a great many evils whose removal seems most desirable and beneficial, yet this step forward, as experience shows, is all too dearly paid for with a loss of spiritual culture. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 962

Dr. Jung asked "…did you have always the sense of being in control of your tools?" (2019-12-23 04:55)



Carl Jung on 'Libido':

"What is it, at this moment and in this individual, that represents the natural urge of life?

That is the question."

– Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 488

FrithLuton.com

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

[…did you have always the sense of being in control of your tools?"]

Lecture 5

Questions and Discussion

No written questions were handed in.

The following verbal question was asked:

“When you were in the process of investigating the unconscious, as you described it last time, did you have always the sense of being in control of your tools?”

Dr. Jung:

It was as if my tools were activated by my libido.

But there must be tools there to be activated, that is, animated images, images with libido in them; then the additional libido that one supplies brings them up to the surface.

If I had not given this additional libido with which to bring them to the surface, the activity would have gone on just the same, but would have sucked my energy down into the unconscious.

By putting libido into it, one can increase the speaking power of the unconscious.

Mr. Aldrich: Is that tapas?

Dr. Jung: Yes, that is the Indian term for that type of concentration.

A further elaboration of the method might be put in this way: Suppose someone has a fantasy of a man and a woman moving about in a room.

He gets just that far with it and no further; in other words, he drops that fantasy and proceeds to another—let us say he comes upon a deer in a wood, or sees birds fluttering about.

But the technical rule with regard to fantasy is to stick to the picture that comes up until all its possibilities are exhausted.

Thus if I conjured up that man and woman, I would not let them go till I had found out what they were going to do in that room.

Thus one makes the fantasy move on.

Usually, however, one has a resistance to doing this, that is, to following the fantasy.

Something is sure to whisper in one’s ear that it is all nonsense; in fact, the conscious is forced to take a highly depreciatory attitude toward the unconscious material in order to become conscious at all, for example, a person making the effort to break away from an outgrown faith can usually be found ridiculing it; he throws out cogs to keep from slipping back into his unconscious acceptance.

This is the reason it is so difficult to get at the unconscious material.

The conscious is forever saying, “Keep away from all that,” and it is always tending to increase rather than reduce the resistance to the unconscious.

Similarly, the unconscious pits itself against the conscious, and it is the special tragedy of man that in order to win consciousness he is forced into dissociation with nature.

He is either under the complete sway of the enantiodromia, or play of nature’s forces, or he is too far away from nature.

Going back to the question of fantasizing, if once the resistance to free contact with the unconscious can be overcome, and one can develop the power of sticking to the fantasy, then the play of the images can be watched.

Any artist is doing that quite naturally, but he is getting only the esthetic values out of it while the analyst tries to get at all the values, ideational, esthetic, feeling, and intuitional.

When one watches such a scene one tries to figure out its special meaning for oneself.

When the figures animated are very far away from the conscious trend, then it may happen that they break forth arbitrarily as in cases of dementia praecox.

The eruption then splits the conscious and tears it to bits, leaving each content with an independent ego, hence the absolutely inadequate emotional reaction of these cases.

If there is a certain amount of ego left there may be some reaction—thus a voice in the unconscious may denounce one as crazy, but another may arise to counter it.

But, aside from dementia praecox cases, so-called normal people are very fragmentary—that is, they produce no full reactions in most cases.

That is to say, they are not complete egos.

There is one ego in the conscious and another made up of unconscious ancestral elements, by the force of which a man who has been fairly himself over a period of years suddenly falls under the sway of an ancestor.

I think the fragmentary reactions and inadequate emotions people so often display are best explained along these lines.

Thus you may have a person who sees always and only the dark side of life; he perhaps is forced into this one-sidedness through ancestor possession, and quite suddenly another portion of the unconscious may get on top and change him into an equally one-sided optimist.

Many cases are described in the literature which show these sudden character changes, but of course they are not explained as ancestor possession, since this latter idea remains as a hypothesis for which there is no scientific proof as yet.

Following these ideas a little further, it is an interesting fact that there is no disease among primitives which cannot be caused by ghosts, which of course are ancestral figures.

There is a physiological analogy for this theory of ancestor possession which may make the idea a little clearer.

It is thought that cancer may be due to the later and anarchical development of embryonic cells folded away in the mature and differentiated tissues.

Strong evidence for this lies in the finding, for example, of a partially developed fetus in the thigh of an adult man, say, in those tumors known as teratomata.

Perhaps a similar thing goes on in the mind, whose psychological makeup may be said to be a conglomerate.

Perhaps certain traits belonging to the ancestors get buried away in the mind as complexes with a life of their own which has never been assimilated into the life of the individual, and then, for some unknown reason, these complexes become activated, step out of their obscurity in the folds of the unconscious, and begin to dominate the whole mind.

I am inclined to describe the historical character of the images from the unconscious in this way.

Often there occur details in these images that cannot by any stretch of the imagination be explained in terms of the personal experience of the individual.

It is possible that a certain historical atmosphere is born with us by means of which we can repeat strange details almost as if they were historical facts.

Daudet has developed a similar idea (L'Hérédo and Le Monde des images), which he calls "auto-fécondation."

Whatever the truth of these speculations, they certainly fall within the frame of the notion of the collective unconscious.

Another way of putting these ideas of ancestor possession would be that these autonomous complexes exist in the mind as Mendelian units, which are passed on from generation to generation intact, and are unaffected by the life of the individual.

The problem then becomes this: Can these psychological Mendelian units be broken up and assimilated in a way to protect the individual from being victimized by them?

Analysis certainly makes a fair attempt to do this.

It may not achieve the complete assimilation of the complex, or unit, into the rest of the mind, but at least it points out a way of dealing with it.

In this way analysis becomes an orthopedic method analogous to that used in a disease like tabes, for example.

The disease remains the same, but certain adjustments can be developed to compensate for the kinesthetic disturbance—the tabetic can learn to control his body movements in walking, through his eye movements, and thus achieve a substitute for his lost tactile sense.

I would like today to speak further about the background for the book on the types.

As soon as one begins to watch one's mind, one begins to observe the autonomous phenomena in which one exists as a spectator, or even as a victim.

It is very much as if one stepped out of the protection of his house into an antediluvian forest and was confronted by all the monsters that inhabit the latter.

One is naturally a little reluctant to reverse the machinery and get into this situation.

It is as though one gave up one's freedom of will and offered oneself up as a victim, for with this reversal of the machinery, an entirely different attitude from that of directed thinking grows up.

One is swept into the unknown of this world, not just into a psychological function.

In a way the collective unconscious is merely a mirage because unconscious, but it can be also just as real as the tangible world.

I can say this is so, this thing I am experiencing, but it does no good.

One must be willing to accept the reality for the time being, to risk going a long way with the unconscious in other words.

I once read some stories by the German author Hoffmann, who wrote at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

He wrote in the vein of Poe, and in the midst of writing these stories he would become so gripped by the reality of the fantasies that he would shout for help and have people running to his rescue.

In fairly normal cases there is no danger, but it cannot be denied that the unconscious is overwhelmingly impressive.

The first observation I made began before I really had begun any systematic attempt to examine my unconscious—before I was fully aware of the full significance of the problem.

You remember what I told you of my relation to Freud.

When I was still writing the Psychology of the Unconscious, I had a dream which I did not understand—perhaps I only fully understood it last year, if then. This was the dream: I was walking on a road in the country and came to a crossing. I was walking with someone, but did not know who it was—today I would say it was my shadow.

Suddenly I came upon a man, an old one, in the uniform of an Austrian customs official. It was Freud.

In the dream the idea of the censorship came to my mind.

Freud didn't see me but walked away silently. My shadow said to me, "Did you notice him?

He has been dead for thirty years, but he can't die properly."

I had a very peculiar feeling with this.

Then the scene changed and I was in a southern town on the slopes of mountains.

The streets consisted of steps going up and down the steep slopes.

It was a medieval town and the sun was blazing in full noon, which as you know is the hour when spirits are abroad in southern countries.

I came walking through the streets with my man, and many people passed us to and fro.

All at once I saw among them a very tall man, a Crusader dressed in a coat of mail with the Maltese cross in red on the breast and on the back.

He looked quite detached and aloof, not in any way concerned with the people about him, nor did they pay any attention to him.

I looked at him in astonishment and could not understand what he was doing walking about there.

“Did you notice him?” my shadow asked me.

“He has been dead since the twelfth century, but he is not yet properly dead.

He always walks here among the people, but they don’t see him.”

I was quite bewildered that the people paid no attention, and then I awoke.

This dream bothered me a long time.

I was shocked at the first part because I did not then anticipate the trouble with Freud.

“What does it mean that he is dead and so depreciated?” is the question I asked myself, and why did I think of the principle of the censor in these terms when, as a matter of fact, it seemed to me then the best theory available?

I realized the antagonism between the figure of the Crusader and that of Freud, and yet I realized that there was also a strong parallelism.

They were different, and yet both were dead and could not die properly.

The meaning of the dream lies in the principle of the ancestral figure; not the Austrian officer—obviously he stood for the Freudian theory—but the other, the Crusader, is an archetypal figure, a Christian symbol living from the twelfth century, a symbol that does not really live today, but on the other hand is not wholly dead either.

It comes out of the times of Meister Eckhart, the time of the culture of the Knights, when many ideas blossomed, only to be killed then, but they are coming again to life now.

However, when I had this dream, I did not know this interpretation.

I was oppressed and bewildered. Freud was bewildered too, and could find no satisfactory meaning for it.

That was in 1912.

Then I had another dream that showed me again very clearly the limitations of the conceptions about dreams which Freud held to be final.

I had been looking on the unconscious as nothing but the receptacle of dead material, but slowly the idea of the archetypes began to formulate itself in my mind, and at the end of 1912 came this dream, which was the beginning of a conviction that the unconscious did not consist of inert material only, but that there was something living down there.

I was greatly excited at the idea of there being something living in me that I did not know anything about.

I dreamed that I was sitting in a very beautiful Italian loggia, something like the Palazzo Vecchio in Florence.

It was most luxurious, with columns, floor, and balustrade of marble.

I was sitting in a golden chair, a Renaissance chair, in front of a table of green stone like emerald.

It was of an extraordinary beauty.

I was sitting looking out into space, for the loggia was on top of a tower belonging to a castle.

I knew that my children were there too.

Suddenly a white bird came flying down and gracefully alighted on the table.

It was like a small gull, or a dove.

I made a sign to the children to keep quiet, and the dove suddenly became a little girl with golden hair, and ran away with the children.

As I sat pondering over this, the little girl came back and put her arm around my neck very tenderly.

Then all at once she was gone, and the dove was there and spoke slowly with a human voice.

It said, “I am allowed to transform into a human form only in the first hours of the night, while the male dove is busy with the twelve dead.”

Then it flew away into the blue sky and I awoke.

The dove had used a peculiar word when speaking of the male dove. It is Tauber in German, and not often used, but I remembered hearing an uncle of mine use it.

But what should a male pigeon be doing with twelve dead?

I felt alarmed.

Then there flashed across my mind the story of the Tabula smaragdina, or emerald table, which is part of the legend of the Thrice Great Hermes.

He is supposed to have left a table on which was engraved all the wisdom of the ages, formulated in the Greek words: “Ether above, Ether below, Heaven above, Heaven below, all this above, all this below, take it and be happy.”

All this, as I say, was very alarming to me.

I began to think of the twelve Apostles, the twelve months of the year, the signs of the Zodiac, etc.

I had just written about the twelve signs of the Zodiac in the Psychology of the Unconscious.

Finally, I had to give it up, I could make nothing out of the dream except that there was a tremendous animation of the unconscious.

I knew no technique of getting at the bottom of this activity; all I could do was just wait, keep on living, and watch the fantasies.

This was at Christmastime in 1912.

In 1913 I felt the activity of the unconscious most disagreeably. I was disturbed, but knew nothing better to do than to try to analyze my infantile memories.

So I began to analyze these most conscientiously, but found nothing.

I thought, "Well then, I must try to live through these experiences again," so I made then the effort to recover the emotional tone of childhood.

I said to myself that if I should play like a child I could recover this.

I remembered that when I was a boy I used to delight in building houses of stone, all sorts of fantastic castles, 6 2012: In 1913, Jung noted this dream as follows: "I dreamt at that time (it was shortly after Christmas 1912), that I was sitting with my children in a marvelous and richly furnished castle apartment—an open columned hall—we were sitting at a round table, whose top was a marvelous dark green stone.

Suddenly a gull or a dove flew in and sprang lightly onto the table.

I admonished the children to be quiet, so that they would not scare away the beautiful white bird.

Suddenly this bird turned into a child of eight years, a small blond girl, and ran around playing with my children in the marvelous columned colonnades.

Then the child suddenly turned into the gull or dove.

She said the following to me: 'Only in the first hour of the night can I become human, while the male dove is busy with the twelve dead.' With these words the bird flew away and I awoke" (cited in Liber Novus, 198).

"For Heaven's sake," I said to myself, "is it possible that I have to get into this nonsense for the sake of animating the unconscious?"

That year I did all sorts of idiotic things like this, and enjoyed them like a fool.

It raised a lot of inferior feelings in me, but I knew of no better way.

Towards autumn I felt that the pressure that had seemed to be within me was not there anymore but in the air.

The air actually seemed darker than before.

It was just as if it were no longer a psychological situation in which I was involved, but a real one, and that sense became more and more weighty.

In October 1913 I was travelling in a train and had a book in my hand that I was reading.

I began to fantasize, and before I knew it, I was in the town to which I was going.

This was the fantasy: I was looking down on the map of Europe in relief.

I saw all the northern part, and England sinking down so that the sea came in upon it.

It came up to Switzerland, and then I saw that the mountains grew higher and higher to protect Switzerland.

I realized that a frightful catastrophe was in progress, towns and people were destroyed, and the wrecks and dead bodies were tossing about on the water.

Then the whole sea turned to blood.

At first I was only looking on dispassionately, and then the sense of the catastrophe gripped me with tremendous power.

I tried to repress the fantasy, but it came again and held me bound for two hours.

Three or four weeks later it came again, when I was again in a train.

It was the same picture repeated, only the blood was more emphasized.

Of course I asked myself if I was so unfortunate as to be spreading my personal complexes all over Europe.

I thought a great deal about the chances of a great social revolution, but curiously enough never of a war.

It seemed to me all these things were becoming frightfully uncanny, then it occurred to me, there was something I could do, I could write down all of it in sequence.

While I was writing once I said to myself, “What is this I am doing, it certainly is not science, what is it?”

Then a voice said to me, “That is art.”

This made the strangest sort of an impression upon me, because it was not in any sense my conviction that what I was writing was art.

Then I came to this, “Perhaps my unconscious is forming a personality that is not me, but which is insisting on coming through to expression.”

I don’t know why exactly, but I knew to a certainty that the voice that had said my writing was art had come from a woman.

A living woman could very well have come into the room and said that very thing to me, because she would not have cared anything about the discriminations she was trampling underfoot.

Obviously it wasn’t science; what then could it be but art, as though those were the only two alternatives in the world.

That is the way a woman’s mind works.

Well, I said very emphatically to this voice that what I was doing was not art, and I felt a great resistance grow up within me.

No voice came through, however, and I kept on writing.

Then I got another shot like the first: “That is art.”

This time I caught her and said, “No it is not,” and I felt as though an argument would ensue.

I thought, well, she has not the speech centers I have, so I told her to use mine, and she did, and came through with a long statement.

This is the origin of the technique I developed for dealing directly with the unconscious contents. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Lecture 5, Pages 37-45.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/6accf-1libido.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1DAFL82VMGJ3T&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=15771212`

Carl Jung on "Intuition" as a Superior and Inferior Function (2019-12-23 05:59)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Dr. Mann’s question: “Is it not by intuition that one arrives most easily at the transcendent function, and if a person is lacking in that function—that is, in intuition—are not the difficulties greatly increased?

Must one not reach the transcendent function alone, that is, unaided?”

Dr. Jung: It depends very much on the person’s type as to what part intuition plays in finding the transcendent function.

If the superior function is intuition, for example, then the intuitions are directly in the way, since the transcendent function is made, or takes place, between the superior and the inferior functions.

The inferior function can only come up at the expense of the superior, so that in the intuitive type the intuitions have to be overcome, so to speak, in order for the transcendent function to be found.

On the other hand, if the person is a sensation type, then the intuitions are the inferior function, and the transcendent function may be said to be arrived at through intuition.

It is a fact that in analysis it often seems as though intuition were the most important of the functions, but that is only so because analysis is a laboratory experiment and not reality. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 27

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/3c016-1mann.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=7PDN16RY8D69&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577175152&sprefix=jung+lett`

Carl Jung: “It is a great consolation to know that one’s included in the prayers of fellow beings.”

(2019-12-23 06:09)

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Father Victor White

Dear Father White, 18 December 1946

Thank you for your dear letter.

It is a great consolation to know that one's included in the prayers of fellow beings.

The aspectus mortis is a mighty lonely thing, when you are so stripped of everything in the presence of God.

One's wholeness is tested mercilessly.

An accumulation of drugs however necessary has made a complete rag of myself.

I had to climb out of that mess and I am now whole again.

Yesterday I had a marvellous dream: One bluish diamond, like a star high in heaven, reflected in a round quiet pool-heaven above, heaven below.

The imago Dei in the darkness of the earth, this is myself.

The dream meant a great consolation.

I am no more a black and endless sea of misery and suffering but a certain amount thereof contained in a divine vessel.

I am very weak.

The situation dubious.

Death does not seem imminent, although an embolism can occur anytime again.

I confess I am afraid of a long drawn-out suffering.

It seems to me as if I am ready to die, although as it looks to me some powerful thoughts are still flickering like lightnings in a summer night.

Yet they are not mine, they belong to God, as everything else which bears mentioning.

Please write again to me.

You have a purity of purpose which is beneficial.

Thank you for the records, quite interesting!

I don't know whether I can answer your next letter again.

But let us hope.

Gratefully,

Yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 449-450.

Notes:

1. Over a month earlier Jung had had a very serious heart embolism. His letter is written by hand, apparently lying down. It is the first of a long series of handwritten letters, often of many pages, showing his great personal interest in the correspondence with W., who seemed able to give Jung what he felt he needed most: a man with whom he could discuss on equal terms matters of vital importance to him.

It is significant that with the growing estrangement over the problem of the privatio boni (cf. White, 31 Dec. 49, n. 1) the handwritten letters are replaced by dictated, typed ones, except for the very last two (25 Mar. 60, 30 Apr. 60), written during W.'s fatal illness. About three-quarters of Jung's letters to him, comprising all the important discussions of psychological and religious problems, are published in this selection, but some of a too private nature are omitted.

1. From the alchemical saying:

Heaven above All that is above
Heaven below Also is below
Stars above Grasp this Stars below And rejoice.

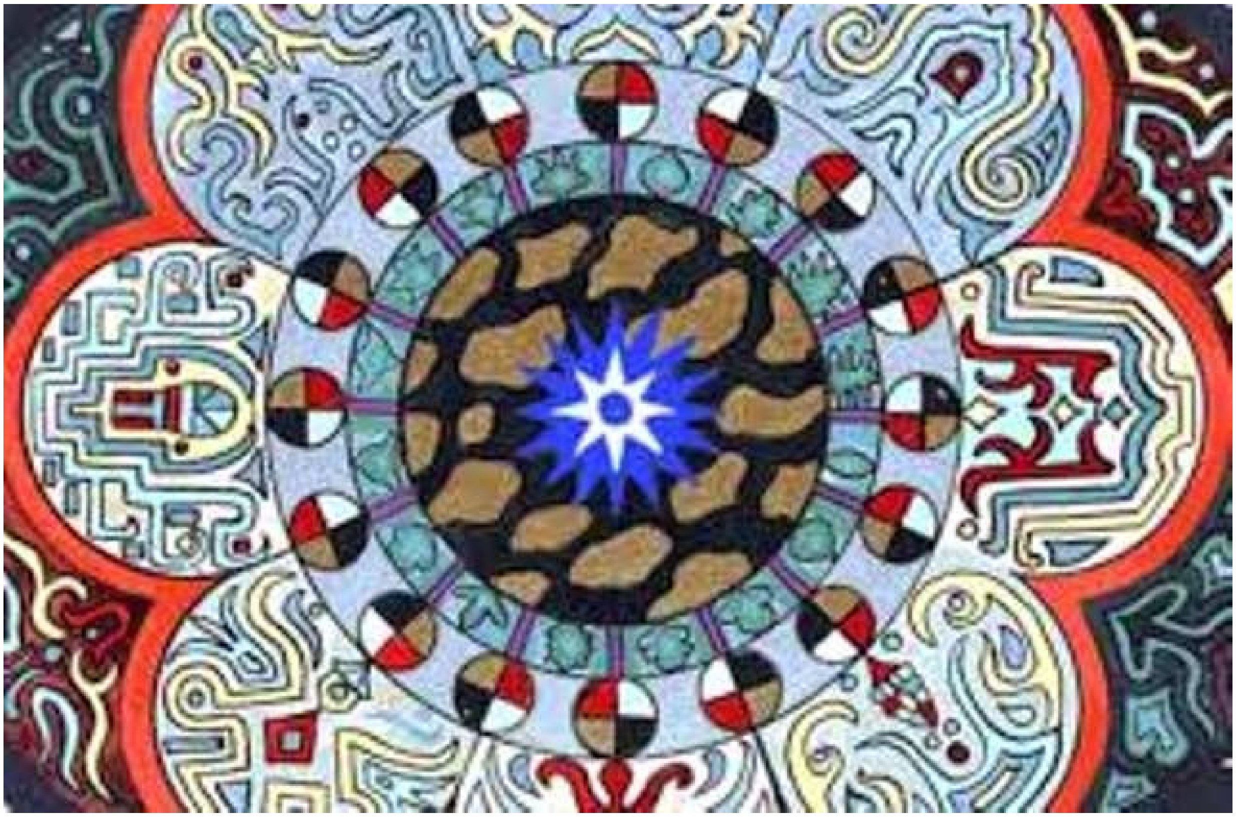
Cf. "The Psychology of the Transference," CW 1 6, par. 384.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/9d798-3.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2QQTL55BQ7T5I&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577121419&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Carl Jung "Yesterday I had a marvellous dream..." (2019-12-23 06:26)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

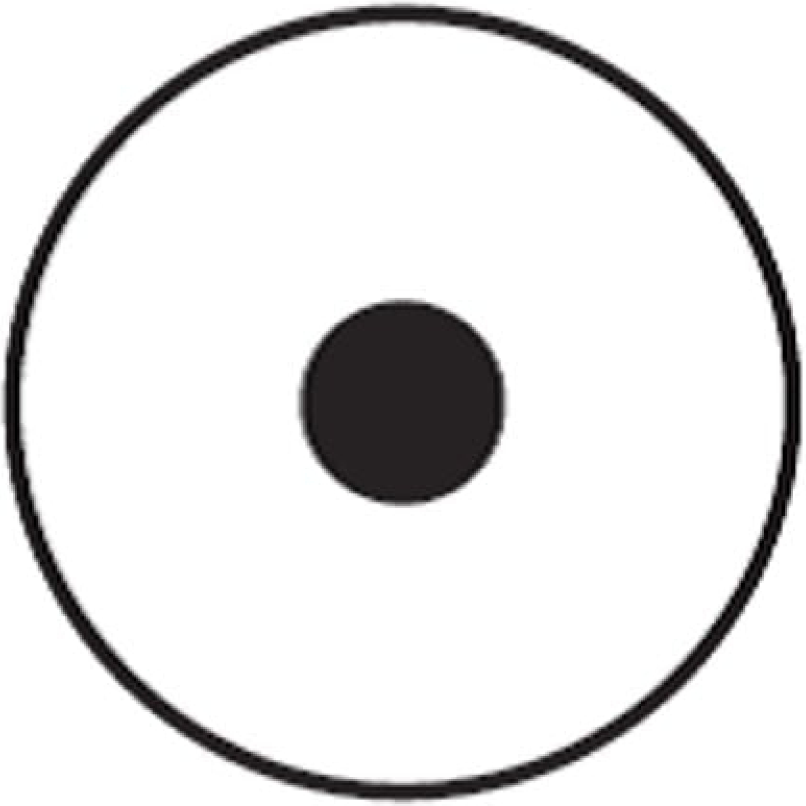
Yesterday I had a marvellous dream: One bluish diamond, like a star high in heaven, reflected in a round quiet pool-heaven above, heaven below.

The imago Dei in the darkness of the earth, this is myself. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 449-450.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/b4a79-2.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=18782RLBOEYFK&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577176899&sprefix=jung+let`

Carl Jung: " As a matter of fact and truth, we are of double gender..." (2019-12-23 06:30)

[1]



[2]Children’s Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

As a consequence, most of the cosmogonic archaic beings are hermaphrodite.

This is connected with the fact that man, from the dawn of history, has had a notion of his double gender.

As a matter of fact and truth, we are of double gender, because only the greater part of the male genes decides whether the embryo becomes a male.

The female genes do not die away in the male, but are there in his structure, and function according to their femaleness.

This accounts for the peculiar fact that in certain men we can perceive certain female traits that correspond to the feminine ideal (and vice versa, male traits in women).

There are persons who boast of their bisexuality because it is an archetype: "I carry Eve in me, so I am a god."

God has His wife in him. In India, goddesses are only the feminine form of a masculine god: Shiva is a point or a phallus, and it is enveloped by Shakti: Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Pages 37-38.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/89b81-shiva.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-1936-1940-Philemon-Foundation/dp/0691133239/ref=sr_1_1?crid=19VOFNSH4H2FK&keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1577121587&s`

A Giant in a Child's Dream (2019-12-23 17:45)

[1]

[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

1. Dreams of a Four- to Five-Year-Old Girl of Her Father as a Menacing Giant, of a Pergola and a Dachshund, and of Exercising in a Barn

Presented by Dr. Ignaz Reichstein

Text:

1. I'm lying in my bed and watch how the door to my parents' bedroom slowly opens. My father appears in the opening, but it's a mighty giant; he looks ferocious and threatens me with a club. I wake up frightened.
2. I'm standing in front of an endless pergola; a little dachshund jumps out of it and comes toward me. I am so scared that I wake up.
3. I am in a very big, high barn, and under the roof I climb from one beam to another.

Dr. Reichstein: In the first dream, the locale and the persons are: the dreamer's bedroom beside the parental bedroom, the dreamer herself, and her father as a giant.

Peripateia: the door to the parents' bedroom opens, the father appears in the form of a giant and threatens the dreamer with a club.

The lysis is missing.

The dreamer is in her bed next to the bedroom of the parents, usually a very protected, intimate place, in immediate proximity of the parents.

We are in bed before or during sleep, thus in a state in which the unconscious is particularly activated.

Then the dreamer sees how the door to the parents' bedroom slowly opens.

She catches sight of the place where the unconscious of the parents is activated.

Above all, this is the sphere of sexuality and the place of procreation.

From there the father comes in the form of a mighty giant, threatening her with a club.

The giant is an archetypal figure.

In German mythology, the giants are described as follows: they are primordial natural beings, mostly appearing in groups, displaying little individual character.

In the Edda, Ymir, a primordial giant, develops out of the primordial waters, out of whose body parts the world was built.

The giants stand in contrast to the gods; they are coarse creatures, indifferent to morality, who know only fleshly pleasures such as getting drunk and overeating.

On the other hand, as the eldest beings, they possess a knowledge of primordial things, an uncreated and traditional wisdom.

Utgard, their dwelling place, lies outside the circular earth, along the sea coast, or beyond the world ocean, which was thought of as a small strip—thus, in a place outside the world.

According to another myth, they are underground, in the womb of the waters or of the hollow mountains.

The gods had erected a protective barrier, the fortress Midgard (the land of man), against the attacks of the giants.

Gods and giants constantly fight against each other, as is particularly evident in the Götterdämmerung, the twilight of the gods, in which giants and gods destroy each other in a final battle.

In ancient mythology, giants and dragons often turn into each other, and enforced human sacrifices had to be made to them.

Later heroes, who took the place of the gods, put an end to these sacrifices by defeating the giants, freeing the treasures guarded by them, and saving the princesses who had been destined to be their victims.

In Greek mythology, the giants are also sons of the earth and adversaries of the gods.

In the Gigantomachia, the battle between the gods and the giants, the latter can be defeated only with the help of a mortal, which task falls to Heracles.

The club is the primitive weapon of the giants, but often also of the gods. Grimm writes: “Stones and rocks are the weapons of the race of the giants; they use only stone clubs, stone shields, no swords.”

The god Thor, too, the main opponent of the giants, is armed with a hammer or a club.

It also corresponds to the thunderbolts and the flash of lightning, by which the club also assumes a fertilizing character, as can already be seen from its typically phallic form.

In Frauenlob, Simrock mentions a passage in which a virgin says about God the Father: “the smith from the upper land threw a hammer into my lap/womb.”

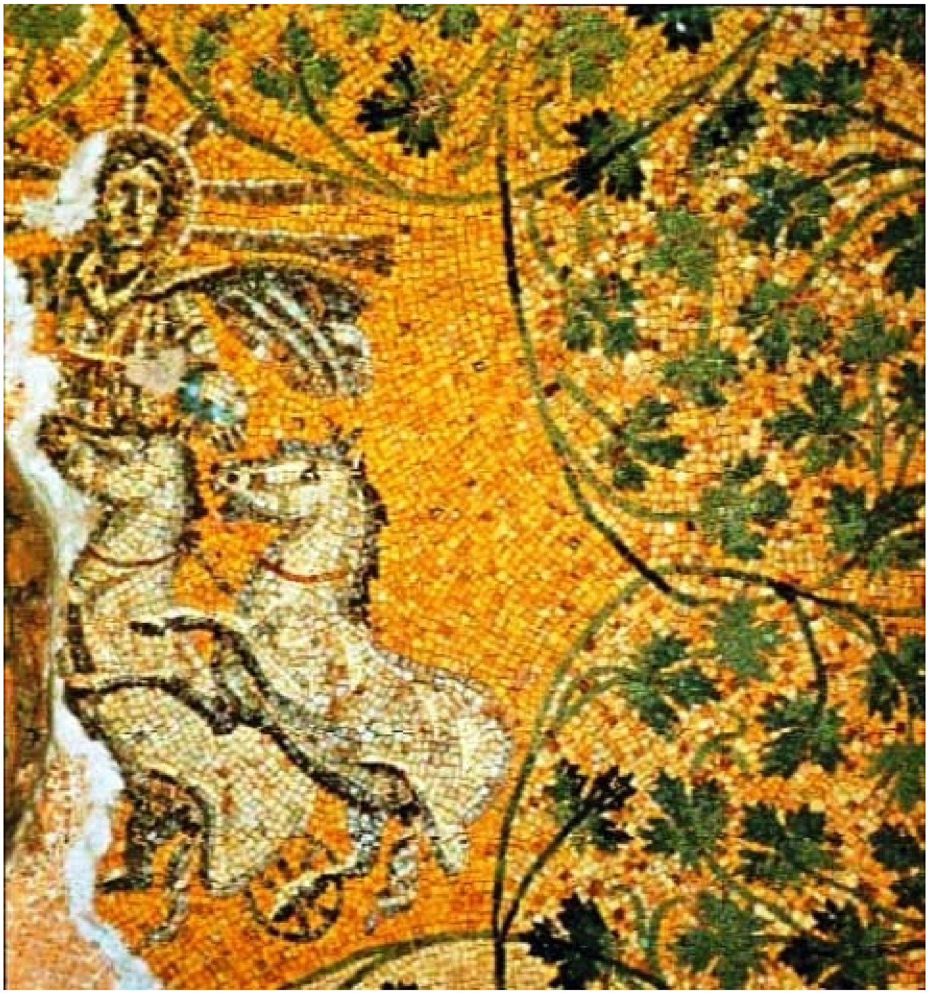
The lightning also throws wedge-shaped thunder stones as deep into the earth as church towers are high, “nine fathoms deep,” which rise again to the surface of the earth after seven or nine years.

To summarize, the giants can be characterized as follows: they are chaotic, untamed, natural, instinctual creatures; insatiable and destructive in their carnal greed, if they are not reined in by the gods to be more benevolent. Dr. Ignaz Reichstein, Children’s Dreams Seminar, Pages 382-384.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/0093d-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Childrens-Dreams-Seminar-1936-1940-Seminars/dp/0691148074/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3H6YUAIMGLB0K&keywords=jung+children+dreams&qid=1577177139&spre`

Merry Christ’s Mass!!! (2019-12-23 18:09)

[1]



Merry Christ’s Mass!!!

Image: Ceiling Mosaic - Christus helios, the mosaic of Sol in Mausoleum M, which is interpreted as Christ-Sol (Christ as the Sun).

Detail of vault mosaic in the Mausoleum of the Julii. From the necropolis under St. Peter’s Mid-3rd century Grotte Vaticane, Rome.

Mosaic of the Vatican grottoes under St. Peter’s Basilica, on the ceiling of the tomb of the Julii. Representation of Christ as the sun-god Helios or Sol Invictus riding in his chariot. Dated to the 3rd century AD.

"Early Christian and pagan beliefs are combined in this third century mosaic of Christ as a sun-god. The triumphant Christ/god, with rays shooting from his head, is pulled aloft by two rearing horses in his chariot. The Dionysian vines in the background become the vines of Christ."

Title: Christ as Sol Invictus
Late 3rd century
"The First Apology" by St. Justin Martyr, an early Christian, quotes Psalm 19:5-6, a verse that was very popular with early Christians. It was associated with the ancient Christian custom of praying toward the East, the direction of Christ’s Ascension and second coming, instead of toward Jerusalem as Jews did:

"And hear how it was foretold concerning those who published His doctrine and proclaimed His appearance, the above-mentioned prophet and king [David] speaking thus by the Spirit of prophecy. "....In the sun has He set His tabernacle, and he as a bridegroom going out of his chamber shall rejoice as a giant to run his course."

Christ was also associated with "the Sun of justice with its healing rays", a Messianic image from Malachi 3:20.

From "THE BONES OF ST. PETER : The First Full Account of the Search for the Apostle’s Body (Doubleday, 1982) by John Evangelist Walsh"; plate 7 shows a larger black-and-white image; p.26 says that three other mosaics in the tomb on the walls show:

(a) Jonah falling from a ship and being swallowed by the whale,
(b) a fisherman standing on rocks fishing
(c) the good shepherd with a sheep across his shoulders. The mosaic on the dome comes half-way down the walls. The rays of light "strongly suggest the form of a cross."

The tomb was decorated about 250 with these motifs. The damage to the mosaic on the left is in fact a hole in the centre of the ceiling. The tomb was accessed from the street of pagan Roman tombs, and the access covered by a slab. When this was lifted, the hole in the middle of the dome was accessible.

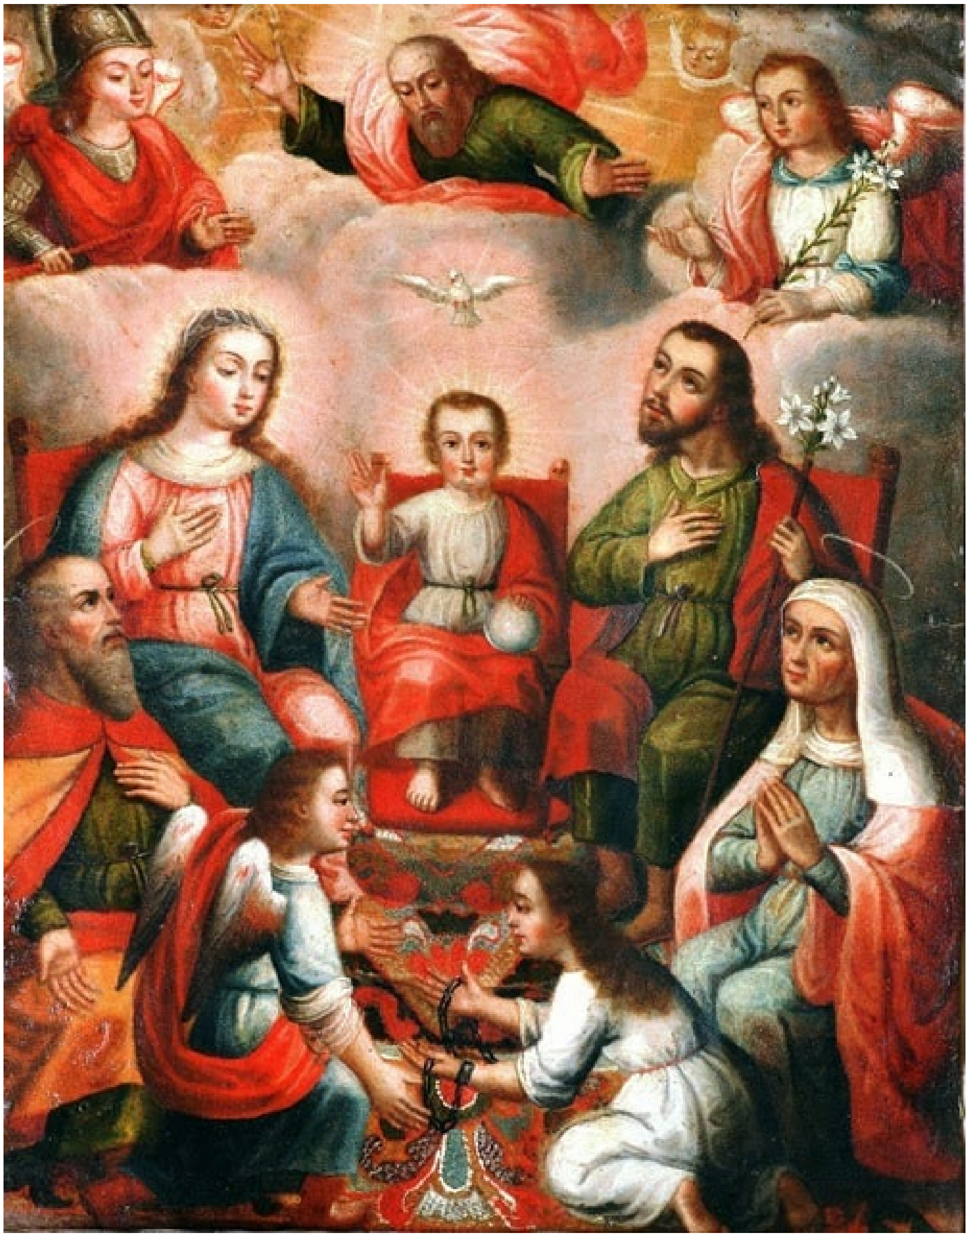
The tomb is described, not as a papal tomb, but as the "tomb of the golden mosaic." Originally it contained a pagan burial of a child and no adornment. Around 250 the family had converted to Christianity, and redecorated it. Three Christian burials were located under the floor.

A story from 1574 relates how workmen had opened "a tomb with golden mosaics and two white horses", and found a body on a slab on the floor covered with quicklime; the body was not present when the tomb was located again during the 1941 excavations.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/d299d-christ.jpg`

Meister Eckhart and Carl Jung on the Birth of the Divine Child. (2019-12-23 18:14)

[1]



[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

We are all meant to be mothers of God, for God is always needing to be born. Meister Eckhart.

“In the psychology of the individual there is always, at such moments, an agonizing situation of conflict from which there seems to be no way out-at least for the conscious mind…

But out of this collision of opposites the unconscious psyche always creates a third thing of an irrational nature, which the conscious mind neither expects nor understands.

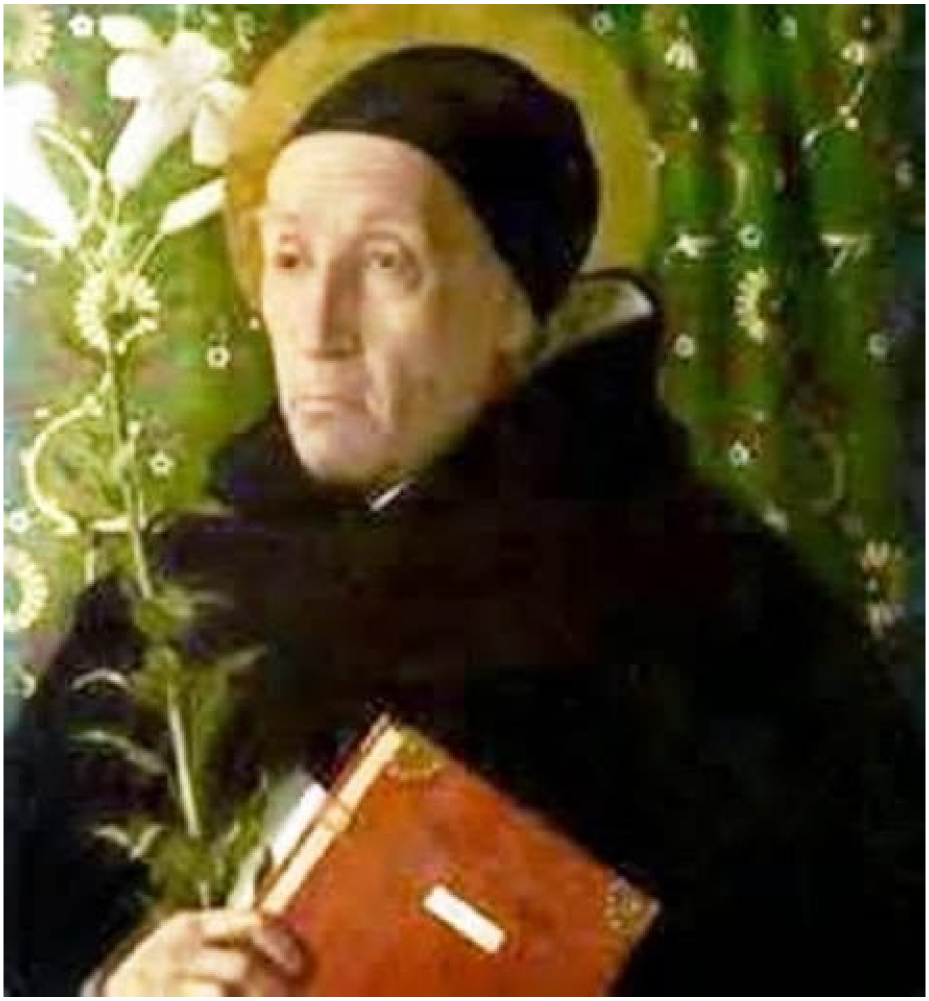
It presents itself in a form that is neither a straight "yes" nor a straight "no," and is consequently rejected by both. For the conscious mind knows nothing beyond the opposites and, as a result, has no knowledge of the thing that unites them.

Since, however, the solution of the conflict through the union of opposites is of vital importance, and is moreover the very thing that the conscious mind is longing for, some inkling of the creative act, and of the significance of it, nevertheless gets through. From this comes the numinous character of the "child." Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 286

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/24e78-child.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=33C6W752H10Q&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+collec`

Spirituality is not be be learned by flight from the world... (2019-12-23 18:18)

[1]

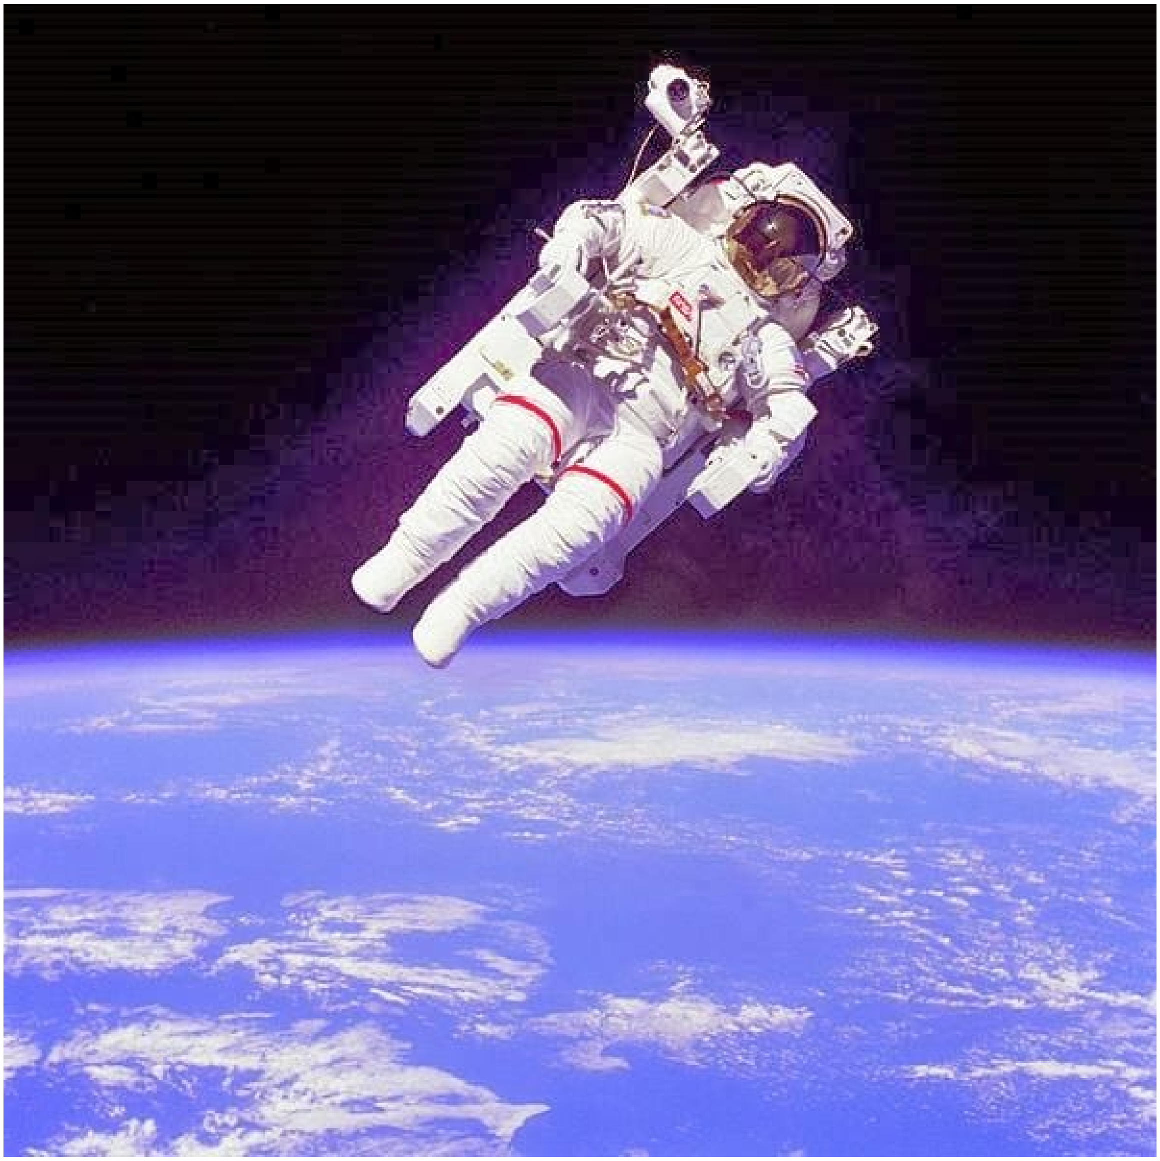


“Spirituality is not to be learned by flight from the world, or by running away from things, or by turning solitary and going apart from the world. Rather, we must learn an inner solitude wherever or with whomsoever we may be. We must learn to penetrate things and find God there.” — Meister Eckhart

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/55411-eckharts.jpg`

Space flights are merely an escape... (2019-12-23 19:21)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung & Hermann Hesse’

Space flights to other worlds are still a long way off, Jung answered.

’Sooner or later man will have to return to earth, and to the land from which he comes; that is to say, man will have to return to himself.

Space flights are merely an escape, a fleeing away from oneself, because it is easier to go t:o Mars or to the moon than it is to penetrate one’s own being.

But what is dangerous about this frantic interest in spatial conquest is that it symbolizes a state of complete anxiety in man.

This anxiety would seem to be caused by a fear of the world’s population explosion. In a way, space flights seem to be an instinctive reaction to this problem.’

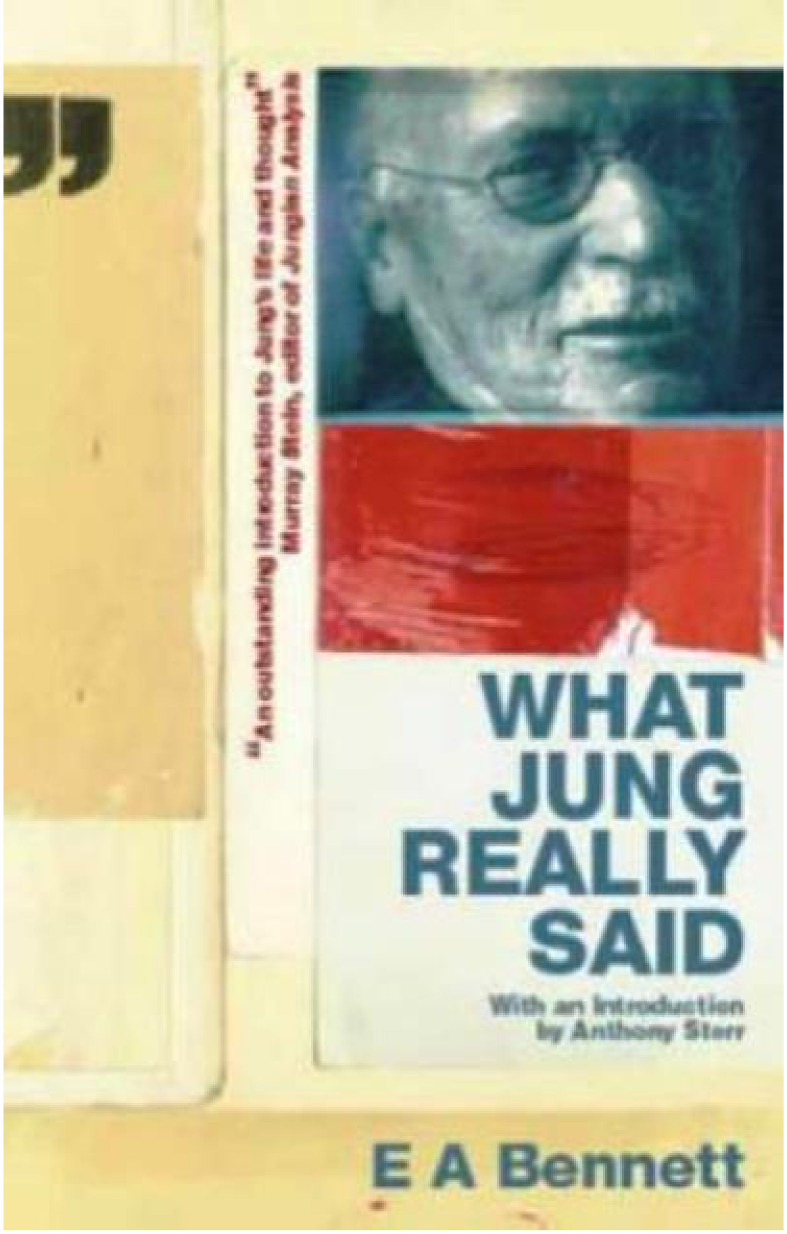
Carl Jung, Jung-Hesse A Friendship, Page 102

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/91bc2-astronaut.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Hermann-Hesse-Miguel-Serrano/dp/3856305580/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+hesse+serrano&qid=1577195524&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: You can’t change people to fit a theory. (2019-12-24 04:30)

[1]



"An outstanding introduction to Jung's life and thought"
Murray Stein, editor of Jungian Analysis
WHAT JUNG REALLY SAID
With an Introduction by Anthony Storr
E A Bennett

[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Küsnacht, 3rd January 1957

Arrived in Küsnacht.

In the evening we sat first in the garden room, and after dinner in the library upstairs.

This is a big room, about twenty-four feet by fifteen feet, lined with books.

Off it opens an inner study, and C.G. told me I could use this as my room for writing.

It is a smallish room, and in it I now write at the big table-desk with an array of pigeon holes on it to take stationery and odds and ends.

There is a photograph of Toni Wolff on the table, and also a rather beautiful collection of twenty-one figures representing all the states in India; each one is labelled.

They depict the different apparel of the peoples of India, and are about ten centimetres in height and delicately made and coloured.

The religions also are marked on the labels – Hindu, Buddhist, Islam (Baluchistan), and one from Burma.

On a side shelf are two lovely cloisonne pieces, one of a sage on a creature with horse's legs and the head and tail of a dragon; the other is an old vase.

On the pigeon-hole part of the desk are books and a few other figures – one a beautifully carved ivory figure of Lao-tse on a stag, the same as the two I have.

There are three lights in the window and an amount of stained glass in the panels.

At the top of each segment is a religious subject – Christ being lashed with whips on the left; in the centre, the crucifixion; and on the right our Lord after death with Mary weeping; two disciples are there with Mary Magdalen, and above is an angel.

In the centre window below is an elaborate coat of arms dated 1590, and on the right the arms of Basel dated 1543, 'Basilea 1543'.

The centre light also contains a small round inset of stained glass showing our Lord and the twelve apostles at the last supper.

One picture is covered with a cloth; it is a photograph of the Shroud of Turin, the cloth which is said to have covered our Lord's face and afterwards bore the imprint of his features.

The walls are lined with bookcases; there are many old alchemical books and books of reference of all kinds.

They are labelled and no doubt catalogued; both rooms are filled with them.

There are also numerous ornaments of various kinds, many of them gifts.

On the mantelpiece in the main study is a collection of little ivory carvings depicting the twelve transitions of Vishnu.

C.G.'s writing table is a beautiful mahogany or walnut table with curved legs and a finely shaped stringer.

It is covered with papers and other objects. C.G. told me that one, a metal figure, bearded, and sitting on an elephant, represented a previous incarnation of the Buddha; in Christianity it would correspond to one of the disciples, a special associate of the master.

And there is a carved lotus which opens out – a present from the Indian Psychiatric Society.

In a standing bookcase are some small leather-bound books; and there is a photograph of Mrs. Jung, and another of C.G. with her.

On the floor of the main study, as in the inner room, are a couple of Persian rugs.

All the floors in the house, the rooms and the landings, are parquet.

4th January 1957

Speaking of his early work at the Burghölzli, C.G. said that when hisobservations on the word association tests were established he wrote to Freud telling him how these experiments provided clinical proof of his theory of repression.

He said, too, that he had noted that the complex acted autonomously, and apart from repression.

Although in his reply Freud agreed with this, he never made use of the idea of unconscious autonomy and confined his interest to the phenomenon of repression.

Besides his work on the word association tests, Eugen Bleuler, his senior at the Burghölzli, suggested that C.G. should do research on the brain.

He turned to this with enthusiasm, working many hours week after week on the various parts of the brain.

He became keen on the work and used to deputise for the Professor and give lectures on histology.

But so far as the normal functioning of the mind was concerned, or abnormalities in thinking which he observed in patients, this work on the histology of the brain was fruitless.

Many of the patients in the hospital were schizophrenics and no attempt was made to treat them.

But he could not accept dementia praecox as deterioration of the personality and leave it there.

Through the word association tests he had come to see the reality of the unconscious, and he recognised that many of the fantasies or delusions of his patients were paralleled in mythological material of which they knew nothing.

The Psychology of the Unconscious was a study in schizophrenia; in it he showed the significance of symbols through historical and literary analogies.

But the book was not a psychological study; one of the difficulties in those days was that there was no psychology, only intellectual abstractions which explained nothing.

People paid little attention to what might lie behind the symptomatology of an illness.

The Psychology of Dementia Praecox was an advance, but even now psychiatrists have paid little tribute to it.

The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious was written to bring people into touch with the unconscious and make them aware of its importance, but it, too, made very little impression.

During the First War he was in command of a camp on Lake Geneva at Château-d'Oex for interned British and Canadian officers.

He said that for some this would have been important and interesting work, but he was more concerned with his writing and the development of his thought.

He was then working on Psychological Types.

I asked him if, looking back, he could see a single thread running through his work.

He said only to a certain extent.

In the early days he had expected his work to follow scientific lines.

But after the break with Freud he did no scientific work for a time, but sought to discover the meaning of the contents of the unconscious.

Todiscover where ideas came from, and how others understood them in the past, he searched for the historical and cultural sources of the images and symbolism he encountered.

It was when he had written his commentary on The Secret of the Golden Flower that he began to study the writings of alchemists and found links with this material through parallels in the imagery of their thought and practices, and through their understanding and interpretation of ideas from still earlier times.

His study of alchemy had been foreshadowed in his dreams, and his work had always developed in this way – out of his own experiences and dreams.

He mentioned by way of illustration a dream he had in April 1914; with variations it recurred twice, once in each succeeding month:

He was climbing up the hill above Küsnacht to the plateau where now the Niehuses have their house.

But it took nearly all day and in fact the hill is not very high.

He got to the plateau just as the sun was setting behind him (it does set on the hills on the opposite side of the Zürich Lake).

A cascade of water was falling down the hill, and the sun lit it up with silver and gold.

Away to the left, and higher up – for there was another hill behind, though not so high as the one he had ascended – he observed a big hotel (such as the Dolder Hotel), and he could see the cars parked there looking very small.

He could not understand the dream then.

But much later he discovered an alchemical text, Speculativa Philosophia (Theatrum Chemicum (1602), I) of Gerald Dorn, in which a similar scene was described.

The gold and silver in the water had a special meaning, and the building was there as well; it was not a hotel, as in his dream, but a building of great symbolic importance.

Dreams such as this fascinated him.

'That's the worst of being an introvert,' he said, 'you are pushed on by your inner drives.'

He said that Freud was really a feeling type, but he kept this back and worked with his inferior thinking, so what he thought had too great a significance for him.

It even came about that he believed things were so merely because he had thought them.

He mentioned the notion of prevision, that sometimes it was like a waking dream.

On one occasion he was sitting at Küsnacht reading the paper, and suddenly there was a gap in it, a big hole, in which he saw the face of Hans, the servant at Bollingen. (This youth was devoted to C.G., for during the war, C.G. had given food to his mother, who was poor with several children, and he had bought a bicycle for Hans so that he could go to school.)

Shortly after, to C.G.'s great surprise, Hans arrived in the garden at Küsnacht. C.G. had no idea he was coming but he had cycled from Bollingen (about 37 kilometres) to bring C.G. some early strawberries.

He told me of another incident, during the Second War when petrol was scarce.

He was returning to Küsnacht from Bollingen by train and was reading, but his mind became insistently occupied with the idea of a man being drowned – something he had once seen.

Why should he think of it now?

But he could not get the thought out of his mind.

When he reached his house in Küsnacht some of his grandsons (who were living there at the time) were in the garden looking rather upset, and he asked, 'What's up? What's the matter?'

They told him the youngest boy, who could not swim, had fallen into the water in the boat-house; it is very deep there and they had had great difficulty in getting him out. C.G. said, 'That would have been about half an hour ago?' – the time when the idea of drowning had filled his mind in the train – and they said, 'Yes, that was the time.'

5th January 1957

I asked C.G. if he had ever, as it were, heard the future calling him.

He said it was never like that with him.

He knew others – Goethe, for example – had felt that; but for him it was always something behind, a vis a tergo, pushing him on to find the truth, what things really were.

He had never been satisfied with Freud's theory because it lacked historical support; it had no background, it was no more than Freud's theory.

Yet, he said, it was to Freud's credit that he tried to find a background in Totem and Taboo.

It was after he had written The Relations between the Ego and the Unconscious that C.G. became interested in Chinese thought.

In 1928 he had a letter from Richard Wilhelm asking if he would write a commentary on The Secret of the Golden Flower, a book on Chinese alchemy, and he did so.

He found Chinese thought impressive and studied the I Ching.

Through his study of types C.G. found similarities with Chinese thought; he drew a diagram of the four functions to illustrate what he meant: Thus if a man is predominantly a thinking type he begins to speculate; so he takes in intuition, the knowledge from the unconscious.

But he wants then to see how it relates to facts, and so sensation is included.

This results in a triangle which excludes feeling.

This happened, he said, with Freud.

But the feeling is there, nevertheless.

'I had a hell of a lot of trouble with that!' said C.G.

When feeling is left out you get a narrow circle round the thinking, the intellectual function.

But, he observed, the diagram of the functions corresponds to the Yin Yang of the Chinese, it makes for completeness.

I gave him the synopses of my lectures to read and he expanded on parts of them and said he thought they did give the bones on which the flesh could be put.

He digressed a good deal and all he said was interesting.

When he came to free associations he said they were futile for they lead only to the complexes; but in dream analysis they do not tell us what the dream says.

He gave an example: 'Think of a man who dreams of a daisy and you ask for his associations; he says, "Well, Daisy is a name, it's the name of my girl friend."

Freud would go on from there to sex.

But I would say, “That’s interesting, but what about the daisy? It’s still there on the ground – what of the daisy itself?”

Then the man might say, “Well, it’s a flower with white petals and a golden centre; it draws health from the sun and opens when the sun shines.

It exists in itself, apart from other daisies.”

So then I ask, “What about the sun?” and he may think of God or religion.

But that is not Daisy, his girl friend.

So the unconscious is producing something which shows that there is more than Daisy, there is his own life and also a greater life.’

The Self – it is the whole, conscious and unconscious, ‘what I myself am’; it involves much we do not know is there, for example our body and its workings, and the unconscious.

6th January 1957

In the morning C.G., Ruth Bailey and I went up to Bollingen by car.

The sun was shining and the place looked wonderful with the new room added, and the painted ceiling in the loggia.

The painting of this ceiling was C.G.’s idea; his coat of arms, or the separate parts of it, fill a long panel at one end and at the other end is that of Mrs. Jung.

The intermediate panels are painted with the crest of the Hoernis (one of their daughters married into this family) – the emblems were horns, hunting horns.

Opposite this is the Baumann crest (another daughter married one of them).

That of the Niehus family (their other son-in-law) was not yet complete and there was a In the two centre panels the space.

The crests of C.G. and Mrs. Jung were repeated.

We went up to the new room.

The woodwork and metal work of the door hinges and door knobs was excellent and C.G. said it was old.

He told me about the original building, and of the various additions as time went on.

We looked at some of the many stone carvings he has done; a small one was of a snake which had swallowed a perch and died.

A beautiful stone in the classical style was a memorial to Mrs. Jung; this, he said, was to be put up on the wall by the loggia.

At the side of the house is a carving of Mercury.

I asked why he had done it.

He said that when he was writing on synchronicity something restricted him – he just could not get it right.

His eye kept looking at the stone wall at the side of the tower, and he decided to fixate (my word) the interruption and carved a rather smiling face depicting Mercury; beneath he inscribed the words: 'O (that is, Mercury) Fugaci illi. Ambiguo, duplici, illudendi jocoso'.

That did it.

He could then get on with his work.

On our return we passed the old church between Rapperswil and Bollingen.

C.G. said it dated back to the seventh century and had frescoes of the fifteenth century.

It was dedicated to Dionysius the Areopagite, and no churches were dedicated to him after the eighth century.

After coffee on the verandah, following lunch, C.G., Ruth and I went and sat on the pier by the lake and fed the swans; nine of them collected and seagulls came.

The seagulls breed on the upper lake and remain here all the time.

There were also some coots.

It was sunny and when C.G. went for his sleep, I sat on a chair by the lake in the shelter of the pier; it was beautifully warm.

Later I talked with C.G. in the garden room while he sat in front of the stone he was working on and now and then chipped at it.

He spoke of the importance of rumours as psychological phenomena, and in particular of those concerning flying saucers.

That there are such rumours, so widespread, is significant.

A fact which impressed him in one case was that the radar beam had been deflected; this is beyond rumour and remains a most important, though unexplained, fact.

There seems to be something factual about the hundreds of well-attested reports over many years of these phenomena.

A Californian psychiatrist was driving over a bridge in San Francisco with his wife when she suddenly saw these things in the sky and called his attention to them.

He glanced at them, but as he was driving could do no more.

C.G. heard of the incident and wrote to him; he replied saying he had seen the objects but was puzzled to know why C.G. should be interested in such things.

C.G. was amazed that this man could be so wooden-headed as to disregard such a phenomenon.

He said it was certain that these things could not be explained by our ordinary categories of thought; we had to take note of them for they may well come from outside our world, as we know it.

The French have a special bureau to investigate them, and so have the Americans.

He referred also to the remarkable effect of an American broadcast (this was Orson Welles's radio adaptation of H. G. Wells's The War of the Worlds) about an invasion of New York by people from Mars.

People were ready to accept this, as though they were inwardly expecting some momentous event from outside.

In the 'little room', that is the inner study in which I write, and on the table-desk, is the cricket ball presented to C.G. by the Society of Analytical Psychology in London with the inscription: 'The C.G. Jung Anniversary Cricket Match 10.7.55'.

This was presented to C.G. by Dr. Leopold Stein on behalf of the S.A.P. at the birthday party dinner at the Dolder Hotel in Zürich 1955.

C.G. enjoys detective stories, and I asked him why.

He turned the question and asked me what I thought.

I suggested that people like to identify themselves with, for instance, the clever detective; or in the story they find a character doing all the things they would like to do if they dared.

He said this was probably true, but his own interest was that the stories had nothing to do with him or his work; most of them, too, were about men.

Many novels had psychological themes and these bored him for he had plenty of this with his patients, far more interesting stuff.

But the detective stories were a rest, chiefly because they had no bearing on his professional work; and he could sleep after reading them because they were not true.

7th January 1957

In the afternoon we sat in the garden room; C.G. had the stone he was carving and worked at it now and then.

'Well, fire away!' he said.

I asked of his first impressions of the anima and he said it came in his dream of the white dove when the little girl stood beside him; she was like his eldest daughter.

He had this dream at Christmas time in 1913.

It was a momentous dream ranking in quality with his early dream at the Rhine Falls at the age of four.

He was sitting in the loggia of an old, beautiful and impressive castle; the loggia was at the top.

He sat in a gilded chair.

To his left was a table with gilded legs and a top of wonderful green stone, marble of a special kind (vert du mer), or emerald – it was the vivid green of an emerald.

Around the table were his children.

His wife was not there.

He sat gazing out through an arched window which had no glass in it; outside was the clear blue sky, not a cloud in sight.

Suddenly a white bird like a seagull or a white dove flew in and perched on the table beside him.

He signalled to the children not to speak and waited.

The bird disappeared; it was no longer there – this puzzled him greatly.

Then he was aware of a small girl of about eight years of age standing at his right side; she had fair hair like his eldest daughter.

She ran to join the children and afterwards returned for a little.

Then she disappeared.

Shortly after the white dove reappeared and perched on the table and said, ‘I can only come in the early part of the night when the master of the doves is engaged with the twelve dead men.’

At the time he could make nothing of the dream but later he linked the white dove with Hermes – it was the spiritual element.

And he recognized the green table as the Tabula Smaragdina of Hermes Trismegistos on which the basic elements of alchemical wisdom were engraved.

The dream foreshadowed his work on alchemy.

He spoke also of another dream which he had about 1925: There was fighting between Germans and Italians in North Italy.

He was escaping in a carriage drawn by horses; someone was driving this vehicle.

They reached the plains of Lombardy and he thought, ‘Here we are safe.’

They then came to a beautiful ducal palace; it stood in extensive grounds enclosed within a wall.

Before them a gate stood open and beyond, in the wall at the opposite side, was another open gate.

They drove in intending to pass right through; but at the castle steps the coachman jumped down – he had to stop.

Then the gates closed.

He knew they were imprisoned, yet had the feeling that he would nevertheless escape.

It was later that he came to see in this dream a reference to alchemy, for he discovered parallels to the castle and the closing of the gates in an old alchemical text, the Artis Auriferae.

The dream, as he saw it, was a prevision, an anticipation of his research, his captivation by alchemy.

8th January 1957

I asked about the negative aspect of the anima, and he said, ‘Well, we become aware of things first when they seem to be against us, to go in an opposite way.

That calls our attention to them.’

He mentioned how once, when he was painting, he distinctly heard the voice of a woman saying, ‘this is art’.

This happened at a time when his work on a book he was writing had come to a halt – he could not get on with it.

The meaning of the incident seemed to be that his writing could be regarded simply as art, as if truth did not matter and that he might write novels or something of the kind equally well.

It was the voice of a woman he knew, an artist who had come to work in Zürich and had had a very great influence on a former colleague of his at the Burghölzli – an unfavourable influence.

So when he heard her voice saying ‘this is art’, he realised that this was, as it were, the voice of the woman who had led his friend astray, and so he could deal with it.

This occurred at a very difficult time in 1913, when he was about to resign his post in the university as a lecturer in psychiatry.

He could not continue to teach because he had studied Freud’s way and also Adler’s, and had seen that they both had something which was too narrow.

So he had to find his own way, and it was tempting to think, as for a moment he did, of his work as Art.

But this was a deception, it was the negative aspect of the anima leading him astray.

In the afternoon after lunch I sat in the sun by the lake for an hour and a half.

Then tea, and a chat with C.G. and later a walk to the little park.

He was talking about types.

The extraverted person cannot value anything from the inside, hence the superficiality of much academic psychology – psychological tests for example, or the physical explanations of mental experiences.

There is no understanding of the fact that the mind itself has its causality; something from the inner life exerts its influence – ideas just arrive in the mind, or symptoms appear.

But people assume that these are derived from something outside themselves; the 'cause', however, may lie in their feelings which they have not considered.

He referred to psychological tests and experimental psychiatry, and the vast sums of money spent at Harvard on it – a big building filled with apparatus measuring reactions.

One experiment, in which he took part, was to demonstrate an optical illusion of a fast-moving object seeming to go in the opposite direction to that in which he was moving.

He asked the professor why they did such things, especially in a 'Department of Human Relations'.

What results did they get from the work?

He could not answer, but said it was necessary scientific research.

C.G. regarded this and similar things as insignificant – they measured so small a part of human reactions it seemed to have no real bearing on psychological understanding.

In the evening C.G. and I were alone for dinner and sat afterwards in the study.

He showed me an English Bible of 1540, owned by Thomas Wallis of Tonbridge who, according to the inscription at the beginning, died of 'gout of the stomach' at the age of eighty-five in the year 1775.

He showed me also his collection of alchemical works which he said was the best in Switzerland.

One volume, he said, was particularly interesting.

This was subtitled:

Theatrum Chemicum Britannicum containing several Poetical Pieces, of our famous English Philosophers, who have Written the Hermetique mysterium in their own Ancient Language Faithfully collected into one Volume with nnotations thereon By Elias Ashmole Esq.

Que est mercuriophilus Anglicus London Printed by J. Grifmann for Nath: Brooke at the Angel in Cornhill MDCLII The Prolegomena by E. Ashmole 26 Jan. 1651 addressed to All Ingeniously Elaborate Students In the most Divine Mysteries of Hermetique Learning.

In the main study hang two oil paintings, one on the left of C.G.'s father and the other of his grandfather.

He said he had a letter written by his grandfather, who went over the Gotthard Pass in a coach with horses and was mighty glad to get to the other side and down to the valley, for the road was narrow and difficult.

9th January 1957

Today C.G. received two little booklets entitled The Divine Law sent to him by their author, an Indian philosopher named B. Subramanya Iyer, whom he first met twenty years ago at a philosophical congress in Paris.

They were inscribed: 'With affectionate regards. 30.11.56.'

C.G. recalled that at the Paris conference no one listened to Iyer's lectures because he was speaking like someone of the thirteenth century.

It was as if Meister Eckhart were lecturing, and talking of the divine spark in man.

People just disregarded him.

C.G. cheered him up and invited him to Zürich; but he realised that he was unable to grasp modern thought and could not understand why no one took him seriously.

Then when C.G. was in India, he was invited to Mysore State where this man was the guru to the ruler; he was treated very well, stayed in the ruler's guest-house, and was taken for drives in an ancient but comfortable motor car.

This incident illustrated C.G.'s open attitude; he saw the interesting side of such a man while realising that he could understand nothing of his own psychology.

Also when he was lecturing in Bombay he saw that no one had the slightest idea of what he was talking about, so he began to tell stories of hypnotism and they thought this wonderful!

Later, he referred to the appearance, in analysis, of the archetypes: first comes the anima, then the old wise man, and then the puer aeternus, for every wise old man must also have the spirit of youth.

He mentioned also the archetypes as the representation of the instincts, that is, the instincts can be expressed in many ways – there are hundreds of possibilities.

But one form is selected because it corresponds to the instinct – it is an image of it.

He spoke of Dorset, which he knew well, and of the White Horse of Cerne Abbas, and other things.

Then, after dinner, Ruth opened The Listener, and the first thing she saw was a picture of a White Horse in Yorkshire.

C.G. was interested in this picture and mentioned that the ground had been moving and the horse was distorted.

All is moving.... He found Dorset strange and eerie.

He had camped somewhere there.

10th January 1957

C.G. discussed the point of view of the natural scientist.

He said that his own work made no attempt to be philosophical.

He was not interested in abstractions; he was concerned only with what he observed, and these things he sought to comprehend.

He had a critical mind and could not accept explanations that certain illnesses were caused by certain events.

He wanted to study the particular illness, to see what it was.

Life is not only what we expect it to be. P eople want to get at reality; they seek, for example, to dismiss a delusion merely because it does not conform to ‘reality’.

But the delusion itself is something; one cannot deny its reality because it is unusual.

He spoke of a dream he had years ago at Bollingen at a time when only the first tower was built.

He was alone there for some days, perfectly quiet and at home with Nature.

He dreamt that he heard music of various instruments, accordions, violins, and so on, and saw a long procession of people walking by the side of the lake, coming from the direction of Schmerikon.

When they reached the Tower they divided, one column passed on one side and one on the other. It was so vivid that he woke wondering what they could be doing.

He did not realise he had been dreaming and got up and pulled the shutter aside to see these people.

There was no one there, nothing but the light of the moon on a clear night.

He went back to bed and fell asleep.

The same dream returned, but in it he dreamt that he thought it to be a dream although in fact it was real.

Then he woke, and again looked out having pulled the shutter aside.

At the time he could make nothing of this dream.

It occurred about thirty years ago, and only last year he came across an account written by an old historian in Lucerne, R. Cysat (1545-1614), who made a collection of the folklore of the area at the beginning of the seventeenth century.

Amongst the tales was one of a shepherd on Pilatus.

Another man went up and spent a night with him, and in the morning he asked the shepherd about the procession of people playing musical instruments which had passed on either side of the place where they were camped.

The shepherd said, ‘Oh, you have seen the hosts of Wotan.’

C.G. mentioned this dream as an instance of how the collective unconscious is constellated at certain times, and the great value of this.

It is important to be alone and unhurried sometimes, for then we are close to Nature (as he was on the night of this dream); then we can hear the voice of Nature speaking to us.

He told me also how many years ago he and his wife and children were on holiday in a part of Switzerland he knew well.

One morning he went on an expedition with the children and returned at lunch time.

His wife told him she had been for a walk on the other side of the town where there was a moraine and some small hills.

She had seen a very old wooden building at the top of one of these hills and had gone up to look at it.

She was very interested in the carving on the door; the wood was dark with age and the carving was of unusually fine quality.

C.G. said, ‘That’s funny! I can’t remember such a building and I know that moraine quite well.’

He asked her to describe its position again and she suggested that after lunch they should go and see it, it would only take about twenty minutes; it was on the second, or possibly the third, little hill.

After lunch they set off and passed the second, third and fourth hill, but no building was there.

She was puzzled, but absolutely certain she had seen it.

They spent two hours inspecting every hill but could not find it. C.G. said his wife was a particularly well-balanced person, full of common-sense: ‘She was a sensation type – you couldn’t put anything over on her.’

But she had that experience; here was a fact, and he could not explain it.

A similar episode occurred much later. C.G. had spoken to Toni Wolff about the Baptistry of the Orthodox in Ravenna where Galla Placidia was buried.

Early in the fifth century, after surviving a stormy sea voyage to Ravenna, she had built a church there in fulfilment of a vow.

The original church was later destroyed, but her tomb is there.

After visiting the tomb they entered the Baptistry.

It was filled with a bluish light, though there was no artificial lighting. C.G. looked round the building and remarked to Toni,‘Isn’t it curious?

Here are these beautiful mosaics on the west, the east, the south and the north in this octagonal building, and I can’t remember Seeing them before – it’s most remarkable for they are so striking!’

In the centre was the font; it was big for it was used for immersion.

For twenty minutes they studied the mosaics.

C.G. described them as about twice the size of a tapestry hanging in the verandah (which is about six feet by eight feet).

Each depicted a baptism scene: one of St. Peter sinking into the sea and our Lord saving him; one of the Israelites in the Red Sea, when the water drowned the Egyptians; one of Naaman the Syrian bathing in the water and being cured of leprosy; and one of our Lord’s baptism.

The double symbolism of baptism as a saving of life and as a danger of death was shown in each mosaic.

C.G. was particularly impressed by that showing Peter sinking in the sea and stretching out his hand and Jesus reaching for him; this was a most beautiful mosaic of lapis lazuli.

On leaving the Baptistry they went to a shop opposite to get photographs of these mosaics – one of the small shops always found near such places.

They were offered pictures of the Baptistry, but none of the mosaics.

They went to another shop – no luck – and to several others, but they could not find the photographs they wanted.

Soon after C. A. Meier was going to Italy and C.G. told him to be sure to visit Ravenna and see these mosaics and get pictures of them, or if he couldn’t, to take photographs.

Meanwhile C.G. was giving a seminar, in the course of which he mentioned the wonderful mosaics he and Miss Wolff had seen at Ravenna, and he described them in detail.

When Dr. Meier returned from Italy he told C.G. that he had gone to the Baptistry in Ravenna but that there were no mosaics there of the kind he had described.

C.G. told this to Toni Wolff who said, ‘That’s ridiculous, I saw them with my own eyes and you talked of them for about twenty minutes!’

‘Nevertheless,’ he said, ‘there are no such mosaics!

So at the seminar he said, ‘Ladies and gentlemen, I’m sorry but there are no mosaics.’

Here was an experience which two people had, yet how to explain it quite defeated him – he had no suggestion to offer.

He mentioned these things to show how mysterious the mind is, how little we know of it, and how futile it is to 'explain' the manifestations of the psyche away when they do not conform with what we are accustomed to call reality.

There are many things in the psyche which we do not understand and have yet to discover, and it was this which initiated his trips to Africa, to the Pueblo Indians, and to India.

He wanted to study the mind of the primitive in Africa, people whose point of view was absolutely different from our own.

The spectrum of human understanding is infinitely varied and we cannot look on one attitude as right and another wrong in our attempts to explain things beyond our comprehension.

Thus, on the African trip he asked a very intelligent man who was a priest or teacher whether the world was flat, a disc or a globe. 'It's a flat disc,' he replied.

'Well,' said C.G., 'if you see a ship on the horizon, which part do you see first?'

'You see the ship.' 'No,' said C.G., and he referred the question to one of the others who said, 'You see the smoke first, then the masts, and then the ship.' 'That's right,' said C.G., 'and that's because the world is a globe.'

'No,' said the priest, 'that's not true!'

'Well,' said C.G., 'what is the reason?'

The priest looked very puzzled; he walked up and down holding his head and for a time could find no answer.

Then he said, 'Now I've got it!

Allah once made an enormous stone bull and threw it into the ocean but its left horn remained above the surface; that horn is the earth.

It sticks up so that you think the earth is a globe, but it could not be a globe for if it were the sea would fall off!'

'Yes,' said the others, 'that is the true reason.'

C.G. was greatly interested for he recognised this as an old Persian idea.

These people took it for a fact and were satisfied.

He continued to talk about his visit to Africa, where he first met Ruth Bailey; this was in 1925, and she has remained a close family friend ever since.

C.G.'s companions on the journey were Peter Baynes and George Beckwith; Fowler McCormick was to have come but was prevented.

On the same boat Ruth was also travelling to Africa with her younger sister whose fiancé they were to meet in Nairobi.

She did not meet C.G. on the boat however; he and his companions did not share in the general social activities of the ship but kept apart, reading or talking.

They came to be called ‘the three Obadiahs’ (from the old song, Obadiah, Obadiah).

In Nairobi everyone stayed in the same hotel, and Ruth’s sister was joined by her fiancé.

He, of course, showed Ruth every courtesy as well and she became embarrassed when the couple would not allow her to go off on her own and leave them together.

In the evening there was a dance in the hotel and Ruth slipped away from her companions into an adjoining lounge; C.G. was sitting there studying maps and she asked if she might, without disturbing him, sit at the same table in order not to appear isolated.

He said, ‘Oh yes,’ and went on looking at his papers.

He did not speak for about an hour, and then suddenly said, ‘Are you interested in maps?’

She said, ‘Yes, very.’

He then talked of his projected journey and showed her where they were going.

After this meeting Ruth spent some of her time with C.G. and his companions until they left the hotel.

They made their way towards Mount Elgon and were encamped in its foothills when C.G. received a letter from the Governor of Uganda asking if he would escort an English lady who was to travel back from Nairobi by way of the Sudan and Egypt – the route he himself planned to follow.

Ruth was the person in question, so the meeting in Nairobi paved the way to C.G.’s assent.

She made her own way to the site of their camp and was with them for the rest of the expedition – about three months.

She had not heard of C.G. previously and knew nothing of his work or reputation.

She was well equipped for the eventualities of camp life with a natural ability to meet any situation with humour and goodwill, and sound practical sense.

11th January 1957

C.G. referred again to the publication of The Psychology of the Unconscious and said he had great difficulty in writing about sacrifice – he could not do so for two months.

He said he did not write in chapters but continuously, and divided the work later.

He felt the book would not be acceptable to Freud because it brought in another principle, namely, that the unconscious acted autonomously.

This notion Freud had never admitted into his thinking, and C.G. felt that the publication of the book would mean a break with Freud.

His wife reassured him that this would be impossible but he remained unconvinced, and events turned out as he had anticipated.

I referred to the point he had made previously, that his work sprang from his own mind and was not learned from others.

As an instance he quoted his interest in trying to understand why Freud and Adler could not agree.

Plenty of other people were aware of this but no one saw it as a problem except himself.

For him it was a serious matter, and the study of it led to his work on types.

I asked about himself – how his own attitude fitted in with his classification of types, and he said he was most definitely the introverted thinking type.

Like Freud, Adler was satisfied with his own theory, for by it he could explain everything.

For him, sex was not the important thing, but rather that the man wanted to be on top.

C.G. saw that there were these two points of view and each explained a lot, but not everything.

Freud had made his method and his theory one, and this was false.

He would not, and could not, be empirical for you cannot be empirical if you have a fixed theory.

He mentioned that he had a tussle with himself when he realised that through the word association tests he had found clinical proof of Freud's theory of repression.

The devil said: 'Why not publish it?

It's very interesting and nothing to do with Freud.'

But he resisted this momentary idea and decided there and then to throw in his lot with Freud.

It was a serious decision for it meant sacrificing his academic career and going against the advice of many of his friends.

But he was interested in the truth and 'to hell with an academic career.'

He remarked how important it was for people to be in their own function – as they really are.

For instance how boring it is when women are always sensible – it is better when they behave a little unexpectedly, irrationally; this makes them more interesting.

Regarding Freudian assumptions that everything was infantile sexuality which had been repressed, he said, ‘Their view is that when this is realised you must just put it away, forget it and be cured.

But you can’t put it away without hurt because childish things are very valuable – the dependence, the interest, the expectant attitude.

This is the puer aeternus and you need it, especially in old age for it keeps people healthy.

So it is a bad blunder to try to get rid of it; moreover, you cannot just dispose of it.’

He said he often asked what sublimation really was and he could never get an answer.

It is just a term and has no reality.

You can’t change people to fit a theory.

I asked him for his ideas in the treatment of manic-depressive patients.

He thought they were very difficult, but a good plan was to put them to bed when, as often, they became irritable before either a manic or a depressed phase.

He cited also two cases of depression.

One was a woman who had depressions and a fear of going to Paris.

Having remained well for two years, and being eager to see the pictures in the Louvre – she was a highly educated person – she went to Paris with a friend.

On the day they arrived there she and her friend were killed by a taxi.

The other was the case of a man who was afraid to go up steps into public buildings such, he said, as the steps to the British Museum.

This man was in Berlin during the civil troubles before Hitler; there was firing in a street and people ran into houses for shelter.

He was outside a public building and rushed up the steps to seek safety, but on the steps ‘a bullet found him’ and he died.

Apart altogether from psychological discussions, I have noted again and again in general conversation with C.G. how he always gets the facts straight before he makes any comment, and when anything is obscure he questions people until he is sure he understands their meaning.

This is very typical of his work and of his attitude, he takes nothing for granted, but wants the facts.

He is always ready for something new or unexpected; this is why he has no final theories.

On a walk this evening he asked if I had ever heard a sermon upon the parable of the unjust steward. I said I hadn’t.

‘No,’ he said, ‘the theologians never preach about that, for Christ praised the man who had cheated or, in other words, was fully conscious.'

After dinner we sat on the verandah, C.G. behind the little table wearing, as usual, a blue apron, and on the table lay the stone he was carving of the family lineage on the male side.

Now and then he chipped at the letters with an expert touch.

He mentioned that the inscription was in Latin: 'You see, Latin is the correct, dignified language in which to address the ancestors.'

He added that when he was given an honorary degree at Harvard there was a Latin oration, and he was presented with a 'parchment'.

He was particularly interested to see how they had translated the word 'unconscious' into Latin, and it was mens vacua, the unknown or unexplored mind.

He had been described as the explorer of the unconscious, and he thought this phrase particularly apt.

Later he showed me the knife which long ago had broken into four pieces with a loud report.

He had it mounted on a piece of thick paper, and he wrote a description under it.

He also spoke of the table which had split with a sudden sharp crack; it was a walnut table which had been part of his grandmother's dowry and it was about seventy years old.

Both these events were unexplained.

They had happened shortly before he met the mediumistic girl about whom he wrote his dissertation On the Psychology and Pathology of so-called Occult Phenomena.

At the same time he showed me a small tumbler of slightly tinted (red or pink) glass, and the rim at the top was sharp all round.

He said that at the moment his wife's mother died the upper part of the glass had broken off.

And he referred again to the experience in the Baptistry at Ravenna as yet another unexplained event.

A point of interest to me was that he had kept this knife carefully since 1898, and also the glass later.

It was interesting, too, that he had not written a note on the paper on which the knife was mounted until this evening.

12th January 1957

At breakfast this morning C.G. spoke of his visit to Paris in 1902.

He never saw Charcot, who had retired, but he attended Janet's lectures.

He found them terribly boring – no fertilising ideas at all.

Janet never knew his patients; he was the opposite of Freud who could never see beyond his patients, but saw them only through his own theory.

Janet was typical of French psychology, which was still of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries when the French were the centre of Europe.

The French did not travel; he had read an article in Le Matin about this.

They looked on foreigners as barbarians, and why go to see them?

They had all they needed.

The French language was spoken by all polite, educated people; thus in Basel, French was quite de rigueur amongst the patrician families.

Even Leibnitz wrote his works in French.

He mentioned the famous tapestry in the museum in Zürich.

It depicts a treaty made with one of the French kings, and shows the French in gorgeous dresses and robes, and the Swiss delegation in top hats and black coats, like a collection of elders – 'Nothing outside, it was all inside, and they were very clever, very cunning.

It is the best summary of French and Swiss psychology – you get the whole thing.

You have to know these things to understand the psychology of French patients.'

He was in Paris for months but never got to know a French family.

There were plenty of students, but no meeting them outside the lecture rooms.

The French would be very polite if you were buying something from them or if they wanted something from you; otherwise all was on the surface.

They were like that before the Revolution.

Then came Napoleon and La Grande Armée – but still on top, and everyone else nowhere.

They are like that still, so they make wonderful dresses to sell – all on the surface.

It was totally different when he went to London and lived in a little hotel near the British Museum.

He showed me a letter from an American patient whom he had treated for a schizophrenic breakdown over twenty years ago.

She wrote: 'You told me at the time that it, the break, was my one big chance, and I thought you were only trying to give me the courage to fight through.

But you were right, and I have the proof of it now.

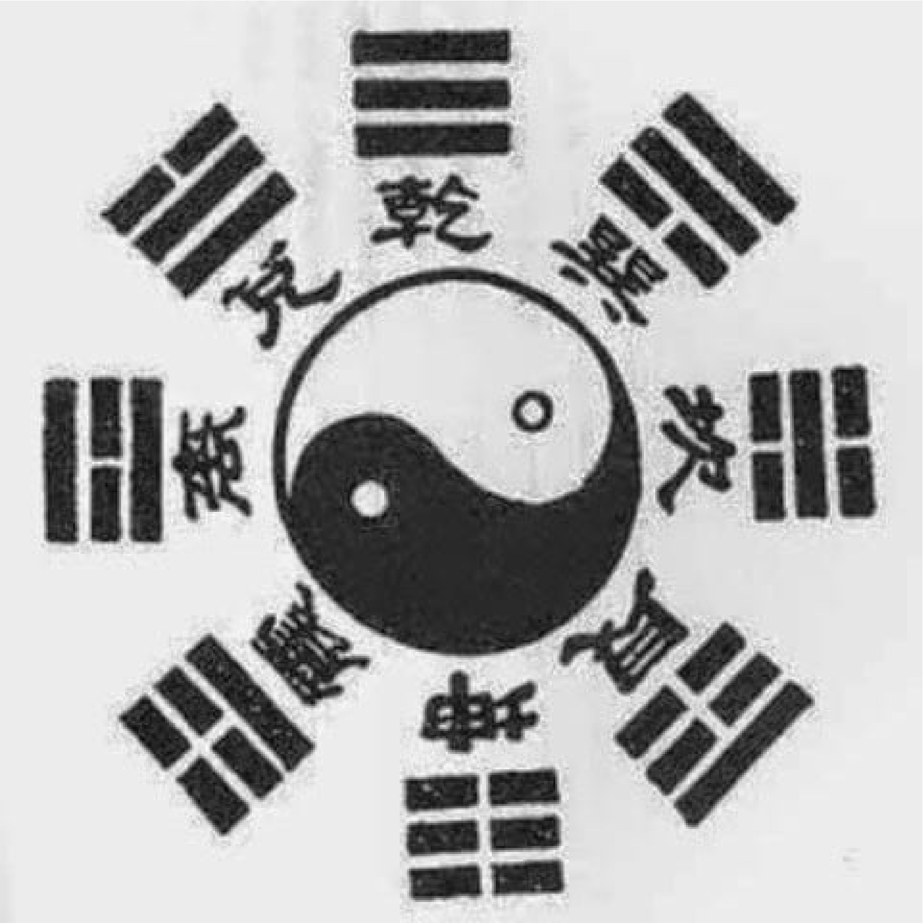
However, if I hadn’t had the great fortune to get to you, that break would have been my complete ending, and none of the good fortune I listed above would have happened.’

This evening we are sitting again in the study, as has been customary all through this visit – C.G. in his chair, reading or playing patience, Ruth reading on the couch, and myself in a chair by the desk with a shaded lamp, writing notes. Very little conversation. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 166-225

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/06005-442bbennet.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1I57DMD8233OU&keywords=carl+jung+bennet+conversations&qid=15`

Carl Jung on why he did not pursue “further pursuit of the intricacies of I Ching.” (2019-12-24 05:43)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Wilfrid Lay

Dear Mr. Lay, 20 April 1946

It was a great pleasure to have a letter from your hand.

Its contents have pleased me very much as they convey essential things.

You have understood my purpose indeed, even down to my "erudite" style.

As a matter of fact it was my intention to write in such a way that fools get scared and only true scholars and seekers can enjoy its reading.

I admire you very much for having learned and apparently mastered the difficult Chinese language.

I never got so far and that is the reason why I feel hopelessly handicapped in the further pursuit of the intricacies of I Ching.

I once had the immodest and rather foolish fantasy of writing a commentary on the I Ching, but I soon recognized the enormity of such a task and the absolute inadequacy of my equipment.

I’m not as old as you are yet, but I must say that not very long ago I recognized the immense truth of being the hsiao jen.

Such an understanding is indispensable to anyone who wants to understand what you very rightly formulate as equipollence.

Only the hsiao jen contains the chen-jen, who is the universal basis for your equipollence.

Your method of unravelling the mysteries of a quotation, namely by looking up its context, is very subtle and I must say elucidating.

Curiously enough it coincides absolutely with my method of dream interpretation.

What you say about "this so-called peace," which apparently doesn’t make you particularly happy, doesn’t refer any more to the Pax Romana of olden times.

It is now, as you have noticed, a Pax Americana.

It should fill you with pride if you are still accessible to political illusions.

To me this peace is no peace at all.

I think there is no such thing as peace, since even a peaceful democracy like Switzerland is nothing but a mitigated civil war which we are wise enough or small enough to entertain chronically in order to escape worse issues.

Man, on the whole, is a fool and remains a fool.

Yet it is apparently indispensable to believe in a better future.

It never has been better, however, it has only been new and apparently incomparable, so that people have always been puzzled whether it could not be perchance the long hoped-for better future.

Hoping you are always in good health,

I remain,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung

Note: Lit. "little man." The "little man" is frequently referred to in the I Ching; his fate is to suffer and accept (cf. Hellmut Wilhelm, "Das Zusammenwirken von Himmel, Erde und Mensch," Eranos Jahrbuch 1962 , pp. 342f.).

Richard Wilhelm, in his German translation of the I Ching, used the term "gemeiner Mensch" (common man), which in Mrs. Baynes’s English version is rendered "inferior man."

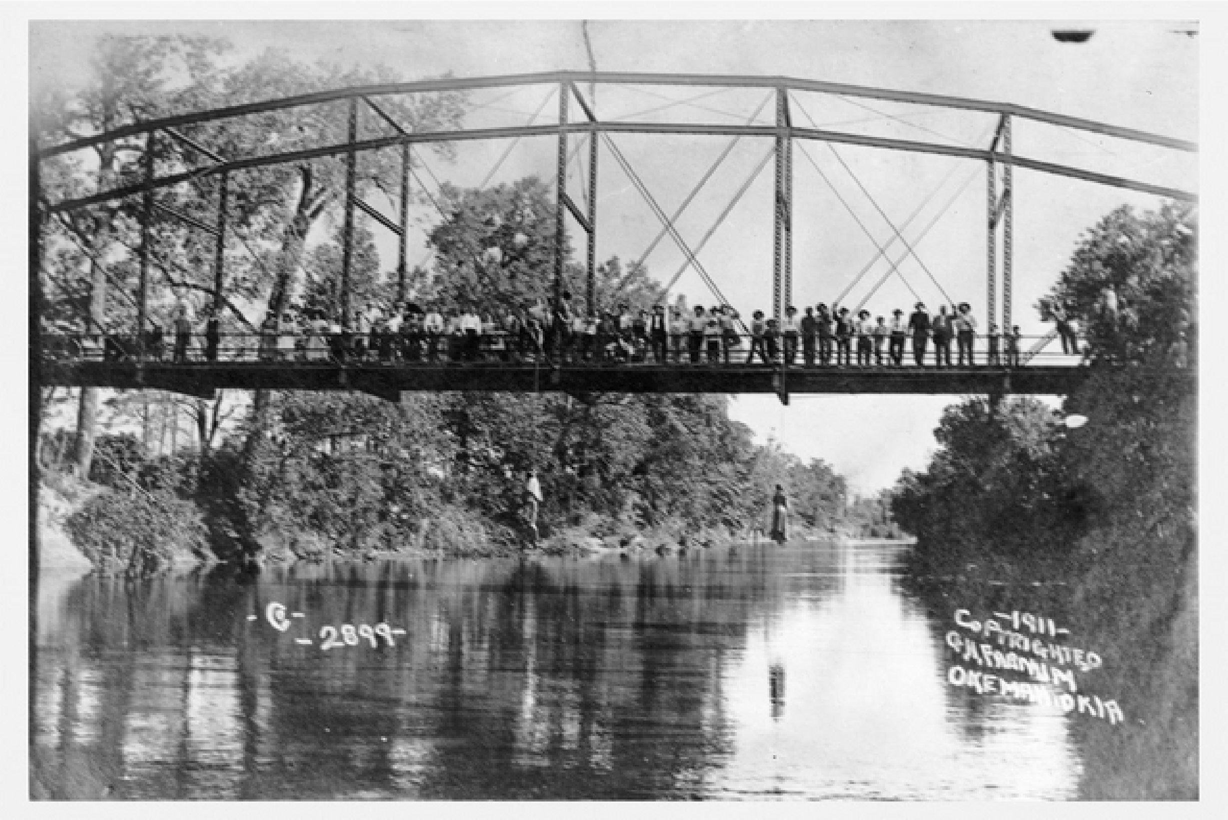
According to a communication from Hellmut Wilhelm, the term hsiao jen in the I Ching does not carry a derogatory meaning although it acquired this in later writings, particularly those of the Confucian school; so perhaps "common man" would express the double meaning more accurately.

Note: L.’s concept of "spiritual equipollence," according to which "everyone has a soul, and has as much chance as anyone else of becoming conscious of its extent.”

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/a0399-ching.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+letters+vol.+1&qid=1577195810&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: “I know from my practice what it takes to drive even the simplest, most obvious truth into people.” (2019-12-24 06:19)

[1]



To Fritz Verzar

Dear Colleague, 31 October 1946

Please forgive me for having kept you waiting so long for my answer.

Lately I have had so much to do that it simply wasn't possible to give your letter the attention it deserved.

But now I will delay no longer and tell you my reaction.

I am quite convinced that something ought to be done to make mankind aware of the tremendous dangers of the path they are travelling.

In some respects people are already aware that the situation is extremely dangerous, as the universal fear of war proves.

It is self-evident that it would be highly desirable to humanize humanity, but when one sees the struggle the great powers have in order to reach any kind of agreement on apparently the most reasonable measures for the well-being of the world at large, and how they fail because one or the other refuses to be talked to or cannot give way, this becomes even more impossible when certain moral questions are touched upon.

To be sure, a general agreement could be reached that human beings should not murder each other, but this would instantly be circumvented by sticking them in labour camps in Siberia, for instance, where people are not exactly murdered but are housed and fed so that they can work, and where they then perish of various diseases, while all the time the State refuses to admit that it has murdered them.

The Americans are certainly a very humane nation, or at least imagine they are, but this does not prevent so-and-so many Negroes from being lynched every year.

Moreover I have some doubts whether it would not have been more humane, for instance, to shoot Grand Admiral Raeder as he wished, instead of putting him behind bars for 30 years.

I at any rate would prefer to be shot than to spend even 10 years in prison.

When one knows how the prisoners degenerate morally and spiritually, and under what torments, one is no longer 100 per cent convinced that the death penalty would not be far more humane.

Only for outsiders, who have never been inside, is penal servitude not a hellish cruelty.

I know many cases from my psychiatric experience where death would have been a mercy in comparison with life in a prison.

Unfortunately you can't preach to people, for if it really worked the world would long since have been converted to Christianity and then there would be no crime any more.

But that is just the difficulty, that you get nowhere with teaching and telling people.

What was the end result of hundreds of years of Christian education in Germany?

The barbarism was not touched by it in the slightest, and God knows enough was said every Sunday from all the pulpits in Europe.

I know from my practice what it takes to drive even the simplest, most obvious truth into people.

In certain cases it is simply impossible, and these are not even madmen but people who in their private life are considered absolutely compos mentis.

Of course governments could do something, but nowadays when you want anything from any government you are referred to the world situation, which causes the governments enough headaches as it is and leaves them no time to think about how the death penalty could be abolished or human life made sacred.

Fundamentally, no one is convinced enough of the absolute value and sanctity of man to guarantee him his life under all circumstances.

You can see that with damages for fatal accidents: a man's life is worth ca. 5000 frs.

And it is unfortunately true that the more he values his own life the less he values that of his fellow man.

After what has happened in Germany I have lost the last vestiges of any illusions I may have had about man's capacity for improvement.

If it is not possible to bring about any change in human consciousness we shall not succeed, either, in realizing an ideal which is acknowledged by all reasonable people anyway but founders again and again on the savage unreason and unconsciousness of humanity in general.

Sure I would be hopeful and would do everything in my power to support your endeavours if only I saw the slightest possibility of their meeting with success.

But unfortunately I know that no outcry and no discussion can alter things in the least.

With best regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 446-448.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/c6d0a-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+letters+vol.+1&qid=1577195810&sr=8-1`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/33bbb-2.jpg`

Carl Jung: If the superior function is intuition, for example, then the intuitions are directly in the way,

(2019-12-24 06:28)

[1]

The transference phenomenon is an inevitable feature of every thorough analysis…

– Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 283

FrithLuton.com

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

[Carl Jung: If the superior function is intuition, for example, then the intuitions are directly in the way..]

Lecture 4

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Mann's question: "Is it not by intuition that one arrives most easily at the transcendent function, and if a person is lacking in that function—that is, in intuition—are not the difficulties greatly increased?

Must one not reach the transcendent function alone, that is, unaided?"

Dr. Jung: It depends very much on the person's type as to what part intuition plays in finding the transcendent function.

If the superior function is intuition, for example, then the intuitions are directly in the way, since the transcendent function is made, or takes place, between the superior and the inferior functions.

The inferior function can only come up at the expense of the superior, so that in the intuitive type the intuitions have to be overcome, so to speak, in order for the transcendent function to be found.

On the other hand, if the person is a sensation type, then the intuitions are the inferior function, and the transcendent function may be said to be arrived at through intuition.

It is a fact that in analysis it often seems as though intuition were the most important of the functions, but that is only so because analysis is a laboratory experiment and not reality.

Lecture

At our last meeting I told you all that I could about the making of the Psychology of the Unconscious and its effect on me.

It was published in 1912, as Wandlungen und Symbole der Libido.

The problem it brought to focus in my mind was that of the hero myth in relation to our own times.

With the fundamental thesis of the book, namely the splitting of the libido into a positive and a negative current, Freud was, as I have said, in utter disagreement.

The publishing of the book marks the end of our friendship.

Today I would like to speak about the subjective aspect of the Psychology of the Unconscious.

When one writes such a book, one has the idea that one is writing about certain objective material, and in my case I thought I was merely handling the Miller fantasies with a certain point in view together with the attendant mythological material.

It took me a long time to see that a painter could paint a picture and think the matter ended there and had nothing whatever to do with himself.

And in the same way it took me several years to see that it, the Psychology of the Unconscious, can be taken as myself and that an analysis of it leads inevitably into an analysis of my own unconscious processes.

Difficult as it is to do this in a lecture, it is this aspect I would like to discuss, tracing out especially the ways in which the book seemed to forecast the future.

As you remember, the book begins with a statement about two kinds of thinking that can be observed: intellectual or directed thinking, and fantastic or passive automatic thinking.

In the process of directed thinking, thoughts are handled as tools, they are made to serve the purposes of the thinker; while in passive thinking thoughts are like individuals going about on their own as it were.

Fantastical thinking knows no hierarchy; the thoughts may even be antagonistic to the ego.

I took Miss Miller's fantasies as such an autonomous form of thinking, but I did not realize that she stood for that form of thinking in myself.

She took over my fantasy and became stage director to it, if one interprets the book subjectively.

In other words, she became an anima figure, a carrier of an inferior function of which I was very little conscious.

I was in my consciousness an active thinker accustomed to subjecting my thoughts to the most rigorous sort of direction, and therefore fantasizing was a mental process that was directly repellent to me.

As a form of thinking I held it to be altogether impure, a sort of incestuous intercourse, thoroughly immoral from an intellectual viewpoint.

Permitting fantasy in myself had the same effect on me as would be produced on a man if he came into his workshop and found all the tools flying about doing things independently of his will.

It shocked me, in other words, to think of the possibility of a fantasy life in my own mind; it was against all the intellectual ideals I had developed for myself, and so great was my resistance to it, that I could only admit the fact in myself through the process of projecting my material into Miss Miller's.

Or, to put it even more strongly, passive thinking seemed to me such a weak and perverted thing that I could only handle it through a diseased woman.

As a matter of fact, Miss Miller did afterwards become entirely deranged.

During the war I had a letter from the man who was Miss Miller's doctor in America, telling me that my analysis of her fantasy material had been a perfectly correct one, that in her insanity the cosmogonic myths touched upon had come fully to light.

Also Flournoy, who had her under observation at the time I first read her material, told me that my analysis had been correct.

There was such a tremendous activity of the collective unconscious that it is not surprising she was finally overcome.

I had to realize then that in Miss Miller I was analyzing my own fantasy function, which because it was so repressed, like hers, was semi-morbid.

When a function is repressed that way, it becomes contaminated by material from the collective unconscious.

So Miss Miller would, in a way, be a description of my impure thinking; and thus in this book the question of the inferior function and the anima comes up.

In the second part of the book there comes the "Hymn of Creation."

This is the positive expression of the unfolding of energy: or generating power—it is the way up.

The "Song of the Moth"4 is the way down; it is light created, and then creating going to its end, a kind of enantiodromia.

In the first case it is the period of growth, of youth, of light and summer.

In the moth the libido is shown to burn its wings in the light it has created before; it is going to kill itself in the same urge that brought it to birth.

With this duality in the cosmic principle, the book ends.

It leads up to the pairs of opposites, that is, to the beginning of the Types.

The next portion of the book deals with creative energy in a different aspect.

Energy can show itself in manifold forms and in a process of transition from6 one form to another.

The basic transformation is that which ensues when the energy passes from strictly biological needs into cultural achievements.

From this point on it is a matter of evolution.

How is it possible then to get across from the sexual, for example, to the spiritual, not only from the scientific standpoint, but as a phenomenon in the individual?

Sexuality and spirituality are pairs of opposites that need each other.

How is the process that leads from the sexual stage to the spiritual stage brought about?

The first image that comes up is the hero.

It is a most ideal image whose qualities change from age to age, but it has always embodied the things people value the most.

The hero embodies the transition we are seeking to trace, for it is as though in the sexual stage man feels too much under the power of nature, a power which he is in no way able to manage.

The hero is a very perfect man, he stands out as a human protest against nature, who is seeking to rob man of that possibility of perfection.

The unconscious makes the hero symbol, and therefore the hero means a change of attitude.

But this hero symbol comes also from the unconscious, which is also nature, that same nature which is not the least interested in the ideal that man is struggling to formulate.

Man comes then into conflict with the unconscious, and this struggle is that of winning free from his unconscious, his mother.

His unconscious, as I said, forms images of perfect people, but when he tries to realize these hero types, another trend in the unconscious is aroused, [a trend] to the attempt to destroy the image.

So is developed the terrible mother, the devouring dragon, the dangers of rebirth, etc.

At the same time the appearance of the hero ideal means the strengthening of the hopes of man.

It gives man the notion that he can reorganize the lines of his life if the mother will allow it.

This can't be done by a literal rebirth, so it is accomplished by a transformation process, or psychological rebirth.

But this is not to be done without serious battle with the mother.

The paramount question becomes, Will the mother allow the hero to be born?

And then, What can be done to satisfy the mother so that she will allow it?

Thus we come to the idea of the sacrifice as embodied in the bull-sacrifice of Mithras.

This is not a Christian but a Mithraic idea.

The hero himself is not sacrificed, but his animal side, the bull.

A discussion of the role of the mother or unconscious as both birthplace and source of destruction leads to the idea of the dual mother role, or the existence of the pairs of opposites in the unconscious, the principle of construction and the principle of destruction.

A sacrifice must be done in order to cut the hero away from the power of the unconscious and give him his individual autonomy.

He has to pay himself off and contrive to fill the vacuum left in the unconscious. What is to be sacrificed?

According to mythology, it is childhood, the veil of Maya, past ideals.

In connection with this I may say there is a passage in the Psychology of the Unconscious upon which I have often been attacked.

I have said there that the greatest help in getting one over the dangers of the rebirth and breaking away from the mother was to be found in regular work.

Sometimes in thinking over this I have thought that was a cheap and inadequate way of meeting this tremendous problem, and then I have been inclined to side with my critics.

But the more I have thought of it, the more I have been convinced that after all I was in the first place correct, and our regularly repeated efforts to throw off unconsciousness—that is, by regular work—has made our humanity.

We can conquer unconsciousness by regular work but never by a grand gesture.

If I say to a Negro, how do you deal with your unconscious?

He gives as answer, "By work."

"But," I say, "your life is all play."

This he vehemently denies and explains to me that much of his life passes in the performance of the most laborious dances for the spirits.

Dancing to us is really play, it is lightness and grace, but for primitives it is really hard work.

All ceremonies may be said to be work, and our sense of work to be derivative therefrom.

Following this theme further, I can give the illustration of the action of the Australian Negro when he is sick.

He goes to a place where his churinga is hidden in the rocks.

He rubs it.

The churinga is full of healthy magic, and when he rubs it, this gets into his system and his sickness goes into the churinga which then is put back in its place in the rocks where it can digest the sickness and refill itself with healthy magic.

That replaces prayer.

We would say one got strength from God through prayer, but the primitive gets strength from God by work.

If you have followed these explanations at all, you will have seen that the material could not fail to make a great impression on me, I mean the mythological material with which I was working.

One of the most important influences was that I elaborated Miss Miller's morbidity into myths in a way satisfactory to myself, and so I assimilated the Miller side of myself, which did me much good.

To speak figuratively, I found a lump of clay, turned it to gold and put it in my pocket.

I got Miller into myself and strengthened my fantasy power by the mythological material.

Then I continued my active thinking, but with hesitancy.

It seemed as if my fantasy were going away from the material.

At this time I wrote little.

Through the fact that I worried about my difficulty with Freud, I came to study Adler carefully in order to see what was his case against Freud.

I was struck at once by the difference in type.

Both were treating neurosis and hysteria, and yet to the one man it looked so, and to the other it was something quite different.

I could find no solution.

Then it dawned on me that possibly I was dealing with two different types, who were fated to approach the same set of facts from widely differing aspects.

I began to see among my patients some who fit Adler's theories, and others who fit Freud's, and thus I came to formulate the theory of extraversion: and introversion.

There followed much discussion here and there among friends and acquaintances, through which I found that I had the tendency to project my inferior extraverted side into my extraverted friends, and they their introverted sides into me.

By discussion with my personal friends, I found that because of this continued projection into them of my inferior function, I was always in danger of depreciating them.

My patients I could take impersonally and objectively, but my friends I had to meet on a feeling basis, and as feeling is a relatively undifferentiated function in me, and therefore in the unconscious, it naturally carried a heavy load of projections.

Little by little I made a discovery that was shocking to me, namely the fact of this extraverted personality, which every introvert carries within him in his unconscious, and which I had been projecting upon my friends to their detriment.

It was equally annoying to my extravert friends to have to admit an inferior introvert within themselves.

Out of these experiences that were partly personal, I wrote a little pamphlet on the psychological types, and afterwards read it as a paper before a congress.

There were contained in this several mistakes which I afterwards could rectify.

Thus, for example, I thought that an extravert must always be a feeling type, which was clearly a projection growing out of the fact of my own extraversion being associated with my unconscious feeling.

All of this is the outside picture of the development of my book on the types.

I could perfectly well say this is the way the book came about and make an end of it there.

But there is another side, a weaving about among mistakes, impure thinking, etc., etc., which is always very difficult for a man to make public.

He likes to give you the finished product of his directed thinking and have you understand that so it was born in his mind, free of weakness.

A thinking man's attitude toward his intellectual life is quite comparable to that of a woman toward her erotic life.

If I ask a woman about the man she has married, "How did this come about?" she will say, "I met him and loved him, and that is all."

She will conceal most carefully all the little back alleys of the erotic highway she has travelled, all the little meannesses, and squinting situations that she may have been involved in, and she will present you with an unrivalled perfection of smoothness.

Above all she will conceal from you the erotic mistakes she has made.

She will not have it that she has been weak in this her strongest function.

Just so with a man about his books.

He does not want to tell of the secret alliances, the faux pas of his mind.

This it is that makes lies of most autobiographies.

Just as sexuality is in women largely unconscious, so is this inferior side of his thinking largely unconscious in a man.

And just as a woman erects her stronghold of power in her sexuality, and will not give away any of the secrets of its weak side, so a man centers his power in his thinking and proposes to hold it as a solid front against the public, particularly against other men.

He thinks if he tells the truth in this field it is equivalent to turning over the keys of his citadel to the enemy.

But this other side of his thinking is not repellent to a woman, and therefore a man can usually speak freely of it to a woman, particularly to a certain sort of woman.

As you know I think of women as belonging in general to two types, the mother and the hetaira.

The hetaira type acts as the mother for the other side of men's thinking.

The very fact of its being a weak and helpless sort of thinking appeals to this sort of woman; she thinks of it as something embryonic which she helps to develop.

Paradoxical as it may seem, even a cocotte may sometimes know more about the spiritual growth of a man than his own wife.

Now at this time, inasmuch as I was actively thinking, I had to find some way to reserve myself, so to speak, and to pick up the other, the passive side of my mental life.

This, as I have said, a man dislikes to do because he feels so helpless.

He can't quite manage it, and feels inferior—it is as though he were a log being tossed about in a stream, and so he gets out of it as soon as possible.

He repudiates it because it is not pure intellect—even worse than that, it might be feeling.

He feels himself a victim of all of that, and yet he must deliver himself over to it in order to get at his creative power.

Since my anima had been definitely awakened by all that mythological material I had been working with, I was forced now to give attention to that other side, to my unconscious inferior side in other words. This sounds very easy I know, but it is a statement a man hates to make.

What I did then in order to get at this inferior, unconscious side of me was to make at night an exact reversal of the mental machinery I had used in the day.

That is to say, I turned all my libido within in order to observe the dreams that were going on.

It has been said by Léon Daudet that dreams do not only appear in the sleep but, having a life of their own, they continue also during the daytime below the level of consciousness.

This is of course not a new idea, but one that cannot be emphasized too often.

One is able to catch dreams best at night because one is then passive.

However, with a dementia praecox patient it can be observed how the dreams come to the surface even in the daytime, because these people are passive all the time, so to speak, and simply turn themselves over to the dream life.

A thinking man's mind is active during the day (and remember I am speaking now exclusively of men; the process is different in women), but no dreams can be caught in this state.

By assuming a passive attitude at night, while at the same time pouring the same stream of libido into the unconscious that one has put into work in the day, the dreams can be caught and the performances of the unconscious observed.

But it cannot be done by just lying down on a couch and relaxing, it has to be done by a definite giving over of the libido in full sum to the unconscious.

I trained myself to do this; I gave all my libido to the unconscious in order to make it work, and in this way I gave the unconscious a chance, the material came to light and I was able to catch it in flagrante.

I found that the unconscious is working out enormous collective fantasies.

Just as, before, I was passionately interested in working out myths, now I became just as much interested in the material of the unconscious.

This in fact is the only way of getting at myth formation.

And so the first chapter of the Psychology of the Unconscious became most correctly true.

I watched the creation of myths going on, and got an insight into the structure of the unconscious, forming thus the concept that plays such a role in the Types.

I drew all my empirical material from my patients, but the solution of the problem I drew from the inside, from my observations of the unconscious processes.

I have tried to fuse these two currents of outer and inner experience in the book of the Types, and have termed the process of the fusion of the two currents the transcendent function.

I found that the conscious current went one way and the unconscious another, and I could not see where they could become together.

The individual tends toward an abysmal split, for the intellect can only dissect and discriminate, and the creative element lies out of reach of the intellect in the unconscious.

The possibility of a mediation between the conscious and the unconscious, which I have formulated in the transcendent function, came as a great light.

Now the time is up and I have told you a very great deal, but do not assume that I have told all! Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 27 -36

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/55675-1frith.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_fkmr0_1?crid=W0J9GLDIA4S0&keywords=carl+jung+1925+seminar&qi`

Carl Jung: In other words: worry about yourself more than about others;... (2019-12-24 06:46)

Dreams...are invariably seeking to express something that the ego does not know and does not understand.

~Carl Jung, CW 17, Page 187.

[1]The Practice of Psychotherapy: Essays on the Psychology of the Transference and Other Subjects (Bollingen Series)

The dream of X. means chiefly that it would be advisable to you to give yourself that kind of loving attention as well as whatever X. means for you in yourself. In other words: worry about yourself more than about others; see and understand what you do more than what you assume other people do. Otherwise you will be accused of a meddling power drive. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 515.

1 know that the Buddhists would say, as indeed they do: if only people would follow the noble eightfold path of the Dharma (doctrine, law) and had true insight into the Self; or the Christians: if only people had the right faith in the Lord; or the rationalist: if people could only be intelligent and reasonable—then all problems would be manageable and solvable.

The trouble is that none of them manages to solve these problems himself.

Christians often ask why God does not speak to them, as he is believed to have done in former days.

When I hear such ^questions, it always makes me think of the Rabbi who was asked: how it could be that God often showed himself to people in the olden days but that nowadays one no longer saw him.

The | Rabbi replied: "Nor is there anyone nowadays who could stoop so low."

This answer hits the nail on the head. We are so captivated by and entangled in our subjective consciousness that we have simply forgotten the age-old fact that God speaks chiefly through dreams and visions.

The Buddhist discards the world of unconscious fantasies as "distractions" and useless illusions; the Christian puts his Church and his Bible between himself and his unconscious; and the rationalist intellectual does not yet know that his consciousness is not his total psyche, in spite of the fact that for more than seventy years the unconscious has been a basic scientific concept that is indispensable to any serious student of psychology Carl Jung, CW18, Paras 600-601

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Practice-Psychotherapy-Psychology-Transference-Bollingen/dp/0691018707/ref=sr_1_fkmr0_1?keywords=carl+jung+cw+18&qid=1577196257&sr=8-1-fk`

We are all meant to be mothers of God. (2019-12-24 07:32)

Merry Christmas!
Pat Farrell, OP

We are all meant to be mothers of God.

What good is it to me if this eternal birth of the divine Son takes place unceasingly, but does not take place within myself?

And, what good is it to me if Mary is full of grace if I am not also full of grace?

What good is it to me for the Creator to give birth to his Son if I do not also give birth to him in my time and my culture?

This, then, is the fullness of time: When the Son of Man is begotten in us. - Meister Eckhart, 1260-1328

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/62192-christmas-celebrations.jpg`

The Christian symbol is a living thing (2019-12-24 08:16)

[1]

- "As at the beginning of the Christian Era, so again today we are faced with the problem of the moral backwardness which has failed to keep pace with our scientific, technical and social developments." (from "The Undiscovered Self", 1957)
- - "The Christian symbol is a living thing that carries in itself the seeds of further development." (from "The Undiscovered Self", 1957)

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/5994e-stjohnsashfield_stainedglass_goodshepherd_face.jpg`

Carl Jung: There is not much difference between them because the madman and the mob are both moved by impersonal, overwhelming forces. (2019-12-24 09:09)

[1]Psychology and Religion: West and East (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 11)

Just as we tend to assume that the world is as we see it, we naively suppose that people are as we imagine them to be.

When fate, for four whole years, played out a war* of monumental frightfulness on the stage of Europe—a war that nobody wanted—nobody dreamt of asking exactly who or what had caused the war and its continuation.

Nobody realized that European man was possessed by something that robbed him of all free will. And this state of unconscious possession will continue undeterred until we Europeans become scared of our "god-almightiness."

The catastrophe of the first World War and the extraordinary manifestations of profound spiritual malaise that came afterwards were needed to arouse a doubt as to whether all was well with the white man's mind.

The change of character brought about by the uprush of collective forces is amazing.

A gentle and reasonable being can be transformed into a maniac or a savage beast. One is always inclined to lay the blame on external circumstances, but nothing could explode in us if it had not been there.

As a matter of fact, we are constantly living on the edge of a volcano, and there is, so far as we know, no way of protecting ourselves from a possible outburst that will destroy everybody within reach.

It is certainly a good thing to preach reason and common sense, but what if you have a lunatic asylum for an audience or a crowd in a collective frenzy?

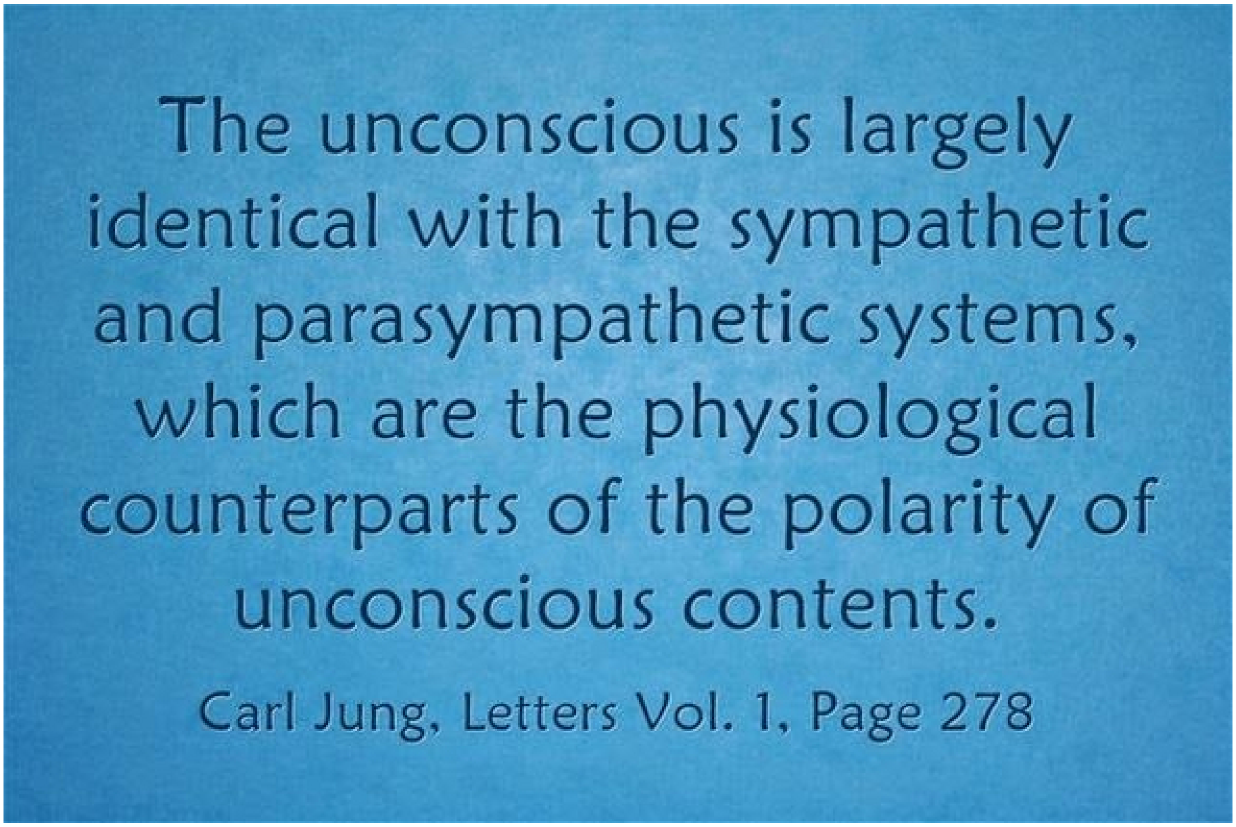
There is not much difference between them because the madman and the mob are both moved by impersonal, overwhelming forces. Carl Jung, CW 11, Pars 23ff

---

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Religion-West-Collected-Works/dp/0691097720/ref=sr_1_1?crid=23561YL12Y7YR&keywords=jung+psychology+and+religion&qid=1577267234`

Carl Jung: “You won’t get out of the "old house" until you have drained to the last drop what is going on there.” (2019-12-25 03:14)

[1]



The unconscious is largely identical with the sympathetic and parasympathetic systems, which are the physiological counterparts of the polarity of unconscious contents.

Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 278

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Dr. S.

Dear Colleague, 20 October 1939

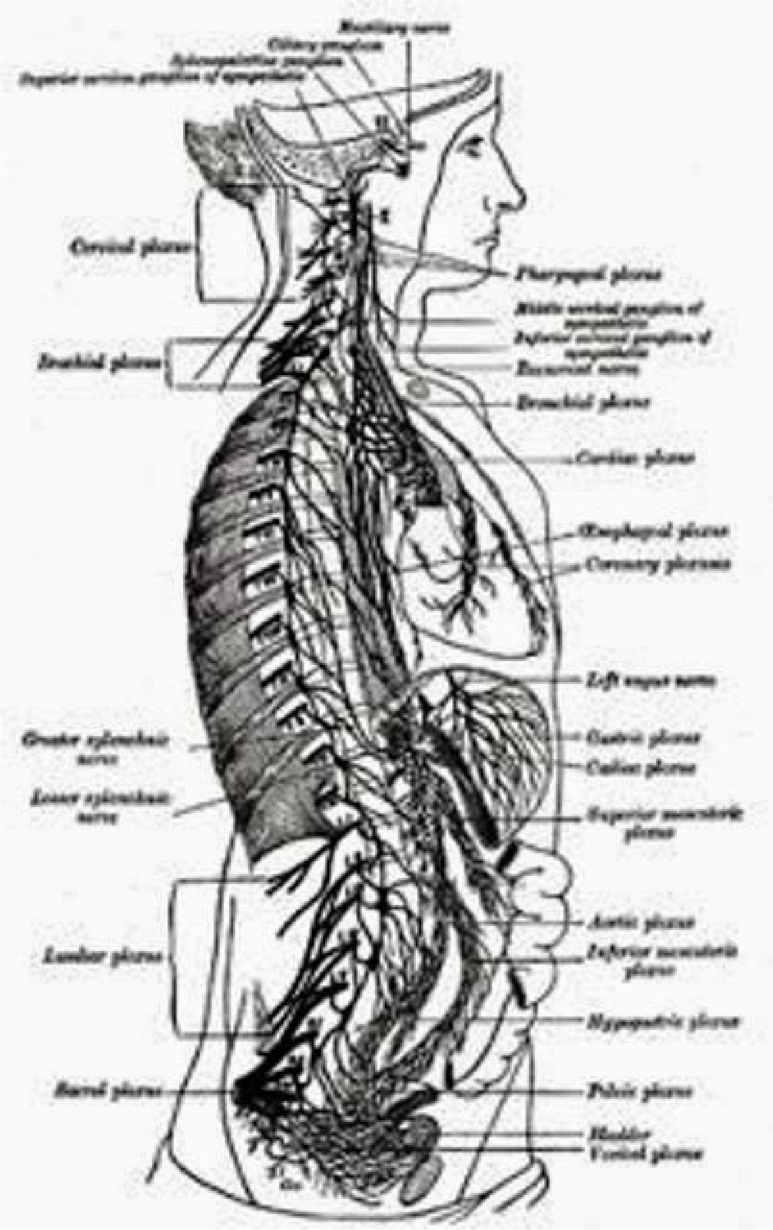
If you do not go along with the unconscious properly, i.e., if it finds no expression through consciousness and conscious action, it piles up its libido in the body and this leads to physical innervations.

Autoerotism, of course, is itself an unnatural hyper-innervation.

There are, however, certain clinical differences between autoerotism and hyper-innervation caused by a blocked unconscious.

In the latter case we have chiefly disturbances of the sympathetic system or psychic disturbances in the form of heightened attention to the body.

The unconscious is largely identical with the sympathetic and parasympathetic systems, which are the physiological counterparts of the polarity of unconscious contents.



Maxillary nerve
Ciliary ganglion
Sphenopalatine ganglion
Superior cervical ganglion of sympathetic
Cervical plexus
Pharyngeal plexus
Middle cervical ganglion of sympathetic
Inferior cervical ganglion of sympathetic
Brachial plexus
Recurrent nerve
Bronchial plexus
Cardiac plexus
Œsophageal plexus
Coronary plexus
Left vagus nerve
Greater splanchnic nerve Gastric plexus
Cœliac plexus
Lesser splanchnic nerve
Superior mesenteric plexus
Aortic plexus
Lumbar plexus
Inferior mesenteric plexus
Hypogastric plexus
Sacral plexus
Pelvic plexus Bladder
Vesical plexus

You won’t get out of the "old house" until you have drained to the last drop what is going on there.

Only then can the situation change.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 278

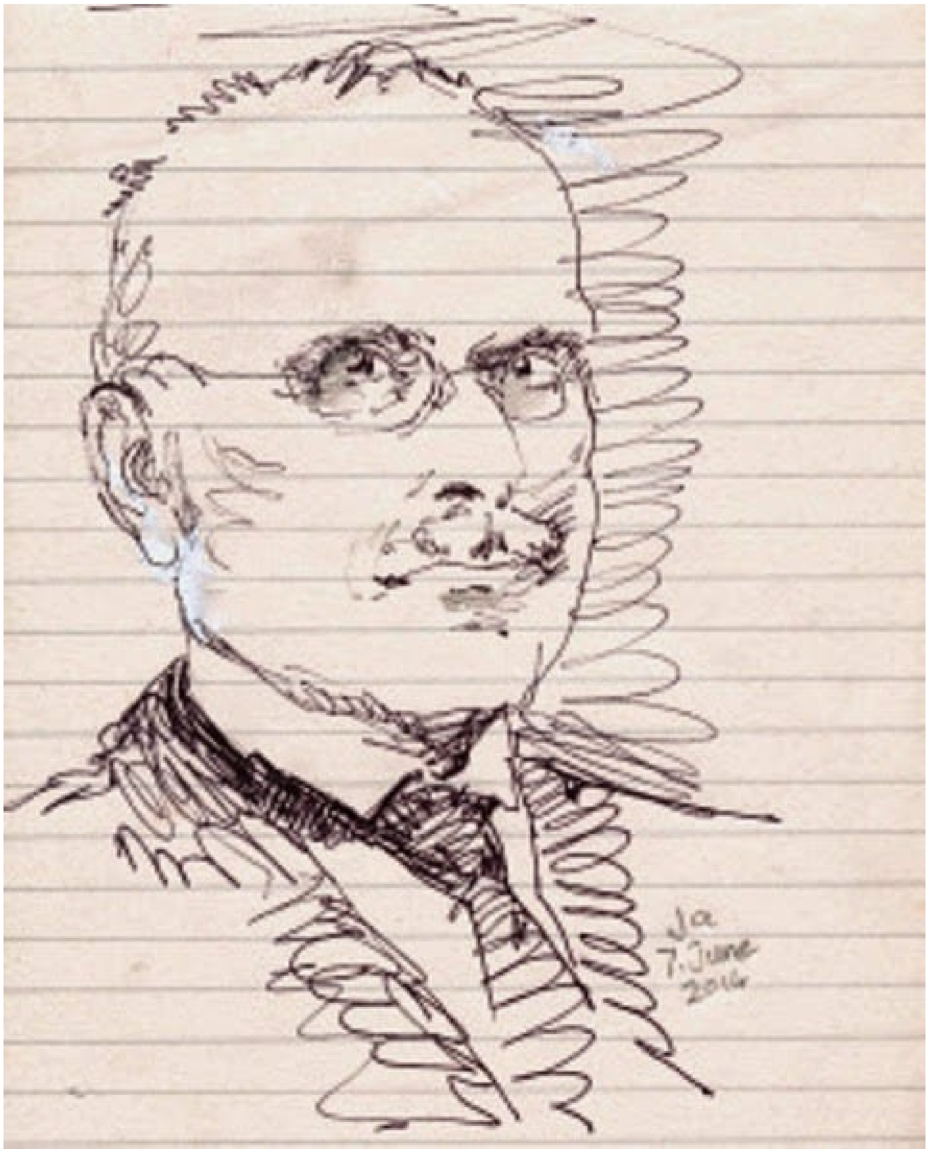
---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/d520f-ccc.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3GBN2D3G76130&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577267386&sprefix=jung+l%2`

3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/9b0b0-2.jpg`

Carl Jung excerpt from "The Opening of the Egg" (2019-12-25 03:46)

[1]



[2]The Red Book: A Reader's Edition (Philemon)

"Man stands between emptiness and fullness.

If his strength combines with fullness, it becomes fully formative.

There is always something good about such formation.

If his strength combines with emptiness, it has a dissolving and destructive effect, since emptiness can never be formed, but only strives to satisfy itself at the cost of fullness.

Combined thus, human force turns emptiness into evil.

"If your force shapes fullness, it does so because of its association with fullness.

But to ensure that your formation continues to exist, it must remain tied to your strength.

Through constant shaping you gradually lose your force, since ultimately all force is associated with the shapeliness that has been given form.
Ultimately where you mistakenly imagine that you are rich, you have actually become poor, and you stand amidst your forms like a beggar.

"That is when the blinded man is seized by an increasing desire to give shape to things, since he believes that manifold increased formation will satisfy his desire.

Because he has spent his force, he becomes desirous: he begins to compel others into his service, and takes their force to pursue his own designs." Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 287.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/9e3f1-jung.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=3ROD8FYO4FYPB&keywords=jung+red+book&qid=1577267488&sprefix=jung+red%2Caps%2C191&`

Carl Jung and Memories, Dreams, Visions and Christmas. (2019-12-25 04:05)

[1]

[2]The Red Book: A Reader's Edition (Philemon)

[Carl Jung and Memories, Dreams, Visions and Christmas.]

I hated going to church. The one exception was Christmas Day. The Christmas carol "This Is the Day That God Has Made" pleased me enormously. And then in the evening, of course, came the Christmas tree. Christmas was the only Christian festival I could celebrate with fervor.

All others left me cold. New Year's Eve alone had something of the attractiveness of Christmas, but definitely took second place; Advent had a quality about it that somehow did not fit in with the coming Christmas. It had to do with night, storms, and wind, and also with the darkness of the house. There was something whispering, something queer going on. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections and The Red Book [Introduction.]

Then, around Christmas of 1912, I had a dream. In the dream I found myself in a magnificent Italian loggia with pillars, a marble floor, and a marble balustrade. I was sitting on a gold Renaissance chair; in front of me was a table of rare beauty. It was made of green stone, like emerald. There I sat, looking out into the distance, for the loggia was set high up on the tower of a castle. My children were sitting at the table too.

Suddenly a white bird descended, a small sea gull or a dove. Gracefully, it came to rest on the table, and I signed to the children to be still so that they would not frighten away the pretty white bird. Immediately, the dove was transformed into a little girl, about eight years of age, with golden blond hair. She ran off with the children and played with them among the colonnades of the castle.

I remained lost in thought, musing about what I had just experienced. The little girl returned and tenderly placed her arms around my neck. Then she suddenly vanished; the dove was back and spoke slowly in a human voice. "Only in the first hours of the night can I transform myself into a human being; while the male dove is busy with the twelve dead." Then she flew off into the blue air, and I awoke.

I was greatly stirred. What business would a male dove having with twelve dead people? In connection with the emerald table the story of the Tabula Smaragdina occurred to the emerald table in the alchemical legend of Hermes Trismegistos. He was said to have left behind him a table upon which the basic tenets of alchemical wisdom were engraved in Greek. I also thought of the twelve apostles, the twelve months the year, the signs of the zodiac, etc. But I could find no solution to the enigma.

Finally I had to give it up. All I knew with any certainty was that the dream indicated an unusual activation of the unconscious. But I knew no technique whereby I might get to the bottom of my inner processes, and so there remained nothing for me to do but wait, go on with my life, and pay close attention to my fantasies. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

E. A. Bennet noted Jung's comments on this dream:

"At first he thought the 'twelve dead men' referred to the twelve days before Christmas for that is the dark time of the year, when traditionally witches are about. To say 'before Christmas' is to say 'before the sun lives again: for Christmas day is at the turning point of the year when the sun's birth was celebrated in the Mithraic religion ... Only much later did he relate the dream to Hermes and the twelve doves" (Meetings with Jung: Conversations recorded by E. A. Bennet during the Years 1946-196. The Red Book, Introduction, Footnote 31.

The symbol of the crystal signifies the unalterable law of events that comes of itself In this seed you grasp what is to come. I saw something terrible and incomprehensible. (It was on the night of Christmas day of the year 1913.) I saw the peasant's boot, the sign of the horrors of the peasant war, of murdering incendiaries and of bloody cruelty:

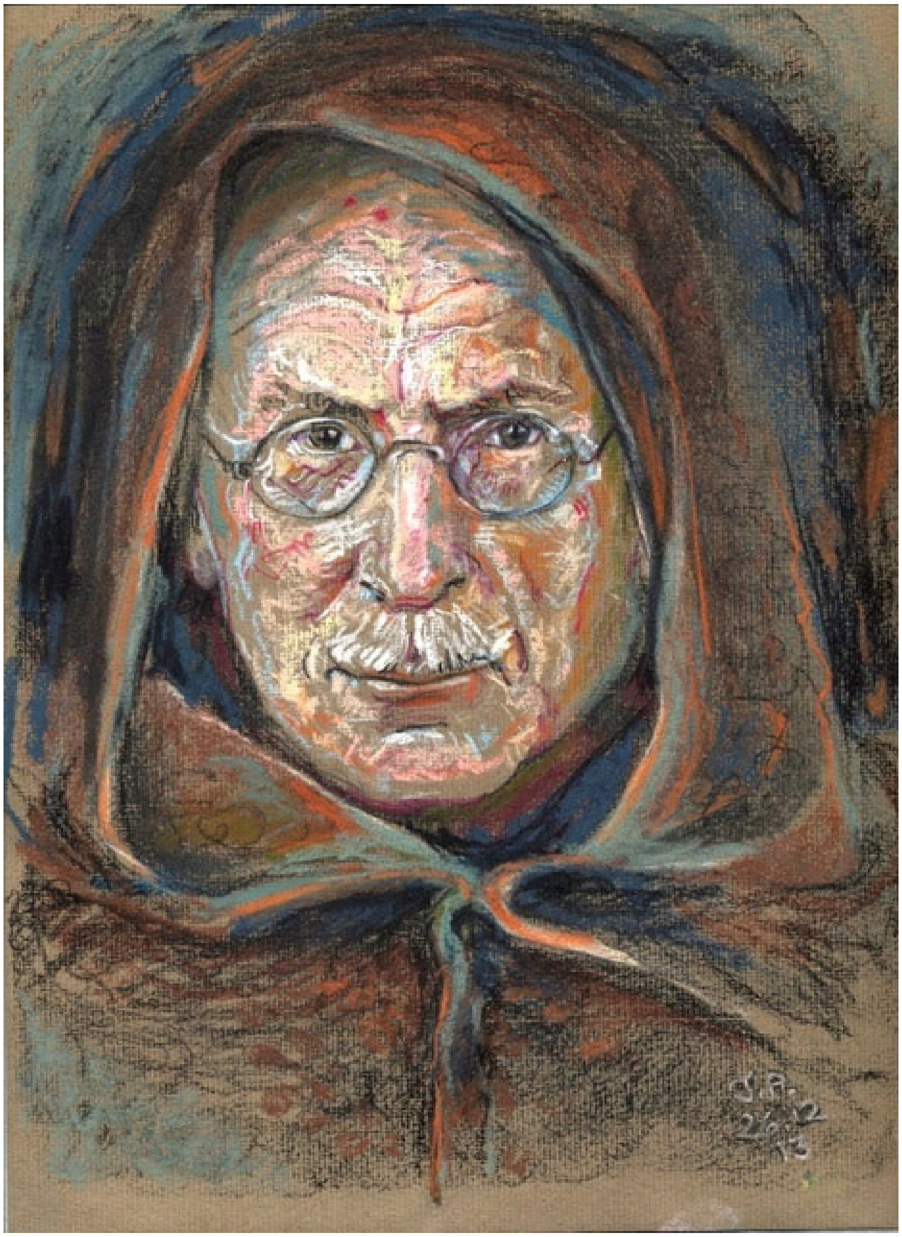
I knew to interpret this sign for myself as nothing but the fact that something bloody and dreadful lay before us. I saw the foot of a giant that crushed a whole city: How could I interpret this sign otherwise? I saw that the way to self-sacrifice began here.

They will all become terribly enraptured by these tremendous experiences, and in their blindness will want to understand them as outer events. It is an inner happening; that is the way to the perfection of the mystery of Christ, so that the peoples learn self-sacrifice. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 254.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/15a4d-dove.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=3ROD8FYO4FYPB&keywords=jung+red+book&qid=1577267488&sprefix=jung+red%2Caps%2C191&`

Carl Jung: "Guard against being a slave to words." (2019-12-25 04:18)

[1]



[2]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition (Philemon)

I: "But Philo Judeaus, if this is who you mean, was a serious philosopher and a great thinker.

Even John the Evangelist included some of Philo’s thoughts in the gospe!."

Anchorite: "You are right.

It is to Philo’s credit that he furnished language like so many other philosophers.

He belongs to the language artists.

But words should not become Gods."

I: "I fail to understand you here.

Does it not say in the gospel according to John: God was the Word.

It appears to make quite explicit the point which you have just now rejected."

Anchorite: "Guard against being a slave to words.

Here is the gospel: read from that passage where it says: In him was the life.

"What does John say there?"

I: "'And life was the light of men and the light shines in the darkness and the darkness has not understood it.

But it became a person sent from God, by the name of John, who came as a witness and to be a witness of the light.

The genuine light, which illuminates each person, came into the world: He was in the world, and the world became through him, and the world did not recognize him.' -That is what I read here.

But what do you make of this?"

Anchorite: "I ask you, was this [Logos] a concept, a word? It was a light, indeed a man, and lived among men.

You see, Philo only lent John the word so that John would have at his disposal the word alongside the word 'light' to describe the son of man.

John gave to living men the meaning of the, but Philo gave as the dead concept that usurped life, even the divine life.

Through this the dead does not gain life, and the living is killed. And this was also my atrocious error."

I: "I see what you mean. This thought is new to me and seems worth consideration.

Until now it always seemed to me / as if it were exactly that which was meaningful in John, namely that the son of man is the,Logos in that he thus elevates the lower to the higher spirit, to the world of the Logos.

But you lead me to see the matter conversely; namely that John brings the meaning of the Logos down to man."

Anchorite: "I learned to see that John has in fact even done the great service of having brought the meaning of the Logos up to man."

I: "You have peculiar insights that stretch my curiosity to the utmost. How is that? Do you think that the human stands higher than the Logos?"

Anchorite: "I want to answer this question within the scope of your understanding: if the human God had not become important above everything, he would not have appeared as the son in the flesh, but in the Logos."

I: "That makes sense to me, but I confess that this view is surprising to me. It is especially astonishing to me that you, a Christian anchorite, have come to such views.

I would not have expected this of you."

Anchorite: ”As I have already noticed, you have a completely false idea of me and my essence. Let me give you a small example of my preoccupation.

I’ve spent many years alone with the process of unlearning.

Have you ever unlearned anything?

Well, then you should know how long it takes.

And I was a successful teacher.

As you know, for such people to unlearn is difficult or even impossible.

But I see that the sun has gone down. Soon it will be completely dark.

Night is the time of silence. I want to show you your place for the night.

I need the morning for my work, but after midday you can come to me again if you like.

Then we will continue our conversation." [The Red Book, Pages 268-269]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/2e173-11.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=3ROD8FYO4FYPB&keywords=jung+red+book&qid=1577267488&sprefix=jung+red%2Caps%2C191&`

Erich Neumann’s dream in which he was an old pilgrim threatened by Nazis. (2019-12-25 04:41)

Dr. med. Dr. phil.

Erich Neumann

Psychoanalytiker, Kulturtheoretiker
(1905 Berlin - 1960 Tel Aviv)

Sein umfangreiches Werk erweiterte maßgeblich die tiefenpsychologische Theorienbildung im Geiste C. G. Jungs.

Julie Blumenfeld, verh. Neumann
Psychoanalytikerin, Chirologin
(1905 Berlin - 1985 Tel Aviv)

verbrachte ihre Kindheit und Jugend in diesem Haus.

Beide emigrierten 1933 zunächst in die Schweiz, später nach Palästina.

Deutsche Gesellschaft für Analytische Psychologie DGAP

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Erich Neumann

Dear Colleague, 16 December 1939

I was happy to hear from you again.

You have obviously waited rather too long before writing to me, for your letter is so concentrated that a full-scale reaction by post is simply impossible.

Had I had your dream I would have needed either to thin it out or to round it out.

When a dream assumes this legendary form, there are contents in it that should be taken up, elaborated, and rounded out through active imagination.

I would have needed to dramatize the dream still more to make it yield up its secrets.

The Wotan association does not point to the Teutonic regression in Germany but symbolizes a spiritual movement affecting the whole civilized , world (Wotan as wind-god = pneuma).

This explains why Wotan also figures among Jews, though only German Jews, as I have seen many times.

The hermaphrodite is certainly an archetype.

It stands for a union of opposites and is probably a duality symbol equivalent to Aquarius and would thus have about the same value as the fish symbol at the beginning of our era.

As the alchemical symbolism shows, it signifies the self, whose Indian symbols are likewise hermaphroditic. (Cf. the Atman figure at the beginning of the Brihadaranyal a Upanishad.)

This problem transcends racial differences and comes from that wind of the spirit which is blowing over Europe and probably the whole world too, for in the Far East as well things are everywhere in rapid motion.

Here we are very impressed by the immediate danger of war in our own country, but for the time being everything is still in suspense.

In my lectures I am discussing the Eastern attitude with the help of Yoga philosophy and the Western attitude with the help of Ignatius's Exercitia Spiritualia.

My best wishes,

Ever sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 280-281.

1 N. reported a dream in which he was an old pilgrim threatened by Nazis (?).

As he was about to continue his pilgrimage, there stood at his side a "son" and a "father" who turned into an old prince. The prince told the pilgrim to go in spite of the protests of the "son," in order to expiate his condemnation at a trial.

The pilgrim started on his journey, taking only his slouch hat (association: Wotan's hat) and staff, without being allowed to take leave of the "son ."

The dream continues with the prince killing the pilgrim, but not before the pilgrim had prophesied the prince's death. Many details have been omitted in this summary.

2 In a second dream there appeared "a gigantic hermaphrodite of cosmic proportions . . . , male in its upper and female in its lower part" (again details omitted). N. had mentioned in his letter that he was working on the problem of the meaning in Jewish religion of the polarity expressed in the hermaphrodite.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/008a1-erich.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3GBN2D3G76130&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577267386&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Erich Neumann’s dream in which he was an old pilgrim threatened by Nazis. – Carl Jung Depth Psychology – Psychology (2019-12-25 05:42:02)
[…] C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950 To Erich Neumann Dear Colleague, 16 December 1939 I was happy to hear from you again. You have obviously waited rather too long before writing to me, for your letter is so concentrated that a full-scale reaction by post is simply impossible. Had I had your dream I… — Read on carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/2019/12/25/erich-neumanns-dream-in-which-he- was-an-old-pilgrim-thre… […]

Carl Jung: The pole is the center of a rotating system, which actually represents the mandala. (2019-12-26 03:30)

[1]

[2]Atom and Archetype: The Pauli/Jung Letters, 1932-1958

Dear Professor [Pauli] 14 October 1935

Please accept my grateful thanks for your friendly cooperation.

As I have already stated. you can rest assured that your anonymity will be guaranteed in every respect.

I have selected only the dreams that contain symbols of the "Self: and these I have largely condensed.

The interpretation is not of a personal nature and refers solely to the configuration of ideas. to which moreover.

I have given historical parallels are simply facts, which can only be disputed insofar as it would be possible to challenge the historical authenticity of the evidence.

The personal associations of the dream are much closer to the dreamer than the purely abstract associations of ideas.

I shall take the liberty of sending you a copy, and I think you will find that wherever possible I have omitted any personal references

Thus. there is hardly likely to be anything in my essay with which you might disagree for the historical parallels are simply facts ,which can only be disputed insofar as it would be possible to challenge the historical authenticity of the evidence.

The personal associations of the dream are much closer to the dreamer than the purely abstract associations of ideas.

I shall take the liberty of sending you a copy, and I think you will find that wherever possible I have omitted any personal references.

In your case, the idea of the polar-force image is probably connected with your earliest dreams of the pole of Heaven.

The pole is the center of a rotating system, which actually represents the mandala.

The basic primeval idea behind this seems to be that people are classified in this field of force.

The “pole” is also represented, as seems to be the case with you, as an emanating nucleus.

I have just discovered such a medieval representation in London,

The nucleus is often depicted as a lapis, as a mediator, as a vinculum and ligamentum elementarum, the connection of the elements.

The idea seems to be linked to the medieval concept of the microcosm and macrocosm, according to which all men are contained in the macrocosm with every individual representing the whole as a microcosm.

The dipoles probably indicate first and foremost the complementary relationship in a self-regulating system.

Thus in psychological terms: conscious = unconscious, projected: man and woman, which, next to the family. represent the simplest case of participation.

The rotation of one pole is indisputably the beginning of individuation, hence the numerous rotation symbols in your dreams (historically designated as circulation spiritum, and in Chinese as the circulation of light).

It is probably basically a spiral rotation with a perpetual movement toward the nucleus.

The representation by isotopes and spectral lines is along the same lines.

They are fixed units or fixed groupings of units symbolizing the individual case (= individual + related individual or series of individuals).

Generally speaking, the unconscious is thought of as psychic matter in an individual.

However, the self-representation drawn up by the unconscious of its central structure does not accord with this view, for everything points to the fact that the central structure of the collective unconscious cannot be fixed locally but is an ubiquitous existence identical to itself; it must not be seen in spatial terms and consequently, when projected onto space, is to be found everywhere in that space.

I even have the feeling that this peculiarity applies to time as well as space.

The representation of the collective unconscious usually consists of the so-called quatemium-which is the medieval term-meaning the fourfold emanation or radiation that has been designated by a medieval philosopher as the exterior of the nucleus.

A biological analogy would be the functional structure of a termite colony, possessing only unconscious performing organs, whereas the center, to which all the functions of the parts are related, is invisible and not empirically demonstrable.

The radioactive nucleus is an excellent symbol for the source of energy of the collective unconscious, the ultimate external stratum of which appears as individual consciousness.

As a symbol, it indicates that consciousness does not grow out of any activity that is inherent to it; rather, it is constantly being produced by an energy that comes from the depths of the unconscious and has thus been depicted in the form of rays since time immemorial.

The center is thus represented by the Greek Gnostics as Spinther (the spark) or as Phos archetypon (the archetypal light) .

Alongside this representation of the psychic structure, there is another one, actually the reverse; namely, the soul as a shell enveloping the spherically shaped cosmos, in the innermost part of which lies the earth as the heaviest and most dead part.

In this case, the rays are directed onto the earth from outside through the medium of the stars.

So one could speak here in terms of an introverted and an extraverted attitude.

However, I believe that they are essentially one and the same thing, in that these opposites only come into being through the projection onto space of what is in itself a non-spatial (i.e., transcendental) existence.

In my essay, I have actually attempted to show these things to a certain extent but have deliberately refrained from going into the parallels with physics, since, for obvious reasons, I did not wish to draw attention to this particular aspect.

The center, or the nucleus, has always been for me a symbol of the totality of the psychic, as the conscious plus the unconscious, the center of which does not coincide with the ego as the center of consciousness, and consequently has always been perceived as being external.

That is also why it was always projected onto the conception of the Deity, the One, the Monad, and so on.

I hope you are enjoying America.

With best wishes, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

[C. G. JUNG] Carl Jung, Atom and Archetype, Pages 12-14

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/3d5b0-12bpole.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Atom-Archetype-Letters-1932-1958-Updated/dp/069116147X/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3MK8WT6A0GSKT&keywords=atom+and+archetype+the+pauli%2Fjung+letters`

Carl Jung on the "Body" – Anthology (2019-12-26 04:30)

[1]

This is equally true of the concept of matter or body. We must say here that the body has nothing to do with matter. Matter is an abstraction, nowadays it has become a philosophical and scientific concept, whereas body is the direct psychic experience of the body. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 26 Jan 1940.

If you contemplate the body from the point of view of the psyche, you will be able to locate a mental sphere of consciousness in the head, another centre of consciousness in the heart and one in the abdomen. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 26 Jan 1940.

Anatomical knowledge does not tell us how we fill our own bodies but psychic experience does give us information on this point. We fill our bodies as if through inner streams. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 26 Jan 1940.

Your dream unquestionably refers to the archetypal problem of the extrusion of the soul from the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

One is forced to conclude ’that in your case the soul is only loosely seated in your body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

However, the friendly lion in the dream seems to indicate that the looseness of the soul is not exactly desirable, since the lion compensates your condition in a very obvious way: the Zurich lion represents your localized instinct, firmly rooted in your earth, just as the lion’s soul-as with all animals -is securely fixed in its body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

Moreover you seem prone to eczema, which not infrequently indicates that one is not properly inside one's body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

If you devote yourself, intentionally and intellectually, to dangerous problems such as the squaring of the circle, this is yet another indication of a tendency to get away from the body, because this problem symbolizes an irrational state of wholeness which cannot be contrived but can only be experienced. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 306-307

You notice that the meditation is not on the spirit of the Buddha, but on the Body of the Buddha; the highest truth grows from the deepest roots of the body and not from the spirit. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 28

So when we say body, we really mean our psychic experience of the body. This has only a distant Relationship to the anatomical and physiological structure of the body and nothing whatever to do with matter. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 26 Jan 1940.

But when Przywara says that man is a "medium formale materiale", that is, a mediator between a formal and a material nature, we can again assent. Man is a peculiar psychic unity of experience of body and spirit, torn in two pieces by the intellect. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 26 Jan 1940.

It is death to the soul to become unconscious. People die before there is death of the body, because there is death in the soul. Carl Jung, Dream Analysis, Page 90.

When you see that a certain spark of life has gone from the eye, the physical functioning of the body somewhere has gone wrong. Carl Jung, Dream Analysis, Page 91.

Probably in absolute reality there is no such thing as body and mind, but body and mind or soul are the same, the same life, subject to the same laws, and what the body does is happening in the mind. Carl Jung, Dream Analysis, Page 20

It is clear enough from this material what the ultimate aim of alchemy really was: it was trying to produce a corpus subtile, a transfigured and resurrected body, i.e., a body that was at the same time spirit. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 511

There the main concern is the "diamond body," in other words, the attainment of immortality through the transformation of the body. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 511

Just as there is a relationship of mind to body, so there is a relationship of body to earth. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 19

Dreams throw very interesting sidelights on the inter-functioning of body and psyche. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 502

The deposit of man's whole ancestral experience—so rich in emotional imagery—of father, mother, child, husband and wife, of the magic personality, of dangers to body and soul, has exalted this group of archetypes into the supreme regulating principles of religious and even of political life, in unconscious recognition of their tremendous psychic power. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 337

Thus, the alchemical process also begins with such a division into the four elements, by which the body is put back into its primordial state and so can undergo transformation. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams, Page 367.

Man knows only a small part of his psyche, just as he has only a very limited knowledge of the physiology of his body. Carl Jung, Aion, Para 253

Only if you first return to the body, to your earth, can individuation take place, only then does the thing become true. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1314

If you just have a dream and let it pass by you, nothing has happened at all, even if it is the most amazing dream; but if you look at it with the purpose of trying to understand it, and succeed in understanding it, then you have taken it into the here and now, the body being a visible expression of the here and now. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1316

The body is the past, our earth, the world of heretofore, but out of it rises a new light which is not identical with the body. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 374

Whatever you experience outside of the body, in a dream for instance, is not experienced unless you take it into the body, because the body means the here and now. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1316

We suffer very much from the fact that we consist of mind and have lost the body. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 251.

So "I" is as if it were something abstract, yet in a vague way it coincides with your body; when you say "I" you beat your chest for instance, to emphasize the "I." Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 361.

The extension [of the body] in space, therefore, creates a pluralistic quality in the mind. That is probably the reason why consciousness is possible. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 360.

Inasmuch as the living body contains the secret of life, it is an intelligence. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 360.

If your life has not three dimensions, if you don't live in the body, if you live on the two-dimensional plane in the paper world that is flat and printed, as if you were only living your biography, then you are nowhere. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1343.

The spirit can easily be anything, but the earth can only be something definite. So remaining true to the earth would mean maintaining your conscious relationship to the body. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 66

All people who claim to be spiritual try to get away from the fact of the body; they want to destroy it in order to be something imaginary, but they never will be that, because the body denies them; the body says otherwise. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 64.

We cannot say the side of the spirit is twice as good as the other side; we must bring the pairs of opposites together in an altogether different way, where the rights of the body are just as much recognized as the rights of the spirit. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 235.

You cannot individuate if you are a spirit; moreover, you don't even know how spirit feels because you are in the body. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 202

So if you speak of individuation at all, it necessarily means the individuation of beings who are in the flesh, in the living body. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 202

Even a ghost, if he wants to make an effect on this earth, always needs a body, a medium; otherwise he cannot ring bells or lift tables or anything that ghosts are supposed to do. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 168

Nobody has ever known what this primal matter is. The alchemists did not know, and nobody has found out what is really meant by it, because it is a substance in the unconscious which is needed for the incarnation of the god. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 886

Soul and body are not two things. They are one. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 355

In reply to your question about levitation I myself have never observed the levitation of a living body. But apparently such things do happen. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 627-628

Up to this time we have spoken of the subject as though it were unchanging in time, but as we know, the body is a four-dimensional entity, the fourth dimension being time. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 136

But in these days we live by our brains alone and ignore the very definite laws of our body and the instinctive world. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567

We are still in the body and thus under the rule of heavy matter. Also it is equally true that matter not moved by the spirit is dead and empty. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 459-460

Since archetypes are instinctual forms, they follow a universal pattern, as do the functions of the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 450-451

But he [Rilke] doesn't have what it takes to make a man complete: body, weight, shadow. His high ethos, his capacity for abnegation, and perhaps also his physical frailty naturally led him towards a goal of completeness, but not of perfection. Perfection, it seems to me, would have broken him. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 381-382.

We can only project a conception of him that corresponds to our own constitution: a body perceived by the senses and a spirit (= psyche) directly conscious of itself. After this model we build our God-image. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 341-343.

But if we can reconcile ourselves with the mysterious truth that spirit is the living body seen from within, and the body the outer manifestation of the living spirit –the two being really one-then we can understand why it is that the attempt to transcend the present level of consciousness must give its due to the body. Carl Jung, Modern Man in Search of a Soul, Page 220

I am personally convinced that our mind corresponds with the physiological life of the body, but the way in which it is connected with the body is for obvious reasons unintelligible. To speculate about such unknowable things is mere waste of time. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 159-161.

If you want to be quite accurate, both statements, viz. that the psyche is founded upon an organic process of the body, or that the psyche is independent of the body, are unanswerable. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 159-161.

To give body to one’s thoughts means that one can speak them, paint them, show them, make them appear clearly before the eyes of everybody.... Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Pages 193-194.

One might assume the psyche gradually rising from minute extensity to infinite intensity, transcending for instance the velocity of light and thus irrealizing the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47.

Energy is mass and mass is extended. At all events, a body with a speed higher than that of light vanishes from sight and one may have all sorts of doubts about what would happen to such a body otherwise. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47.

It might be that psyche should be understood as unextended intensity and not as a body moving with time. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47.

Your view is rather confirmed, as it seems to me, by the peculiar fact that on the one hand consciousness has so exceedingly little direct information of the body from within, and that on the other hand the unconscious (i.e., dreams and other products of the "unconscious") refers very rarely to the body and, if it does, it is always in the most roundabout way, i.e., through highly "symbolized" images. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47.

At all events the assumption of a perceptual body postulates a corresponding perceptual space that separates the mind from physical space in the same way as the subtle body causes the gap between the mind and the physical body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47

They belong to you, and you have painted them as a support for your own individuation process. They shouldn’t be here, and nowhere else but with yourself, as they represent the approximation of the two worlds of spirit and body or of ego and self. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 179.

So the identity with the body is one of the first things which makes an ego; it is the spatial separateness that induces, apparently, the concept of an ego. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 15.

Time in itself consists of nothing. It is only a modus cogitandi that is used to express and formulate the flux of things and events, just as space is nothing but a way of describing the existence of a body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 176.

We are a part of this totality, we flow in a certain sense in the blood of Christ, we have our part in his body, which penetrates us, we breathe with his breath, and are therefore so to speak Christ himself, in spite of being parts. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 28.

The psyche is a self-regulating system that maintains its equilibrium just as the body does. Every process that goes too far immediately and inevitably calls forth compensations, and without these there would be neither a normal metabolism nor a normal psyche. Carl Jung, CW 16, Par. 330.

So the identity with the body is one of the first things which makes an ego; it is the spatial separateness that induces, apparently, the concept of an ego. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 15.

An alchemical text says: "The mind should learn compassionate love for the body." Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 25.

The body as a whole, so it seems to me, is a pattern of behavior, and man as a whole is an Archetype. Carl Jung, Letter to Medard Boss, 27June1947.

It was, indeed, a great problem to the Middle Ages, this problem of the Trinity and the exclusion, or the very qualified recognition, of the feminine element, of the earth, the body, and matter in general, which were yet, in the form of Mary's womb, the sacred abode of the Deity and the indispensable instrument for the divine work of redemption. Carl Jung, CW 11, Page 72.

After all, the essential thing is not the shadow but the body which casts it. Carl Jung, CW 16, Page 64.

The levitation of St. Francis is a typical example. You can see yourself from a foot above, from the ceiling or from the ground. The Yogin himself levitates because he is so identified with his contemplation that he loses the weight of his body. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture III, 17May 1935, Pages 210.

If we seek our connection with the snake we come to the spinal cord and that points to the animal soul of man which leads him down into the darkness of the body, into the instinct which one meets in animal form in the outer world. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 8March1935, Pages 199-200.

The ancestral part is given to us by our body, we take over the life of our ancestors in that way. It is the terrace of life because it is here that life renews itself. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 12July1935, Pages 240.

The age of the body is something we often swindle ourselves about, but this swindle does not help the psyche. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 213.

Disintegration is consciously undertaken in our text with the purpose of emptying the ego consciousness and integrating a central consciousness, the totality of the personality; it is undertaken because the problem of the body has come up. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 20Jan1939, Page62.

The text tells us that the body of the sleeper is imagined to be the body of the Buddha, we should understand that as the diamond body. So it is the transformation of the ordinary body into the eternally durable body that is meant. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 43.

a) The Dharma Kaya = the world of absolute truth.
b) The Sambhoga Kaya = the world of subtle bodies.
c) The Nirmana Kaya = the world of created things.
One could also call these three: Self, anima and body. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 2Dec1938, Page 35.

So when we say body, we really mean our psychic experience of the body. This has only a distant relationship to the anatomical and physiological structure of the body and nothing whatever to do with matter. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 226.

The body, therefore, is also a psychological condition, a peculiar form of consciousness. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 226.

So we see that what we call spirit and body are psychic conditions, limited psychic functions, and the body tells us as little about what matter really is, as the spirit about the thing in itself which is behind the spiritual condition. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 226.

We can experience the body psychically, a prana-body, a subtle body, and there are certain exalted and ecstatic conditions in which we can experience spirit. So what we experience of spirit and body are really psychic modalities. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 226.

Body and spirit, thought of as two poles, combine correctly with each other if man depends correctly upon God, because they are reconciled through His unity. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 227.

Prana conceives of the body as a sort of system of pipes, going into the limbs and connecting the centres. These centres are not mystical but psychical centres of experience. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.

We must say here that the body has nothing to do with matter. Matter is an abstraction, nowadays it has become a philosophical and scientific concept, whereas body is the direct psychic experience of the body. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.

How I experience the body from within is a totally different question. I am inside the body as a psyche. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.

If you want to know how the body can be experienced psychically you must turn to eastern Yoga; medieval philosophy also knew something of the matter. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture X, Page 225.

But there is something which can be proved from everyday experience, not body becoming spirit, but body becoming conscious, man becomes conscious of his body. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 221.

We must have a psychic image of the body, in order to become conscious of it, we must translate the physical fact of the body into a psychic experience. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IX, Page 221.

Man is a peculiar psychic unity of experience of body and spirit, torn in two pieces by the intellect. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 226.

The coniunctio in alchemy is a union of the masculine and feminine, of the spiritual and material principles, from which a perfect body arises, the glorified body after the Last Judgement, the resurrection body. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 159.

This means an eternal body, or the subtle body, which is designated in alchemy as the philosopher’s stone, the lapis aethereus or invisibilis. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Pages 159.

The Chinese philosophy of yoga is based upon the fact of this instinctive preparation for death as a goal, and, following the analogy with the goal of the first half of life, namely, begetting and reproduction, the means towards perpetuation of physical life, it takes as the purpose of spiritual existence the symbolic begetting and bringing to birth of a psychic spirit body (’subtle body’), which ensures the continuity of the detached consciousness. Carl Jung, The Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 124.

The creation and birth of this superior personality is what is meant by our text when it speaks of the ’holy fruit’, the ’diamond body’, or refers in other ways to an indestructible body. Carl Jung, The Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 123.

And this being has body, soul and spirit, and is, therefore, the principle of life itself, as well as the principle of individuation. Its nature is spiritual, it cannot be seen, and it contains an invisible image. Carl Jung, ETH, Alchemy, Page 221.

If thou wouldst complete the diamond body with no outflowing, Diligently heat the roots of consciousness and life. Hui Ming Ching, Cited Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 95.

According to the Hui Ming Ching, the ancient sages knew how to bridge the gap between consciousness and life because they cultivated both. In this way the shelf, the immortal body, is ’melted out’, and in this way ’the great Tao is completed'. Carl Jung, Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 95.

…it must be pointed out that just as the human body shows a common anatomy over and above all racial differences, so, too, the psyche possesses a common substratum transcending all differences in culture and consciousness. Carl Jung, The Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 84.

We can therefore assume, psychologically speaking, that the object which is to be transformed in alchemy is connected with the human body: it is a mystery of the body. Carl Jung, ETH, Page 177.

There is another possibility, that of the subtle body, a fine material veil of the soul, which cannot exist so to speak without a body. This is the "corpus glorificationis" (glorified body), the transfigured body, which is our future portion. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIV, Page 115.

The earth, in the alchemistic sense, means the body and in a double sense: chemical bodies (substances), minerals etc., and the human body. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 101.

There must be a psychical equivalent of matter preformed in man, and this is our own matter, our physical world: the body, for the body is matter. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Alchemy, Lecture VII, Page 67.

We are a part of this totality, we flow in a certain sense in the blood of Christ, we have our part in his body, which penetrates us, we breathe with his breath, and are therefore so to speak Christ himself, in spite of being parts. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 28.

It is in our own body that we must search, not outside, but today everyone is convinced that it is outside. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 21.

The body seems to be understood as a materialization of the life principle, which latter is an abstraction of the sum total of bodily existence. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 21.

The East tries to avoid abstraction, so that the enormously valuable body shall not be lost. The whole meditation originates in the body, not in the spirit. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 21.

Such a thing is possible only when there is a detachment of the soul from the body. When that takes place and the patient lives on, one can almost with certainty expect a certain deterioration of the character inasmuch as the superior and most essential part of the soul has already left. Such an experience denotes a partial death. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 435-437.

But it is the lower man that keeps on living with the body and who is nothing else but the life of the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 435-437.

In spite of the fact that the majority of people do not know why the body needs salt, everyone demands it nonetheless because of an instinctive need. It is the same with the things of the psyche. That is the working of the intellect. Carl Jung, CW 8, Pages 399-403.

The soul and the body are indeed one, so, at any rate theoretically, any illness can be approached from either side; for even if an illness has not a psychic cause it still has a psychic side. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 235.

What affects the body has its influence on the soul, and vice versa. In a very difficult case of illness psychotherapy is always called in. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 236.

Psychology did not exist in earlier days, people thought naively, and when they sank into themselves they saw the inside of their own body. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 224.

The psychic seems to me to be in actual fact partly extra-spatial and extra-temporal. “Subtle body" may be a fitting expression for this part of the psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 522-523.

It is only possible to live as we should if we live according to our own nature. But in these days we live by our brains alone and ignore the very definite laws of our body and the instinctive world. We damage ourselves severely when we offend against these, and this is what our patient has done in her efforts to live rationally. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 219.

The age of the body is something we often swindle ourselves about, but this swindle does not help the psyche. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 213.

If we seek our connection with the snake we come to the spinal cord and that points to the animal soul of man which leads him down into the darkness of the body, into the instinct which one meets in animal form in the outer world. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 200.

If we seek our connection with the snake we come to the spinal cord and that points to the animal soul of man which leads him down into the darkness of the body, into the instinct which one meets in animal form in the outer world. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 200.

If we seek our connection with the snake we come to the spinal cord and that points to the animal soul of man which leads him down into the darkness of the body, into the instinct which one meets in animal form in the outer world. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Page 200.The crab belongs to the motif of the helpful animal. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Pages 136-139.

The position of the body produces some dreams, and a real noise can work itself into a dream in a most peculiar way. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Page 134.

When the field of consciousness is narrow, the body plays an important role. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Page 58.

Anybody who is conscious of a complex knows what a disobedient animal it is… Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Page 58.

Seeing visions is another of these phenomena; for instance, during three days she saw continually a mass of flames which ran through her whole body. Such visions can sometimes be observed in ordinary neuroses and have a symbolic meaning. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Page 32.

Frau Hauffe also had the faculty of exteriorization, - she could see herself outside her own body, as if she were another person. The first time this occurred, she saw herself sitting at her own bedside; this phenomenon is not only experienced by neurotics but also by people who are very ill or dying. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Page 32.

Occasionally we must also inquire whether something that wants to go upwards has not taken a false route downwards into the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 403.

It is a fact that the body very often apparently survives the soul, often even without a disease. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 437-438.

Sport represents an exceptional valuation of the human body, as does also modern dancing. Carl Jung, Modern Man in Search of a Soul, Pages 218-220.

We shall also see that belief in the body cannot tolerate an outlook that denies the body in the name of the spirit. Carl Jung, Modern Man in Search of a Soul, Pages 218-220.

The psyche is distinctly more complicated and inaccessible than the body. It is, so to speak, the half of the world which comes into existence only when we become conscious of it. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflection, Page 132.

Body and spirit are to me mere aspects of the reality of the psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 198-200.

Body is as metaphysical as spirit. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 198-200.

Ask the modern physicist what body is, they are coming fast across to the recognition of the reality of the psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 198-200.

And just as the material of the body that is ready for life has need of the psyche in order to be capable of life, so the psyche presupposes the living body in order that its images may live. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 325, Para 618.

This living being appears outwardly as the material body, but inwardly as a series of images of the vital activities taking place within it. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 325, Para 619.

We have become participants in the divine nature. We are the vessel...of the deity suffering in the body of the “slave”(Phil. 2:5). Carl Jung, Nietzsche’s Zarathustra, 336, 409, Letters II, 314ff.

The earthly fate of the Church as the body of Christ is modelled on the earthly fate of Christ himself. That is to say the Church, in the course of her history, moves towards a death. Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, CW 14, par. 28, note 194.

Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body such as those things which occurred to the ancients. If I were going to symbolize it I would choose the Annunciation. Carl Jung, Seminar 1925, p. 111.

You see, somewhere our unconscious becomes material, because the body is the living unit, and our conscious and our unconscious are embedded in it: the contact the body. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 441.

We cannot say the side of the spirit is twice as good as the other side; we must bring the pairs of opposites together in an altogether different way, where the rights of the body are just as much recognized as the rights of the spirit. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 235.

Instinct is anything but a blind and indefinite impulse, since it proves to be attuned and adapted to a definite external situation. This latter circumstance gives it its specific and irreducible form. Just as instinct is original and hereditary, so too, its form is age-old, that is to say, archetypal. It is even older and more conservative than the body’s form. Carl Jung; The Undiscovered Self; Page 49.

Just as the body bears the traces of its phylogenetic development, so also does the human mind. Hence there is nothing surprising about the possibility that the figurative language of dreams is a survival from an archaic mode of thought. Carl Jung; General Aspects of Dream Psychology; and CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche; Page 475.

Every civilized human being, whatever his conscious development, is still an archaic man at the deeper levels of his psyche. Just as the human body connects us with the mammals and displays numerous relics of earlier evolutionary stages going back to even the reptilian age, so the human psyche is likewise a product of evolution which, when followed up to its origins, show countless archaic traits. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul; Page 126

If thou wouldst complete the diamond body with no out-flowing. Diligently heat the roots of consciousness and life. Kindle light in the blessed country ever close at hand, And there hidden, let thy true self always dwell. Carl Jung; The Secret of the Golden Flower.

For what is the body? The body is merely the visibility of the soul, the psyche; and the soul is the psychological experience of the body. So it is really one and the same thing. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 355.

Because a child is . . . small and its conscious thoughts scarce and simple, we do not realize the far-reaching complications of the infantile mind that are based on its original identity with the prehistoric psyche. That original mind is just as much present and still functioning in the child as the evolutionary stages of mankind are in its embryonic body. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 89.

The distinction between mind and body is an artificial dichotomy, a discrimination which is unquestionably based far more on the peculiarity of intellectual understanding than on the nature of things. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul

The deeper ’layers’ of the psyche lose their individual uniqueness as they retreat further and further into darkness. . . . they become increasingly collective until they are universalized and extinguished in the body’s materiality. . . . Hence ’at bottom’ the psyche is simply ’world. Carl Jung; The Special Phenomenology of the Child Archetype.

. . . the spirit is the life of the body seen from within, and the body the outward manifestation of the life of the spirit - the two being really one. Carl Jung; The Spiritual Problem of Modern Man; CW 10: 195.

Just as the body bears the traces of its phylogenetic development, so also does the human mind. Carl Jung; General Aspects of Dream Psychology; CW 8: 475.

The symbols of the self arise in the depths of the body and they express its materiality every bit as much as the structure of the perceiving consciousness. The symbol is thus a living body, corpus et anima. Carl Jung; CW 9i; para 291.

[The soul] is of divine nature and therefore immortal; that there is a power inherent within it which builds up the body, sustains its life, heals its ills. Carl Jung; CW 8.

The part of the unconscious which is designated as the subtle body becomes more and more identical with the functioning of the body, and therefore it grows darker and darker and ends in the utter darkness of matter. . . . Somewhere our unconscious becomes material, because the body is the living unit, and our conscious and our unconscious are embedded in it: they contact the body. Somewhere there is a place where the two ends meet and become interlocked. And that is the [subtle body] where one cannot say whether it is matter, or what one calls "psyche." Carl Jung; Nietzsche’s Zarathustra, vol. 1, p. 441.

[The alchemist Gerhard] Dorn . . . says, "In the body of man there is hidden a certain substance of heavenly nature known to very few Carl Jung; "Psychology and Religion" in CW 11, page 93, note 47.

It seems to me that we are at the end of an era. The splitting of the atom and the nuclear bomb bring us a new view of matter. As physical man cannot develop any further, it would seem that this particular evolution ends with man. Like the caterpillar dissolves and turns into a butterfly, it is conceivable that the physical body of man could change into a more subtle body. It might not be necessary for him to die to be clothed afresh and be transformed. ? Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 63.

We cannot say the side of the spirit is twice as good as the other side; we must bring the pairs of opposites together in an altogether different way, where the rights of the body are just as much recognized as the rights of the spirit. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 235.

On the whole my illness proved to be a most valuable experience which gave me the inestimable opportunity of a glimpse behind the veil. The only difficulty is to get rid of the body, to get quite naked and void of the world and the ego-will. Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 355-357

You see, somewhere our unconscious becomes material, because the body is the living unit, and our conscious and our unconscious are embedded in it: the contact the body. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 441.

Our unconscious is surely located in the body, and you mustn't think this a contradiction to the statement I usually make, that the collective unconscious is everywhere; for if you could put yourself into your sympathetic system, you would know what sympathy is-you would understand why the nervous system is called sympathetic. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Pages 749-751.

If your life has not three dimensions, if you don't live in the body, if you live on the two-dimensional plane in the paper world that is flat and printed, as if you were only living your biography, then you are nowhere. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 972.

Therefore intuitives develop all sorts of physical trouble, intestinal disturbances for instance, ulcers of the stomach or other really grave physical troubles. Because they overleap the body, it reacts against them. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Pages 1391-1392.

Such things can happen: a projection is a very tangible thing, a sort of semi-substantial thing which forms a load as if it had real weight. It is exactly as the primitives understand it, a subtle body. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1495.

Since the soul animates the body, just as the soul is animated by the spirit, she tends to favour the body and everything bodily, sensuous, and emotional. She lies caught in "the chains" of Physis, and she desires "beyond physical necessity." She must be called back by the "counsel of the spirit" from her lostness in matter and the world. Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, Page 472.

If we now recall to what a degree the soul has humanized and realized itself, we can judge how very much it today expresses the body also, with which it is coexistent. Carl Jung, Mysterium Coniunctionis, Page 544.

What does power avail us? We do not want to rule. We want to live, we want light and warmth, and hence we need yours. Just as the greening earth and every living body needs the sun, so we as spirits need your light and your warmth. A sunless spirit becomes the parasite of the body. But the God feeds the spirit. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 286.

Yet we cannot remain in this state, since all the powers of our body are consumed like fat in the flames. Hence we must strive to free the self from the God, so that we can live. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 339.

But when the mother, my soul, was pregnant with the God, I did not know it. It even seemed to me as if my soul herself was the God, although he lived only in her body. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 244.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/e48fb-12bbody.jpg`

Carl Jung: Dreams that form logically, morally, or aesthetically satisfying wholes are exceptional.

(2019-12-26 05:02)

[1]The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche (Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Volume 8)

Anyone sufficiently interested in the dream problem cannot have failed to observe that dreams also have a continuity forwards—if such an expression be permitted—since dreams occasionally exert a remarkable influence on the conscious mental life even of persons who cannot be considered superstitious or particularly abnormal. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 444

Dreams that form logically, morally, or aesthetically satisfying wholes are exceptional. Usually a dream is a strange and disconcerting product distinguished by many "bad" qualities, such as lack of logic, questionable morality, uncouth form, and apparent absurdity or nonsense. People are therefore only too glad to dismiss it as stupid, meaningless, and worthless. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 532

The more one-sided his conscious attitude is, and the further it deviates from the optimum, the greater becomes the possibility that vivid dreams with a strongly contrasting but purposive content will appear as an expression of the self-regulation of the psyche. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 488

The view that dreams are merely the imaginary fulfilments of repressed wishes is hopelessly out of date. There are, it is true, dreams which Dreams may contain ineluctable truths, philosophical pronouncements, illusions, wild fantasies, memories, plans, anticipations, irrational experiences, even telepathic visions, and heaven knows what besides. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 317

If we want to interpret a dream correctly, we need a thorough knowledge of the conscious situation at that moment, because the dream contains its unconscious complement, that is, the material which the conscious situation has constellated in the unconscious. Without this knowledge it is impossible to interpret a dream correctly, except by a lucky fluke. Carl Jung; CW 8; Page 477.

It is characteristic that dreams never express themselves in a logical, abstract way but always in the language of parable or simile. This is also a characteristic of primitive languages, whose flowery turns of phrase are very striking. If we remember the monuments of ancient literature, we find that what nowadays is expressed by means of abstractions was then expressed mostly by similes. Even a philosopher like Plato did not disdain to express certain fundamental ideas in this way. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 474

As regards the much discussed symbolism of dreams, its evaluation varies according to whether it is considered from the causal or from the final standpoint. The causal approach of Freud starts from a desire or craving, that is, from the repressed dream-wish. This craving is always something comparatively simple and elementary, which can hide itself under manifold disguises. . . . Hence it is that the more rigorous adherents of the Freudian school have come to the point of interpreting—to give a gross example—pretty well all oblong objects in dreams as phallic symbols and all round or hollow objects as feminine symbols. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 470

Childhood is important not only because various warpings of instinct have their origin there, but because this is the time when, terrifying or encouraging, those far-seeing dreams and images appear before the soul of the child, shaping his whole destiny, as well as those retrospective intuitions which reach back far beyond the range of childhood experience into the life of our ancestors. Thus in the child psyche the natural condition is already opposed by a "spiritual" one. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 98

It would all be so much simpler if only we could deny the existence of the psyche. But here we are with our immediate experiences of something that is—something that has taken root in the midst of our measurable, ponderable, three dimensional reality, that differs mysteriously from this in every respect and in all its parts, and yet reflects it. The psyche could be regarded as a mathematical point and at the same time as a universe of fixed stars. It is small wonder, then, if, to the unsophisticated mind, such a paradoxical being borders on the divine. If it occupies no space, it has no body. Bodies die, but can something invisible and incorporeal disappear? What is more, life and psyche existed for me before I could say "I," and when this "I" disappears, as in sleep or unconsciousness, life and psyche still go on, as our observation of other people and our own dreams inform us. Why should the simple mind deny, in the face of such experiences, that the "soul" lives in a realm beyond the body? Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 671

Even the well-nigh unconscious primitive can adapt and assert himself, but only in his primitive world, and that is why under other conditions he falls victim to countless dangers which we on a higher level of consciousness can avoid without effort. True, a higher consciousness is exposed to dangers undreamt of by the primitive, but the fact remains that the conscious man has conquered the earth and not the unconscious one. Whether in the last analysis, and from a superhuman point of view, this is an advantage or a calamity we are not in a position to decide. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 695

Further researches, expressly referred to by Maeder, have shown that the sexual language of dreams is not always to be interpreted in a concretistic way—that it is, in fact, an archaic language which naturally uses all the analogies readiest to hand without their necessarily coinciding with a real sexual content. It is therefore unjustifiable to take the sexual language of dreams literally under all circumstances, while other contents are explained as symbolical. But as soon as you take the sexual metaphors as symbols for some thing unknown, your conception of the nature of dreams at once deepens. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 506

If, as happens in long and difficult treatments, the analyst observes a series of dreams often running into hundreds, there gradually forces itself upon him a phenomenon which, in an isolated dream, would remain hidden behind the compensation of the moment. This phenomenon is a kind of developmental process in the personality itself. At first it seems that each compensation is a momentary adjustment of one-sidedness or an equalization of disturbed balance. But with deeper insight and experience, these apparently separate acts of compensation arrange themselves into a kind of plan. They seem to hang together and in the deepest sense to be subordinated to a common goal, so that a long dream-series no longer appears as a senseless string of incoherent and isolated happenings, but resembles the successive steps in a planned and orderly process of development. I have called this unconscious process spontaneously expressing itself in the symbolism of a long dream-series the individuation process. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 550

The causal point of view tends by its very nature towards uniformity of meaning, that is, towards a fixed significance of symbols. The final point of view, on the other hand, perceives in the altered dream-image the expression of an altered psychological situation. It recognizes no fixed meaning of symbols. From this standpoint, all the dream images are important in themselves, each one having a special significance of its own, to which, indeed, it owes its inclusion in the dream. . , . The symbol in the dream has more the value of a parable it does not conceal, it teaches. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 471

It is only in exceptional cases that somatic stimuli are the determining factor. Usually they coalesce completely with the symbolical expression of the unconscious dream content; in other words, they are used as a means of expression. Not infrequently the dreams show that there is a remarkable inner symbolical connection between an undoubted physical illness and a definite psychic problem, so that the physical disorder appears as a direct mimetic expression of the psychic situation. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 502

Considering a dream from the standpoint of finality, which I contrast with the causal standpoint of Freud, does not—as I would expressly like to emphasize—involve a denial of the dream's causes, but rather a different interpretation of the associative material gathered round the dream. The material facts remain the same, but the criterion by which they are judged is different. The question may be formulated simply as follows: What is the purpose of this dream? What effect is it meant to have? These questions are not arbitrary inasmuch as they can be applied to every psychic activity. Everywhere the question of the "why" and the "wherefore" may be raised, because every organic structure consists of a complicated network of purposive functions, and each of these functions can be resolved into a series of individual facts with a purposive orientation. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 462

The prospective function, on the other hand, is an anticipation in the unconscious of future conscious achievements, something like a preliminary exercise or sketch, or a plan roughed out in advance. . . . The occurrence of prospective dreams cannot be denied. It would be wrong to call them prophetic, because at bottom they are no more prophetic than a medical diagnosis or a weather forecast. They are merely an anticipatory combination of probabilities which may coincide with the actual behaviour of things but need not necessarily agree in every detail. Only in the latter case can we speak of "prophecy." That the prospective function of dreams is sometimes greatly superior to the combinations we can consciously foresee is not surprising, since a dream results from the fusion of subliminal elements and is thus a combination of all the perceptions, thoughts, and feelings which consciousness has not registered because of their feeble accentuation. In addition, dreams can rely on subliminal memory traces that are no longer able to influence consciousness effectively. With regard to prognosis, therefore, dreams are often in a much more favourable position than consciousness. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 493

If our dreams reproduce certain ideas these ideas are primarily our ideas, in the structure of which our whole being is interwoven. They are subjective factors, grouping themselves as they do in the dream, and expressing this or that meaning, not for extraneous reasons but from the most intimate promptings of our psyche. The whole dream work is essentially subjective, and a dream is a theatre in which the dreamer is himself the scene, the player, the prompter, the producer, the author, the public, and the critic. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 509

If we want to interpret a dream correctly, we need a thorough knowledge of the conscious situation at that moment, because the dream contains its unconscious complement, that is, the material which the conscious situation has constellated in the unconscious. Without this knowledge it is impossible to interpret a dream correctly, except by a lucky fluke. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 477

As in our waking state, real people and things enter our field of vision, so the dream-images enter like another kind of reality into the field of consciousness of the dream-ego. We do not feel as if we were producing the dreams, it is rather as if the dreams came to us. They are not subject to our control but obey their own laws. They are obviously autonomous psychic complexes which form them selves out of their own material. We do not know the source of their motives, and we therefore say that dreams come from the unconscious. In saying this, we assume that there are independent psychic complexes which elude our conscious control and come and go according to their own laws. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 580

The unconscious is the unknown at any given moment, so it is not surprising that dreams add to the conscious psychological situation of the moment all those aspects which are essential for a totally different point of view. It is evident that this function of dreams amounts to a psychological adjustment, a compensation absolutely necessary for properly balanced action. In a conscious process of reflection it is essential that, so far as possible, we should realize all the aspects and consequences of a problem in order to find the right solution. This process is continued automatically in the more or less unconscious state of sleep, where, as experience seems to show, all those aspects occur to the dreamer (at least by way of allusion) that during the day were insufficiently appreciated or even totally ignored in other words, were comparatively unconscious. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 469

A dream, like every element in the psychic structure, is a product of the total psyche. Hence we may expect to find in dreams everything that has ever been of significance in the life of humanity. Just as human life is not limited to this or that fundamental instinct, but builds itself up from a multiplicity of instincts, needs, desires, and physical and psychic conditions, etc., so the dream cannot be explained by this or that element in it, however beguilingly simple such an explanation may appear to be. We can be certain that it is incorrect, because no simple theory of instinct will ever be capable of grasping the human psyche, that mighty and mysterious thing, nor, consequently, its exponent, the dream. In order to do anything like justice to dreams, we need an interpretive equipment that must be laboriously fitted together from all branches of the humane sciences. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 527

Many people who know something, but not enough, about dreams and their meaning, and who are impressed by their subtle and apparently intentional compensation, are liable to succumb to the prejudice that the dream actually has a moral purpose, that it warns, rebukes, comforts, foretells the future, etc. If one believes that the unconscious always knows best, one can easily be betrayed into leaving the dreams to take the necessary decisions, and is then disappointed when the dreams become more and more trivial and meaningless. Experience has shown me that a slight knowledge of dream psychology is apt to lead to an overrating of the unconscious which impairs the power of conscious decision. The unconscious functions satisfactorily only when the conscious mind fulfils its tasks to the very limit. A dream may perhaps supply what is then lacking, or it may help us forward where our best conscious efforts have failed. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 568

Everyone who analyses the dreams of others should constantly bear in mind that there is no simple and generally known theory of psychic phenomena, neither with regard to their nature, nor to their causes, nor to their purpose. We therefore possess no general criterion of judgment. We know that there are all kinds of psychic phenomena, but we know nothing certain about their essential nature. We know only that, though the observation of the psyche from any one isolated standpoint can yield very valuable results, it can never produce a satisfactory theory from which one could make deductions. The sexual theory and the wish theory, like the power theory, are valuable points of view without, however, doing anything like justice to the profundity and richness of the human psyche. Had we a theory that did, we could then content ourselves with learning a method mechanically. It would then be simply a matter of reading certain signs that stood for fixed contents, and for this it would only be necessary to learn a few semiotic rules by heart. Knowledge and correct assessment of the conscious situation would then be as superfluous as in the performance of a lumbar puncture. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 498

It is really high time academic psychologists came down to earth and wanted to hear about the human psyche as it really is and not merely about laboratory experiments. It is insufferable that professors should forbid their students to have anything to do with analytical psychology, that they should prohibit the use of analytical concepts and accuse our psychology of taking account, in an unscientific manner, of "everyday experiences." I know that psychology in general could derive the greatest benefit from a serious study of the dream problem once it could rid itself of the unjustified lay prejudice that dreams are caused solely by somatic stimuli. This overrating of the somatic factor in psychiatry is one of the basic reasons why psychopathology has made no advances unless directly fertilized by analytical procedures. The dogma that "mental diseases are diseases of the brain" is a hangover from the materialism of the 1870's. It has become a prejudice which hinders all progress. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 529

The fact that all immediate experience is psychic and that immediate reality can only be psychic explains why it is that primitive man puts spirits and magical influences on the same plane as physical events. He has not yet torn his original experience into antithetical parts. In his world, spirit and matter still interpenetrate each other, and his gods still wander through forest and field. He is like a child, only half born, still enclosed in his own psyche as in a dream, in a world not yet distorted by the difficulties of understanding that beset a dawning intelligence. When this aboriginal world fell apart into spirit and nature, the West rescued nature for itself. It was prone by temperament to a belief in nature, and only became the more entangled in it with every painful effort to make itself spiritual. The East, on the other hand, took spirit for its own, and by explaining away matter as mere illusion—Maya—continued to dream in Asiatic filth and misery. But since there is only one earth and one mankind. East and West cannot rend humanity into two different halves. Psychic reality still exists in its original oneness, and awaits man's advance to a level of consciousness where he no longer believes in the one part and denies the other, but recognizes both as constituent elements of one psyche. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 682

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Structure-Dynamics-Psyche-Collected-Works/dp/0691097747/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3T7452RBXIDK6&keywords=structure+and+dynamics+of+the+psyche+jung&`

Carl Jung and the Image of God. (2019-12-26 05:12)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Gebhard Frei

Dear Dr. Frei, 13 January 1948

In your essay which I have read with great interest, you have given a fair and in all essentials correct presentation of my views.

Your remarks about the “self and God," on which you lay particular stress, I find very apt.

As you will see, I have taken the liberty of making a few comments in your MS, which though not very considerate of me may perhaps be of service to you.

The great difficulty is the clash between scientific and epistemological thinking on the one hand and theological and metaphysical thinking on the other.

With regard to the self, I could say that it is an equivalent of God.

That sort of thing puts the wind up the theologians because it looks as if a “God-substitute" had been created.

To the psychologist this is so absurd that he would hesitate to credit anybody with such stupidity.

He would put it like this: When I say ”God" this is a psychic image. Equally, the self is a psychic image of the transcendent, because indescribable and inapprehensible, wholeness of man. Both are expressed empirically by the same symbols, or symbols so similar that they cannot be distinguished from one another.

Psychology is concerned simply and solely with experienceable images whose nature and biological behaviour it investigates with the help of the comparative method.

This has nothing whatever to do with God per se.

How can any man in his right senses imagine he could subtract anything from or add anything to God?

If I have 20,000 frs. and I say it is 50,000 I shall soon find out that my real 20,000 have not increased by a cent.

After all, I am not such a lunatic that people could credit me with the idea of intending to create a God-substitute.

How could any man replace God?

I can’t even create a lost button with my imagination but have to buy myself a new real one!

The mistake, it seems to me, is that these critics actually believe only in words, without knowing it, and then think they have posited God.

Because they don’t know this, it appears projected on to me in the accusation that I am manufacturing a God.

This accusation is so unbelievably absurd because at the very most I speak of an imago Dei, as I have repeatedly emphasized in countless places, and I am not like the idiot who believes that the image he sees in the mirror is his real and living I.

•

My thinking is substantive, but theological-metaphysical thinking is in constant danger, as the above instance shows, of operating with substanceless words and imagining that the reality corresponding to them is then seated in heaven.

What else could the theologian show?

Well, Christ is in us and we in him ! Why shouldn’t the workings of God and the presence of the “Son of Man” in us be real and experienceable?

I thank God every day that I have been permitted to experience the reality of the imago Dei in me.

Had that not been so, I would be a bitter enemy of Christianity and of the Church in particular.

Thanks to this actus gratiae my life has meaning, and my inner eye was opened to the beauty and grandeur of dogma.

I can see that the Church is my mother, and that the spirit of my father leads me away from her to the battlefield of the world, where every day the light is in danger of being extinguished for me by the princeps huius mundi, the stifling darkness of unconsciousness.

Avidya is a cardinal evil for the Buddhists too .

It is probably the sin and malum kat' exochen.

The tension you feel between the Church and psychology does not, in my opinion, lie in morality but in psychic facts, namely conflicts of duty, which in the last resort come from our having no sure judgment about good and evil, and the more psychological insight we acquire the more we see how fearfully the two of them interpenetrate.

The evil of the good and the good of the evil are-unfortunately, unfortunately! ineffaceable facts.

Psychology is as little to blame for this as zoology for lice.

It merely knows about them, and whoever wants to remain unconscious (thereby serving the devil) therefore hates and suspects psychology.

The reigning prince of this world shuns the light of knowledge like the plague.

If good did not have its evil side and vice versa, the notion that God could lead his miserable little creature into temptation would be an absurd blasphemy.

It would then be a simple matter always to decide for the good.

But in reality it needs the highest consciousness and the greatest perspicacity to reach even a halfway intelligent decision.

Many people pride themselves on this spirit of perspicacity, but Christ says: "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for they shall see God"

Nothing makes us so deeply conscious of our poverty as the problem of good and evil.

Did it please the Pharisees that Christ consorted with publicans and whores?

What did he say to Peter about eating unclean beasts?

Why did the Lord commend his deceitful and unjust steward because he had done

It would perhaps be advisable if you got it into your public's head that my psychology does not deal in banalities and platitudes but with the most difficult problems it is possible to imagine, which can only be compared with those of microphysics.

They are not my invention, but I sweat at them.

Please excuse this long letter!

You may gather from it how very concerned I am to get into a right relationship with Catholic thinking in particular, for this is the precondition, which cannot be thought out of existence, for solving the difficult problems with which the psychology of the unconscious confronts us.

With best regards,

Yours very sincerely,

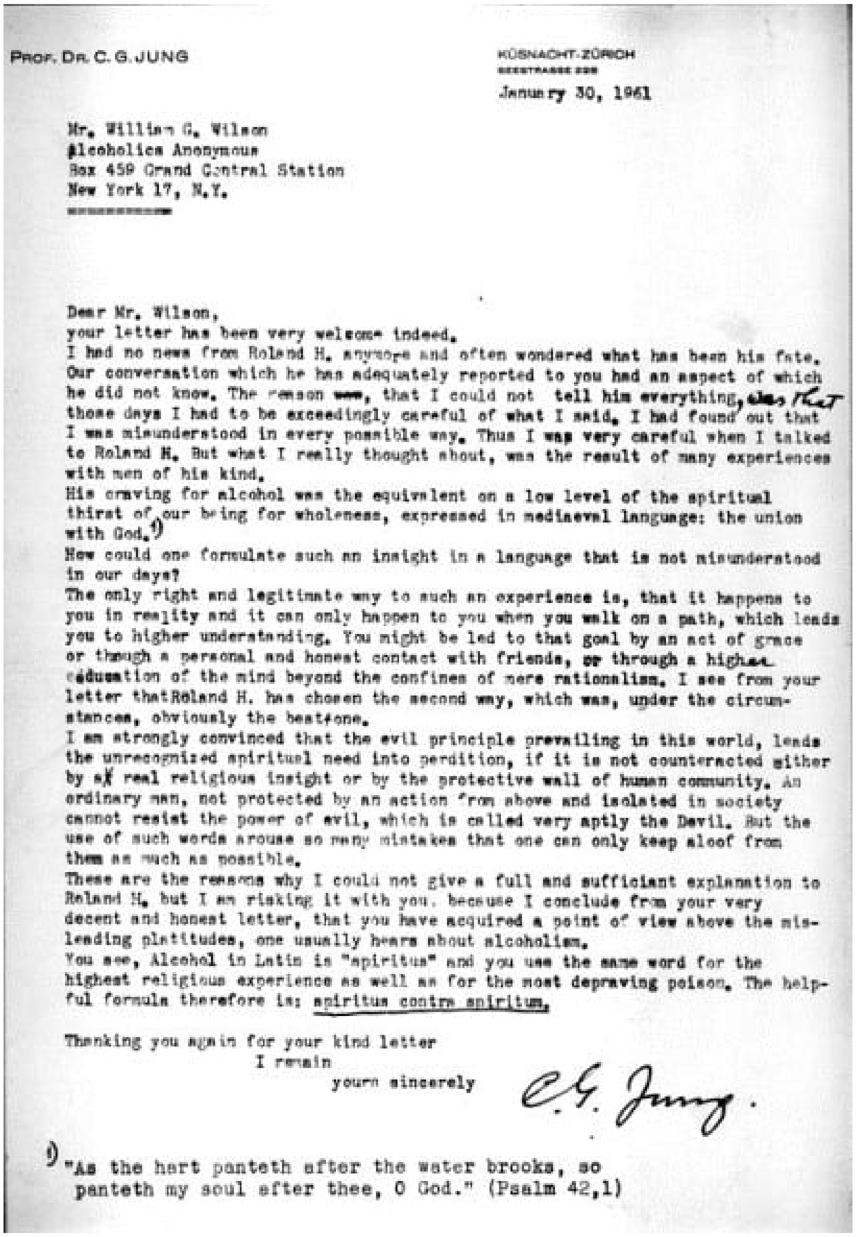
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 486-489.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/85e3c-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=LKUPRJMJZH4Y&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577356419&sprefix=jung+lett`

Letter to Bill Wilson from Dr.Carl Jung (2019-12-26 05:19)

[1]



PROF. DR. C. G. JUNG

KÜSNACHT-ZÜRICH

January 30, 1961

Mr. William G. Wilson
Alcoholics Anonymous
Box 459 Grand Central Station
New York 17, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Wilson,

your letter has been very welcome indeed.

I had no news from Roland H. anymore and often wondered what has been his fate. Our conversation which he has adequately reported to you had an aspect of which he did not know. The reason ~~was~~, that I could not tell him everything, ~~was~~ that those days I had to be exceedingly careful of what I said. I had found out that I was misunderstood in every possible way. Thus I was very careful when I talked to Roland H. But what I really thought about, was the result of many experiences with men of his kind.

His craving for alcohol was the equivalent on a low level of the spiritual thirst of our being for wholeness, expressed in mediaeval language: the union with God.1)

How could one formulate such an insight in a language that is not misunderstood in our days?

The only right and legitimate way to such an experience is, that it happens to you in reality and it can only happen to you when you walk on a path, which leads you to higher understanding. You might be led to that goal by an act of grace or through a personal and honest contact with friends, ~~or~~ through a higher education of the mind beyond the confines of mere rationalism. I see from your letter that Roland H. has chosen the second way, which was, under the circumstances, obviously the best one.

I am strongly convinced that the evil principle prevailing in this world, leads the unrecognized spiritual need into perdition, if it is not counteracted either by a~~n~~ real religious insight or by the protective wall of human community. An ordinary man, not protected by an action from above and isolated in society cannot resist the power of evil, which is called very aptly the Devil. But the use of such words arouse so many mistakes that one can only keep aloof from them as much as possible.

These are the reasons why I could not give a full and sufficient explanation to Roland H. but I am risking it with you, because I conclude from your very decent and honest letter, that you have acquired a point of view above the misleading platitudes, one usually hears about alcoholism.

You see, Alcohol in Latin is "spiritus" and you use the same word for the highest religious experience as well as for the most depraving poison. The helpful formula therefore is: spiritus contra spiritum.

Thanking you again for your kind letter
I remain
yours sincerely
C.G. Jung.

1) "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." (Psalm 42,1)

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Dear Mr. Wilson

Your letter has been very welcome indeed.

I had no news from Roland H. anymore and often wondered what has been his fate. Our conversation which he has adequately reported to you had an aspect of which he did not know.

The reason that I could not tell him everything was that those days I had to be exceedingly careful of what I said. I had found out that I was misunderstood in every possible way. Thus I was very careful when I talked to Roland H. But what I really thought about was the result of many experiences with men of his kind.

His craving for alcohol was the equivalent, on a low level, of the spiritual thirst of our being for wholeness, expressed in medieval language: the union with God.*

How could one formulate such an insight in a language that is not misunderstood in our days?

The only right and legitimate way to such an experience is that it happens to you in reality and it can only happen to you when you walk on a path which leads you to higher understanding. You might be led to that goal by an act of grace or through a personal and honest contact with friends, or through a higher education of the mind beyond the confines of mere rationalism. I see from your letter that Roland H. has chosen the second way, which was, under the circumstances, obviously the best one.

I am strongly convinced that the evil principle prevailing in this world leads the unrecognized spiritual need into perdition, if it is not counteracted either by real religious insight or by the protective wall of human community. An ordinary man, not protected by an action from above and isolated in society, cannot resist the power of evil, which is called very aptly the Devil. But the use of such words arouses so many mistakes that one can only keep aloof from them as much as possible.

These are the reasons why I could not give a full and sufficient explanation to Roland H., but I am risking it with you because I conclude from your very decent and honest letter that you have acquired a point of view above the misleading platitudes one usually hears about alcoholism.

You see, "alcohol" in Latin is "spiritus" and you use the same word for the highest religious experience as well as for the most depraving poison. The helpful formula therefore is: spiritus contra spiritum.

Thanking you again for your kind letter

I remain

Yours sincerely

C. G. Jung

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/a0dd5-alcoholics.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=LKUPRJMJZH4Y&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577356419&sprefix=jung+lett`

Carl Jung: The ideas of the moral order and of God belong to the ineradicable substrate of the human soul. (2019-12-26 05:20)

IC XC
Ο ΑΝΑΠΕΩΝ
eikonografos.com

[1]The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche (Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Volume 8)

The ideas of the moral order and of God belong to the ineradicable substrate of the human soul.

That is why any honest psychology, which is not blinded by the garish conceits of enlightenment, must come to terms with these facts. They cannot be explained away and killed with irony.

In physics we can do without a God-image, but in psychology it is a definite fact that has got to be reckoned with, just as we have to reckon with "affect," "instinct," "mother," etc.

It is the fault of the everlasting contamination of object and image that people can make no conceptual distinction between "God" and "God-image," and therefore think that when one speaks of the "God-image" one is speaking of God and offering "theological" explanations.

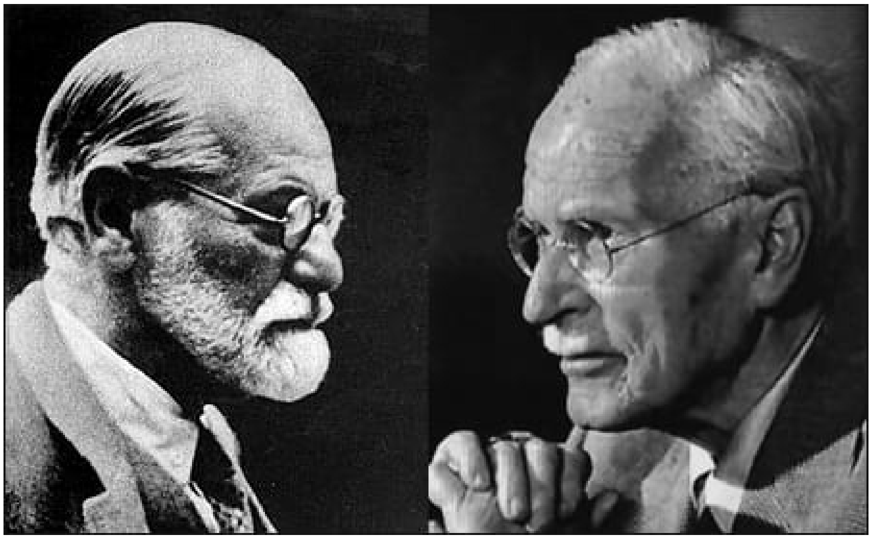
It is not for psychology, as a science, to demand a hypostatization of the God-image.

But the facts being what they are, it does have to reckon with the existence of a God-image. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 528

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Structure-Dynamics-Psyche-Collected-Works/dp/0691097747/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3T7452RBXIDK6&keywords=structure+and+dynamics+of+the+psyche+jung&`

Carl Jung on “getting a proper understanding of Freud...” (2019-12-26 05:29)

[1]



[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Lecture 3

Dr. Jung:

It must not be thought that the task of getting a proper understanding of Freud, or, I should rather say, the task of getting him properly placed in my life, was an easy one for me.

At that time I was planning an academic career and was about to complete a work that would advance me in the university.

Freud, definitely persona non grata in the medical world at that time, was hardly mentioned above a whisper by people of importance; at the congresses he was discussed only in the couloirs, never on the floor, and any connection with him was a menace to one's own reputation.

Therefore the discovery by me that my experiments in association were directly connected with Freud's theories was most unwelcome.

One time while I was in my laboratory, it flashed into my mind that Freud had actually elaborated a theory which would explain my experiments.

At the same time a devil whispered in my ear that I could perfectly well publish my work without mentioning

Freud, that I had worked out my experiments long before I knew of Freud, and so could claim complete independence of him as far as they went.

However, I saw at once that there was an element of lying involved which I did not propose to go in for.

So I openly took up the cudgels for Freud and fought for him in the subsequent congresses.

There came a certain lecturer to one of these, and gave an explanation of the neuroses entirely ignoring Freud.

I protested at this, and engaged in my first fight for Freud's ideas.

Later on, at another congress, there was a lecture on the compulsion neuroses, and again mention of Freud's work was omitted.

This time I wrote an article in a well-known German newspaper, attacking the man.

Immediately a flood of resistances was released against me, and that man wrote me a letter and warned me that my academic future was at stake if I persisted in joining forces with Freud.

Of course I felt that if I had to get an academic future at such a price, it could be damned, and I went on writing about Freud.

All this while I continued my experiments, but still could not get myself into agreement with Freud as to the origin of all neuroses being sex-repression.

Freud had published thirteen cases of hysteria, all of which were reported as the result of sexual violation.

Later, when I met Freud, he said that about some of these cases, at least, he had been fooled.

One of them, for instance, was of a girl who said that when she was four years old she had been violated by her father.

This man happened to be a friend of Freud's, and the latter convinced himself that the girl's story was a lie.

Subsequent investigation brought out the fact that others in the series were also falsifications, but he would not retract, it having been his policy always to let things stand as he originally presented them.

There is then a certain untrustworthiness about all these earlier cases. Thus again, the famous first case that he had with Breuer, which has been so much spoken about as an example of a brilliant therapeutic success, was in reality nothing of the kind.

Freud told me that he was called in to see the woman the same night that Breuer had seen her for the last time, and that she was in a bad hysterical attack, due to the breaking off of the transference.

This, then, was no cure at all in the sense in which it was originally presented, and yet it was a very interesting case, so interesting that there was no need to claim for it something that did not happen.

But all of these things I did not know at that time.

Besides my experiments, I was working with many cases of insanity, particularly with dementia praecox.

At that time there was no psychological viewpoint to be found in the field of psychiatry.

A label was put on each case; it was said to be a degeneration here, or an atrophy there, and then it was finished—there was nothing more to be done about it.

It was only among the nurses that any psychological interest in the patients could be found, and among them there were some very shrewd guesses offered as to the conditions presented; but the doctors knew none of this.

For example, there was an old case in the women's ward, a woman who was seventy-five years old, and who had lain in bed for forty years.

She had been in the asylum nearly fifty years perhaps—so long, in fact, that no one remembered her entrance because the people there at the time were all dead.

There was just one head nurse, who had been in the asylum thirty-five years, who knew something of this woman's early history.

This old patient could not talk, and could only eat liquid food which she took with her fingers with a peculiar shoveling movement, so that it sometimes took her two hours to get down a cup of food.

When she was not feeding herself, she was making most peculiar movements with her hands and arms.

I thought to myself as I looked at her, "What a terrible thing is this."

But that is as far as I got with it.

She was regularly presented in clinic as an old case of dementia praecox, catatonic form.

It seemed to me perfect nonsense to dispose of these extraordinary movements in that way.

This case and its effect on me were typical of my whole reaction to psychiatry.

For six months I was struggling desperately to find myself in it, and was all the time more and more baffled.

I was deeply humiliated to see that my chief and my colleagues seemed to feel sure of themselves, and that it was only I who was drifting helplessly.

My failure to understand gave me such feelings of inferiority that I could not bear to go out of the hospital.

Here was I, a man with a profession which I could not rightly grasp.

I therefore stayed in all the time and gave myself up to the study of my cases.

Late one evening, as I went through the ward and saw the old woman I have described, I asked myself, "Why should that be?"

I went to the head nurse and asked if it had always been that way with that patient.

“Yes,” she said, “but formerly I heard from the head of the men’s ward that she used to make shoes!”

I looked up the archives and mention was made of the fact that she made movements as if making shoes.

Early shoemakers held the shoe between their knees and pulled the thread through with movements exactly like the ones the old woman used to make.

One can still see them doing it in certain primitive places.

Some time after this the patient died.

Then her brother three years older than herself turned up.

“Why did your sister go insane?”

I asked him. He told me she had been in love with a shoemaker, but for some reason the man did not want to marry her, and that she had gone insane.

She had kept alive the vision of him with those movements.

This was my first inkling of the psychogenesis of dementia praecox.

Then I kept careful watch over the cases and noted the psychogenetic factors.

It became clear to me that Freud’s conceptions could throw light on these problems.

This is the origin of The Psychology of Dementia Praecox.

I did not meet with much sympathy for my ideas.

In fact, my colleagues laughed at me.

It was another example of the difficulty felt by certain people when asked to consider a new idea.

In 1906 I worked out very carefully a case of dementia praecox.

of suppression, or of inferiority as we would say now.

I took down her material in great detail, and often while we were talking her voices would interrupt, saying something like this: “Tell the doctor that all you are saying is bunk, and that he need pay no attention to it.”

Or sometimes when she would be protesting violently at being kept in the asylum, the voices would say, “You know perfectly well you are insane and belong right where you are.”

Naturally she had great resistances to the voices.

I got the idea that the unconscious was entirely on top, and that her ego-consciousness had gone into the unconscious.

I discovered further, to my astonishment and bewilderment, that the ideas of megalomania and those of depreciation came of one and the same source.

The ideas of depreciation were those of being ill-treated or wronged or of being bad.

These I called self-depreciation, while the ideas of megalomania I called self-appreciation.

At the beginning I held it for impossible that the unconscious could produce the opposites together in this way for I was still on the Schopenhauer-Hartmann- Freud trail.

The unconscious was only an urge and could not display a conflict within itself.

Then I thought perhaps the two came from different levels of the unconscious, but that would not work; and finally I had to admit that the woman's mind was using both principles at once.

Later cases corroborated my findings.

For example, I had the case of a very intelligent lawyer who was suffering from paranoia.

In these cases there is just one idea about which they are insane, namely persecution; otherwise they are adapted to reality.

The case develops somewhat as follows: A man thinks he notices people talking about him; then he asks himself why, and answers it by saying that he must be someone important whom other people want to crush.

Little by little he finds he is a Messiah who must be annihilated.

The man of whom I am speaking was dangerous in that he had attempted one murder, and when he was free attempted another.

He had held an important political position, and one could talk to him.

He hated the doctors and spent his time cursing them. Once he broke down with me and said, "I know that alienists are the very finest people."

Then he fainted.

This moment came after I had worked with him three hours.

When he came to again, he was in his old state of depreciation.

The depreciation is produced as compensation to the megalomania.

I insist on this point so much because it is back of the Yea and Nay in the unconscious; in other words, the unconscious contains the pairs of opposites.

Through this book on dementia praecox I came to Freud.

We met in 1906.

The first day I met him it was at one o’clock in the afternoon, and we talked steadily for thirteen hours.

He was the first man of real importance I had seen; no one else could compare with him.

I found him extremely shrewd, intelligent, and altogether remarkable.

But my first impressions of him were somewhat confused; I could not quite make him out.

I found him, though, absolutely serious about his sex theory, and in his attitude there was nothing trivial to be found.

It made a great impression on me, but still I had grave doubts.

I told him this, and whenever I did, he always said it was because I had not had enough experience.

It was a fact that in those days I had not had enough experience upon which to form a critique.

I could see that this sexual theory was enormously important to Freud, both personally and philosophically, but I could not make out whether it came from a personal bias or not, so I went away with a doubt in my mind about the whole situation.

Another impression I got in connection with this seriousness of Freud with respect to his theory of sexuality was this: He invariably sneered at spirituality as being nothing but repressed sexuality, and so I said if one were committed fully to the logic of that position, then one must say that our whole civilization is farcical, nothing but a morbid creation due to repressed sexuality.

He said, “Yes, so it is, and its being so is just a curse of fate we cannot help.”

My mind was quite unwilling to settle there, but still I could not argue it out with him.

A third impression of those days involves things that became clear to me only much later, things that I thought out fully only after our friendship was gone.

When Freud talked of sexuality it was as though he were talking of God—as a man would talk who had undergone a conversion.

It was like the Indians talking of the sun with tears in their eyes.

I remember one Indian coming up softly behind me while I was looking at the mountain over the pueblo, and saying quite suddenly in my ear, “Don’t you think all life is coming from the mountain?”

It was just in that way that Freud talked of sexuality. A peculiar emotional quality would come into his face, and the cause of it I was at a loss to understand.

Finally I seemed to make it out through the consideration of something else that remained obscure to me then, namely Freud's bitterness.

One might say Freud consists of bitterness, every word being loaded with it.

His attitude was the bitterness of the person who is entirely misunderstood, and his manner always seemed to say, "If they don't understand they must be stamped into Hell."

I noticed this in him the first time I met him, and always saw it in him, but I could not find the connection with his attitude toward sexuality.

The explanation seems to me to be this: Freud, for all his repudiation of spirituality, has in reality a mystical attitude toward sexuality.

When one protested to him that a certain poem could not be understood on a sexual basis exclusively, he would say, "No, certainly not, that is psychosexuality."

But when analyzing the poem, he would pull out this thread and that, and so on until nothing was left but sexuality.

Now I think sexuality is a double concept to him, on the one side the mystical element, on the other mere sexuality, but the latter is the only thing that comes out in his terminology because he will not admit he has the other side.

That he has the other side, I think, is obvious from the way he showed his emotions.

And so he is forever defeating his own purpose.

He wants to teach that sexuality contains spirituality looked at from within, but he uses only concretistic sex terminology and conveys just the wrong idea.

His bitterness comes from this fact of constantly working against himself, for there is no bitterness worse than that of a man who is his own worst enemy.

Freud is blind to the dualism of the unconscious.

He does not know that the thing that wells up has an inside and an outside, and that if you talk only of the latter you speak of the shell alone.

But there is nothing to be done about this conflict in him; the only chance would be if he could have an experience that would make him see spirituality working inside the shell.

However, his intellect would then inevitably strip it to "mere" sexuality.

I tried to present to him cases showing other factors than sexual ones but always he would have it that there was nothing there save repressed sexuality.

As I said, such terribly bitter people are always those who work against themselves.

When I work against myself I project the uncertainty and terror that I feel.

If I am to avoid this, the one thing to settle is myself. Freud does not know that the unconscious produces a factor to counteract the monistic principle to which he has given himself over.

I find him a tragic figure, for he is a great man, but it is a fact that he runs away from himself.

He never asks himself why he has to talk about sex all the time, and in this running away from himself he is like any other artist.

In fact, creative people are usually like that.

These thoughts came to me, as I said, chiefly after I had broken with Freud.

I give them to you because as you know, my relation to Freud has long since become a matter of public discussion, and so I must present my view of it.

I came away from my first visit to Freud feeling that the sexual factor must be taken most seriously.

Somewhat bewildered, I began to look at my cases again and kept pretty quiet.

In 1909 Freud and I were both invited to Clark University, and we were together daily for about seven weeks.

We analyzed dreams each day, and it was then that I got an impression, a fatal one, of his limitations.

I had two dreams out of which he could not make head or tail.

Of course I did not mind that, for the very greatest person is going to have that experience with dreams some time or other.

It was just a human limitation, and I would never have taken it as a reason for not going on; on the contrary, I wanted very much to go on—I felt myself to be his son.

Then something happened which put a stop to it.

Freud had a dream on an important theme which I cannot mention.

I analyzed it and said there was more to be said if he would give me some points about his private life.

He looked at me with a peculiar expression of suspicion in his eyes and said, “I could tell you more but I can’t risk my authority.”

Then I knew further analysis was impossible because he put authority above truth.

I said I would have to stop there, and I never asked him again for material.

You must understand that I speak here quite objectively, but I must include this experience with Freud, because it is the most important factor in my relation to him.

He could not bear any criticism whatsoever.

As Freud could only partially handle my dreams, the amount of symbolical material in them increased as it always does until it is understood.

If one remains with a narrow point of view about the dream material, there comes a feeling of dissociation and one feels blind and deaf.

When this happens to an isolated man he petrifies.

On my way back from America, I had a dream that was the origin of my book on the Psychology of the Unconscious.

In those times I had no idea of the collective unconscious; I thought of the conscious as of a room above, with the unconscious as a cellar underneath and then the earth wellspring, that is, the body, sending up the instincts.

These instincts tend to disagree with our conscious ideals and so we keep them down.

That is the figure I had always used for myself, and then came this dream which I hope I can tell without being too personal.

I dreamed I was in a medieval house, a big, complicated house with many rooms, passages, and stairways.

I came in from the street and went down into a vaulted Gothic room, and from there into a cellar.

I thought to myself that now I was at the bottom, but then I found a square hole.

With a lantern in my hand I peeped down this hole, and saw stairs leading further down, and down these I climbed.

They were dusty stairs, very much worn, and the air was sticky, the whole atmosphere very uncanny.

I came to another cellar, this one of very ancient structure, perhaps Roman, and again there was a hole through which I could look down into a tomb filled with prehistoric pottery, bones, and skulls; as the dust was undisturbed, I thought I had made a great discovery.

There I woke up.

Freud said this dream meant that there were certain people associated with me whom I wanted dead, and buried under two cellars,but I thought the meaning was entirely elsewhere though I could not make it out. I kept thinking this way: The cellar is the unconscious, but what is the medieval house?

This I did not make out until much later.

But there was something below both cellars even—that is, remains of prehistoric man.

What does that mean?

I had a strongly impersonal feeling about the dream.

Involuntarily I began to make fantasies about it, though I did not then know anything about the principle of fantasizing in order to bring up unconscious material.

I said to myself, “Isn’t it fine to make excavations.

Where am I going to have a chance to do that?”

And actually when I came home I looked up a place where excavations were being made, and went to it.

But of course that did not satisfy me.

My thoughts then beginning to turn to the East, I began to read about excavations being made in Babylonia.

My interest went to books, and I came upon a German book called Mythology and Symbolism.

I went through the three or four volumes at top speed, reading like mad, in fact, until I became as bewildered as ever I had been in the clinic.

I had left the hospital, by the way, in 1909, after being there eight years, but now it seemed to me I was living in an insane asylum of my own making.

I went about with all these fantastic figures: centaurs, nymphs, satyrs, gods and goddesses, as though they were patients and I was analyzing them.

I read a Greek or a Negro myth as if a lunatic were telling me his anamnesis—I lost myself in puzzling what it could possibly mean.

Slowly out of all this came the Psychology of the Unconscious, for in the midst of it I came upon the Miller fantasies, and they acted like a catalyser upon all the material I had gathered together in my mind.

I saw in Miss Miller a person who, like myself, had had mythological fantasies, fantasies and dreams of a thoroughly impersonal character.

Their impersonality I readily recognized, as well as the fact that they must come from the lower “cellars,” though I did not give the name of collective unconscious to them.

This then is the way the book grew up.

While working on the book I was haunted by bad dreams.

I feel that I must speak of my dreams even though one is unavoidably personal to a degree when one does so.

But dreams have influenced all the important changes in my life and theories.

Thus for example I came to study medicine by reason of a dream, it having been my firm intention at first to become an archeologist.

With this in view I had entered my name in the list of students of philosophy at the University, but then came this dream, and I changed everything.

At that time, I mean when I was working on the Psychology of the Unconscious, all my dreams pointed to a break with Freud.

I thought, of course, that he would accept the cellars below his cellar, but the dreams were preparing me for the contrary.

Freud could see nothing in the book but resistance to the father, and the point in it to which he took the greatest exception was my contention that the libido is split and produces the thing that checks itself.

This to him as a monist was utter blasphemy.

From this attitude of Freud's I felt more than ever convinced that his idea of God was placed in sexuality, and that libido is to him only an urge in one direction.

As a matter of fact, however, I think it can be shown that there is a will to die as well as a will to live.

We prepare ourselves for death when we reach the summit of life; or, to put it in another way, after the age of thirty-five, let us say, we begin to know that cooler winds are blowing—at first we don't understand, but later we cannot escape the meaning.

After this break I had with Freud, the pupils that I had all over the world left me and turned to Freud.

They were told that my book was rubbish, and that I was a mystic, and with that the matter was settled.

Suddenly I found myself completely isolated.

This, however disadvantageous it may have been, had also an advantage for me as an introvert; that is it encouraged the vertical movement of the libido.

Cut off from the horizontal movement which activity in the outside world brings, I was driven to investigate fully the things within myself.

When I finished the Psychology of the Unconscious, I had a peculiarly lucid moment in which I surveyed my path as far as I had come.

I thought: "Now you have the key to mythology and you have the power to unlock all doors."

But then something within me said: "Why unlock all these doors?"

And then I found myself asking what I had done after all.

I had written a book about the hero, I had explained the myths of past peoples, but what about my own myth?

I had to admit I had none; I knew theirs but none of my own, nor did anyone else have one today.

Moreover, we were without an understanding of the unconscious.

Around these reflections, as around a central core, grew all the ideas that came to partial expression in the book on types. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 15-26

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/a09da-1freud.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2IY9ZH1P030QM&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=15774367`

Carl Jung on his use of the word “Eros.” (2019-12-26 05:33)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Erminie Huntress Lantero

Dear Mrs. Lantero, 18 June 1947

Please forgive the long delay of my answer to your letter.

It is not neglect that has hindered me from answering it sooner.

Your dilemma Agape-Eros is a most interesting problem.

There is indeed a big gap between the concept of Agape and the one of Eros.

The former has a definitely intellectual and ethical character, while the latter, as I apply it, has very much more the quality of an empirical concept formulating certain observable psychological facts.

Of course, I did not invent the term Eros.

I learnt it from Plato.

But I never would have applied this term if I hadn't observed facts that gave me a hint of how to use this Platonic notion.

With Plato Eros is still a daimonion or daemonium in that characteristic twilight in which the gods began to change into philosophical concepts during the course of centuries.

As I am thoroughly empirical I never took a philosophical concept for its own sake.

It was a word to me, which designated something tangible and observable, or it meant nothing.

Thus when I tried to formulate the keynote of the general masculine attitude I fell upon the term Logos which looked to me to be the right word for the observed facts.

The same when I tried to formulate a woman's general attitude I came upon the word Eros.

Logos, being an intellectual something, naturally has the character of discrimination which is the essential basis of any intellectual judgment.

Eros, on the other hand, is a principle of relatedness, and since I wanted to apply a characteristic term for relatedness it was naturally the word Eros which presented itself.

I didn't take this word from anybody.

I took it from my vocabulary and I said in so many words what I meant by it, namely a principle of relatedness.

I took this term and not the term Agape, because relatedness is a natural feature of human psychology, but Agape is not.

It is a very specified ethical concept.

Eros is nothing of the kind.

That is the reason why you find, as you say, Eros not only in the ancient Chinese religion but in many primitive religions as well.

As my whole psychology derives from immediate experience with living people, it is a matter of course that my concept of Eros also originated in immediate experiences.

My experience is a medical one in the first place, and only in the course of many years I began to study comparative religion and I also studied primitive psychology, partially in the field.

But all that came afterwards and it merely substantiated what I had found with modern individuals.

There is not one single thing in my psychology which is not substantiated essentially by actual experiences.

To my knowledge this idea of Eros has not been anticipated in modern literature, simply because nobody else has based it upon immediate observation.

Sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 464-466.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/3e193-eros.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=carl+jung+letters+vol.+1&qid=1577195810&sr=8-1`

Carl Jung: ... but the idea of life after death seems to him questionable or beyond belief. (2019-12-26 05:33)

[1]The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche (Collected Works of C.G. Jung, Volume 8)

For the man of today the expansion of life and its culmination are plausible goals, but the idea of life after death seems to him questionable or beyond belief.

Life’s cessation, that is, death, can only be accepted as a reasonable goal either when existence is so wretched that we are only too glad for it to end, or when we are convinced that the sun strives to its setting "to illuminate distant races" with the same logical consistency it showed in rising to the zenith.

But to believe has become such a difficult art today that it is beyond the capacity of most people, particularly the educated part of humanity.

They have become too accustomed to the thought that, with regard to immortality and such questions, there are innumerable contradictory opinions and no convincing proofs.

And since "science" is the catchword that seems to carry the weight of absolute conviction in the temporary world, we ask for "scientific" proofs.

But educated people who can think know very well that proof of this kind is a philosophical impossibility.

We simply cannot know anything whatever about such things. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 790

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Structure-Dynamics-Psyche-Collected-Works/dp/0691097747/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3HYJKTEDWWA2D&keywords=the+structure+of+the+psyche+carl+jung&qid=`

[The Trickster] is a forerunner of the Savior....... (2019-12-26 05:38)

HOC FVG·AC ILLI
AMBIGVO·DVPLICIQ
ILLVDENTI IOCOSO

[2]The Archetypes and The Collective Unconscious (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.9 Part 1)

[The trickster] is a forerunner of the savior . . . . He is both subhuman and superhuman, a bestial and divine being, whose chief and most alarming characteristic is his unconsciousness. ["On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure," CW 9i, par. 472]

The so-called civilized man has forgotten the trickster. He remembers him only figuratively and metaphorically, when, irritated by his own ineptitude, he speaks of fate playing tricks on him or of things being bewitched. He never suspects that his own hidden and apparently harmless shadow has qualities whose dangerousness exceeds his wildest dreams. [Ibid. par. 478.]

A definition and history of the trickster figure as he appears in myth and in emotional disturbance are illustrated by examples of it in American Indian myth, alchemy, the Bible, and parapsychology. In his clearest manifestations the trickster figure is described as a faithful representation of the absolutely undifferentiated human psyche which has hardly left the animal level.

In psychopathology the trickster figure is manifested in the split personality, in which a collective personification of traits which may be better or worse than the ego becomes active in the psyche. The trickster figure is represented in normal man by counter-tendencies in the unconscious that appear whenever a man feels himself at the mercy of apparently malicious accidents; this character component is the shadow.

The myth of the trickster is explained to have been preserved and developed for its therapeutic effect: the earlier low intellectual and moral level is held before the consciousness of the more highly developed individual to remind him of the past.

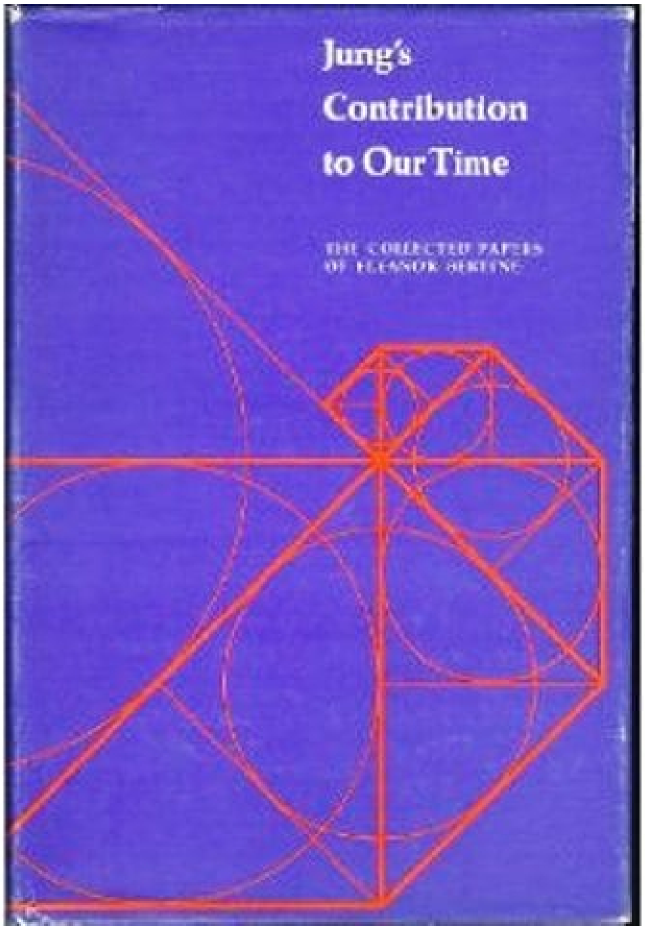
The trickster is defined as a parallel to the individual shadow, and the same trend toward meaning seen in the trickster figure is felt to exist for the shadow. Although the shadow appears negative, sometimes traits and associations arising from it can suggest a positive resolution to conflict. Carl Jung, Conscious, unconscious, and individuation. In: Jung, C., Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Vol. 9, Part 1. 2nd ed., Princeton University Press, 1968. 451 p. (p. 275-289).

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/b75a3-trickster.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Archetypes-Collective-Unconscious-Collected-Works/dp/0691018332/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3HG3AHOVYMRTV&keywords=carl+jung+archetypes+and+the+colle`

Jung’s Contribution to Our Time ~By Eleanor Bertine (2019-12-26 19:44)

[1]



Eleanor Bertine is yet another of the great Depth Psychology pioneers who is largely unknown or forgotten yet she made monumental contributions to Depth Psychology. Her book "Jung’s Contribution to Our Time" is a fine book both for those knowledgeable about Dr. Jung’s work but it is written in a language that a layperson can find enjoyable and informative reading.

Below are some Eleanor Bertine Quotations:

"All down the ages the existence of a supreme value has been attested by religious and mystical people, but Jung’s gift to his generation is the discovery that this value lies within the human psyche itself. Moreover, he has elaborated a method by which it can be sought there, without the necessity of any dogma or belief, and in addition can be formulated in terms consonant with the best of modern science." –Eleanor Bertine

"In the multiplicity of impressions and reactions which form the content of human life, man has always sought some principle of order. This search involves finding a point of reference to which each fragmentary experience can be related - into whose lines of force it can be fitted - in such a way that the chaos of event and circumstance takes on a pattern and so finds coherence and meaning. ... That which is unknown, shifting, changing, always produces a sense of dread, of insecurity. He who would venture into strange and unexplored realms, either inner or outer, desires at least a thread of Ariadne to guarantee an unbroken connection with his known and familiar world, and, when the adventure is finished, the promise of a way back. Psychologically, when this connection is lost and in consequence the person comes to feel that things are strange and uncanny, there arises such a flood of terror that he believes himself, perhaps not without reason, to be on the verge of madness." –Eleanor Bertine

"This age seems to be particularly cut off from the sense of any such accepted central truth which would give coherence and meaning to the concerns of the individual. ... For the primitive, too, there was of course a vast unknown, but it was adequately explainable to himself. The void was largely filled by well-organized projections, which Levy-Bruhl calls representations collectives... The world of sound and sense is experienced as ultimate and demonstrable reality, which fact would not occur to the simple mind to question, unless that mind were to assume that the validity of appearances had been distorted by magic. Yet, though the reality of the primitive was contaminated almost beyond recognition by the projection of the whole content of his unknown and unsuspected psychic life, his naive non-realization of that fact saved him from doubting his world. The sights and sounds of dreams were to him no less convincing than those of the waking state." –Eleanor Bertine

"In contrast, we moderns are not convinced of the ultimate reality of anything at all, not of matter, of the soul, or God. ... The solid rock itself has come to have no solidity, at least in our thinking, for we know it to be but the impression made upon us by vortices of energy. Our world - what is it?" –Eleanor Bertine

"Religion, when a living experience, embodies the final point of reference, the absolute to which all else is relative. To put it theologically, God becomes the focal point in one’s universe. Psychologically expressed - and this is as far as our capacity to know extends - God may be defined as that which is the center and ordering-point of one’s life, that which Jung called the unconditional value, the consideration which, if it conflict with any other, whatsoever it be, will be given precedence." –Eleanor Bertine

"The power of the archetype, the God-value, does not vanish from a life even though the religion into which it had been projected is forsworn and no other accepted in its stead. On the other hand, if it does really vanish from sight and no recognized holder of the supreme value is left, chaos will rule, one part-soul after another holding sway with no central organizing principle to give meaning or a consistent purpose to the whole." –Eleanor Bertine

"This disintegration of the central value brings about a deterioration of the whole level of being. Instead of the august and inspiring image of the triune God, the evil and banal totalitarian state may arise to take its place. Popular 'isms' then draw fanatical support. Pleasure or power, money (the root of all evil exactly because of its way of assuming central place), prestige, popularity, even a mere avoidance of pain may be elevated to the position of ruling principle by people who would be quite horrified to realize what had happened. Indeed, when there is not a consciously accepted unconditional value, there is always danger that some one-sided drive, some man-made idea or goal may usurp the central authority and become what Jung has called a regular demon-possession. The more ardent the nature, the greater the danger." –Eleanor Bertine

"Perhaps it is no accident that practically the whole group of modern artists - cubists, surrealists, post impressionists, and the rest - who gathered in and around Paris about the turn of the century expressed the disintegration of the age, not only in their art but in their living also, which seemed to lack exactly the central guiding point in reference to which some discipline and order might have been established. Their lives were crammed with excesses accepted without resistance if not actually hailed as somehow heroic - alchohol, women, even murder and suicide - the same protest and destructiveness which are expressed in their painting. The 'meaning of the times' seems to be the collapse of an era, with a freeing of the scene from encumbrance by old outworn forms, which, however useful in their day, are no longer valid if they cannot now manifest the spirit of the new age. In brief, on the psychological side disintegration moves toward nihilism and chaos, so that this phase of a culture is peculiarly perilous to the soul." –Eleanor Bertine

"At a time like this conscience is no adequate criterion of value. ... For conscience, after all, is only collective morality and has developed with the sanctions and in the lines of force of the current or most recent religious orientation. It is a part of the prevailing civilization... Conscience will work well enough in a thoroughly known situation, where the average truth is adequate. But if any new or individual element comes in, then conscience is either impotent or misleading." –Eleanor Bertine

"Jung, however, discovered something of the structure and laws of the unconscious, and found that it does actually contain the integrating, ordering principle for which the artists had been groping. He found symbols of a supreme value, of a center to which everything else is relative. Here was a clue to the answer to that great need of the age, an absolute, a final point of reference. ... Jung called this psychological absolute the Self in order to be able to talk about it at all. But he realized that, until the end of time or until the ocean of the unconscious should be drained, it would be unknowable in its entirety. ... For it belonged to the unconscious as well as to the conscious; it embodied ultimate mystery as well as demonstrable truth. Hence it could fittingly express the whole, but itself could be expressed only in a symbol, which turns one face toward the day, where it is easily visible, and one toward the night, where it is utterly dark. Yet for this very reason it will be suspect as an adequate guiding principle to some people, who will demand that it be entirely embraceable by the rational mind. These people will continue to adhere exclusively to the chosen light side of the pairs of opposites, only to be continually ambushed by the other." –Eleanor Bertine

"The Self as the central point is to be realized in no easy way, but only by tearing apart and reuniting or reconciling one antimony after another. This means experiencing the terrific strain and tension of the inner opposites, which threaten to explode the frail psychic organization. To be sure the operation of the principle which Jung has called individuation is not limited to the psychological life of man, but is found universally effective in nature also. It is simply the unconscious tendency of every living thing to fulfill its own unique potential." –Eleanor Bertine

"But with the rise of ego-consciousness the opposites are cleft asunder, one pulling one way and one the other. To the naive mind, if you are this, you cannot also be its thoroughly inconsistent opposite. So half of the original components of the psyche tend to be suppressed or otherwise disposed of in order to preserve some semblance of unity. Consciousness has split open the world and the soul, has polarized them and involved them in a civil war. At this stage it is impossible even to think about individuation, for individuation is the reconciliation of a paradox in which one is at the moment submerged up to the eyes, and thought is powerless. In the tormenting grip of these eternally clashing antitheses, it is easy to look back to the paradisaical unity of unconsciousness as to a higher as well as more complete state, and to envy the natural dignity and self-agreement of one upon whom the conflict has not yet dawned. But when once the conscious and the unconscious have been differentiated, as they have for civilized man, the wholeness enjoyed by the primitive is no longer possible, for it does not contain the hard-won fruits of conscious struggle, and this early state is less than totality for modern man. Hence a primitive man in civilization is evil in a way that no real savage ever is." –Eleanor Bertine

"Only an honest living through of the conflict until the reconciling symbol appears and lifts the individual above the warring elements can restore the wholeness rent asunder when the opposites were differentiated by consciousness. Duality and its resulting conflict must be met in one situation after another - one pair of inner opposites after another must find reconciliation. This is the very process of psychological individuation. ...the process must involve a high stage of consciousness. It begins at the point at which the ego turns to the unconscious as to its own necessary counterpart and complement and seems to find in it the guiding indications for the way of integration." –Eleanor Bertine

"This process of integration may be started in a successful Jungian analysis. But it also may happen in the course of life if the individual seeks his own reality ahead of everything else, noting his reaction to all the experiences that come to him. ... The constant consideration of the data of the deeper levels guards against the false starts which offer such illusory promise." –Eleanor Bertine

"There are many people, for example, who pride themselves that they are expressing the real Self when they are only riding high, wide, and handsome on some lusty libido drive to which they are at the moment identified, though this drive may never have been synthesized with other important values which have been rudely shoved out of the way." –Eleanor Bertine

"There seem to be indications that the lodestar to which the single person turns for orientation lies itself in a larger line of force to which he also becomes oriented by orienting himself to its manifestation in his own psyche. But we are by our very nature finite beings, and it is quite beyond our power to know the absolute guiding principle of the universe. Let it suffice us to seek the determining point in the microcosm of the individual human soul." –Eleanor Bertine

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/c0403-jung2527s2bcontribution2bto2bour2btime2bby2beleanor2bbertine.jpg`

Carl Jung: Such dreams fade away quickly if they are not written down, and this is no great loss.

(2019-12-27 03:30)

[1]

Dear Professor [Pauli] 6 March 1937

Your letter gave me much pleasure, and I thank you most sincerely for your willingness to make more of your dream material available to me.

As you know, I have always taken a lively interest in your unconscious processes, and I really would he most grateful if you at least continued to send me those dreams that are of a significant nature-you are fully aware of what I mean by that.

Most dreams, as you rightly say, are insignificant; that is, when the external situation changes, they soon lose their value, which only lasts for a certain period of time.

Such dreams fade away quickly if they are not written down, and this is no great loss.

The significant dreams, the other hand, and especially yours, are of great value when it comes to scientific research into motifs.

I have not been able to spend any time on your dreams recently, as I bad to “excavate" the ancient and medieval lines that have led to our dream psychology.

But sooner or later I shall tackle these dreams and extend the examination to the additional dreams, and not just the 400 dreams that have come in so far.

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

[C. G. JUNG)

Dear Professor Jung. 7, 3. V. 1937

I refer to your kind letter in March of this year and so am sending you further dream material, to which I have added a short chronological table.

There is also a drawing that goes with the material, which I shall send to you in the next few days.

All the dreams are from the year 1936, but the accompanying notes were written only recently (April 1937).

These notes are in no way meant to preclude a psychological interpretation by the expert; their sole aim is to establish the context, especially the link with the earlier material.

Any detailed scientific interpretation would certainly have to make comparisons with other material (possibly with historical material), which is quite beyond my competence and my abilities.

I leave it entirely up to you as to whether you wish to make further use of the material, and remain,

with best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

W. Pauli

[Atom and Archetype, Pages 17-18]

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/1353e-12bclock.jpg`

Those are the people who will carry on my work. (2019-12-27 04:09)

[1]

The following is from the introduction to a book on Jung's Aion lectures by Marie-Louise von Franz

"Two celebrations were held in his honor on his eightieth birthday. For the first occasion, invitations were sent to a carefully selected list of guests, all of whom were official representatives of his psychology. This was a rather stiff event, which tired him. To the evening party, however, anyone who wanted to see the great man was admitted: students, patients, Jung's gardener, neighbors from Bollingen.

In short, a great variety of "important" and "unimportant" people came to offer their congratulations at this second party. The atmosphere was warmly human and animated, and Jung stayed longer than had been anticipated.

On the way home he said, "Yes, those are the people who will carry on my work, single individuals who are suffering and seeking, and who try to take my ideas seriously in their own lives, not the ones who satisfy their vanity by preaching them to others."

https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/3c7be-zurich.jpg`

Carl Jung on the importance of Fear. (2019-12-27 04:25)

[1]

To Pastor Fritz Buri

Dear Pastor Buri, 10 December 1945

Very many thanks for kindly sending me your book, Die religiose Ueberwindung der Angst.

I have been waiting for a rejoinder to Pfister’s book from theological quarters.

I myself cannot agree with Pfister.

First and foremost because fear is a fundamental reaction of nature. Kierkegaard’s view that animals have no fear is totally disproved by the facts.

There are whole species which consist of nothing but fear.

A creature that loses its fear is condemned to death.

When "cured" by missionaries of their natural and justified fear of demons, primitives degenerate.

I have seen enough of this in Africa whatever the missionaries may say.

Anyone who is afraid has reason to be.

There are not a few patients who have to have fear driven into them because their instincts have atrophied.

A man who has no more fear is on the brink of the abyss.

Only if he suffers from a pathological excess of fear can he be cured with impunity.

Second, where the religions are concerned, they deliver from fear and at the same time create fear, even Christianity, and that is right because one person has too much, another too little.

Absolute deliverance from fear is a complete absurdity.

What about the fear of God?

Doesn’t God ordain fearful things?

Has Pfister no fear if both legs are broken for him and in the end he must dangle from a meat-hook through his chin?

Does no fear warn him of danger to body and soul?

Has he no fear for the life of his sick child?

A man without fear is a superman.

I don’t like supermen.

They are not even likeable.

If Christ in Gethsemane had no fear, then his passion is null and void and the believer can subscribe to docetism!

Third, religions are not by any means mere fear-constructs.

Far be it from me to deny the existence of apotropaisms, but like all religious phenomena, they go back to something that the biologist can only describe as a basic instinct of human nature.

His science does not entitle him to assert that religions are revelations of the divine spirit, which they very easily might be although we are unable to prove it.

In this sense I must describe every religious idea as a "fiction" since, formally at any rate, it is a conflation of imaginative possibilities.

On the other hand, we can be sure that it is not motivated by any conscious intention, rather it "happens" to man on an unconscious level (unconscious=unknown).

That is the utmost science can establish .

The wonder does not lie in the content of the "fiction" but in the existence of the fiction, even if it should be a conscious device used for illegitimate purposes (e.g., banishing fear).

But it is putting the cart before the horse to explain all dogmas and rites as apotropaic fear-constructs.

It is not only a scandal if theologians entertain such notions, but psychologically false as everyone knows who has had a religious experience, and as is also proved by the investigation of primitive rites.

It verges directly on atheism to try to reduce the religious function to anything other than itself . . . .

Fourth, as a psychotherapist I do not by any means try to deliver my patients from fear.

Rather, I lead them to the reason for their fear, and then it becomes clear that it is justified. (I could tell you a few instructive stories in this respect!)

If my patient understands religious language, I say to him: Well, don’t try to escape this fear which God has given you, but try to endure it to the end-sine poena nulla gratia! I can say this because I believe I am a religious man and because I know with scientific certainty that my patient hasn’t invented his fear but that it is preordained.

By whom or what?

By the unknown.

The religious man calls this absconditum "God," the scientific intellect calls it the unconscious.

Deriving fear from repression is a neurotic speculation, an apotropaism invented for cowards; a pseudo-scientific myth in so far as it declares a basic biological instinct unreal and twists it into an Ersatz-formation.

One could just as well explain life as a flight from death or love as an evasion of the hate which one hasn’t the courage to muster.

They are neurotic artifices with which one diddles hysterics out of the only meaning they have (which lies precisely in their neurosis), naturally with the best but unendurably shallow intentions.

I hope you will not take it amiss if I hazard the conjecture that you may have read rather too little of me.

I infer this from the difficulties which my manner of expression seems to cause you.

Fictio and imaginatio have for me their original, full meaning as important activities that concern not only man but God. (Deus imaginatur mundum. Trinitas imaginata in creatura.)

Formal dogma is fictios imaginatio; but its origin, its very existence, is a revelation of hidden contents which are not in accord with the mundus sensibilis. (Hence Tertullian’ s unsurpassa ble paradox.)

In the hope that it will make my standpoint somewhat clearer to you I am taking the liberty of sending you my little book Psychology and Religion, as a token of gratitude for the rich stimulation your book has afforded me.

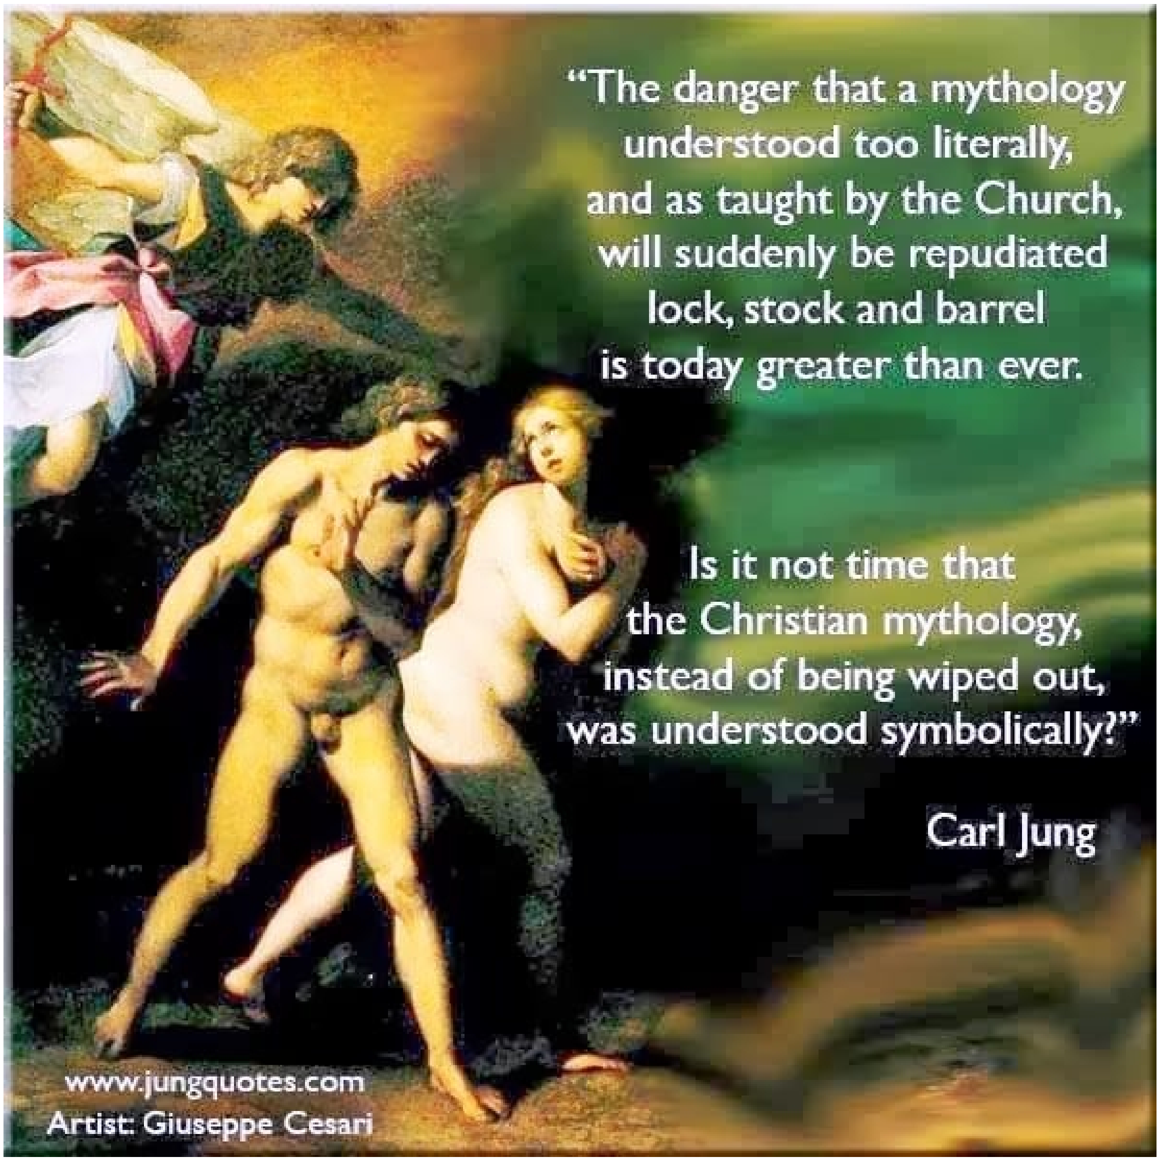
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 398-400.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/d9023-1.jpg`

No science will ever replace myth... (2019-12-27 04:45)

[1]



"The danger that a mythology understood too literally, and as taught by the Church, will suddenly be repudiated lock, stock and barrel is today greater than ever.

Is it not time that the Christian mythology, instead of being wiped out, was understood symbolically?"

Carl Jung

www.jungquotes.com
Artist: Giuseppe Cesari

[2]Memories, Dreams, Reflections

No science will ever replace myth, and a myth cannot be made out of any science. For it is not that "God" is a myth, but that myth is the revelation of a divine life in man.

It is not we who invent myth, rather it speaks to us as a Word of God.

The Word of God comes to us, and we have no way of distinguishing whether and to what extent it is different from God.

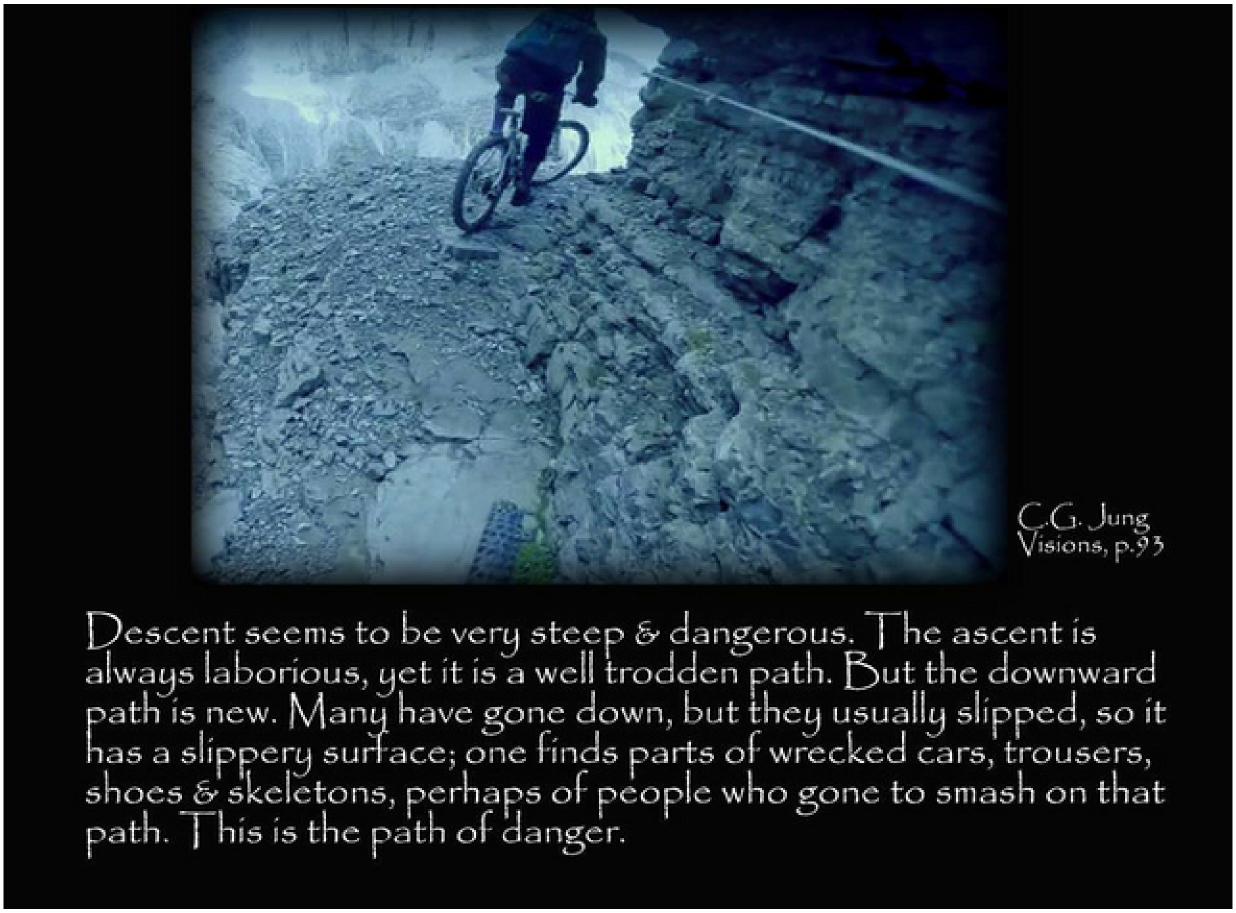
There is nothing about this Word that could not be considered known and human, except for the manner in which it confronts us spontaneously and places obligations upon us. It is not affected by the arbitrary operation of our will. We cannot explain an inspiration.

Our chief feeling about it is that it is not the result of our own ratiocinations, but that it came to us from elsewhere. And if we happen to have a precognitive dream, how can we possibly ascribe it to our own powers?   Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/b1e54-danger.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Memories-Dreams-Reflections-C-Jung/dp/0679723951/ref=sr_1_1?crid=BIG3VPO69FRB&keywords=jung+memories+dreams+reflections&qid=1577440118&sp`

Carl Jung: This is the path of danger. (2019-12-27 04:49)

[1]



C.G. Jung
Visions, p.93

Descent seems to be very steep & dangerous. The ascent is always laborious, yet it is a well trodden path. But the downward path is new. Many have gone down, but they usually slipped, so it has a slippery surface; one finds parts of wrecked cars, trousers, shoes & skeletons, perhaps of people who gone to smash on that path. This is the path of danger.

[2]Visions : Notes of the seminar given in 1930-1934 (2 Volume Set) (Bollingen)

Descent seems to be very steep & dangerous.

The ascent is always laborious, yet it is a well-trodden path.

But the downward path is new.

Many have gone down, but they usually slipped, so it has a slippery surface; one finds pars of wrecked cars, trousers, shoes & skeletons, perhaps of people who gone to smash on that path.

This is the path of danger. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 94

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/01725-1descent2bvisions.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Visions-Notes-seminar-1930-1934-Bollingen/dp/0691099715/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3HJG4VIC4XWTO&keywords=jung+visions+seminar&qid=1577464946&sprefi`

Carl Jung's advice to a patient. (2019-12-27 04:58)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Mr. 0.

Dear Mr. 0., 30 April 1947

Having studied your dream-material and having had a personal impression of your actual state of mind I have come to the conclusion that there is something wrong in the whole handling of your case, in spite of the fact that everything seems to be correct.

The fact is that you have an uncannily extensive material one can hardly hope to cope with, at least I couldn't muster the amount of energy that would be required to deal with your dreams properly.

In order to keep up with them one would need at least 3 hours a week.

As you know, the principle of my technique does not consist only in analysis and interpretation of such materials as are produced by the unconscious, but also in their synthesis by active imagination.

Of the latter I have seen nothing yet.

But this is precisely the "technique" which seems to be indicated in your situation.

You are not only informed enough but also intelligent enough to go on for a long stretch on the assumption that I'm buried and that there is no analyst for you under the changing moon except the one that is in your own heart.

As you will understand, this does not mean at all that you analyse and interpret your dreams according to the rules of the thumb, but that you do what we call in the German language the "Auseinandersetzung mit dem Unbewussten," which is a dialectical procedure you carry through with yourself with the aid of active imagination.

This is the best means I know to reduce an inordinate production of the unconscious.

It doesn't seem right that a man like yourself is still dependent upon analysts.

It is also not good for you, because it produces again and again a most unwholesome dissociation of your opposites, namely pride and humility.

It will be good for your humility if you can accept the gifts of the unconscious guide that dwells in yourself, and it is good for your pride to humiliate itself to such an extent that you can accept what you receive.

I don't intend to behave as if I were a corpse already.

I'm therefore quite willing to help in your attempt in this direction, but I refuse in your own interest to plague myself with your material which is only helpful when you acquire its understanding by your own effort.

Pride is a wonderful thing when you know how to fulfill its expectations.

Did you never ask yourself who my analyst is?

Yet, when it comes to the last issue, we must be able to stand alone vis a vis the unconscious for better or worse.

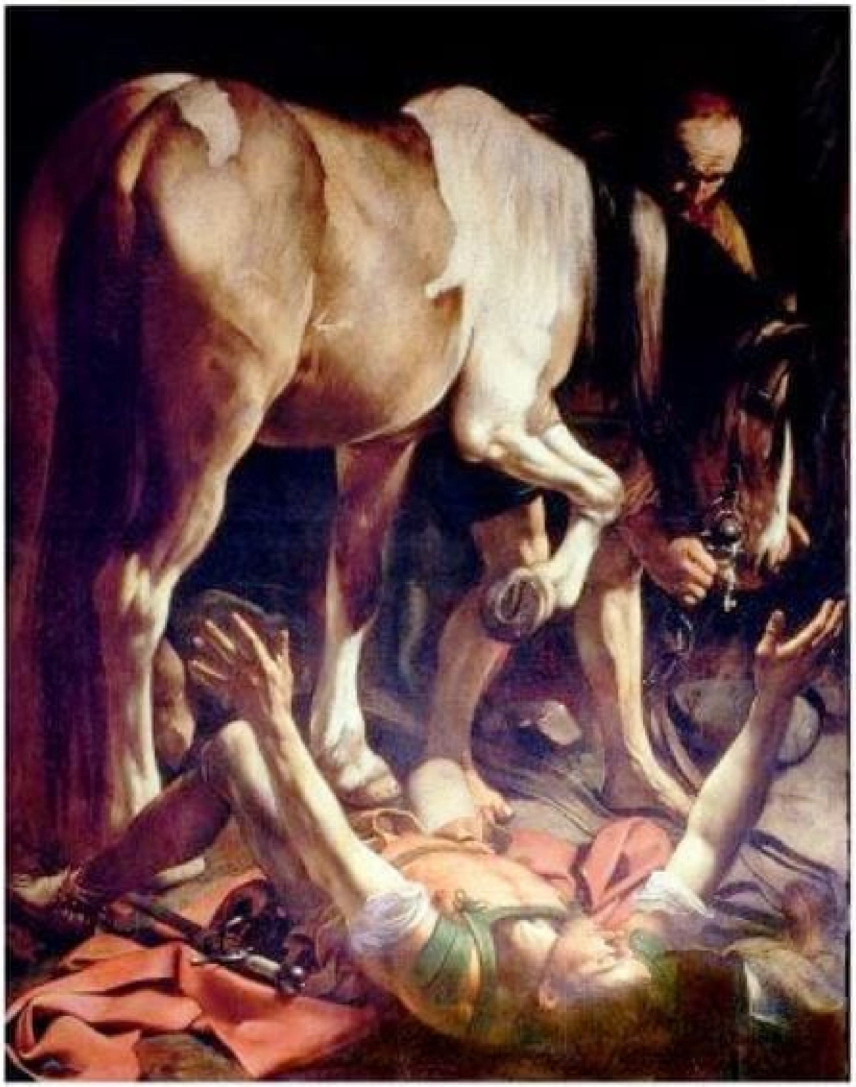
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 458-459.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/2d578-angel.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2HHURY7CJ7QN4&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577465035&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Carl Jung; Unless there is a personal religious experience – realising from the inside what it means – nothing happens. (2019-12-27 05:30)

[1]



[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Bollingen, 2nd July 1957

Arrived in Bollingen.

Very hot day, and I was tired from the journey.

We ad dinner by the lake; the plan is to bring the wooden table beside the lake, and everything is carried out by Ruth Bailey and me.

The Tower is an amazing place.

The entrance opens into a courtyard which has two exits, both with doors which bar; there is an outer space, also enclosed by a wall and by part of the house, and again a barred gate.

There is only one door into the house, as there is at the house in the Seestrasse, and this door is very heavy with an immensely strong lock and two yale locks.

The windows are all small and barred including those upstairs.

The hall leads to the kitchen; this is the base of the original tower which C.G. built in 1923.

Formerly the kitchen door was the main entrance to the house so it, too, is heavy with a very sturdy lock; the door leading upstairs to the study and the new room (built in 1956-57) can also be locked.

C.G. sleeps in the old tower, so he can be quite isolated.

If a robber entered through the front door he could still get no further unless he blew off the locks.

So it is like a fortress and quite mediaeval in character.

6th July 1957

At breakfast, speaking of concentration C.G. said he became so concentrated when he was writing that he did not notice simple interruptions.

Yesterday he had been writing in the morning for two hours when Ruth came to say it was time for lunch.

He was quite surprised, it was as if he had not been there, and as if he had not done any writing; it was all absorbed, all past.

I mentioned Coleridge and the man from Porlock interrupting him when he was writing Kubla Khan so that he could not continue.

At once C.G. asked, ‘What did the man want? What was his message?’

I did not know. ‘But that was very important’, C.G. went on, ‘it must have touched a complex – made a hole into the unconscious, and what he was writing disappeared.

Also we have to ask why such a person as Coleridge was up in the air with his feet off the ground.’

It was remarkable how he got straight to the point – to me a new one – and made the whole picture alive.

Speaking of ideas of God, he said he had had a Kantian training, and spoke of Ding an sich, God like that, not our idea of God, but God as something unknowable.

All over the world people have ideas of God, but these are their subjective ideas and not objective.

He said of good and evil that we must always have both, an upper implies a lower; the good implies the not-good as the light the shade.

Our subjective point of view was always just that, and we could not make dogmas from it.

Things are what they are, a tree is simply a tree; if we say it is a ‘good’ tree that implies our relationship to it but says nothing about the tree; it may be ‘bad’ for some other animal.

He has been writing about flying saucers, of which we know nothing; all we know is that something has been observed.

It might well come from Mars or some other source in space.

Two forms are described: one is circular and another cigar shaped; the latter could contain, as tablets in a tube, the former.

He mentioned a record in an old newspaper of which a few copies exist in the library in Zürich, and one has a picture exactly like those we see today.

Very few pictures exist although there are too many records to be dismissed as nothing.

We say things are ‘nonsense’ when they do not fit in with our generally accepted ideas.

But when people speak of something as ‘only imagination’ he points to cars or aeroplanes and says that before they were finally constructed they were ‘only imagination’, for imagination is something.

7th July 1957

After breakfast, sitting in the shade where we had the table, I spoke to C.G. about obsessions and their element of secrecy.

He agreed, and said that intuitive people were often asked, ‘What shall we do now?’ – they anticipate the future.

Following a remark made by C.G.'s son, Franz Jung, who arrived last night with two of his sons, I raised a question about people waking in a dream just before the climax, and suggested it was because they feared something in themselves.

C.G. said that it was often because something in their unconscious clashed with their accepted views.

He gave an example of a theologian who had come to him.

This man had a repetitive dream of being on a mountain; below was a wood, and in the wood a lake which he knew was there although he had not seen it.

In a later dream the image was carried further and the priest was in the wood and came to the lake.

There was a 'breath', a slight movement of the water by the breeze, and he woke very frightened.

'Well,' said C.G., 'that is a familiar theme, have you any associations?'

I asked what was familiar, and he said it was like the stirring of the waters in the story in the Bible; it meant that the man could be cured, or that a cure was possible, but it would mean giving up his theological views, or altering them, and this he feared to do.

He went on to speak of the natives in Africa – they had a natural psychology.

During his visit to Mount Elgon he had noticed how accurately the natives, among whom he spent some time, observed the characteristics of people in his party.

He was himself always careful of his emotions, and was reserved and kept something back; so they respected him and regarded him as old and wise.

He was fifty but his hair was white, and therefore (as their hair is never white except in very old age) they thought he was about a hundred years old.

They would bring him their dreams and ask if they were favourable or not; if the dreams were unfavourable they would not move that day.

I mentioned that the manifestations of hysteria had changed; for example in India and Burma the Indians got the classical hysterical symptoms and the British did not.

He said it was the same here, people hardly ever got the old hysterical symptoms nowadays.

C.G. had been reading a paper by a Mr. Routh (Fellow of All Souls) on the possibility of a new Reformation.

This article was very good, he said; but it missed the really important point – that a reformation cannot come from historical research or such parallels but only from the heart of individual experience.

So it must be today, an event springing from the present time.

The teaching of the past, for example of St. Paul or of Jesus, can be edifying, but in itself does nothing; Paul himself had a sudden revelation.

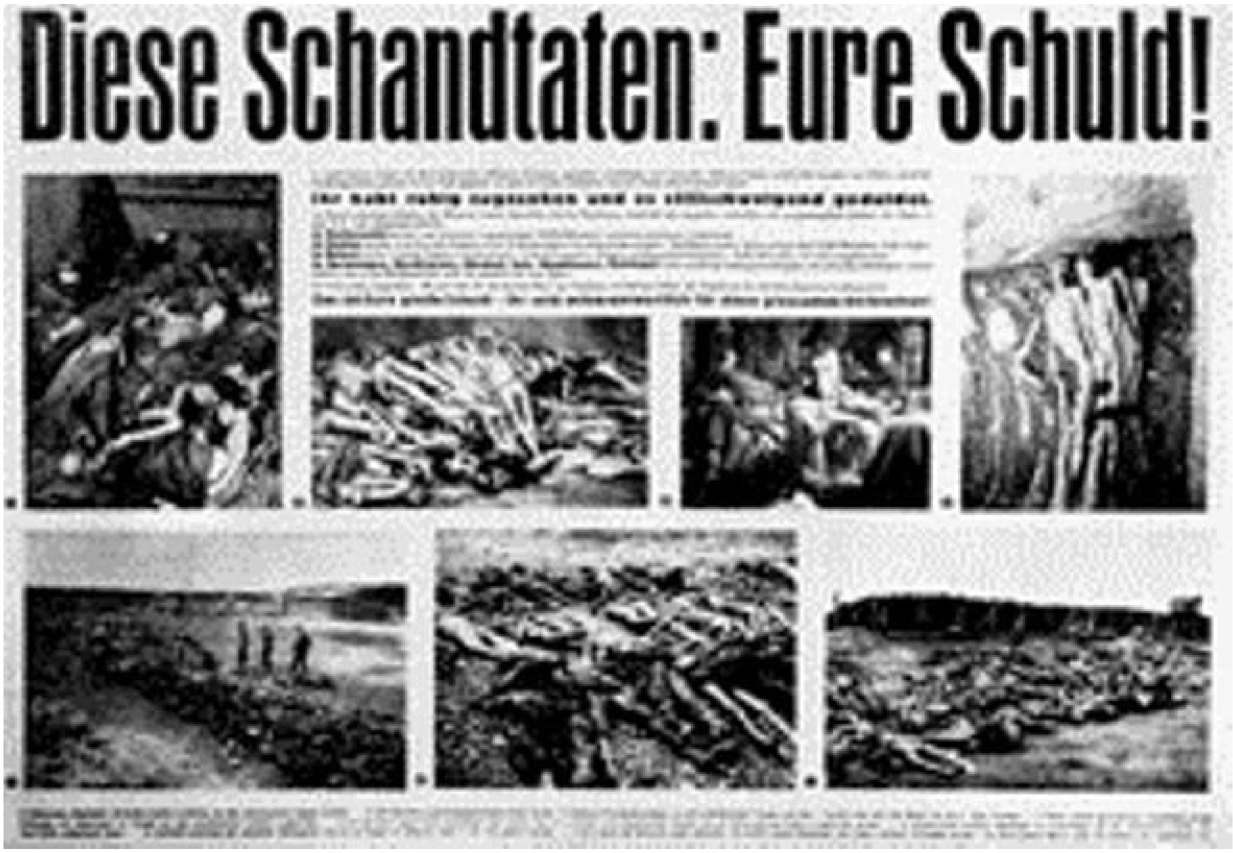
Unless there is a personal religious experience – realising from the inside what it means – nothing happens.

Such an experience can take many forms, for instance falling in love; anything which is really lived. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 230-267

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/7772c-452bbennet.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?crid=TZTZJF32C6FQ&keywords=carl+jung+bennet+conversations&qid=157`

Carl Jung on Collective Guilt (2019-12-27 05:32)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Hermann Ullmann

Dear Dr. Ullmann, 25 May 1945

As you correctly surmise, the text of the interview was not submitted to me before publication.

As is regularly the case nowadays, apparently, the interviewer prints only what he understands, putting everything in black and white and suppressing a number of vitally important conditional or parenthetical remarks.

Unfortunately the crucial concept of collective guilt was left hanging in midair-this seems to have created the greatest furor.

Germany’s collective guilt consists in the fact that it was undoubtedly the Germans who started the war and committed the unspeakable atrocity of the concentration camps.

In so far as they were Germans and such things happened inside the German frontier, all Germans are befouled.

Furthermore, all Europeans are besmirched by these happenings since they took place on European soil.

This collective guilt is not a moral or a judicial construction but a psychological fact which in itself is irrational; in other words, if these things had happened in Switzerland and I crossed the French frontier with a Swiss passport and the French official remarked affably "Oh un cochon de Suisse," I would regard it as natural and logical.

One only wishes the Germans could take this to heart and not commit the tactical blunder of insisting in and out of season that nobody knew of the concentration camps and nobody could have done anything about them, etc.

It is and remains a fact that these things happened in Germany and that it was Germans who did them.

Obviously we all know that there were also people in Germany who suffered under these things and fought against them.

But it is important that the Germans in general should admit their guilt and not foist it off on others.

They have even ventured to assert that the English are to blame for the concentration camps because they did not stop Hitler's coming to power.

As to the psychopathic inferiority of the Germans, such happenings betray an alarmingly high degree of instability.

10 % is putting it very low.

I reckon with the same percentage among the Swiss.

I wish you, as an outsider, could have attended German, French, English, and American congresses, to mention only one of the possible forms of social contact.

There you could have made a collection of weird and wonderful experiences.

What one then experienced in the way of tactlessness, crudity, rudeness, etc. from the German side counterbalanced the no doubt amiable qualities of many Germans.

For 30 years we have experienced nothing but Germany's threat to her neighbours or shameful violation of them, or else her wails for understanding.

They were supposed either to knuckle under to Germany or understand and love her.

But what is Germany's duty to Europe?

"Collective guilt" raises just this question: What is Germany's debt to Europe after everything she has done in these years?

That is what Europe wants to hear from Germany.

It is therefore impossible for the individual German simply to shake off this obligation by laying the blame on others, for instance the wicked Nazis.

Nor can we Europeans shake off the German atrocities in the eyes of Indians or Americans.

So if a Pueblo Indian should one day say to me "You Europeans are worse than ravaging beasts," I would have to agree politely, for in no circumstances should I win his just estimation by shaking off from the start every trace of complicity.

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 368-370.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/a597a-2.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2HHURY7CJ7QN4&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577465035&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Carl Jung on “Could such a girl….be helped to find her true self? (2019-12-27 05:51)

[1]

Lecture 2

Questions and Discussion

Dr. Shaw's question: "Could such a case as the girl you spoke of last Monday, if properly analyzed, be helped to find her true self, something midway between her superior unconscious personification and her inferior persona, and if so, would she, do you think, have been spared the pathetic death of such a regression?

"In such a case could you explain how the mediatory function could be created?

Is it correct to call it a creation, a new thing formed from the opposites?"

Dr. Jung: Certainly the girl would have been spared much by analysis, and her development could have been a much smoother one.

The point of analysis is the making conscious of unconscious contents in order to avoid such mistakes.

As to the mediatory function, the principle can be explained very well by such a case.

In order to explain it we need the principle of the opposites.

The girl in question lived in a milieu that was too narrow for her gifts, and she could find in it no horizon, her environment being conspicuous for its insufficiency in ideas; it was narrow-minded and meager in every sense. Her unconscious, on the other hand, presented exactly the reverse picture.

There she was surrounded by the ghosts of very important people.

Such a tension as these two extremes induce is the basis of the mediatory function.

She tried to live it out through her mediumistic circle and to find there the chance to come out of the impasse in which she lived.

And so the tension between her real life and her unreal life increased.

In reality she was, as I said, a little midinette; in her séances she was a person fit to associate with great minds.

When such an opposition as that occurs, something must happen to bring things together.

It is a situation that is always difficult to handle.

If, for example, I had told her she was an important person in her unconscious, I might have started up a wrong fantasy system in her, the best way for her to meet her problem having been to get into life and do something.

Thus I may be told that I am a big man, and told that by a thousand people, but I can't believe it unless I can put myself to the test and accomplish something.

In her case this was difficult to achieve, for there was always the danger that, in disentangling herself from the false elements in the unconscious fantasies, she might also lose connection with the desirable things and thus lose belief in herself.

The analyst can never be sure that in making the patient throw away a wrong form, he is not going to throw away the contained value.

For this girl, the operation of the mediatory function seems to have followed this order:

First she began speaking of ghosts, then she began to be in contact with the "ghost" of the grandfather, who had been a sort of family god.

The grandfather's way had been the right way, and whatever came from him was exalted.

Then Goethe and all sorts of great people came into her fantasies.

And finally there was developed the important personality with which she identified herself.

It was as though each of the great personages had left a deposit in her out of which grew her greater personality.

As you know, Plato laid down the principle that it is impossible to look at something ugly without taking something of it into the soul, and it is equally impossible to be in contact with what is beautiful without reacting to it.

Something of the sort happened to the girl.

The figure which she developed is the mediatory symbol.

It is the living form into which she slowly developed.

Thus there is created an attitude which liberates from the pairs of opposites.

She detached herself from the cheapness of her surroundings on the one hand, and on the other from the ghosts which did not belong to her.

One could say that nature working alone works along the lines of the mediatory or transcendent function, but one has to admit that sometimes nature works against us and brings the wrong personality into reality, so to speak.

Our prisons and hospitals are full of people with whom nature has been experimenting to unhappy ends.

Mrs. Dunham: Why did the girl revert to the condition of a child?

Dr. Jung: It was due to the fading of her libido, which contracted more and more following prematurely the ordinary life curve which tends always to show the maintenance of a certain tension.

In youth the libido fills out a frame of generous proportions, while in old age it contracts to a much smaller amplitude.

Going back to the transcendent function, on the one side are to be found the real facts, on the other the imagination.

This brings about the two poles.

In the case of the girl, the ghosts went much too far on the side of imagination, and the reality side was much too small.

When she put herself into reality she was a first-rate tailoress.

Fantasy is the creative function—the living form is a result of fantasy.

Fantasy is a pre-stage of the symbol, but it is an essential characteristic of the symbol that it is not mere fantasy.

We count upon fantasy to take us out of the impasse; for though people are not always eager to recognize the conflicts that are upsetting their lives, the dreams are always at work trying to tell on the one hand of the conflict, and on the other hand of the creative fantasy that will lead the way out.

Then it becomes a matter of bringing the material into consciousness.

One admits that one is in an impasse and gives free rein to the fantasy, but at the same time, the conscious must keep control in order to have a check on the tendency of nature to experiment.

That is to say, one has to keep in mind that the unconscious can produce something disastrous to us.

But on the other hand, one must be careful not to prescribe to the unconscious—it may be that a new way is required, and even one beset with disaster.

Life often demands the trying out of new ways that are entirely unacceptable to the time in which we live, but we cannot shrink from undertaking a new way for that reason.

Luther, for example, was forced into a way of life that seemed almost criminal, viewed by the standards of his time.

Dr. de Angulo's questions: (1) "When you read Schopenhauer for the first time, you rejected the viewpoint through which he has most influenced the world, namely his negation of life, and chose instead the one in which he leans toward a purposive principle in life.

At the time you were making that choice, the main current of philosophic thought must have been in direct opposition to it.

I would like to know more about why you made the choice that you did.

Had you a leaning that way before you read Schopenhauer, or did Schopenhauer formulate that conception for you for the first time?

Did your observations of the girl help you to understand Schopenhauer's argument, or did he explain the girl to you, or did it work both ways?"

(2) “It is not clear to me whether you believed that the purposive principle which you thought could be traced out in the workings of the unconscious was something that applied to the life of the individual alone, or whether it was a part of a general purposive principle that directs the universe from behind the scenes, so to speak.”

(3) “I understood you to say that it is a general psychological law that the attainment of a higher level of development is always at the cost of some apparently terrible mistake.

I take it for granted that the analytical experience enables one to avoid the mistake, but substitutes for it the principle of sacrifice.

Is that correct?”

Dr. Jung:

(1) From Schopenhauer I first got the idea of the universal urge of will, and the notion that this might be purposive.

It helped me very much in working out the problem the girl presented, because I thought I could trace clearly in her signs of something working in the unconscious toward a goal.

(2) I became interested in the nature of the unconscious and asked myself if it were blind.

This I could answer with no, it is generally purposive.

But if one asks if the unconscious is the world or if it is psychology, then the question becomes ticklish.

It was not possible for me to think of the brain as the background of the universe, and so I did not extend the purposive principle to the universe.

But now I have had to modify my viewpoint with respect to the relation between the unconscious and the universe.

If I think of the question purely intellectually I still say what I said before.

But there is another way of looking at it—that is, we can ask, “Is there a need in us to satisfy these metaphysical problems?”

How can we arrive at a suitable answer to this question?

The intellect denies itself before the task.

But there is another way of tackling it.

Suppose, for example, we are concerned with a certain historical problem.

If I had five hundred years at my disposal I could solve it.

Well now, I have within myself a “man” who is millions of years old, and he perhaps can throw light on these metaphysical problems.

If we put these things up to the unconscious, when we get the view that suits the “old man” things go right.

If I am holding views that are out of keeping with the unconscious, they are certain to make me ill, and so it is safe for me to assume that they contradict some main current in the universe.

Does this answer suit you, Dr. de Angulo?

Dr. de Angulo: I think I understand what you mean by it, but I can’t accept it.

Dr. Jung: Shall we argue it further?

Dr. de Angulo: No.

Dr. Jung: Then as to your third question, I would not go so far as to say we can avoid all mistakes by analysis, otherwise one could analyze life instead of living.

One should be willing to make mistakes cheerfully.

The most perfect analysis cannot prevent error.

Sometimes you must go into error; moreover, the moral things in you cannot come out until you give them a chance.

The recognition of truth cannot come to daylight till you have given yourself a chance to err.

I believe firmly in the role that darkness and error play in life.

When analysis is based on a sound technique it surely does take one not only out of night into day, but the other way around also.

It is perfectly true you can substitute a sacrifice for some grotesque nonsense or other.

Dr. Mann’s question: “If Nietzsche had been able or willing to make the ideal of Zarathustra real in his own life, would the book ever have been written?”

Dr. Jung: I believe the book would certainly have been written in any case, because there is a tremendous urge in a creative mind to get the product of the fantasy down in some relatively permanent form in order to hold it.

Thus practically all peoples have made idols in order to give permanence and concretization to their ideals.

One might say that every symbol seeks to be concretized.

With this in mind, when we read in the Old Testament that it was engraved upon the stone, “Up to here God has helped us, ”we know that it was done in the effort to hold on to the faith that had brought them that far. Egypt had pyramids and embalming in order to concretize the principle of immortality.

In the same way, Nietzsche felt the need to materialize his symbol.

That is the regular course of events.

One first creates the symbol and then one says to oneself, “How does this thing happen?” or “What does it mean to me?”

This, to be sure, requires a strongly reflective mind which most artists have not got, but which Nietzsche did have to a high degree.

The artist in general, when he has not got the reflective mind, wants to get away from his work as soon as possible.

He especially wants to get away from the image and hates to talk about it.

Thus Spitteler, soon after Types appeared, gave a lecture in which he cursed the people who want to understand symbols; the Olympische Frühling, according to him, has no symbolic meaning, and if you seek for one in it, it is just as if you tried to get symbolism out of the song whistled by a bird.

Of course, Spitteler is loaded with symbolism; the only thing is that he does not want to see it, and in fact the artist is often actually afraid to see it and to know what his work means.

Analysis is fatal to second-rate artists, but that should be a feather in its cap. In analysis, or in an analyzed person, only something big comes through, whereas it is the tendency of our times to make it easy for every little cat or worm to be born into the art world.

Everyone who uses a brush is an artist, everyone who uses a pen is a writer.

Analysis puts such “artists” out of the running, it is poison to them.

Dr. Gordon:6 What is the person who brings forth “cats” and “worms” to think of them?

Dr. Jung: He is to think that his is a hard life when, after a day of work, he must still labor over such things.

This is a burden imposed upon him by his unconscious, but he must not mix up the products thus created with art.

Lecture

The fact that convinced me of the truth of Freud’s theory was the evidence of repressions which I could find in my association experiments.

Patients could not respond to certain tests where pain entered in, and when I asked why they could not respond to the stimulus word, they always said they did not know why, but when they said this it was always in a peculiar, artificial manner.

I said to myself that this must be the thing that Freud described as repression.

Practically all the mechanisms of repression became clear in my experiments.

As to the content of the repression, I could not agree with Freud.

In those days he was speaking only of sexual trauma and shocks to explain the repression.

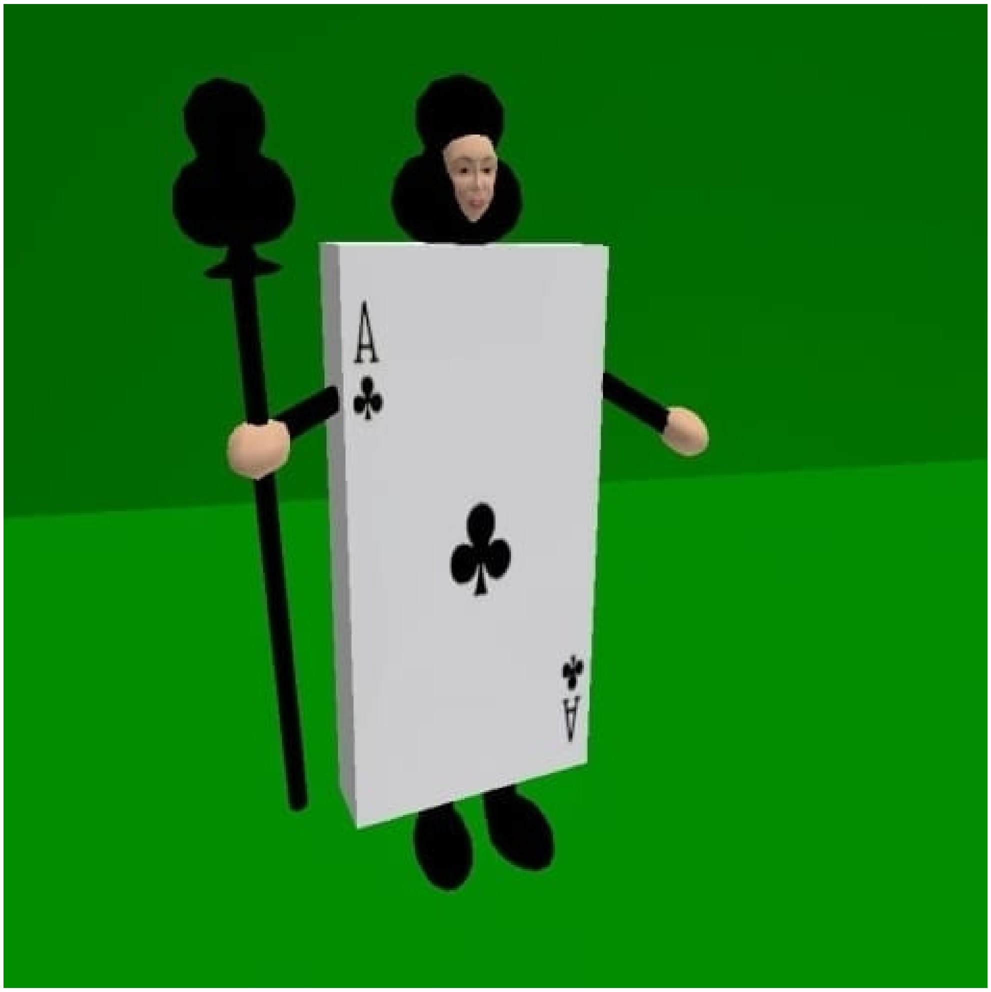
I had had then considerable experience with cases of neurosis in which sexual things were of quite secondary importance compared with the role played by social adaptation.

The case of the mediumistic girl, for example, was one such. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 9-14

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/8ae2c-6girl.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=130F37057LLYB&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=15774653`

Wolfgang Pauli: I do hope that my questions won’t put you to too much trouble. (2019-12-28 03:30)

[1]



[2]Atom and Archetype: The Pauli/Jung Letters, 1932-1958

Dear Professor Jung, 28 November 1936

I recently received your letter and most interesting essay.

I am pleased that you have been able to make so much use of my material.

I couldn't help smiling a little when you praised it so much, thinking to myself that it was the first time I had ever heard you address me in such a way.

I was personally amazed to learn how many parallels to the later development are already to be found in these early dreams.

And yet I read it as if it were a report from far-off days.

By way of my contribution to the parallels mentioned, I would like to mention just one point where I had the feeling that your dream interpretation was not entirely accurate. (As you can see, I still won’t be "fobbed off" with just anything.)

I am referring to the interpretation of the seven and the ace of club in lines 13 and 16.

These two dreams have both a retrospective and a futural meaning.

In my seventh year my sister was born.

So the 7 is an indication of the birth of the anima.

(This appeared again in later dreams.)

I can also offer further evidence of the connection for me between the anima and number 7.

In a much later dream, the card with the 7 of diamonds came up, and it looked like this:

X X
X X X
X X

And then the "wise man" in the dream explained to me that this also meant M and referred to Mother and Mary,

And he said that the step from the personified Mary to the 7 of diamonds went much further than Catholicism (which fits in beautifully with your interpretation of "expelling" as excommunication) .

N,B. The diamond card is also a reference to the color of the sun, As for the ace of clubs, I am sure you are correct in relating it to the shape of the cross, but for me there does not seem to be such a direct connection to the Christian concept of God as there is for you.

In my view, this ace of clubs, which comes before the seven, is thus the "Origin of the birth of the anima," an indication of a Keplerian archetype of power, which appears much later as "Diocletian,· "Danton,· or "the duke who chases the maid.” (By the way: this interpretation also fits in with the retrospective meaning of the dream-and with the dark color of the club.)

What also struck me was Dream II, with the croquet ball that an smashes the mirror into pieces.

The mirror is, I feel, not just the intellect but consciousness in general.

The croquet ball reminds me of the wasp flying by and the smashing of the minor makes me think of the wasp’s sting (the wasp’s venom is always meant as inflationary, causing blindness).

One could say a lot about the cosmic aspect of the "Self" and the space-time problem that is bound up with it, but I don’t want this letter to get too long.

Instead, I am going to write out a dream that I had immediately after reading your essay, so that you can see how my unconscious reacted to it (see enclosure).

It is also connected with the problems mentioned in my last dream

Thank you also for your last letter (of 14-X-35).’

I would like to hear sometime what you think about the collection of dreams (in the material 1 sent to you earlier), in which the dark anima asserts with a certain persistence that there is a "magical" connection between sexuality and eroticism on the one hand, and political or historical events on the other.

This is the aspect of the anima frequently represented in dreams as "Chinese."

I believe that there is also a connection with the workings of the Self that appears in the enclosed dream and which is represented as "diffraction of the molecular rays in the polar field" (see my last letter).

1 do hope that my questions won’t put you to too much trouble.

Actually, 1 have spent very little time recently on dreams and the unconscious, and only rarely do I write my dreams down.

I am generally in good health, and things seem to be fairly stable in that respect.

Breaking away from you and from analysis made things rather difficult for me for a while, but that seems to be allover now.

Once again, many thanks for your essay and the trouble you have taken.

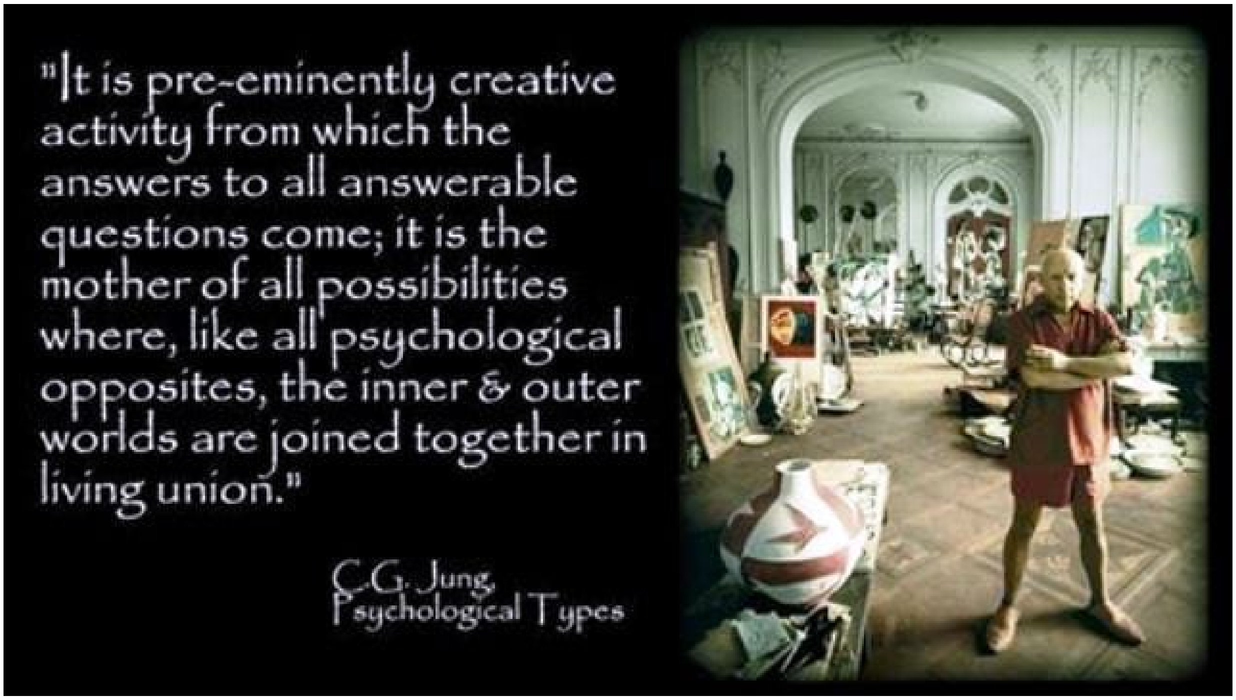
With best wishes,

Yours sincerely, W. PAULI Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 15-16

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/e7c15-12bclubs.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Atom-Archetype-Letters-1932-1958-Updated/dp/069116147X/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2A3UCNPO7NVDS&keywords=atom+and+archetype+the+pauli%2Fjung+letters`

Carl Jung: The psyche creates reality every day. (2019-12-28 03:30)

[1]



"It is pre-eminently creative activity from which the answers to all answerable questions come; it is the mother of all possibilities where, like all psychological opposites, the inner & outer worlds are joined together in living union."

C.G. Jung,
Psychological Types

[2]Psychological Types (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Vol. 6)

This autonomous activity of the psyche, which can be explained neither as a reflex action to sensory stimuli nor as the executive organ of eternal ideas, is, like every vital process, a continually creative act.

The psyche creates reality every day.

The only expression I can use for this activity is fantasy.

Fantasy is just as much feeling as thinking; as much intuition as sensation.

There is no psychic function that, through fantasy, is not inextricably bound up with the other psychic functions.

Sometimes it appears in primordial form, sometimes it is the ultimate and boldest product of all our faculties combined.

Fantasy, therefore, seems to me the clearest expression of the specific activity of the psyche.

It is, pre-eminently, the creative activity from which the answers to all answerable questions come; it is the mother of all possibilities, where, like all psychological opposites, the inner and outer worlds are joined together in living union.

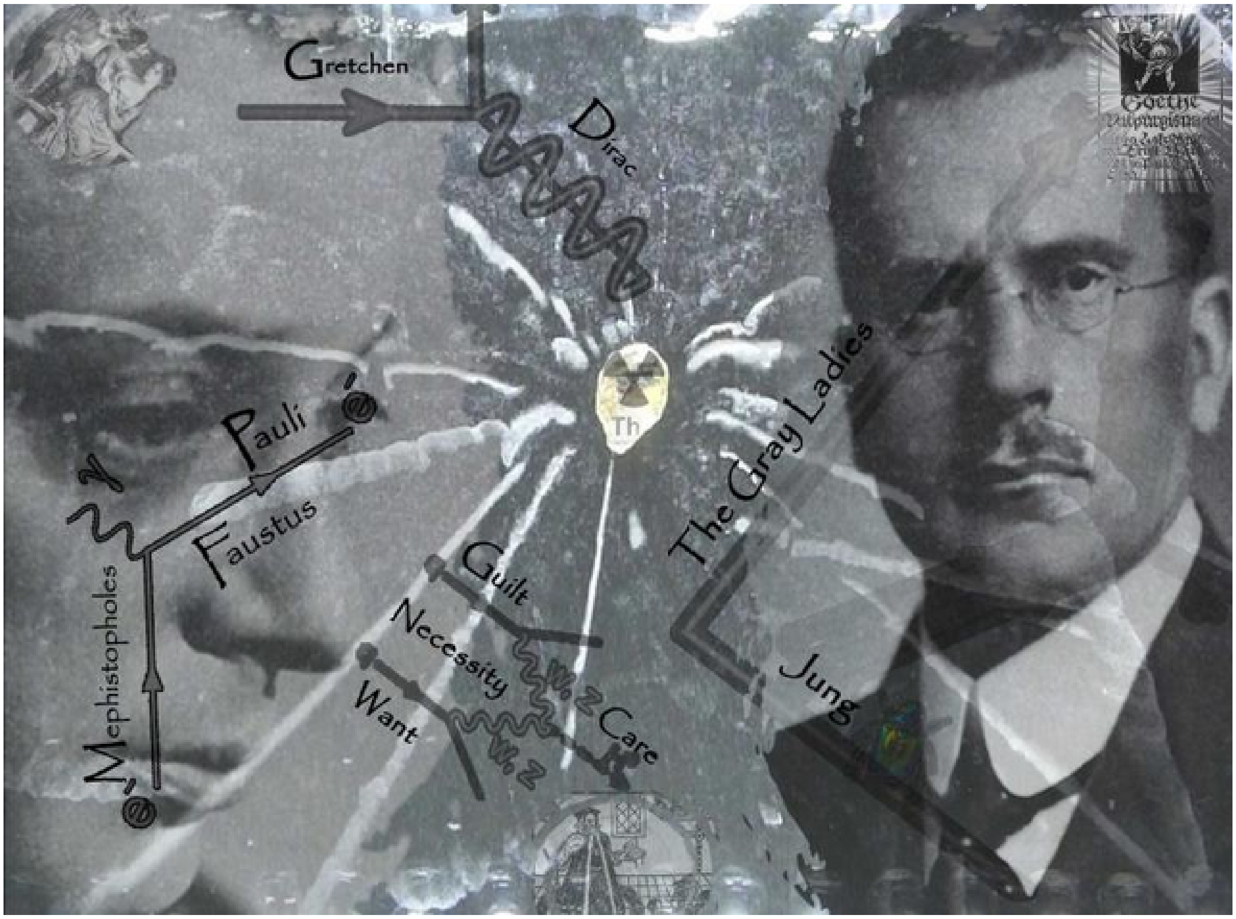
Fantasy it was and ever is which fashions the bridge between the irreconcilable claims of subject and object, introversion and extraversion.

In fantasy alone both mechanisms are united. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 78.

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/2964f-22bacting.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/Psychological-Types-Collected-Works-Bollingen/dp/0691018138/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=jung+types&qid=1577527255&sr=8-1

Wolfgang Pauli and Alchemy (2019-12-28 03:30)

[1]



Gretchen
Dirac
Goethe
Th
The Gray Ladies
Pauli
Faustus
Mephistopholes Guilt
Necessity Want
W, Z
W, Z
Care
Jung

[2]Atom and Archetype: The Pauli/Jung Letters, 1932-1958

Dear Professor Jung, July 26, 1937

I would just like to say a brief word of thanks for sending me your book on alchemy.

It was bound to be of great interest to me, both as a scientist and also in the light of my personal dream experiences.

These have shown me that even the most modem physics also lends itself to the symbolic representation of psychic processes, even down to the last detail.

Of course, nothing is further from the thoughts of modem man than the idea of penetrating the secrets of matter in this way, for he would actually rather use these symbols to penetrate the secrets of the soul, since it seems to him that, relatively speaking less research has been done on the soul and it is less familiar than matter.

But perhaps there is a lesson to be learned from alchemy's mistake attributing to the lapis the ability to help in the manufacture of genuine gold.

For it seems to me important for us, too, not to attach any particular expectations of external, material success to the formation of the central symbol.

This appears to be very closely connected with the "epilogue" of your treatise, where you touch on the questions of imputing psychic contents to the ego and the risk of the inflation of consciousness.

Maybe the alchemists' idea that they could really make gold by using the lapis cao be seen can expression of such an inflation of consciousness.

By way of contrast the expectations of external, material success are given up expectations that are initially connected with the appearance of the central symbol-then other fantasies emerge in the course of time, and they are concerned with the death of the individual and the meaning of death.

And it might possibly be that the rejuvenation of Faust, which only came about in a postmortem state, would be right, sub specie aeternitatis, for the individuated individual, if not for the history of civilization in general; this would be the case insofar as the death of the individual is always, in a certain sense, a historically conditioned necessity for this individual is also constantly subjected to such psychic influences, which in in his lifetime could not be fully assimilated into consciousness.

If the reverse were the case there would be something incomplete about the individual life.

As far as individually mentioned symbols in your treatise are concerned, what particularly struck me, in addition to the Christ-lapis parallel, is the evaluation of the Sacrifice of the Mass by the alchemists.

The former is quite analogous to my experience that the central symbol can be represented both as an acting person and an abstract one (as a "radioactive nucleus").

As for the transformation and communion symbols, they are also very familiar to me as representing certain stages in the spiritual transformation in the individuation process.

I look forward with great interest to your further investigations into this process and am somewhat hopeful that they also might lead to the discovery of dynamic laws about the chronological sequence of the various phases.

Once again, my thanks and best wishes,

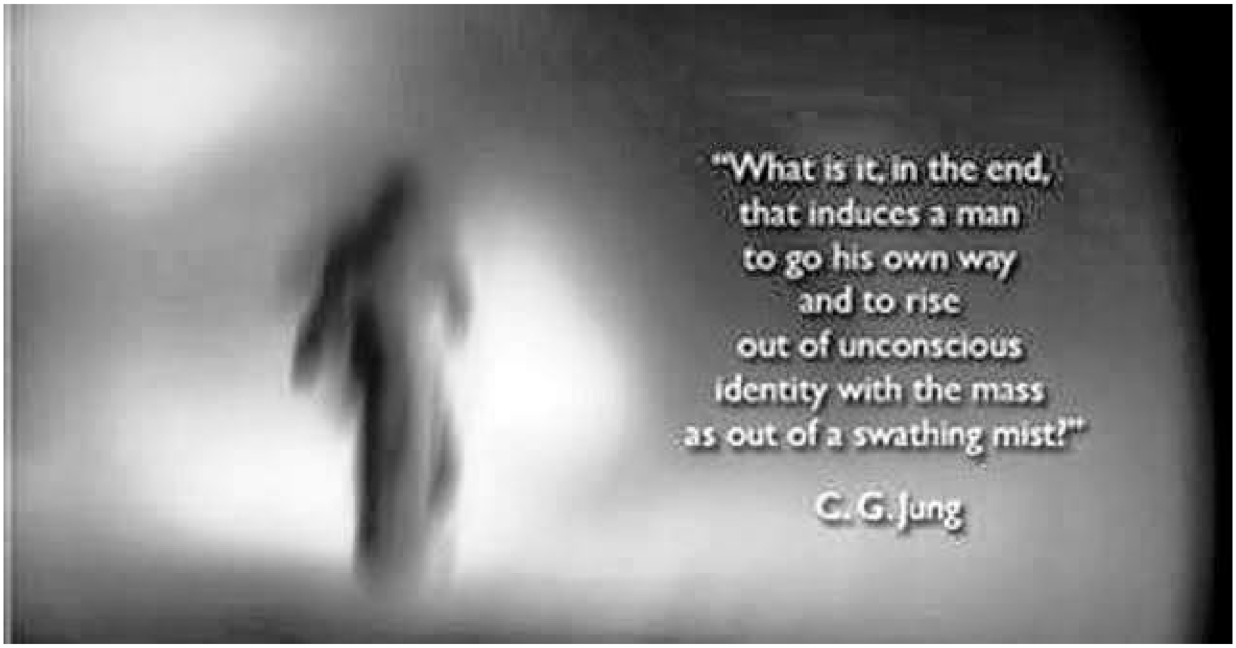
Yours sincerely,

W, PAULI Carl Jung, Atom and Archetype, Pages 18-19

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/fe257-12bpauli.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/2019/12/28/carl-jung-and-a-tough-and-coldblooded-extraversion/`

Carl Jung and “Individuation is by no means a rare thing or a luxury of the few…” (2019-12-28 04:19)

[1]



“What is it, in the end,
that induces a man
to go his own way
and to rise
out of unconscious identity with the mass
as out of a swathing mist?”
C. G. Jung

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Erlo van Waveren

Dear Mr. van Waveren, 25 September 1946

It has taken a very long time until I was able to get so far in my correspondence that I could answer your letter.

One could say that the whole world with its turmoil and misery is in an individuation process.

But people don’t know it, that’s the only difference.

If they knew it, they would not be at war with each other, because whosoever has the war inside himself has no time and pleasure to fight others.

Individuation is by no means a rare thing or a luxury of the few, but those who know that they are in such a process are considered to be lucky.

They get something out of it, provided they are conscious enough.

Of course it is a question whether you can stand such a procedure.

But this is the question with life too.

Millions of people couldn’t stand it, as you know from recent events.

Individuation is just ordinary life and what you are made conscious of.

If anybody should marvel at it, he must have been unprepared for what life holds in store for everybody.

My best wishes!

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 442.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/a6d2b-2.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2R7O3A9AMFMDV&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577526938&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Carl Jung: Children have an almost uncanny instinct for the teacher’s personal shortcomings.

(2019-12-28 04:23)

[1]Civilization in Transition (The Collected Works of C. G. Jung, Volume 10)

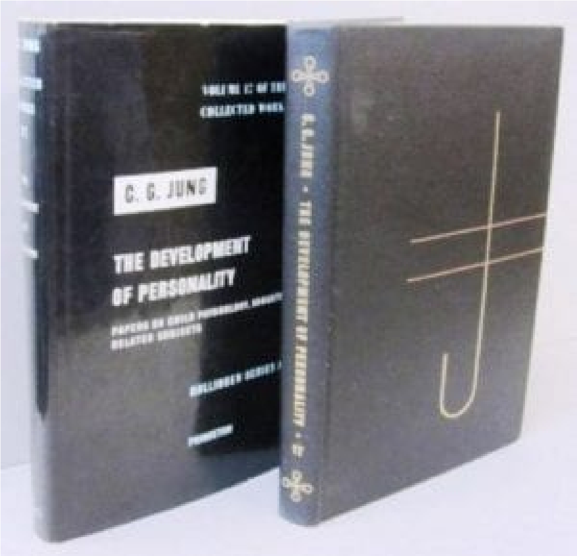
Children have an almost uncanny instinct for the teacher’s personal shortcomings.

They know the false from the true far better than one likes to admit.

Therefore the teacher should watch his own psychic condition, so that he can spot the source of the trouble when anything goes wrong with the children entrusted to his care.

He himself may easily be the unconscious cause of evil.

Naturally we must not be too naive in this matter there are people, doctors as well as teachers, who secretly believe that a person in authority has the right to behave just as he likes, and that it is up to the child to adapt as best he may, because sooner or later he will have to adapt to real life which will treat him no better.

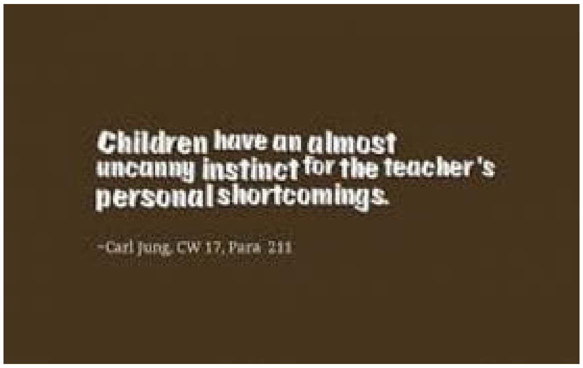


C. G. JUNG
THE DEVELOPMENT OF PERSONALITY
C.G.JUNG · THE DEVELOPMENT OF PERSONALITY

Such people are convinced at heart that the only thing that matters is material success, and that the only real and effective moral restraint is the policeman behind the penal code.

No doubt we are right to open the eyes and ears of our young people to the wide world, but it is the maddest of delusions to think that this really equips them for the task of living.

It is the kind of training that enables a young person to adapt himself outwardly to the world and reality, but no one gives a thought to the necessity of adapting to the self, to the powers of the psyche, which are far mightier than all the Great Powers of the earth.



Children have an almost uncanny instinct for the teacher's personal shortcomings.

~Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 211

A system of education does indeed exist, but it has its origins partly in antiquity and partly in the early Middle Ages.

It styles itself the Christian Church.

But it cannot be denied that in the course of the last two centuries Christianity, no less than Confucianism in China and Buddhism in India, has largely forfeited its educative activity.

Human iniquity is not to blame for this, but rather a gradual and widespread spiritual change, the first symptom of which was the Reformation.

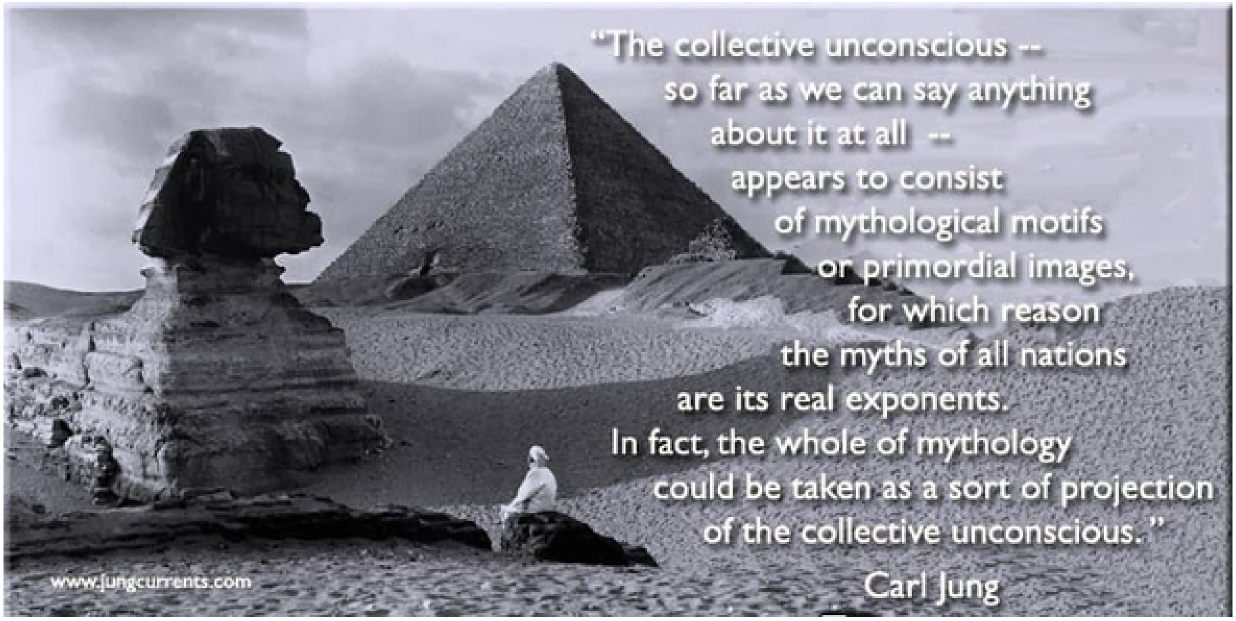
It shattered the authority of the Church as a teacher, and thereafter the authoritarian principle itself began to crumble away.

The inevitable consequence was an increase in the importance of the individual, which found expression in the modern ideals of humanity, social welfare, democracy, and equality. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 326

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Civilization-Transition-Collected-Works-Jung/dp/0691097623/ref=sr_1_1?crid=CZC33MP60WQL&keywords=jung+civilization+in+transition&qid=1577`

Carl Jung “Collective Unconscious” – Anthology (2019-12-28 04:30)

[1]



"The collective unconscious --
so far as we can say anything about it at all -- appears to consist of mythological motifs
or primordial images,
for which reason
the myths of all nations
are its real exponents.
In fact, the whole of mythology
could be taken as a sort of projection of the collective unconscious."
Carl Jung
www.jungcurrents.com

The collective unconscious is the foundation of life, the eternal truth of life, the eternal basis and the eternal goal. It is the endless sea from which life originates and into which life flows back, and it remains forever the same. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 380.

Just as the father represents collective consciousness, the traditional spirit, so the mother stands for the collective unconscious, the source of the water of life. Carl Jung, Psychology and Alchemy, Page 71.

Our unconscious is surely located in the body, and you mustn't think this a contradiction to the statement I usually make, that the collective unconscious is everywhere; for if you could put yourself into your sympathetic system, you would know what sympathy is-you would understand why the nervous system is called sympathetic. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Pages 749-751.

We can never enter the collective unconscious but we can send the anima or animus to bring us information. By making things with your hands without conscious intent you find a vision of the things of the unconscious. Carl Jung, The Cornwall Seminar, Page 26.

Small children are very old; later on we soon grow younger. In our middle age we are youngest, precisely at the time when we have completely or almost completely lost contact with the collective unconscious, the samskaras. We grow older again only as with the mounting years we remember the samskaras anew. Carl Jung, The Psychology of Kundalini Yoga, Appendix 1, Page 74.

Children are in the collective unconscious until they acquire a small consciousness of their personality, until they say "I," or "me," or their name. They are rooted in the collective unconscious and are uprooted from it by the flood of impressions from the outside. They know everything, but they lose the memory of it. C. G. Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff - A Collection of Remembrances; Pages 51-70.

He said that it was not the least important whether I accomplished anything outwardly in this life since my one task was to contribute to the evolution of the collective unconscious. Robert Johnson, C. G. Jung, Emma Jung and Toni Wolff - A Collection of Remembrances; Pages 36-39.

Where one is identified with the collective unconscious, there is no recognition of the things which come from the unconscious, they cannot be distinguished from those of the self. Such a condition is a possession by the anima or animus. Possession by the animus or anima creates a certain psychological hermaphroditism. The principle of individuation demands a dissociation or differentiation of the male and the female in ourselves. We must dissociate our self from the unconscious. Carl Jung, Cornwall Seminar, Page 26.

These fantasy-images undoubtedly have their closest analogues in mythological types. We must therefore assume that they correspond to certain collective (and not personal) structural elements of the human psyche.... These cases are so numerous that we are obliged to assume the existence of a collective psychic substratum. I have called this the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, CW 9I, para. 262.

The collective unconscious is common to all; it is the foundation of what the ancients called the 'sympathy of all things'. Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 138.

Whenever contents of the collective unconscious become activated, they have a disturbing effect on the conscious mind, and contusion ensues. If the activation is due to the collapse of the individual's hopes and expectations, there is a danger that the collective unconscious may take the place of reality. This state would be pathological. If, on the other hand, the activation is the result of psychological processes in the unconscious of the people, the individual may feel threatened or at any rate disoriented, but the resultant state is not pathological, at least so far as the individual is concerned. Nevertheless, the mental state of the people as a whole might well be compared to a psychosis. "The Psychological Foundation for the Belief in Spirits (1920). Carl Jung; CW 8: The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. P.595

The world of gods and spirits is truly 'nothing but' the collective unconscious inside me. Carl Jung; On 'The Tibetan Book of the Dead; CW 11; Page 857.

. . . poets . . . create from the very depths of the collective unconscious, voicing aloud what others only dream. Carl Jung; CW 6: 323.

The collective unconscious is simply Nature — and since Nature contains everything it also contains the unknown. ... So far as we can see, the collective unconscious is identical with Nature to the extent that Nature herself, including matter, is unknown to us. I have nothing against the assumption that the psyche is a quality of matter or matter the concrete aspect of the psyche, provided that 'psyche' is defined as the collective unconscious. Carl Jung; Letters, vol. 2, P 450

The God-image in man was not destroyed by the Fall but was only damaged and corrupted ('deformed'), and can be restored through God's grace. The scope of the integration is suggested by the descent of Christ's soul to hell, its work of redemption embracing even the dead. The psychological equivalent of this is the integration of the collective unconscious which forms an essential part of the individuation process. Carl Jung; Aion; Page 39; Para 72.

The great problems of life — sexuality, of course, among others — are always related to the primordial images of the collective unconscious. These images are really balancing or compensating factors which correspond with the problems life presents in actuality. This is not to be marveled at, since these images are deposits representing the accumulated experience of thousands of years of struggle for adaptation and existence. Psychological Types Ch. 5, p. 271

The mental state of the first years of life does not differ from the collective unconscious; it is a world rich of images. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 182.

Through his inner vision the prophet discerns from the needs of his time the helpful image in the collective unconscious and expresses it in the symbol: because it speaks out of the collective unconscious it speaks for everyone-le vrai mot de la situation! Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 59-63.

The human brain is the result of a long process of evolution, as is also the collective unconscious. The individual experience is woven in to this tissue, so it is of vital importance, where we come from, who our parents are, and what our early surroundings were. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 2, Page 179.

It is when we come to a summit in life that the archetypal symbols appear. These primeval pictures of human life form the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Pages 176-177.

Individuation is the transformational process of integrating the conscious with the personal and collective unconscious Carl Jung, Symbols of Transformation, Page 301.

This field is the collective unconscious where the treasure is hidden, the royal treasure in the sea. Carl Jung, ETH, Lecture XIII, Page 113.

In the collective unconscious the archetypes and the instincts are one and the same thing. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture IV 24 May 1935, Pages 213.

The Sambhoga-kaya corresponds exactly to the modern term collective unconscious; and the archetypal figures correspond to the Devatas of our text. ETH Lecture XIII 17Feb1939, Page 86.

The collective unconscious is a source in which all the past and all the future lie, it does not belong to the individual, but to mankind. Carl Jung, Lecture VI 2June1934, Page 113.

Nobody who finds himself on the road to wholeness can escape that characteristic suspension which is the meaning of crucifixion. For he will infallibly run into things that thwart and "cross" him: first, the thing he has no wish to be (the shadow); second, the thing he is not (the "other," the individual reality of the "You"); and third, his psychic non-ego (the collective unconscious). Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 470.

He [Jung] said that it was not the least important whether I accomplished anything outwardly in this life since my one task was to contribute to the evolution of the collective unconscious. Robert A. Johnson, J.E.T., Pages 36-39.

It [Music] expresses in sounds what fantasies and visions music express in Visual images...music represents the movement, development and transformation of motifs of the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 542.

Hence there is only one collective unconscious, which is everywhere identical with itself, from which everything psychic takes shape before it is Personalized, modified, assimilated, etc. by external influences. Carl Jung, Letters Volume I, Page 408.

It is not, however, the actual East we are dealing with but the collective unconscious which is omnipresent. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 87

The unconscious has first to be activated; then we must extricate ourselves, doubting all the things we have hitherto believed; then we can turn back and resume our place in the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 10.

The collective unconscious...appears to consist of mythological motifs or primordial images, for which reason the myths of all nations are its real exponents. Carl Jung, CW 8, Par. 325.

Astrology, like the collective unconscious with which psychology is concerned, consists of symbolic configurations: The "planets" are the gods, symbols of the powers of the unconscious. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 175.

It looks as if the collective character of the archetypes would manifest itself also in meaningful coincidences, i.e., as if the archetype (or the collective unconscious) were not only inside the individual, but also outside, viz. in one's environment, as if sender and percipient were in the same psychic space, or in the same time (in precognition cases). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 43-47.

The integration of the collective unconscious amounts roughly to taking cognizance of the world and adapting to it. This does not mean that one would have to learn to know the whole world, or that one must have lived in all climates and continents of the world. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 159.

It is an astonishing fact, indeed, that the collective unconscious seems to be in contact with nearly everything. There is of course no empirical evidence for such a generalization, but plenty of it for its indefinite extension. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 163-174

Your argument and the beautiful quotations make it very clear that Rilke drew from the same deep springs as I did-the collective unconscious. He as a poet or visionary, I as a psychologist and empiricist. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 381-382.

When you say that an experience of wholeness is the same as a "dynamic irruption of the collective unconscious," this is an indubitable error. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 456.

If I speak of the collective unconscious I don't assume it as a principle, I only give a name to the totality of observable facts, i.e., archetypes. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567

The starry vault of heaven is in truth the open book of cosmic projection, in which are reflected the mythologems, i.e., the archetypes. In this vision astrology and alchemy, the two classical functionaries of the psychology of the collective unconscious, join hands. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 195, Para 392.

I had killed my intellect, helped on to the deed by a personification of the collective unconscious, the little brown man with me. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 62

Why doesn't the inferior function come up at once? The inferior function is hooked up with the collective unconscious and has to come up first in the collective fantasies, which of course, in their first aspect, do not seem to be collective. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 68

When one gets an intuition of the collective unconscious, if there is any creative power in the individual a definite figure is formed, rather than that the material comes through in a fragmentary form. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 71

When an artist has a figure from the collective unconscious, he at once begins to play with it esthetically, and usually makes some concretization of it as a monument, etc. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 71

As a natural scientist, thinking and sensation were uppermost in me and intuition and feeling were in the unconscious and contaminated by the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 75

If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation. The archetypes are sources of energy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

When it comes to the rather delicate task of locating the collective unconscious, you must not think of it as being compassed by the brain alone but as including the sympathetic nervous system as well. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 140

On this basis the main body of the collective unconscious cannot be strictly said to be psychological but psychical. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 140

We cannot repeat this distinction too often, for when I have referred to the collective unconscious as "outside" our brains, it has been assumed that I meant hanging somewhere in mid-air. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 141

After this explanation it will become clear to you that the collective unconscious is always working upon you through trans-subjective facts which are probably inside as well as outside yourselves. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 141

I am concerned with phenomenal religion, with its observable facts, to which I try to add a few psychological observations about basic events in the collective unconscious, the existence of which I can prove. Beyond this I know nothing and I have never made any assertions about it. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 570-573

In a way the collective unconscious is merely a mirage because unconscious, but it can be also just as real as the tangible world. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 40

So the Self is part of the collective unconscious, but it is not the collective unconscious; it is that unit which apparently comes from the union of the ego and the shadow. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 754

Just as the Self is a unit in the collective unconscious, so we are units in the Self. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 754

They [Children's Dreams] must come from the psychology of the collective unconscious; one could say they were remnants of things they had seen before they were born, and that is really vision. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 424.

For we may assume that the collective unconscious is in absolute peace until the individual appears. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 263

The accumulated libido activates images lying dormant in the collective unconscious, among them the God-image, that engram or imprint which from the beginning of time has been the collective expression of the most overwhelmingly powerful influences exerted on the conscious mind by unconscious concentrations of libido. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 412

For the collective unconscious which sends you these dreams already possesses the solution: nothing has been lost from the whole immemorial experience of humanity, every imaginable situation and every solution seem to have been foreseen by the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Page 231.

It is not only possible, but for certain reasons quite probable, that the collective unconscious coincides in a strange and utterly inconceivable way with objective events. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 532-533

He [Jung] said it was always like this with his dreams; he would dream of what he would write – like the mediaeval house dream and the notion of the collective unconscious. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 83

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/98301-12bcollective.jpg`

Carl Jung on "Riddles" -Anthology (2019-12-28 04:37)

PRIVATE RIDDLES ??
RLD

It seems to be very hard for people to live with riddles or to let them live, although one would think that life is so full of riddles as it is that a few more things we cannot answer would make no difference. But perhaps it is just this that is so unendurable, that there are irrational things in our own psyche which upset the conscious mind in its illusory certainties by confronting it with the riddle of its existence. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 307

Often the hands know how to solve a riddle with which the intellect has wrestled in vain. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 180

The nature of the psyche reaches into obscurities far beyond the scope of our understanding. It contains as many riddles as the universe with its galactic systems, before whose majestic configurations only a mind lacking in imagination can fail to admit its own insufficiency. This extreme uncertainty of human comprehension makes the intellectualistic hubbub not only ridiculous, but also deplorably dull. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 815

For behind all this looms the vast and unsolved riddle of life itself and of evolution in general, and the question of overriding importance in the end is not the origin of evolution but its goal. Nevertheless, when a living organism is cut off from its roots, it loses the connections with the foundations of its existence and must necessarily perish. When that happens, anamnesis of the origins is a matter of life and death. Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 279

The black beetle is the death that is necessary for renewal; and so thereafter, a new sun glowed, the sun of the depths, full of riddles, a sun of the night. And as the rising sun of spring quickens the dead earth, so the sun of the depths quickened the dead, and thus began the terrible struggle between light and darkness. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 238.

I went through a torment unto death and I felt certain that I must kill myself if I could not solve the riddle of the murder of the hero. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 242.

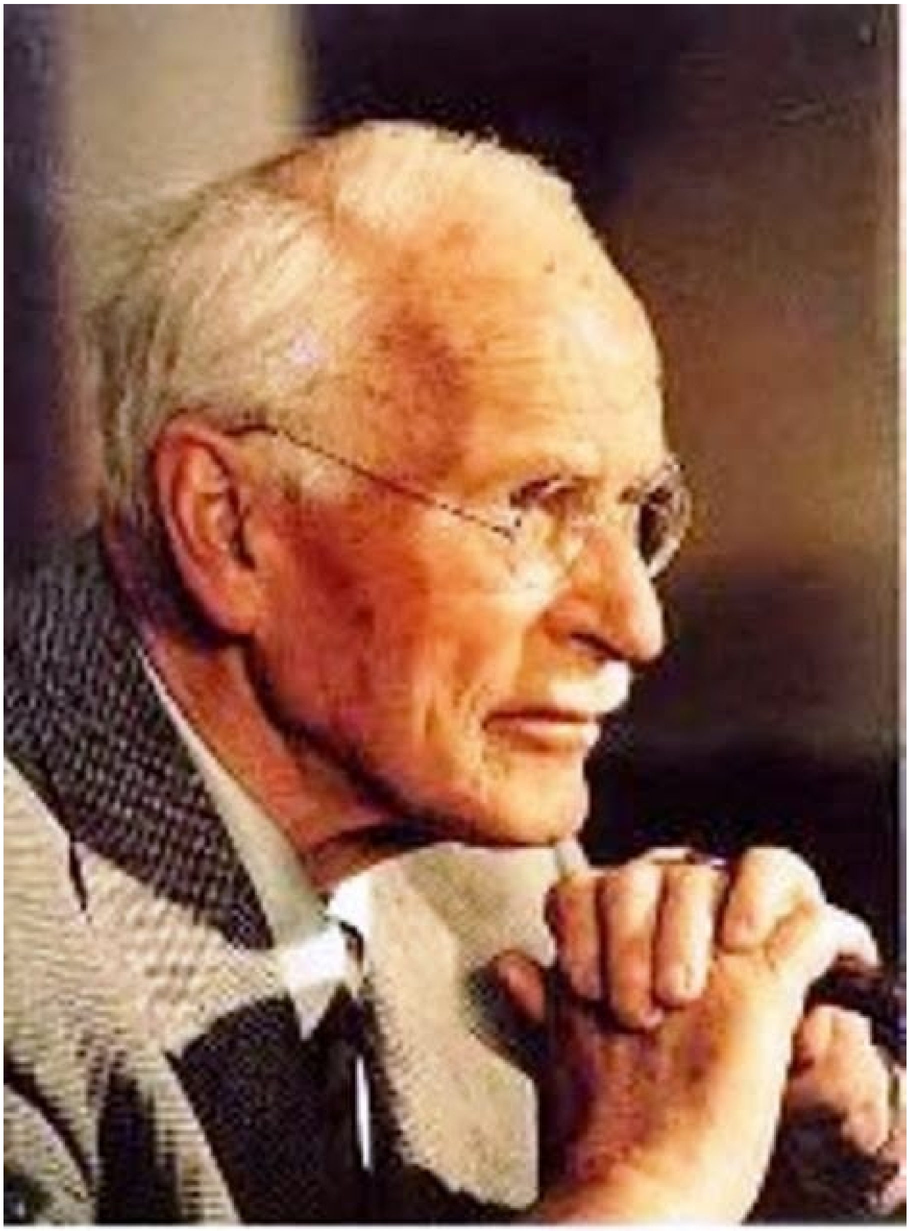
Just as some alchemists had to admit that they never succeeded in producing the gold or the Stone, I cannot confess to have solved the riddle of the coniunctio mystery. On the contrary I am darkly aware of things lurking in the background of the problem-things too big for our horizons. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 393.

Together with my wife I have tried to unriddle your words, and we have reached surmises which, for the time being at any rate, I would rather keep to myself. Carl Jung, Freud/Jung Letters, Vol. 1, Pages 438-441

For Jung the figure of the detective was a modern version of the alchemical Mercurius, solver of all riddles, and he was entertained by his heroic deeds. He also enjoyed science fiction. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 131.

What occurs between the lover and the beloved is the entire fullness of the Godhead. Both are unfathomable riddles to each other. For who understands the Godhead? / But the God is born in solitude, from the secret / mystery of the individual. / The separation between life and love is the contradiction between solitude and togetherness. Carl Jung, The Black Books, Feb. 23, 1920, Page 88.

Carl Jung and "... A tough and coldblooded extraversion...." (2019-12-28 04:57)



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

My dear N., July 1946

I have been waiting for a sign of your existence since you vanished from the scene of my ordinary surroundings, and I often wondered what you are doing and how you are faring.

The leap from Zurich and its remoteness into the seething pool of New York must have been a real tour de force . . . . I don’t wonder that introversion has actually no chance with you.

Moreover it would be too fantastic even to think of introversion under your present circumstances.

A tough and coldblooded extraversion is the only thing that carries you across the stormy sea of your manifold activities.

I have, as you rightly surmise, just begun my vacations in Bollingen.

I enjoy sailing, the lapping of the water against the bow and the gentle breeze of the mornings. N o mental activity-except the elaboration of attractive menus.

Yesterday I had the visit of a French Carmelite monk, a learned man, interested in the psychology of religion.

Our main theme was the Devil and the demons.

I hope you are reckless enough to take care of yourself.

My very best wishes.

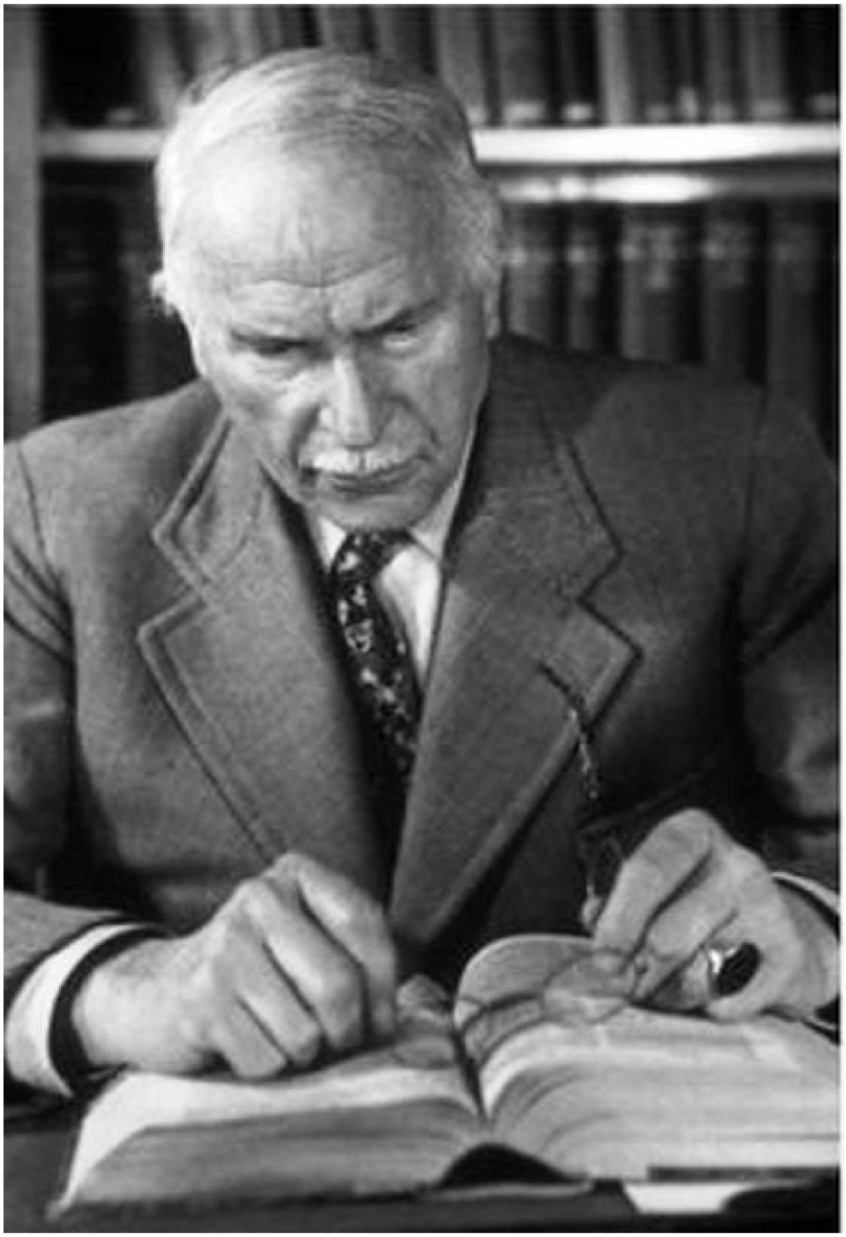
Yours affectionately,

C.G. Jung, Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/3afb3-1.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/2019/03/02/beauty-does-not-indeed-lie-in-things-but-in-the-feeling-that-we-give-to-them/#.XgctG0dKhPY`

Carl Jung: In 1896 something happened to me that served as an impetus for my future life. (2019-12-28 07:08)

[1]



Lecture 1 23 March 1925

Dr. Jung:

No one seriously interested in analytical psychology can fail to have been struck with the astonishing width of the field embraced by it, and so I have thought it would be useful to all of us if, in the course of these lectures, we could obtain a view of that field.

At the beginning, I would like to give you a brief sketch of the development of my own conceptions from the time I first became interested in problems of the unconscious.

As on previous occasions, you can assist me greatly if you contribute written questions, permitting me to select the ones suitable for discussion.

In 1896 something happened to me that served as an impetus for my future life.

A thing of this sort is always to be expected in a man’s life—that is to say, his family history alone is never the key to his creative achievements.

The thing that started me off in my interest in psychology was the case of the fifteen-and-a-half-year-old girl whose case I have described in the Collected Papers,1 as the first contribution to that series.

This girl was a somnambulist, and it was discovered by her sisters that they could obtain extraordinary answers to questions put to her when she was in the sleeping state: in other words, she was found to be a medium.

I was impressed with the fact that, notwithstanding appearances, there must be a hidden life of the mind manifesting itself only in trance or in sleep.

A little hypnosis would send this girl into a trance from which she would later awake as from sleep.

During the trance several personalities would manifest themselves; and, little by little, I found I could call up by suggestion one personality or another.

In short, I found I could have a formative influence on them.

Of course I became deeply interested in all these things and began to try to explain them, something I could not do as I was only twenty-one at the time, and quite ignorant along these lines.

I said to myself, however, that there must be some world behind the conscious world, and that it was this world with which the girl was in contact.

I began to study the literature of spiritism but could find no satisfaction there.

Then I turned to philosophy, always seeking for a possible clue to these strange phenomena.

I was a student of medicine at the time and deeply interested in it, but also deeply interested in philosophy.

Finally in my searching I came to Schopenhauer and Hartmann.

From Schopenhauer I got a very enlightening point of view.

His fundamental standpoint is that the will as a blind urge to existence is aimless; it simply “happened to the creative will to make the world.”

This is his position in The World as Will and Idea.

However, in Will in Nature he drifts into a teleological attitude, though this is in direct opposition to his original thesis, something, be it said, which not infrequently happens to a philosopher.

In this latter work he assumes that there is direction in the creating will, and this point of view I took as mine.

My first conception of the libido then was not that it was a formless stream so to speak, but that it was archetypal in character.

That is to say, libido never comes up from the unconscious in a formless state, but always in images. Using a figure of speech, the ore brought up from the mine of the unconscious is always crystallized.

Out of this reading of Schopenhauer, I got a tentative explanation of the possible psychology of the case I was studying; that is, I thought the personifications might be the result of this image-forming tendency of the libido.

If I suggested a given person to the girl during her unconscious states, she would act that person out, and her answers to questions would come in a manner characteristic of the person suggested.

From this I became convinced of the tendency of the unconscious material to flow into definite moulds.

This gave a clue, too, to the disintegration of personality.

In dementia praecox, for example, there is an independent working of the different parts of the psyche, but there is generally nothing vague about the different parts; the voices that are heard are the voices of definite individuals, of particular persons, and that is why they are so real.

In the same way a spiritualist will always claim a high degree of individuality and personal character for his "spirits."

At this time I thought that after all there might be ghosts.

My ideas of the unconscious, then, first became enlightened through Schopenhauer and Hartmann.

Hartmann, having the advantage of living in a later period than Schopenhauer, formulates the latter's ideas in a more modern way.

He assumes what he calls the Weltgrund to be the unconscious spirit or entity which has creative efficiency, and this he calls the unconscious, but adds to it mind.

He uses mind here in a different sense from that in which Schopenhauer uses it.

Schopenhauer opposes mind to the blind creating will.

By some unforeseen accident man came into possession of a conscious mirror of the universe, namely mind, and through this he knows the evilness of the world and deliberately withdraws therefrom, thus putting himself into opposition with the creating will.

In Schopenhauer's conception mind belongs to man alone and is not connected with the Weltgrund or unbewusster Geist.

I held, following Hartmann, that our unconscious is not meaningless but contains a mind.

After I had taken this position I found much contradictory evidence, and so the pendulum swung back and forth.

At one time it seemed as though there must be some thread of purpose running through the unconscious, at another I was convinced there was none.

At this point the medium “ran out,” that is to say, she began to cheat and I gave up all connection with her.

I had observed her for a period of two years, and had given myself up to a study of the detailed phenomena she presented, striving to get them into harmony with natural science.

But I know now that I overlooked the most important feature of the situation, namely my connection with it.

The girl had of course fallen deeply in love with me, andof this I was fairly ignorant and quite ignorant of the part it played in her psychology.

In her trances she had formulated for herself a very superior character, that of an older woman of great spiritual beauty.

She herself, in reality a very silly and superficial girl, could find no other way of expressing this unconscious urge within herself to be different save through the spiritualistic setting, and the acting out of the character she found there.

Her family, originally one of the old families of Basel, had gone into rather complete decay, both financially and culturally.

The girl herself could be described as a “midinette.”

When she met me she found me interested in all the sides of life she craved, but from which she had been cut off by fate.

Had I known then what I know now I could have understood the struggle she went through in order to express the best in her through this person of the trance, but as it was I could only see her as a silly little girl who began to do something very ugly, namely to cheat for the sake of impressing me and others.

I only saw her as a person who had ruined her reputation and spoiled her chances in life; but, as a matter of fact, through this very act of cheating she forced her way back into reality.

She gave up the mediumistic séances and all of that fantastic side of her gradually faded out of existence.

Later she went to Paris and entered the atelier of a famous dress-maker.

In a relatively short time she had an establishment of her own and was most successful, making extraordinarily beautiful and original clothes.

I saw her in Paris during this period, but practically all of the mediumistic experiences had faded from her mind.

Then she contracted tuberculosis, but would not admit that she really had the disease.

A few weeks before her death it was as though she were making a regression further and further back in her life, till finally she was about two years old, and then she died.

She is an example of the general psychological law that in order to advance to a higher stage of development, we often have to commit some mistake which apparently is so terrible as to threaten ruin to our lives.

The dishonesty of the girl had the ultimate result of breaking up the mediumistic séances, and then she was able to live out in reality the character she had developed for herself in the unconscious.

She first worked up in the spirit world what she wanted in reality, but then the spirit world had to decay before she could get rid of the transcendental elements.

Her life is an illustration of the principle of enantiodromia because starting with the thing that was most evil in her, namely her willingness to cheat and her general weakness and silliness, she passed by steady progression to the opposite pole where she was expressing the best that was in her.

After this period, which contains the origin of all my ideas,

I found Nietzsche.

I was twenty-four when I read Zarathustra. I could not understand it, but it made a profound impression upon me, and I felt an analogy between it and the girl in some peculiar way.

Later, of course, I found that Zarathustra was written from the unconscious and is a picture of what that man should be.

If Zarathustra [the protagonist] had come through as a reality for Nietzsche instead of remaining in his “spirit world,” the intellectual Nietzsche would have had to go.

But this feat of realization, Nietzsche could not accomplish.

It was more than his brain could master.

All of this time I was continuing as a student of medicine, but I was keeping up my reading in philosophy on the side.

When I was twenty-five, I passed my final examination in medicine.

It had been my intention to specialize in internal medicine.

I was deeply interested in physiological chemistry, and had the chance of becoming the assistant of a famous man.

Nothing was further from my mind then than psychiatry.

One reason for this was the fact that my father, as a minister, was connected with the cantonal insane asylum and very much interested in psychiatry.

Like all sons, I knew that whatever my father was interested in was wrong, and so I avoided it as carefully as I could.

I had never read even one book having to do with psychiatry, but when it came time for me to take my final examinations, I got a textbook and started in to investigate this idiotic subject.

The book was by Krafft-E bing.

I said to myself, “Anybody so foolish as to write a textbook on this subject is bound to explain himself in a preface,” so I turned to the preface. By the time I had finished the first page I was on edge with interest.

By the time I was halfway down the second page, I had such a beating of the heart I could hardly go on.

“By God,” I said, “that is what I will be, a psychiatrist.”

I passed first in my examinations, and great was the surprise of all my friends when I made the announcement that I would be a psychiatrist.

None of them knew that in that book of Krafft-E bing’s I had found the clue to the riddle I was seeking to solve.

Their comment was, “Well, we always thought you were crazy, and now we know it!”

I told nobody that I intended to work out the unconscious phenomena of the psychoses, but that was my determination.

I wanted to catch the intruders in the mind—the intruders that make people laugh when they should not laugh, and cry when they should not cry.

When I developed my association testsit was the defects that the tests brought out that held my interest.

I made careful note of the places where people could not achieve the experiments, and out of these observations I came to my theory of autonomous complexes as being the cause of the blockage in libido flow.

Freud at the same time was evolving his conception of the complex.

In 1900 I read Freud’s Dream Interpretation.

I put it aside as something whose significance I did not fully grasp.

Then I returned to it in 1903 and found in it the connection with my own theories. Carl Jung 1925 Seminar, Pages 3-8

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/15b25-1jung.jpg`

Anyone who wants to know the human mind (2019-12-28 08:54)

[1]

[2]Two Essays on Analytical Psychology

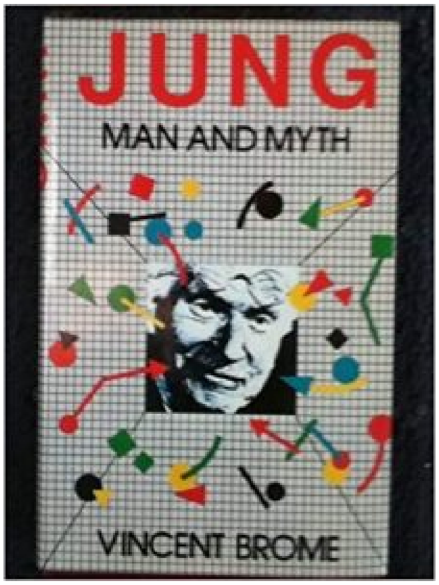
Anyone who wants to know the human mind will learn next to nothing from experimental psychology. He would be better advised to put away his scholar’s gown, bid farewell to his study, and wander with human heart through the world.

There, in the horrors of prisons, lunatic asylums and hospitals, in drab suburban pubs, in brothels and gambling-hells, in the salons of the elegant, the Stock Exchanges, Socialist meetings, churches, revivalist gatherings and ecstatic sects, through love and hate, through the experience of passion in every form in his own body, he would reap richer stores of knowledge than text-books a foot thick could give him, and he will know how to doctor the sick with real knowledge of the human soul. - "New Paths in Psychology" In CW 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology. P.409

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/baf5f-brothel.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Two-Essays-Analytical-Psychology-Jung/dp/1614277176/ref=sr_1_1?crid=25TCSQ7UURGMQ&keywords=jung+two+essays&qid=1577611119&sprefix=jung+tw`

Vincent Brome’s Prologue to Jung: A Biography, Pages 13-20 (2019-12-28 10:55)



[1]Jung by Vincent Brome (1978-10-23)

Prologue

There were occasions in his eighties when, meeting Carl Gustav Jung on a cold winter day, one encountered a tall, slightly bent man wrapped in a full-length, fur-lined dressing-gown with a dark skull-cap fitting tightly on the white hair, and it was as if the timeless figure of his own mythological creation - the Old Wise Man - had materialised in the flesh.

There were other occasions when those who visited him at his beautiful house beside the upper lake of Zurich found him - at first sight - disarmingly casual, but frequently came away with the image of a man whose complex personality and powerful intellect had come to terms with ’natural’ life and whatever mysterious forces lay hidden in the unconscious.

Calling upon Jung at Bollingen, the visitor knocked on a heavy wooden door set in a thick stone wall which seemed literally to grow out of the earth.

The wall, the door and the oddly shaped towers rising beyond it all held hints of the medieval.

As you waited it was not uncommon to hear the ringing sound of an axe falling upon wood, because there was no coal, gas or electricity in this strange house.

According to the time of day, and depending on his mood, you might see Jung wearing a workman’s green apron, busily chopping wood, or a scholarly person deeply immersed in reading a book.

Still a tall, well-built man, it was customary for him to come to his feet with a brilliant, slightly mischievous smile and fall into easy conversation.

’So you’ve come all this way just to listen to me,’ he said to one American professor from Indiana University.

’It’s extraordinary what illusions people have about me.’

The broad forehead and powerful chin remained from earlier years, but now he had mellowed, and there was a softness in the face, the white hair and the informality of manner.

To the surprise of one patient who came to the house at Bollingen he rose to greet her with the words, ’So you are in the soup, too?’

Disconcerted at first, the patient - a young woman - quickly discovered the depth of awareness hidden behind what seemed a frivolous initiation.

At eighty-three Jung was the modern high priest of a psychotherapeutic tradition reaching far back into ancient mythology which diverged widely from Freud’s materialism and the measurable world of science.

A sage - almost an oracle - living out his last years in distinguished isolation, many famous men and women came from all over the world to pay homage as they might to a holy man, or to pose questions which he alone, they believed, was equipped to answer.

A new climate had become apparent in wide areas of intellectual and public life.

A renaissance of the irrational had turned thousands of young people toward psychedelic experience, Indian gurus, and experiments with semi-mystical rituals. Reason as a means of solving some of our biggest problems had proved inadequate, and social institutions become dubious shrines of fossilised values.

Science was suspect, and the ancient cult of astrology in the ascendant once again among more people than would care, openly, to admit it.

In this mental and spiritual climate Jung’s deep roots in myth, symbol, magic, the occult and the religious attitude to life were magnetically attractive.

Many people like]. B. Priestley, H. G. Wells, Sir Montagu Norman and Sir Herbert Read turned to his works, searching for that rejuvenation from wellsprings which, in their view, were deeper than anything reason, politics, Freud, Marx or Marcuse could offer, and his appeal overran many apparently exclusive boundaries.

It was at the 1938 congress of the International General Medical Society for Psychotherapy at Oxford that I first encountered Jung.

He was chairman of the conference, but he also outlined fourteen points upon which he thought there was agreement in all schools of psychological thought.

In his sixty-third year, still tall and commanding, he bore down upon me that hot summer day.

’I understand’, he said, ’you are writing a biography of H.G. Wells.’

His manner of speech was staccato, almost explosive. He spoke with a decided accent and placed tremendous emphasis on certain words.

I admitted what somehow seemed a crime, since the outlooks of Carl Gustav Jung and Herbert George Wells were vastly different.

’Tell me,’ he said, ’why does he so hate religion?’

His eyes brimming with intelligence through his gold-rimmed spectacles, his manner charming, I was nonetheless aware of the masked scrutiny of the trained analyst, but the first impact of his personality was not as overwhelming as it had once been to the early Freudian circle.

The voice was still deep but warm, the eyes penetrating but alight, every other moment, with puckish humour.

Within a few minutes I felt at ease in the company of what appeared to be one of the most civilised of men.

Analysing the extraordinary contradictions in H. G. Wells’s work, Jung admitted that he found his particular brand of ‘rational scientism’ temperamentally alien.

I have a memory of his referring to the works of Karl Popper with words something like: ’It’s a pity Wells doesn’t read German, because he might have found enlightenment in Karl Popper’s The Logic of Scientific Discovery. There we saw some of the shortcomings of science properly exposed.’

’But medical science has played a big part in your own career,’ I said.

’As a boy I was powerfully attracted to two fields – comparative religion and science. I became the luckiest ef men. I managed to marry two very disparate subjects.

Later I wanted to divorce science because it appeared to me to be getting ideas above its station. But it did not work out like that.’

We talked on for some time, and I was aware of a curious anomaly.

Instead of the great man talking about his ideas, his books, work or experience, he seemed more interested in finding some ’frame’ through which he could suitably view and examine my own psyche.

Continually the exchange came back to my immature ideas and ambitions, and the whole conversation was laced with quips and jokes.

It was at the same congress that Jung received the first D.Sc. offered by Oxford University to a psychotherapist. Dr Michael Fordham records: ’his reply of thanks was flowery and unusual to English tastes and I found it embarrassing.

But worse was to follow.

As he came down with the University dignitaries Jung gave his close assistant C. A. Meier an enormous wink which convulsed Meier and several others besides .

. . . It seemed like a calculated insult to the University. I don’t think so, however; it was just Jung unable to resist being a gamin and showing his humorous disrespect for ceremony ... ’ .

Ernest Jones had a very different impression of Jung.

He told me that Jung could ’easily become a cantankerous and stubborn man incapable of making concessions in argument’.

Freud, of course, on one classic occasion, referred to him as ’brutal and sanctimonious’, but that phrase occurred as the two men were tearing apart in the late-Freudian battles.

Any such rich and complex character as Jung, of course, would be subject to widely varying moods and involve what can only be described as multiple personalities.

Certainly one of those personalities had ceaseless intellectual curiosity, great humanity, depth of imaginative insight and concern for his patient, but there were many others.

Elizabeth Osterman encountered another incarnation when she visited him for the first time at Bollingen in 1930 while returning from Greece via Switzerland to the United States.

“As I stood waiting before the door I was somewhat nervous but was reassured by the sounds of wood chopping coming from behind the wall. I was trying to accustom myself to the fact that I was actually going to meet the man who indirectly had influenced my adult life so profoundly, who, in fact, had changed its entire course.”

Ten years before, a kind of dream-vision had deflected her career from straight medicine into psychological medicine, and the dream had occurred ’when working through a deep analysis with one of [Jung’s] students in San Francisco’.

Jung greeted her warmly, and she had an immediate sense of rapport.

’At the water’s edge we settled into comfortable chairs and through that afternoon the conversation wandered back into the prehistory of the earth, into the depths of the psyche, into the wonders of nature around us.’

After two hours Elizabeth Osterman looked at her watch for fear that she was keeping Jung too long.

’Never mind your watch,’ he said, and went on talking.

There was about the statements he made an immediacy and simplicity in total contradiction to his great erudition.

What she described as ’a remarkable force’ emanated from him.

’He seemed at once powerful and simple; real the way the sky and rocks and trees and water around him were real. . . . ’

Miss A. I. Allenby first encountered Jung at the end of the Second World War, and the idea of meeting the great man filled her with apprehension, but ’the moment I entered his intimate little study I felt completely at ease.

All the people I know who have met Jung have told me the same.’

In the following years she spent many hours discussing ’matters of great personal importance with him in his study, and always he gave the same lively attention to whatever I had come to consult him about.

The man who has left us the fruits of an incredible amount of work ... never seemed to be hurried when one was with him.’

Recounting, on one occasion, a dream which she found obscure, [Jung] suddenly broke off to search his bookshelves for correlative documents, resumed his seat, read out the relevant passages and related the available evidence to corresponding experiences of his own.

There was no sense in which the Master displayed special insights to enlighten his patient, but instead he worked with the patient in a co-operative search ’for the meaning of it all’. ’It seemed to me as if his capacity to listen and to absorb every detail did not diminish in old age, but on the contrary increased.’

If that conjures up a very solemn, silver-haired sage, Miss Allenby corrected the image with an account of his great gusts of laughter as he laced his exposition with illustrative anecdote.

One story in particular recurred from a number of witnesses.

Intended to demonstrate the proposition that one should not feel guilty about events which occur ’on their own account’ and over which one had ’no control’, it concerned the reaction of a shrewd old Swiss peasant to a stroke of lightning which damaged the village church.

When the pastor moved round the village collecting contributions for repairs, the peasant exclaimed, ’Are you asking me to pay Him for destroying His own house!’ And Jung with a Homeric laugh commented, ’That man got it right!’

Miss Allenby finally remarked:

At bottom Jung was ... a passionate moralist. His morality is different from that in which most of us have been brought up: it is at the same time more permissive and more exacting. It is above all a morality deeply rooted in faith -faith in the value of the individual and faith in the creative potentiality of the unconscious.

Another view of Jung’s personality was given by the analyst Anneliese Aumiiller.

As a young student spending a few weeks in Zurich, a friend invited her to a party, and there, marked out among the assembled company, was Jung.

Some twenty people were in the room.

He talked about his experiences in Africa, his encounters with natives of practically every part of the world .... His voice seemed to belong to an ancient Chinese story-teller. I found myself walking through the jungle with many new eyes open …. I could suddenly perceive the world with senses of whose existence I had never known before.

It was her first encounter with Jung, and it opened doors which ’never closed again’.

Many years passed before she saw Jung again, and in those years catastrophe overtook Europe.

The Nazis rose to dominate Germany, the Second World War broke out, refugees multiplied, the horror of the concentration camps was revealed and chaos overtook European civilisation.

Once more she returned to Zurich to consult Jung, brimful of problems, dreams, complexities, but to her dismay Jung did not seem to appreciate ’how desperately I wanted to talk to him.

He just glanced at me, and then looked out of the window into his garden and started to tell me quiet little stories: about the long preparation the bushmen took the evening before a hunt; how many years of learning it took a disciple of Zen Buddhism before he dared to try to hit the target.’

His soliloquy became preoccupied with exploring ’the pitch black darkness of a tower where there was no chance of any light’, and Anneliese Aumiiller’s impatience approached despair.

The following morning Jung greeted her with a smile which conveyed elements of the sarcastic.

’You were quite unhappy last night and thought me a nasty, un-understanding man, didn’t you?’

She admitted as much, and at once Jung began a swift exposition of one flaw in Western civilisation, which would never, as he put it, ’let things happen’.

He analysed the Chinese concept of Wu-Wei, which meant achieving a balance between activity and passivity.

One of his most appreciated authors translated Wu-Wei as ’Doing nothing, but also not doing nothing.’

Anneliese Aumiiller commented:

When I went back to war-terror and fear I had learnt not to jump immediately in medias res. I no longer wanted to solve the problem or complex but was able to smell out the climate a little more and to let things happen … even to let the patient leave in despair in order to give the unconscious a chance to say what it thought to be good.

In other words, some problems were not immediately soluble, and it was better to let them develop their own inner resolution in collaboration with the unconscious.

Joseph L. Henderson was successively a patient, a student, a colleague and a friend over many years.

He first saw in Jung the image of the philosopher or man .

’It was hard to realise how at an earlier time he had been so much more exclusively the psychologist and psychiatrist in the scientific sense.’

These two images, the scientist and the philosopher, clashed on first acquaintance, and then, meeting him a second time, they suddenly fused into a ’humanist in the old Renaissance style, in whom an authentic scientist and artist met in a man of philosophic temperament and training’.

Unlike most philosophers, Jung was also a man who put his theories into practice on such a scale and with such wide-ranging influence that Dr Henderson was deeply impressed.

On perhaps his tenth meeting, yet another embodiment of his chameleon personality emerged- that of the European Christian Protestant - to modify his reverence.

’This I did not envy and it …provoked the same rebellious anti-father feelings from which I had expected Jung to cure me … in him I thought I detected a far more deeply moral critic than my own father had been.’

Yet another image then arose to challenge the austerity of the father-figure - that of a Swiss peasant in faded blue denims and sandals,

’drinking wine and throwing meat to his dogs with gargantuan generosity.

There was nothing gross or self-conscious about this; it was all an expression of true Homeric piety.’

As if to flaunt the complexity of Jung’s personality, yet another of the multiple selves within his overtly integrated persona would come riding up from a tradition apparently different from all the others which made Jung, at times, into the modern equivalent of the old shaman, a person of uncanny perception and frightening unpredictability of behaviour.

’This was the side of him which could never endure boredom and managed to keep him in hot water with someone all his life.’

It could cause an abrupt breaking away from a person - where communication between them had run dry - in a manner which was rude. Indeed, one witness testifies to a Swiss-German bluntness approaching and sometimes realising rudeness.

Jung himself enlarged on this, but before quoting irrefutable evidence from the Shaman himself let Dr Henderson describe a lighter aspect of Jung’s nature.

I remember a party at his house in which we were held to a relentless game, with everyone sitting in a circle throwing a ball from one to the other to frustrate the unfortunate victim who had to stand in the centre and try to intercept the ball.

This seemed to go on for hours, with Jung as the evil genius who kept it going.

Various mishaps occurred during the evening.

I fell down and broke my glasses, a very proper Bostonian lady lost her pearls, and just as the party seemed destined to fall to pieces by this shattering of personas, the unbounded pleasure of our host asserted itself, baptising us all to harmony again.

At a much deeper level Dr Henderson remarks that 'when I have gone all over my memories of Jung's personality and character, sifted and simplified the images they evoke, there is left a sense that he was not just a mixture of them all but something separate and whole .... He was the most deeply rooted man I ever met, whether in his actual life or in his philosophic and religious commitment. .. .'

On my own second and last meeting with Jung, I encountered a man who emanated a kind of certainty.

Given his high cheek-bones and fresh complexion, he could easily be mistaken for a countryman, and the 'excellent brain was so unexpected in the peasant's frame' .

Certainly, for ail his erudition, Jung had a gift for communicating with people in many walks of life when he put himself out to do so. H.F. Ellenberger claims that in the gatherings which followed the meetings of the Medical Association for Psychotherapy he would strip off his jacket and dance and yodel far into the night, but Jung's son Franz denies this.

Jung believed that a good psychiatrist must sometimes get away from the consulting-room to explore the taverns, prisons, stock exchanges and churches.

A contradiction arose between the man firmly anchored in reality who enjoyed good food, sailing, pipe-smoking and mountaineering, and the metaphysician who w.as fascinated by the occult.

He could move with disconcerting speed from the loftiest speculation to an analysis of good coffee-making, cook an excellent meal, swear eloquently and face a threatening mob of Africans with immense courage.

Modern art, modern music and women in trousers he abhorred.

Conversationally brilliant, wit was not something he prized, but he sometimes practised it with skill.

On one occasion, asked if simple ignorance were not the root of most of the troubles in the world, he replied: ’No, it’s not ignorance - it is that so many people know things which are simply not so.’

Yet another side of his character came through at a meeting of the Eranos Society.

The full flood of delivering a paper, Herbert Read became aware of a growling voice which erupted from the body of the hall like occasional rolls of thunder.

The voice repeated - at intervals - two phrases explosively: ’That’s mine!’ and ’That’s yours!’ As Herbert Read plunged deeper into his subject the interruptions became louder.

Suddenly, the powerful figure of Jung stood up, made his way ruthlessly along the row of disciples and stormed out of the hall.

Within minutes there came from the floor above the hail the sound of a man clumping about, his footsteps expressing his fury more violently than his words.

Dr Michael Fordham arrived late for the lecture and encountered the same figure storming down the stairs again, swearing with an unexpected range of four-letter invective.

Jung told Fordham that his wife had stolen (!) the key to his flat above the lecture-hail and that he could not get in.

Certainly, Jung was a man capable of great rages, sometimes the result of a long accumulation of repressed aggression, but he rarely held a grudge.

He could, as we have seen, be rude to those who bored him.

He could literally eject a visitor who had become intolerable, and his invective against his enemies included phrases like ’slimy bastard’,

’empty gasbag’, ’a pisspot of unconscious devils’, and might even mount to the point of physical threats - ’I would have softened up his guttersnipe complex with a sound Swiss thrashing.’

In total contradiction, he was the sensitive scholar who carried intelligence into the high places of intellect, and his erudition in many languages was redeemed from pedantry.

Capable of creating a new model of the human psyche, half his life was spent speculating about the nature of Man.

Suffering himself at one stage to the point of near madness, he understood the suffering of others and sometimes converted pain into an Elizabethan zest for living.

That, at least, was how his disciples saw him.

One fundamental key to his rich and complex psyche only became apparent very late in life.

’There was adaimon in me and in the end its presence proved decisive. It overpowered me and if I was at times ruthless it was because I was in the grip of the daimon.’

He offended some people because the daimon insisted that if they did not understand him, then that was the end of the matter.

He had no toleration of alien people unless they happened to be patients in treatment.

’I had to obey an inner law which was imposed on me and left me no choice.’

Although he was able to become intensely interested in people for a time, ’once I had seen through them the magic was gone’.

He made a number of enemies because of the daimon. ’A creative person has little power over his own life. He is not free. He is captive … .’

This lack of freedom in his inner life was a great sorrow to him, and he found himself forced to say on occasion, ’I am fond of you, indeed I love you, but I cannot stay … .’

In the end he regarded himself as literally the victim of these forces.

As we shall see, the flattery of his disciples was subject to severe qualification and the picture drawn in this prologue had less pleasant aspects which will be examined in detail.

We have so far touched in an outline of the myth. Behind it we shall eventually confront the actual man.

When all this is said, what were the influences which combined to produce a person so rich in contradictions, what beginnings gave birth to such a multiplicity of personas, and how did he achieve the smiling serenity of the Old Wise Man so often presented in his last days? Vincent Brome, Jung: A Biography, Pages 13-20

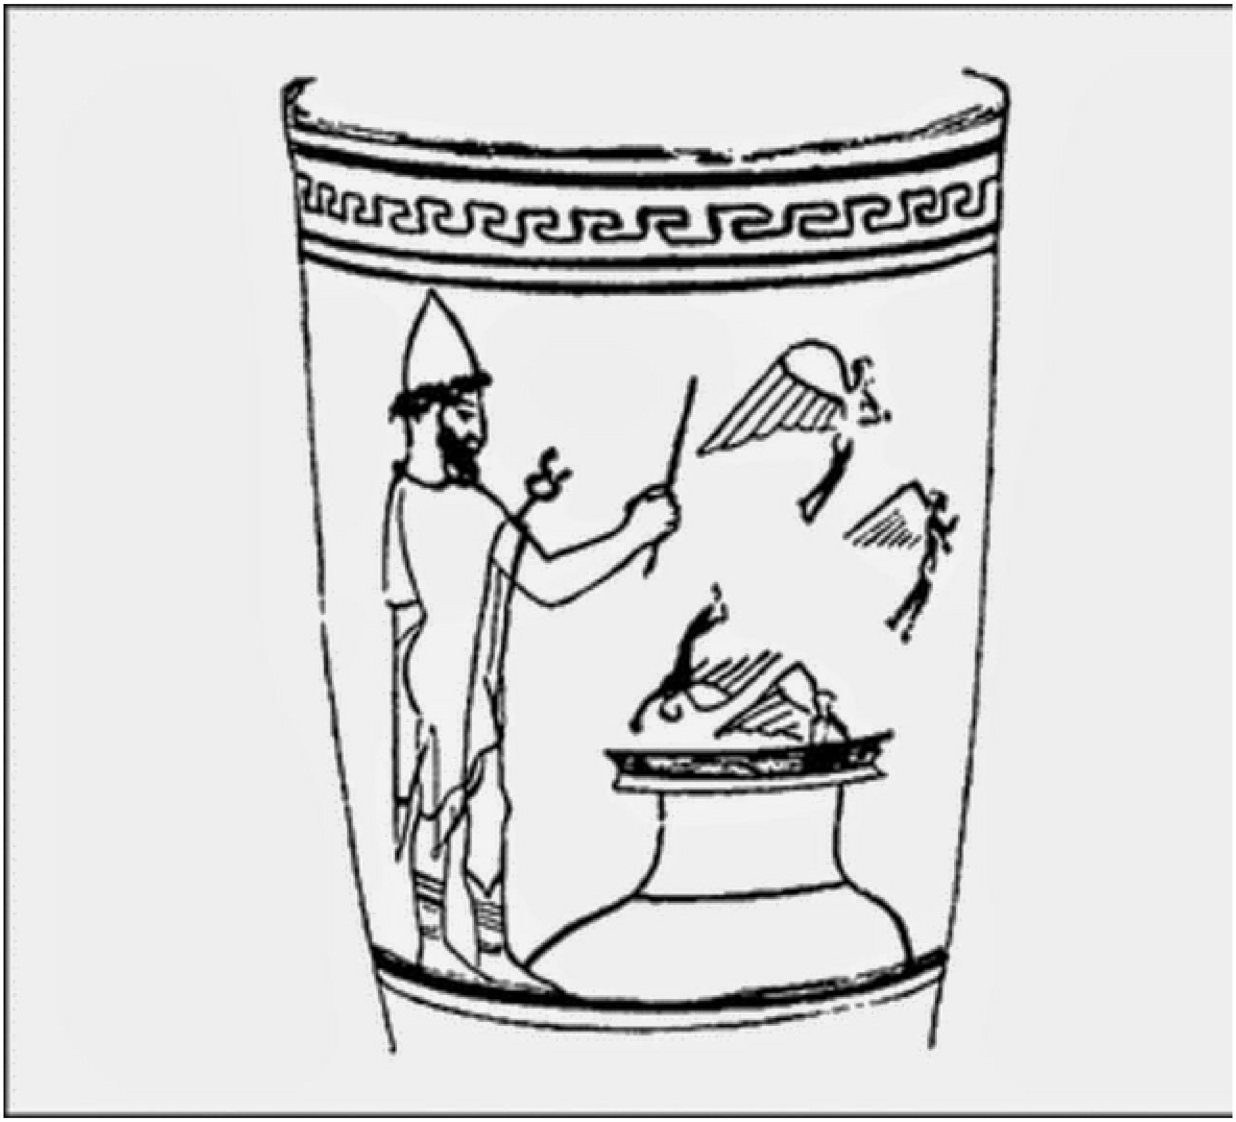
1. `https://www.amazon.com/Jung-by-Vincent-Brome-1978-10-23/dp/B01MR07C10/ref=sr_1_2?keywords=vincent+brome+jung&qid=1577548041&sr=8-2`

Carl Jung on the Biological foundations of Psychological concepts. (2019-12-28 15:29)



To Professor Loewenthal

Dear Professor Loewenthal, 11 April 1947

I have read your letter with interest.

I think you are quite right when you correlate the concept of intro- and extraversion with all conceivable intro- and extrapetal tendencies.

My typology is based exclusively on biological data.

I have myself brought it into relationship with the biological fact that when many eggs are produced the protective instinct is little developed or not at all, whereas with few eggs it is very strongly developed.

If you go into the ontogenetic and phylogenetic prehistory of intro- and extraversion, you necessarily come across all the polarities you mention.

At the same time the concept itself becomes increasingly generalized until it finally loses its psychological applicability.

But that is the fate of all psychological concepts.

If they are traced back to their biological foundations they become so imprecise that they lose their psychological meaning.

This is not to say that tracing types of consciousness back to instinctive data is superfluous.

To understand their structure a knowledge of the biological foundations is essential.

But since it is the nature of psychological concepts to point forwards, in the sense of an entelechy, their specific meaning consists in the apprehension of complicated psychic facts.

They lose this meaning, as said, when they are looked at retrospectively, in terms of their origin.

They then dissolve into extremely general biological conditions.

I don’t know whether you have read Jeans’s critique of Kant’s conception of space.

At any rate one would now have to formulate the apriorism of the so-called space category rather differently than was possible in Kant’s day.

The three-dimensionality of space is an unconscious precondition which is not to be confused with an apriori judgment.

This is where Jeans’s critique comes in, demonstrating that space cannot be an apriori judgment.

Its psychological reality is that of an archetype, i .e., it is just as unconscious as this and just as effective as this, which is why I have called the archetypes “dominants."

It was just this point in your letter that interested me most, since at present I am very much concerned with apriori categories.

Yours sincerely,

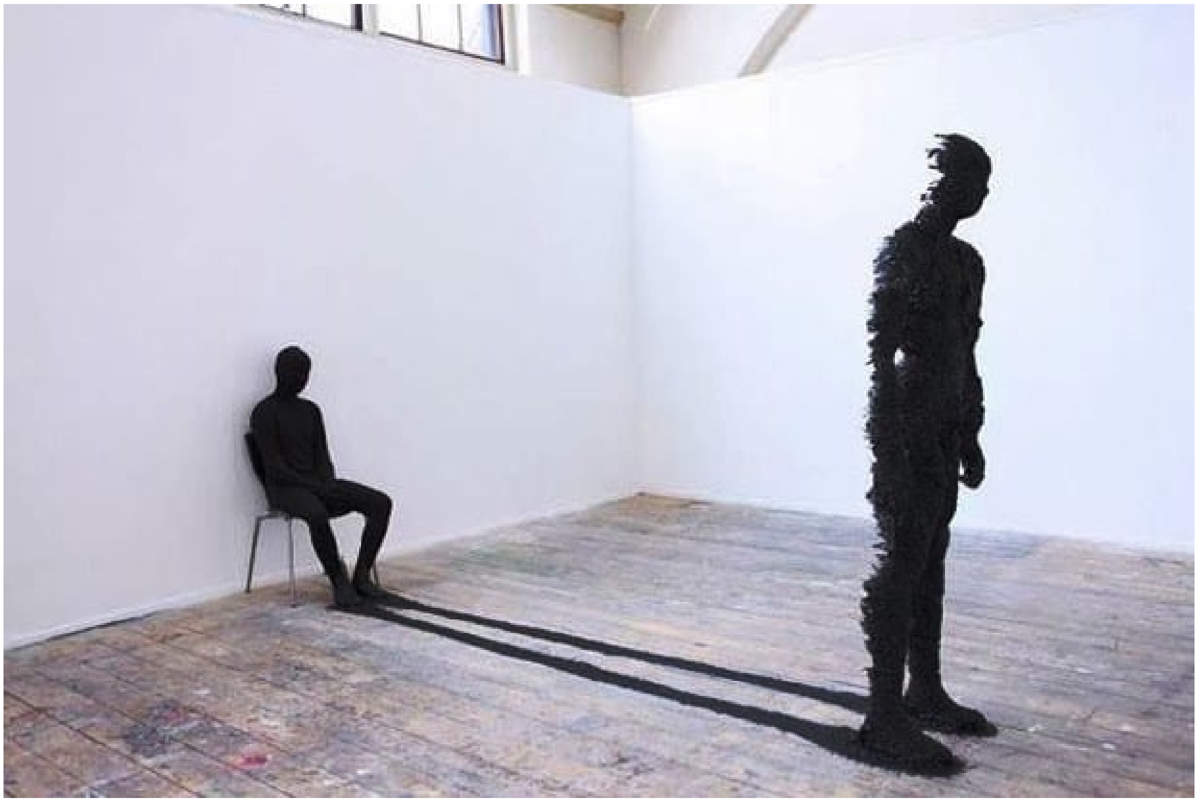
C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 453-454.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/59afe-1.jpeg`

Even the enlightened person remains what he is... (2019-12-28 15:49)

[1]

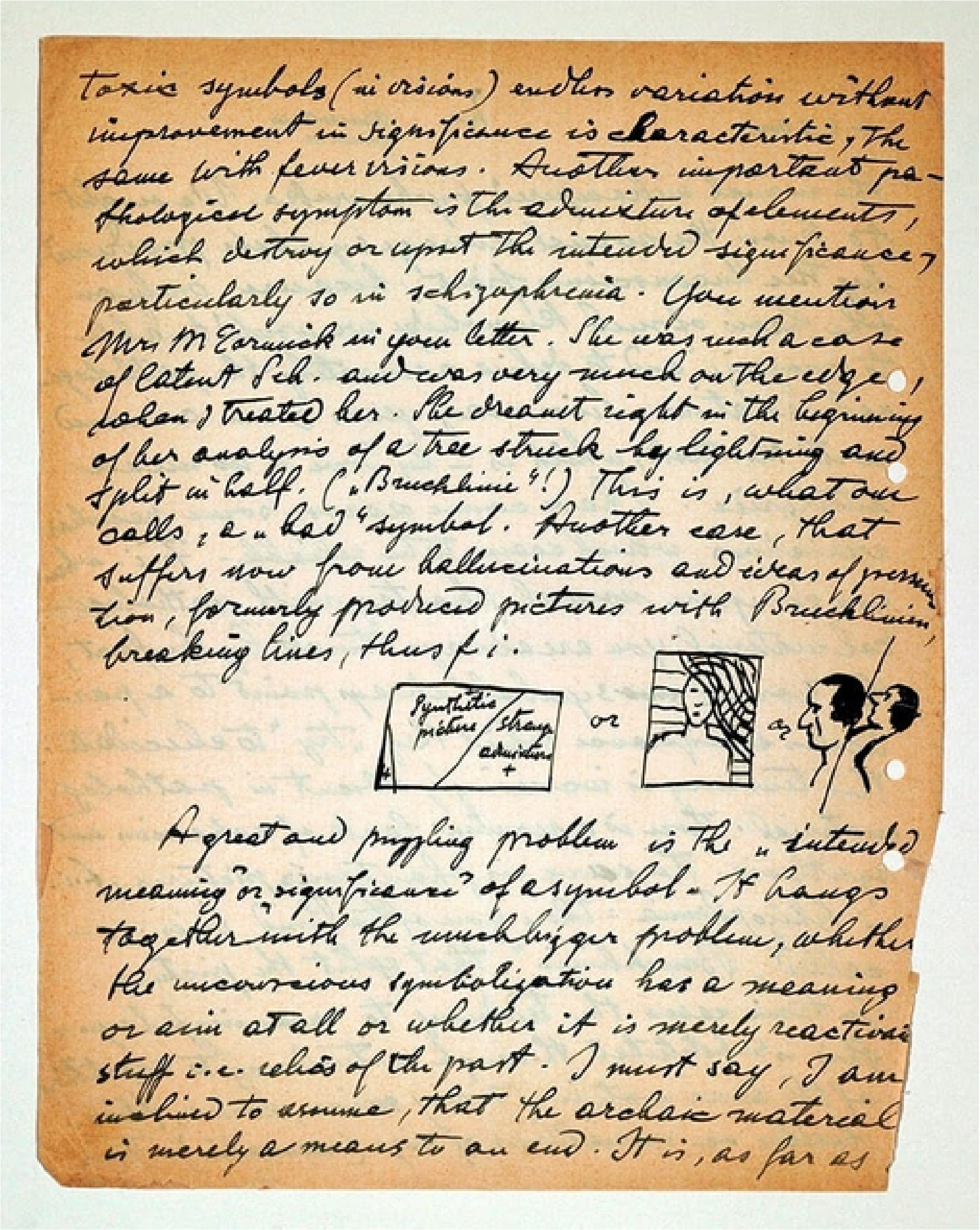


“Even the enlightened person remains what he is, and is never more than his own limited ego before the One who dwells within him, whose form has no knowable boundaries, who encompasses him on all sides, fathomless as the abysms of the earth and vast as the sky” Carl Jung, Book of Job, Para. 758.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/da7d8-ego.jpg`

The "Great and Puzzling Problem" of Symbols... (2019-12-28 15:53)

[1]



toxic symbols (in visions) endless variation without improvement in significance is characteristic, the same with fever visions. Another important pathological symptom is the admixture of elements, which destroy or upset the intended significance, particularly so in schizophrenia. You mention Mrs. McCormick in your letter. She was such a case of latent Sch. and was very much on the edge, when I treated her. She dreamt right in the beginning of her analysis of a tree struck by lightning and split in half. („Bruchlinie"!) This is, what one calls, a „bad" symbol. Another case, that suffers now from hallucinations and ideas of persecution, formerly produced pictures with Bruchlinien, breaking lines, thus f. i.:

A great and puzzling problem is the „intended meaning" or „significance" of a symbol. It hangs together with the much bigger problem, whether the unconscious symbolization has a meaning or aim at all or whether it is merely reactiva stuff i.e. echoes of the past. I must say, I am inclined to assume, that the archaic material is merely a means to an end. It is, as far as

[2]Government Exhibit of The Red Book

The "Great and Puzzling Problem" of Symbols

In this letter to Smith Ely Jelliffe (1866-1945), an American physician, teacher, medical editor, and pioneering psychotherapist, Jung discusses schizophrenic patients and includes examples of drawings they produced.

The images contain what Jung termed "Bruchlinien," breaking lines that split the pictures, apparently indicative of the patients" mental states. Jung here wonders whether "unconscious symbolization has a meaning or aim at all or whether it is merely reactivated stuff, i.e., relics of the past."

However, in the Red Book Jung wrote that "if one accepts a symbol, it is as if a door opens leading into a new room whose existence one did not previously know . . . .Salvation is a long road that leads through many gates. These gates are symbols."

Image: Letter from Carl G. Jung to Smith Ely Jelliffe, October 16, 1932. Smith Ely Jelliffe Papers, Manuscript Division, Library of Congress (021.00.00). [Digital ID # rb0021]

http://www.loc.gov/exhibits/red-book-of-carl-jung/the-red-book-and-beyond.html

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/e5883-letter.jpg`
2. `http://www.loc.gov/exhibits/red-book-of-carl-jung/the-red-book-and-beyond.html`

Carl Jung: "Words" Quotations Anthology from The Red Book (2019-12-29 03:03)

[1]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition (Philemon)

I must learn that the dregs of my thought, my dreams, are the speech of my soul. I must carry them in my heart, and go back and forth over them in my mind, like the words of the person dearest to me. Dreams are the guiding words of the soul. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 232.

The God of words is cold and dead and shines from afar like the moon, mysteriously and inaccessibly: Let the word return to its creator, to man, and thus the word will be heightened in man. Man should be light, limits, measure. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 271.

My speech is imperfect. Not because I want to shine with words, but out of the impossibility of finding those words, I speak in images. With nothing else can I express the words from the depths. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 230.

Notice what the ancients said in images: the word is a creative act. The ancients said: in the beginning was the Word. Consider this and think upon it. The words that oscillate between nonsense and supreme meaning are the oldest and truest. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 236.

There are hellish webs of words, only words, but what are words? Be tentative with words, value them well, take safe words, words without catches, do not spin them with one another so that no webs arise, for you are the first who is ensnared in them. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 300.

He who breaks the wall of words overthrows Gods and defiles temples. The solitary is a murderer. He murders the people, because he thus thinks and thereby breaks down ancient sacred walls. He calls up the daimons of the boundless. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 270.

With words you pull up the underworld. Word, the paltriest and the mightiest. In words the emptiness and the fullness flow together. Hence the word is an image of God. The word is the greatest and the smallest that man created, just as what is created through man is the greatest and the smallest. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 299.

For our spirit has become an impertinent whore, a slave to words created by men and no longer the divine word itself. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 300.

Dreams are the guiding words of the soul. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 233.

If one could arrive at the truth by learning the words of wisdom, then the world would have been saved already in the remote times of Lao-tze. Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 559-560.

If one could arrive at the truth by learning the words of wisdom, then the world would have been saved already in the remote times of Lao-tze. Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 559-560.

When someone says, in the words of the “Our Father, ” “Thy will be done,” we must find out, if he is capable of taking both the inside and the outside, the ego and the world, into account. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 36.

When we say “Our Father,” the Father also symbolizes that self which is hidden in Heaven, in the unconscious. The Son (Christ) is the consciously achieved self. The Holy Spirit is the Paraclete promised by Christ in the Words “Ye are as gods,” or “Greater things will be done by you.” Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 35.

The primordial experience is the source of [creativity]. ... In itself it offers no words or images, for it is a vision seen “as in a glass, darkly.” It is merely a deep presentiment that strives to find expression. It is like a whirlwind that seizes everything within reach and, by carrying it aloft, assume a visible shape. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul

Love “bears all things” and “endures all things’* (i Cor. 13:7). These words say all there is to be said; nothing can be added to them. For we are in the deepest sense the victims and the instruments of cosmogonic “love.” Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 354

Words are animals alive with a will of their own. Carl Jung. [Citation needed to prove Dr. Jung said this[

When these two aspects [physical and psychological] work together, it may easily happen that the cure takes place in the intermediate realm, in other words that it consists of a complexio oppositorum, like the lapis. In this case the illness is in the fullest sense a stage of the individuation process.... Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 375.

Please give X. my best greetings and tell him-because his love is all too easily injured-he should meditate on Paul's words in the Epistle to the Corinthians: "Love endureth all things." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 120-121.

The "Aurora Consurgens" asks the question: "What is the science? It is the gift and sanctuary of the Deity, it is a divine thing, and is hidden by the Wise in symbolical words and in many ways." Cited in ETH Lectures, Page 175.

We get, it is true, a foggy idea of such terms as Dhyana and Samadhi, the words sound wonderful to us, but such words are no mere concepts, and they mean nothing unless one has oneself experienced the states they denote. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 41.

These words belonged to the autonomous complex. When excited by an external stimulus, complexes can produce sudden confusions, or violent affects, depressions, anxiety-states, etc., or they may express themselves in hallucinations. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 313.

Consider, for example, the word "Unconscious." I have just finished reading a book by a Chinese Zen Buddhist. And it seemed to me that we were talking about the same thing, and that the only difference between us was that we gave different words to the same reality. Carl Jung, Two Friendships, Page 100.

The hidden mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words or depleted by arguments. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 581.

When someone says, in the words of the "Our Father, " "Thy will be done," we must find out, if he is capable of taking both the inside and the outside, the ego and the world, into account. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 39.

The words of the Bible and the sayings of Christ are paradox. We too must be paradox, for only then do we live our lives, only then do we reach completeness and integration of our personalities. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 40.

That is one of the reasons why the Church attracts quite a number of intelligent and responsible men in the secret (or unconscious?) hope that they will be strong enough to carry its meaning and not its words into the future. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 163-174

All statements about and beyond the "ultimate" are anthropomorphisms and, if anyone should think that when he says "God" he has also predicated God, he is endowing his words with magical power. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

The unconscious itself characterizes this "Man" with the same symbols it applies to God, from which we can conclude that this figure corresponds to the Anthropos, in other words God's son, or God represented in the form of a man. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 341-343.

To deal with the coniunctio in human words is a disconcerting task, since you are forced to express and formulate a process taking place "in Mercurio" and not on the level of human thought and human language, i.e., not within the sphere of discriminating consciousness. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 392-396

Your attempts to formulate it are not vain or futile; on the contrary, our labours are witnesses to the living

Mystery, honest attempts to find words for the Ineffable. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 392-396

While I am writing this I observe a little demon trying to abscond my words and even my thoughts and turning them over into the rapidly flowing river of images, surging from the mists of the past, portraits of a little boy, bewildered and wondering at an incomprehensibly beautiful and hideously profane and deceitful world. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 408

This ancient psychological insight expresses the fact that what is enclosed in the mother is a germinating seed that will one day burst through, as you have shown with other words and convincing examples. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 418-420

This can be expressed in other words by saying that there is a relativity of the psychic and physical categories- a relativity of being and of the seemingly axiomatic existence of time and space. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

You will surely have noticed in reading my writings that I do not mince my words and clearly and expressly point out that the regard for mythological parallels is conducive to a religious attitude. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 468

Words have become much too cheap. Being is more difficult and is therefore fondly replaced by verbalizing. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 502-503

With existentialism our words come to an end in complete meaninglessness and our art in total inexpressivity, and our world has acquired the means to blast us into cosmic dust. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533

The living mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words and depleted by arguments. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 581

He felt the need to represent his innermost thoughts in stone and to build a completely primitive dwelling:

“Bollingen was a great matter for me, because words and paper were not real enough. I had to put down a confession in stone.” Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xiii

In words the emptiness and the fullness flow together. Hence the word is an image of God. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 299

We would do well to harbour no illusions in this respect: no understanding by means of words and no imitation can replace actual experience. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 482

Switch off your noisy consciousness and listen quietly inwards and look at the images that appear before your inner eye, or hearken to the words which the muscles of your speech apparatus are trying to form. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 82

Your honest words will be a thorn in the flesh for many. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 235 This accounts for that terrible lack of instinct in modern man, particularly the city-dweller. He lacks all contact with life and the breath of nature. He knows a rabbit or a cow only from the illustrated paper, the dictionary, or the movies, and thinks he knows what it is really like—and is then amazed that cowsheds "smell," because the dictionary didn’t say so. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 882

I must learn that the dregs of my thought, my dreams, are the speech of my soul. I must carry them in my heart, and go back and forth over them in my mind, like the words of the person dearest to me. Dreams are the guiding words of the soul. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 232.

The God of words is cold and dead and shines from afar like the moon, mysteriously and inaccessibly: Let the word return to its creator, to man, and thus the word will be heightened in man. Man should be light, limits, measure. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 271.

My speech is imperfect. Not because I want to shine with words, but out of the impossibility of finding those words, I speak in images. With nothing else can I express the words from the depths. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 230.

Notice what the ancients said in images: the word is a creative act. The ancients said: in the beginning was the Word. Consider this and think upon it. The words that oscillate between nonsense and supreme meaning are the oldest and truest. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 236.

There are hellish webs of words, only words, but what are words? Be tentative with words, value them well, take safe words, words without catches, do not spin them with one another so that no webs arise, for you are the first who is ensnared in them. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 300.

He who breaks the wall of words overthrows Gods and defiles temples. The solitary is a murderer. He murders the people, because he thus thinks and thereby breaks down ancient sacred walls. He calls up the daimons of the boundless. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 270.

With words you pull up the underworld. Word, the paltriest and the mightiest. In words the emptiness and the fullness flow together. Hence the word is an image of God. The word is the greatest and the smallest that man created, just as what is created through man is the greatest and the smallest. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 299.

For our spirit has become an impertinent whore, a slave to words created by men and no longer the divine word itself. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 300.

Dreams are the guiding words of the soul. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 233.

If one could arrive at the truth by learning the words of wisdom, then the world would have been saved already in the remote times of Lao-tze. Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 559-560.

If one could arrive at the truth by learning the words of wisdom, then the world would have been saved already in the remote times of Lao-tze. Carl Jung, Letters Volume 1, Pages 559-560.

When someone says, in the words of the “Our Father, ” “Thy will be done,” we must find out, if he is capable of taking both the inside and the outside, the ego and the world, into account. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 36.

When we say “Our Father,” the Father also symbolizes that self which is hidden in Heaven, in the unconscious. The Son (Christ) is the consciously achieved self. The Holy Spirit is the Paraclete promised by Christ in the Words “Ye are as gods,” or “Greater things will be done by you.” Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 35.

The primordial experience is the source of [creativity]. … In itself it offers no words or images, for it is a vision seen “as in a glass, darkly.” It is merely a deep presentiment that strives to find expression. It is like a whirlwind that seizes everything within reach and, by carrying it aloft, assume a visible shape. Carl Jung; Modern Man in Search of a Soul

Love “bears all things” and “endures all things’* (i Cor. 13:7). These words say all there is to be said; nothing can be added to them. For we are in the deepest sense the victims and the instruments of cosmogonic “love.” Carl Jung; Memories Dreams and Reflections; Page 354

Words are animals alive with a will of their own. Carl Jung. [Citation needed to prove Dr. Jung said this[

When these two aspects [physical and psychological] work together, it may easily happen that the cure takes place in the intermediate realm, in other words that it consists of a complexio oppositorum, like the lapis. In this case the illness is in the fullest sense a stage of the individuation process…. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 375.

Please give X. my best greetings and tell him-because his love is all too easily injured-he should meditate on Paul’s words in the Epistle to the Corinthians: “Love endureth all things.” Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 120-121.

The “Aurora Consurgens” asks the question: “What is the science? It is the gift and sanctuary of the Deity, it is a divine thing, and is hidden by the Wise in symbolical words and in many ways.” Cited in ETH Lectures, Page 175.

We get, it is true, a foggy idea of such terms as Dhyana and Samadhi, the words sound wonderful to us, but such words are no mere concepts, and they mean nothing unless one has oneself experienced the states they denote. Carl Jung, ETH Lecture 9Dec38, Page 41.

These words belonged to the autonomous complex. When excited by an external stimulus, complexes can produce sudden confusions, or violent affects, depressions, anxiety-states, etc., or they may express themselves in hallucinations. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 313.

Consider, for example, the word “Unconscious.” I have just finished reading a book by a Chinese Zen Buddhist. And it seemed to me that we were talking about the same thing, and that the only difference between us was that we gave different words to the same reality. Carl Jung, Two Friendships, Page 100.

The hidden mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words or depleted by arguments. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 581.

When someone says, in the words of the “Our Father, ” “Thy will be done,” we must find out, if he is capable of taking both the inside and the outside, the ego and the world, into account. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 39.

The words of the Bible and the sayings of Christ are paradox. We too must be paradox, for only then do we live our lives, only then do we reach completeness and integration of our personalities. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 40.

That is one of the reasons why the Church attracts quite a number of intelligent and responsible men in the secret (or unconscious?) hope that they will be strong enough to carry its meaning and not its words into the future. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 163-174

All statements about and beyond the “ultimate” are anthropomorphisms and, if anyone should think that when he says “God” he has also predicated God, he is endowing his words with magical power. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 257-264.

The unconscious itself characterizes this “Man” with the same symbols it applies to God, from which we can conclude that this figure corresponds to the Anthropos, in other words God's son, or God represented in the form of a man. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 341-343.

To deal with the coniunctio in human words is a disconcerting task, since you are forced to express and formulate a process taking place "in Mercurio" and not on the level of human thought and human language, i.e., not within the sphere of discriminating consciousness. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 392-396

Your attempts to formulate it are not vain or futile; on the contrary, our labours are witnesses to the living Mystery, honest attempts to find words for the Ineffable. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 392-396

While I am writing this I observe a little demon trying to abscond my words and even my thoughts and turning them over into the rapidly flowing river of images, surging from the mists of the past, portraits of a little boy, bewildered and wondering at an incomprehensibly beautiful and hideously profane and deceitful world. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 408

This ancient psychological insight expresses the fact that what is enclosed in the mother is a germinating seed that will one day burst through, as you have shown with other words and convincing examples. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 418-420

This can be expressed in other words by saying that there is a relativity of the psychic and physical categories- a relativity of being and of the seemingly axiomatic existence of time and space. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 445-449

You will surely have noticed in reading my writings that I do not mince my words and clearly and expressly point out that the regard for mythological parallels is conducive to a religious attitude. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 468

Words have become much too cheap. Being is more difficult and is therefore fondly replaced by verbalizing. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 502-503

With existentialism our words come to an end in complete meaninglessness and our art in total inexpressivity, and our world has acquired the means to blast us into cosmic dust. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 531-533

The living mystery of life is always hidden between Two, and it is the true mystery which cannot be betrayed by words and depleted by arguments. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 581

He felt the need to represent his innermost thoughts in stone and to build a completely primitive dwelling:

"Bollingen was a great matter for me, because words and paper were not real enough. I had to put down a confession in stone." Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Page xiii

In words the emptiness and the fullness flow together. Hence the word is an image of God. Carl Jung, Liber Novus, Page 299

We would do well to harbour no illusions in this respect: no understanding by means of words and no imitation can replace actual experience. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 482

Switch off your noisy consciousness and listen quietly inwards and look at the images that appear before your inner eye, or hearken to the words which the muscles of your speech apparatus are trying to form. Carl Jung, Letters

Vol. 1, Page 82

Your honest words will be a thorn in the flesh for many. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 235

1. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=24UV32W1PJWKM&keywords=jung+the+red+book&qid=1577611607&sprefix=jung+the+red%2Cap`

Wolfgang Pauli on "Periodic Symbols." (2019-12-29 03:30)

[1]
Dear Mr. Jung, 28, IV, 1934

In the meantime 1 have thought more about the problems that were broached in your letters of Oct. and Nov. 1938 and I would like to take the liberty of raising once again the question of the periodic symbols one of which occurred in the dream of 23-1-1938 and which you were kind enough to comment on in your letter.

I think I can take the matter a little farther by referring back to an even earlier dream which is to be found in the material 1 sent to you on an earlier occasion.

Specifically, it is the dream of 13-III- 1936.

This dream affords a certain insight into how a periodic symbol actually comes about for in it a dark man appears (associated by me with the "shadow" archetype). who is cutting pieces out of a zone of light at regular intervals.

Although the two dreams refer to external situations that are very different and thus probably have different meanings. it seems to me nevertheless very instructive to compare the two symbols (see the drawing at that point).

In the 1938 dream. the "oscillation" was horizontal, whereas it is vertical in the 1939 one (but I also know rare cases where it is slanting).

My own idea about this (arrived at purely intuitively) is that these symbols have a connection with the attitude to death. in that one oscillation signifies one human life. but one which is to be interpreted only as part of a larger whole.

For this whole. the usual concept of time applies, except that here there comes into play what you in your letter called the "time concept of the anima."

Whether this idea is definitive or not this periodic symbolism expresses for me a crucial life problem.

Despite your statement to the contrary in your letter of 3.XI.38, I suspect that this symbolism can be historically supported by documentary evidence after all, possibly the mystery cults of late antiquity.

Should anything else occur to you on the vasis of the earlier dream, I would be grateful if you would let me know.

I am also taking the liberty of sending you the promised work on the dream series from the first half of 1937, to complete your collection I recall that I became tired in the spring of 1937 and did not pursue the matter further.

But these problems crop up repeatedly with me from time to time, in one form or another.

With my best wishes for the new year,

Yours sincerely,

W. Pauli Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 24-25

Dear Dr. Jung,

Now that the holidays are over, I should like to ask you whether we may resume our Monday meetings in May; the first Monday in May is the 7th; could you receive me at 12 o'clock on that day?

Unfortunately I find myself having to count on the offer you kindly made with regard to the financial side, and I am most grateful to you for this.

It was with great interest that I read your essay on "Seele und Tod" [Soul and Death] in the April edition of the Europ Revue, especially your remarks on "Telepathy" and the "non-spatial, non-temporal form of being of the psyche," where you even specifically mention my special subject-Theoretical Physics.

It is something that is very important to me, on the one hand, and yet is still largely unclear.

Of course, it all depends on what position one adopts in the relationships of the hypothetical, nonspatial, non-temporal form of being of the psyche to observable occurrences. (For apart from these relationships, one can, from the scientific point of view, adopt any arbitrary approach to the nonspatial, nontemporal form of being of the psyche.)

The general approach of the modem physicist to life phenomena is always the following: It is certainly impossible, through any observation of living beings, to ascertain any direct contradiction to the laws of physics as we know them.

However, in the experiments with living beings-be they of a biological or a psychological nature-the condition of keeping them alive or of preventing them from destroying themselves by scientific experimentation in a way that would annihilate the phenomenon would render impossible the testing of the laws of physics in the narrow sense of the term, particularly with those manifestations that are characteristic of living beings (e.g., adaptation. propagation. heredity). so much so that there is no room left for any new type of law of nature with life phenomena.

Of course. these remarks are intended as a general framework.

As far as the "parapsychological" phenomena in particular are concerned, I certainly do not know of any factual material (and even if I did. God knows whether I would believe any of it).

But in my dreaming and waking fantasies those abstract figures are appearing in ever greater numbers; you know them already (circles or stylized "little men" like hieroglyphics or acoustic rhythms, or alternating light and dark stripes) and it will become a matter of life and death for me to understand more about the objective (communicable) meaning of these symbols than I do at the moment.

I have certain grounds for assuming that only then will it be possible for me to "subjugate" my anima complex (transform it into a "function" in your psychology).

And my phobia about wasps is also very much connected with that.

In the meantime. my relationship to those creatures. which are of such exaggerated importance to me has changed insofar as the object of the fear is starting to become separated from the wasps (or partially at least).

I recognized that behind it lurked the fear of a sort of ecstatic state in which the contents of the unconscious (autonomous part systems) might burst forth contents which because of their strangeness would not be capable of being assimilated by the conscious and might thus have a shattering effect on it.

On the other hand, if an assimilation of the contents did come about as a result of the conscious gradually becoming accustomed to such experiences as those that are concealed behind the word "parapsychology" and symbols like the ones mentioned. then the danger would be averted (and ecstatic outbursts would hardly be likely to occur).

I would very like to discuss this and related series of fantasies with you in person.

Incidentally. you were perfectly correct when you predicted that for me marriage would constellate the "dark side of the collective" and corresponding "representations collectives."

With best wishes.

Yours sincerely.

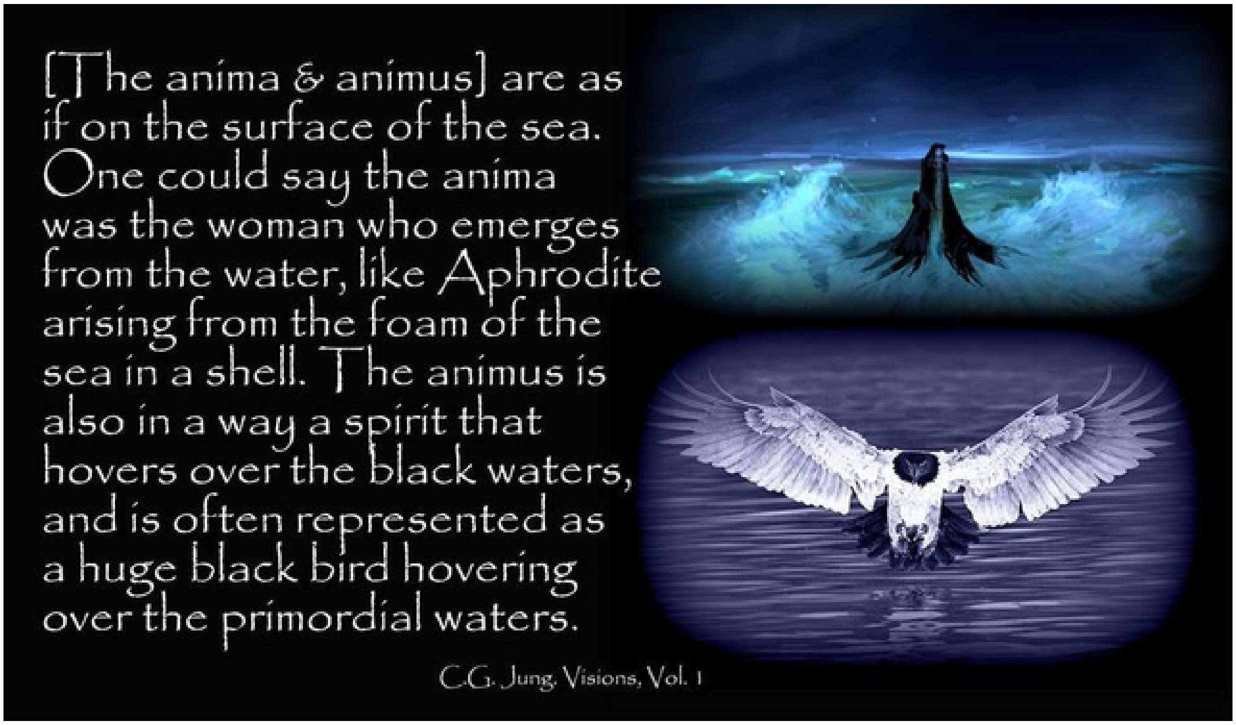
W PAULI Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 25-26

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/fd3fe-12bpauli.jpg`

Carl Jung: The Animus impersonates the unconscious, as the Anima impersonates it in a man's case.

(2019-12-29 04:01)

[1]



[The anima & animus] are as if on the surface of the sea. One could say the anima was the woman who emerges from the water, like Aphrodite arising from the foam of the sea in a shell. The animus is also in a way a spirit that hovers over the black waters, and is often represented as a huge black bird hovering over the primordial waters.

C.G. Jung, Visions, Vol. 1

Dr. Jung:

Yes, those black waters would be the deeper layers of the unconscious.

The animus impersonates the unconscious, as the anima impersonates it in a man's case.

Those figures are as if on the surface of the sea.

One could say the anima was the woman who emerges from the water, like Aphrodite arising from the foam of the sea in a shell.

And the animus is also in a way a spirit that hovers oer the black waters and often represented as such; I have two pictures in my collection where the animus is depicted as a huge black bird hovering over the primordial waters.

As an impersonated of the unconscious, the natural function of the amimus here is to establish a communication between the conscious mind and the collective unconscious.

I admit it is somewhat difficult to have a clear idea of these matters, but I think if you find it in any way hard to understand it is on account of your conception of the collective unconscious.

You perhaps understand the collective unconscious in too abstrace a sense, whereas it is extremely concrete. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Pages 124-125.

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

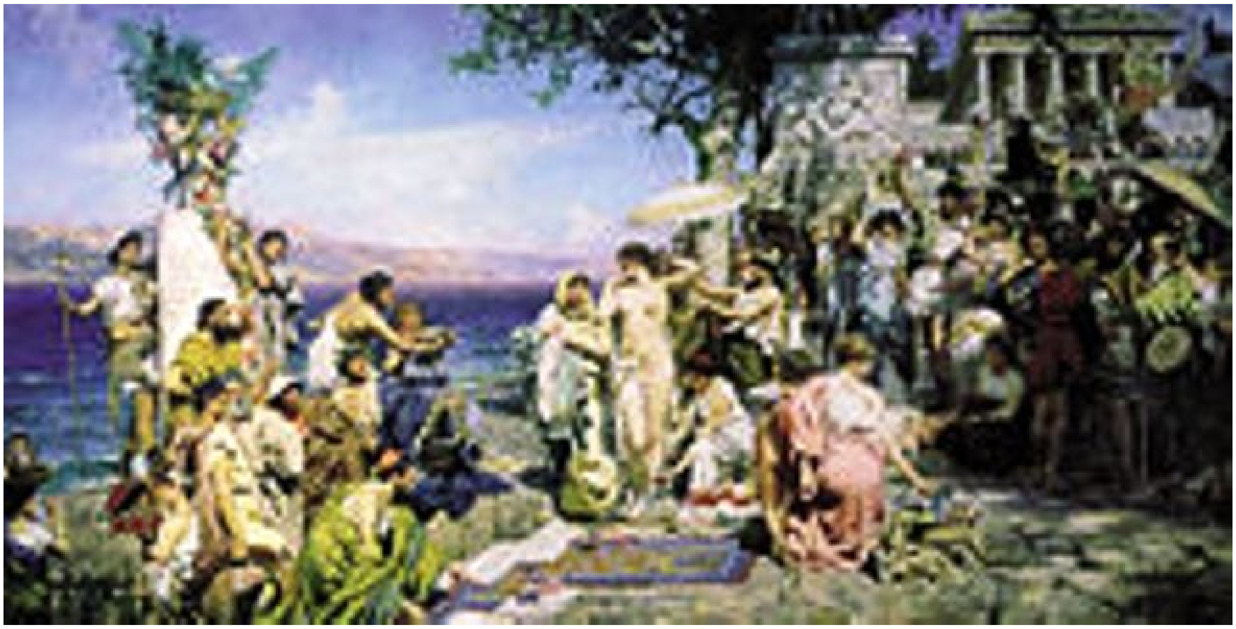
Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/db4f6-1aphrodite2bvisions.jpg`

The spirit of this time has condemned us to haste (2019-12-29 04:15)

[1]



[2]The Red Book: A Reader's Edition (Philemon)

The spirit of this time has condemned us to haste.

You have no more futurity and no more past if you serve the spirit of this time. We need the life of eternity.

We bear the future and the past in the depths.

The future is old and the past is young.

You serve the spirit of this time, and believe that you are able to escape the spirit of the depths.

But the depths do not hesitate any longer and will force you into the mysteries of Christ.

It belongs to this mystery that man is not redeemed through the hero, but becomes a Christ himself

The antecedent example of the saints symbolically teaches us this.

Henryk Siemiradzki. Phryne in Eleusus (1889).

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/96a97-henryk2bsiemiradzki-2bphryne2bin2beleusus2b252818892529.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=24UV32W1PJWKM&keywords=jung+the+red+book&qid=1577611607&sprefix=jung+the+red%2Cap`

For you are a son of the earth (2019-12-29 04:19)

[1]

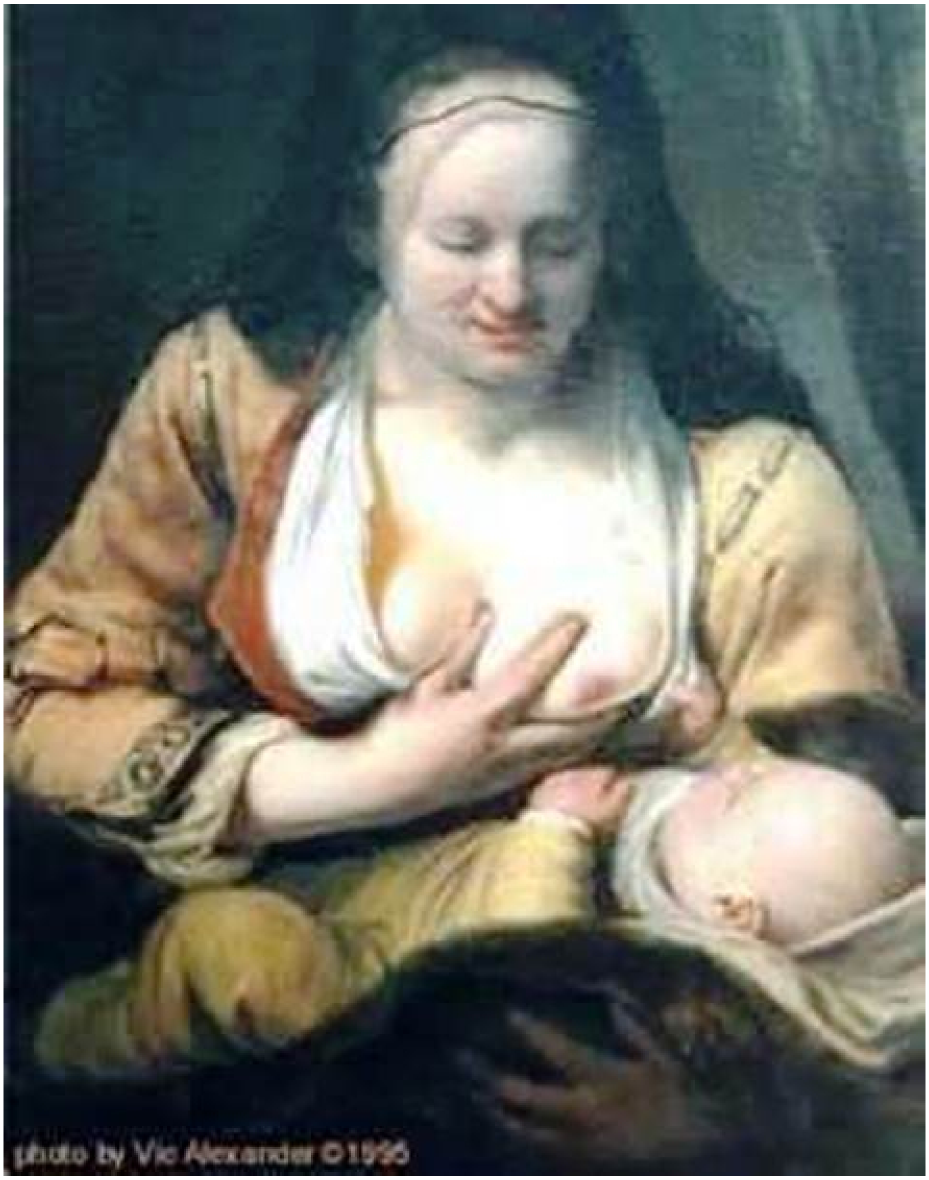

photo by Vic Alexander ©1996

[2]The Red Book: A Reader's Edition (Philemon)

I know that you would like to hear the tidings of he whom things have not lived, but who lived and fulfilled himself.

For you are a son of the earth, sucked dry by the suckling earth, that can suck nothing out of itself, but suckles only from the sun.

Therefore you would like to have tidings of the son of the sun, which shines and does not suckle.

You would like to hear of the son of God, who shone and gave, who begot, and to whom life was born again, as the earth bears the sun green and colorful children.

You would like to hear of him, the radiating savior, who as a son of the sun cut through the webs of the earth, who sundered the magic threads and released those in bondage, who owned himself and was no one's servant, who sucked no one dry, and whose treasure no one exhausted.

You would like to hear of him who was not darkened by the shadow of earth, but illuminated it, who saw the thoughts of all, and whose thoughts no one guessed, who possessed in himself the meaning of all things, and whose meaning no thing could express. Carl Jung; Red Book

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/5de76-suckle.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=24UV32W1PJWKM&keywords=jung+the+red+book&qid=1577611607&sprefix=jung+the+red%2Cap`

E.A. Bennet: He [Jung] mentioned the witch doctor at Bollingen, whose house on the hill we had seen from the boat yesterday. (2019-12-29 04:30)

[2]Meetings with Jung: Conversations Recorded During the Years, 1946-1961

Visit to Zürich on the occasion of C.G.'s eightieth birthday.

Saturday, 23rd July 1955

To Zürich.

Met there by C.G., and then to the Seestrasse in Küsnacht for lunch which was followed by the Jung family celebration of his birthday, in which I joined.

The celebration was a family boat trip on the Stafa from Zürich to Schmerikon; the lake is 43 kilometres long.

There were thirty eight people on board – so many boys and grandchildren; the two little great grandchildren came to Küsnacht but were too young to come on the boat.

Ruth Bailey and myself were the only people present who were not members of the Jung family.

One of the little grandsons stood up completely freely and cheerfully and made a speech to C.G.; he had it typed out and delivered it splendidly.

Later we had a quiz, Fragebogen, with all the questions about C.G.

All the time there were wonderful refreshments, wine, game and fruit ad lib.

We alighted at Ufenau, the island near Rapperswil, and went to the church.

This island belongs to the monastery at Einsiedeln and they have given C.G. permission to visit it.

It is famous as the place where Hutten, a friend of Luther's, spent his last years and died.

There are two churches, both old; the larger of the two is Norman, about a thousand years old, but it was closed.

Then we continued up the lake and opposite C.G.'s Tower at Bollingen three of his grandsons dived off the ship from the roof over the deck, quite unexpectedly.

The ship swung round and stopped, and they climbed on board again amid cheers.

As they dived two fish eagles flew over high up.

Then we went on to Schmerikon, to the Hotel Bad where I have stayed on several visits.

The host was Herr Kuster, and in the 'cellar', or lower room, a feast was prepared.

Upstairs there was a wedding party.

We had a wonderful dinner, interspersed with incidents.

To begin with C.G.'s son-in-law, Fritz Baumann, made a speech which evoked great applause; then various groups of grandchildren 'did' items, such as enacting details of the life at Bollingen, and there were plenty of family jokes.

Another 'act' was a simulated mixture, or mix-up, of four 'radio programmes': four of the children, two boys and two girls, came and stood in front of C.G. and Mrs. Jung and did a turn.

Each was giving, in his or her act, a radio programme; one was on philosophy, one on farming, one (I think) on housekeeping, and one on Analytical Psychology.

These 'programmes', of course, got mixed up with amusing complications.

Then from the floor, on a large dish, they lifted a huge ham and presented it to C.G. who drew out his familiar pocket knife and cut some slices from it.

He always carried this knife.

The children did their acts extraordinarily well; they entered into the spirit of it all very naturally and their spontaneity impressed me very much.

Sunday, 24th July 1955

Chat in the morning with C.G. after breakfast.

He mentioned the witch doctor at Bollingen, whose house on the hill we had seen from the boat yesterday.

The witch doctor has a very ancient book which was given to him by a monk of Einsiedeln who liked him when he was a boy.

It is a reprint of an older volume, and contains the so-called sixth and seventh books of Moses.

This is a spurious writing which contains black magic and incantations about witches.

The witch doctor calms people, and so helps them.

C.G. saw him at work once on a farm.

The farmer and his two sons stood at the corner of the big barn, and the witch doctor stood at the other.

He had his prayer book and read, and he wore a blue ribbon round his neck; C.G. could not get near enough to see what was hung on the ribbon as he had to stay more or less unnoticed at the side.

Monday, 25th July 1955

C.G.J.'s eightieth birthday Celebration

There was a reception at 10.30 a.m. in the Dolder Grand Hotel; I went with Barbara Hannah.

The notice in the hotel hall was 'Cocktail Party 10.30'!

We had some drinks and the place was crowded with people at little tables.

There were speeches by C. A. Meier and others, then the presentation of the Festschrift and of the Codex Jung, followed by more speeches.

The Rector of Basel University spoke, and so did Baudouin from Lausanne – nice speech. He mentioned the old Swiss custom of erecting a small pine tree decorated with ribbons on a building, when the structure has reached the point when it is possible to put the roof on; then there is a feast.

This occasion was like that; Jung's building had gone up to its present height and had taken shape, but it was not yet complete and much may still be added.

We returned for lunch at the Seestrasse, and I chatted with Ruth Bailey in the garden afterwards while C.G. and Mrs. Jung rested.

Later in the afternoon we all talked after tea, sitting round. C.G. was very pleased with the seal I had given him.

This was two days ago, and since then he had kept it in his pocket.

With it, in the same chamois leather bag, he had a little jade Chinese wishing wheel (it looked eighteenth century and was celadon jade with a movable centre).

While we were talking he had the seal in his hand and was looking at it with Mrs. Jung; he said she must get a yellow silk cord to hang it on and pointed out that the stone had been selected because of its dual colour, to carry the idea of the opposites.

In the evening the big dinner was held.

About seventy-five people were there.

To my great surprise I was placed at C.G.'s right hand at the main table; on my right was his daughter, Mrs. Marianne Niehus.

There were ten people at this big round table; Mrs. Jung was there also, with Michael Fordham to her right.

There were several speeches at the dinner, including one from the Mayor of Zürich, and a lot of jokes about the relative merits of Basel and Zürich, and some allusions to Berne.

Wednesday, 26th July 1955 This was C.G.'s actual birthday.

We had a meeting in the morning at the Institute4 regarding the formation of the International Association for Analytical Psychology.

In the afternoon there was a trip on the lake on a chartered steamer; about two hundred people were there.

To everyone's joy and surprise C.G., with Ruth Bailey, joined the ship at Meilen; they left it again at Rapperswil.

Many had been sure they had seen C.G. in the garden of his house as the ship passed, but this could not have been the case.

On the return journey I left the ship at Küsnacht (having nearly got left behind on the boat) with a big bunch of flowers and a stick with '8o' carved on it for C.G. – Meier threw a bottle to me from the deck, which I caught; I chucked it back to Fowler McCormick and he also caught it – great cheers.

I was given a lift to the Jungs' house and on arrival found the local band of Küsnacht playing in the garden.

There were about twenty players with the usual instruments, brass and others.

As they played some of the family party danced; C.G. danced twice, once with his wife and again with one of his daughters.

Later he told me, 'I never thought I would dance again!'

He was in great form.

When the band dispersed we went into the house, and for a couple of hours or more there followed the most wonderful evening.

Seven or eight of the Jungs' children and grandchildren sang and played; a niece, Frau Homberger, played the piano and her husband sang with the others.

Several of the grandsons were very lively, entering into the spirit of the occasion.

Then some left, and C.G. went out and returned with a selection of gramophone records; they were all of Negro spirituals.

One of his grandsons worked the gramophone and C.G. sat beside it, listening and nodding his head in time with the music.

Eventually, at about midnight, the party came to an end; it was a remarkable and impressive family evening.

27th July 1955

In the garden, writing about the birthday proceedings for the B.M.J. Several talks with C.G. ...

In the evening Franz Riklin took me to Meilen for the first meeting of the provisional committee of the proposed International Association; this we held in a hotel in Meilen overlooking the lake.

There were a few discordant elements which stemmed from the London group, and one or two people took a very negative attitude.

Riklin and Meier were amazed, but I was not.

Returned to the Jungs' house at 1 a.m., brought by Riklin.

28th July 1955

Moved to the Waldhaus Dolder Hotel.

At noon Fowler McCormick called for me.

I was sorry to go, for it had been one of the most eventful visits to the Jungs I had had.

Mrs. Jung said I must certainly stay with them when I come over to lecture next February; and C.G. also said warmly, 'Well, goodbye, and be sure to come back soon.'

Fowler McCormick took me to Schaffhausen, where we had an excellent lunch and then visited the Rhine Falls.

He has an Oldsmobile car and we had a lovely drive in sunny weather.

29th July 1955

At the Waldhaus Dolder.

Went into town in the morning, shopping; called at Rolf Hofer's office and got his secretary to type a short article on Jung for the B.M.J.

She did this and posted it for the evening air mail to get to London on Saturday morning.

No lunch; but tea with Fowler McCormick at the Congress House.

Wet.

McCormick talked of synchronicity, and then mentioned two of his dreams in which he had been impressed by the time element, for in both a later event carried the dream further, and it was immediately linked in his mind with the dream.

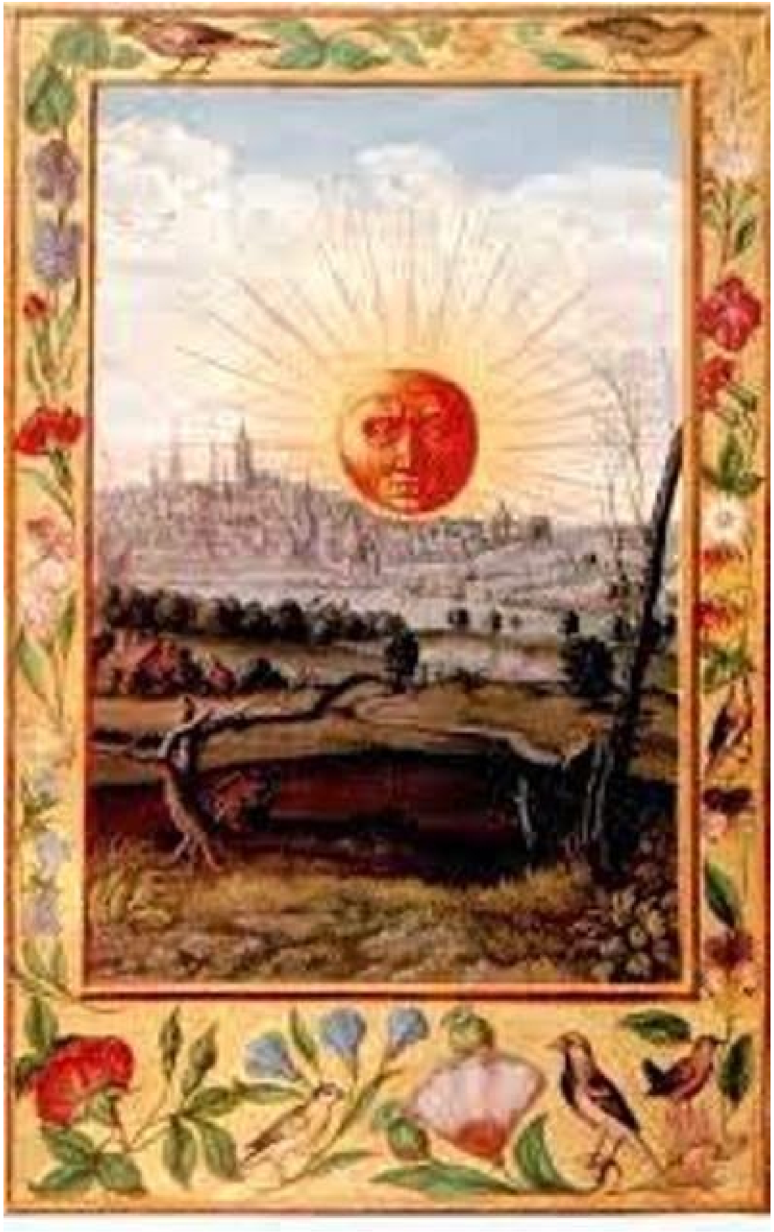
The most striking of these was a dream in which he saw two aeroplanes weaving a cord (or rope) in the sky in such a way that they joined Europe and America.

He saw this as a commentary upon his life, divided between the continents and somehow coming together, for he is constantly passing from one to the other. E.A. Bennet, Conversations with Jung, Pages 130-143

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/aeec1-432bbennet.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Meetings-Jung-Conversations-Recorded-1946-1961/dp/3856305017/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2LYCUG5MPW2SN&keywords=carl+jung+bennet+conversations&qid=15`

Carl Jung: "Hermeticism is not something you choose..." (2019-12-29 04:41)

[1]



[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Rudolf Bernoulli

Dear Colleague, 5 October 1944

Your very friendly letter gave me great pleasure.

I am indeed slowly getting better, but it is real slow! Fortunately I can go on with my scientific work and am at present engrossed in the secret of the Chymical Wedding.

Nowadays, certainly, the number of hermeticsm has grown increasingly small.

But it was never particularly large, because the aurea catena3 they write about does not run through schools and conscious tradition but through the unconscious.

Hermeticism is not something you choose, it is a destiny, just as the ecclesia spiritualis is not an organization but an electio.

I hope that your health, too, which had been shaky for so long, has now righted itself again.

With best regards,

Ever sincerely yours,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 351.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/bcd1f-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=F4433TYNC59Y&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577638263&sprefix=jung+le%2`

Carl Jung on "Instincts" - Anthology (2019-12-29 04:42) are you happy?

C.G. Jung CW7, par.32
Too much of the animal distorts the civilized man, too much civilization makes sick animals.

Moral law is nothing other than an outward manifestation of man's innate urge to dominate and control himself. This impulse to domestication and civilization is lost in the dim, unfathomable depths of man's evolutionary history and can never be conceived as the consequence of laws imposed from without, Man himself, obeying his instincts, created his laws. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 486

Has mankind ever really got away from myths? Everyone who has his eyes and wits about him can see that the world is dead, cold, and unending. Never yet has he beheld a God, or been compelled to require the existence of such a God from the evidence of his senses. On the contrary, it needed the strongest inner compulsion, which can only be explained by the irrational force of instinct, for man to invent those religious beliefs whose absurdity was long since pointed out by Tertullian. In the same way one can withhold the material content of primitive myths from a child but not take from him the need for mythology, and still less his ability to manufacture it for himself. One could almost say that if all the world's traditions were cut off at a single blow, the whole of mythology and the whole history of religion would start all over again with the next generation. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 30

One might expect, perhaps, that a man of genius would luxuriate in the greatness of his own thoughts and renounce the cheap approbation of the rabble he despises; yet he succumbs to the more powerful impulse of the herd instinct. His seeking and his finding, his heart's cry, are meant for the herd and must be heeded by them. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 14

There can be no doubt that love has an instinctual determinant; it is an activity peculiar to mankind, and, if the language of religion defines God as "love," there is always the great danger of confusing the love which works in man with the workings of God Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 97

Out of a playful movement of elements whose interrelations are not immediately apparent, patterns arise which an observant and critical intellect can only evaluate afterwards. The creation of something new is not accomplished by the intellect but by the play instinct acting from inner necessity. The creative mind plays with the objects it loves. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 197

The dammed-up instinctual forces in civilized man are immensely destructive and far more dangerous than the instincts of the primitive, who in a modest degree is constantly living out his negative instincts. Consequently no war of the historical past can rival in grandiose horror the wars of civilized nations. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 230

Could the longing for a god be a passion welling up from our darkest, instinctual nature, a passion unswayed by any outside influences, deeper and stronger perhaps than the love for a human person? Carl Jung, CW 7, para 214.

Disalliance with the unconscious is synonymous with loss of instinct and rootlessness. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 195

Now, it is by no means the special prerogative of the Christian Church to try to make it possible for the individual to detach himself from his original, animal-like condition; the Church is simply the latest, and specifically Western, form of an instinctive striving that is probably as old as mankind itself. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 172

Love may be effectively used as a means for gaining the upper hand. Love and good behaviour are, from the standpoint of the power-instinct, known to be a choice means to this end. Virtuousness often serves to compel recognition from others Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 50

Eros is a questionable fellow and will always remain so, whatever the legislation of the future may have to say about it. He belongs on one side to man's primordial animal nature which will endure as long as man has an animal body. On the other side he is related to the highest forms of the spirit. But he only thrives when spirit and instinct are in right harmony. If one or the other aspect is lacking to him, the result is injury or at least a lopsidedness that may easily veer towards the pathological. Too much of the animal distorts the civilized man, too much civilization makes sick animals. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 32

Morality was not brought down on tables of stone from Sinai and imposed on the people, but is a function of the human soul, as old as humanity itself. Morality is not imposed from outside; we have it in ourselves from the start —not the law, but our moral nature without which the collective life of human society would be impossible. That is why morality is found at all levels of society. It is the instinctive regulator of action which also governs the collective life of the herd. But moral laws are only valid within a compact human group. Beyond that, they cease. There the old truth runs: Homo homini lupus. With the growth of civilization we have succeeded in subjecting ever larger human groups to the rule of the same morality, without, however, having yet brought the moral code to prevail beyond the social frontiers, that is, in the free space between mutually independent societies. There, as of old, reign lawlessness and license and mad immorality—though of course it is only the enemy who dares to say it out loud. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 30

The archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415

In spite of the fact that the majority of people do not know why the body needs salt, everyone demands it nonetheless because of an instinctive need. It is the same with the things of the psyche. That is the working of the intellect. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 793

In archetypal conceptions and instinctual perceptions, spirit and matter confront one another on the psychic plane. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 420.

If so, the position of the archetype would be located beyond the psychic sphere, analogous to the position of physiological instinct, which is immediately rooted in the stuff of the organism and, with its psychoid nature, forms the bridge to matter in general. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 420.

Differentiation of function from compulsive instinctuality, and its voluntary application, are of paramount importance in the maintenance of life. Carl Jung, CW 8, Paras 371-381.

Spirit and instinct are by nature autonomous and both limit in equal measure the applied field of the will. Carl Jung, CW 8, Paras 371-381.

The archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415.

Childhood is important not only because various warpings of instinct have their origin there, but because this is the time when, terrifying or encouraging, those far-seeing dreams and images appear before the soul of the child, shaping his whole destiny, as well as those retrospective intuitions which reach back far beyond the range of childhood experience into the life of our ancestors. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 98

Just as, in its lower reaches, the psyche loses itself in the organic-material substrate, so in its upper reaches it resolves itself into a "spiritual" form about which we know as little as we do about the functional basis of instinct. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 380

Psychologically, however, the archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415

What would the spirit be if it had no peer among the instincts to oppose it? It would be nothing but an empty form. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 107

Reflection is the cultural instinct par excellence, and its strength is shown in the power of culture to maintain itself in the face of untamed nature. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 115.

The archetype or primordial image might suitably be described as the instinct’s perception of itself, or as the self portrait of the instinct, in exactly the same way as consciousness is an inward perception of the objective life process. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 277

What would the spirit be if it had no peer among the instincts to oppose it? It would be nothing but an empty form. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 107

The individual ego could be conceived as the commander of a small army in the struggle with his environment—a war not infrequently on two fronts, before him the struggle for existence, in the rear the struggle against his own rebellious instinctual nature. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 693

It is just man's turning away from instinct—his opposing himself to instinct—that creates consciousness. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750

Instinct is nature and seeks to perpetuate nature, whereas consciousness can only seek culture or its denial. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750

Just as the "psychic infra-red," the biological instinctual psyche, gradually passes over into the physiology of the organism and thus merges with its chemical and physical conditions, so the "psychic ultra-violet," the archetype, describes a field which exhibits none of the peculiarities of the physiological and yet, in the last analysis, can no longer be regarded as psychic. Carl Jung, CW 8, Page 420.

The unconscious . . . is the source of the instinctual forces of the psyche and of the forms or categories that regulate them, namely the archetypes. Carl Jung, CW 8, par. 342.

Instinct is nature and seeks to perpetuate nature, whereas consciousness can only seek culture or its denial. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750

The archetype as an image of instinct is a spiritual goal toward which the whole nature of man strives; it is the sea to which all rivers wend their way, the prize which the hero wrests from the fight with the dragon. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 415

We could call sexuality the spokesman of the instincts, which is why from the spiritual standpoint sex is the chief antagonist, not because sexual indulgence is in itself more immoral than excessive eating and drinking, avarice, tyranny, and other extravagances, but because the spirit senses in sexuality a counterpart equal and indeed akin to itself. For just as the spirit would press sexuality, like every other instinct, into its service, so sexuality has an ancient claim upon the spirit, which it once—in procreation, pregnancy, birth, and childhood—contained within itself, and whose passion the spirit can never dispense with in its creations. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 107

The spiritual principle does not, strictly speaking, conflict with instinct as such but only with blind instinctuality, which really amounts to an unjustified preponderance of the instinctual nature over the spiritual. The spiritual appears in the psyche also as an instinct, indeed as a real passion, a "consuming fire," as Nietzsche once expressed it. It is not derived from any other instinct, as the psychologists of instinct would have us believe, but is a principle siti generis, a specific and necessary form of instinctual power. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 108

Man living in the state of nature is in no sense merely "natural" like an animal, but sees, believes, fears, worships things whose meaning is not at all discoverable from the conditions of his natural environment. Their underlying meaning leads us in fact far away from all that is natural, obvious, and easily intelligible, and quite often contrasts most sharply with the natural instincts. We have only to think of all those gruesome rites and customs against which every natural feeling rises in revolt, or of all those beliefs and ideas which stand in insuperable contradiction to the evidence of the facts. All this drives us to the assumption that the spiritual principle (whatever that may be) asserts itself against the merely natural conditions with incredible strength. One can say that this too is "natural," and that both have their origin in one and the same "nature." I do not in the least doubt this origin, but must point out that this "natural" something consists of a conflict between two principles, to which you can give this or that name according to taste, and that this opposition is the expression, and perhaps also the basis, of the tension we call psychic energy. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 98

A science can never be a Weltanschauung but merely the tool with which to make one. Whether we take this tool in hand or not depends on the sort of Weltanschauung we already have. For no one is without a Weltanschauung of some sort. Even in an extreme case, he will at least have the Weltanschauung that education and environment have forced on him. If this tells him, to quote Goethe, that "the highest joy of man should be the growth of personality," he will unhesitatingly seize upon science and its conclusions, and with this as a tool will build himself a Weltanschauung—to his own edification. But if his hereditary convictions tell him that science is not a tool but an end in itself, he will follow the watchword that has become more and more prevalent during the last one hundred and fifty years and has proved to be the decisive one in practice. Here and there single individuals have desperately resisted it, for to their way of thinking the meaning of life culminates in the perfection of the human personality and not in the differentiation of techniques, which inevitably leads to an extremely one-sided development of a single instinct, for instance the instinct for knowledge. If science is an end in itself, man's raison d'etre lies in being a mere intellect. If art is an end in itself, then his sole value lies in the imaginative faculty, and the intellect is consigned to the lumber-room. If making money is an end in itself, both science and art can quietly shut up shop. No one can deny that our modern consciousness, in pursuing these mutually exclusive ends, has become hopelessly fragmented. The consequence is that people are trained to develop one quality only; they become tools themselves. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 696

A dream, like every element in the psychic structure, is a product of the total psyche. Hence we may expect to find in dreams everything that has ever been of significance in the life of humanity. Just as human life is not limited to this or that fundamental instinct, but builds itself up from a multiplicity of instincts, needs, desires, and physical and psychic conditions, etc., so the dream cannot be explained by this or that element in it, however beguilingly simple such an explanation may appear to be. We can be certain that it is incorrect, because no simple theory of instinct will ever be capable of grasping the human psyche, that mighty and mysterious thing, nor, consequently, its exponent, the dream. In order to do anything like justice to dreams, we need an interpretive equipment that must be laboriously fitted together from all branches of the humane sciences. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 527

How are we to explain religious processes, for instance, whose nature is essentially symbolical? In abstract form, symbols are religious ideas; in the form of action, they are rites or ceremonies. They are the manifestation and expression of excess libido. At the same time they are stepping-stones to new activities, which must be called cultural in order to distinguish them from the instinctual functions that run their regular course according to natural law. Carl Jung, CW 8, para 91.

The individual ego could be conceived as the commander of a small army in the struggle with his environment—a war not infrequently on two fronts, before him the struggle for existence, in the rear the struggle against his own rebellious instinctual nature. Even to those of us who are not pessimists our existence feels more like a struggle than anything else. The state of peace is a desideratum, and when a man has found peace with himself and the world it is indeed a noteworthy event, Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 693

In spite or perhaps because of its affinity with instinct, the archetype represents the authentic element of spirit, but a spirit which is not to be identified with the human intellect, since it is the latter's spiritus rector. The essential content of all mythologies and all religions and all isms is archetypal. The archetype is spirit or anti-spirit what it ultimately proves to be depends on the attitude of the human mind. Archetype and instinct are the most polar opposites imaginable, as can easily be seen when one compares a man who is ruled by his instinctual drives with a man who is seized by the spirit. But, just as between all opposites there obtains so close a bond that no position can be established or even thought of without its corresponding negation, so in this case also "les extremes se touchent." Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 406

It is just man’s turning away from instinct—his opposing himself to instinct—that creates consciousness. Instinct is nature and seeks to perpetuate nature, whereas consciousness can only seek culture or its denial. Even when we turn back to nature, inspired by a Rousseauesque longing, we "cultivate" nature. As long as we are still submerged in nature we are unconscious, and we live in the security of instinct which knows no problems. Everything in us that still belongs to nature shrinks away from a problem, for its name is doubt, and wherever doubt holds sway there is uncertainty and the possibility of divergent ways. And where several ways seem possible, there we have turned away from the certain guidance of instinct and are handed over to fear. For consciousness is now called upon to do that which nature has always done for her children namely, to give a certain, unquestionable, and unequivocal decision. And here we are beset by an all-too-human fear that consciousness—our Promethean conquest—may in the end not be able to serve us as well as nature. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750

When we must deal with problems, we instinctively resist trying the way that leads through obscurity and darkness. We wish to hear only of unequivocal results, and completely forget that these results can only be brought about when we have ventured into and emerged again from the darkness. But to penetrate the darkness we must summon all the powers of enlightenment that consciousness can offer. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 752

If psychic life consisted only of self-evident matters of fact—which on a primitive level is still the case—we could content ourselves with a sturdy empiricism. The psychic life of civilized man, however, is full of problems; we cannot even think of it except in terms of problems. Our psychic processes are made up to a large extent of reflections, doubts, experiments, all of which are almost completely foreign to the unconscious, instinctive mind of primitive man. It is the growth of consciousness which we must thank for the existence of problems; they are the Danaan gift of civilization, Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 750

Just as the "psychic infra-red," the biological instinctual psyche, gradually passes over into the physiology of the organism and thus merges with its chemical and physical conditions, so the "psychic ultra-violet," the archetype, describes a field which exhibits none of the peculiarities of the physiological and yet, in the last analysis, can no longer be regarded as psychic. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 420

To the extent that the archetypes intervene in the shaping of conscious contents by regulating, modifying, and motivating them, they act like instincts. It is therefore very natural to suppose that these factors are connected with the instincts and to enquire whether the typical situational patterns which these collective form-principles apparently represent are not in the end identical with the instinctual patterns, namely, with the patterns of behaviour. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 104

While we are all agreed that murder, stealing, and ruthlessness of any kind are obviously inadmissible, there is nevertheless what we call a "sexual question." We hear nothing of a murder question or a rage question; social reform is never invoked against those who wreak their bad tempers on their fellow men. Yet these things are all examples of instinctual behaviour, and the necessity for their suppression seems to us self-evident. Only in regard to sex do we feel the need of a question mark. This points to a doubt —the doubt whether our existing moral concepts and the legal institutions founded on them are really adequate and suited to their purpose. No intelligent person will deny that in this field opinion is sharply divided. Indeed, there would be no problem at all if public opinion were united about it. It is obviously a reaction against a too rigorous morality. It is not simply an outbreak of primitive instinctually; such outbreaks, as we know, have never yet bothered themselves with moral laws and moral problems. There are, rather, serious misgivings as to whether our existing moral views have dealt fairly with the nature of sex. From this doubt there naturally arises a legitimate interest in any attempt to understand the nature of sex more truly and deeply. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 105

Childhood is important not only because various warpings of instinct have their origin there, but because this is the time when, terrifying or encouraging, those far-seeing dreams and images appear before the soul of the child, shaping his whole destiny, as well as those retrospective intuitions which reach back far beyond the range of childhood experience into the life of our ancestors. Thus in the child psyche the natural condition is already opposed by a "spiritual" one. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 98

Obviously it is in the youthful period of life that we have most to gain from a thorough recognition of the instinctual side. A timely recognition of sexuality, for instance, can prevent that neurotic suppression of it which keeps a man unduly withdrawn from life, or else forces him into a wretched and unsuitable way of living with which he is bound to come into conflict. Proper recognition and appreciation of normal instincts leads the young person into life and entangles him with fate, thus involving him in life's necessities and the consequent sacrifices and efforts through which his character is developed and his experience matured. For the mature person, however, the continued expansion of life is obviously not the right principle, because the descent towards life's afternoon demands simplification, limitation, and intensification—in other words, individual culture. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 113

Just as the "psychic infra-red," the biological instinctual psyche, gradually passes over into the physiology of the organism and thus merges with its chemical and physical conditions, so the "psychic ultra-violet," the archetype, describes a field which exhibits none of the peculiarities of the physiological and yet, in the last analysis, can no longer be regarded as psychic. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 420

To the extent that the archetypes intervene in the shaping of conscious contents by regulating, modifying, and motivating them, they act like instincts. It is therefore very natural to suppose that these factors are connected with the instincts and to enquire whether the typical situational patterns which these collective form-principles apparently represent are not in the end identical with the instinctual patterns, namely, with the patterns of behaviour. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 104

While we are all agreed that murder, stealing, and ruthlessness of any kind are obviously inadmissible, there is nevertheless what we call a "sexual question." We hear nothing of a murder question or a rage question; social reform is never invoked against those who wreak their bad tempers on their fellow men. Yet these things are all examples of instinctual behaviour, and the necessity for their suppression seems to us self-evident. Only in regard to sex do we feel the need of a question mark. This points to a doubt —the doubt whether our existing moral concepts and the legal institutions founded on them are really adequate and suited to their purpose. No intelligent person will deny that in this field opinion is sharply divided. Indeed, there would be no problem at all if public opinion were united about it. It is obviously a reaction against a too rigorous morality. It is not simply an outbreak of primitive instinctually; such outbreaks, as we know, have never yet bothered themselves with moral laws and moral problems. There are, rather, serious misgivings as to whether our existing moral views have dealt fairly with the nature of sex. From this doubt there naturally arises a legitimate interest in any attempt to understand the nature of sex more truly and deeply. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 105

Childhood is important not only because various warpings of instinct have their origin there, but because this is the time when, terrifying or encouraging, those far-seeing dreams and images appear before the soul of the child, shaping his whole destiny, as well as those retrospective intuitions which reach back far beyond the range of childhood experience into the life of our ancestors. Thus in the child psyche the natural condition is already opposed by a "spiritual" one. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 98

Obviously it is in the youthful period of life that we have most to gain from a thorough recognition of the instinctual side. A timely recognition of sexuality, for instance, can prevent that neurotic suppression of it which keeps a man unduly withdrawn from life, or else forces him into a wretched and unsuitable way of living with which he is bound to come into conflict. Proper recognition and appreciation of normal instincts leads the young person into life and entangles him with fate, thus involving him in life's necessities and the consequent sacrifices and efforts through which his character is developed and his experience matured. For the mature person, however, the continued expansion of life is obviously not the right principle, because the descent towards life’s afternoon demands simplification, limitation, and intensification—in other words, individual culture. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 113

Obviously it is in the youthful period of life that we have most to gain from a thorough recognition of the instinctual side. A timely recognition of sexuality, for instance, can prevent that neurotic suppression of it which keeps a man unduly withdrawn from life, or else forces him into a wretched and unsuitable way of living with which he is bound to come into conflict. Proper recognition and appreciation of normal instincts leads the young person into life and entangles him with fate, thus involving him in life’s necessities and the consequent sacrifices and efforts through which his character is developed and his experience matured. For the mature person, however, the continued expansion of life is obviously not the right principle, because the descent towards life’s afternoon demands simplification, limitation, and intensification- in other words, individual culture. A man in the first half of life with its biological orientation can usually, thanks to the youthfulness of his whole organism, afford to expand his life and make something of value out of it. But the man in the second half of life is oriented towards culture, the diminishing powers of his organism allowing him to subordinate his instincts to cultural goals. Not a few are wrecked during the transition from the biological to the cultural sphere. Our collective education makes practically no provision for this transitional period. Concerned solely with the education of the young, we disregard the education of the adult, of whom it is always assumed-on what grounds who can say?-that he needs no more education. There is an almost total lack of guidance for this extraordinarily important transition from the biological to the cultural attitude, for the transformation of energy from the biological form into the cultural form. This transformation process is an individual one and cannot be enforced by general rules and maxims. It is achieved by means of the symbol. Symbol-formation is a fundamental problem that cannot be discussed here. I must refer the reader to Chapter V in my Psychological Types, where I have dealt with this question in detail.” Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 113

Obviously it is in the youthful period of life that we have most to gain from a thorough recognition of the instinctual side. A timely recognition of sexuality, for instance, can prevent that neurotic suppression of it which keeps a man unduly withdrawn from life, or else forces him into a wretched and unsuitable way of living with which he is bound to come into conflict. Proper recognition and appreciation of normal instincts leads the young person into life and entangles him with fate, thus involving him in life’s necessities and the consequent sacrifices and efforts through which his character is developed and his experience matured. For the mature person, however, the continued expansion of life is obviously not the right principle, because the descent towards life’s afternoon demands simplification, limitation, and intensification- in other words, individual culture. A man in the first half of life with its biological orientation can usually, thanks to the youthfulness of his whole organism, afford to expand his life and make something of value out of it. But the man in the second half of life is oriented towards culture, the diminishing powers of his organism allowing him to subordinate his instincts to cultural goals. Not a few are wrecked during the transition from the biological to the cultural sphere. Our collective education makes practically no provision for this transitional period. Concerned solely with the education of the young, we disregard the education of the adult, of whom it is always assumed-on what grounds who can say?-that he needs no more education. There is an almost total lack of guidance for this extraordinarily important transition from the biological to the cultural attitude, for the transformation of energy from the biological form into the cultural form. This transformation process is an individual one and cannot be enforced by general rules and maxims. It is achieved by means of the symbol. Symbol-formation is a fundamental problem that cannot be discussed here. I must refer the reader to Chapter V in my Psychological Types, where I have dealt with this question in detail.” Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 113

The ideas of the moral order and of God belong to the ineradicable substrate of the human soul. That is why any honest psychology, which is not blinded by the garish conceits of enlightenment, must come to terms with these facts. They cannot be explained away and killed with irony. In physics we can do without a God-image, but in psychology it is a definite fact that has got to be reckoned with, just as we have to reckon with "affect," "instinct," "mother," etc. It is the fault of the everlasting contamination of object and image that people can make no conceptual distinction between "God" and "God-image," and therefore think that when one speaks of the "God-image" one is speaking of God and offering "theological" explanations. It is not for psychology, as a science, to demand a hypostatization of the God-image. But the facts being what they are, it does have to reckon with the existence of a God-image. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 528

Man finds himself simultaneously driven to act and free to reflect. This contrariety in his nature has no moral significance, for instinct is not in itself bad any more than spirit is good. Both can be both. Negative electricity is as good as positive electricity first and foremost it is electricity. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 406

It is undoubtedly true that instinctually conflicts with our moral views most frequently and most conspicuously in the realm of sex. The conflict between infantile instinctuality and ethics can never be avoided. It is, it seems to me, the sine qua non of psychic energy. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 105

The conflict between ethics and sex today is not just a collision between instinctuality and morality, but a struggle to give an instinct its rightful place in our lives, and to recognize in this instinct a power which seeks expression and evidently may not be trifled with, and therefore cannot be made to fit in with our well-meaning moral laws. Sexuality is not mere instinctuality; it is an indisputably creative power that is not only the basic cause of our individual lives, but a very serious factor in our psychic life as well. Today we know only too well the grave consequences that sexual disturbances can bring in their train. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 107

More especially the threat to one’s inmost self from dragons and serpents points to the danger of the newly acquired consciousness being swallowed up again by the instinctive psyche, the unconscious. Carl Jung; CW 9i; para. 282.

Notwithstanding its monstrosity, the hermaphrodite has gradually turned into a subduer of conflicts and a bringer of healing, ….its power to unite opposites, mediates between the unconscious substratum and the conscious mind. It throws a bridge between present-day consciousness, always in danger of losing its roots, and the natural, unconscious, instinctive wholeness of primeval times. Carl Jung; CW 9i, para. 292-4

Through the Christ crucified between the two thieves, man gradually attained knowledge of his shadow and its duality. This duality had already been anticipated by the double meaning of the serpent. Just as the serpent stands for the power that heals as well as corrupts, so one of the thieves is destined upwards, the other downwards, and so likewise the shadow is on one side regrettable and reprehensible weakness, on the other side healthy instinctively and the prerequisite for higher consciousness. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 402.

More especially the threat to one’s inmost self from dragons and serpents points to the danger of the newly acquired consciousness being swallowed up again by the instinctive psyche, the unconscious. Carl Jung; CW 9i; para. 282.

Emotions are instinctive, involuntary reactions which upset the rational order of consciousness by their elemental outbursts. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 497.

We are in reality unable to borrow or absorb anything from outside, from the world, or from history. What is essential to us can only grow out of ourselves. When the white man is true to his instincts, he reacts defensively against any advice that one might give him. What he has already swallowed he is forced to reject again as if it were a foreign body, for his blood refuses to assimilate anything sprung from foreign soil. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 31

It is in my view a great mistake to suppose that the psyche of a new-born child is a tabula rasa in the sense that there is absolutely nothing in it. In so far as the child is born with a differentiated brain that is predetermined by heredity and therefore individualized, it meets sensory stimuli coming from outside not with any aptitudes, but with specific ones, and this necessarily results in a particular, individual choice and pattern of apperception. These aptitudes can be shown to be inherited instincts and preformed patterns, the latter being the a priori and formal conditions of apperception that are based on instinct. Their presence gives the world of the child and the dreamer its anthropomorphic stamp. They are the archetypes, which direct all fantasy activity into its appointed paths and in this way produce, in the fantasy-images of children’s dreams as well as in the delusions of schizophrenia, astonishing mythological parallels such as can also be found, though in lesser degree, in the dreams of normal persons and neurotics. It is not, therefore, a question of inherited ideas but of inherited possibilities of ideas. Carl Jung, CW, 9i, Para 136

Primitive man, being closer to his instincts, like the animal, is characterized by fear of novelty and adherence to tradition. To our way of thinking he is painfully backward, whereas we exalt progress. But our progressiveness, though it may result in a great many delightful wish-fulfillments, piles up an equally gigantic Promethean debt, which has to be paid off from time to time in the form of hideous catastrophes. For ages man has dreamed of flying, and all we have got for it is saturation bombing! We smile today at the Christian hope of a life beyond the grave, and yet we often fall into chiliasms a hundred times more ridiculous than the notion of a happy Hereafter. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 276

Together the patient and I address ourselves to the 2,000,000-year-old man that is in all of us. In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us.
And where do we make contact with this old man in us? In our dreams. Carl Jung, New York Times, 4 October 1936.

Anyone who wants to know the human psyche will learn next to nothing from experimental psychology. We would do well to abandon from the start any attempt to apply ready-made solutions and warmed-up generalities of which the patient knows just as much as the doctor. Long experience has taught me not to know anything in advance and not to know better, but to let the unconscious take precedence. Our instincts have ridden so infinitely many times, unharmed, over the problems that arise [in later] life that we may be sure the transformation processes which make the transition possible have long been prepared in the unconscious and are only waiting to be released. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 528

A mother-complex is not got rid of by blindly reducing the mother to human proportions. Besides that we run the risk of dissolving the experience "Mother" into atoms, thus destroying something supremely valuable and throwing away the golden key which a good fairy laid in our cradle. That is why mankind has always instinctively added the pre-existent divine pair to the personal parents—the "god"- father and "god"-mother of the newborn child—so that, from sheer unconsciousness or shortsighted rationalism, he should never forget himself so far as to invest his own parents with divinity. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 172

The overdevelopment of the maternal instinct is identical with that well-known image of the mother which has been glorified in all ages and all tongues. This is the motherlove which is one of the most moving and unforgettable memories of our lives, the mysterious root of all growth and change; the love that means homecoming, shelter, and the long silence from which everything begins and in which everything ends. Intimately known and yet strange like Nature, lovingly tender and yet cruel like fate, joyous and untiring giver of life —mater dolorosa and mute implacable portal that closes upon the dead. Mother is motherlove, my experience and my secret. Why risk saying too much, too much that is false and inadequate and beside the point, about that human being who was our mother, the accidental carrier of that great experience which includes herself and myself and all mankind, and indeed the whole of created nature, the experience of life whose children we are? The attempt to say these things has always been made, and probably always will be; but a sensitive person cannot in all fairness load that enormous burden of meaning, responsibility, duty, heaven and hell, on to the shoulders of one frail and fallible human being—so deserving of love, indulgence, understanding, and forgiveness—who was our mother. He knows that the mother carries for us that inborn image of the mater natura and mater spiritualis, of the totality of life of which we are a small and helpless part. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 172

Anyone who overlooks the instincts will be ambuscaded by them. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 620

The woman who fights against her father still has the possibility of leading an instinctive, feminine existence, because she rejects only what is alien to her. But when she fights against the mother she may, at the risk of injury to her instincts, attain to greater consciousness, because in repudiating the mother she repudiates all that is obscure, instinctive, ambiguous, and unconscious in her own nature. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 186

Animals generally signify the instinctive forces of the unconscious, which are brought into unity within the mandala. This integration of the instincts is a prerequisite for individuation. Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 660.

If it has been believed hitherto that the human shadow was the source of all evil, it can now be ascertained on closer investigation that the unconscious man, that is, his shadow, does not consist only of morally reprehensible tendencies, but also displays a number of good qualities, such as normal instincts, appropriate reactions, realistic insights, creative impulses, etc. Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Par 423.

Through the Christ crucified between the two thieves, man gradually attained knowledge of his shadow and its duality. This duality had already been anticipated by the double meaning of the serpent. Just as the serpent stands for the power that heals as well as corrupts, so one of the thieves is destined upwards, the other downwards, and so likewise the shadow is on one side regrettable and reprehensible weakness, on the other side healthy instinctively and the prerequisite for higher consciousness. Carl Jung; CW 9ii; Page 255; Para 402.

Indeed, it seems a very natural state of affairs for men to have irrational moods and women irrational opinions. Presumably this situation is grounded on instinct and must remain as it is to ensure that the Empedoclean game of the hate and love of the elements shall continue for all eternity. Nature is conservative and does not easily allow her courses to be altered; she defends in the most stubborn way the inviolability of the preserves where anima and animus roam. . . . And on top of this there arises a profound doubt as to whether one is not meddling too much with nature’s business by prodding into consciousness things which it would have been better to leave asleep. Carl Jung, CW 9ii, Para 35

The danger that faces us today is that the whole of reality will be replaced by words. This accounts for that terrible lack of instinct in modern man, particularly the city-dweller. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 882

Instinct is anything but a blind and indefinite impulse, since it proves to be attuned and adapted to a definite external situation. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 49.

The danger that faces us today is that the whole of reality will be replaced by words. This accounts for that terrible lack of instinct in modern man, particularly the city-dweller. He lacks all contact with life and the breath of nature. He knows a rabbit or a cow only from the illustrated paper, the dictionary, or the movies, and thinks he knows what it is really like-and is then amazed that cowsheds "smell," because the dictionary didn’t say so.   Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 882.

Religion, as the careful observation and taking account of certain invisible and uncontrollable factors, is an instinctive attitude peculiar to man, and its manifestations can be followed all through human history. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 512

Nevertheless, it should be clear to everyone that such a state of degradation [such as the Nazi concentration camps] can come about only under certain conditions. The most important of these is the accumulation of urban, industrialized masses of people torn from the soil, engaged in one-sided employment, and lacking every healthy instinct, even that of self-preservation Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 413

Loss of the instinct of self-preservation can be measured in terms of dependence on the State, which is a bad symptom. Dependence on the State means that everybody relies on everybody else (= State) instead of on himself. Every man hangs on to the next and enjoys a false feeling of security, for one is still hanging in the air even when hanging in the company of ten thousand other people. The only difference is that one is no longer aware of one's own insecurity Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 413

The citizen's instinct of self-preservation should be safeguarded at all costs, for, once a man is cut off from the nourishing roots of instinct, he becomes the shuttlecock of every wind that blows. He is then no better than a sick animal, demoralized and degenerate, and nothing short of a catastrophe can bring him back to health Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 413

I am convinced that a truly scientific attitude in psychology must lead to the conclusion that the dynamic processes o£ the psyche cannot be reduced to this or that concrete instinct—we should merely find ourselves back at the stage of the phlogiston theory. We shall be obliged to take the instincts as constituent parts of the psyche, and then abstract our principle of explanation from their mutual relationship. I have therefore pointed out that we would do well to posit a hypothetical quantity, an "energy," as a psychological explanatory principle, and to call it "libido" in the classical sense of the word, without harbouring any prejudice with regard to its substantiality. With the help of such a quantity, the psychodynamic processes could be explained in an unobjectionable manner, without that unavoidable distortion which a concrete ground of explanation necessarily entails. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 7

For a moral man the ethical problem is a passionate question which has its roots in the deepest instinctual processes as well as in his most idealistic aspirations. The problem for him is devastatingly real. It is not surprising, therefore, that the answer likewise springs from the depths of his nature. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 289

The danger that faces us today is that the whole of reality will be replaced by words. This accounts for that terrible lack of instinct in modern man, particularly the city-dweller. He lacks all contact with life and the breath of nature. He knows a rabbit or a cow only from the illustrated paper, the dictionary, or the movies, and thinks he knows what it is really like—and is then amazed that cowsheds "smell," because the dictionary didn't say so. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 882

Children have an almost uncanny instinct for the teacher's personal shortcomings. They know the false from the true far better than one likes to admit. Therefore the teacher should watch his own psychic condition, so that he can spot the source of the trouble when anything goes wrong with the children entrusted to his care. He himself may easily be the unconscious cause of evil. Naturally we must not be too naive in this matter there are people, doctors as well as teachers, who secretly believe that a person in authority has the right to behave just as he likes, and that it is up to the child to adapt as best he may, because sooner or later he will have to adapt to real life which will treat him no better. Such people are convinced at heart that the only thing that matters is material success, and that the only real and effective moral restraint is the policeman behind the penal code. No doubt we are right to open the eyes and ears of our young people to the wide world, but it is the maddest of delusions to think that this really equips them for the task of living. It is the kind of training that enables a young person to adapt himself outwardly to the world and reality, but no one gives a thought to the necessity of adapting to the self, to the powers of the psyche, which are far mightier than all the Great Powers of the earth. A system of education does indeed exist, but it has its origins partly in antiquity and partly in the early Middle Ages. It styles itself the Christian Church. But it cannot be denied that in the course of the last two centuries Christianity, no less than Confucianism in China and Buddhism in India, has largely forfeited its educative activity. Human iniquity is not to blame for this, but rather a gradual and widespread spiritual change, the first symptom of which was the Reformation. It shattered the authority of the Church as a teacher, and thereafter the authoritarian principle itself began to crumble away. The inevitable consequence was an increase in the importance of the individual, which found expression in the modern ideals of humanity, social welfare, democracy, and equality. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 326

Human relationship leads into the world of the psyche, into that intermediate realm between sense and spirit, which contains something of both and yet forfeits nothing of its own unique character. Into this territory a man must venture if he wishes to meet woman half way. Circumstances have forced her to acquire a number of masculine traits, so that she shall not remain caught in an antiquated, purely instinctual femininity, lost and alone in the world of men. So, too, man will be forced to develop his feminine side, to open his eyes to the psyche and to Eros. It is a task he cannot avoid, unless he prefers to go trailing after woman in a hopelessly boyish fashion, worshipping from afar but always in danger of being stowed away in her pocket. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 258

A dream is nothing but a lucky idea that comes to us from the dark, all-unifying world of the psyche. What would be more natural, when we have lost ourselves amid the endless particulars and isolated details of the world's surface, than to knock at the door of dreams and inquire of them the bearings which would bring us closer to the basic facts of human existence? Here we encounter the obstinate prejudice that dreams are so much froth, they are not real, they lie, they are mere wish-fulfilments. All this is but an excuse not to take dreams seriously, for that would be uncomfortable. Our intellectual hybris of consciousness loves isolation despite all its inconveniences, and for this reason people will do anything rather than admit that dreams are real and speak the truth. There are some saints who had very rude dreams. Where would their saintliness be, the very thing that exalts them above the vulgar rabble, if the obscenity of a dream were a real truth? But it is just the most squalid dreams that emphasize our blood-kinship with the rest of mankind, and most effectively damp down the arrogance born of an atrophy of the instincts. Even if the whole world were to fall to pieces, the unity of the psyche would never be shattered. And the wider and more numerous the fissures on the surface, the more this unity is strengthened in the depths. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 305

What, then, is yoga? The word means literally "yoking," i.e., the disciplining of the instinctual forces of the psyche, which in Sanskrit are called kleshas. The yoking aims at controlling these forces that fetter human beings to the world. The kleshas would correspond, in the language of St. Augustine, to superhia and concupiscentia. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 912.

Anyone who penetrates into the unconscious with purely biological assumptions will become stuck in the instinctual sphere and be unable to advance beyond it, for he will be pulled back again and again into physical existence. Carl Jung, CW 11 Para 843

It was by recognizing these facts that medicine discovered the psyche, and it can no longer honestly deny the psyche's reality. It has been shown that the instincts are a condition of psychic activity, while at the same time psychic processes seem to condition the instincts. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 495.

Anyone who penetrates into the unconscious with purely biological assumptions will become stuck in the instinctual sphere and be unable to advance beyond it, for he will be pulled back again and again into physical existence. Carl Jung; CW 11, Page 843.

The doctor cannot afford to point, with a gesture of facile moral superiority, to the tablets of the law and say, "Thou shalt not." He has to examine things objectively and weigh up possibilities, for he knows, less from religious training and education than from instinct and experience, that there is something very like a jelix culpa. He knows that one can miss not only one's happiness but also one's final guilt, without which a man will never reach his wholeness. Wholeness is in fact a charisma which one can manufacture neither by art nor by cunning; one can only grow into it and endure whatever its advent may bring. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 36

A man who is unconscious of himself acts in a blind, instinctive way and is in addition fooled by all the illusions that arise when he sees everything that he is not conscious of in himself coming to meet him from outside as projections upon his neighbour. Carl Jung, CW 13, Page 335.

A man who is unconscious of himself acts in a blind, instinctive way and is in addition fooled by all the illusions that arise when he sees everything that he is not conscious of in himself coming to meet him from outside as projections upon his neighbour. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 391

The new thing prepared by fate seldom or never comes up to conscious expectations. And still more remarkable though the new thing goes against deeply rooted instincts as we have known them, it is a strangely appropriate expression of the total personality, an expression which one could not imagine in a more complete form. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 19

Hence it [the snake] is an excellent symbol for the two aspects of the unconscious: its cold and ruthless instinctuality, and its Sophia quality or natural wisdom, which is embodied in the archetypes. The Logos-nature of Christ represented by the chthonic serpent is the maternal wisdom of the divine mother, which is prefigured by Sapientia in the Old Testament. The snake-symbol thus characterizes Christ as a personification of the unconscious in all its aspects, and as such he is hung on the tree in sacrifice ("wounded by the spear" like Odin) Carl Jung, CW 13 Para 448

This preliminary step, in itself a clear blend of Stoic philosophy and Christian psychology, is indispensable for the differentiation of consciousness. Modern psychotherapy makes use of the same procedure when it objectifies the affects and instincts and confronts consciousness with them. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 672.

Although contemporary man believes that he can change himself without limit, or be changed through external influences, the astounding, or rather the terrifying, fact remains that despite civilization and Christian education, he is still, morally, as much in bondage to his instincts as an animal, and can therefore fall victim at any moment to the beast within. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para xviii

There is no illness that is not at the same time an unsuccessful attempt at a cure. Instead of showing up the patient as the secret accomplice of morally inadmissible wishes, one can just as well explain him as the unwitting victim of instinctual problems which he doesn't understand and which nobody in his environment has helped him solve. His dreams, in particular, can be taken as nature's own auguries, having nothing whatever to do with the all-too human self-deluding operations which Freud insinuates into the dream-process. Carl Jung, CW 15, Para 68

What we call civilized consciousness has steadily separated itself from the basic instincts. But these instincts have not disappeared. They have merely lost their contact with our consciousness and are thus forced to assert themselves in an indirect fashion. This may be . . . physical symptoms . . . neurosis . . . various incidents . . . moods . . . unexpected forgetfulness . . . or mistakes of speech. Carl Jung; CW 16, Page 327.

The great decisions in human life usually have far more to do with the instincts and other mysterious unconscious factors than with conscious will and well-meaning reasonableness. The shoe that fits one person pinches another; there is no universal recipe for living. Each of us carries his own life-form within him—an irrational form which no other can outbid. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 81

The final appeal to reason would be very fine if man were by nature a rational animal, but he is not; on the contrary, he is quite as much irrational. Hence reason is often not sufficient to modify the instinct and make it conform to the rational order. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 178

Assimilation of the shadow gives a man body, so to speak; the animal sphere of instinct, as well as the primitive or archaic psyche, emerge into the zone of consciousness and can no longer be repressed by fictions and illusions. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 452

"Freud's original idea of the unconscious was that it was a sort of receptacle or storehouse for repressed material, infantile wishes, and the like. But the unconscious is far more than that: it is the basis and precondition of all consciousness. It represents the unconscious functioning of the psyche in general. It is psychic life before, during, and after consciousness. And inasmuch as the newborn child is presented with a ready-made, highly developed brain which owes its differentiation to the accretions of untold centuries of ancestral life, the unconscious psyche must consist of inherited instincts, functions, and forms that are peculiar to the ancestral psyche. This collective heritage is by no means made up of inherited ideas, but rather of the possibilities of such ideas-in other words, of a priori categories of possible functioning. Such an inheritance could be called instinct, using the word in its original sense. But it is not quite so simple. On the contrary, it is a most intricate web of what I have called archetypal conditions. This implies the probability that a man will behave much as his ancestors behaved, right back to Methuselah. Thus the unconscious is seen as the collective predisposition to extreme conservatism, a guarantee, almost, that nothing new wi1l ever happen. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 61

When, therefore, I am treating practising Catholics, and am faced with the transference problem, I can, by virtue of my office as a doctor, step aside and lead the problem over to the Church. But if I am treating a non-Catholic, that way out is debarred, and by virtue of my office as a doctor I cannot step aside, for there is as a rule nobody there, nothing towards which I could suitably lead the father-imago. I can, of course, get the patient to recognize with his reason that I am not the father. But by that very act I become the reasonable father and remain despite everything the father. Not only nature, but the patient too, abhors a vacuum. He has an instinctive horror of allowing the parental imagos and his childhood psyche to fall into nothingness, into a hopeless past that has no future. His instinct tells him that, for the sake of his own wholeness, these things must be kept alive in one form or another. He knows that a complete withdrawal of the projection will be followed by an apparently endless isolation within the ego, which is all the more burdensome because he has so little love for it. He found it unbearable enough before, and he is unlikely to bear it now simply out of sweet reasonableness. Therefore at this juncture the Catholic who has been freed from an excessively personal tie to his parents can return fairly easily to the mysteries of the Church, which he is now in a position to understand better and more deeply. There are also Protestants who can discover in one of the newer variants of Protestantism a meaning which appeals to them, and so regain a genuine religious attitude. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 218

Instinct is not an isolated thing, nor can it be isolated in practice. It always brings in its train archetypal contents of a spiritual nature, which are at once its foundation and its limitation. In other words, an instinct is always and inevitably coupled with something like a philosophy of life, however archaic, unclear, and hazy this may be. Instinct stimulates thought, and if a man does not think of his own free will, then you get compulsive thinking, for the two poles of the psyche, the physiological and the mental, are indissolubly connected. For this reason instinct cannot be freed without freeing the mind, just as mind divorced from instinct is condemned to futility. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 185

Fantasy is the maternally creative side of the masculine mind. When all is said and done, we can never rise above fantasy. It is true that there are unprofitable, futile, morbid, and unsatisfying fantasies whose sterile nature is immediately recognized by every person endowed with common sense; but the faulty performance proves nothing against the normal performance. All the works of man have their origin in creative imagination. What right, then, have we to disparage fantasy? In the normal course of things, fantasy does not easily go astray; it is too deep for that and too closely bound up with the tap-root of human and animal instinct. It has a surprising way of always coming out right in the end. The creative activity of imagination frees man from his bondage to the "nothing but" and raises him to the status of one who plays. As Schiller says, man is completely human only when he is at play. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 98

The evolutionary stratification of the psyche is more clearly discernible in the dream than in the conscious mind. In the dream, the psyche speaks in images, and gives expression to instincts, which derive from the most primitive levels of nature. Therefore, through the assimilation of unconscious contents, the momentary life of consciousness can once more be brought into harmony with the law of nature from which it all too easily departs, and the patient can be led back to the natural law of his own being. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 351

Although biological instinctive processes contribute to the formation of personality, individuality is nevertheless essentially different from collective instincts; indeed, it stands in the most direct opposition to them, just as the individual as a personality is always distinct from the collective. His essence consists precisely in this distinction. Every ego-psychology must necessarily exclude and ignore just the collective element that is bound to a psychology of instinct, since it describes that very process by which the ego becomes differentiated from collective drives. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 88

Children have an almost uncanny instinct for the teacher's personal shortcomings. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 211

This is what happens very frequently about the midday of life, and in this wise our miraculous human nature enforces the transition that leads from the first half of life to the second. It is a metamorphosis from a state in which man is only a tool of instinctive nature, to another in which he is no longer a tool, but himself: a transformation of nature into culture, of instinct into spirit. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 335

He who can risk himself wholly to it finds himself directly in the hands of God, and is there confronted with a situation which makes "simple faith" a vital necessity; in other words, the situation becomes so full of risk or overtly dangerous that the deepest instincts are aroused. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1539

The interpretation of dreams enriches consciousness to such an extent that it relearns the forgotten language of the instincts. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 52

Only through our feebleness and incapacity are we linked up with the unconscious, with the lower world of the instincts and with our fellow beings. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 109

Although we are still far from having overcome our primitive mentality, which enjoys its most signal triumphs just in the sphere of sex where man is made most vividly aware of his mammalian nature, certain ethical refinements have nevertheless crept in which permit anyone with ten to fifteen centuries of Christian education behind him to progress towards a slightly higher level. On this level the spirit—from the biological an incomprehensible psychic phenomenon—plays a not unimportant role psychologically. It had a weighty word to say on the subject of Christian marriage and it still participates vigorously in the discussion whenever marriage is doubted and depreciated. It appears in a negative capacity as counsel for the instincts, and in a positive one as the defender of human dignity. Small wonder, then, that a wild and confusing conflict breaks out between man as an instinctual creature of nature and man as a spiritual and cultural being. The worst thing about it is that the one is forever trying violently to suppress the other in order to bring about a so-called harmonious solution of the conflict. Unfortunately, too many people still believe in this procedure, which is all-powerful in politics; there are only a few here and there who condemn it as barbaric and would like to set up in its place a just compromise whereby each side of man's nature is given a hearing. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para xii

Inasmuch as karma means either a personal or at least an individual inherited determinant of character and fate, it represents the individually differentiated manifestation of the instinctual behaviour pattern, i.e., the general archetypal disposition. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 289

Emotions follow an instinctual pattern, i.e., an archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 46.

Most of your [American] psychologists, as it looks to me, are still in the XVIIIth century inasmuch as they believe that the human psyche is tabula rasa at birth, while all somewhat differentiated animals are born with specific instincts. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 150.

As no animal is born without its instinctual patterns, there is no reason whatever to believe that man should be born without his specific forms of physiological and psychological reactions. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 152.

Also with regard to instincts, it is questionable if they continue to exist when you have destroyed their transmitter , i.e., whether they have been killed themselves. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 160.

On the other hand "God" is a verbal image, a predicate or mythologem founded on archetypal premises which underlie the structure of the psyche as images of the instincts ("instinctual patterns"). Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 260.

"God" in this sense is a biological, instinctual and elemental "model," an archetypal "arrangement" of individual, contemporary and historical contents, which, despite its numinosity, is and must be exposed to intellectual and moral criticism, just like the image of the "evolving" God or of Yahweh or the Summum Bonum or the Trinity. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 255.

Since archetypes are instinctual forms, they follow a universal pattern, as do the functions of the body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 450.

For him [Freud] conscience is a human acquisition. I, on the contrary, maintain that even animals have a conscience-dogs, for instance-and empirically there is much to be said for this, since instinctual conflicts are not altogether unknown on the animal level. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 457.

The inheritance of instincts is a known fact, whereas the inheritance of acquired characteristics is controversial. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 457.

My whole endeavour has been to show that myth is something very real because it connects us with the instinctive bases of our existence. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 468

Now whether these archetypes, as I have called these pre-existent and pre-forming psychic factors, are regarded as "mere" instincts or as daemons and gods makes no difference at all to their dynamic effect. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 488.

But it often makes a mighty difference whether they [Archetypes] are undervalued as "mere" instincts or overvalued as gods. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 488.

I call them archetypes, i.e., instinctual forms of mental functioning. They are not inherited ideas, but mentally expressed instincts, forms and not contents. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 521.

"God" therefore is in the first place a mental image equipped with instinctual "numinosity," i.e., an emotional value bestowing the characteristic autonomy of the affect on the image. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 522.

The Platonic "Idea" is in this case no longer intellectual but a psychic, instinctual pattern. Instinctual patterns can be found in human beings too. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 537.

They [Children] are naturally and instinctively adapted to reality; their next task is to find their way about in it. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 599.

Man is a very paradoxical structure with two main trends, namely the biological and animal instincts of propagation and the cultural instinct of psychic development. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 454-456

But in these days we live by our brains alone and ignore the very definite laws of our body and the instinctive world. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 567

Since the archetypes are the instinctual forms of mental behaviour it is quite certain that, inasmuch as animals possess a "mind," their mind also follows archetypal patterns, and presumably the same that are operative in the human mind. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 372-373

The alarming pollution of our water supplies, the steady increase of radioactivity, and the sombre threat of overpopulation with its genocidal tendencies have already led to a widespread though not generally conscious fear which loves noise because it stops the fear from being heard. Noise is welcome because it drowns the inner instinctive warning. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 387-392.

He [Jung] said he had learned never to start an interview beyond a few pleasantries – 'How are you?' – but to wait for the patient, because the instincts, the archetypes, lie in between and we don't know what may be there. E.A. Bennet, Meeting with Jung, Page 55

He [Jung] mentioned also the archetypes as the representation of the instincts, that is, the instincts can be expressed in many ways – there are hundreds of possibilities. But one form is selected because it corresponds to the instinct – it is an image of it. E.A. Bennet, Meetings with Jung, Page 200.

The Chinese philosophy of yoga is based upon the fact of this instinctive preparation for death as a goal, and, following the analogy with the goal of the first half of life, namely, begetting and reproduction, the means towards perpetuation of physical life, it takes as the purpose of spiritual existence the symbolic begetting and bringing to birth of a psychic spirit body ('subtle body'), which ensures the continuity of the detached consciousness. Carl Jung, The Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 124.

The man who haves his instincts can also detach from them, and in just as natural a way as he lived them. Carl Jung, The Secret of the Golden Flower, Page 125.

Primitive man was much more governed by his instincts than are his "rational" modern descendants, who have learned to "control" themselves. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 36.

Dream symbols are the essential message carriers from the instinctive to the rational parts of the human mind, and their interpretation enriches the poverty of consciousness so that it learns to understand again the forgotten language of the instincts. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 52

The snake touches on the deepest instincts of man, so that from time immemorial one thought it to be in possession of great secrets. Carl Jung, Children's Dream Seminar, Pages 248-251.

Therefore it is absolutely necessary that, in the process of individuation, everybody should become aware of his creative instinct, no matter how small it is. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 667

The instinct of individuation is found everywhere in life, for there is no life on earth that is not individual. Carl Jung, Kundalini Seminar, Page 4

.....instinct is purposive. It works properly only under certain conditions, and as soon as it gets out of tune with these conditions it threatens the destruction of the species. Carl Jung, Seminar Given in 1925, Page 86.

I like to reserve the concept of will for that small amount of energy that is disposable by us in consciousness. Now if you put this small amount toward activating the instinctive process, the latter then goes on with a force much bigger than yours. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Pages 76-77

The libido of man contains the two opposite urges or instincts: the instinct to live and the instinct to die. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 77

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct. Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

For we do have effects on people which we can neither predict nor adequately explain. Instinct warns us to keep away from this racial side of ourselves. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139

Archetypal statements are based upon instinctive preconditions and have nothing to do with reason; they are neither rationally grounded nor can they be banished by rational arguments. They have always been part of the world scene representations collectives, as Levy-Bruhl rightly called them. Certainly the ego and its will have a great part to play in life; but what the ego wills is subject in the highest degree to the interference, in ways of which the ego is usually unaware, of the autonomy and numinosity of archetypal processes. Practical consideration of these processes is the essence of religion, insofar as religion can be approached from a psychological point of view. Carl Jung MDR; Page 353

While the man who despairs marches towards nothingness, the one who has placed his faith in the archetype follows the tracks of life and lives right into his death. Both, to be sure, remain in uncertainty, but the one lives against his instincts, the other with them. Carl Jung; MDR; Page 306.

Because they are so closely akin to us and share our unknowingness, I loved all warm-blooded animals who have souls like ourselves and with whom, so I thought, we have an instinctive understanding. Carl Jung, Memories Dreams and Reflections, Page 67.

Without knowing it man is always concerned with God. What some people call instinct or intuition is nothing other than God. God is that voice inside us which tells us what to do and what not to do. In other words, our conscience. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Page 249.

Our instincts do not express themselves only in our actions and reactions, but also in the way we formulate what we imagine. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410-423

Instinct is not only biological, it is also, you might say, spiritual. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410-423

The psyche is also the scene of conflicts between instinct and free will, for instincts are without order and collide with the organised consciousness. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 10.

There are not a few patients who have to have fear driven into them because their instincts have atrophied. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 399.

For my private use I call the sphere of paradoxical existence, i.e., the instinctive unconscious, the Pleroma , a term borrowed from Gnosticism. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 60.

But this is where the above-mentioned difficulty comes in: our knowledge of the instincts, i.e., of the underlying biological drives, is very inadequate, so that it is only with the greatest difficulty and great uncertainty that we can equate the archetypes with them. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 547.

I have made a great effort to explain what I mean by "psychic." I call those biological phenomena "psychic" which show at least traces of a will that interferes with the regular and automatic functioning of instincts. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 457.

Unfortunately I know far too little of X.'s personal life to presume to an opinion, but with young people one must always be careful in this respect, because the demands of instinct are only too easily covered up by deceptive spiritual interests. ...I would conjecture that this is so because middle life has set in too early in consequence of a relatively short life expectancy. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 169.

Thus the archetype as a phenomenon is conditioned by place and time, but on the other hand it is an invisible structural pattern independent of place and time, and like the instincts proves to be an essential component of the psyche. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 539.

I think we must give it time to infiltrate into people from many centers, to revivify among intellectuals a feeling for symbol and myth, ever so gently to transform Christ back into the soothsaying god of the vine, which he was, and in this way absorb those ecstatic instinctual forces of Christianity for the one purpose of making the cult and the sacred myth what they once were a drunken feast of joy where man regained the ethos and holiness of an animal. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 18.

It is generally overlooked that the psyche cannot of necessity be based only on the instinct of sexuality, but rests on the totality of the instincts, and that this basis is only a biological foundation and not the whole edifice. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 564.

However, the friendly lion in the dream seems to indicate that the looseness of the soul is not exactly desirable, since the lion compensates your condition in a very obvious way: the Zurich lion represents your localized instinct, firmly rooted in your earth, just as the lion's soul-as with all animals -is securely fixed in its body. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 306

You are squeezing yourself out behind, so to speak, acting not in accordance with your instinct but in accordance with reflections or inclinations which are the very reverse of instinctively correct actions. You jump out of your skin, but backwards. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 307

An archetype is composed of an instinctual factor and a spiritual image. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 21.

Consciousness is the transformation and the transformer of the primordial instinctual images. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 9.

The archetypes are, at the same time, dynamic. They are instinctual images that are not intellectually invented. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 16.

Now in order not to presume or to prejudice things, I speak simply of energy, and energy is a quantity of energy that can manifest itself via sexuality or via any other instinct. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 26.

The great asset of the East is that they are based on instinct. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1066.

From earliest times death and the idea of a life after death have filled man's thoughts, and in religion, philosophy, and art have prompted answers to what is rationally unanswerable. To throw all this to the winds is, from the psychological standpoint, symptomatic of an atrophy of instinct and a willful disregard of one's psychic roots, both of which must be paid for dearly. Aniela Jaffe, Jung's Last Years, Page 13.

When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct. Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

For we do have effects on people which we can neither predict nor adequately explain. Instinct warns us to keep away from this racial side of ourselves. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 139

The chivalry of the South is a reaction against its instinctive desire to imitate the Negro. Carl Jung, NY Times, 1912.

The ancients always thought of coming events as having shadows cast in front of them. Here we have an animal killed, a mythological animal in fact—that is, instinct. Carl Jung, Introduction to Analytical Psychology, Page 153.

Anyone who overlooks the instincts will be ambuscaded by them. Carl Jung, CW 9, Para 620.

In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us. And where do we make contact with this old man in us? In our dreams. Carl Jung, Psychological Reflections, 76.

Together the patient and I address ourselves to the 2,000,000-year-old man that is in all of us. In the last analysis, most of our difficulties come from losing contact with our instincts, with the age-old unforgotten wisdom stored up in us. Carl Jung, NY Times, October 4, 1936.

As a doctor it is my task to help the patient to cope with life. (2019-12-29 05:07)

[2]Psychology and Alchemy (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.12)

As a doctor it is my task to help the patient to cope with life.

I cannot presume to pass judgment on his final decisions, because I know from experience that all coercion-be it suggestion, insinuation, or any other method of persuasion-ultimately proves to be nothing but an obstacle to the highest and most decisive experience of all, which is to be alone with his own self, or whatever else one chooses to call the objectivity of the psyche.

The patient must be alone if he is to find out what it is that supports him when he can no longer support himself.

Only this experience can give him an indestructible foundation. Psychology and Alchemy (1944) CW 12: P.32

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/a2d2f-carl.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Alchemy-Collected-Works-Vol-12/dp/0691018316/ref=sr_1_1?crid=3OHO9T4B27N0W&keywords=jung+and+alchemy&qid=1577638139&sprefix=ju`

Carl Jung on the outlook of the Philosopher. (2019-12-29 05:10)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Alexander Willwoll, S. J.

Dear Professor Willwoll, 14 January 1946

Many thanks for kindly sending me your interesting essay.

I admire the thoroughness of your documentation and the objectivity of your argument in a field that assuredly contains much that is irritating to philosophers and theologians.

Personally it makes me sad to see how the spokesmen for the humanities often toil and moil over my writings only to reduce all my conceptual variants to a common denominator.

The philosopher should always bear in mind that our point de depart is different, since I approach the problems from the scientific, empirical side: what he calls "ideas" I observe and describe as entia, just like a botanist his plants, a zoologist his animals, and a chemist his substances.

I am not out to build a conceptual system, but use concepts to describe psychic facts and their peculiar modes of behaviour.

For a zoologist a bear, regardless of its Himalayan, Siberian, European, or American genus, is always a bear, and the empirical psychologist proceeds in the same way with psychic entia.

What he would call the accidentia of ideas is for the philosopher and even more for the theologian just the essential thing.

This can hardly be anything but irritating. It is therefore very much to your credit that you have succeeded in treating my concepts with so much goodwill and objectivity.

Yours sincerely,

C . G. JUNG Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 406.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/e8955-1.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1J3W2DAXXEP7Q&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577637882&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Carl Jung: I think one can only speak out of the torrent of divine images…” (2019-12-29 05:46)

[1]

"A person must pay dearly for the divine gift of creative fire."
Carl Jung
Joseph Wright
www.jungcurrents.com

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

To Pastor H. Wegmann

Dear Pastor Wegmann, 20 November 1945

Best thanks for your letter.

The position you have taken interests me greatly; it gives me a chance to look more closely at my own attitude.

You are right, of course: Meyer catholicizes.

As you say, he takes the Scriptures tale quale-ostensibly: but, if I am not deceived, he has a streak of mysticism which gives his picture a special character.

The result is that the tale quale standpoint appears almost irrelevant compared with his supramundane vision of an interpretation that comes as close as possible to the ancient Church.

I find him unpalatable only when he modernizes in style and language and thus steps out of his "ekstasis."

When I visualize the content of the book as understood in its best sense, I discover something in it that is somehow similar to my own way of looking at things.

Not that I believe in verbal inspiration or that I find no contradictions and human peccadillos in the text; but the revelatory character imputed to it and the sometimes farcical thoughts are an integral part of his vision.

And it is this that interests me in its totality.

When Meyer amplifies and interprets he speaks to me out of its fullness; indeed, it is as though he were caught up uncritically in this visionary world and were ambling along its highways and byways, laden with everything that the centuries have piled on top of this primordial phenomenon.

A strange and rare spectacle in modern Protestantism, methinks, so far as my limited knowledge goes!

At the Paracelsus Jubilee in 1941 I heard a Benedictine• sermon, during which the jackanapes took it into his head to present the Catholic view as "agreeable."

How much better it would have been if he had been inspired by a supramundane vision of the nature and attributes of the Trinity and so conveyed some idea of that primordial phenomenon from which all Christian doctrine originally sprang.

"Et mortuus est Dei filius, prorsus credibile est, quia ineptum est. Et sepultus resurrexit; certum est, quia impossibile est."

For the primordial is indeed the supramundane, which the world knoweth not and is incapable of judging, which cannot be got at with any logic or criticism, and which can only be amplified and interpreted but never made "agreeable ."

I only wish the theologians would accept the Kabbala and India and China as well, so as to proclaim still more clearly how God reveals himself.

If in the process Christianity should be relativized up to a point, this would only be ad majorem Dei gloriam and would do no harm to the meaning of the Christian doctrine.

For all this is true and much else besides.

Minor inconsistencies and obscurities can be left to the purists; but the great incompatibles, such as the being and non-being of God, his person and his non-person, and the coincidentia oppositorum in general, belong to the picture of the divine paradox.

It seems to me strangely beside the point if Protestants think they can adopt a critical, deliberative attitude towards God ’s revelation in its totality.

I think one can only speak out of the torrent of divine images, and in such a way that the continuity of tradition is not broken, otherwise one gets unawares into the cul de sac of subjective opinion.

Quod semper, quod ubique, quod ab omnibus creditor should be the guideline for the theologian, since he is speaking out of and to the depths of an anima naturaliter christiana which recognizes no subjective deals with God, even though the individual psyche enforces them because all life dwells only in individual carriers.

But it is just this fragmentation that has to be compensated by a continual recollection of the veritates catholicae.

It seems to me that Meyer has lived up to this need as fully as possible, if not in all particulars then at least in the general sense that he is speaking on a plane beyond the empirical Church and its ecclesiasticism.

I sense that he is dreaming of a catholicity which wants to embrace the tree of the Church as a whole.

To what extent his attempt is a success or a failure I, an incompetent layman, cannot judge .

I should be glad to hear from you sometime what you think of my "thoughts out of season."

With best regards,

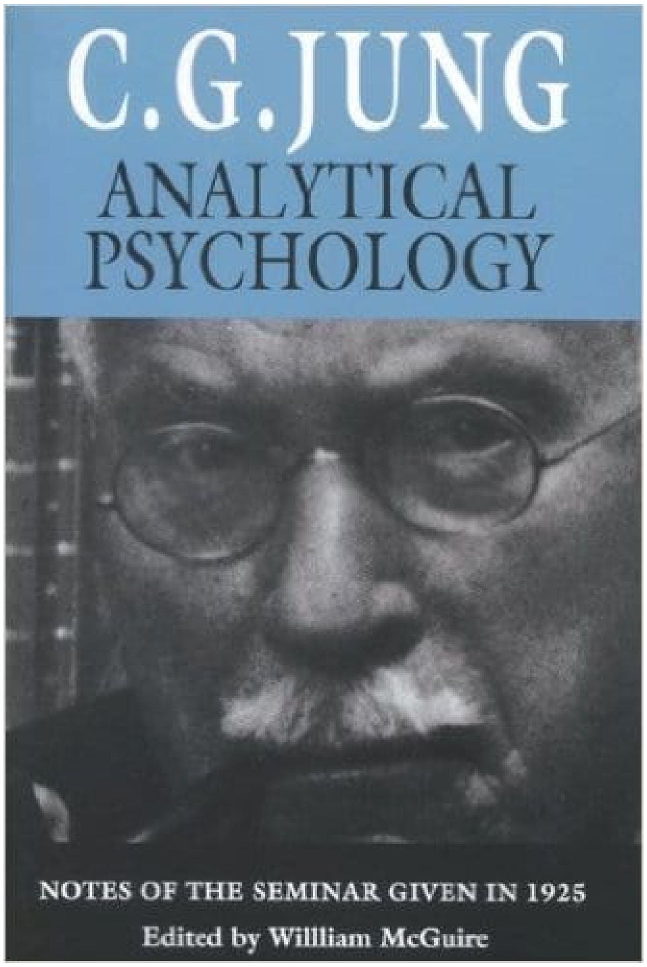
Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 391-393.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/1919f-fire.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1J3W2DAXXEP7Q&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577637882&sprefix=jung+l%2`

Sonu Shamdasani: Introduction to Analytical Psychology: Notes of the Seminar Given in 1925 (2019-12-29 05:59)

[1]



C.G.JUNG
ANALYTICAL PSYCHOLOGY
NOTES OF THE SEMINAR GIVEN IN 1925
Edited by Willliam McGuire

[2]Introduction to Jungian Psychology: Notes of the Seminar on Analytical Psychology Given in 1925 (Philemon Foundation Series)

Introduction

Sonu Shamdasani

March 24, 1925, Zurich. Cary Baynes noted:

Yesterday began the new order, that is to say, the first of the seminars.

These latter like the ancient wars as described in the school text-books, have their immediate and their remote cause, of which the former is luminously set out in Jung’s circular letter.

It is said that when Miss Corrie received said letter she felt as though her father had died.

There was general weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth among the faithful, but rejoicing from this of the “Four Winds.”

As I have had only two analytical hours since the first of December, it seemed a golden opportunity.

We meet Mondays and Thursdays from 4.30 to 6 P.M. in the rooms at Gemeinde Strasse.

Yesterday there were present the following: Dr. Shaw, Dr. Kay (aet. 28, hailing from Australia, seen by me for the first time, and notes as being very nice looking), Miss Sergeant, Kristine Mann, Dr. Ward, Dr. Gordon, Beckwith,3 (looking as though stung by a bee convinced that the seminars mean the loss of his hour with Jung, which they do not but his Anima was holding him to the conviction as long as possible), Murray4 (aet. 32, lately arrived from Cambridge, England, but sometime from the U.S.A.—came with 60 questions, and has understood the Types—stammers to the Queen’s taste, much more attractively than I do—chemist profession, owns a piece of wilderness in Vermont whither he hopes to lure Jung for a conference, when told of California replied that the latter was unsuitable because it had a future and that after the site of the conference was chosen within two weeks an apartment house would be built, Vermont on the other hand would be the same 80 years hence—this was thought by me to be a conservative estimate. I think he might have said 800), Aldrich, Mrs. Dunham (Chicago), myself, Miss Hincks and Miss Corrie.

In this order we sat around the walls and looked wise.

Jung said he would begin with a historical review of analytical psychology, and that we would then put in whatever questions we might have as we did at Cornwall, and he would select the one’s suitable for discussion.

I reminded him there that we had agreed upon a general theme, (Transference), and asked if he would choose the theme now.

He said he would not, preferred to have us talk about what we were interested in just as we would in a personal analysis.

Dr. Shaw said she wanted to know something more about the principle of enantiodromia—more than was given in the Schiller chapter.

Go to it, said Jung, or words to that effect, but formulate it in a question.

Mr. Aldrich said he would like to hear Jung develop his philosophy of life, and that the people who were planning to practice analysis could reserve their questions for their private hours with him.

I protested at that and said some of us were not having any such, and would be very disappointed if the seminar was not a liberal opportunity.

Whereupon Jung said that Aldrich was only mustering out his horns against the preponderating female element, at which there were loud cheers.

From Aldrich’s put upon tone, you could have supposed he had suffered terribly from people who were going to practice analysis.

Jung said that as to his discussing his philosophy of life, that was much too big a mouthful and that Aldrich would have to break it up into questions, then Miss Corrie protested against a historical review, saying she would rather have something from himself.

I was glad she said that, because I too, thought he planned to go over the introduction he had given us at Cornwall, and that would have been a pity, but he meant something very different, he meant the course of the development of his own ideas of analysis, and that of course was a theme we all welcomed.

He said he was always being impressed with the width of the field that analytical psychology embraced, and so he thought it useful if one had a sort of view of that field, and then he began his talk, which as far as I am able I will give in his own words because then perhaps will come back some of the vivid quality of Cary Baynes' vivid account of the good-humored commencement of these seminars breaks off here.

The audience, clearly, had no inkling of what Jung was about to present.

But before turning to this, we need to look at Jung's situation in 1925.

Jung in 1925

In 1921, Psychological Types had appeared, to widespread acclaim.

The English edition appeared in 1923 and received many laudatory reviews.

In a two-page spread in the New York Times Book Review, Mark Isham concluded: "This volume is drastically serious, positive, didactic, classic, and yet more than stimulating.

It is energizing, liberating and recreative. The author shows an amazingly sympathetic knowledge of the introvert of the thinking type, and hardly less for the other types. . . . Jung has revealed the inner kingdom of the soul marvelously well and has made the signal discovery of the value of phantasy. His book has a manifold reach and grasp, and many reviews with quite different subject matter could be written about it."

In terms of publications, the period following Psychological Types up to the present seminar was one of the quietest in Jung's career.

The year 1921 saw the publication of a contribution to a symposium at the British Psychological Society, "The Question of the Therapeutic Value of 'Abreaction"'; 1922 saw the publication of a lecture to the Society for German Language and Literature in Zurich, "On the Relation of Analytical Psychology to Literary Artworks."

Uncharacteristically for him, there were no new publications in 1923 and 1924. This may be not unconnected with the fact that his mother died in January 1923.

Two articles appeared in 1925, the publication of a 1923 summary paper on "psychological types" delivered at the International Congress of Education in Territet, Switzerland,and a contribution to Count Hermann Keyserling's edited volume on marriage, "Marriage as a Psychological Relation."

The center of gravity of Jung's creativity was clearly elsewhere, namely, in the transcription of Liber Novus, the Red Book, and in the commencement of the building of his tower at Bollingen, on the upper shores of Lake Zurich.

The genesis of the work may be briefly stated. In the winter of 1913, Jung deliberately gave free rein to his fantasy thinking and carefully noted what ensued.

He later called this process active imagination. He wrote down these fantasies in the Black Books.

These are not personal diaries, but rather the records of a self-experimentation.

The dialogues that form these active imaginations can be regarded as a form of thinking in a dramatic form.

When the First World War broke out, Jung considered that a number of his fantasies were precognitions of this event.

This led him to compose the first draft manuscript of Liber Novus, which consisted in a transcription of the main fantasies from the Black Books, together with a layer of interpretive commentaries and lyrical elaboration.

Here, Jung attempted to derive general psychological principles from the fantasies, as well as to understand to what extent the events portrayed in the fantasies presented, in a symbolic form—developments that were to occur in the world.

The work, though never published during Jung's lifetime, was intended for publication.

The overall theme of the work is how Jung refound his soul and overcame the contemporary malaise of spiritual alienation.

This is ultimately achieved through enabling the rebirth of a new image of God in his soul and developing a new worldview in the form of a psychological and theological cosmology.

Liber Novus presents the prototype of Jung's conception of the individuation process.

The material went through a number of drafts, and was then recopied by Jung in an ornate gothic script into a large red leather folio volume, to which he added historiated initials, ornamental borders, and a substantial number of paintings.

Jung had completed the manuscript of the first two parts of Liber Novus in 1915, and the third part, "Scrutinies," in 1917.

Thereafter, he was engaged in its painstaking transcription.

The paintings initially started out as illustrations of the fantasies in the text, and thereafter could be considered active imaginations in their own right, at times referring to contemporaneous fantasies in Jung's Black Books.

Jung abruptly broke off the transcription around 1930.

By January 1921, he had reached page 127 of the calligraphic volume, and by August 1925 he had reached the end of page 156.

In 1920, he purchased some land on the upper shores of Lake Zurich in Bollingen.

He felt the need to represent his innermost thoughts in stone and to build a completely primitive dwelling: "Bollingen was a great matter for me, because words and paper were not real enough. I had to put down a confession in stone."14

The tower was a "representation of individuation."

Over the years, he painted murals and made carvings on the walls.

The tower may be regarded as a three-dimensional continuation of Liber Novus: its “Liber Quartus.”

In 1924 and 1925, the publication of the work seems to have been one of the foremost issues in Jung’s mind.

At the beginning of 1924, he asked Cary Baynes to make a fresh typed transcription of the text and discussed with the issue of publishing the work.

She noted in her diary: So then you said I was to copy down the contents of the Red Book—once before you had had it copied, but you had since then added a great deal of material, so you wanted it done again and you would explain things to me as I went along, for you understood nearly everything in it you said.

In this way we could come to discuss many things which never came up in my analysis and I could understand your ideas from the foundation.15

At the same time Jung discussed the form of a possible publication with his colleague, Wolfgang Stockmayer.16 In 1925, Peter Baynes made a translation of the Septem Sermones ad Mortuous, which was privately published by Watkins in England.

While engaged on the transcription, Cary Baynes urged Jung to do a seminar on the work.

In her diary, she noted:

When I asked Baynes if he would not like a seminar on the Red Book I had nothing other in mind than what you were doing with him.

Since I began to read it I have thought it would be a very fine thing, if instead of your discussing it with me as you said you would,

Mona Lisa should be included too.

Perhaps she knows all that is in it so well, and understands it so completely that this would not appeal to her, but I thought it would . . . he [Peter Baynes] asked me . . .why it was such a problem with me about publishing the Red Book.

I could have slapped him sharply by saying it was a problem to me because you had so presented it . . . then you told him your own idea about it, and he was thoroughly non-plussed.

. . . When I said I wanted to hear you speak of the Red Book out of doors and you willed to think I had in mind a pink tea, I struck back at you in kind, and said that if the Red Book was not big enough to be talked about out of doors, then you would have to do something about it.

It is not known whether such seminars took place.

However, it is likely that these discussions played a role in Jung’s decision to decide to speak openly in public for the first time about his self-experimentation and some of the fantasies in Liber Novus.

During this period, Jung withdrew from the Psychological Club, which he had founded in 1916.19 On November 25, 1922, he, together with Emma Jung and Toni Wolff, left the Club.20

During the period of Jung's withdrawal from the Club, he gave his seminar series in Polzeath, Cornwall, England, in July 1923.

In the previous year, the Analytical Psychology Club in London had been founded.

The seminar was organized by Peter Baynes and Esther Harding, and twenty-nine people attended.

The seminar had two main themes—the technique of analysis and the historical psychological effects of Christianity.

During this period, an increasing number of people from England and America made their way to Zurich to work with Jung, forming an informal expatriate group.

On August 22, 1922, Jaime de Angulo wrote to Chauncey Goodrich issuing "a challenge to all brother-neurotics—go, my brethren, go to the Mecca, I mean to Zürich, and drink from the fountain of life, all ye who are dead in your souls, go and seek new life."22

On April 30, 1923, there was an initiative from Eugen Schlegel that the Club should try to involve Jung again.

A correspondence ensued later that year between Jung and Alphonse Maeder in this regard.

Jung's position was that he would only return if his collaboration was clearly and unanimously desired. Within the Club, there was heated discussion concerning this.

For example, on October 29, 1923, von Muralt contended that Jung used people for his personal ends, that personal relations were difficult with him unless one accepted his theories, and that his attitude toward people wasn't one of an analyst, and so on.

One can imagine Jung's response to finding himself in a situation in which an institution he had founded, based on his vision, was being taken to other destinations, while he was being cast in the role of an obstructive patriarch.

In February 1924, Hans Trüb stepped down as president of the Club, and a letter was sent to Jung asking him to return, which he did a month later.

Later that year, Jung commenced giving a three-part lecture in German on the psychology of dreams (November 1, December 8, February 21, 1925) followed by a discussion on May 23, 1925.

It is significant to note that while the present English-language seminars were held at the Psychological Club, they were not officially "Club seminars"—no mention of them is found in the Club minutes or annual report, and of the fifty-two members and three guests of the Club in 1925, only a handful attended them.

Rather, the seminars appear to have been a private event arranged by Jung, which happened to have been held at the Psychological Club.

It seems that there was greater continuity between those who attended Jung's Polzeath seminars and these (the seminar groups were around the same size).

Thus there was a division between the locally based members of the Club, who had only recently readmitted Jung to their midst, and the more international audience of Jung's English-language seminars, and consequently a different psychological dynamic.

In the years to come, the English-language contingent would play the dominant role in the dissemination of his work.

The Seminars

Jung had commenced Psychological Types by commenting on the subjective conditioning of knowledge, the "personal equation."

He noted that in psychology, conceptions "will always be a product of the subjective psychological constellation of the investigator."

Recognizing the effects of the personal equation, which constituted the subjective determination of knowledge, constituted the precondition for the scientific appraisal of other individuals.

In this seminar, Jung spoke candidly of his personal equation—not of his biography as such, but of his orientation, the formation of his psychological viewpoint, his subjective orientation.

For the first time, he spoke of his psychological type.

He began his presentation by indicating that he intended to give a "view" of the" width of the field" of analytical psychology, and began this by sketching the genesis of his own conceptions, commencing with when he became preoccupied with issues to do with the unconscious.

Strikingly in contrast to the Freudocentric presentations of his work, Jung did not then move directly to this association with Freud, but to his prior readings of Schopenhauer and von Hartmann and involvement with spiritualism, thus situating his work within a completely different intellectual and experiential trajectory from that of Freud.

Jung made clear that it was only after having formed his initial conceptions of the unconscious and the libido and having made his mark through his experimental researches in psychopathology that he came into contact with Freud.

While he felt that he independently confirmed some of Freud's theories, he maintained reservations right from the start.

In his published work, Jung had indicated his theoretical differences with Freud.

Here, he spoke candidly of their relationship for the first time, and of Freud's personal shortcomings—his dishonesty concerning his cases, his inability to take criticism, and finally, placing his own authority above truth.

This formed Jung's first response to Freud's ad hominem account of their relation in his On the History of the Psychoanalytic Movement in 1914.

Jung then noted powerful dreams that Freud was unable to understand correctly, which gave him a new sense of the autonomy of the unconscious.

He then came to realize that in Transformations and Symbols of the Libido (1912), he had been analyzing his own fantasy function.

Consequently, he set about to do this in a more systematic manner.

Jung then narrated his visions on the way to Schaffhausen in October 1913, which, after the outbreak of the war, he took to be precognitive and the commencement of his active imaginations.

He focused on his dialogues with his soul in the autumn of 1913, his first visual descent on December 12, his dream of slaying Siegfried on December 18, and his encounters with Elijah and Salome shortly thereafter.

In sum, the period of his self-experimentation, which Jung covered in the seminar, ran from October to December 1913, which forms the basis of the first part of Liber Novus, Liber Primus.

Coupled with discussion, this forms the main body of this seminar.

This was the first and indeed the only time in which Jung spoke in public about this material.

Significantly, however, while narrating these episodes, Jung never directly referred to Liber Novus, which would clearly have aroused great curiosity.

The seminar can be considered an experiment in presenting analytical psychology in the first person voice, with his own “case” as the clearest example of his theories.

At the same time, he pointedly told his audience, “I have told you a very great deal, but do not assume that I have told you all!”

His presentation here went some way toward answering Cary Baynes’s request for a seminar on Liber Novus, and it is possible that Jung was interested in viewing the audience’s response in connection with the question of his deliberations concerning publishing the work.

Jung’s discussion of these episodes by no means replicates his commentary on them in the second layer of Liber Novus, and can be considered a third layer of commentary.

As opposed to the lyrical and evocative language of the second layer of Liber Novus, Jung here employs his psychological concepts—to be more precise, he attempts to show how he derived his psychological concepts from his reflections upon these encounters.

As he tellingly noted, “I drew all of my empirical material from my patients, but the solution of the problem I drew from the inside, from my observations of the unconscious processes.”

At the same time, his presentation served a pedagogical function.

The audience was largely composed of people he was working with, and we may presume that the practice of active imagination played a key part in their work.

Thus he was in effect using his own material as a teaching exemplar, showing how his personal psychological typology was portrayed and played out in his fantasies, how he encountered and came to terms with the figures of the anima and wise old man, and the genesis of the transcendent function as a resolution of the conflict of the opposites.

In addition, a significant part of the discussion in the seminar centered on the significance of modern art and how it could be understood psychologically.

The question of situating his own creative work appears to have been in the background of Jung's mind.

After the presentation and discussion of his material, Jung then presented a generalized schema showing how such figures could be understood.

From a historical perspective, one may regret that the participants did not press Jung into presenting and commenting on more of his personal material.

The seminar concluded with a class assignment, in which the participants were asked to study three popular novels dealing with the theme of the anima, Rider Haggard's She, Benoît's L'Atlantide, and Meyrink's Das grüne Gesicht (The Green Face).

At the request of the class, a work dealing with the animus, Marie Hay's The Evil Vineyard, was substituted for Meyrink's work.

As Jung put it, the purpose of this exercise was to give him "a good idea of what you have gained from these lectures."

It was the first time that Jung had turned to popular writings to illustrate his work.

The fifth chapter of Psychological Types featured his analysis of the Swiss author Carl Spitteler's novel, Prometheus and Epimetheus.

Spitteler had been awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1919.

Published in 1887, Rider Haggard's She continued to be a best seller.

The production of a silent film based on the novel, for which Rider Haggard wrote the film's intertitles, was completed in 1925.

The utilization of popular novels served the function of demonstrating the fact that the psychological dynamics at play within the individuation process were by no means a purely esoteric affair.

A few weeks following the conclusion of this seminar on July 6, Jung went to England to deliver another English-language seminar series in Swanage, in Dorset, between July 25 and August 7.

The seminar was organized again by Peter Baynes and Esther Harding.

The subject was dream analysis, and around one hundred participants attended.

Jung commenced by presenting a history of dream interpretation and followed this with an analysis of a series of dreams in a fifty-three-year-old widow.

The Aftermath Cary Baynes took notes of the seminar, and soon after the seminar, there was discussion concerning the possible publication of the notes, which seems to have first been proposed by Dr. Harriet Ward.

In a diary entry of September 26, 1925, Cary Baynes wrote an account of some of these deliberations:

After talking with Emma about the notes and finding that her reaction to the printing of them is just what my own was, all my resistances to that idea have now come back upon me very strongly, and I would like to put the matter before you once more.

I think those lectures you gave last spring are the most important thing that has happened in psychology in this century, because in them you give the passage of an idea from its place in nature as an archetype, to the position of an abstraction, or a concept, the last refinement of human ingenuity you might say.

Such a thing has never ever even been dreamed of in the world before, much less done, and therefore I think those lectures ought to be treated in a way that befits the importance of their content.

But you will say, what better way is there of treating them than having them printed?

But I think the printing of them just exactly falsifies them in a very painful way.

It is generally accepted that when a thing is printed it is to be looked upon as in a more or less permanent form, but those notes are in no form at all, they could not be, and do not profess to be more than a schematic rehearsal of what you said.

They partake of the nature of the sculptor's ébauche [mock up] in clay, and as such they have magic, but as soon as they are forced into something they are not, the magic goes out of them and they go flat.

Moreover, when you make something with spoken words, you can build extraordinary structures in a short space of time, but when it comes to the written or rather the printed word, the structures have to have visible foundations under them if they are to carry, that is in the field of science.

Now all three series of lectures, Swanage, those here, and Cornwall, are filled with fugitive thoughts that flew with sureness when you spoke them, but go limping across the pages of the notes with only half a wing-power.

If you wrote them they would fly again, but as notes they won't, and so it is another reason I think they ought not to be presented with the formality that printing gives them.

They should be kept just as they are, rough laboratory material, until such time as you will work up the ideas in them into a book which you will undoubtedly do in the course of time.

The best way to keep them in their place seems to be to have them mimeographed and given only to members of the class with a half a dozen exceptions such as Baynes, Shaw and a few others like that. . . .

Last spring when I talked to you about it, you would look at it only as a harmless phantasy of Ward's, this printing idea.

I have no doubt you thought the same thing when Hinkle proposed translating the Wandlung [Transformations and Symbols of the Libido], but look how far from harmless that phantasy proved to be!

One can imagine the impact that these seminars, with their level of detail concerning Jung's self-experimentation, would have had had they been published at that time.

Cary Baynes perceptively highlighted the most striking aspect of the seminars, namely the manner in which Jung's account provided a unique window into the creative process, through charting the sequence from the emergence of his fantasies, to his reflections upon them, to their end result in the form of psychological abstractions in a new conception of human psychology.

Cary Baynes's proposal concerning the limited distribution of the seminars was adopted.

Jung took the notes with him for review when he left for his trip to Africa.

On October 19, he wrote to her "off Lisbon":

"I faithfully worked through the notes as you will see. I think they are as a whole very accurate. Certain lectures are even fluent, namely those which you could not stop your libido from flowing in."

Jung's close check of the text of this seminar distinguishes it from the notes of most of his other seminars, and assures their reliability.

From her distribution list of the first fifty copies, in addition to those who attended the seminar, copies were given to the following:

Dr. Peter Baynes, Mrs. Sigg, Chauncey Goodrich, Miss von Sury, Mrs. Füglisteller, Professor Vodaz, Dr. James Young, Dr. Irma Putnam, Dr. Elizabeth Whitney, Dr. Wolfgang Kranefeldt, Mrs. Altherr, Miss N. Taylor, Frances Wickes, Wilfred Lay, Dr. Helen Shaw, Willard Durham, Dr. Adela Wharton, Miss M. Mills, and the Psychological Club.

Following the preparation of the seminar notes, while Jung was in Africa, Cary Baynes returned to her work transcribing Liber Novus.

After his return from Africa in April 1926, he took up again his work transcribing Liber Novus into the calligraphic volume.

However, from this point until he left off the transcription in 1930 (before taking it up one last time in the late 1950s), there are only ten full text calligraphic pages, two complete paintings (the "window unto eternity" and "golden castle" mandalas and one unfinished painting).

In 1926, Jung published The Unconscious in the Normal and Sick Life of the Soul: An Overview of the Modern Theory and Method of Analytical Psychology.

This was a revision of his 1917 book, The Psychology of the Unconscious Processes: An Overview of the Practice and Theory of Analytical Psychology.

The main changes between this edition and the second edition of 1918 was the revision of the material on psychological types, an expansion and revision of the discussion of the unconscious, together with additional material on individuation and psychotherapy.

In 1928 he published The Relations between the I and the Unconscious, and a greatly revised and expanded version of his 1916 article, "The Structure of the Unconscious."

The chapters on the confrontation with the anima, animus, and mana personality elaborate some of his presentation in the present seminar, citing Rider Haggard's and Benoît's books, without presenting any of the personal background.

When Jung published three of his paintings from Liber Novus in his commentary on The Secret of the Golden Flower in 1929 as examples of "European mandalas," they were presented anonymously.

Henceforth, Jung would eschew the first person voice, either in the form of his presentation in this seminar or through a publication of Liber Novus.

In the late 1950s, when Aniela Jaffé was engaged in her biographical project that resulted in Memories, Dreams, Reflections, she raided sections of this seminar to supplement the material from her interviews with Jung, in particular, Jung's discussion of his relation with Freud and of his self-experimentation, in her chapter on his "confrontation with the unconscious."

Unfortunately, the manner in which the material was combined and sequenced in this chapter makes it impossible to establish a clear chronology of this period and loses the coherence of the discussion in this seminar.

It also did not distinguish between Jung's discussion of the material in 1925, when he was still engaged in the transcription and painting, from his subsequent recollections and reflections more than thirty years later.

The foregoing has served to indicate the uniqueness of this seminar in Jung's canon, which was not widely grasped when it was finally published in 1989.

The publication of Jung's Liber Novus in 2009 enables it to be read in a new light, and to be seen as an essential companion to that work: a further chapter in his working through of the material and its elaboration into a conceptual form, as well as a pedagogical experiment.

Its unique combination of the personal, historical, and conceptual make it the clearest single-volume introduction to Jung's psychology. Sonu Shamdasani, Introduction 1925 Seminar, Pages ix-xxiii

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/2f03e-1sonu.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Introduction-Jungian-Psychology-Analytical-Foundation/dp/0691152055/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1JR458JNQST8D&keywords=jung+1925+seminar&qid=15776377`

Wolfgang Pauli on his "World Clock" Vision (2019-12-30 03:30)

[1]

[2]Atom and Archetype: The Pauli/Jung Letters, 1932-1958

Dear Mr. Jung, Zurich 7, 15-x-38

In summer I came across your book Psychology and Religion,' and I saw that you have attached a certain importance to some of my early dreams, especially the vision with the "World clock."

This now prompts me to tell you about a dream I had at the beginning of this year which, both in structure and content, is closely related to the dreams discussed in the book, especially the world-clock vision.

In my defense for bothering you with it, I would also point out that the dream recorded in detail on the enclosed sheet, after my notes, is one of the relatively few dreams that I regard as significant and effective.

As an obedient student of yours, I must first say something about the conscious attitude when the dream occurred.

I was once at a meeting where someone was talking about the oracle of the I Ching.

It struck me that the one consulting the oracle has to "draw" three time., whereas the result of the draw depends on the divisibility of a quantity by four.

This reminded vividly of the “world-clock vision,” in which the motif of the permeation of the 3 and the 4 was the main source of feeling the harmony.

The dream occurred about 2 weeks later, when the matter was no longer consciously preoccupying me, and it brought the subject to a sort of provisional conclusion.

As in the dream contents, I don’t want to get bogged down in too much sweeping speculation but wold just like to make a few general observations.

After a careful and critical appraisal of many experiences and arguments, I have come to accept the existence of deeper spiritual layers that cannot be adequately defined by the conventional concept of time.

The logical consequence of this is that the death of the single individual in these layers does not have its usual meaning. for they always go beyond life.

In the absence of appropriate terms of reference these spiritual spheres are represented by symbols; in my case, they are particularly often represented by wave or oscillation symbols (which still remains to be explained).

The relationship to these images is strongly affective and connected with afeeling that could be described as a mimue of fear and awe. (You will perhaps say that the curves are an imago dei.)

In the dream described here, an attempt is first made to relate the two lowest of the 3 layers to a four-part object (clock), but this does not work.

This is why, in contrast to the earlier world clock vision, the sense of harmony is missing.

The cry of the ecstatic "voice" at the end of the dream is perhaps a way of showing the puzzling "rhythms" from a new side. and they seem to be regulating that process which is here called “paying."

One is inclined to connect the "certain life" with the first (quickest) rhythm and the (temporally) indefinite life with the other two rhythms.

I would he interested to hear what you make of this dream for I attach a great deal of importance to all these problems.

Thanking you in advance for your trouble.

I send my best wishes.

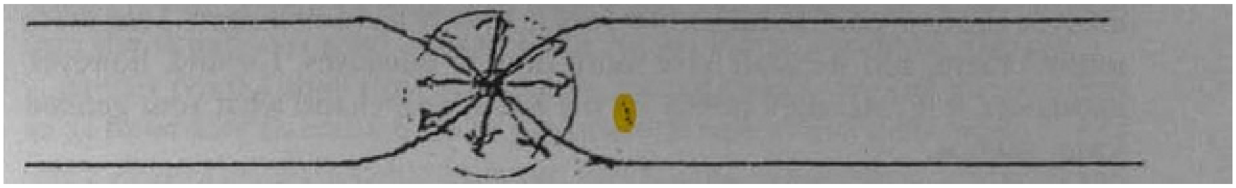
Yours sincerely

W. PAULI Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 20-21

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/089ca-12bclock.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Atom-Archetype-Letters-1932-1958-Updated/dp/069116147X/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1HBMC7NDIAGKQ&keywords=atom+and+archetype+the+pauli%2Fjung+letters`

Wolfgang Pauli: Our talk yesterday on the "synchronicity" (2019-12-30 03:30)

[1]



Dear Professor Jung, Zollikon-Zurich, 7 Nov, 1948

Our talk yesterday on the "synchronicity of dreams and external circumstances (Do you also use this term "synchronous” when there is a gap of 2-3 months between dream and external event?) was of great help to me, and I should like to thank you once again.

As you told me you were very preoccupied at the moment with the rotation symbolism of mandalas, I am taking the liberty of sending you the exact text of one of my dream that occurred about 2 years ago-in which rotation, and hence the concept of space, was the central feature.

It may be useful to you in dealing with these questions that are on your mind at the moment.

Of course, it is about the relativity of the concept of space in relation to the psyche, and if the problem were not important here and now, this dream would not have had such an overwhelming effect on me at the time.

The Kepler lecture, the idea of the neutral language, and the further pursuit of the archetypal background of physical terms were all triggered off in me at the time.

The objectivity of the archetypal background makes it seem very likely to me that the problem of the mandalas, which you mentioned briefly yesterday, and the one that is behind this dream will be one and the same.

As to the phenomenon described by you as synchronistic, I am for the time being using a sort of symbolic aid or working hypothesis which-as the simplest elementary case of the Riemann surface-looks as follows: This is supposed to represent the cross-section of two leaves (to be thought of as continuing perpendicular to the plane surface) that are generally separated but that connect at the central point marked out (penetrating each other-mathematicians are very generous in this respect)

The number of leaves is arbitrary two simply being the easiest number.

The essential thing is by circling round the central point (perpendicular to the plane surface) one gets from the lower leaf to the upper one (and vice versa).

The "radioactive nucleus" is a symbolic cause, determined by the unconscious, of the "synchronistically" connected phenomena one of which, for example, (lower leaf) consists in the fact that I have a certain dream, the other (upper leaf) in the fact that Mr. or Mrs. X falls ill or dies.

The activity that comes from the central point in the intermediate stratum deals initially with the distinction between "physis” and "psyche" and represents an order that operates outside space and partly outside time as well.

But the presence of this activity described as "radioactivity" by the neutral language that springs up spontaneously from my unconscious-is essentially linked to the condition that archetypal contents (from a deeper, completely timeless stratum) draw near to the conscious (doubling phenomenon), so that the problem of their integration into the conscious has become an immediate one.

Is it not a fact that when one looks more closely at the drawing, the mandala circle is split into two leaves lying on top of each other, which, in accordance with a set pattern, overlap in the center (Self)?

With many thanks,

Yours sincerely,

W Pauli Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages, 34-35

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/290d1-12bpauli.jpg`

Wolfgang Pauli: In the first half of my life I was a cold and cynical devil... (2019-12-30 03:30)

[1]

© Pavel Krásenský
www.naturfoto.cz

Dear Dr. Jung, May 24, 1934

I have just received your letter, and it would be very convenient for me to meet you on Monday at the earlier time of 11 o'clock.

May I take this opportunity of adding a few remarks?

In the meantime, I have to a very large extent become clear about the danger specific to my life, which had been projected onto the wasps.

The alternating light and dark stripes must be diametrically opposed psychic attitudes, or dispositions to forms and behavior.

Moreover, they are very closely related to ethics, religion, and relationships toward other people, as well as to sensual feelings, eroticism, and sexuality.

The specific limit to my life has been the fact that in the second half of life I swing from one extreme to another (the enantiodromia).

In the first half of my life I was a cold and cynical devil to other people and a fanatical atheist and intellectual "enlightener."

The opposite to that was on the one hand, a tendency toward being a criminal, a thug (which could have degenerated into me becoming a murderer), and, and, the other hand, becoming detached from the world-a totally unintellectual hermit with outbursts of ecstasy and visions.

So the purpose of my neurosis was to keep me from this danger of changing abruptly into the opposite.

In marriage there can only be the balance of the happy medium, the Tao.

My wife has a similar problem of opposites, but the reverse of mine.

Up to now, all that she has lived out externally has been social relationships and human kindness, and she makes unrealistic ethical demands, such as Everybody should be good.

Consequently, as I have been able to observe by looking closely, the demand of the evil side for recognition has accumulated in her unconscious, and her animus has an extremely robust, nay even violent character.

And that is why she fell in love with my shadow side, because it secretly made a deep impression on her.

But in my view this creates the prerequisites for balance in marriage.

But there is more to it than that: This abrupt swing into the opposite is a danger not just for me but for our whole civilization.

This is what the dream with the 3 giant horses is saying; in this moment everything can turn into primitive barbarianism, unless Tao and individuation step in.

This is why my personal problem is also a collective one, and, conversely, the danger that I personally was faced with was greatly heightened by a disposition that was forced upon me by the collective unconscious.

I spent Whitsuntide in Melchtal and I visited the Bruder Kalus chapel at great length, studying the pictures hanging there, which represent his visions.

I was thoroughly fascinated by them and felt a strong and immediate rapport with them.

His life was really turned upside down when he left his family and went into the wilderness.

And he had that peculiar vision of the Trinity, which gave him such a terrible fright.

As far as I mow, no attempt has yet been made to explain this fright.

I believe that it must have been a similar fright, albeit much greater and stronger, to the one I had in the dream with the 3 giant horses.

Now Bruder Klaus knew nothing about individuation or any alternative to Christianity.

He must have had a vision or something like the end of the world.

And the relationship to the Trinity is perfectly understandable to me, for I once had a dream in which the Trinity turned into the 3 rhythms (the "world clock").

And the interplay of the latter is said to involve danger at a certain point in time.

Do you find this point of view outlandish?

Perhaps it is.

But we must not lose sight of the fact that these are objective, psychic facts, which all come from the same collective unconscious.

So I am really looking forward to seeing you again next Monday at U o’clock, and remain,

with best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

W PAULI Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 27-28

Dear Professor Jung 3.VI. 40

Owing to circumstances beyond my control, I am sending you the enclosed dream material from the years ’937-1939, so that it does not get lost.

In the middle of May I suddenly and quite out of the blue received an invitation to be a guest professor at Princeton, where I have already been once before.

I may be leaving this week; it all depends which of the two will win the race: the passport and visa bureaucracy or the war looming up in the Mediterranean.

I mention this here in order to justify the fact that I am sending you the material without any additional remarks, which I would have liked to have worked out beforehand.

With the concept of time (in particular the dream from 12.-111-1939). I have since made some progress by studying the writings of Wilhelm, especially his commentary to the IChing (comments on “Kreislauf des Geschelhens” pp 155 ff in Der Mensch und das Sein; p. 176f on transmigration of souls/reincarnations).

And I have also read the part in the text of the goldenen Blute pp. 142-143 of the 1st edn. [Baynes translation, 1931, p. 55.] about the possibility of multiplication in a moment when the pairs of opposites counterbalance each other (relationship of the “tree series” to my periodic dream symbols).

The motif of the projection of various periodic processes onto each other, as a sort of associative connections, seems to play an important role here, especially as, psychologically speaking, the concept of time is based on memory, powers of recall, and association.

This projection of cycles onto each other was later actually represented by me in dreams by abstract, mathematical symbols.

I believe I agree with you totally when you say that a “metaphysical” assumption of reincarnation is not necessary.

In the meantime, now that I have worked through the 1934 material again, another aspect of the rhythms has become clear to me, especially the “great vision" with the world clock published by you in your 1935 lectures.

This link has already been hinted at with the word "pulse" and concerns the relationship of the rhythm to the heartbeat and to circulation.

Unfortunately, I no longer have time to compile the relevant material, but I do feel that this relationship is a crucial one.

The dreams seem to express the idea that an archetypal image of the four-beat stands for a permanent, automatic, steady rhythm, with self-regulation as the aim of both a physical-biological process as well as a purely psychic one (cf. here the "Eternal City"), and that this image of the objective psyche also causes, as it were, the circulation of the blood. (The four chambers of the heart seem to have a link with the quaternity of the mandala.)

With me, this then gave rise to the question of whether, in the comparative anatomy of the animal order or in the embryonic development of lower animals with single blood vessels up to the actual formation of the heart, there do not emerge parallels to the individuation process (with its formation in the middle").

I have often talked about this with Dr. C. A. Meier,' and he has informed me of an interesting vision from his material that seems to be related to this question.

But this whole problem is far beyond my personal competence as well as my education and training.

Do you perhaps still have a copy of the German edition of Psychology and Religion for me? (I never got a copy of the English edition.)

With my best wishes to you in this difficult time,

Yours sincerely,

W. Pauli Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 29-30

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/7644d-12bwasp.jpg`

Carl Jung on “Catholicism” – Anthology (2019-12-30 04:30)

I have as little need to convince myself of how good the Catholic Church is for very many people. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Pages 197-198

The Catholic Church arranges the codification of memories and the lessons of history so much better. The conservation of so much classical paganism is of inestimable value. Therefore the Catholic is the Christian Church par excellence. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 339-340

Although the Catholic Church has often been accused of particular rigidity, she nevertheless admits that dogma is a living thing and that its formulation is therefore capable of change and development. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 10

Why, when Pope Pius XII in one of his last discourses deplored that the world was no longer conscious enough of the presence of angels, he was saying to his faithful Catholics in Christian terms exactly what I am trying to say in terms of psychology to those who stand more chance of understanding this language than any other. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410-423

Even so, as a Protestant, it is quite clear to me that, in its healing effects, no creed is as closely akin to psychoanalysis as Catholicism. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 38-46

The symbols of the Catholic liturgy offer the unconscious such a wealth of possibilities for expression that they act as an incomparable diet for the psyche. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 38-46

Let us take as a sample the Catholic Mass. If we study this we must recognize it to be one of the most perfect things we possess. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 119

God is light and darkness, the auctor rerum is love and wrath. We still pray: "Lead us not into temptation." (The French Catholic version of the Vulgate has: "Let us not fall into temptation."!) Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Pages 471-473

Our culture, which is threatened today, is primarily a Christian culture, if it had not been for the Roman Catholic Church, we should still be barbarians. Carl Jung, ETH Lectures, Page 196.

The Roman Catholic Church provides a chance for people to get away from their complexes and back to mankind with confession and the age-old therapy was consecration by initiation which included the avowal of sins. Carl Jung, Modern Psychology, Vol. 1, Page 132.

Thus the fact that there is a genuine religiosity in the Catholic Church proves the existence of a need for fixed and immovable ideas and forms. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 395-398.

The Catholic Church is liberal enough to look upon the Osiris-Horus-Isis myth, or at any rate suitable portions of it, as a prefiguration of the Christian legend of salvation. Carl Jung, Psychology and Religion, Paragraph 178.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/cbb81-12bcatholic.jpg`

Carl Jung on "History" - Anthology (2019-12-30 05:27)

Carl Jung on “History” – Anthology

One could almost say that if all the world’s traditions were cut off at a single blow, the whole of mythology and the whole history of religion would start all over again with the next generation. Carl Jung , CW 4, Para 30

Only those who regard the happenings in this world as a concatenation of errors and accidents, and who therefore believe that the pedagogic hand of the rationalist is constantly needed to guide us, can ever imagine that this path [of psychoanalysis] was an aberration from which we should have been warned off with a signboard. Besides the deeper insight into psychological determination, we owe to this "error" a method of inquiry of incalculable importance. It is for us to rejoice and be thankful that Freud had the courage to let himself be guided along this path. Not thus is the progress of science hindered, but rather by blind adherence to insights once gained, by the typical conservatism of authority, by the childish vanity of the savant and his fear of making mistakes. This lack of courage is considerably more injurious to the name of science than an honest error. When will there be an end to the incessant squabbling about who is right? One has only to look at the history of science how many have been right, and how few have remained right! Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 302

One-sidedness appears over and over again in the history of science. I am not saying this as a reproach on the contrary, we must be glad that there are people who are courageous enough to be immoderate and one-sided. It is to them that we owe our discoveries. What is regrettable is that each should defend his one-sidedness so passionately. Scientific theories are merely suggestions as to how things might be observed. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 241

Moral law is nothing other than an outward manifestation of man’s innate urge to dominate and control himself. This impulse to domestication and civilization is lost in the dim, unfathomable depths of man’s evolutionary history and can never be conceived as the consequence of laws imposed from without, Man himself, obeying his instincts, created his laws. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 486

We should never forget that what today seems to us a moral commandment will tomorrow be cast into the melting-pot and transformed, so that in the near or distant future it may serve as a basis for new ethical formations. This much we ought to have learnt from the history of civilization, that the forms of morality belong to the category of transitory things. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 667

Has mankind ever really got away from myths? Everyone who has his eyes and wits about him can see that the world is dead, cold, and unending. Never yet has he beheld a God, or been compelled to require the existence of such a God from the evidence of his senses. On the contrary, it needed the strongest inner compulsion, which can only be explained by the irrational force of instinct, for man to invent those religious beliefs whose absurdity was long since pointed out by Tertullian. In the same way one can withhold the material content of primitive myths from a child but not take from him the need for mythology, and still less his ability to manufacture it for himself. One could almost say that if all the world's traditions were cut off at a single blow, the whole of mythology and the whole history of religion would start all over again with the next generation. Carl Jung, CW 4, Para 30

In the same way one can withhold the material content of primitive myths from a child but not take from him the need for mythology, and still less his ability to manufacture it for himself. One could almost say that if all the world's traditions were cut off at a single blow, the whole of mythology and the whole history of religion would start all over again with the next generation. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 30

To the degree that the modern mind is passionately concerned with anything and everything rather than religion, religion and its prime object—original sin—have mostly vanished into the unconscious. That is why, today, nobody believes in either. People accuse psychology of dealing in squalid fantasies, and yet even a cursory glance at ancient religions and the history of morals should be sufficient to convince them of the demons hidden in the human soul. This disbelief in the devilishness of human nature goes hand in hand with a blank incomprehension of religion and its meaning. Carl Jung, CW 5, Para 106

The psychology of an individual can never be exhaustively explained from himself alone: a clear recognition is needed of the way it is also conditioned by historical and environmental circumstances. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 717

Reason can give a man equilibrium only if his reason is already an equilibrating organ. But for how many individuals and at what periods in history has it been that? As a rule, a man needs the opposite of his actual situation to force him to find his place in the middle. For the sake of mere reason he can never forgo life's riches and the sensuous appeal of the immediate situation. Against the power and delight of the temporal he must set the joy of the eternal, and against the passion of the sensual the ecstasy of the spiritual. The undeniable reality of the one must be matched by the compelling power of the other. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 386

The ways and customs of childhood, once so sublimely good, can hardly be laid aside even when their harmful-ness has long since been proved. The same, only on a gigantic scale, is true of historical changes of attitude. A collective attitude is equivalent to a religion, and changes of religion constitute one of the most painful chapters in the world's history. In this respect our age is afflicted with a blindness that has no parallel. We think we have only to declare an accepted article of faith incorrect and invalid, and we shall be psychologically rid of all the traditional effects of Christianity or Judaism. We believe in enlightenment, as if an intellectual change somehow had a profounder influence on the emotional processes or even on the unconscious. We entirely forget that the religion of the last two thousand years is a psychological attitude, a definite form and manner of adaptation to the world without and within, that lays down a definite cultural pattern and creates an atmosphere which remains wholly uninfluenced by any intellectual denials. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 313

Between the religion of a people and its actual mode of life there is always a compensatory relation, otherwise religion would have no practical significance at all. Beginning with the highly moral religion of the Persians and the notorious dubiousness—even in antiquity—of Persian habits of life, right down to our "Christian" epoch, when the religion of love assisted at the greatest blood-bath in the world's history—wherever we turn this rule holds true. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 229

The tasks of every age differ, and it is only in retrospect that we can discern with certainty what had to be and what should not have been. In the momentary present the conflict of opinions will always rage, for "war is the father of all." History alone decides the issue. Truth is not eternal —it is a programme to be fulfilled. The more "eternal" a truth, the more lifeless it is and worthless; it says nothing more to us because it is self-evident. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 87

Man is not a machine that can be remodeled for quite other purposes as occasion demands, in the hope that it will go on functioning as regularly as before but in a quite different way. He carries his whole history with him; in his very structure is written the history of mankind. The historical element in man represents a vital need to which a wise psychic economy must respond. Somehow the past must come alive and participate in the present. Total assimilation to the object will always arouse the protest of the suppressed minority of those elements that belong to the past and have existed from the very beginning. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 570

Do we ever understand what we think? We only understand that kind of thinking which is a mere equation, from which nothing comes out but what we have put in. That is the working of the intellect. But besides that there is a thinking in primordial images, in symbols which are older than the historical man, which are inborn in him from the earliest times, and, eternally living, outlasting all generations, still make up the groundwork of the human psyche. As we can see from the example of Faust, the vision of the symbol is a pointer to the onward course of life, beckoning the libido towards a still distant goal—but a goal that henceforth will burn unquenchably within him, so that his life, kindled as by a flame, moves steadily towards the far off beacon. This is the specific life-promoting significance of the symbol, and such, too, is the meaning and value of religious symbols. I am speaking, of course, not of symbols that are dead and stiffened by dogma, but of living symbols that rise up from the creative unconscious of the living man. The immense significance of such symbols can be denied only by those for whom the history of the world begins with the present day. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 202

The dammed-up instinctual forces in civilized man are immensely destructive and far more dangerous than the instincts of the primitive, who in a modest degree is constantly living out his negative instincts. Consequently no war of the historical past can rival in grandiose horror the wars of civilized nations. Carl Jung, CW 6, Para 230

The office I hold is certainly my special activity; but it is also a collective factor that has come into existence historically through the cooperation of many people and whose dignity rests solely on collective approval. When, therefore, I identify myself with my office or title, I behave as though I myself were the whole complex of social factors of which that office consists, or as though I were not only the bearer of the office, but also and at the same time the approval of society. I have made an extraordinary extension of myself and have usurped qualities which are not in me but outside e. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 227

Our life is indeed the same as it ever was. At all events, in our sense of the word it is not transitory; for the same physiological and psychological processes that have been man’s for hundreds of thousands of years still endure, instilling into our inmost hearts this profound intuition of the "eternal" continuity of the living. But the self, as an inclusive term that embraces our whole living organism, not only contains the deposit and totality of all past life, but is also a point of departure, the fertile soil from which all future life will spring. This premonition of futurity is as clearly impressed upon our innermost feelings as is the historical aspect. The idea of immortality follows legitimately from these psychological premises. Carl Jung, CW 7, Para 303

But besides that there is a thinking in primordial images, in symbols which are older than the historical man, which are inborn in him from the earliest times, and, eternally living, outlasting all generations, still make up the groundwork of the human psyche. It is only possible to live the fullest life when we are in harmony with these symbols; wisdom is a return to them. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 794

But besides that [Intellect] there is a thinking in primordial images, in symbols which are older than the historical man, which are inborn in him from the earliest times, and, eternally living, outlasting all generations, still make up the groundwork of the human psyche. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 794

The soul possesses in some degree a historical stratification, whereby the oldest stratum of which would correspond to the unconscious. Carl Jung. CW 8, Para 51.

Naturally, every age thinks that all ages before it were prejudiced, and today we think this more than ever and are just as wrong as all previous ages that thought so. How often have we not seen the truth condemned! It is sad but unfortunately true that man learns nothing from history. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 861.

But spirit that demands a symbol for its expression is a psychic complex that contains the seeds of incalculable possibilities. The most obvious and best example of this is the effectiveness of the Christian symbols, whose power changed the face of history. If one looks without prejudice at the way the spirit of early Christianity worked on the mind of the average man of the second century, one can only be amazed. But then, no spirit was ever as creative as this. No wonder it was felt to be of godlike superiority Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 644

Incisive changes in history are generally attributed exclusively to external causes. It seems to me, however, that external circumstances often serve merely as occasions for a new attitude to life and the world, long prepared in the unconscious, to become manifest. Social, political, and religious conditions affect the collective unconscious in the sense that all those factors which are suppressed by the prevailing views or attitudes in the life of a society gradually accumulate in the collective unconscious and activate its contents. Certain individuals gifted with particularly strong intuition then become aware of the changes going on in it and translate these changes into communicable ideas. The new ideas spread rapidly because parallel changes have been taking place in the unconscious of other people. There is a general readiness to accept the new ideas, although on the other hand they often meet with violent resistance. New ideas are not just the enemies of the old; they also appear as a rule in an extremely unacceptable form. Carl Jung, CW 8, Para 594

Christ… "An historical personage is uni-temporal and unique; is God, universal and eternal." Carl Jung, CW 9i, para. 116.

Shall we be able to put on, like a new suit of clothes, ready-made symbols grown on foreign soil, saturated with foreign blood, spoken in a foreign tongue, nourished by a foreign culture, interwoven with foreign history, and so resemble a beggar who wraps himself in kingly raiment, a king who disguises himself as a beggar? Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 26.

The mere fact that people talk about rebirth, and that there is such a concept at all, means that a store of psychic experiences designated by that term must actually exist. What these experiences are like we can only infer from the statements that have been made about them. So, if we want to find out what rebirth really is, we must turn to history in order to ascertain what "rebirth" has been understood to mean. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 206

As soon as people get together in masses and submerge the individual, the shadow is mobilized, and, as history shows, may even be personified and incarnated. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 478.

A living example of the mystery drama representing the permanence as well as the transformation of life is the Mass. If we observe the congregation during this sacred rite we note all degrees of participation, from mere indifferent attendance to the profoundest emotion. The groups of men standing about near the exit, who are obviously engaged in every sort of worldly conversation, crossing themselves and genuflecting in a purely mechanical way—even they, despite their inattention, participate in the sacral action by their mere presence in this place where grace abounds. The Mass is an extramundane and extratemporal act in which Christ is sacrificed and then resurrected in the transformed substances; and this rite of his sacrificial death is not a repetition of the historical event but the original, unique, and eternal act. The experience of the Mass is therefore a participation in the transcendence of life, which overcomes all bounds of space and time. It is a moment of eternity in time. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 209

The history of Protestantism has been one of chronic iconoclasm. One wall after another fell. And the work of destruction was not too difficult once the authority of the Church had been shattered. We all know how, in large things as in small, in general as well as in particular, piece after piece collapsed, and how the alarming poverty of symbols that is now the condition of our life came about. With that the power of the Church has vanished too—a fortress robbed of its bastions and casemates, a house whose walls have been plucked away, exposed to all the winds of the world and to all dangers. Although this is, properly speaking, a lamentable collapse that offends our sense of history, the disintegration of Protestantism into nearly four hundred denominations is yet a sure sign that the restlessness continues. The Protestant is cast out into a state of defencelessness that might well make the natural man shudder. His enlightened consciousness, of course, refuses to take cognizance of this fact, and is quietly looking elsewhere for what has been lost to Europe. We seek the effective images, the thought-forms that satisfy the restlessness of heart and mind, and we find the treasures of the East. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 31

I am convinced that the growing impoverishment of symbols has a meaning. It is a development that has an inner consistency. Everything that we have not thought about, and that has therefore been deprived of a meaningful connection with our developing consciousness, has got lost. If we now try to cover our nakedness with the gorgeous trappings of the East, as the theosophists do, we would be playing our own history false. A man does not sink down to beggary only to pose afterwards as an Indian potentate. It seems to me that it would be far better stoutly to avow our spiritual poverty, our symbol-lessness, instead of feigning a legacy to which we are not the legitimate heirs at all. We are, surely, the rightful heirs of Christian symbolism, but somehow we have squandered this heritage. We have let the house our fathers built fall into decay, and now we try to break into Oriental palaces that our fathers never knew. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 28

In the history of symbols this tree is described as the way of life itself, a growing into that which eternally is and does not change; which springs from the union of opposites and, by its eternal presence, also makes that union possible. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 198

We are in reality unable to borrow or absorb anything from outside, from the world, or from history. What is essential to us can only grow out of ourselves. When the white man is true to his instincts, he reacts defensively against any advice that one might give him. What he has already swallowed he is forced to reject again as if it were a foreign body, for his blood refuses to assimilate anything sprung from foreign soil. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 31

All the most powerful ideas in history go back to archetypes. This is particularly true of religious ideas, but the central concepts of science, philosophy, and ethics are no exception to this rule. In their present form they are variants of archetypal ideas, created by consciously applying and adapting these ideas to reality. For it is the function of consciousness not only to recognize and assimilate the external world through the gateway of the senses, but to translate into visible reality the world within us. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 342

All psychic events are so deeply grounded in the archetype and are so much interwoven with it that in every case considerable critical effort is needed to separate the unique from the typical with any certainty. Ultimately, every individual life is at the same time the eternal life of the species. The individual is continuously "historical" because strictly time-bound; the relation of the type to time, on the other hand, is irrelevant. The Catholic way of life is completely unaware of psychological problems in this sense. Almost the entire life of the collective unconscious has been channeled into the dogmatic archetypal ideas and flows along like a well-controlled stream in the symbolism of creed and ritual. It manifests itself in the inwardness of the Catholic psyche. The collective unconscious, as we understand it today, was never a matter of "psychology," for before the Christian Church existed there were the antique mysteries, and these reach back into the grey mists of Neolithic prehistory. Mankind has never lacked powerful images to lend magical aid against all the uncanny things that live in the depths of the psyche. Always the figures of the unconscious were expressed in protecting and healing images and in this way were expelled from the psyche into cosmic space. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 2121

Anyone who has lost the historical symbols and cannot be satisfied with substitutes is certainly in a very difficult position today before him there yawns the void, and he turns away from it in horror. What is worse, the vacuum gets filled with absurd political and social ideas, which one and all are distinguished by their spiritual bleakness. But if he cannot get along with these pedantic dogmatisms, he sees himself forced to be serious for once with his alleged trust in God, though it usually turns out that his fear of things going wrong if he did so is even more persuasive. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 28

There is not a single important idea or view that does not possess historical antecedents. Ultimately they are all founded on primordial archetypal forms whose concreteness dates from a time when consciousness did not thin, but only perceived. "Thoughts" were objects of inner perception, not thought at all, but sensed as external phenomena—seen or heard, so to speak. Thought was essentially revelation, not invented but forced upon us or bringing conviction through its immediacy and actuality. Carl Jung, CW 9i, Para 69

But if we step through the door of the shadow we discover with terror that we are the objects of unseen factors. To know this is decidedly unpleasant, for nothing is more disillusioning than the discovery of our own inadequacy. It can even give rise to primitive panic, because, instead of being believed in, the anxiously guarded supremacy of consciousness which is in truth one of the secrets of human success-is questioned in the most dangerous way. But since ignorance is no guarantee of security, and in fact only makes our insecurity still worse, it is probably better despite our fear to know where the danger lies. To ask the right question is already half the solution of a problem. At any rate we then know that the greatest danger threatening us comes from the unpredictability of the psyche’s reactions. Discerning persons have realized for some time that external historical conditions, of whatever kind, are only occasions, jumping-off grounds, for the real dangers that threaten our lives. These are the present politico-social delusional systems. We should not regard them causally, as necessary consequences of external conditions, but as decisions precipitated by the collective unconscious. Carl Jung CW 9i, Para 49

We shall have to reckon with quite unusual difficulties in dealing with it, and the first of these is that the archetype and its function must be understood far more as a part of man’s prehistoric, irrational psychology than as a rationally conceivable system. Carl Jung, CW 10, Page 31.

The fact that individual consciousness means separation and opposition is something that man has experienced countless times in his long history. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 290

Eternal truths are never true at any given moment in history. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 1004

Religion, as the careful observation and taking account of certain invisible and uncontrollable factors, is an instinctive attitude peculiar to man, and its manifestations can be followed all through human history. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 512 in his long history. And just as for the individual a time of dissociation is a time for sickness, so it is in the life of nations. We can hardly deny that ours is a time of dissociation and sickness. The political and social conditions, the fragmentation of religion and philosophy, the contending schools of modern art and modern psychology all have one meaning in this respect. And does anyone who is endowed with the slightest sense of responsibility feel any satisfaction at this turn of events? If we are honest, we must admit that no one feels quite comfortable in the present-day world; indeed, it becomes increasingly uncomfortable. The word "crisis," so often heard, is a medical expression which always tells us that the sickness has reached a dangerous climax. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 290

This invasion of love into all the collective spheres of life is, however, only a minor difficulty in comparison with the fact that love is also an intensely individual problem. For it means that every general criterion and rule loses its validity, in exactly the same way that religious beliefs, although constantly codified in the course of history, are always, in essence, an individual experience which bows to no traditional rule Carl Jung, CW10, Para 198

Who has fully realized that history is not contained in thick books but lives in our very blood?   Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 266

The man of the present must work for the future and leave others to conserve the past. He is therefore not only a builder but also a destroyer. He and his world have both become questionable and ambiguous. The ways that the past shows him and the answers it gives to his questions are insufficient for the needs of the present. All the old, comfortable ways are blocked, new paths have been opened up, and new dangers have arisen of which the past knew nothing. It is proverbial that one never learns anything from history, and in regard to present-day problems it usually teaches us nothing. The new path has to be made through untrodden regions, without presuppositions and often, unfortunately, without piety. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 239

Sometimes, when we look back at history, it seems as though the present time had analogies with certain periods in the past, when great empires and civilizations had passed their zenith and were hastening irresistibly towards decay. But these analogies are deceptive, for there are always renaissances. What does move more clearly into the foreground is Europe's position midway between the Asiatic East and the Anglo-Saxon—or shall we say American?—West. Europe now stands between two colossi, both uncouth in their form but implacably opposed to one another in their nature. They are profoundly different not only racially but in their ideals. In the West there is the maximum political freedom with the minimum personal freedom; in the East it is just the opposite. We see in the West a tremendous development of Europe's technological and scientific tendencies, and in the Far East an awakening of all those spiritual forces which, in Europe, these tendencies hold in check. The power of the West is material, that of the East ideal. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 237

The true genius nearly always intrudes and disturbs. He speaks to a temporal world out of a world eternal. He says the wrong things at the right time. Eternal truths are never true at any given moment in history. The process of transformation has to make a halt in order to digest and assimilate the utterly impractical things that the genius has produced from the storehouse of eternity. Yet the genius is the healer of his time, because anything he reveals of eternal truth is healing. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 1004

Has it ever—except in the most benighted periods of history—been observed that a scientific truth needed to be elevated to the rank of a dogma? Truth can stand on its own feet, only shaky opinions require the support of dogmatization. Fanaticism is ever the brother of doubt, Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 335

He who is rooted in the soil endures. Alienation from the unconscious and from its historical conditions spells rootlessness. That is the danger that lies in wait for the conqueror of foreign lands, and for every individual who, through one-sided allegiance to any kind of -ism, loses touch with the dark, maternal, earthy ground of his being. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 103

No one can make history who is not willing to risk everything for it, to carry the experiment with his own life through to the bitter end, and to declare that his life is not a continuation of the past, but a new beginning. Mere continuation can be left to the animals, but inauguration is the prerogative of man, the one thing he can boast of that lifts him above the beasts. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 268

The horror which the dictator States have of late brought upon mankind is nothing less than the culmination of all those atrocities of which our ancestors made themselves guilty in the not so distant past. Quite apart from the barbarities and blood baths perpetrated by the Christian nations among themselves throughout European history, the European has also to answer for all the crimes he has committed against the coloured races during the process of colonization. In this respect the white man carries a very heavy burden indeed. It shows us a picture of the common human shadow that could hardly be painted in blacker colours. The evil that comes to light in man and that undoubtedly dwells within him is of gigantic proportions. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 571

Far too little attention has been paid to the fact that, for all our irreligiousness, the distinguishing mark of the Christian epoch, its highest achievement, has become the congenital vice of our age: the supremacy of the word, of the Logos, which stands for the central figure of our Christian faith. The word has literally become our god, and so it has remained, even if we knew of Christianity only by hearsay. Words like "Society" and "State" are so concretized that they are almost personified. In the opinion of the man in the street, the "State," far more than any king in history, is the inexhaustible giver of all good; the "State" is invoked, made responsible, grumbled at, and so on and so forth. Society is elevated to the rank of a supreme ethical principle; indeed, it is even credited with positively creative capacities. No one seems to notice that this worship of the word, which was necessary at a certain phase of man's mental development, has a perilous shadow side. That is to say, the moment the word, as a result of centuries of education, attains universal validity, it severs its original connection with the divine Person. There is then a personified Church, a personified State; belief in the word becomes credulity, and the word itself an infernal slogan capable of any deception. Carl Jung, CW 10, Para 554

Arrangement in triads is an archetype in the history of religion, which in all probability formed the basis of the Christian Trinity. Carl Jung, CW 11, Page 113.

The unconscious is the unwritten history of mankind from time unrecorded. Carl Jung, CW 11, Page 280.

The true history of the Spirit is not preserved in learned volumes but in the living psychic organism of every individual. Carl Jung, CW 11, Page 56

It is no easy matter to live a life that is modeled on Christ's, but it is unspeakably harder to live one's own life as truly as Christ lived his. Anyone who did this would run counter to the conditions of his own history, and though he might thus be fulfilling them, he would nonetheless be misjudged, derided, tortured and crucified. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 522.

In reality, the acceptance of the shadow-side of human nature verges on the impossible. Consider for a moment what it means to grant the right of existence to what is unreasonable, senseless, and evil! Yet it is just this that the modern man insists upon. He wants to live with every side of himself—to know what he is. That is why he casts history aside. He wants to break with tradition so that he can experiment with his life and determine what value and meaning things have in themselves, apart from traditional presuppositions. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 528

If the historical process of world despiritualization continues as hitherto, then everything of a divine or daemonic character outside us must return to the psyche, to the inside of the unknown man, whence it apparently originated. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 111

Our modern attitude looks back arrogantly upon the mists of superstition and of medieval or primitive credulity, entirely forgetting that we carry the whole living past in the lower storeys of the skyscraper of rational consciousness. Without the lower storeys our mind is suspended in mid air. No wonder it gets nervous. The true history of the psychic organism of every individual. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 56

To gain an understanding of religious matters, probably all that is left us today is the psychological approach. That is why I take these thought-forms that have become historically fixed, try to melt them down again and pour them into moulds of immediate experience. It is certainly a difficult undertaking to discover connecting links between dogma and immediate experience of psychological archetypes, but a study of the natural symbols of the unconscious gives us the necessary raw material. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 148

It is no easy matter to live a life that is modelled on Christ's, but it is nspeakably harder to live one's own life as truly as Christ lived his. Anyone who did this would run counter to the conditions of his own history, and though he might thus be fulfilling them, he would none the less be misjudged, derided, tortured, and crucified. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 522

The unconscious is the unwritten history of mankind from time unrecorded. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 280

From a psychological standpoint this view can be translated as follows: Christ lived a concrete, personal, and unique life which, in all essential features, had at the same time an archetypal character. This character can be recognized from the numerous connections of the biographical details with worldwide myth-motifs. These undeniable connections are the main reason why it is so difficult for researchers into the life of Jesus to construct from the gospel reports an individual life divested of myth. In the gospels themselves factual reports, legends, and myths are woven into a whole. This is precisely what constitutes the meaning of the gospels, and they would immediately lose their character of wholeness if one tried to separate the individual from the archetypal with a critical scalpel. The life of Christ is no exception in that not a few of the great figures of history have realized, more or less clearly, the archetype of the hero's life with its characteristic changes of fortune. But the ordinary man, too, unconsciously lives archetypal forms, and if these are no longer valued it is only because of the prevailing psychological ignorance. Indeed, even the fleeting phenomena of dreams often reveal distinctly archetypal patterns. At bottom, all psychic events are so deeply grounded in the archetype and are so much interwoven with it that in every case considerable critical effort is needed to separate the unique from the typical with any certainty Ultimately, every individual life is at the same time the eternal life of the species. The individual is continuously "historical" because strictly time-bound; the relation of the type to time, on the other hand, is irrelevant. Since the life of Christ is archetypal to a high degree, it represents to just that degree the life of the archetype. But since the archetype is the unconscious precondition of every human life, its life, when revealed, also reveals the hidden, unconscious ground-life of every individual. That is to say, what happens in the life of Christ happens always and everywhere. In the Christian archetype all lives of this kind are prefigured and are expressed over and over again or once and for all. And in it, too, the question that concerns us here of God's death is anticipated in perfect form. Christ himself is the typical dying and self-transforming God Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 146

The manifestations of the spirit are truly wondrous, and as varied as Creation itself. The living spirit grows and even outgrows its earlier forms of expression; it freely chooses the men who proclaim it and in whom it lives. This living spirit is eternally renewed and pursues its goal in manifold and inconceivable ways throughout the history of mankind. Measured against it, the names and forms which men have given it mean very little; they are only the changing leaves and blossoms on the stem of the eternal tree. Carl Jung, CW 11, Para 537

Our psychic prehistory is in truth the spirit of gravity, which needs steps and ladders because, unlike the disembodied airy intellect, it cannot fly at will. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 79

Hence one could say —cum grano salis —that history could be constructed just as easily from one's own unconscious as from the actual texts. Carl Jung, CW 12, Page 86.

In the light of the possibilities revealed by intuition, man's earthliness is certainly a lamentable imperfection; but this very imperfection is part of his innate being, of his reality. He is compounded not only of his best intuitions, his highest ideals and aspirations, but also of the odious conditions of his existence, such as heredity and the indelible sequence of memories which shout after him: "You did it, and that's what you are!" Man may have lost his ancient saurian's tail, but in its stead he has a chain hanging on to his psyche which binds him to the earth—an anything but-Homeric chain* of given conditions which weigh so heavy that it is better to remain bound to them, even at the risk of becoming neither a hero nor a saint. (History gives us some justification for not attaching any absolute value to these collective norms.)That we are bound to the earth does not mean that we cannot grow; on the contrary it is the sine qua non of growth. No noble, well-grown tree ever disowned its dark roots, for it grows not only upwards but downwards as well. Carl Jung, CW 12, Para 148

Western consciousness is by no means the only kind of consciousness there is; it is historically conditioned and geographically limited, and representative of only one part of mankind. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 84

The West lays stress on the human incarnation, and even on the personality and historicity of Christ, whereas the East says: "Without beginning, without end, without past, without future." Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 80

When a patient begins to feel the inescapable nature of his inner development, he may easily be overcome by a panic fear that he is slipping helplessly into some kind of madness he can no longer understand. More than once I have had to reach for a book on my shelves, bring down an old alchemist, and show my patient his terrifying fantasy in the form in which it appeared four hundred years ago. This has a calming effect, because the patient then sees that he is not alone in a strange world which nobody understands, but is part of the great stream of human history, which has experienced countless times the very things that he regards as a pathological proof of his craziness. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 325

Western consciousness is by no means the only kind of consciousness there is; it is historically conditioned and geographically limited, and representative of only one part of mankind. The widening of our consciousness ought not to proceed at the expense of other kinds of consciousness; it should come about through the development of those elements of our psyche which are analogous to those of the alien psyche, just as the East cannot do without our technology, science, and industry. The European invasion of the East was an act of violence on a grand scale, and it has left us with the duty —noblesse oblige—of understanding the mind of the East. This is perhaps more necessary than we realize at present. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 84

A growing familiarity with the spirit of the East should be taken merely as a sign that we are beginning to relate to the alien elements within ourselves. Denial of our historical foundations would be sheer folly and would be the best way to bring about another uprooting of consciousness. Only by standing firmly on our own soil can we assimilate the spirit of the East. Carl Jung, CW 13, Para 72

The earthly fate of the Church as the body of Christ is modelled on the earthly fate of Christ himself. That is to say the Church, in the course of her history, moves towards a death. Carl Jung, CW 14, par. 28, note 194.

We do not devalue statements that originally were intended to be metaphysical when we demonstrate their psychic nature; on the contrary, we confirm their factual character. But, by treating them as psychic phenomena, we remove them from the inaccessible realm of metaphysics, about which nothing verifiable can be said, and this disposes of the impossible question as to whether they are "true" or not. We take our stand simply and solely on the facts, recognizing that the archetypal structure of the unconscious will produce, over and over again and irrespective of tradition, those figures which reappear in the history of all epochs and all peoples, and will endow them with the same significance and numinosity that have been theirs from the beginning. Carl Jung, CW 14, Para 558

The primordial image, or archetype, is a figure–be it a daemon, a human being, or a process–that constantly recurs in the course of history and appears wherever creative fantasy is freely expressed. Essentially, therefore, it is a mythological figure. . . . In each of these images there is a little piece of human psychology and human fate, a remnant of the joys and sorrows that have been repeated countless times in our ancestral history. . . . Carl Jung, CW 15, Page 127.

When something happens to a man and he supposes it to be personal only to himself, whereas in reality it is a quite universal experience, then his attitude is obviously wrong, that is, too personal, and it tends to exclude him from human society. By the same token we need to have not only a personal, contemporary consciousness, but also a suprapersonal consciousness with a sense of historical continuity. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 99

Nothing is less effective than an intellectual idea. But when an idea is a psychic fact that crops up in two such totally different fields as psychology and physics, apparently without historical connection, then we must give it our closest attention. For ideas of this kind represent forces which are logically and morally unassailable; they are always stronger than man and his brain. He fancies that he makes these ideas, but in reality they make him—and make him their unwitting mouthpiece. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 147

Neither our modern medical training nor academic psychology and philosophy can equip the doctor with the necessary education, or with the means, to deal effectively and understandingly with the often very urgent demands of his psychotherapeutic practice. It therefore behoves us, unembarrassed by our shortcomings as amateurs of history, to go to school once more with the medical philosophers of a distant past, when body and soul had not yet been wrenched asunder into different faculties. Although we are specialists par excellence, our specialized field, oddly enough, drives us to universalism and to the complete overcoming of the specialist attitude, if the totality of body and soul is not to be just a matter of words. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 190

We are so accustomed to hear that everybody has his "difficulties and problems" that we simply accept it as a banal fact, without considering what these difficulties and problems really mean. Why is one never satisfied with oneself? Why is one unreasonable? Why is one not always good and why must one ever leave a cranny for evil? Why does one do foolish things which could easily be avoided with a little forethought? What is it that is always frustrating us and thwarting our best intentions? Why are there people who never notice these things or cannot even admit their existence? And finally, why do people in the mass beget the historical lunacy of the last thirty years? Why couldn't Pythagoras, twenty-four hundred years ago, have established the rule of wisdom once and for all, or Christianity have set up the kingdom of Heaven upon earth? Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 387

The present attempts to achieve full individual consciousness and to mature the personality are, socially speaking, still so feeble that they carry no weight at all in relation to our historic needs. If our European social order is not to be shaken to its foundations, authority must be restored at all costs. This is probably one reason for the efforts now being made in Europe to replace the collectivity of the Church by the collectivity of the State. Carl Jung, CW 16, Para 221

There are times in the world's history—and our own time may be one of them—when good must stand aside, so that anything destined to be better first appears in evil form. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 321

Anything new should always be questioned and tested with caution, for it may very easily turn out to be only a new disease. That is why true progress is impossible without mature judgment. But a well-balanced judgment requires a firm standpoint, and this in turn can only rest on a sound knowledge of what has been. The man who is unconscious of the historical context and lets slip his link with the past is in constant danger of succumbing to the crazes and delusions engendered by all novelties. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 251

The wheel of history cannot be put back; we can only strive towards an attitude that will allow us to live out our fate as undisturbedly as the primitive pagan in us really wants. Only on this condition can we be sure of not perverting spirituality into sensuality, and vice versa; for both must live, each drawing life from the other. Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 336

The greatness of historical personalities has never lain in their abject submission to convention, but, on the contrary, in their deliverance from convention. They towered up like mountain peaks above the mass that still clung to its collective fears, its beliefs, laws, and systems, and boldly chose their own way. To the man in the street it has always seemed miraculous that anyone should turn aside from the beaten track with its known destinations, and strike out on the steep and narrow path leading into the unknown. Hence it was always believed that such a man, if not actually crazy, was possessed by a daemon or a god; for the miracle of a man being able to act otherwise than as humanity has always acted could only be explained by the gift of daemonic power or divine spirit. Carl Jung, CW 17,

Para 298

There are times in the world's history—and our own time may be one of them—when good must stand aside, so that anything destined to be better first appears in evil form. This shows how extremely dangerous it is even to touch these problems, for evil can so easily slip in on the plea that it is, potentially, the better! Carl Jung, CW 17, Para 321

Since history repeats itself and the spiral of evolution seemingly returns to the point where it took off, there is a possibility that mankind is approaching an epoch when enough will be said about things which are never what we wish them to be, and when the question will be raised why we were ever interested in a bad comedy. Carl Jung, CW 18, Page 581.

Sooner or later it will be found that nothing really new happens in history. There could be talk of something really novel only if the unimaginable happened : if reason, humanity and love won a lasting victory. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1356.

The great events of world history are, at bottom, profoundly unimportant. In the last analysis, the essential thing is the life of the individual. This alone makes history, here alone do the great transformations first take place, and the whole future, the whole history of the world, ultimately spring as a gigantic summation from these hidden sources in individuals .In our most private and most subjective lives, we are not only the passive witnesses of our age, and its sufferers, but also its makers. We make our own epoch. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 1400.

The fundamental error persists in the public that there are definite answers, "solutions," or views which need only be uttered in order to spread the necessary light. But the most beautiful truth—as history has shown a thousand times over—is no use at all unless it has become the innermost experience and possession of the individual. Every unequivocal, so-called "clear" answer always remains stuck in the head, but only very rarely does it penetrate to the heart. The needful thing is not to know the truth but to experience it. Not to have an intellectual conception of things, but to find our way to the inner, and perhaps wordless, irrational experience—that is the great problem. Nothing is more fruitless than talking of how things must or should be, and nothing is more important than finding the way to these far-off goals. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 7

Our personal psychology is just a thin skin, a ripple on the ocean of collective psychology. The powerful factor, the factor which changes our whole life, which changes the surface of our known world, which makes history, is collective psychology, and collective psychology moves according to laws entirely different from those of our consciousness. The archetypes are the great decisive forces, they bring about the real events, and not our personal reasoning and practical intellect . . . The archetypal images decide the fate of man. Carl Jung, CW 18, Para 183

Your heights are your own mountain, which belongs to you and you alone. There you are individual and live your very own life. If you live your own life, you do not live the common life, which is always continuing and never-ending, the life of history and the inalienable and ever-present burdens and products of the human race. There you live the endlessness of being, but not the becoming. Becoming belongs to the heights and is full of torment. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 267.

It seems to me perfectly possible to teach history in the widest sense not as dry-as-dust, lifeless book-knowledge but to understand it in terms of the fully alive present. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 37.

As you know, I apply my method not only to my patients but also to all historical and contemporary products of the mind. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 64.

I am dealing with psychic phenomena and I am not at all concerned with the naive and, as a rule, unanswerable question whether a thing is historically, i.e., concretely, true or not. It is enough that it has been said and believed. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 97.

The characteristic difference is that God's incarnation is understood to be a historical fact in the Christian belief, while in the Jewish Gnosis it is an entirely pleromatic process symbolized by the concentration of the supreme triad of Kether, Hokhmah, and Binah in the figure of Tifereth. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 92.

If Jesus had indeed been nothing but a great teacher hopelessly mistaken in His messianic expectations, we should be at a complete loss in understanding His historical effect, which is so clearly visible in the New Testament. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 89.

It is a historical fact that the real devil only came into existence together with Christ. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 134.

We are actually in the state of darkness viewed from the standpoint of history. We are still within the Christian aeon and just beginning to realize the age of darkness where we shall need Christian virtues to the utmost. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 136

This archetypal drama is at the same time exquisitely psychological and historical. We are actually living in the time of the splitting of the world and of the invalidation of Christ. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 138.

The Jew has the advantage of having long since anticipated the development of consciousness in his own spiritual history. By this I mean the Lurianic stage of the Kabbalah, the breaking of the vessels and man's help in restoring them. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 151.

The symbolic history of the Christ's life shows, as the essential teleological tendency, the crucifixion, viz. the union of Christ with the symbol of the tree. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 167.

On the way back through the history of mankind we integrate much that belongs to us and, deep down, also something of brother animal, who is actually holier than us since he cannot deviate from the divine will implanted in him because his dark consciousness shows him no other paths. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 235.

"God" in this sense is a biological, instinctual and elemental "model," an archetypal "arrangement" of individual, contemporary and historical contents, which, despite its numinosity, is and must be exposed to intellectual and moral criticism, just like the image of the "evolving" God or of Yahweh or the Summum Bonum or the Trinity. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 255.

I cannot prove the identity of an historical personage with a psychological archetype. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 267.

The essential dream-image: the Man, the Tree, the Stone, looks quite inaccessible, but only to our modern consciousness which is, as a rule, unconscious of its historical roots. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 325.

I am definitely inside Christianity and, as far as I am capable of judging about myself, on the direct line of historical development. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 334.

Perhaps I may draw your attention to my historical contribution in Aion, where I have attempted to outline the evolutionary history of the Anthropos, which begins with the earliest Egyptian records. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 345.

This, too,[UFO's] is an expression of something that has always claimed my deepest interest and my greatest attention: the manifestation of archetypes, or archetypal forms, in all the phenomena of life: in biology, physics, history, folklore, and art, in theology and mythology, in parapsychology, as well as in the symptoms of insane patients and neurotics, and finally in the dreams and life of every individual man and woman. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 397.

The primordial experience is not concerned with the historical bases of Christianity but consists in an immediate experience of God (as was had by Moses, Job, Hosea, Ezekiel among others) which "convinces" because it is "overpowering." Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 424.

As psychologists we are not concerned with the question of truth, with whether something is historically correct, but with living forces, living opinions which determine human behaviour. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 417

The Trinitarian archetype seems to characterize all man's conscious constructs, in strange contrast to the fact that this archetype is really a quaternity which historically is very often represented as 3+1, three equal elements being conjoined with an unequal Fourth. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 412.

Astrology differs very much from alchemy, as its historical literature consists merely of different methods of casting a horoscope and of interpretation, and not of philosophical texts as is the case in alchemy. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 464.

To the psychologist it is a most noteworthy fact that the religious emphasis has shifted from the triune pater panton [Father of Everything] to the Son and Soter [Savior] and historical man, who was originally one third of the Godhead and is now the central and almost unique feature of the Protestant's religion. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 472

Thus the Reformation was no more a repristination of the early Church than the Renaissance was a mere revival of antiquity, but a new exposition which could not throw off its own historical evolution. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 486.

In dealing with a definitely historical text it is absolutely essential to know the language and the whole available tradition of the milieu in question and not to adduce amplifications from a later cultural milieu. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 507.

I have chosen the title Aion because the contents of the German edition are chiefly connected with the psychological changes characteristic of the transition from one historical aeon, i.e., era, or segment of historical time, to another. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 510.

It is evident, of course, that history takes on a new aspect when considered not only from the standpoint of our conscious reason, but also from that of the phenomena due to unconscious processes which never fail to accompany the peripeteia of consciousness. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 510.

As we are profoundly influenced in our practical life by our historical Christian education, we are also exposed to secular changes in the basic Christian dominants, e.g., the schism of the Christian Church and the development of anti-Christian traits. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 511.

The gratification of knowing that one is essentially posthumous is short-lived. That is why your friendship is all the dearer to me in my grey old age, since it gives me living proof that I have not dropped out of the human setting into the shadowy realm of historical curiosities. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 530.

This psychological definition of God has nothing to do with Christian dogma, but it does describe the experience of the Other, often a very uncanny opponent, which coincides in the most impressive way with the historical “experiences of God.” Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 272.

Religious ideas and convictions from the beginning of history have the aspect of the mental pharmakon [pharmacy]. They represent the world of wholeness in which fragments can be gathered and put together again. Such a cure cannot be effected by pills and injections. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 625.

An historical example of this kind is the reputed coincidence of Christ’s birth with the triple royal conjunction in Pisces in the year 7 B.C. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 428-430.

What was once called the "Holy Ghost" is an impelling force, creating wider consciousness and responsibility and thus enriched cognition. The real history of the world seems to be the progressive incarnation of the deity. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. II, Page 436.

It is commonly assumed that on some given occasion in prehistoric times, the basic mythological ideas were "invented" by a clever old philosopher or prophet, and ever afterward "believed" by a credulous and uncritical people. But the very word "invent" is derived from the Latin invenire, and means "to find" and hence to find something by "seeking" it. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 69.

We can find clear proof of this fact in the history of science itself. The so-called "mystical" experience of the French philosopher Descartes involved a . . . sudden revelation in which he saw in a flash the "order of all sciences". The British author Robert Louis Stevenson had spent years looking for a story that would fit his "strong sense of man’s double being," when the plot of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde was suddenly revealed to him in a dream. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 25.

Because a child is . . . small and its conscious thoughts scarce and simple, we do not realize the far-reaching complications of the infantile mind that are based on its original identity with the prehistoric psyche. That original mind is just as much present and still functioning in the child as the evolutionary stages of mankind are in its embryonic body. Carl Jung; Man and His symbols; Page 89.

Dreams may sometimes announce certain situations long before they actually happen. This is not necessarily a miracle or a form of precognition. Many crises in our lives have a long unconscious history. Carl Jung, Man and His Symbols, Page 29

In recent history, the spirit has been brought into the psyche and been identified with the function of the intellect. Carl Jung, Atom and Archetype, Pages 111-117

One could say that the stratification of our population was historical; there are certain people living who should not live yet. They are anachronistic. They anticipate the future. Carl Jung, Zarathustra Seminar, Page 1037.

In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101

It is possible that a certain historical atmosphere is born with us by means of which we can repeat strange details almost as if they were historical facts. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39.

Suppose, for example, we are concerned with a certain historical problem. If I had five hundred years at my disposal I could solve it. Well now, I have within myself a “man” who is millions of years old, and he perhaps can throw light on these metaphysical problems. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 12

Wherever there is a reaching down into innermost experience, into the nucleus of personality, most people are overcome by fright, and many run away. Such was the case with this theologian. I am of course aware that theologians are in a more difficult situation than others. On the one hand they are closer to religion, but on the other hand they are more bound by church and dogma. The risk of inner experience, the adventure of the spirit, is in any case alien to most human beings. The possibility that such experience might have psychic reality is anathema to them. All very well if it has a supernatural or at least a "historical" foundation. But psychic? Face to face with this question, the patient will often show an unsuspected but profound contempt for the psyche. Carl Jung; MDR; Pages 141-142.

In science I missed the factor of meaning; and in religion, that of empiricism. Science met, to a very large extent, the needs of No. i personality, whereas the humane or historical studies provided beneficial instruction for No. 2. Carl Jung; Memories, Dreams, Reflections; Page 72

I had the feeling that everything was being sloughed away. . . . Nevertheless something remained; it was as if I now carried along with me everything I had ever experienced or done, everything that had happened around me. . . . I consisted of my own history, and I felt with great certainty: this is what I am. Carl Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, pp. 290-291.

What is remarkable about Christianity is that in its system of dogma it anticipates a metamorphosis in the divinity, a process of historic change on the "other side." Carl Jung, MDR, Page 327.

Thus we remain ignorant of whether our ancestral components find an elementary gratification in our lives, or whether they are repelled. Inner peace and contentment depend in large measure upon whether or not the historical family which is inherent in the individual can be harmonized with the ephemeral conditions of the present. Carl Jung; MDR; Page 237.

We always think that Christianity consists in a particular confession of faith and in belonging to a Church. No, Christianity is our world. Everything we think is the fruit of the Middle Ages and indeed of the Christian Middle Ages. Our whole science, everything that passes through our head, has inevitably gone through this history. It lives in us and has left its stamp upon us for all time and will always form a vital layer of our psyche, just like the phylogenetic traces in our body. The whole character of our mentality, the way we look at things, is also the result of the Christian Middle Ages; whether we know it or not is quite immaterial. The age of rational enlightenment has eradicated nothing. Even our method of rational enlightenment is Christian. The Christian Weltanschauung is therefore a psychological fact that does not allow of any further rationalization; it is something that has happened, that is present. We are inevitably stamped as Christians, but we are also stamped by what existed before Christianity. Carl Jung, Basel Seminar, Para 84

All of us who have had a religious education are deeply impressed by the idea that Christianity entered into history without an historical past, like a stroke of lightning out of a clear sky. This attitude was necessary, but I am convinced it is not true. Everything has its history, everything has "grown," and Christianity, which is supposed to have appeared suddenly as a unique revelation from heaven, undoubtedly also has its history. Moreover, how it began is as clear as daylight. I need not speak of the rites of the Mass and certain peculiarities of the priests' clothing which are borrowed from pagan times, for the fundamental ideas of the Christian Church also have their predecessors. But a break in continuity has occurred because we are all overcome by the impression of the uniqueness of Christianity. It is exactly as if we had built a cathedral over a pagan temple and no longer knew that it is still there underneath. The result is that the inner correspondence with the outer God-image is undeveloped through lack of psychic culture and has remained stuck in paganism. Carl Jung, Basel Seminar, Para 84

I was especially interested in palaeontology; you see, my life work in historical comparative psychology is like palaeontology. That is the study of the archetypes of the animals, and this is the study of the archetypes in the soul.

The Eohippus is the archetype of the modern horse, the archetypes are like the fossil animals. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking; Interviews and Encounters, Pages 205-218

The great astrological periods do exist. Taurus and Gemini were prehistoric periods, we don't know much about them. But Aries the Ram is closer; Alexander the Great was one of its manifestations. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking: Interviews and Encounters, Pages 410-423

Primeval history is the story of the beginning of consciousness by differentiation from the archetypes. Carl Jung, Jung-Ostrowski, Page 32.

When the confusion is at its height a new revelation comes, i.e. at the beginning of the fourth month of world history. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 69.

The Catholic Church arranges the codification of memories and the lessons of history so much better. The conservation of so much classical paganism is of inestimable value. Therefore the Catholic is the Christian Church par excellence. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 340.

Dr. Meier has drawn my attention to your short review of Rosenberg's book. For anyone who knows Jewish history, and in particular Hasidism, Rosenberg's assertion that the Jews despise mysticism is a highly regrettable error. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Page 238.

On the primitive level the totemistic rite of renewal is always a reversion to the half animal, half human condition of prehistoric times. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 260

I have an idea that the Dionysian frenzy was a backwash of sexuality, a backwash whose historical significance has been insufficiently appreciated, essential elements of which overflowed into Christianity but in another compromise formation. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 15

If the Assumptio is an essentially concrete historical fact, then it is no more a living spiritual experience. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 567.

When insisting on historicity you risk not only the most awkward and unanswerable questions, but you also help everybody to tum his eyes away from the essential idea to the realistic crudity of a merely physical phenomenon, as it is only physical phenomena that happen in a distinct place at a distinct time, whereas the spirit is eternal and everywhere. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 568.

It is, as far as I know, the pack of cards [Tarot] originally used by the Spanish gypsies, the oldest cards historically known. Carl Jung, Letters Vol. I, Page 77.

When the confusion is at its height a new revelation comes, i.e., at the beginning of the fourth month of world history. Carl Jung, Letters, Vol. I, Page 12.

It is good to be old in years for it often looks as if we were arriving at the end of the history of our world; or at least that it will get terribly dark before the light can shine again and make it possible to see clearly. Carl Jung, Conversations with C.G. Jung, Page 67.

There are historical reasons for the qualities of the psyche and there is such a thing as the history of man's evolution in past eons, which as a combination show that real understanding of the psyche must consist in the elucidation of the history of the human race—history of the mind, for instance, as in the biological data. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 36.

In fact, it is unhygienic, because if you wipe out the mythology of a man, his entire historical sequence, he becomes a statistical average, a number; that is, he becomes nothing. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 36.

We think that we are born today tabula rasa without a history, but man has always lived in the myth. To think that man is born without a history within himself— that is a disease. Carl Jung, Evans Conversations, Page 36.

Creation begins today, it has no history and no cause, creation is always creation from nothing. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 1035

This is a peculiar projection of our minds, this wanting to be free, not held down by any background: it is a sort of illusion of our consciousness in order to have the feeling of complete freedom, as if the historical past was fettering and would not allow free movement-a prejudice which again has psychological reasons. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 69

Our actual mind is the result of the work of thousands or perhaps a million years. There is a long history in every sentence, every word we speak has a tremendous history, every metaphor is full of historical symbolism; they would not carry at all if that were not true. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 69

This is a peculiar projection of our minds, this wanting to be free, not held down by any background: it is a sort of illusion of our consciousness in order to have the feeling of complete freedom, as if the historical past was fettering and would not allow free movement-a prejudice which again has psychological reasons. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 69

Even when you think you are alone and can do what you please, if you deny your shadow there will be a reaction from the mind that always is, from the man a million years old within you. You are never alone because the eyes of the centuries watch you; you feel at once that you are in the presence of the Old Man, and you feel your historical responsibility to the centuries. Carl Jung, Visions Seminar, Page 77

Jung’s method of research was pre-eminently historical. It consisted essentially in comparing his ideas and intuitions, and the insights he had gained from the empirical material provided by his patients, with the historical evidence. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 46.

The study of Gnostic traditions nevertheless left him unsatisfied. For one thing, they were not less than seventeen or eighteen hundred years old and too remote historically for him to establish a living link with them. For another, the tradition that might have connected the Gnostics with the present seemed to him to have been broken. Aniela Jaffe, Jung’s Last Years, Page 47.

"Are we really to believe that a tribe which has wandered through history for several thousand years as ’God’s chosen people’ was not put up to such an idea by some quite special psychological peculiarity? " Carl Jung, Jung’s Last Years, Page 89.

In the history of Gnosis, this figure [Lawgiver and Master of the Past] plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101

It is possible that a certain historical atmosphere is born with us by means of which we can repeat strange details almost as if they were historical facts. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 39.

Suppose, for example, we are concerned with a certain historical problem. If I had five hundred years at my disposal I could solve it. Well now, I have within myself a “man” who is millions of years old, and he perhaps can throw light on these metaphysical problems. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 12

Of course, thinks every time, all previous times had been biased, and now we think it more than ever, and has therefore just as wrong as all the previous times, thought so. How often have you experienced it, that the truth has been condemned? It's sad but unfortunately true, that man learns nothing from history. This fact will cause us the most trouble, because when we are about in such dark somehow enlightened one thing to collect empirical data, we will find it quite sure where all the authorities have assured us that nothing could be found. Carl Jung; Synchronicity acausality and occultism, dtv Verlag, Munich, 1990.

The man we call modern, the man who is aware of the immediate present, is by no means the average man. He is rather the man who stands upon a peak, or at the very edge of the world, the abyss of the future before him, above him the heavens, and below him the whole of mankind with a history that disappears in primeval mists. The modern man—or, let us say again, the man of the immediate present—is rarely met with, for he must be conscious to a superlative degree. Since to be wholly of the present means to be fully conscious of one's existence as a man, it requires the most intensive and extensive consciousness, with a minimum of unconsciousness. It must be clearly understood that the mere fact of living in the present does not make a man modern, for in that case everyone at present alive would be so. We always find in the patient a conflict which at a certain point is connected with the great problems of society. Hence, when the analysis is pushed to this point, the apparently individual conflict of the patient is revealed as a universal conflict of his environment and epoch. The old religions with their sublime and ridiculous, their friendly and fiendish symbols did not drop from the blue, but were born of this human soul that dwells within us at this moment. All those things, their primal forms, live on in us and may at any time burst in upon us with annihilating force, in the guise of mass-suggestions against which the individual is defenseless. Our fearsome gods have only changed their names: they now rhyme with ism. Or has anyone the nerve to claim that the World War or Bolshevism was an ingenious invention? Just as outwardly we live in a world where a whole continent may be submerged at any moment, or a pole be shifted, or a new pestilence break out, so inwardly we live in a world where at any moment something similar may occur, albeit in the form of an idea, but no less dangerous and untrustworthy for that. Carl Jung, CW 7, Page 204.

No, the demons are not banished; that is a difficult task that still lies ahead. Now that the angel of history has abandoned the Germans, the demons will seek a new victim. And that won't be difficult. Every man who loses his shadow, every nation that falls into self-righteousness, is their prey. . . . We should not forget that exactly the same fatal tendency to collectivization is present in the victorious nations as in the Germans, that they can just as suddenly become a victim of the demonic powers. Carl Jung, C.G. Jung Speaking, Page 154.

What the ancients did for their dead! (2019-12-30 05:30)

[2]The Red Book: A Reader's Edition (Philemon)

What the ancients did for their dead!

You seem to believe that you can absolve yourself from the care of the dead, and from the work that they so greatly demand, since what is dead is past. You excuse yourself with your disbelief in the immortality of the soul.

Do you think that the dead do not exist because you have' devised the impossibility of immortality?

You believe in your idols of words.

The dead produce effects, that is sufficient. In the inner world there is no explaining away, as little as you can explain away the sea in the outer world. You must finally understand your purpose in explaining away, namely to seek protection. Carl Jung; Red Book.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/2a251-ancients.jpg`

2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_2?crid=29AHMV3PKZGPG&keywords=jung+red+book&qid=1577702487&sprefix=jung+red%2Caps%2C313&`

Carl Jung on Post War Germany (2019-12-30 05:34)

[1]

[2]C.G. Jung Letters, Vol. 1: 1906-1950

Anonymous

Dear N., 7 October 1946

It is not a simple matter to write to you.

I am trying to put myself in your shoes so as to give you an intelligible answer.

You are obviously not yet in a position yourself to form any conception of the mood of the world towards everything and everybody that comes from Germany.

Every personal relationship is overshadowed by what has happened, since everybody was affected by it in the most personal way.

Had, for instance, the Germans visited Switzerland, you would not now be able even to write to me anymore.

I really do not know what your attitude is to these facts and real possibilities that hung over us like doom year after year, or rather, how you judge their effect on non-Germans.

From the answer of your Swedish acquaintance you surely must have seen that there are any number of difficulties which, as I have discovered from the many letters I have received from Germany, are hardly appreciated in Germany itself.

For us non-Germans they are on the contrary only too plain.

The letters from my German acquaintances invariably begin where they left off in 1939 or earlier.

These people obviously approach one as though nothing had happened in between, except for a few untoward accidents like disease, getting bombed out, losing a relative, etc.

They take it entirely for granted that individual relationships are something extramundane, or that the individual exists in himself, apart from his family and nation, and therefore has no solidarity with them let alone any responsibility for them.

This curious emancipation is like anticipating the highest goal of psychic differentiation and has a chilling effect on the ordinary mortal, rather like that of a Zen Master on the Christian Westerner.

Anyone who has attained this emancipation has reached nirvana and thus made himself unreal.

There is nothing wrong with that, only one would not expect such a person to turn to people again.

That would be too spooky and moreover lacking in style.

Had the average German really attained this liberation from the social coil by a special act of grace, then the mass phenomenon of a "people’s community" would be inexplicable.

But since a mass movement did in fact exist, the emancipation of the individual must be spurious since it needed compensating.

Accordingly the truth would be that the German, like every civilized person (not to mention the primitive!) , is answerable for his family and his nation. He must take into account his relation to the surrounding world if he wants to spare himself some very unpleasant experiences.

He would do well to realize the views and sensitivities of other people who feel a solidarity with their country if he is not to miss the mark completely.

A non-German would presuppose sufficient family responsibility, both in himself and others, not to take it as a matter of course that if he were in the German's shoes he would be received with open arms.

If, for instance, my family had done a mortal injury to another family, or ruined them, I would certainly not take the restoration of friendly relations with a member of that family for granted; on no account could I ignore the attitude of my family as completely as my German correspondents do.

This impressive peculiarity of German psychology has led me to conclude that there must be a remarkable unconsciousness of the collective responsibility of the individual.

This fact might also explain the peculiar susceptibility to mass psychosis, which compensates the deficiency of consciousness in the most effective way, but downwards (hence the leftward-turning swastika!) .

I realize that you may feel my answer thoroughly absurd, but I would remind you that it was not we who had the mass psychosis.

I would have maintained a tactful silence had you not expressed the earnest wish to have an answer from me.

I think you should no longer take German psychology as self-evidently valid, but must consider the reactions of foreigners if you want to establish any relations with representatives of the so-called "second-class" nations.

I know that in the sphere of your individual consciousness you do not think like that.

But I miss in your letter the consciousness of collective responsibility, which for us is an indispensable requirement not only of politeness but of human feeling in general.

I know that this condition is very difficult for you because to you it seems so ridiculous.

But I do not doubt that if you take the trouble to think it through thoroughly you will see the logic of it.

Recently a letter burst into the house from Bruno Goetz,Z the writer, in which he expressed the wish to visit me immediately.

I replied that it was too painful for me to talk with Germans as I had not yet got over the murder of Europe.

Whereupon he drenched me with a flood of literary vituperation.

To which I rejoined: Q.E.D.

Herr Goetz with his thoughtful answer has once again, but unconsciously, ridden roughshod over the feelings of the non-German in true Teutonic fashion, in order to intoxicate himself with the elation of his noble anger.

This is no longer seasonable.

The Herrenvplk has become obsolete; the stupendously harmless Herr Goetz still doesn’t know that.

As a matter of fact he knows nothing at all, and appears mightily justified in his own eyes.

I am sorry for these people who have failed to hear the cock crowing for the third time.

If I had belonged to a secret society which had tried to murder you in a disgraceful way and you had miraculously escaped, it is not altogether improbable that you would feel some hesitation towards me.

With kind regards,

Yours sincerely,

C.G. Jung Carl Jung, Letters Vol. 1, Pages 443-446.

---

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/2b3cf-post.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/C-G-Jung-Letters-Vol-1906-1950/dp/0691098956/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1WEAY97VCPKUJ&keywords=jung+letters+volume+1&qid=1577702649&sprefix=jung+let`

Marie Louise von Franz on Alchemy (2019-12-30 05:38)

[1]

[2]Alchemy: An Introduction to the Symbolism and the Psychology

"It is a strange thing, if we look at it naively, that in alchemy the end product is something which in the order of nature we look upon as very low, namely a stone, something whose quality is just to be there. A stone neither eats nor drinks nor sleeps, it just remains there for all eternity. If you kick it, then it stays where you kicked it and does not move. But in alchemy this despised thing is the symbol of the goal. We have to go deep into the mystical language of the East and of alchemy and of certain other Christian mystiques to get an idea of what this means.

If through fighting and meeting the unconscious one has suffered long enough, a kind of objective personality is established; a nucleus forms in the person which is at peace, quiet even in the midst of the greatest life storms, intensely alive but without action and without participation in the conflict. That peace of mind often comes to people when they have suffered long enough; one day something breaks and the face acquires a quiet expression, for something has been born which remains in the centre, outside or beyond the conflict, which does not go on any more as it did.

Naturally, two minutes later it begins again, for the conflict has not been solved, but the experience of that one thing just quietly beyond the conflict remains, and from then on the process becomes different. People no longer search, they know the thing exists, they have experienced it for a moment. Thereafter the opus has a goal, that of finding this moment again and slowly being able to keep it, so that it becomes something constant.

In all the struggles of life there is always that one thing which is beyond the struggle; as Dr. Jung describes it so beautifully in the comment on "The Secret of the Golden Flower," it is as though you were standing on the mountain above the thunderstorm. One sees the black clouds and the lightning and the falling rain, but something in one is above it all and one can just look at it. In one way you are in it too, but in another way you are out of it. On a humbler or more minor scale, you have reached it if in a storm of despair or in a destructive dissolving attack of a conflict you can keep a sense of humour for a second – or perhaps you are swept away once more by a negative animus, and then suddenly say to yourself that you have heard that kind of talk before.

You may not be able to get out of your destructive animus, it may still be too strong, but something in you smiles and says it has heard that silly song before; you would like to laugh at yourself, but pride will not allow that, and you go on with the negative animus and he gets you again. Those are the divine moments when something is clear and moving beyond the opposites and the suffering. Usually they are only brief moments, but if you continue working on yourself long enough, the stone slowly grows and becomes more and more the solid nucleus of the personality which no longer participates in the ape-circus of life." Marie Louise Von Franz, "Alchemy," Pages. 169-170

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/1fdbf-old.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Alchemy-Introduction-Symbolism-Psychology-Studies/dp/091912304X/ref=sr_1_1?keywords=marie+louise+von+franz+alchemy&qid=1577702784&sr=8-1`

As a doctor it is my task to help the patient to cope with life. (2019-12-30 05:41)

[1]

[2]Psychology and Alchemy (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.12)

As a doctor it is my task to help the patient to cope with life.

I cannot presume to pass judgment on his final decisions, because I know from experience that all coercion-be it suggestion, insinuation, or any other method of persuasion-ultimately proves to be nothing but an obstacle to the highest and most decisive experience of all, which is to be alone with his own self, or whatever else one chooses to call the objectivity of the psyche.

The patient must be alone if he is to find out what it is that supports him when he can no longer support himself.

Only this experience can give him an indestructible foundation. Psychology and Alchemy (1944) CW 12: P.32

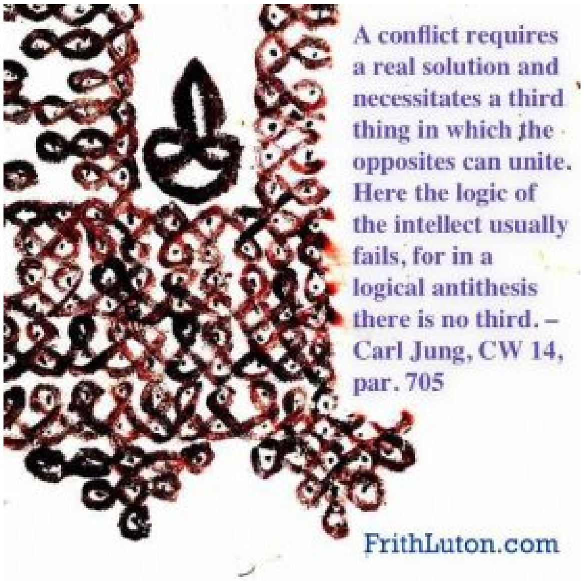
1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/fc8ec-carl.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Psychology-Alchemy-Collected-Works-Vol-12/dp/0691018316/ref=sr_1_1?crid=2V2VUMGTV3422&keywords=jung+and+alchemy&qid=1577716627&sprefix=ju`

Frith Luton Images (2019-12-30 05:41)

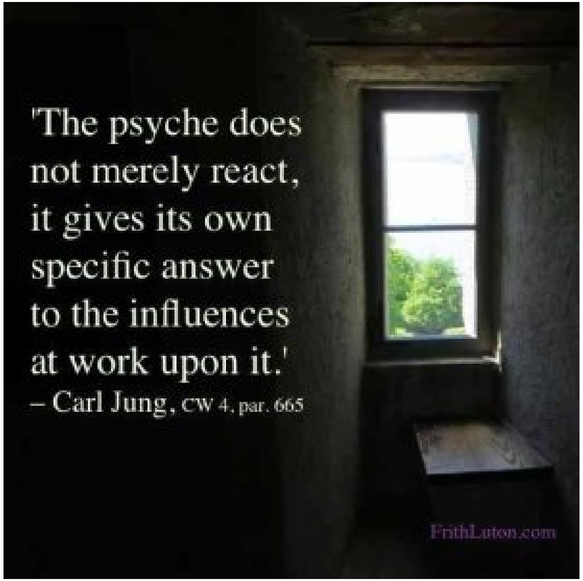
[1]Frith Luton Website

The Shadow – Hidden or unconscious aspects of oneself, both good and bad, which the ego has either repressed or never recognized.

– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

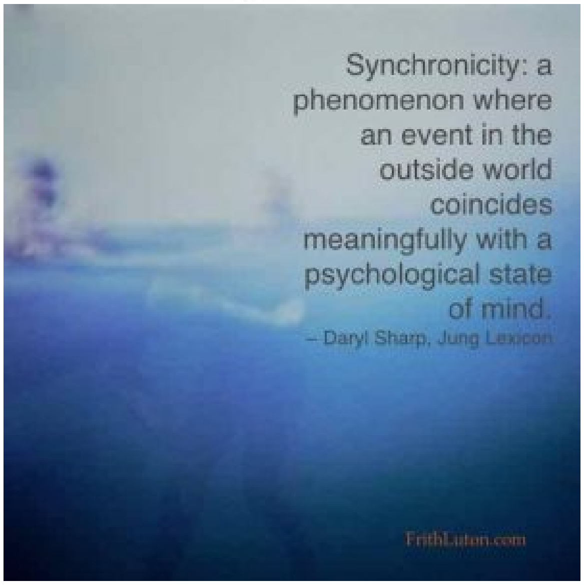


A conflict requires a real solution and necessitates a third thing in which the opposites can unite. Here the logic of the intellect usually fails, for in a logical antithesis there is no third. – Carl Jung, CW 14, par. 705



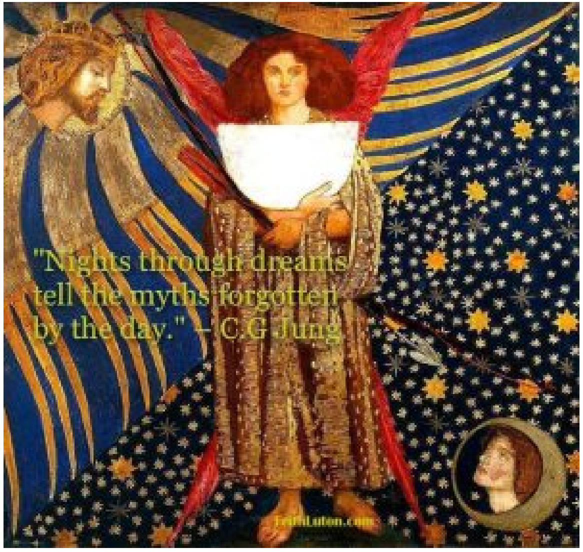
'The psyche does not merely react, it gives its own specific answer to the influences at work upon it.'

– Carl Jung, CW 4, par. 665

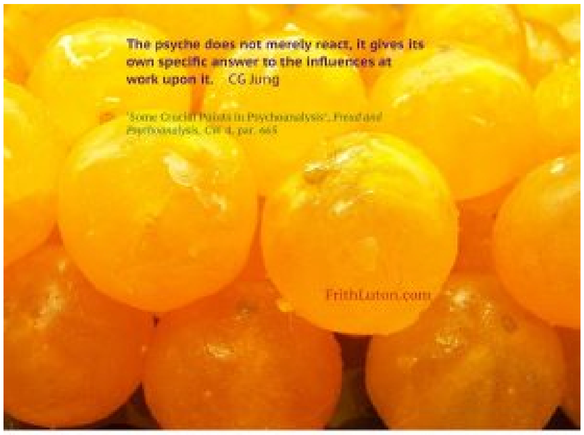


Synchronicity: a phenomenon where an event in the outside world coincides meaningfully with a psychological state of mind.

– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon



"Nights through dreams tell the myths forgotten by the day." – C.G Jung



The psyche does not merely react, it gives its own specific answer to the influences at work upon it. CG Jung

'Some Crucial Points in Psychoanalysis', Freud and Psychoanalysis, CW 4, par. 665

Realising our shadow is not easy because we tend to cling to our persona, the ideal image we have of ourselves – Daryl Sharp

FrithLuton.com

The Persona –

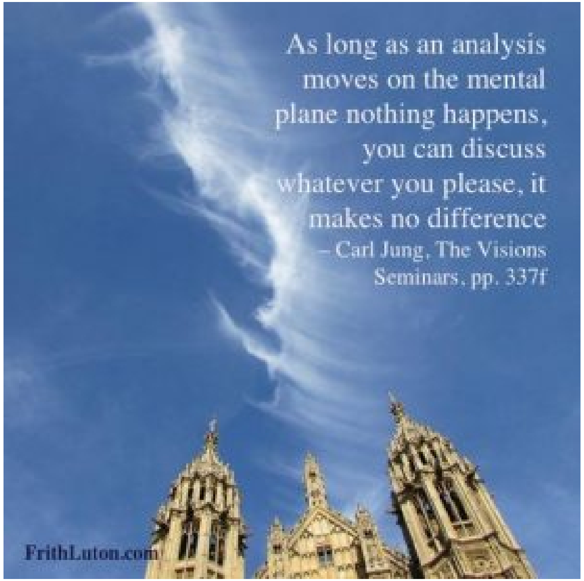
The "I," usually ideal aspects of ourselves, that we present to the outside world. –

Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com

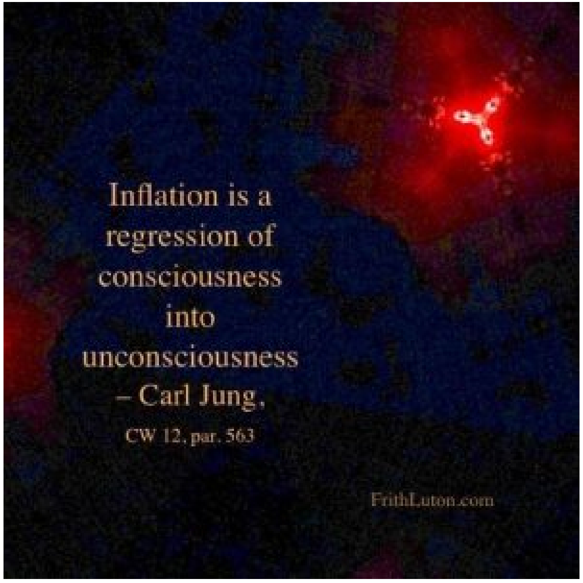
There is and can be no self-knowledge based on theoretical assumptions, for the object of this knowledge is … a relative exception and an irregular phenomenon. – Carl Jung, CW 10, par. 493ff

FrithLuton.com



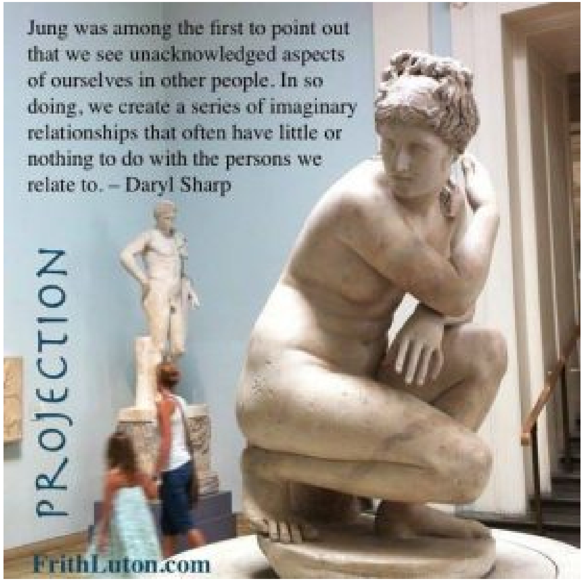
As long as an analysis moves on the mental plane nothing happens, you can discuss whatever you please, it makes no difference – Carl Jung, The Visions Seminars, pp. 337f

FrithLuton.com



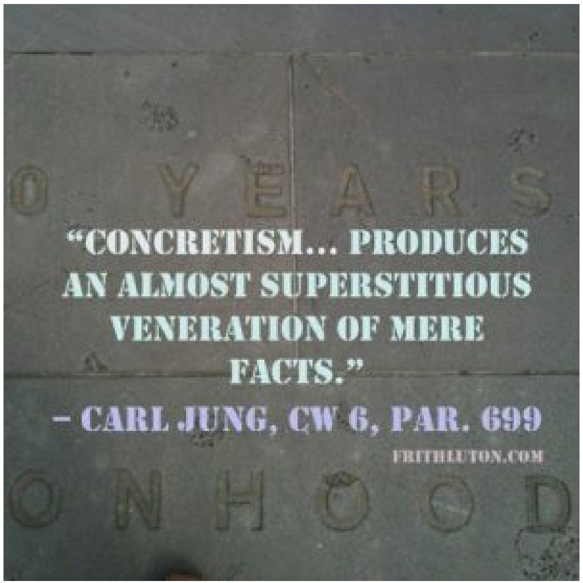
Inflation is a regression of consciousness into unconsciousness – Carl Jung, CW 12, par. 563

FrithLuton.com



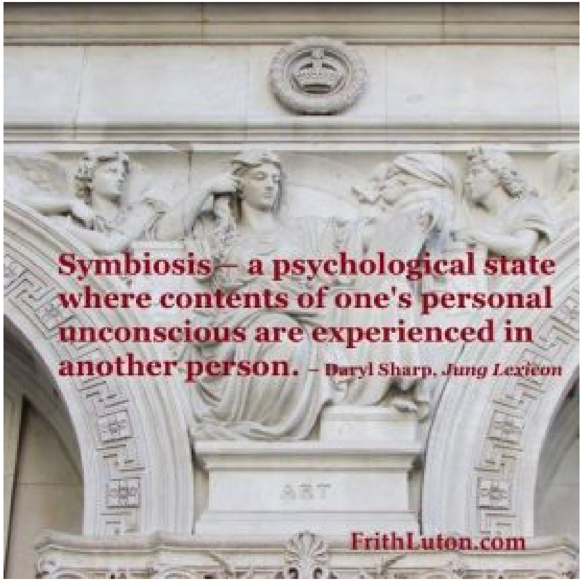
Jung was among the first to point out that we see unacknowledged aspects of ourselves in other people. In so doing, we create a series of imaginary relationships that often have little or nothing to do with the persons we relate to. – Daryl Sharp

PROJECTION
FrithLuton.com



“CONCRETISM… PRODUCES AN ALMOST SUPERSTITIOUS VENERATION OF MERE FACTS.”
– CARL JUNG, CW 6, PAR. 699

FRITHLUTON.COM
0 YEARS
ONHOOD



Symbiosis – a psychological state where contents of one's personal unconscious are experienced in another person. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

ART
FrithLuton.com

The Persona –

The "I," usually ideal aspects of ourselves, that we present to the outside world. –

Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com

“Anyone with a vocation hears the inner voice: they are called.”
– Carl Jung, CW 17, par. 299

FrithLuton.com

There is and can be no self-knowledge based on theoretical assumptions, for the object of this knowledge is … a relative exception and an irregular phenomenon. – Carl Jung, CW 10, par. 493ff

FrithLuton.com

"An emotional reaction means that a complex has been constellated. When a complex is activated we can't think straight and hardly know how we feel."
– Daryl Sharp, Digesting Jung

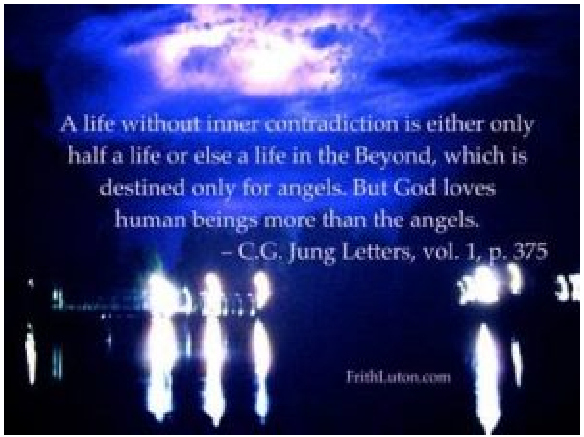
FrithLuton.com

Realising our shadow is not easy because we tend to cling to our persona, the ideal image we have of ourselves
– Daryl Sharp

FrithLuton.com

The truth of yesterday must be set aside for what is now the truth of one' s psychic life.
Marie-Lôuise von Franz

FrithLuton.com
Angel Dog
Jackie Morris



A life without inner contradiction is either only half a life or else a life in the Beyond, which is destined only for angels. But God loves human beings more than the angels.
– C.G. Jung Letters, vol. 1, p. 375

FrithLuton.com

The object of active imagination is to give a voice to sides of the personality one is ordinarily not aware of – to establish a line of communication between consciousness and the unconscious. – Daryl Sharp

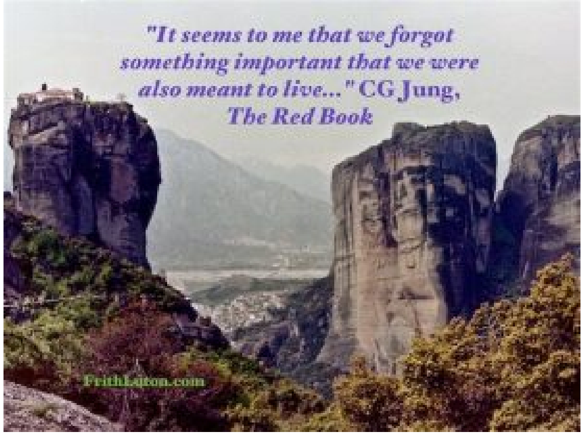
FrithLuton.com



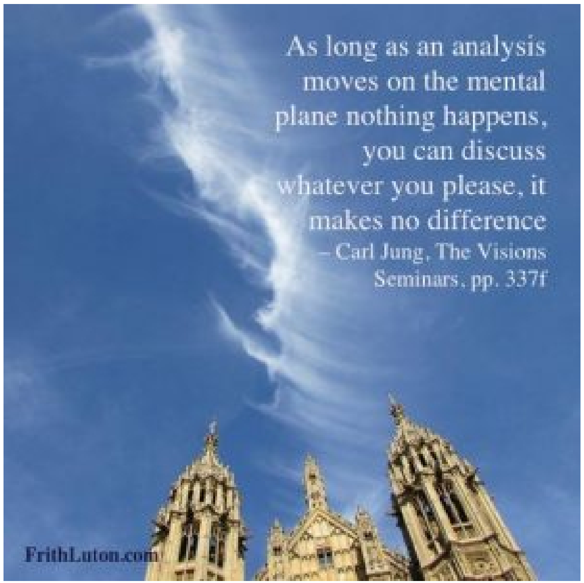
"It seems to me that we forgot something important that we were also meant to live..." CG Jung, The Red Book

FrithLuton.com

The religious attitude … certainly involves acknowledging, and paying homage to, something numinous, mysterious—something far greater than oneself.

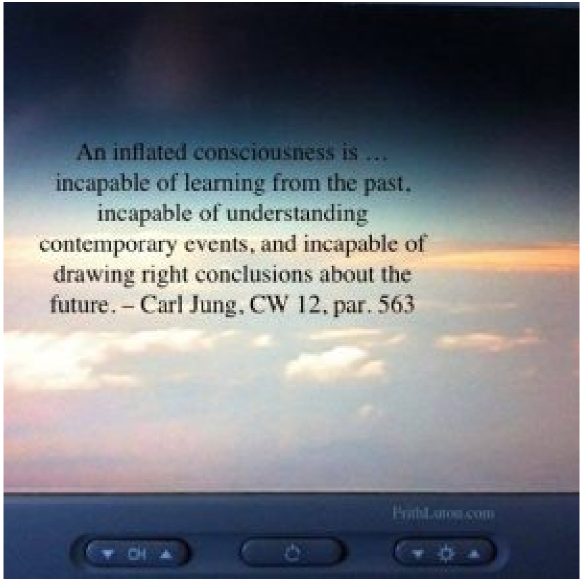
– Daryl Sharp

FrithLuton.com



As long as an analysis moves on the mental plane nothing happens, you can discuss whatever you please, it makes no difference

– Carl Jung, The Visions Seminars, pp. 337f

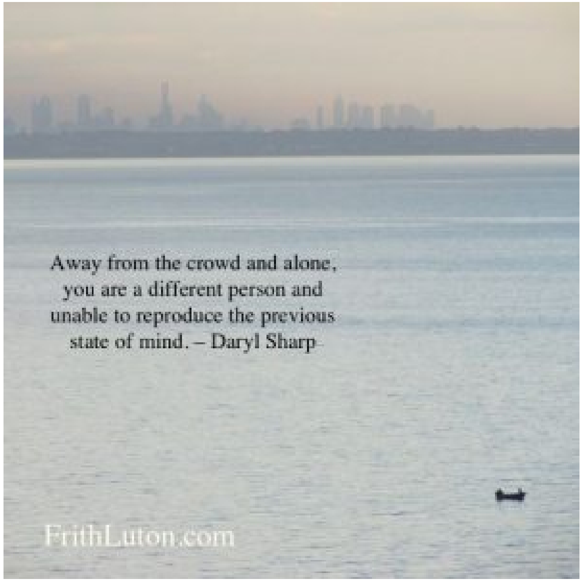


An inflated consciousness is … incapable of learning from the past, incapable of understanding contemporary events, and incapable of drawing right conclusions about the future. – Carl Jung, CW 12, par. 563

Part of puer psychology is the feeling of being special, of having a unique destiny. When you feel like that, it's hard to muster the energy to earn a living. Compared to what you're cut out for, the daily grind is just too mundane.

– Daryl Sharp

FrithLuton.com



Away from the crowd and alone, you are a different person and unable to reproduce the previous state of mind. – Daryl Sharp

"Anyone with a vocation hears the inner voice: they are called."

– Carl Jung, CW 17, par. 299

FrithLuton.com

"If a plant is to unfold its specific nature to the full, it must first be able to grow in the soil in which it is planted."

– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 761

FrithLuton.com

The religious attitude … certainly involves acknowledging, and paying homage to, something numinous, mysterious—something far greater than oneself.

– Daryl Sharp

FrithLuton.com

When you are not quite at one with yourself … you are approaching a neurotic condition.

– Carl Jung, CW 18, par. 383

FrithLuton.com

"Higher consciousness . . . is equivalent to being all alone in the world." – Carl Jung, CW 9i, par. 288

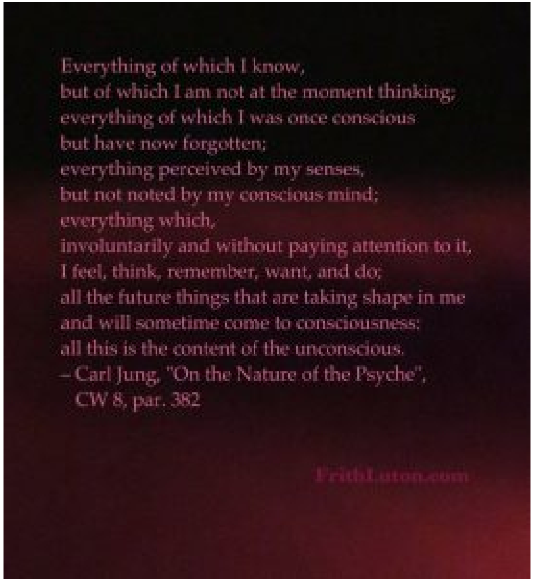
FrithLuton.com

The Persona –

The "I," usually ideal aspects of ourselves, that we present to the outside world. –

Daryl Sharp,
Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com



Everything of which I know,
but of which I am not at the moment thinking;
everything of which I was once conscious
but have now forgotten;
everything perceived by my senses,
but not noted by my conscious mind;
everything which,
involuntarily and without paying attention to it,
I feel, think, remember, want, and do;
all the future things that are taking shape in me
and will sometime come to consciousness:
all this is the content of the unconscious.
– Carl Jung, "On the Nature of the Psyche",
CW 8, par. 382

The dream is the dreamer
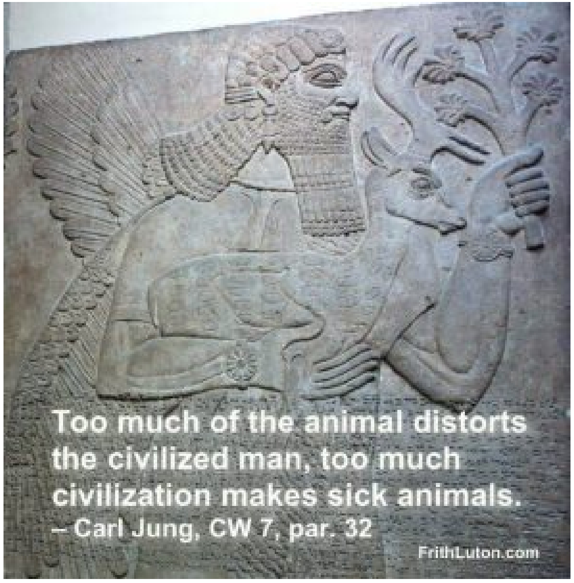
– Daryl Sharp

FrithLuton.com

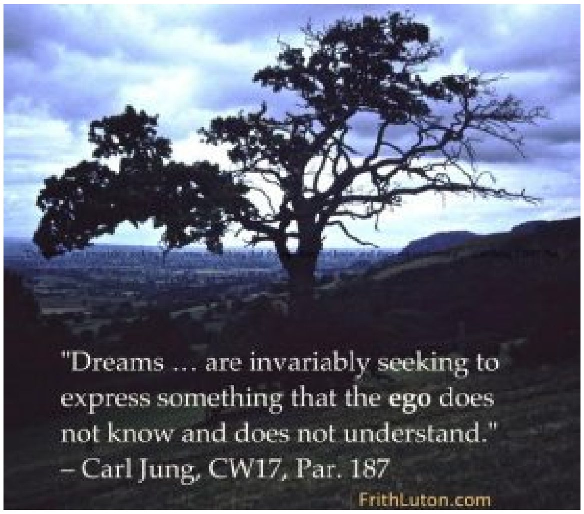


Too much of the animal distorts the civilized man, too much civilization makes sick animals.
– Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 32

FrithLuton.com

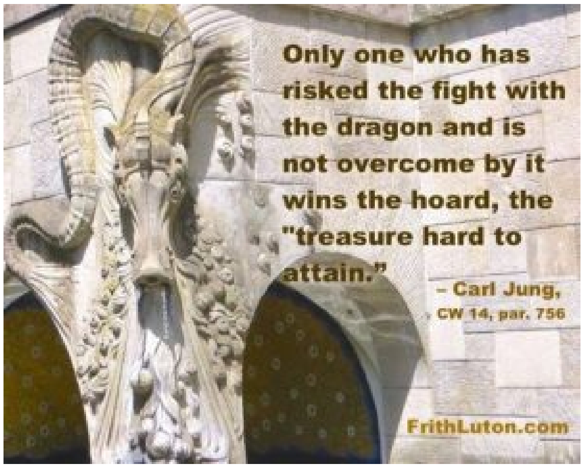
All the contents of our unconscious are constantly being projected into our surroundings – Carl Jung

FrithLuton.com



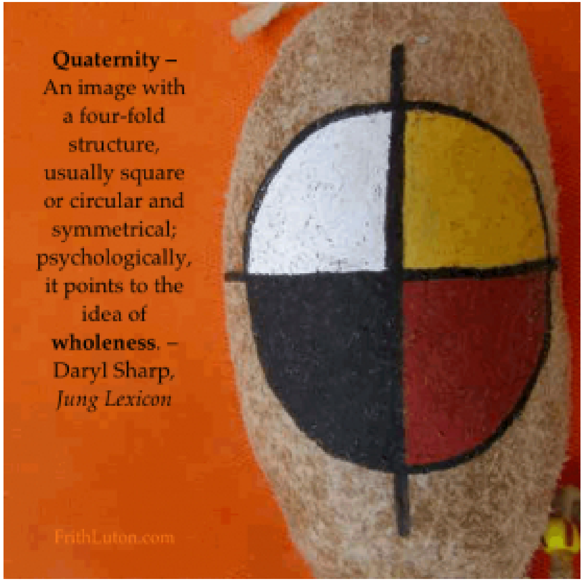
"Dreams … are invariably seeking to express something that the ego does not know and does not understand."
– Carl Jung, CW17, Par. 187

FrithLuton.com



Only one who has risked the fight with the dragon and is not overcome by it wins the hoard, the "treasure hard to attain."
– Carl Jung, CW 14, par. 756

FrithLuton.com



Quaternity – An image with a four-fold structure, usually square or circular and symmetrical; psychologically, it points to the idea of wholeness. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com

One of the greatest single obstacles to a mature relationship is the ideal of togetherness: … 'Find your soul-mate, your other half, and you'll live happily ever after.' – Daryl Sharp, Digesting Jung

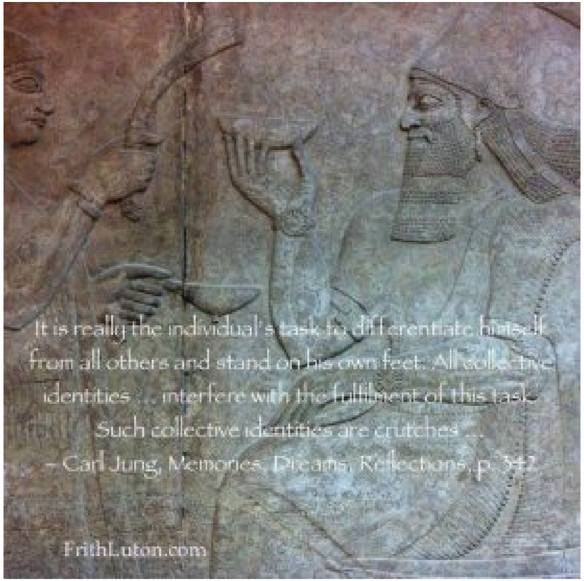
FrithLuton.com

The inferior function is practically identical with the dark side of the human personality. – Carl Jung, CW 9i, par. 222

FrithLuton.com

The truth of yesterday must be set aside for what is now the truth of one's psychic life.
Marie-Louise von Franz

FrithLuton.com
15/25
Angel Dog
Jackie Morris



It is really the individual's task to differentiate himself from all others and stand on his own feet. All collective identities … interfere with the fulfilment of this task. Such collective identities are crutches …
– Carl Jung, Memories, Dreams, Reflections, p. 342

FrithLuton.com

Intellectually the self is no more than a psychological concept, a construct that serves to express an unknowable essence which we cannot grasp as such, since by definition it transcends our powers of comprehension. It might equally well be called the 'God within.' – Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 399

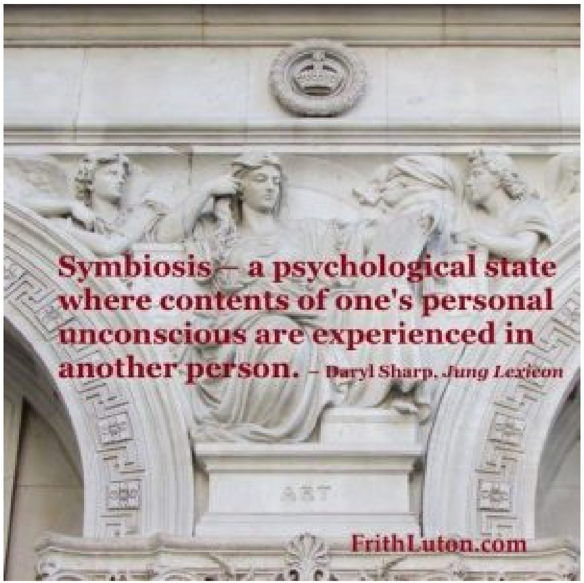
FrithLuton.com

In active apperception, the ego grabs hold of something new and comes to grips with it. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com

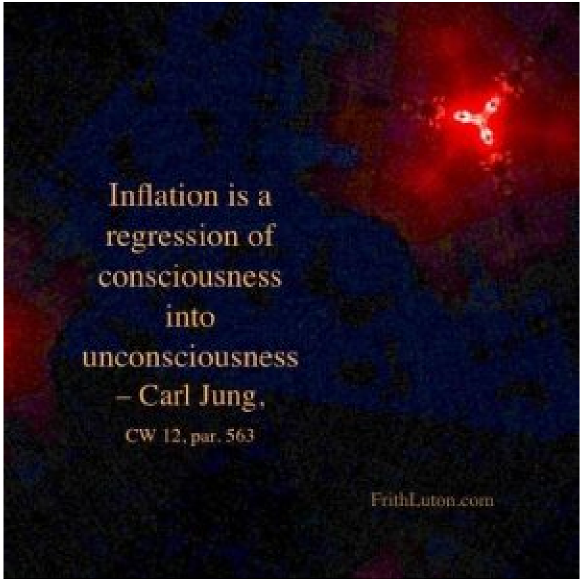
When animus and anima meet, the animus draws his sword of power and the anima ejects her poison of illusion and seduction. The outcome need not always be negative…
– Carl Jung, CW 9ii, par. 30

FrithLuton.com



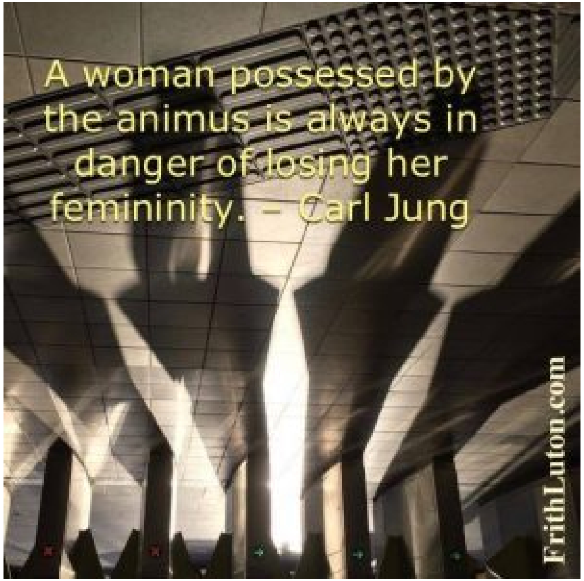
Symbiosis – a psychological state where contents of one's personal unconscious are experienced in another person. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

ART
FrithLuton.com



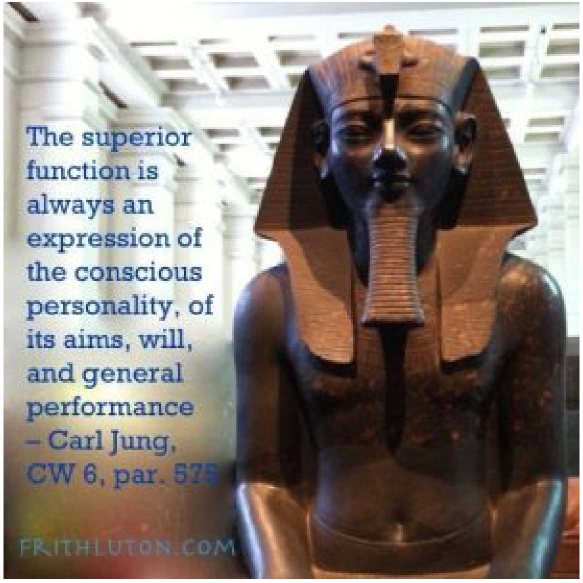
Inflation is a regression of consciousness into unconsciousness
– Carl Jung,
CW 12, par. 563

FrithLuton.com



A woman possessed by the animus is always in danger of losing her femininity. – Carl Jung

FrithLuton.com



The superior function is always an expression of the conscious personality, of its aims, will, and general performance
– Carl Jung,
CW 6, par. 575

FRITHLUTON.COM

The anima is the archetype of life itself.
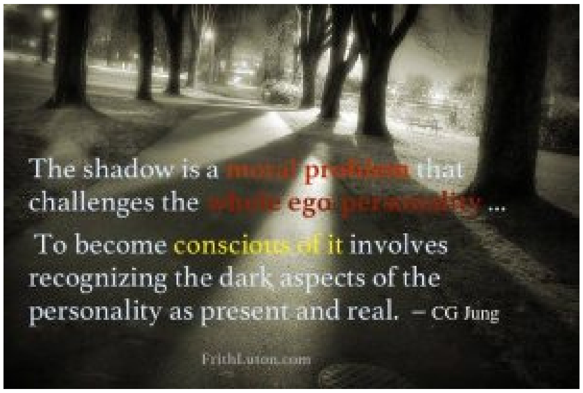
– Carl Jung

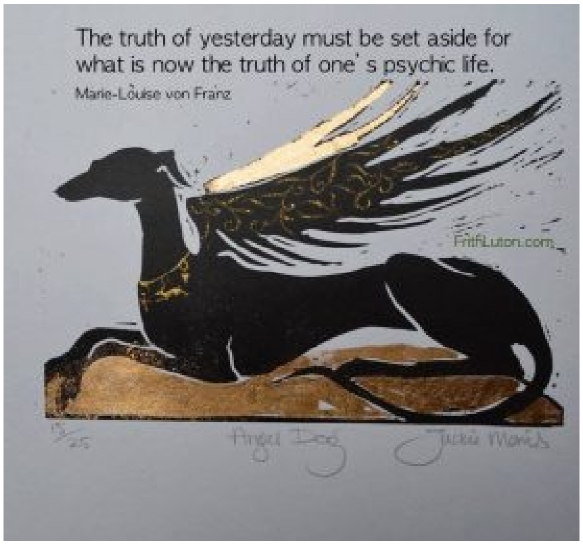
FrithLuton.com



The shadow is a moral problem that challenges the whole ego-personality ...

To become conscious of it involves recognizing the dark aspects of the personality as present and real. – CG Jung

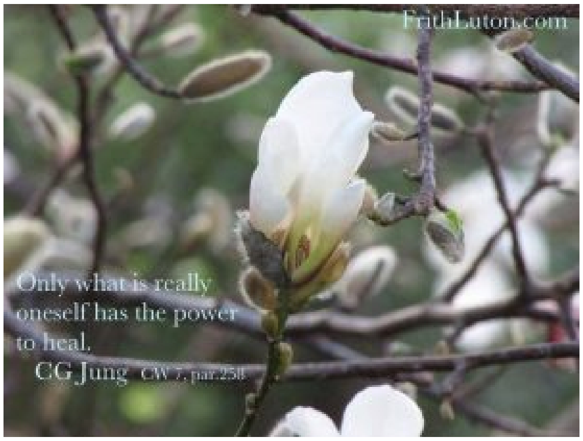
FrithLuton.com



The truth of yesterday must be set aside for what is now the truth of one' s psychic life.

Marie-Louise von Franz

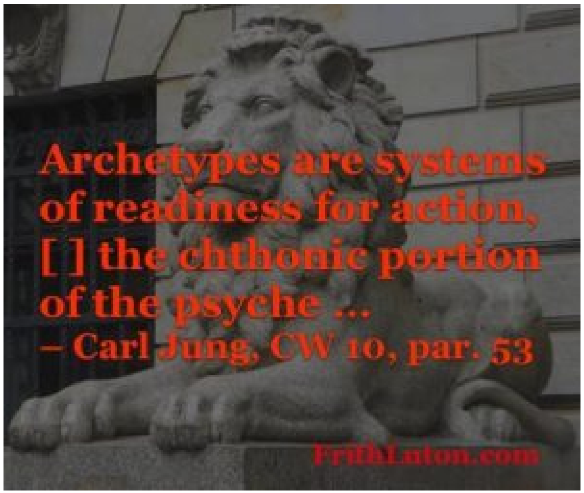
FrithLuton.com
15/25
Angel Dog
Jackie Morris



Only what is really oneself has the power to heal.

CG Jung CW 7, par.258

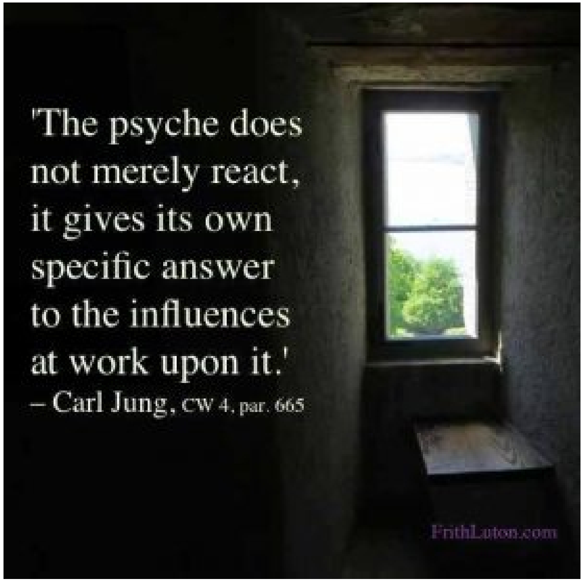
FrithLuton.com



Archetypes are systems of readiness for action, [ ] the chthonic portion of the psyche ...

– Carl Jung, CW 10, par. 53

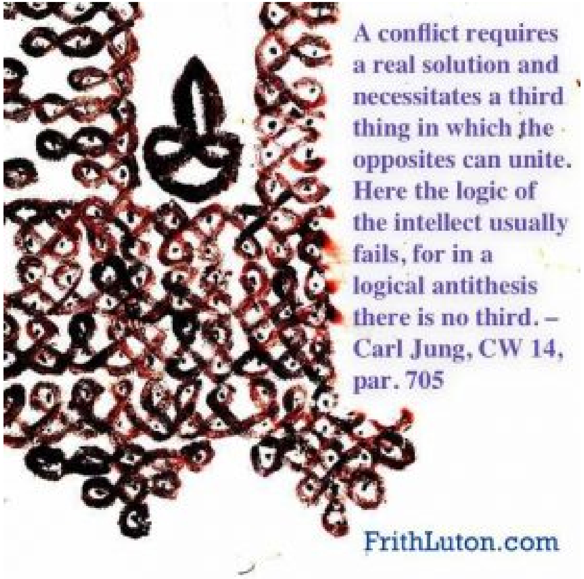
FrithLuton.com



'The psyche does not merely react, it gives its own specific answer to the influences at work upon it.'

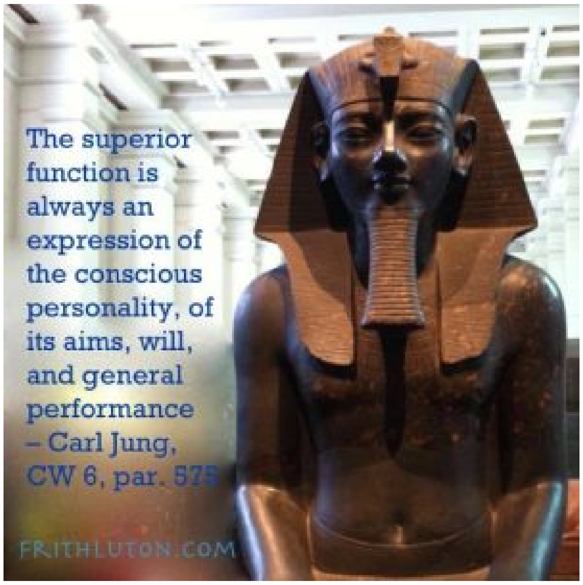
– Carl Jung, CW 4, par. 665

FrithLuton.com



A conflict requires a real solution and necessitates a third thing in which the opposites can unite. Here the logic of the intellect usually fails, for in a logical antithesis there is no third. – Carl Jung, CW 14, par. 705

FrithLuton.com



The superior function is always an expression of the conscious personality, of its aims, will, and general performance – Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 575

"An emotional reaction means that a complex has been constellated. When a complex is activated we can't think straight and hardly know how we feel." – Daryl Sharp, Digesting Jung

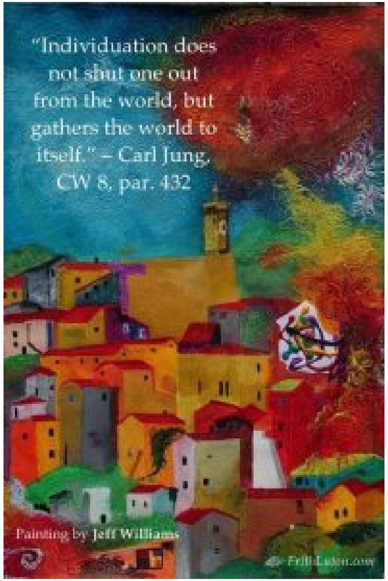
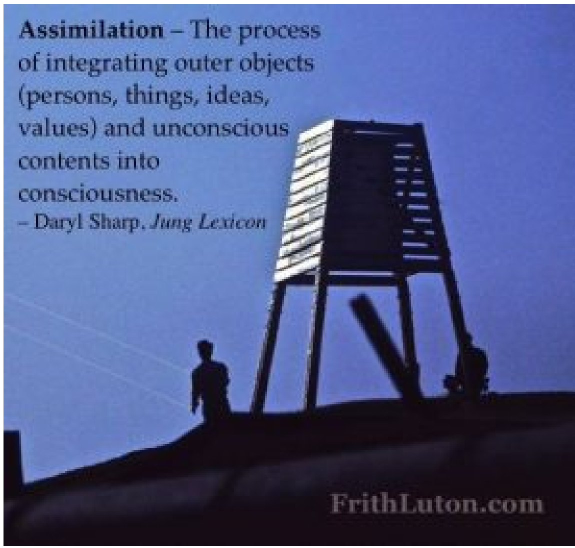
The 'natural mind' is the mind which says absolutely straight and ruthless things ...That is the sort of mind which springs from natural sources, and not from opinions taken from books; it wells up from the earth like a natural spring, and brings with it the peculiar wisdom of nature. (Vision Seminars) CG Jung



"Individuation does not shut one out from the world, but gathers the world to itself." – Carl Jung, CW 8, par. 432

Painting by Jeff Williams



Assimilation – The process of integrating outer objects (persons, things, ideas, values) and unconscious contents into consciousness. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

Psychosis – an extreme dissociation of the personality. In psychosis, [the complexes] are completely disconnected from consciousness. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon Affect – Emotional reactions marked by physical symptoms and disturbances in thinking.

– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

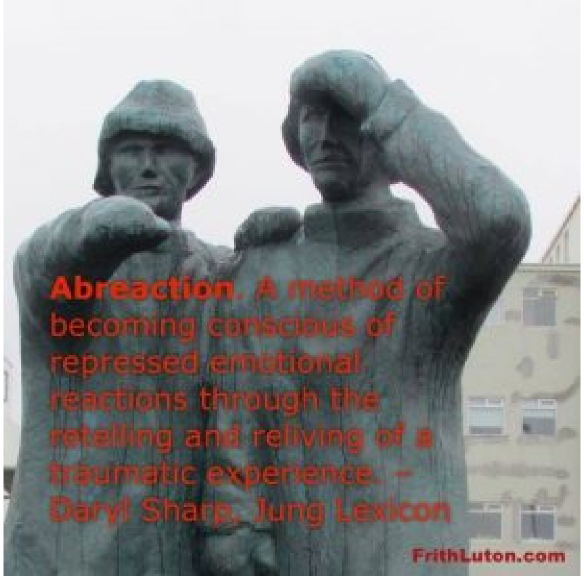
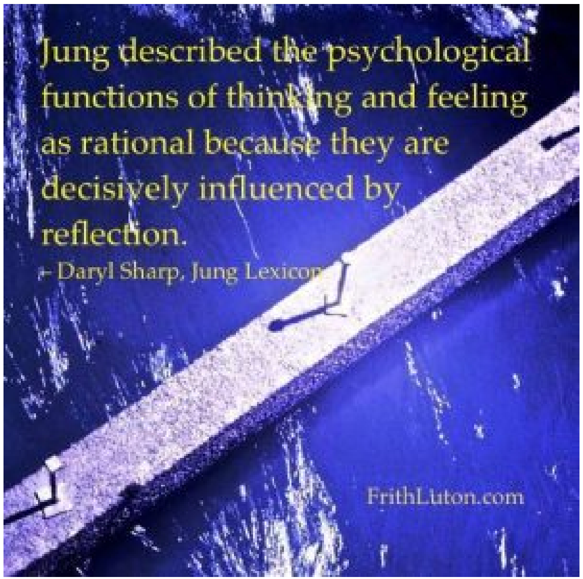
Jung believed that behind the mundane symptoms of regression lay its symbolic meaning: the need for psychological renewal, reflected in mythology as the journey of the hero. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com



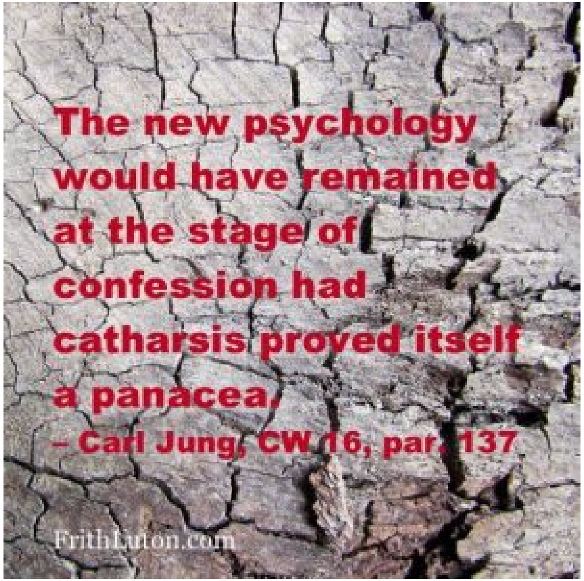
Abreaction. A method of becoming conscious of repressed emotional reactions through the retelling and reliving of a traumatic experience. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com



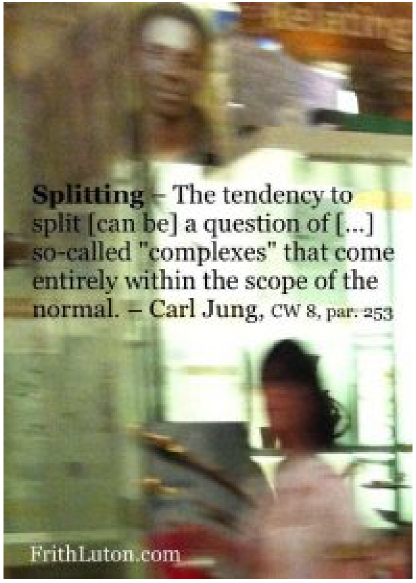
Jung described the psychological functions of thinking and feeling as rational because they are decisively influenced by reflection.
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com



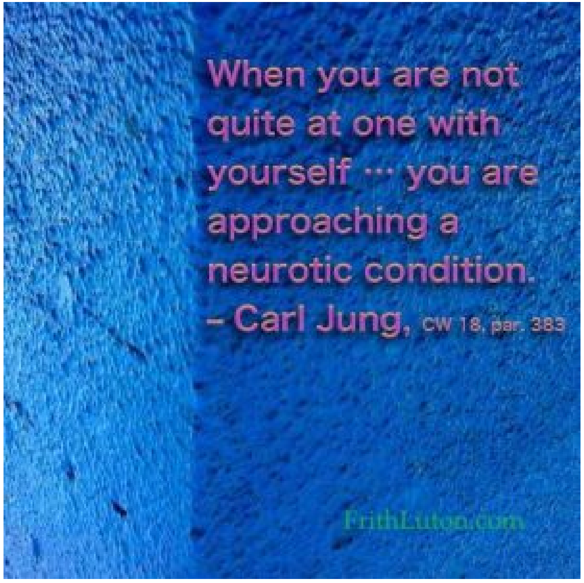
The new psychology would have remained at the stage of confession had catharsis proved itself a panacea.
– Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 137

FrithLuton.com



Splitting – The tendency to split [can be] a question of [...] so-called "complexes" that come entirely within the scope of the normal. – Carl Jung, CW 8, par. 253

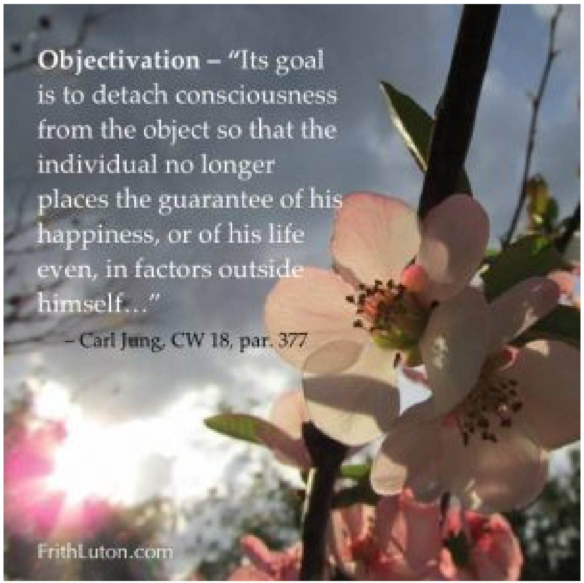
FrithLuton.com



When you are not quite at one with yourself ··· you are approaching a neurotic condition.
– Carl Jung, CW 18, par. 383

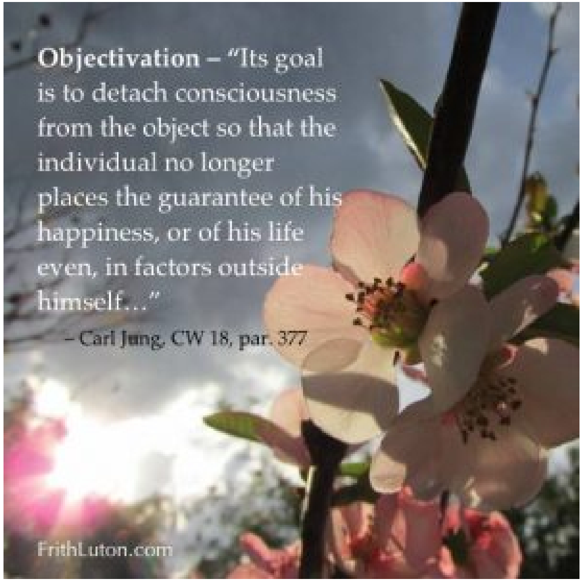
FrithLuton.com

Repression causes what is called a systematic amnesia, where only specific memories or groups of ideas are withdrawn from recollection … for the very good reason that it would be painful or disagreeable - Carl Jung, CW 17, par. 199a



Objectivation – "Its goal is to detach consciousness from the object so that the individual no longer places the guarantee of his happiness, or of his life even, in factors outside himself…"

– Carl Jung, CW 18, par. 377



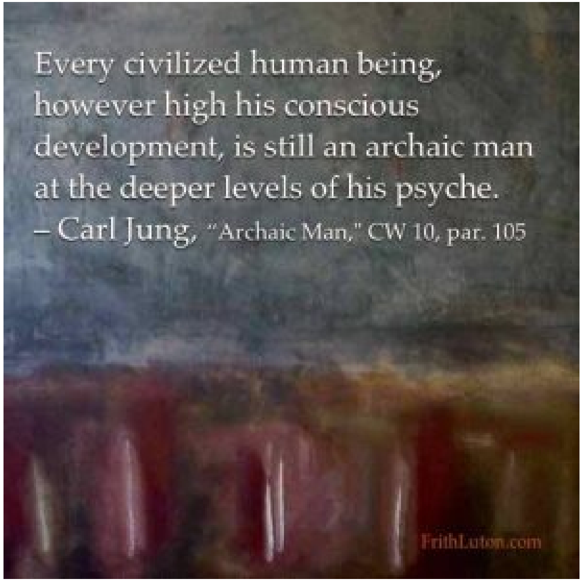
Objectivation – "Its goal is to detach consciousness from the object so that the individual no longer places the guarantee of his happiness, or of his life even, in factors outside himself…"

– Carl Jung, CW 18, par. 377

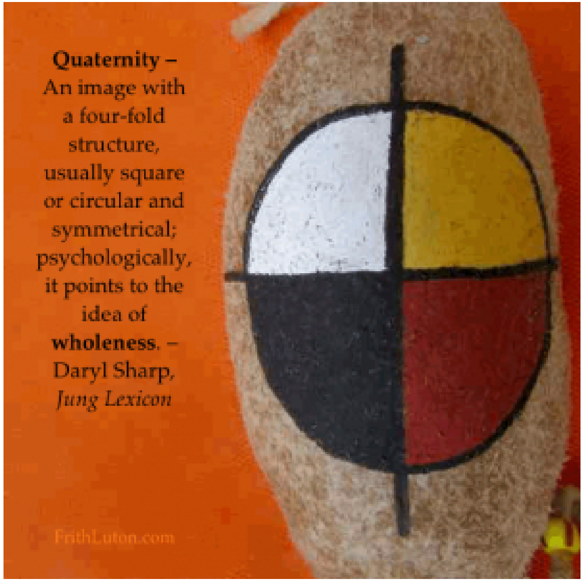
Dissociation – the splitting of a personality into its component parts or complexes

– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton
.com



Every civilized human being, however high his conscious development, is still an archaic man at the deeper levels of his psyche.
– Carl Jung, "Archaic Man," CW 10, par. 105



Quaternity – An image with a four-fold structure, usually square or circular and symmetrical; psychologically, it points to the idea of wholeness. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

Every psychological expression is a symbol if we assume that it states or signifies something more and other than itself which eludes our present knowledge. – Carl Jung, "Definitions," CW 6, par. 817

FrithLuton.com

Constructive –
An approach to the interpretation of psychic activity based on its goal or purpose rather than its cause or source.
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

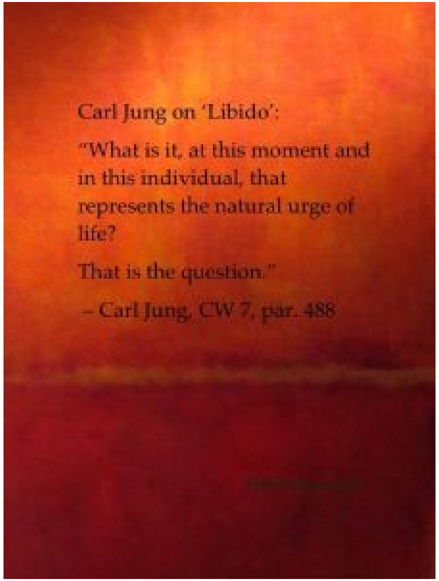
FrithLuton.com

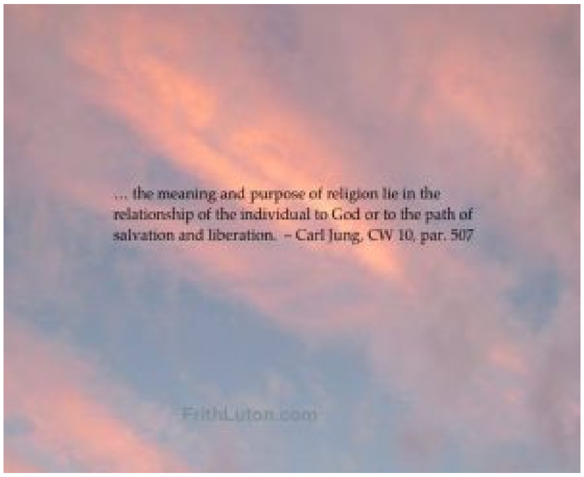


Carl Jung on 'Libido':

"What is it, at this moment and in this individual, that represents the natural urge of life?

That is the question."

– Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 488

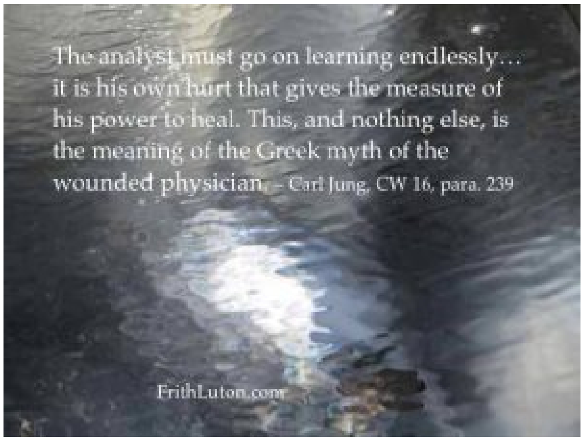


… the meaning and purpose of religion lie in the relationship of the individual to God or to the path of salvation and liberation. – Carl Jung, CW 10, par. 507

FrithLuton.com

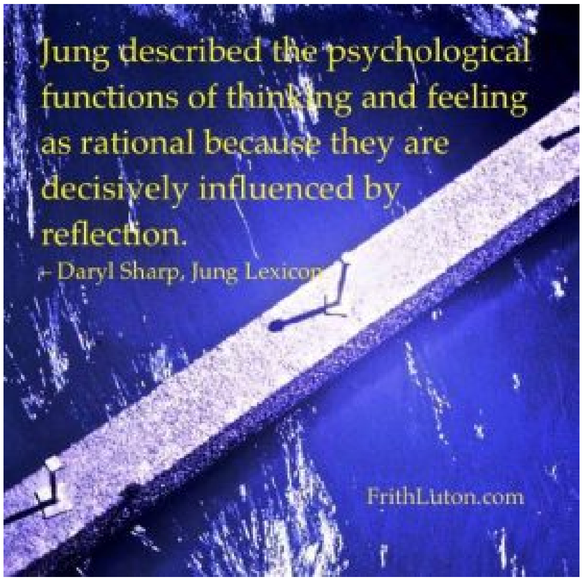
The soul-image is a specific archetypal image produced by the unconscious, commonly experienced in projection onto a person of the opposite sex.
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com



The analyst must go on learning endlessly… it is his own hurt that gives the measure of his power to heal. This, and nothing else, is the meaning of the Greek myth of the wounded physician. – Carl Jung, CW 16, para. 239

FrithLuton.com



Jung described the psychological functions of thinking and feeling as rational because they are decisively influenced by reflection.
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

I visualize the process of abstraction as a withdrawal of libido from the object ... In other words, abstraction is an introverting movement of libido.
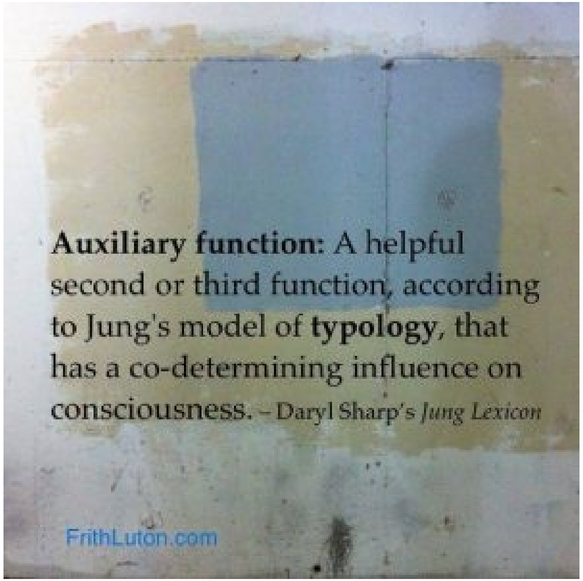
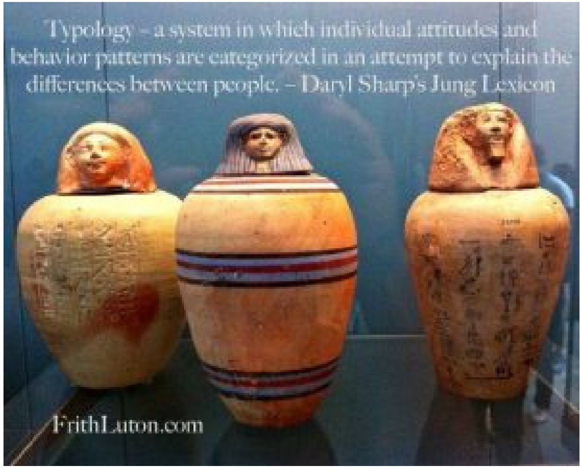
– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 679



Auxiliary function: A helpful second or third function, according to Jung's model of typology, that has a co-determining influence on consciousness. – Daryl Sharp's Jung Lexicon

Progression ... is not the same as psychological development or individuation. Progression refers simply to the continuous flow or current of life. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com



Typology – a system in which individual attitudes and behavior patterns are categorized in an attempt to explain the differences between people. – Daryl Sharp's Jung Lexicon

The mandala is a means of protecting the centre of the personality from being drawn out and from being influenced from outside. CG Jung

FrithLuton.com

[Jung] acknowledged that one might feel transformed during certain group experiences, but he cautioned against confusing this with genuine rebirth. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon, 'Rebirth'

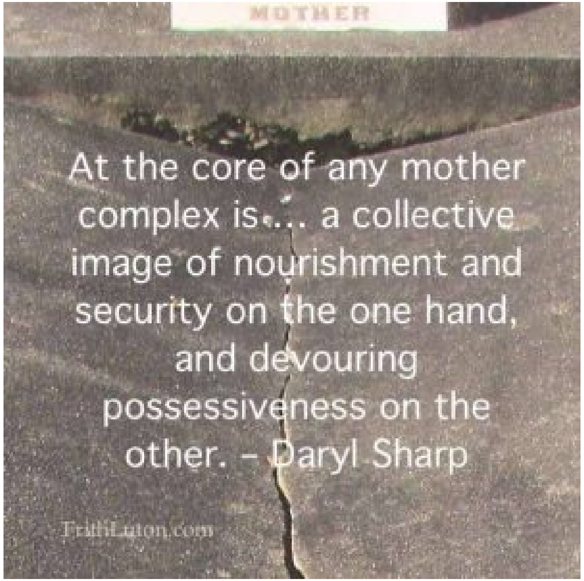
FrithLuton.com

Without differentiation direction is impossible, since the direction of a function towards a goal depends on the elimination of anything irrelevant. – Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 705

FrithLuton.com

Without differentiation direction is impossible, since the direction of a function towards a goal depends on the elimination of anything irrelevant. – Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 705

FrithLuton.com



At the core of any mother complex is … a collective image of nourishment and security on the one hand, and devouring possessiveness on the other. – Daryl Sharp

FrithLuton.com

In dream interpretation, the reductive (also called mechanistic) method seeks to explain images of persons and situations in terms of concrete reality. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

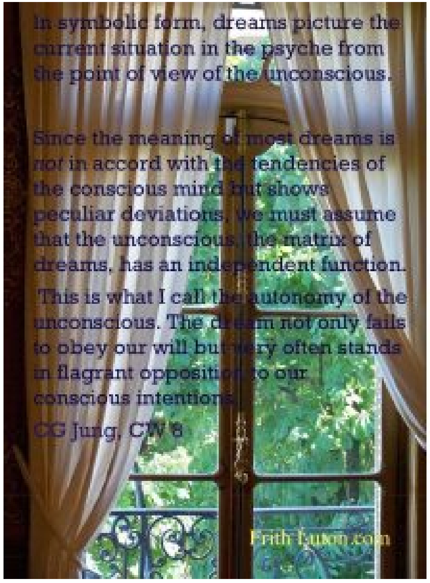
FrithLuton.com

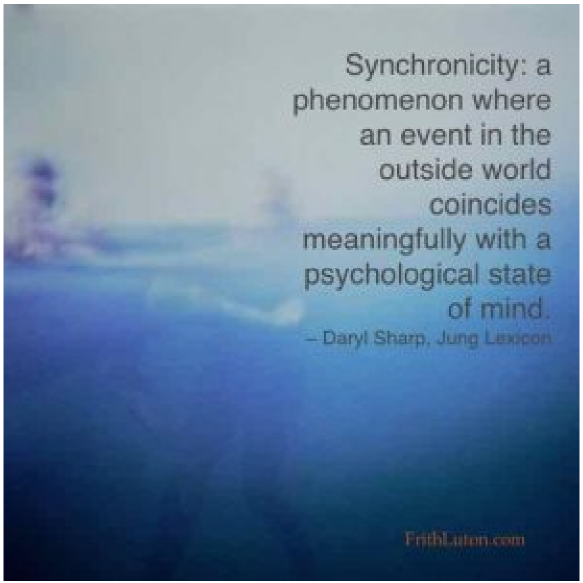


In symbolic form, dreams picture the current situation in the psyche from the point of view of the unconscious.

Since the meaning of most dreams is not in accord with the tendencies of the conscious mind but shows peculiar deviations, we must assume that the unconscious, the matrix of dreams, has an independent function. This is what I call the autonomy of the unconscious. The dream not only fails to obey our will but very often stands in flagrant opposition to our conscious intentions.

CG Jung, CW 8

Frith Luton.com



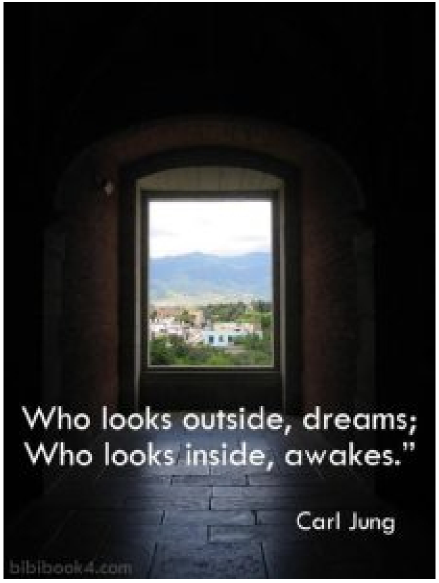
Synchronicity: a phenomenon where an event in the outside world coincides meaningfully with a psychological state of mind.
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

IN ALCHEMY, FIRE often symbolises one's participation in and passion for the work.
Marie-Louise von Franz

FrithLuton.com

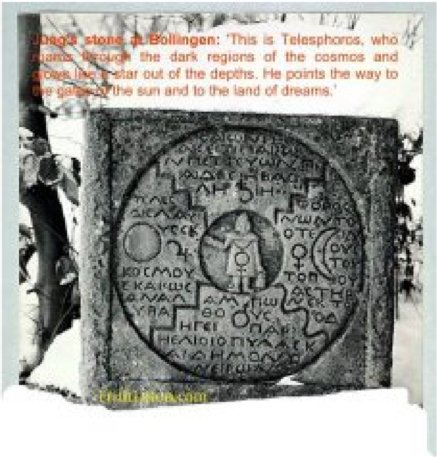
As a general rule, a person identifies more or less completely with the most favoured and hence the most developed function. It is this that gives rise to the various psychological types. – Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 763

FrithLuton.com

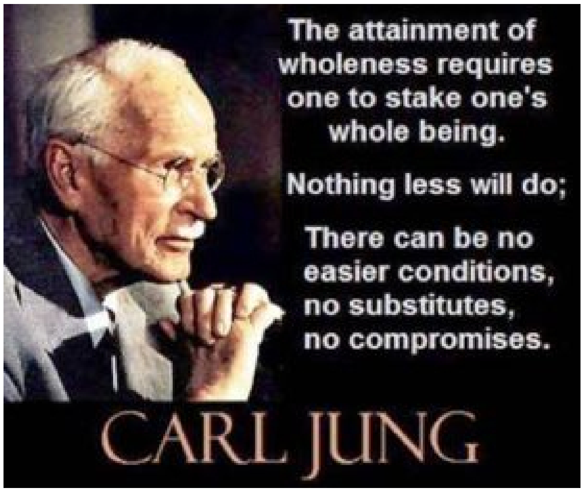


Who looks outside, dreams;
Who looks inside, awakes."

Carl Jung



Jung's stone at Bollingen: 'This is Telesphoros, who roams through the dark regions of the cosmos and glows like a star out of the depths. He points the way to the gates of the sun and to the land of dreams.'



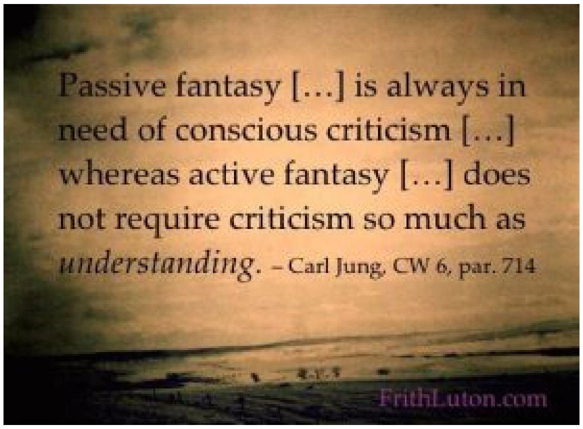
The attainment of wholeness requires one to stake one's whole being.

Nothing less will do;

There can be no easier conditions, no substitutes, no compromises.

CARL JUNG

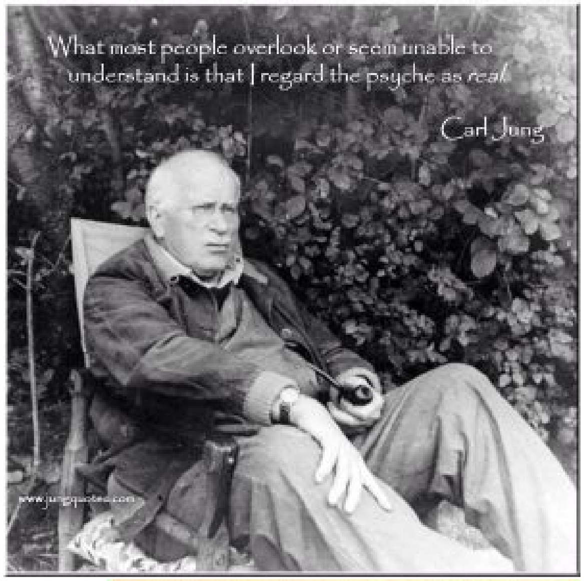
The mechanistic view is purely causal. … The energic point of view on the other hand … the flow of energy has a definite direction (goal) in that it follows the gradient of potential in a way that cannot be reversed. – Carl Jung, CW 8, pars. 2f



Passive fantasy […] is always in need of conscious criticism […] whereas active fantasy […] does not require criticism so much as understanding. – Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 714

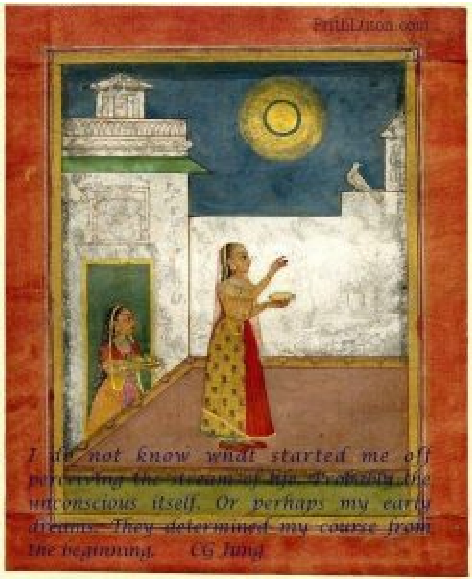
"The experience of the Self is always a defeat for the ego."

Carl Jung

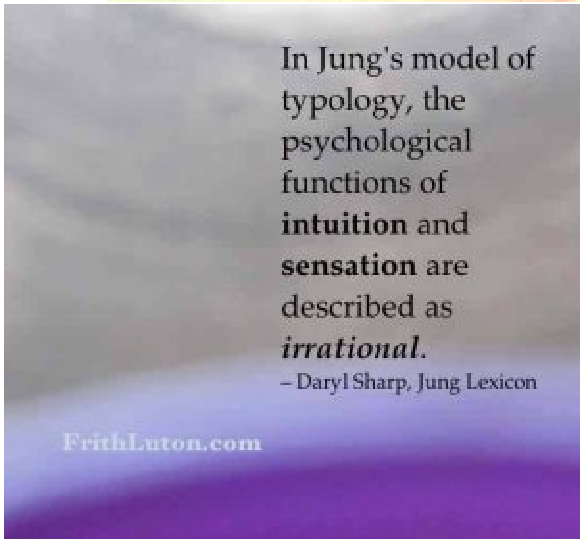


What most people overlook or seem unable to understand is that I regard the psyche as real.

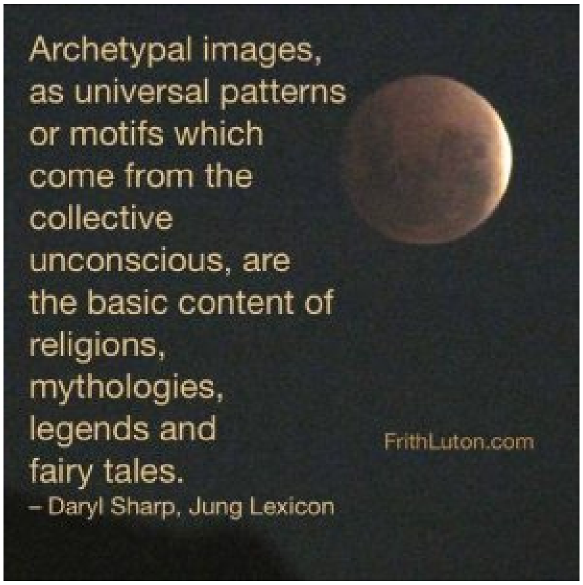
Carl Jung



I do not know what started me off perceiving the stream of life. Probably the unconscious itself. Or perhaps my early dreams. They determined my course from the beginning. CG Jung



In Jung's model of typology, the psychological functions of intuition and sensation are described as irrational.
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon



Archetypal images, as universal patterns or motifs which come from the collective unconscious, are the basic content of religions, mythologies, legends and fairy tales.

– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com

What we neglect in ourselves blends itself secretly into our actions towards others.

CG Jung, The Red Book

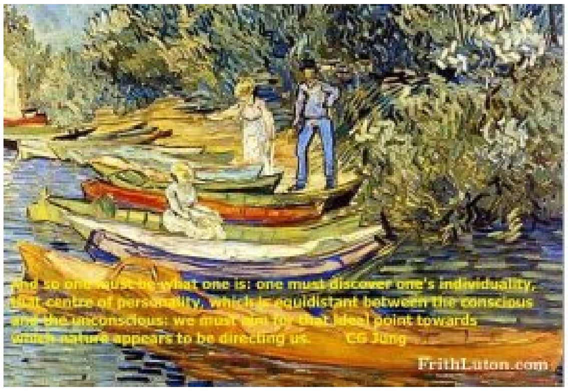
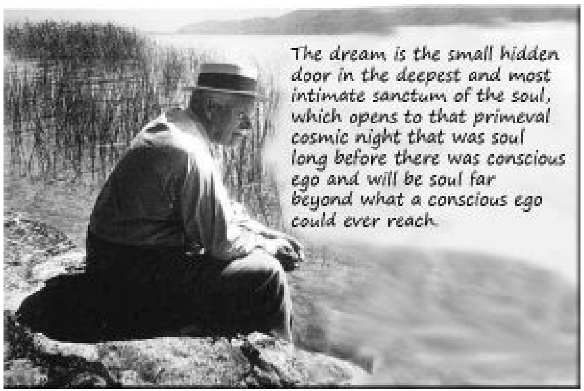
FrithLuton.com

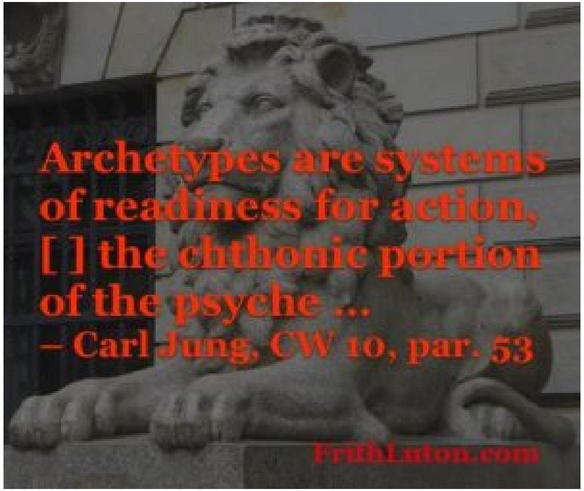


And so one must be what one is: one must discover one's individuality, that centre of personality, which is equidistant between the conscious and the unconscious; we must aim for that ideal point towards which nature appears to be directing us. CG Jung

FrithLuton.com



The dream is the small hidden door in the deepest and most intimate sanctum of the soul, which opens to that primeval cosmic night that was soul long before there was conscious ego and will be soul far beyond what a conscious ego could ever reach.



Archetypes are systems of readiness for action, [ ] the chthonic portion of the psyche ...

– Carl Jung, CW 10, par. 53

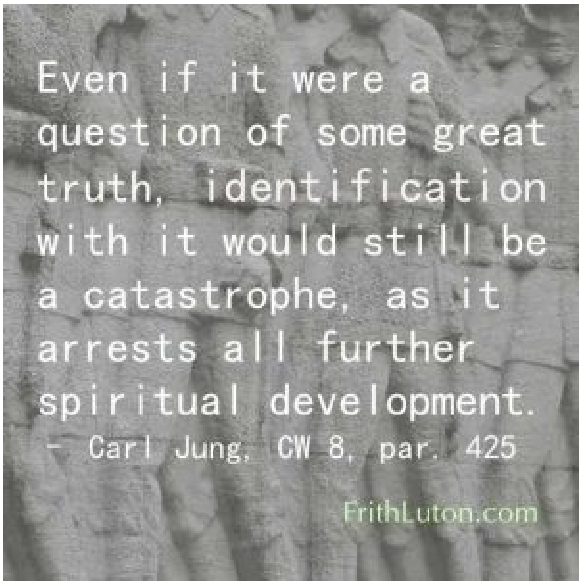
FrithLuton.com

"Formerly perhaps he wanted more than he could accomplish; now he does not even dare to attempt what he has it in him to do."

– Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 254

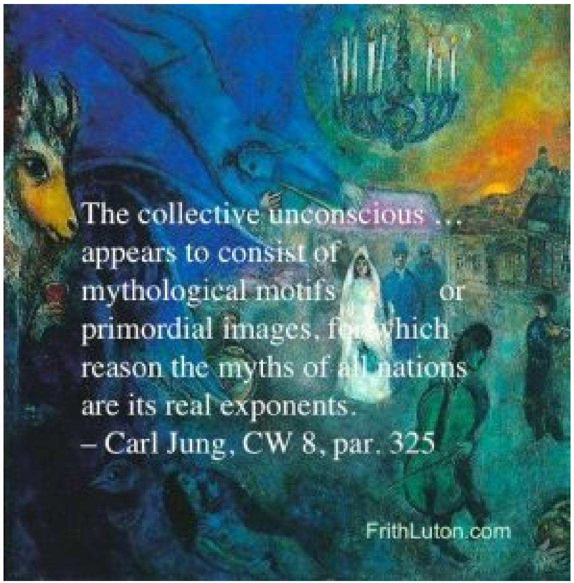
On 'the regressive restoration of the persona'

FrithLuton.com



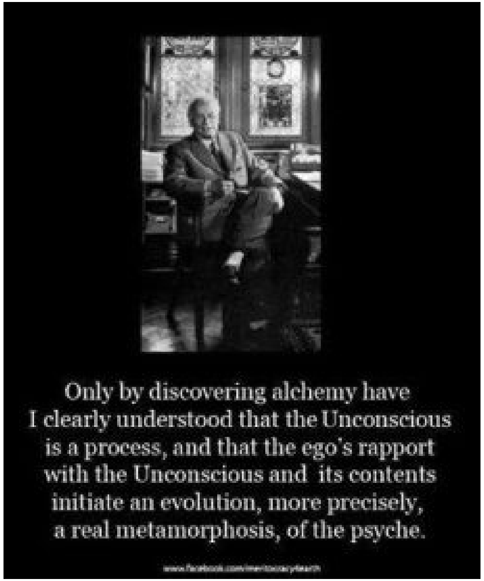
Even if it were a question of some great truth, identification with it would still be a catastrophe, as it arrests all further spiritual development.
– Carl Jung, CW 8, par. 425

FrithLuton.com



The collective unconscious … appears to consist of mythological motifs or primordial images, for which reason the myths of all nations are its real exponents.
– Carl Jung, CW 8, par. 325

FrithLuton.com



Only by discovering alchemy have
I clearly understood that the Unconscious is a process, and that the ego's rapport with the Unconscious and its contents initiate an evolution, more precisely, a real metamorphosis, of the psyche.

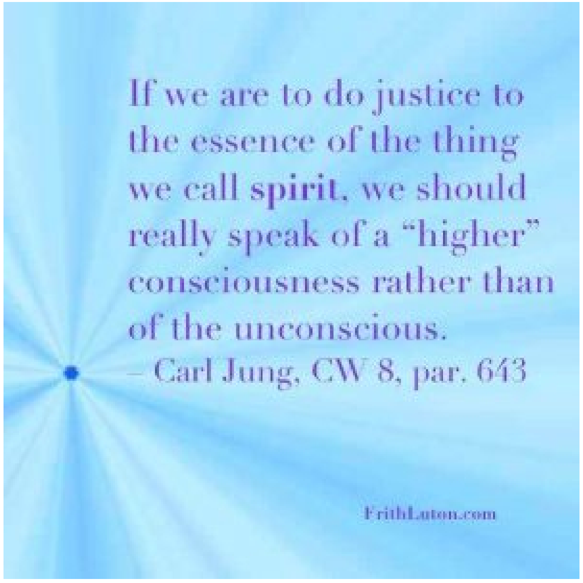
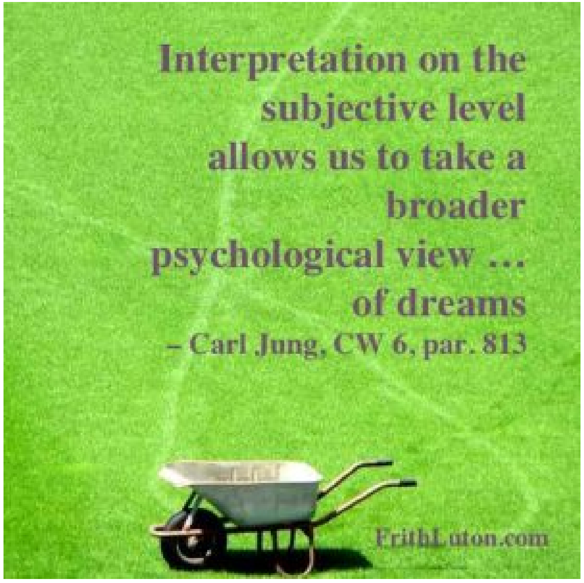
The animus corresponds to the paternal Logos just as the anima corresponds to the maternal Eros.
– Carl Jung, CW 9ii, par. 28f

FrithLuton.com



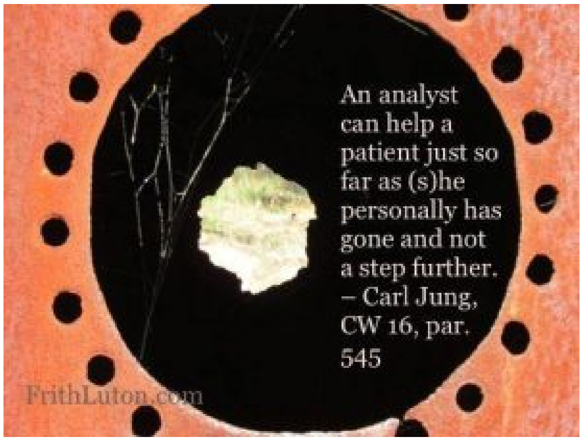
If we are to do justice to the essence of the thing we call spirit, we should really speak of a "higher" consciousness rather than of the unconscious.
– Carl Jung, CW 8, par. 643

FrithLuton.com



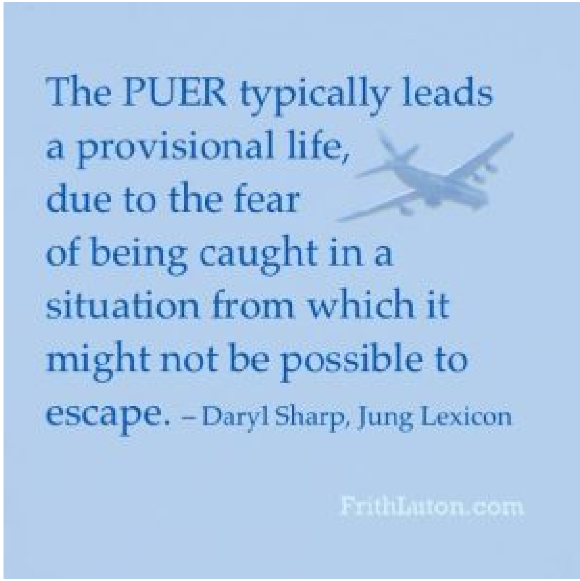
Interpretation on the subjective level allows us to take a broader psychological view … of dreams
– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 813

FrithLuton.com



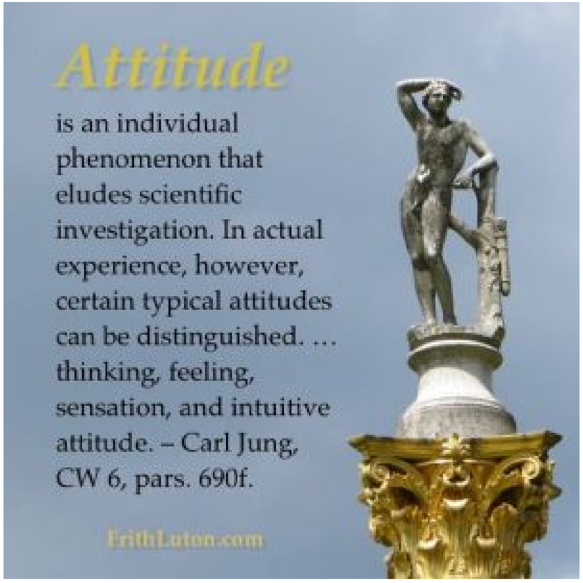
An analyst can help a patient just so far as (s)he personally has gone and not a step further. – Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 545

FrithLuton.com



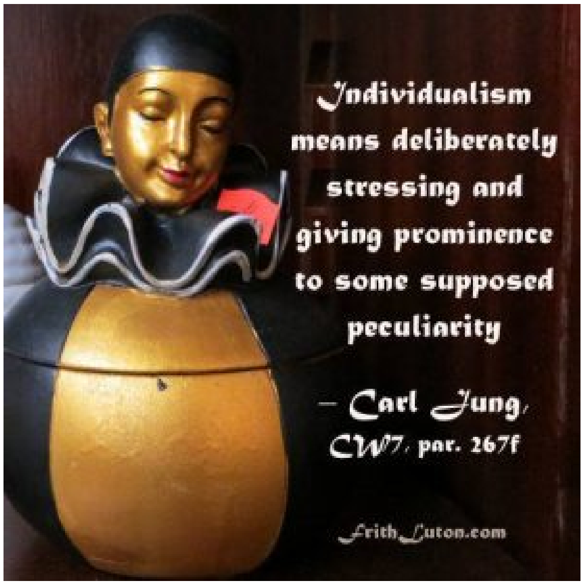
The PUER typically leads a provisional life, due to the fear of being caught in a situation from which it might not be possible to escape. – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com



Attitude is an individual phenomenon that eludes scientific investigation. In actual experience, however, certain typical attitudes can be distinguished. … thinking, feeling, sensation, and intuitive attitude. – Carl Jung, CW 6, pars. 690f.

FrithLuton.com



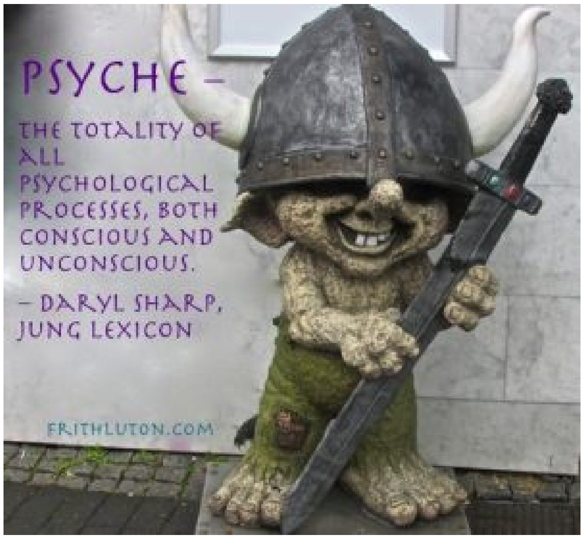
Individualism means deliberately stressing and giving prominence to some supposed peculiarity

– Carl Jung, CW7, par. 267f

FrithLuton.com

An extreme state of unconsciousness is characterized by the predominance of compulsive instinctual processes – Carl Jung, CW 8, par. 249

FrithLuton.com



PSYCHE –

THE TOTALITY OF ALL PSYCHOLOGICAL PROCESSES, BOTH CONSCIOUS AND UNCONSCIOUS.

– DARYL SHARP, JUNG LEXICON

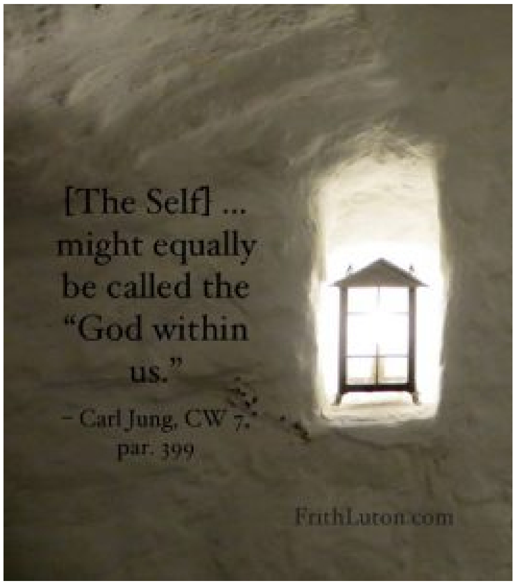
FRITHLUTON.COM

[If] a change from one milieu to another brings about a striking alteration of personality, …

Which is the true character, the real personality? …

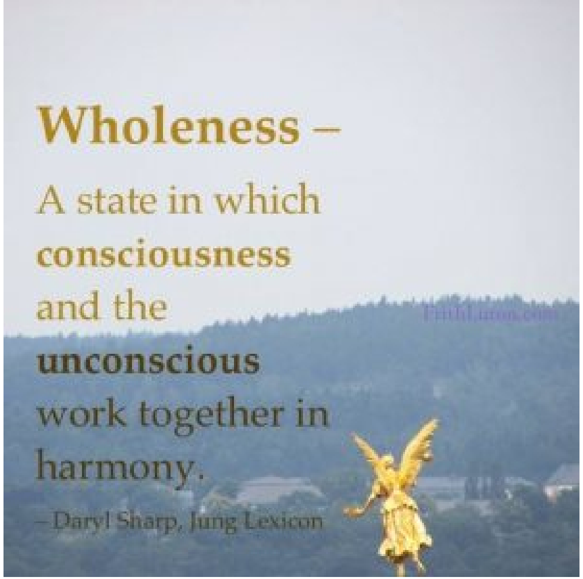
– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 798f.

FrithLuton.com



[The Self] … might equally be called the "God within us."

– Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 399



Wholeness –

A state in which consciousness and the unconscious work together in harmony.

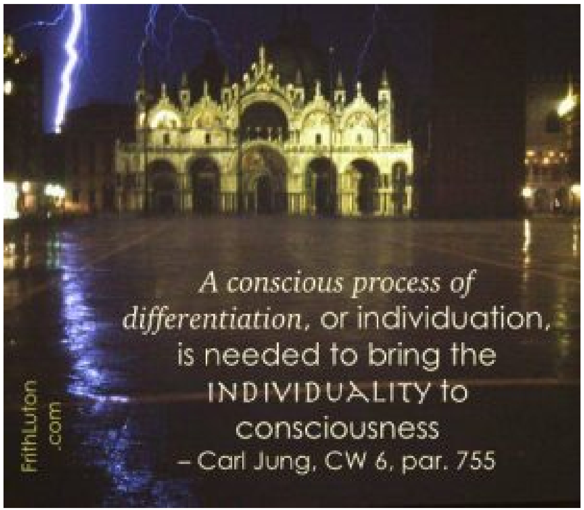
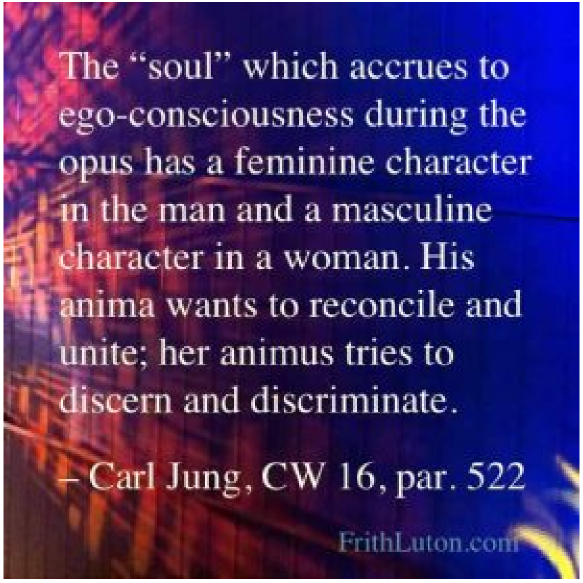
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon



A conscious process of differentiation, or individuation, is needed to bring the INDIVIDUALITY to consciousness

– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 755



The "soul" which accrues to ego-consciousness during the opus has a feminine character in the man and a masculine character in a woman. His anima wants to reconcile and unite; her animus tries to discern and discriminate.

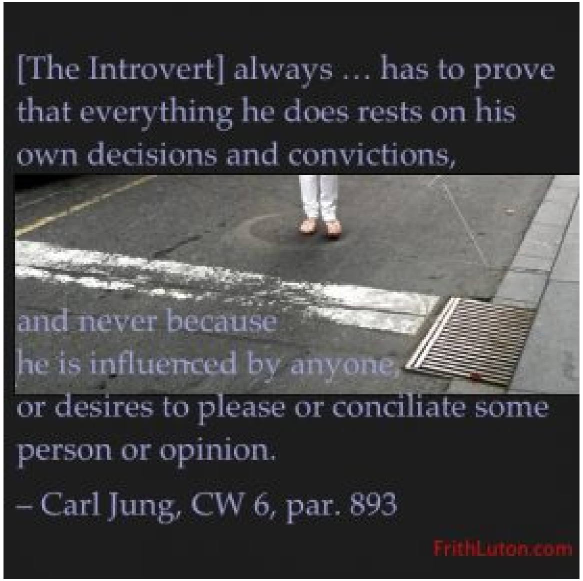
– Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 522

"If a plant is to unfold its specific nature to the full, it must first be able to grow in the soil in which it is planted."

– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 761

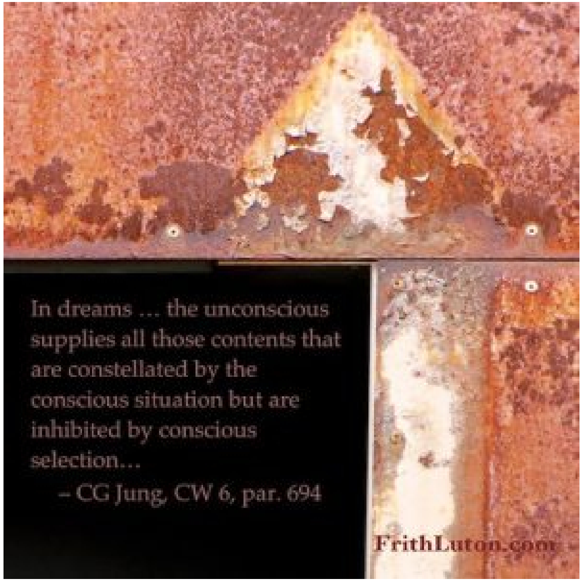
FrithLuton.com

"If a plant is to unfold its specific nature to the full, it must first be able to grow in the soil in which it is planted."
– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 761
FrithLuton.com

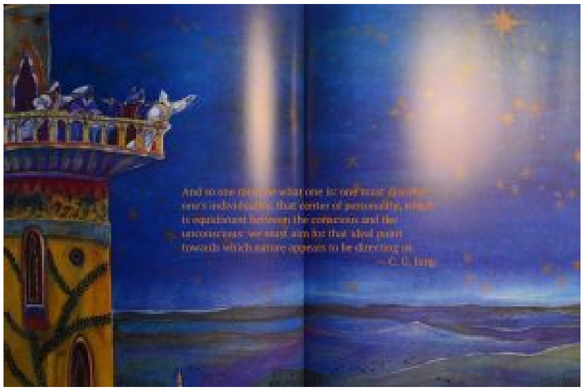


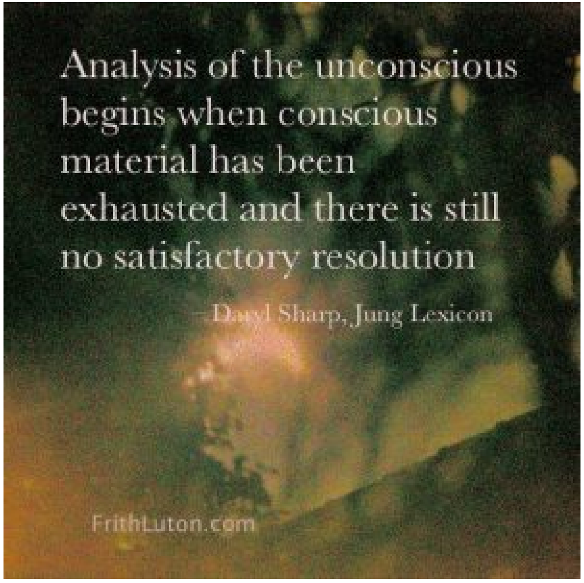
[The Introvert] always … has to prove that everything he does rests on his own decisions and convictions, and never because he is influenced by anyone or desires to please or conciliate some person or opinion.

– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 893
FrithLuton.com

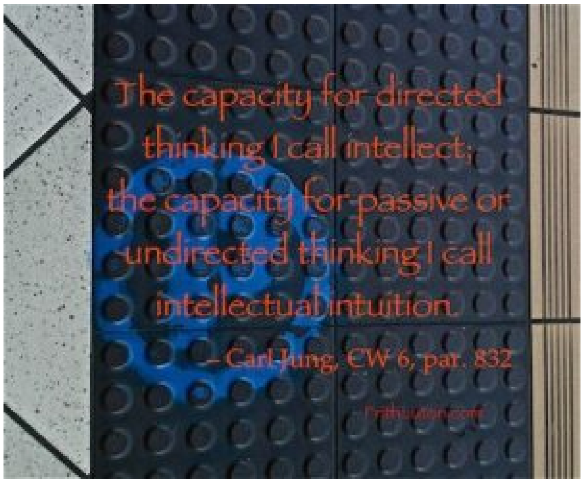


In dreams … the unconscious supplies all those contents that are constellated by the conscious situation but are inhibited by conscious selection…
– CG Jung, CW 6, par. 694
FrithLuton.com

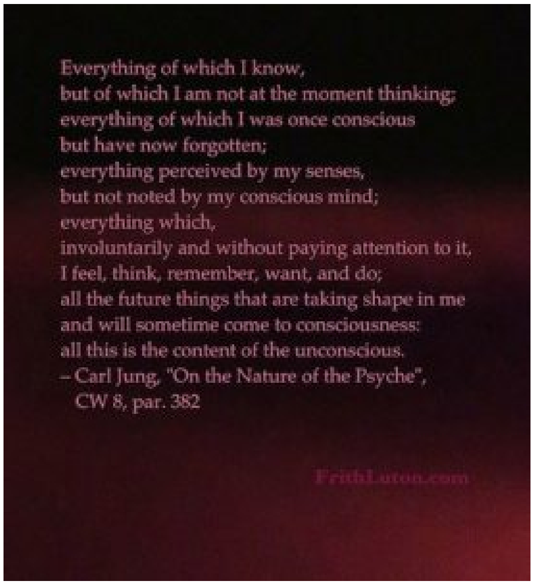




Analysis of the unconscious begins when conscious material has been exhausted and there is still no satisfactory resolution
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon
FrithLuton.com

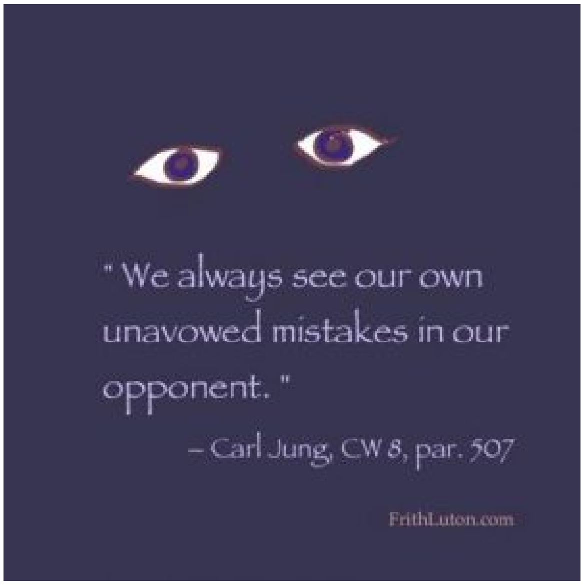


The capacity for directed thinking I call intellect; the capacity for passive or undirected thinking I call intellectual intuition.
– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 832
FrithLuton.com



Everything of which I know,
but of which I am not at the moment thinking;
everything of which I was once conscious
but have now forgotten;
everything perceived by my senses,
but not noted by my conscious mind;
everything which,
involuntarily and without paying attention to it,
I feel, think, remember, want, and do;
all the future things that are taking shape in me
and will sometime come to consciousness:
all this is the content of the unconscious.
– Carl Jung, "On the Nature of the Psyche",
CW 8, par. 382

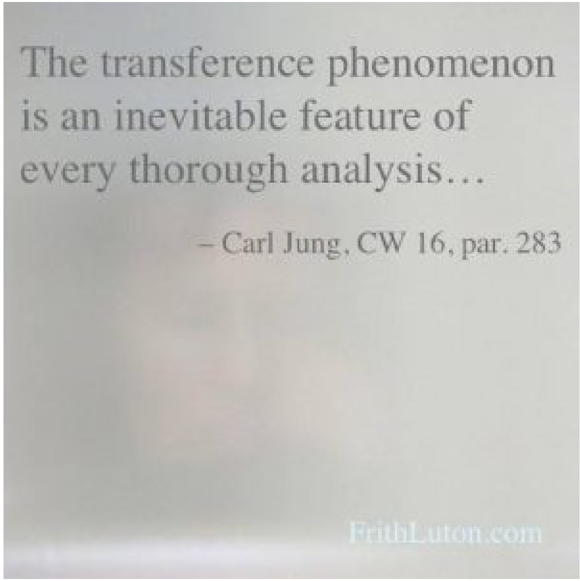
FrithLuton.com



" We always see our own unavowed mistakes in our opponent. "

– Carl Jung, CW 8, par. 507

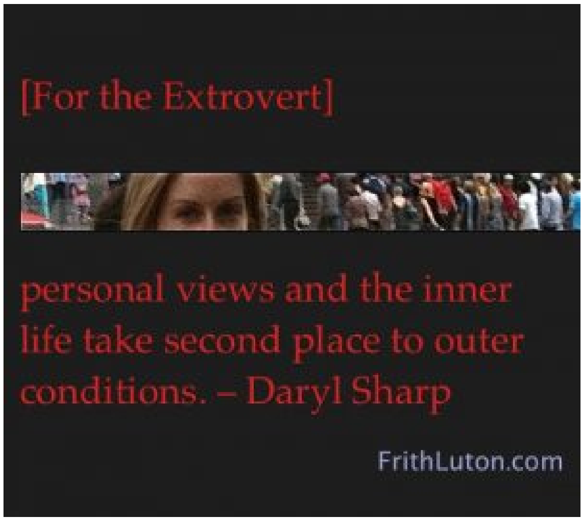
FrithLuton.com



The transference phenomenon is an inevitable feature of every thorough analysis…

– Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 283

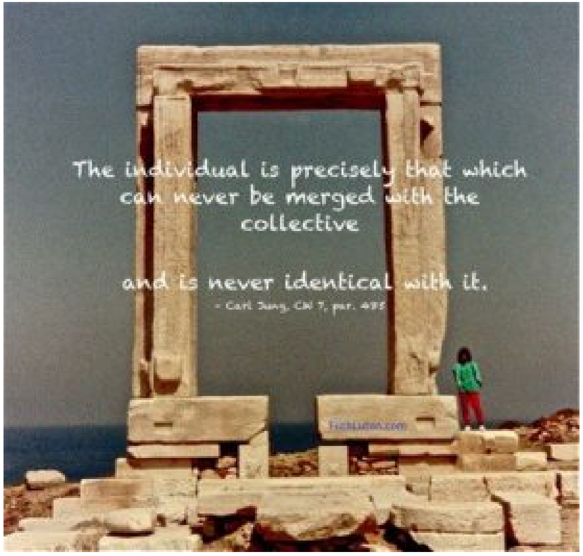
FrithLuton.com



[For the Extrovert]

personal views and the inner life take second place to outer conditions. – Daryl Sharp

FrithLuton.com



The individual is precisely that which can never be merged with the collective and is never identical with it.

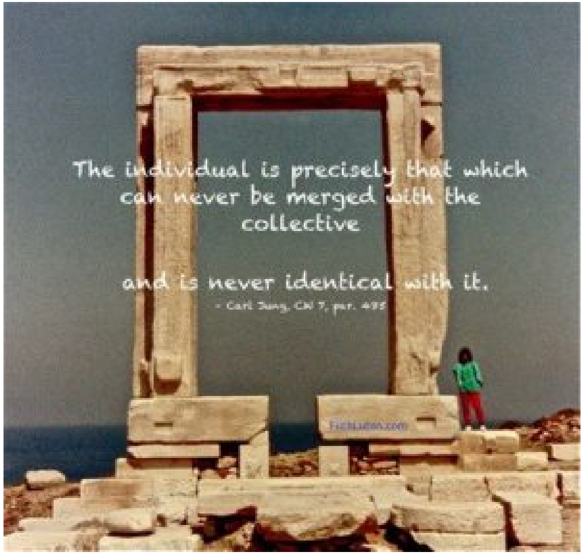
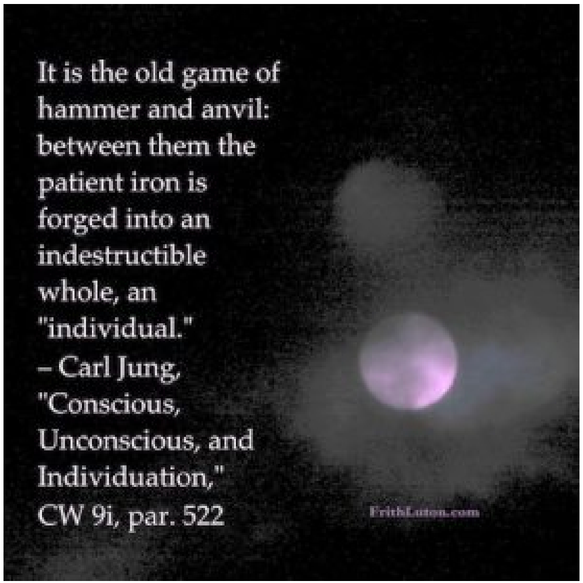
– Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 485



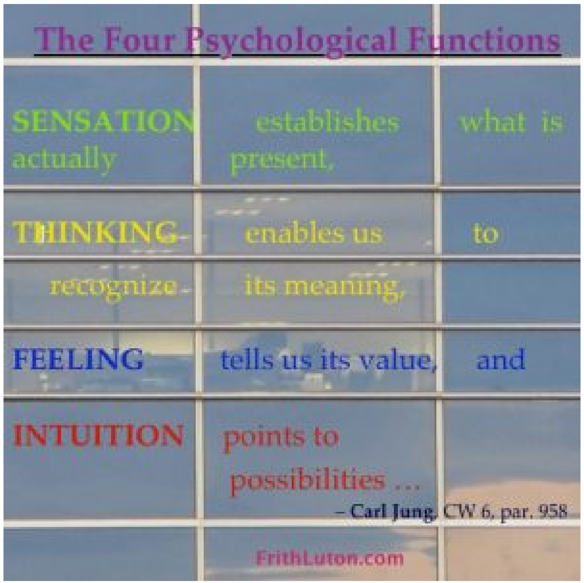
The individual is precisely that which can never be merged with the collective

and is never identical with it.
– Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 485



It is the old game of hammer and anvil: between them the patient iron is forged into an indestructible whole, an "individual."
– Carl Jung, "Conscious, Unconscious, and Individuation," CW 9i, par. 522

FrithLuton.com



The Four Psychological Functions

SENSATION establishes what is actually present,

THINKING enables us to recognize its meaning,

FEELING tells us its value, and INTUITION points to possibilities …

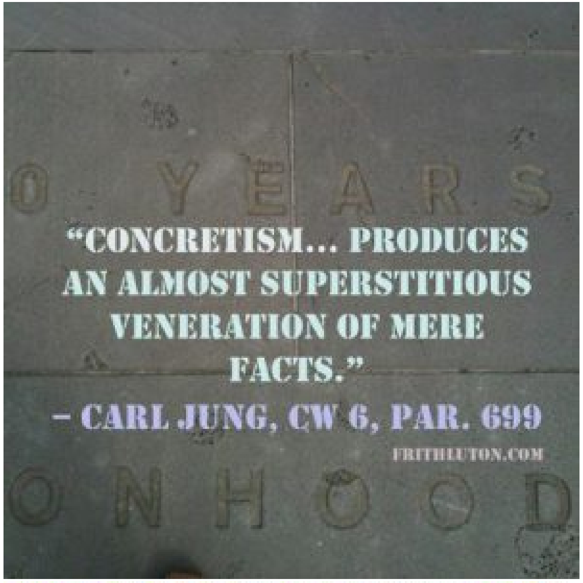
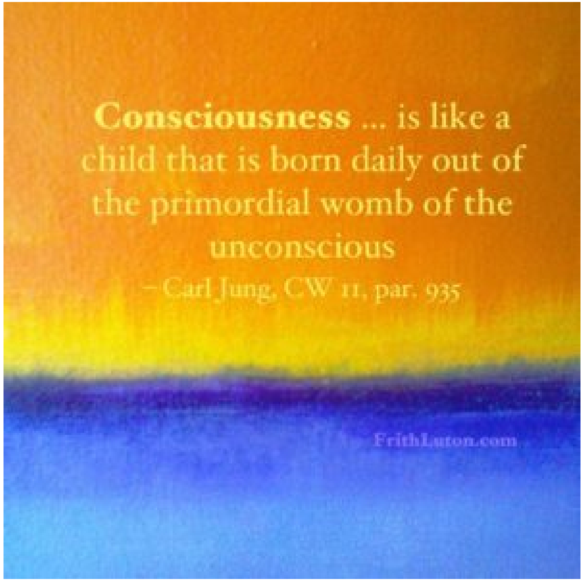
– Carl Jung, CW 6, par. 958

FrithLuton.com



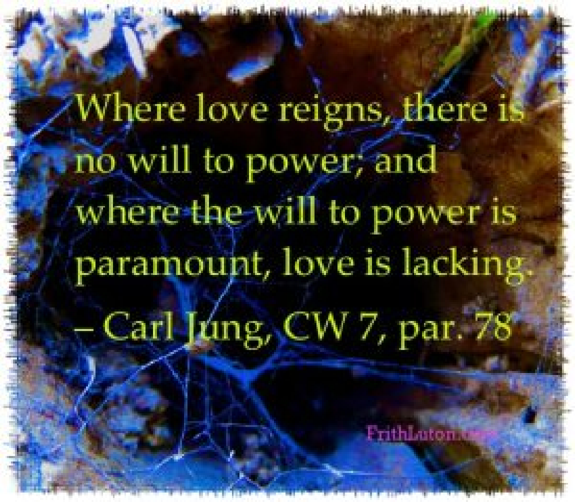
"CONCRETISM… PRODUCES AN ALMOST SUPERSTITIOUS VENERATION OF MERE FACTS."
– CARL JUNG, CW 6, PAR. 699

FRITHLUTON.COM
O YEARS
ONHOOD



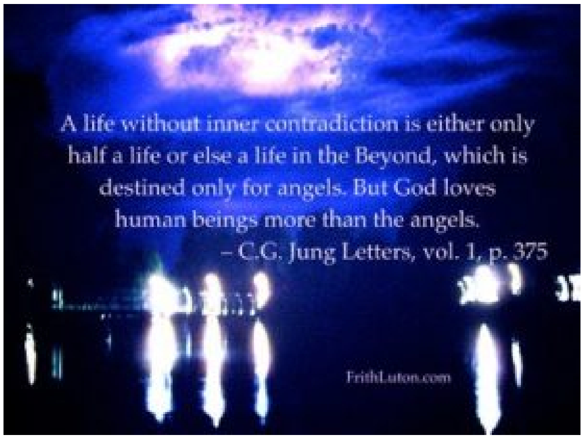
Consciousness … is like a child that is born daily out of the primordial womb of the unconscious
– Carl Jung, CW 11, par. 935

FrithLuton.com



Where love reigns, there is no will to power; and where the will to power is paramount, love is lacking.
– Carl Jung, CW 7, par. 78

FrithLuton.com



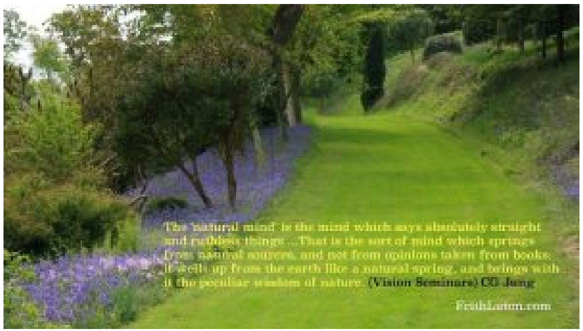
A life without inner contradiction is either only half a life or else a life in the Beyond, which is destined only for angels. But God loves human beings more than the angels.
– C.G. Jung Letters, vol. 1, p. 375

FrithLuton.com

FrithLuton.com

sensation:

the sensible perception of reality
– Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 486



The 'natural mind' is the mind which says absolutely straight and ruthless things ... That is the sort of mind which springs from natural sources, and not from opinions taken from books; it wells up from the earth like a natural spring, and brings with it the peculiar wisdom of nature. (Vision Seminars) CG Jung

In men, a positive father-complex very often produces a certain credulity with regard to authority ...
– Carl Jung, CW 9i, par. 396

A feeling is as indisputable a reality
as the existence of an idea.
– Carl Jung, CW 16, par. 531

Individuation is a process informed by the archetypal ideal of wholeness
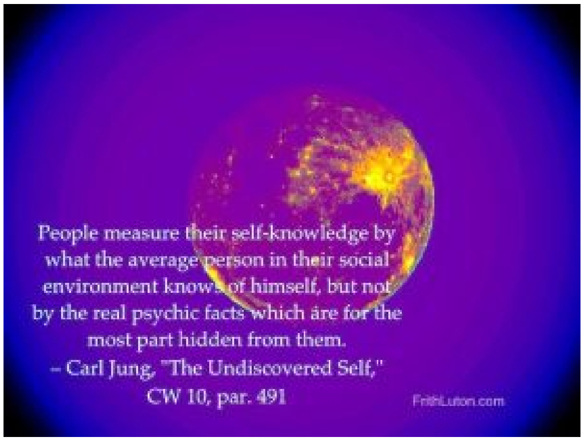
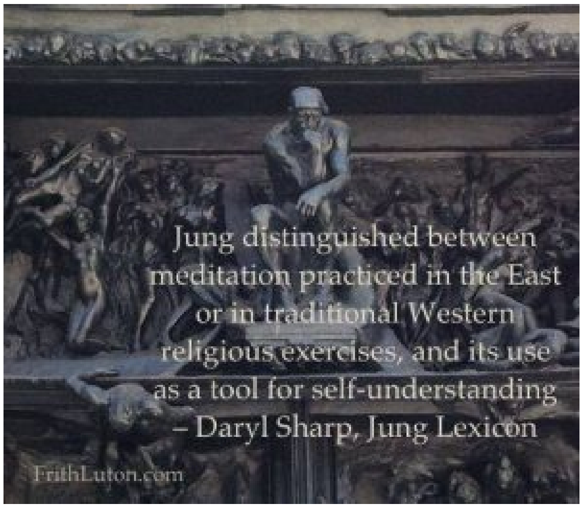
– Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

FrithLuton.com

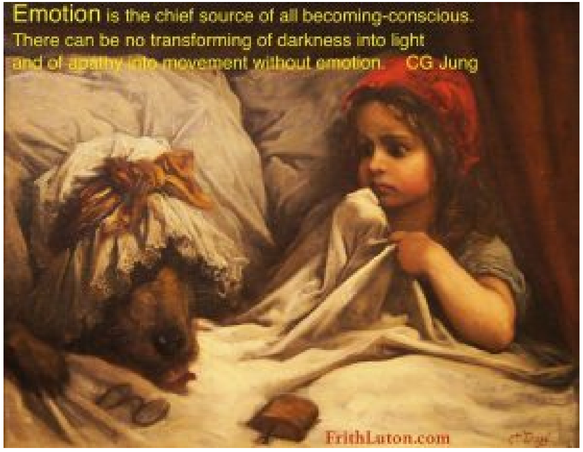


People measure their self-knowledge by what the average person in their social environment knows of himself, but not by the real psychic facts which are for the most part hidden from them.
– Carl Jung, "The Undiscovered Self,"
CW 10, par. 491



Jung distinguished between meditation practiced in the East or in traditional Western religious exercises, and its use as a tool for self-understanding – Daryl Sharp, Jung Lexicon

CG Jung was once walking in his garden with a woman patient. As they wandered beyond the garden into light woodland, she spoke about her first important childhood dream, which she said had made an "everlasting" impression. "I am in my childhood home, and a spectral fox is coming down the stairs." She paused and put her hand on Jung's arm, as at this moment a fox trotted out of the trees and padded softly along the path in front of them for several minutes. Jung noted that "the animal behaved as if it were a partner in the human situation."

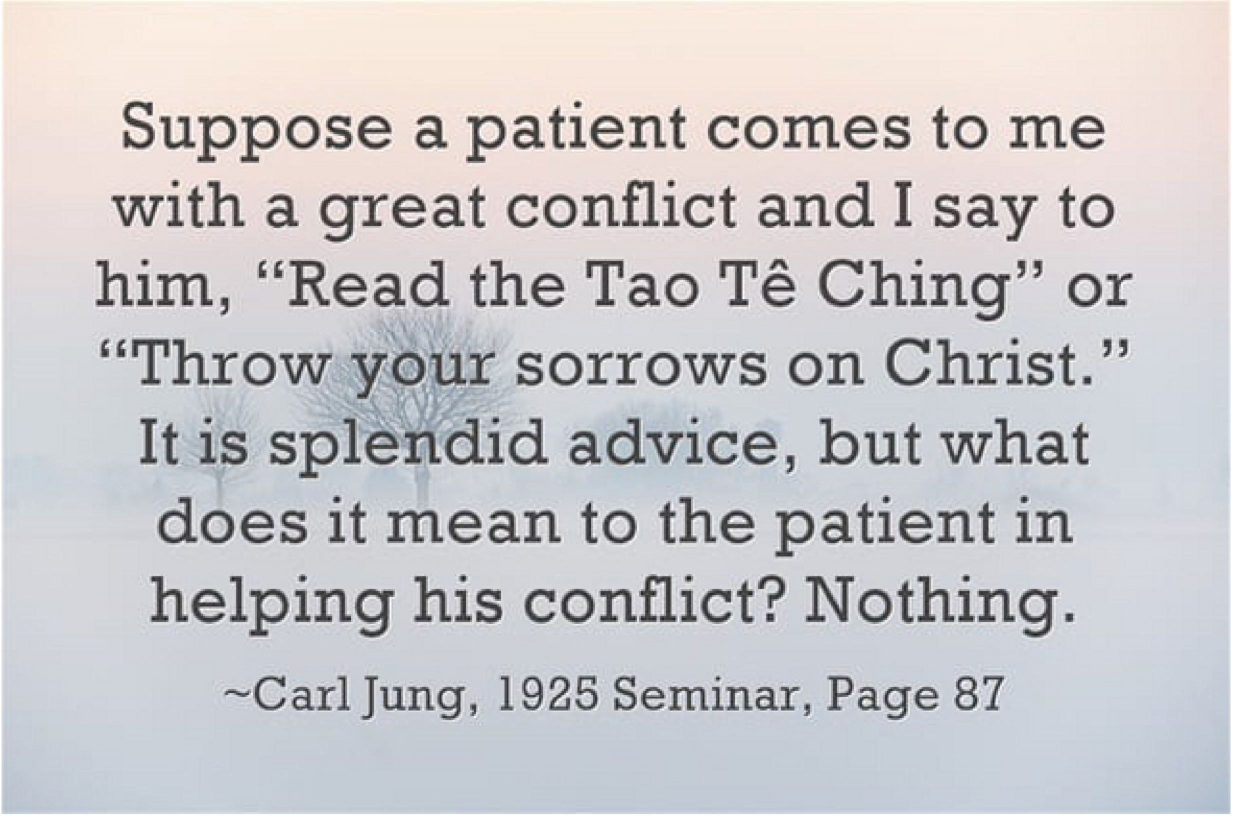


Emotion is the chief source of all becoming-conscious. There can be no transforming of darkness into light and of apathy into movement without emotion. CG Jung

1. `https://frithluton.com/`

Some Carl Jung Quotations XIV (2019-12-30 05:43)

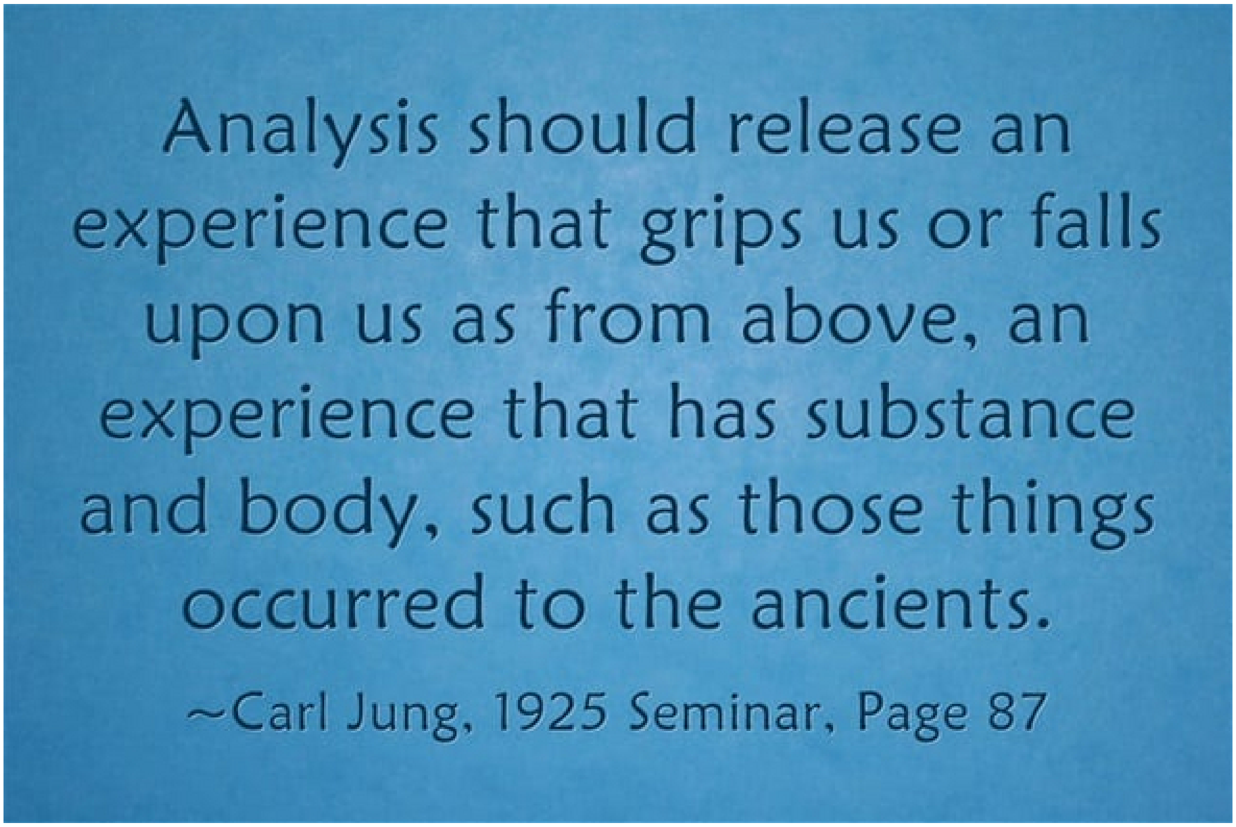
[1]



Suppose a patient comes to me with a great conflict and I say to him, “Read the Tao Tê Ching” or “Throw your sorrows on Christ.” It is splendid advice, but what does it mean to the patient in helping his conflict? Nothing.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

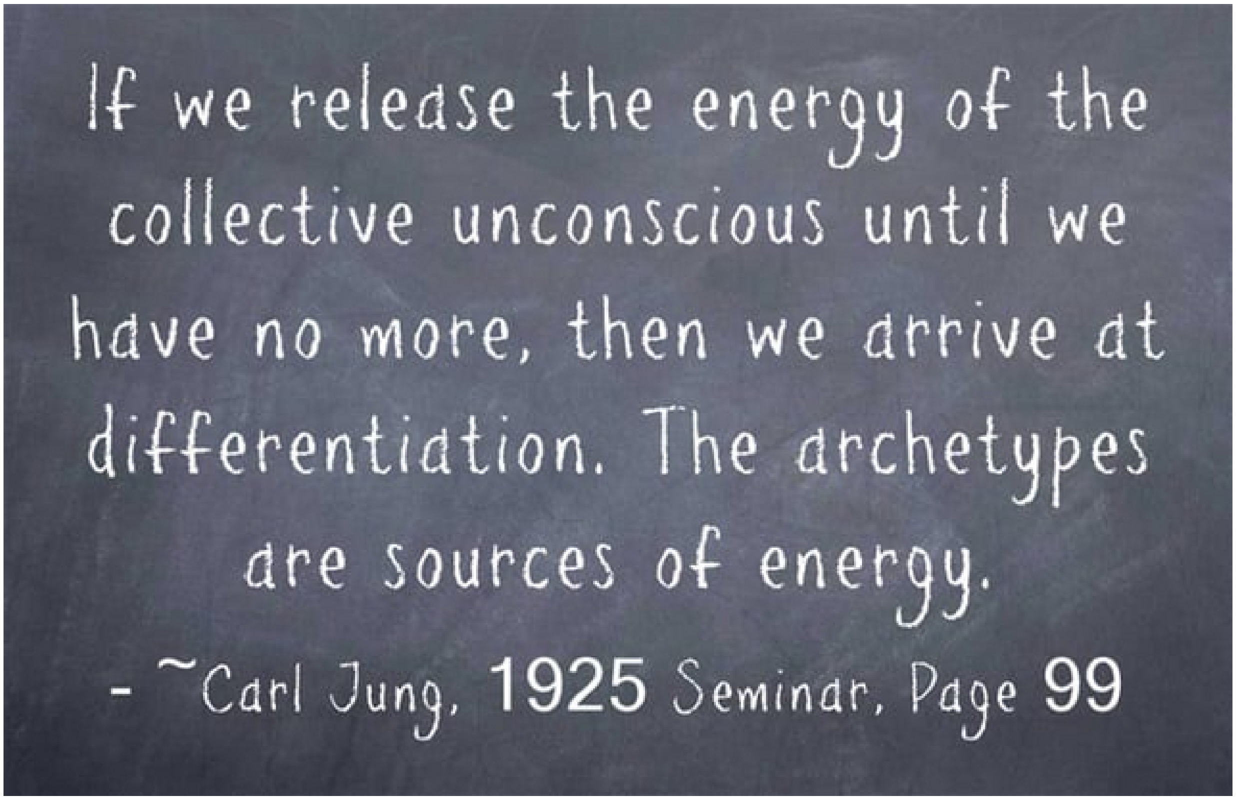
Suppose a patient comes to me with a great conflict and I say to him, “Read the Tao Tê Ching” or “Throw your sorrows on Christ.” It is splendid advice, but what does it mean to the patient in helping his conflict? Nothing. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87



Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body, such as those things occurred to the ancients.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87

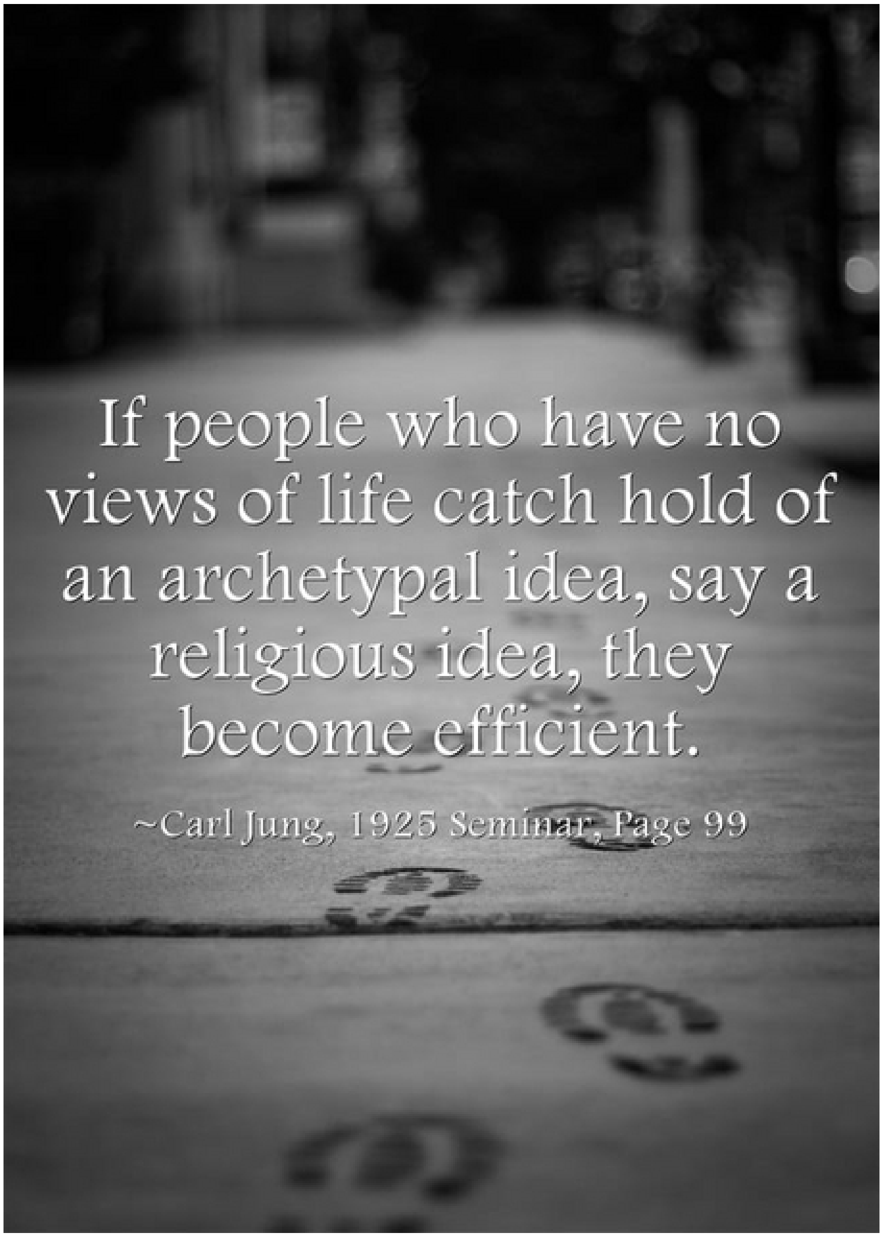
Analysis should release an experience that grips us or falls upon us as from above, an experience that has substance and body, such as those things occurred to the ancients. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 87



If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation. The archetypes are sources of energy.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

If we release the energy of the collective unconscious until we have no more, then we arrive at differentiation. The archetypes are sources of energy. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

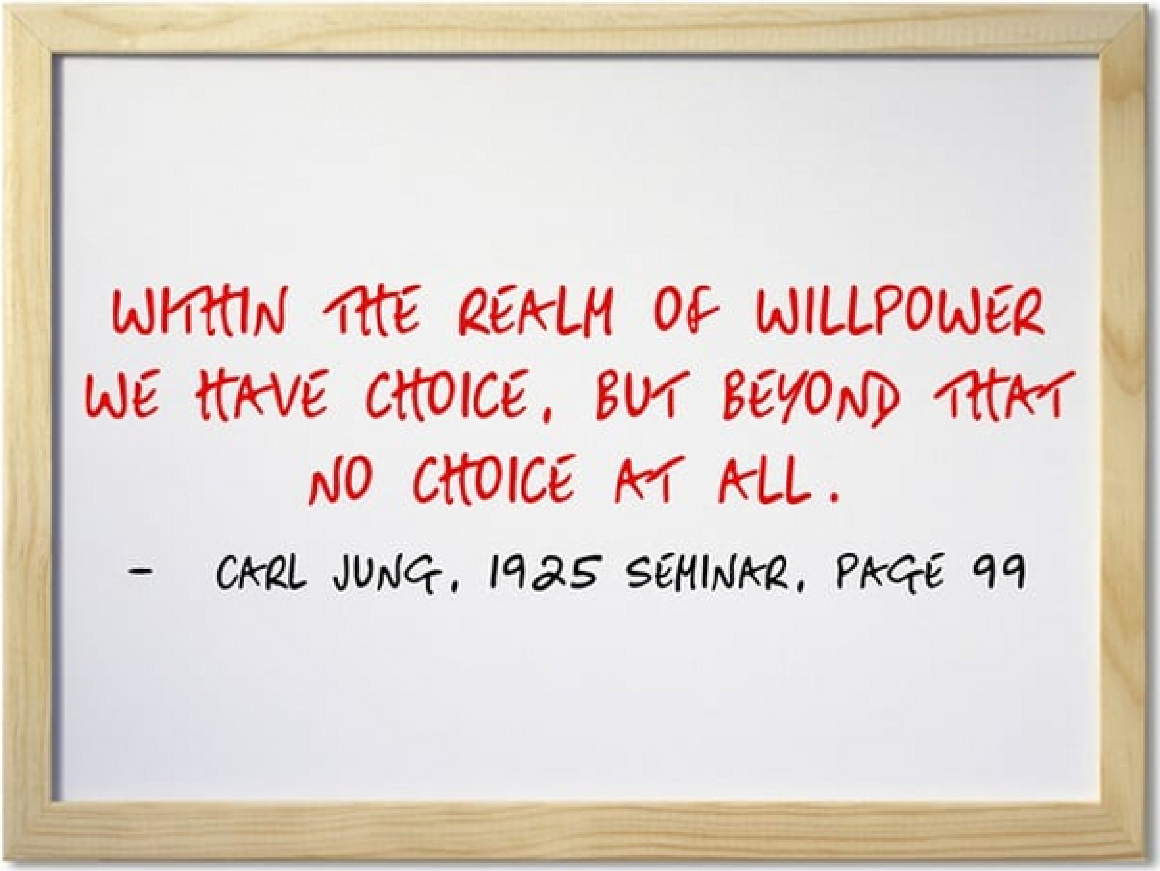


If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

If people who have no views of life catch hold of an archetypal idea, say a religious idea, they become efficient. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

Moral views do not touch
the collective unconscious.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99

Moral views do not touch the collective unconscious. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99



WITHIN THE REALM OF WILLPOWER
WE HAVE CHOICE, BUT BEYOND THAT NO CHOICE AT ALL.

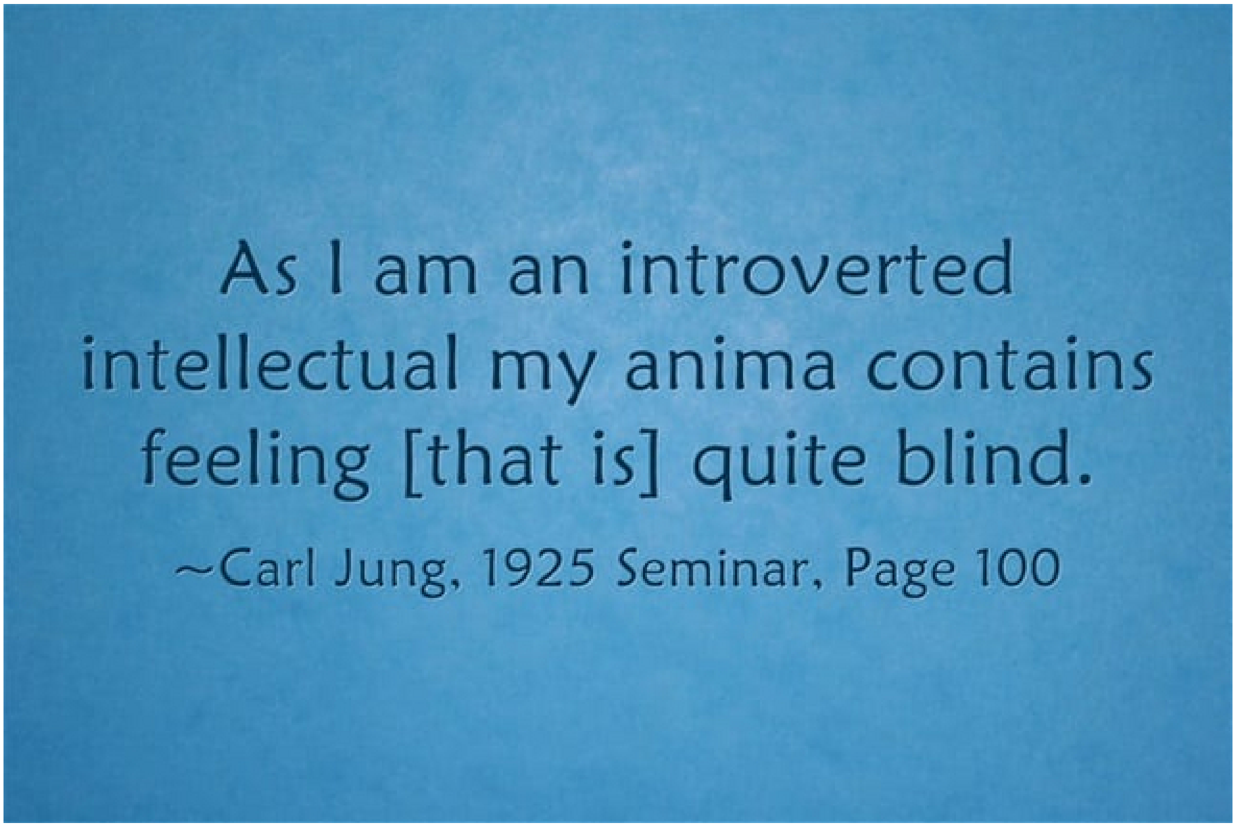
– CARL JUNG, 1925 SEMINAR, PAGE 99

Within the realm of willpower we have choice, but beyond that no choice at all. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 99



As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

As I am an introverted intellectual my anima contains feeling [that is] quite blind. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

In my case the anima contains not only Salome,
but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well.

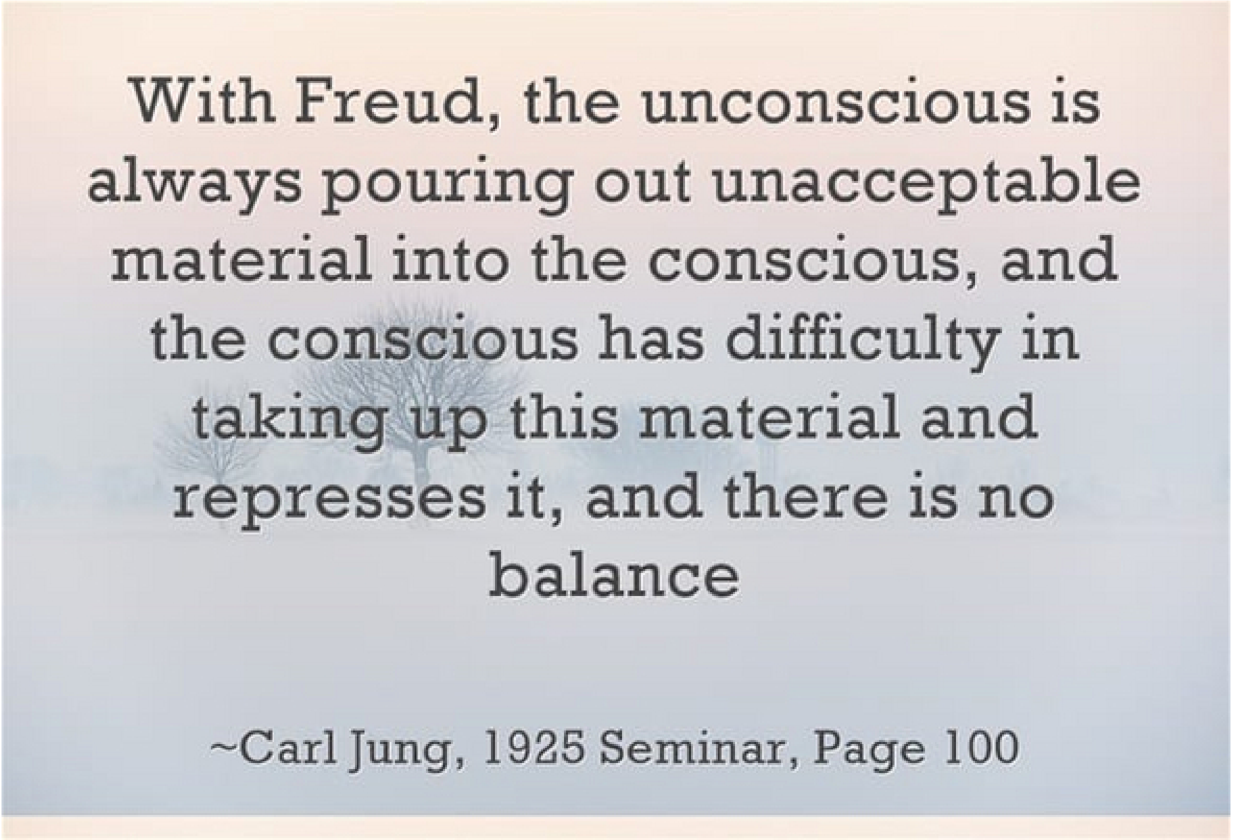
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

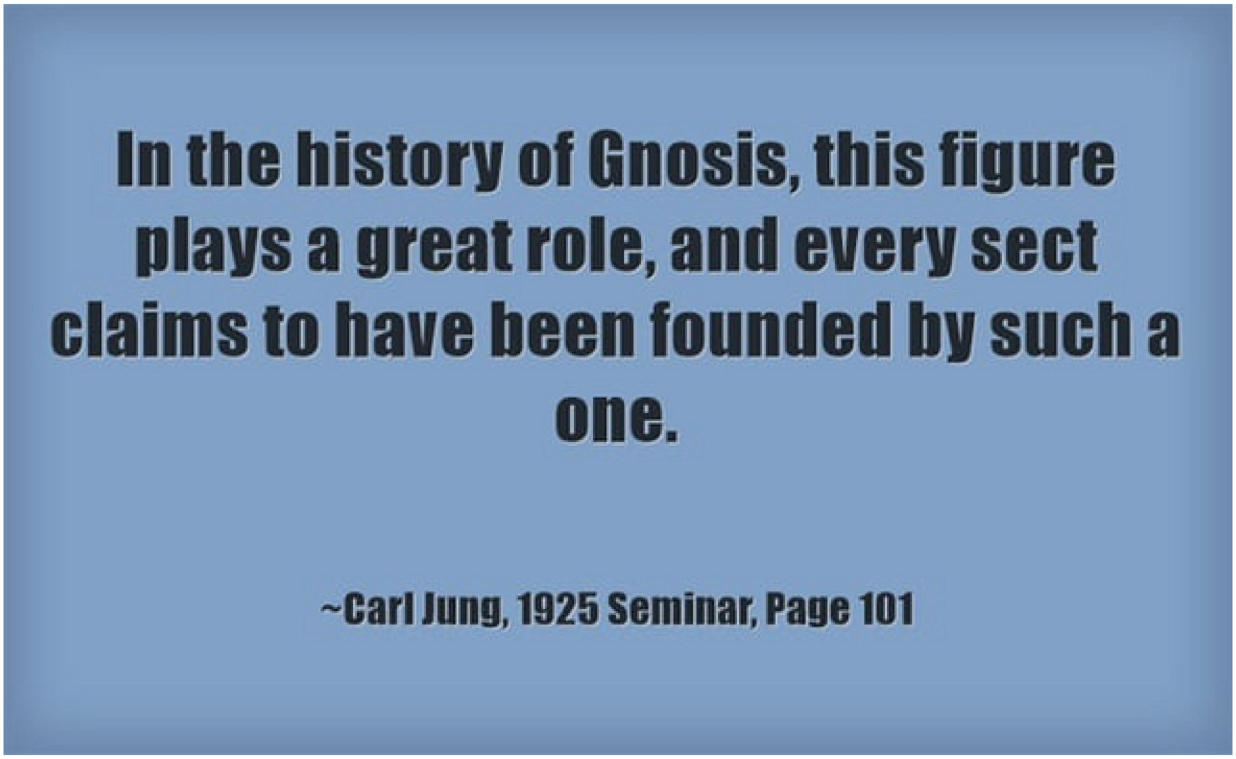
In my case the anima contains not only Salome, but some of the serpent, which is sensation as well. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100



With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100

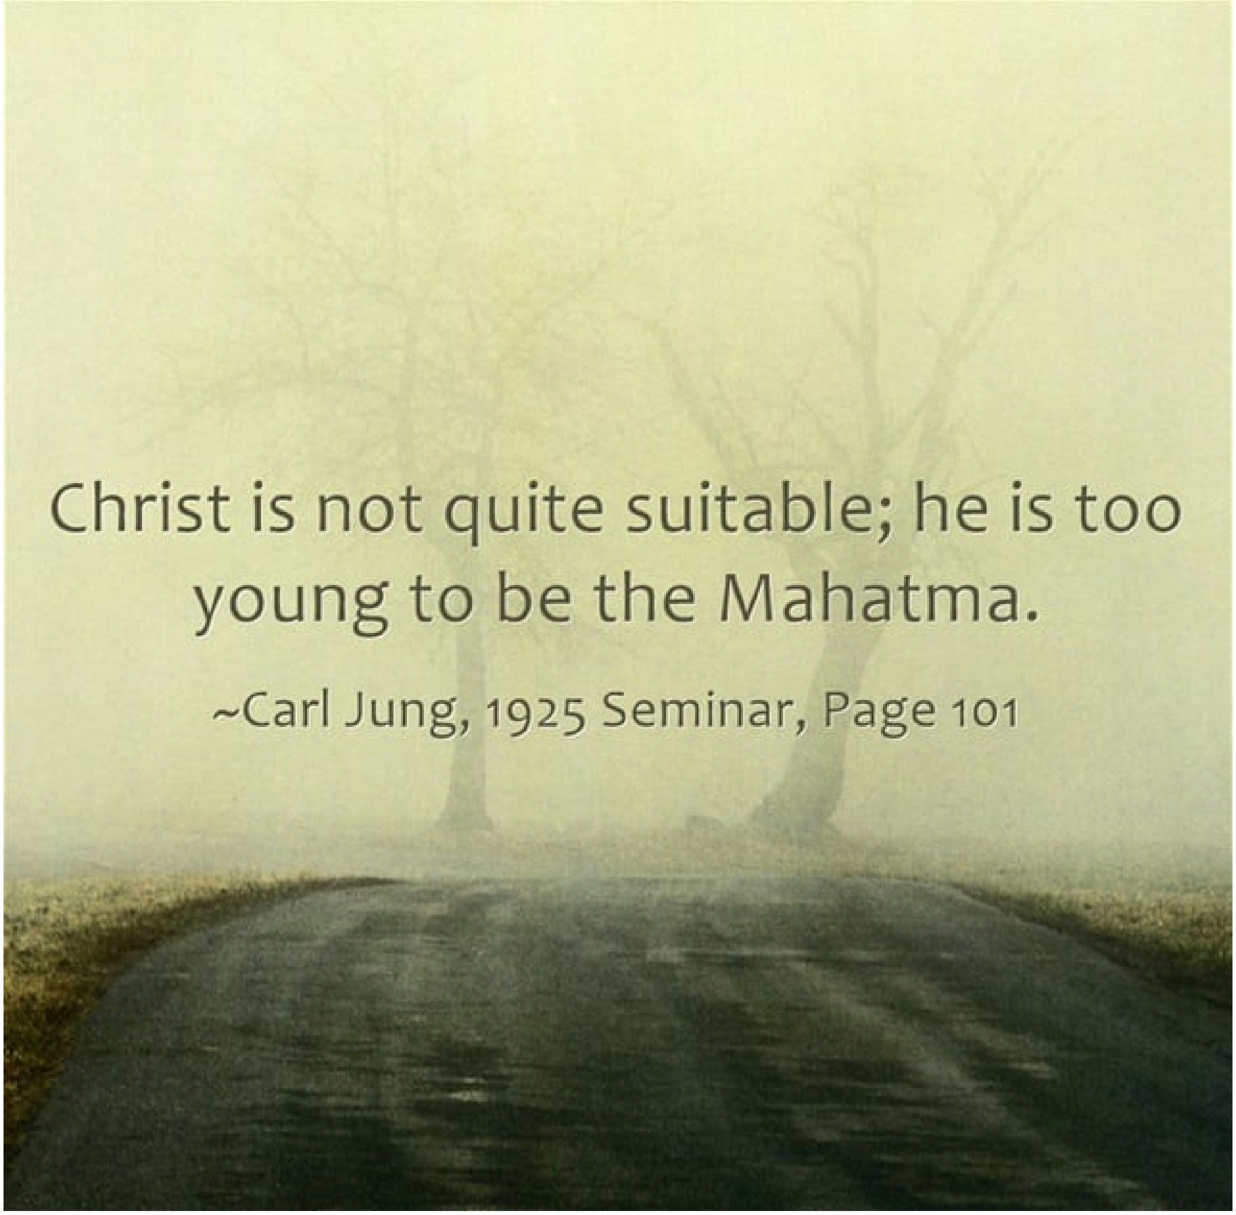
With Freud, the unconscious is always pouring out unacceptable material into the conscious, and the conscious has difficulty in taking up this material and represses it, and there is no balance. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 100



In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.

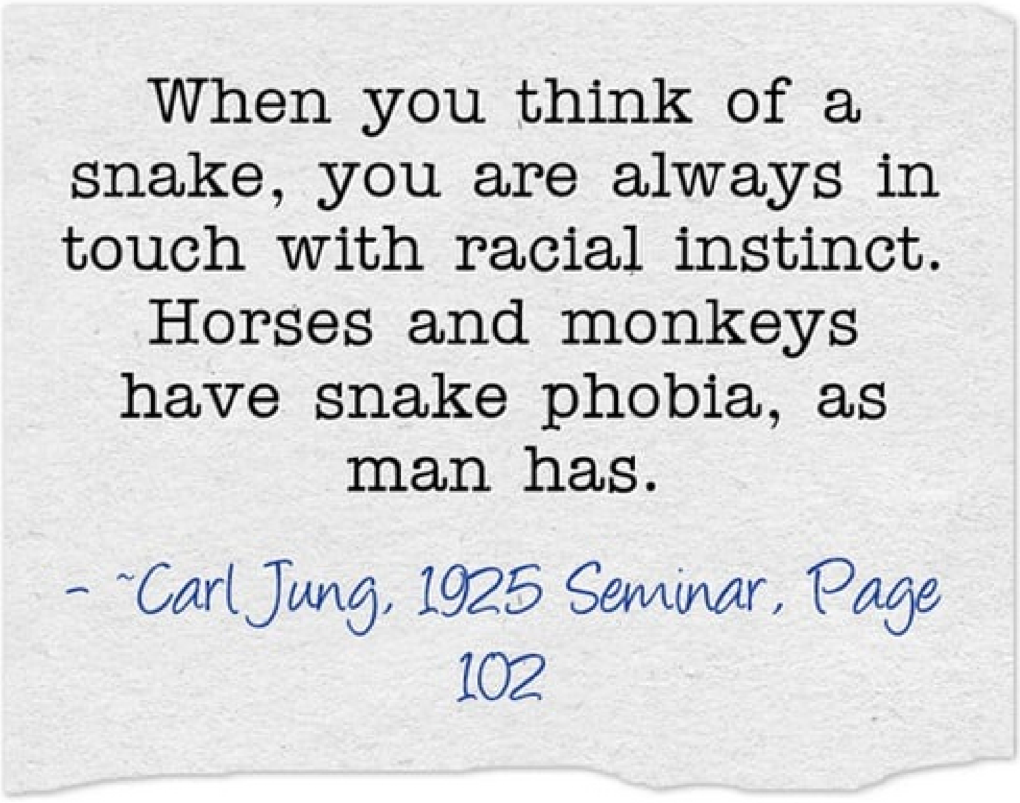
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101

In the history of Gnosis, this figure plays a great role, and every sect claims to have been founded by such a one.
Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101



Christ is not quite suitable; he is too young to be the Mahatma.
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101

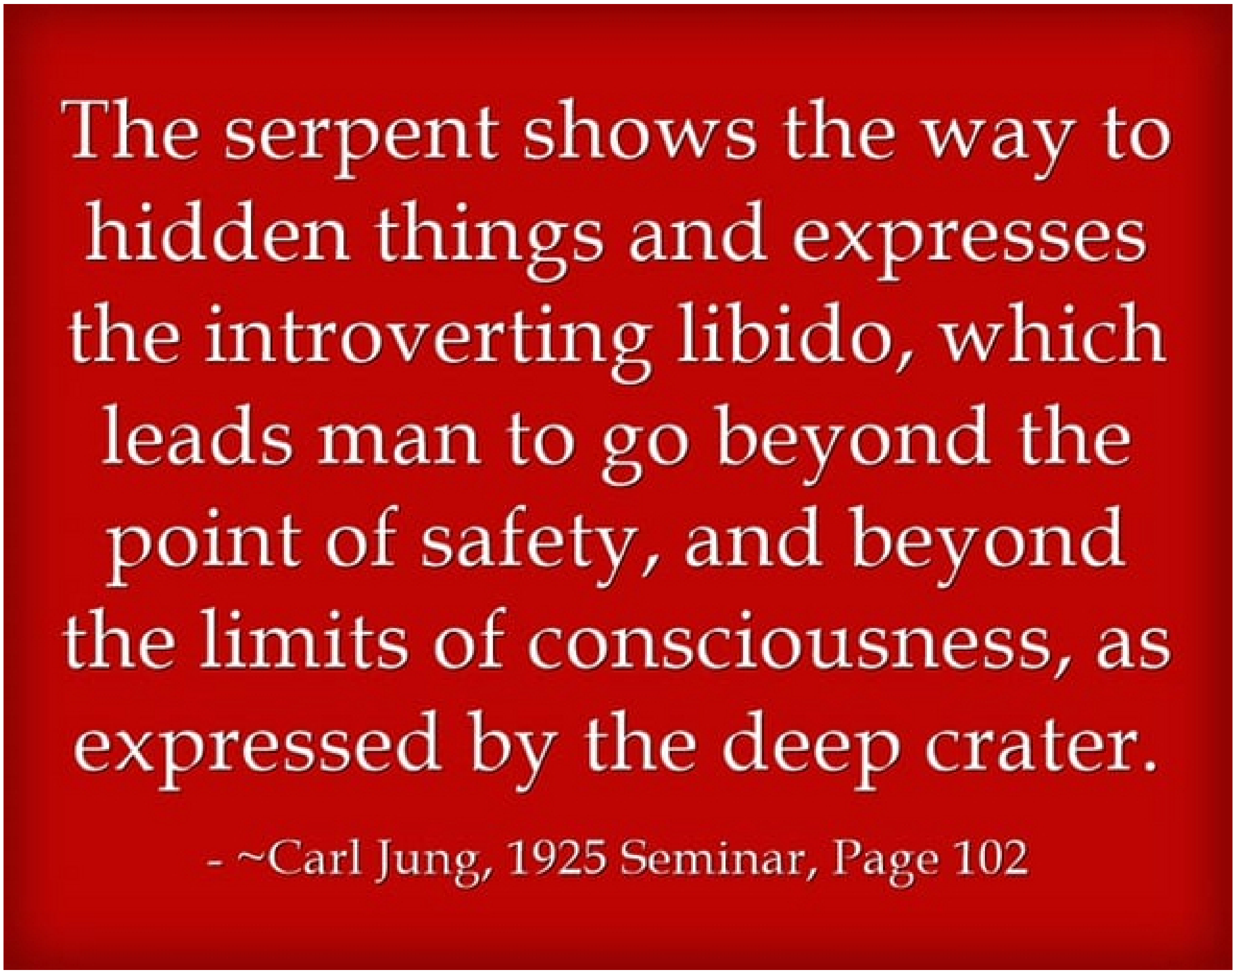
Christ is not quite suitable; he is too young to be the Mahatma. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 101



When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct. Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

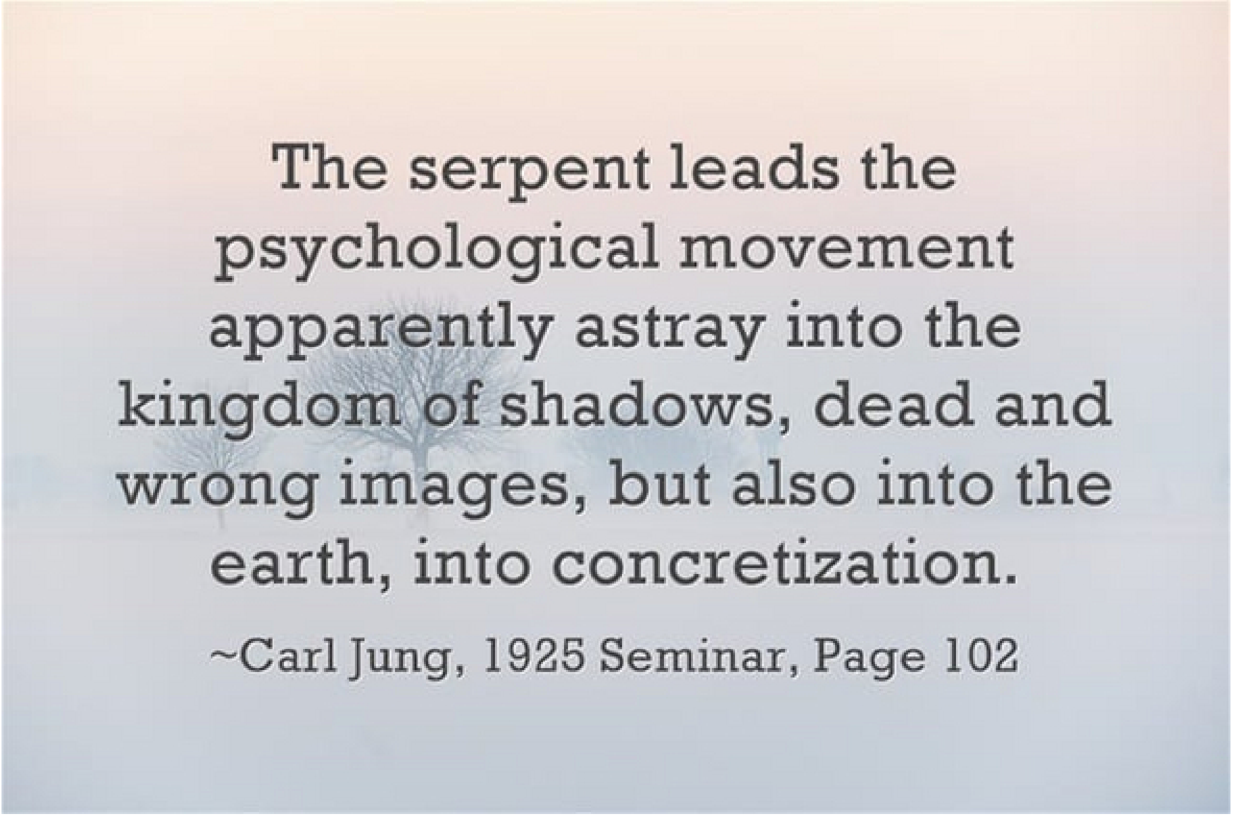
When you think of a snake, you are always in touch with racial instinct. Horses and monkeys have snake phobia, as man has. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

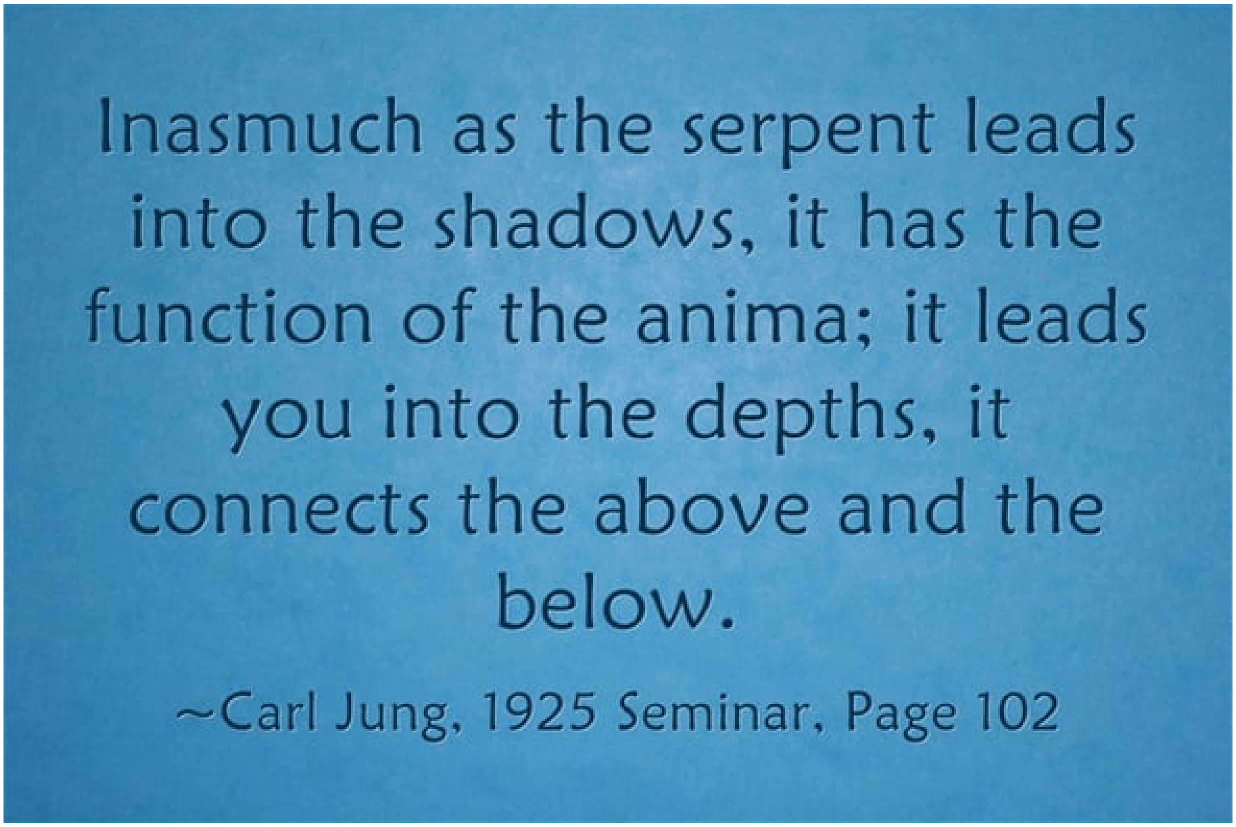
The serpent shows the way to hidden things and expresses the introverting libido, which leads man to go beyond the point of safety, and beyond the limits of consciousness, as expressed by the deep crater. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

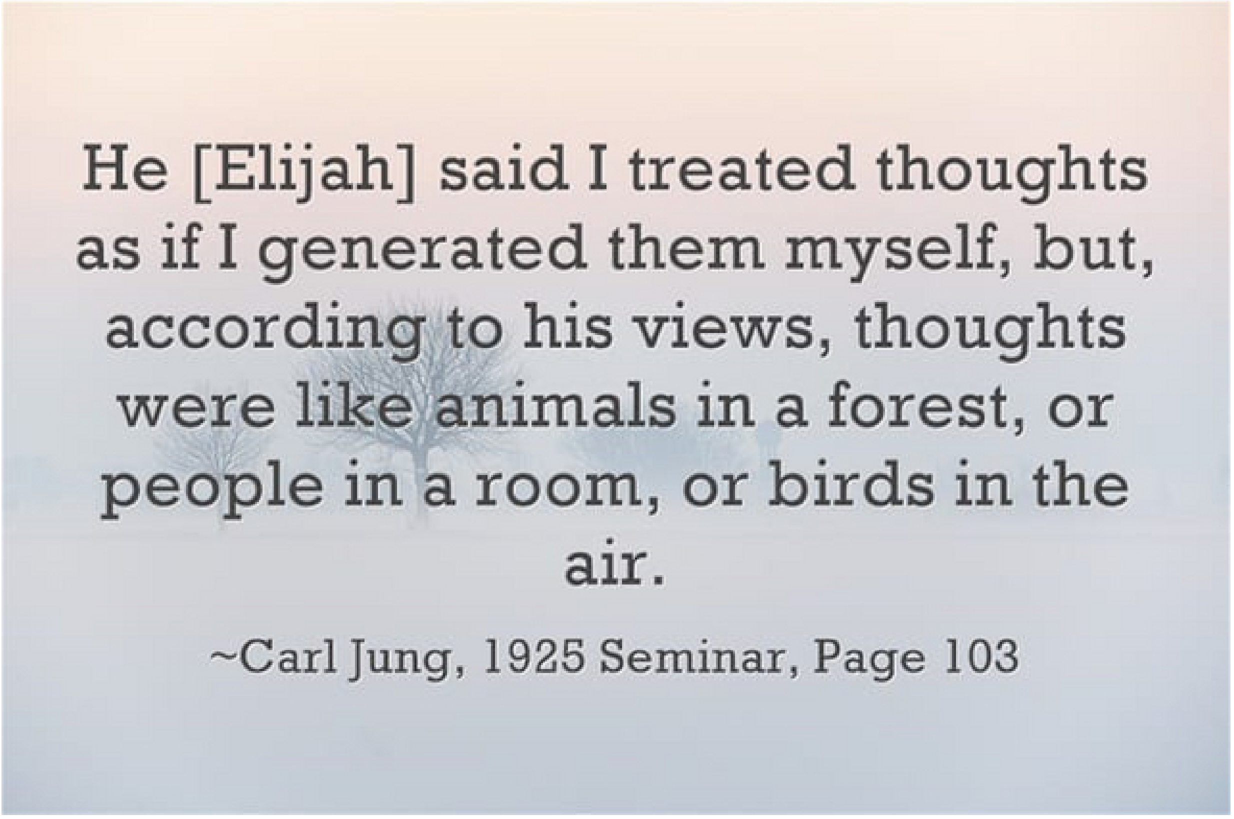
The serpent leads the psychological movement apparently astray into the kingdom of shadows, dead and wrong images, but also into the earth, into concretization. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102

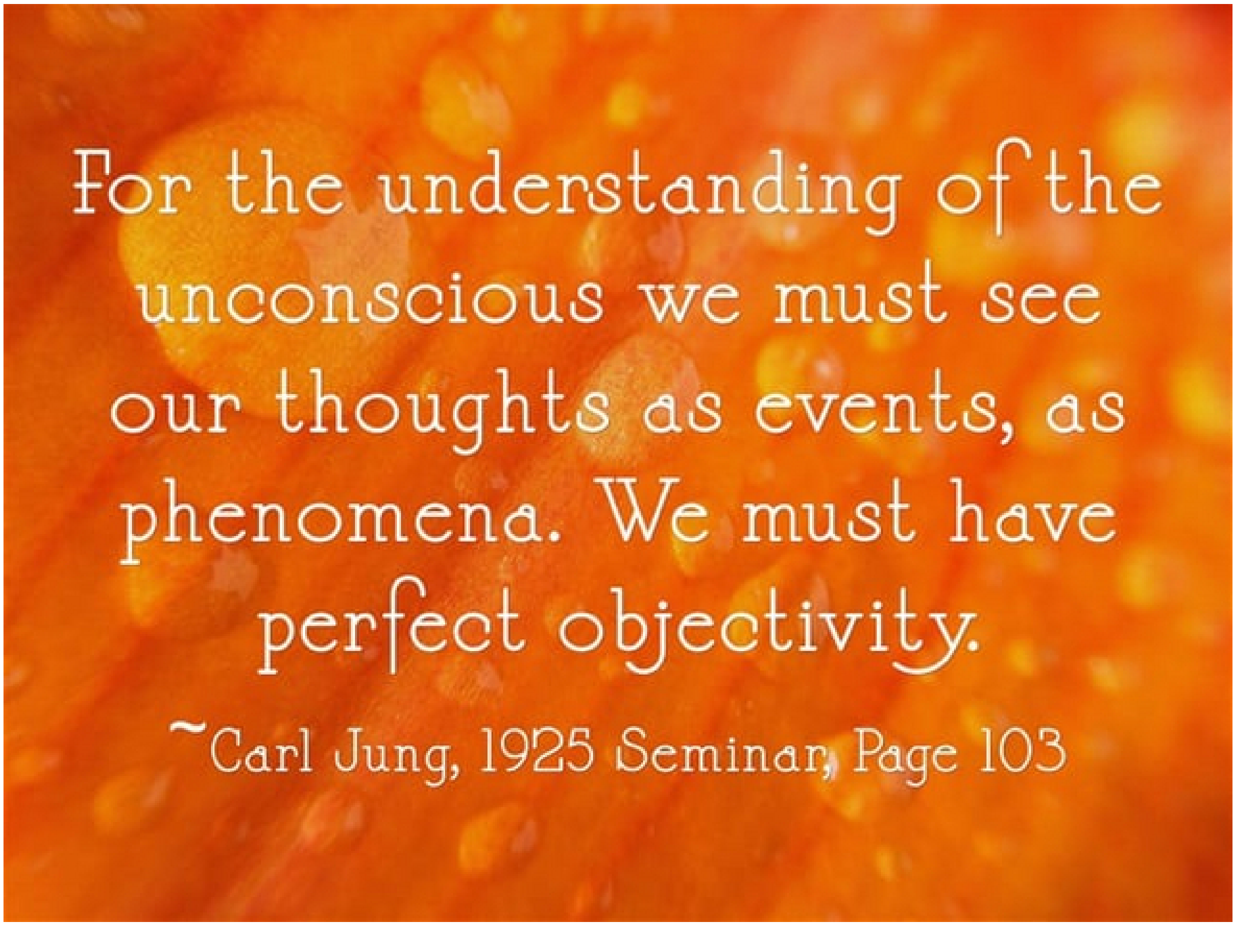
Inasmuch as the serpent leads into the shadows, it has the function of the anima; it leads you into the depths, it connects the above and the below. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 102



He [Elijah] said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103

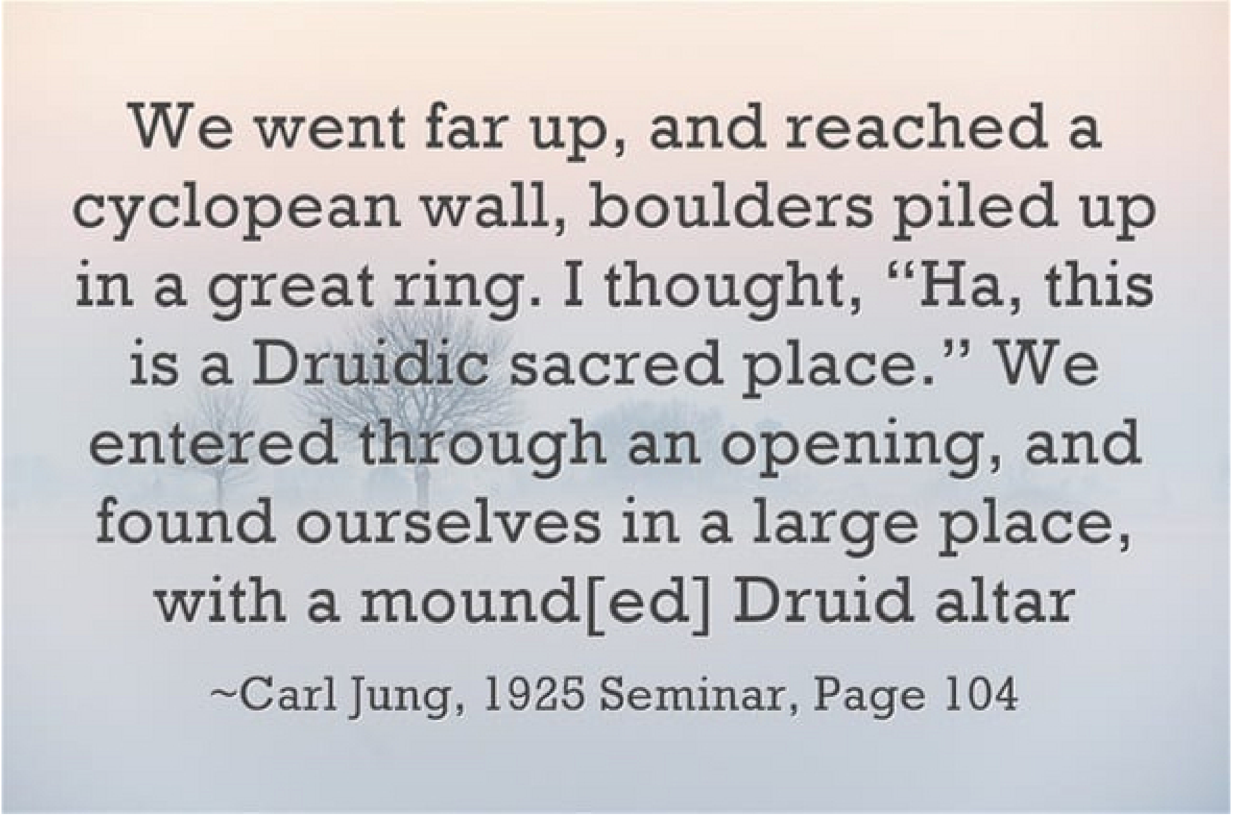
He [Elijah] said I treated thoughts as if I generated them myself, but, according to his views, thoughts were like animals in a forest, or people in a room, or birds in the air. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103



For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena. We must have perfect objectivity.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103

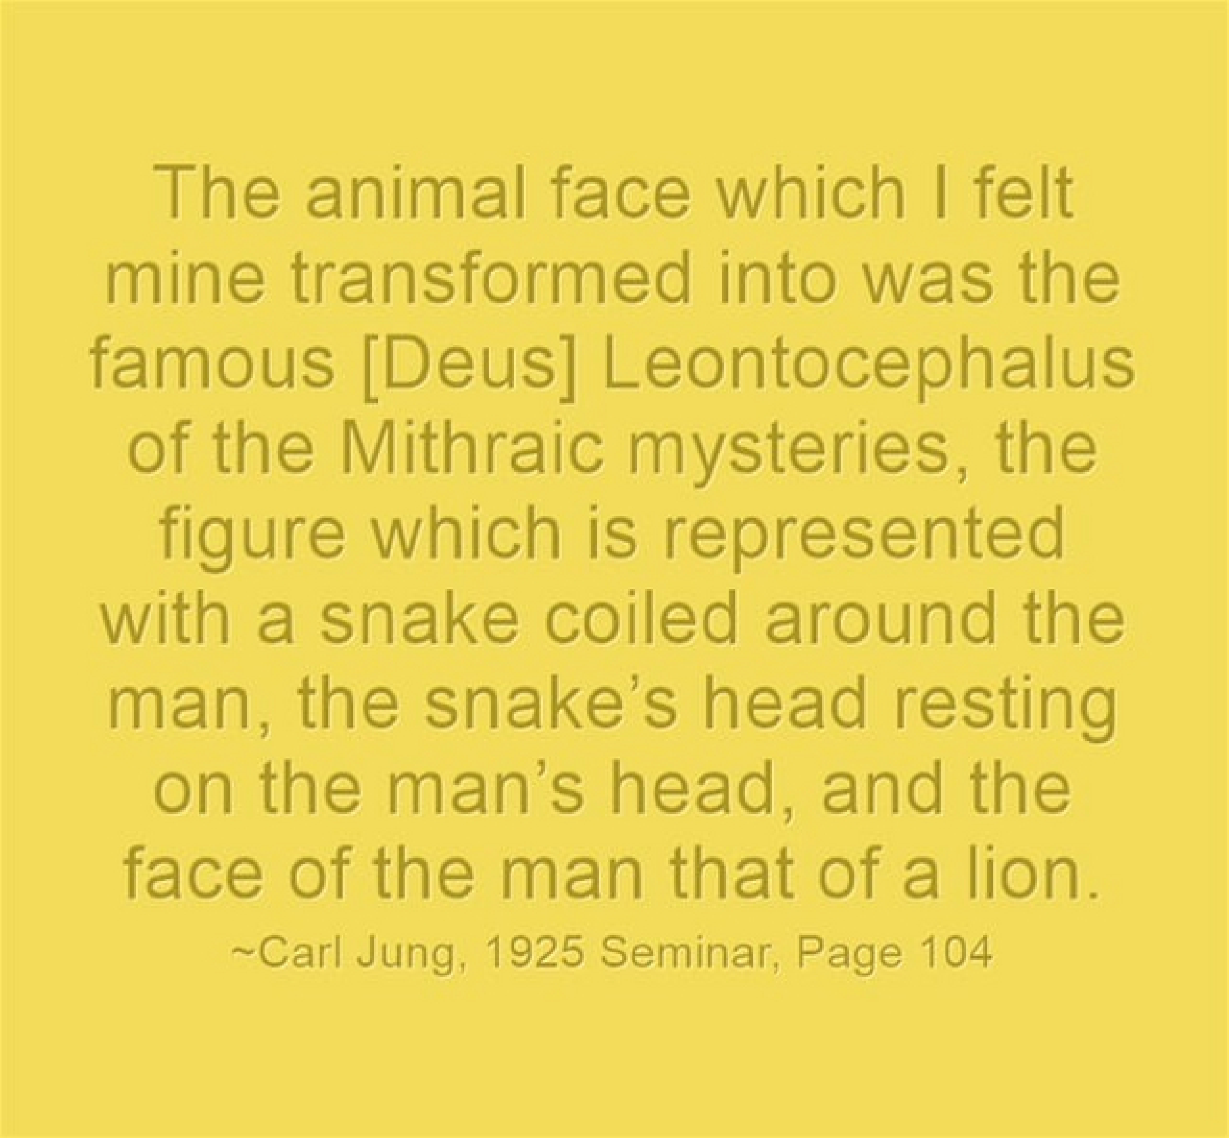
For the understanding of the unconscious we must see our thoughts as events, as phenomena. We must have perfect objectivity. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 103



We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring. I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.” We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104

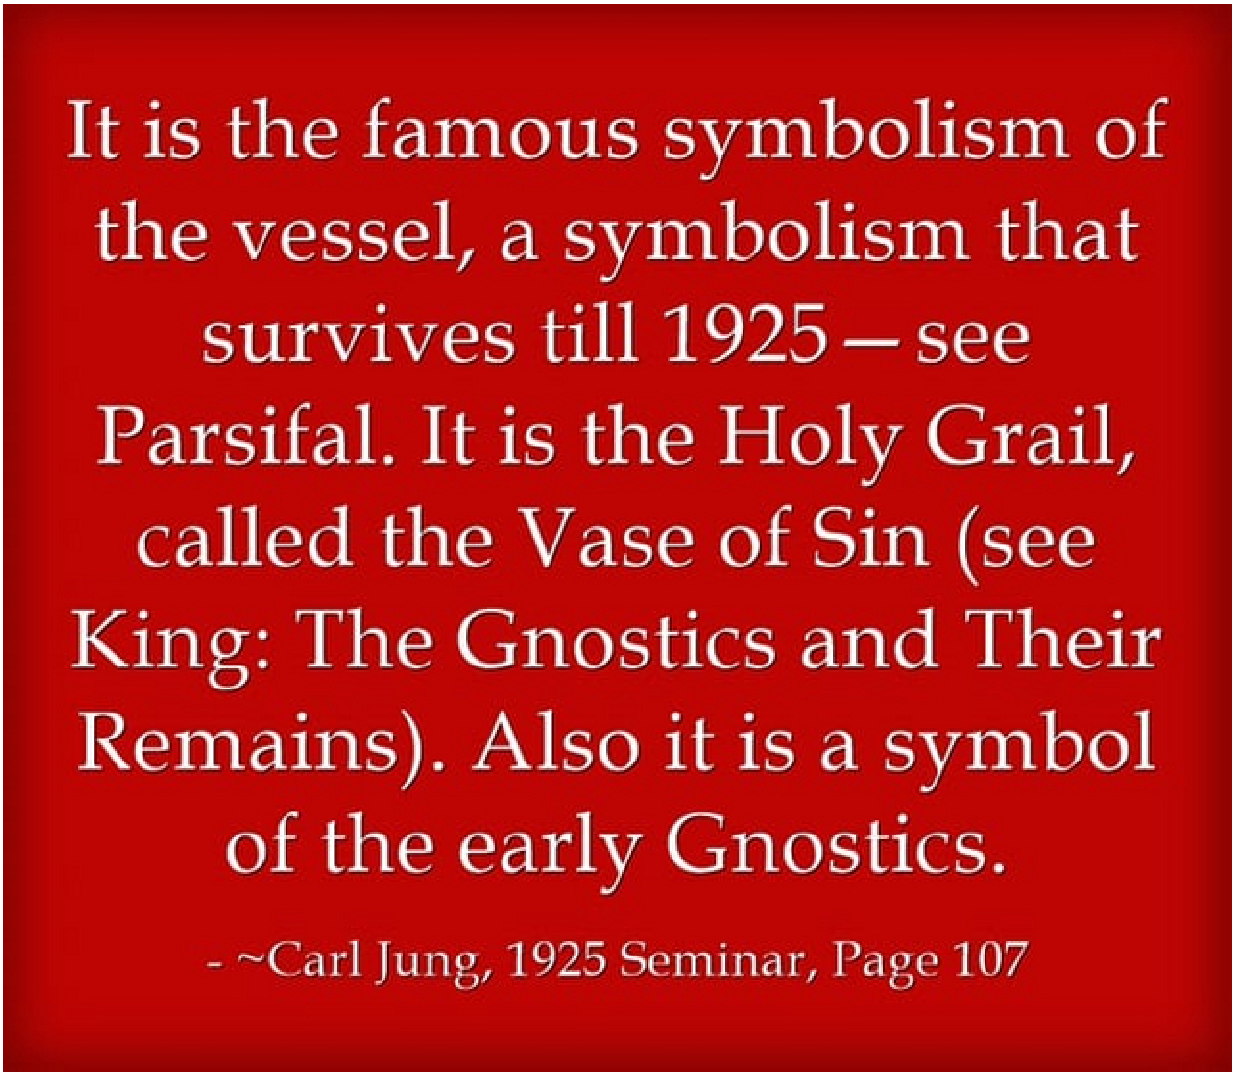
We went far up, and reached a cyclopean wall, boulders piled up in a great ring. I thought, “Ha, this is a Druidic sacred place.” We entered through an opening, and found ourselves in a large place, with a mound[ed] Druid altar.
Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104



The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake’s head resting on the man’s head, and the face of the man that of a lion.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104

The animal face which I felt mine transformed into was the famous [Deus] Leontocephalus of the Mithraic mysteries, the figure which is represented with a snake coiled around the man, the snake’s head resting on the man’s head, and the face of the man that of a lion. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 104



It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925 – see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains). Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 107

It is the famous symbolism of the vessel, a symbolism that survives till 1925—see Parsifal. It is the Holy Grail, called the Vase of Sin (see King: The Gnostics and Their Remains). Also it is a symbol of the early Gnostics. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 107

You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 108

You may remember that Cumont remarks that if something had happened to disrupt Christianity in the third century, the world would be Mithraic today. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 108

[22]

This picture is typical of masculine psychology:
consciousness above, sex below, nothing in the middle.

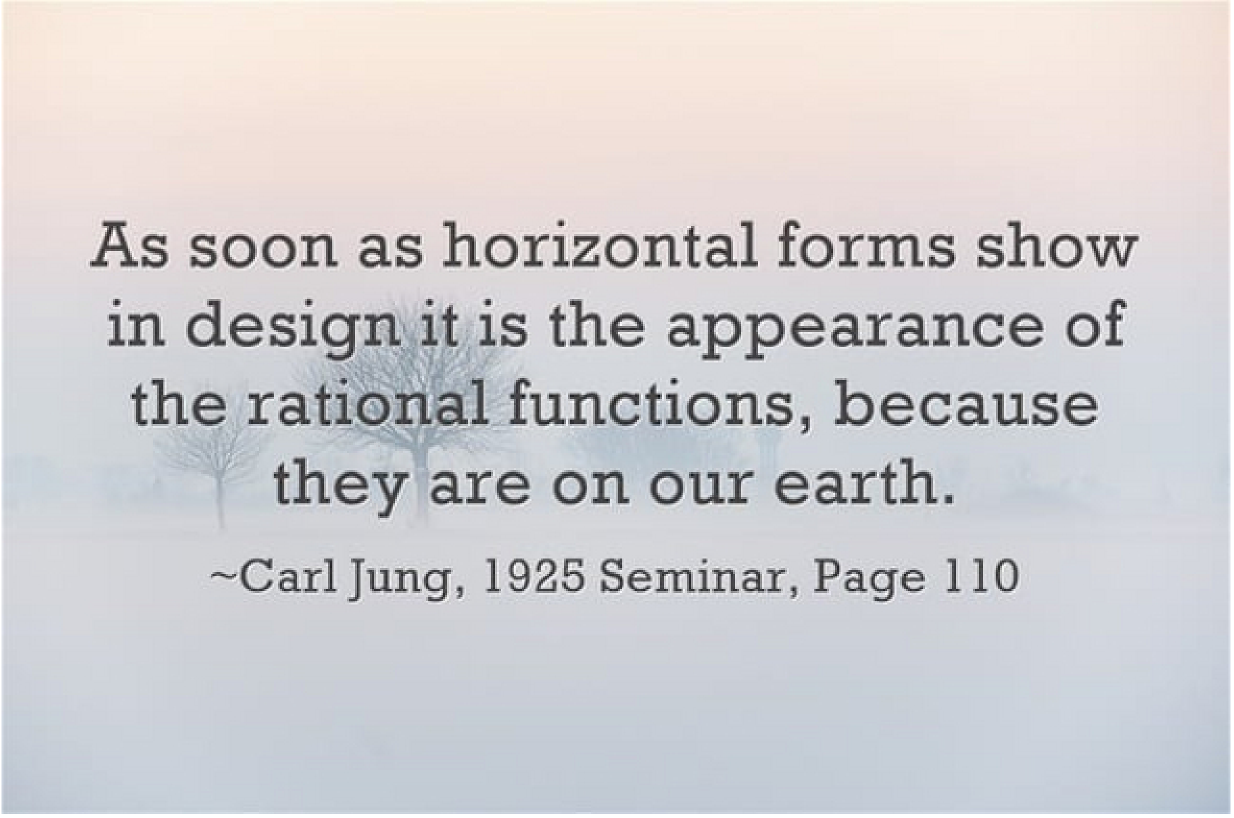
~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 109

This picture is typical of masculine psychology: consciousness above, sex below, nothing in the middle. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 109

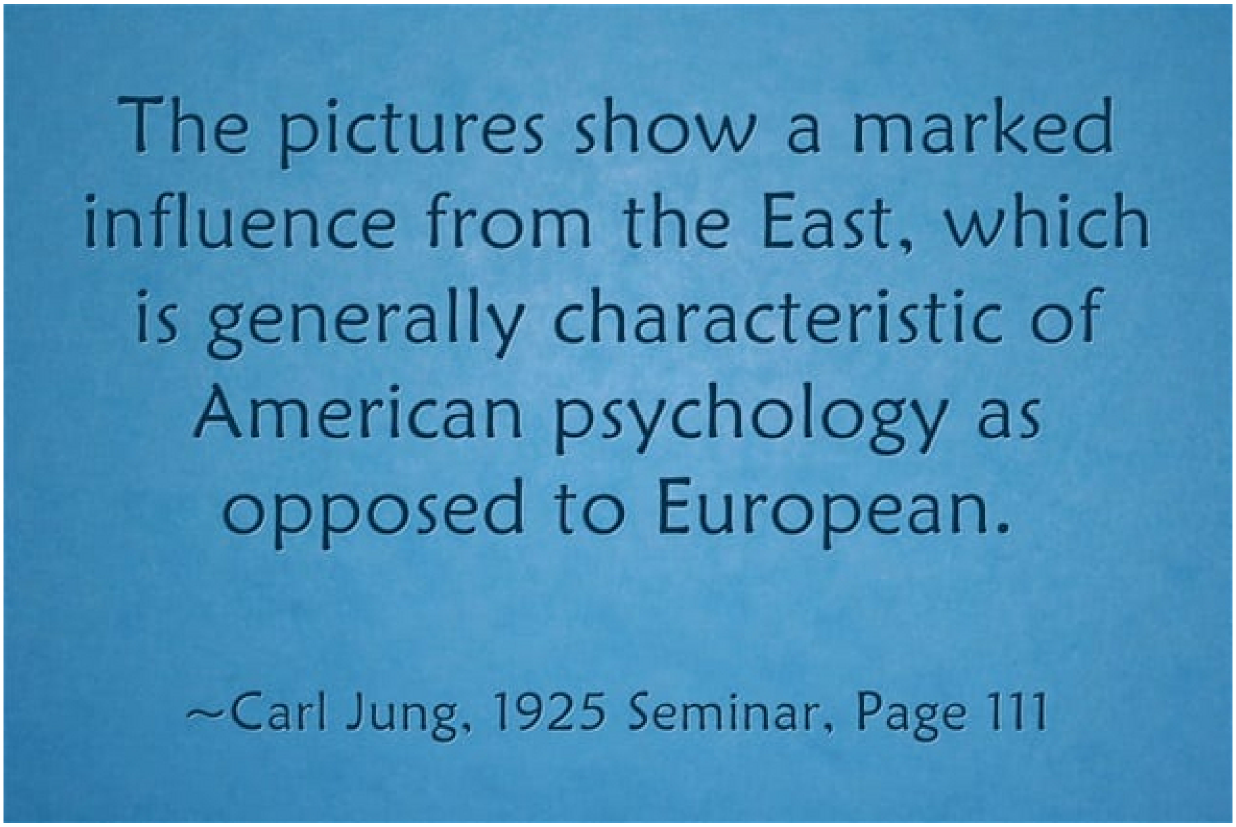
[23]



As soon as horizontal forms show in design it is the appearance of the rational functions, because they are on our earth.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 110

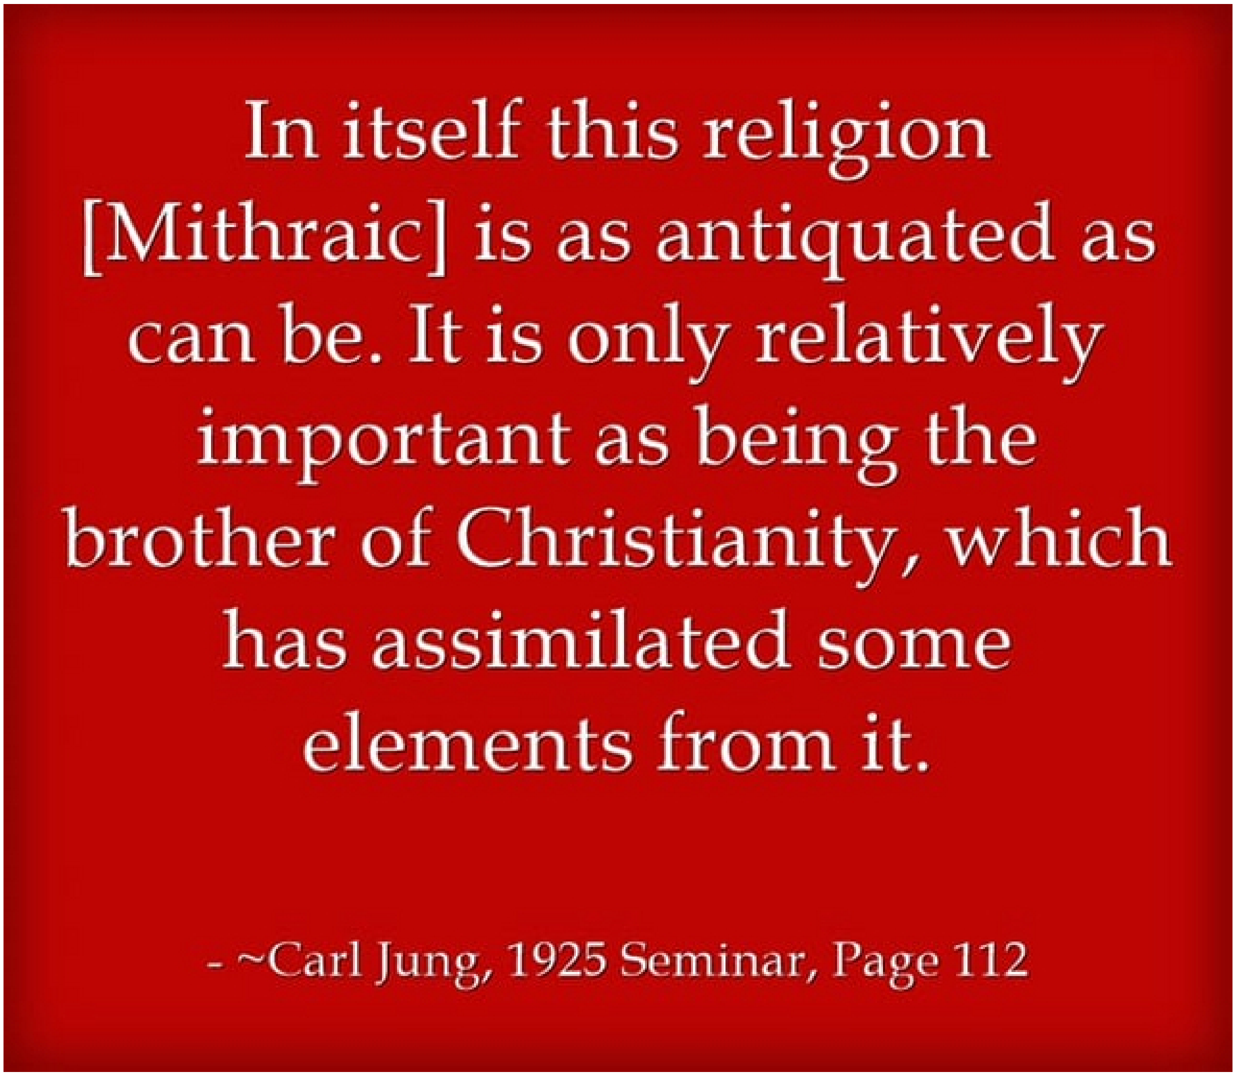
As soon as horizontal forms show in design it is the appearance of the rational functions, because they are on our earth. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 110



The pictures show a marked influence from the East, which is generally characteristic of American psychology as opposed to European.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 111

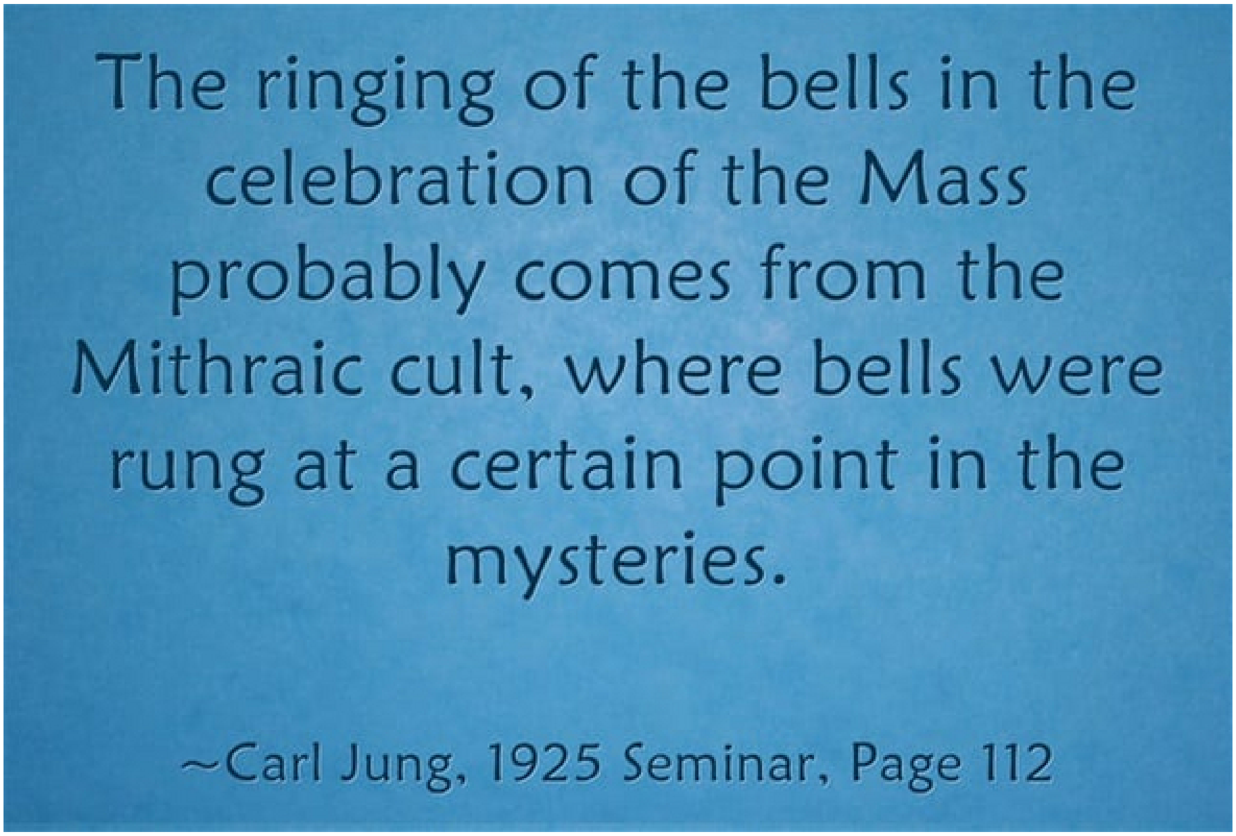
The pictures show a marked influence from the East, which is generally characteristic of American psychology as opposed to European. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 111



In itself this religion [Mithraic] is as antiquated as can be. It is only relatively important as being the brother of Christianity, which has assimilated some elements from it.

- ~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112

In itself this religion [Mithraic] is as antiquated as can be. It is only relatively important as being the brother of Christianity, which has assimilated some elements from it. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112



The ringing of the bells in the celebration of the Mass probably comes from the Mithraic cult, where bells were rung at a certain point in the mysteries.

~Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112

The ringing of the bells in the celebration of the Mass probably comes from the Mithraic cult, where bells were rung at a certain point in the mysteries. Carl Jung, 1925 Seminar, Page 112

Carl Jung across the web:

Blog: http: http://carljungdepthpsychology.blogspot.com/

Google+: https://plus.google.com/102529939687199578205/posts

Facebook: Group: https://www.facebook.com/groups/56536297291/

LinkedIn: https://www.linkedin.com/grp/home?gid=4861719 &sort=recent &trk=my _groups-tile-flipgrp

Facebook Page: https://www.facebook.com/Carl-Jung-326016020781946/

Pinterest: https://www.pinterest.com/purrington104/

Red Book: https://www.facebook.com/groups/792124710867966/

Scoop.It: http://www.scoop.it/u/maxwell-purrington

Twitter: https://twitter.com/MaxwellPurringt

WordPress: https://carljungdepthpsychology.wordpress.com/

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/b9c5d-aaa.jpg`
2. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/20b77-bbb.jpg`
3. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/0e114-ccc.jpg`
4. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/6cb75-ddd.jpg`
5. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/69f24-eee.jpg`
6. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/3f426-fff.jpg`
7. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/2c937-ggg.jpg`
8. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/71d10-hhh.jpg`
9. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/93710-iii.jpg`
10. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/03062-jjj.jpg`
11. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/88bb2-kkk.jpg`
12. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/82903-lll.jpg`
13. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/13b8e-mmm.jpg`
14. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d97ab-nnn.jpg`
15. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/51db5-ooo.jpg`
16. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/07470-ppp.jpg`
17. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/78d55-qqq.jpg`
18. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/822e6-rrr.jpg`
19. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/08a05-sss.jpg`
20. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/36a46-ttt.jpg`
21. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/f2f25-uuu.jpg`
22. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/97907-vvv.jpg`
23. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/35d68-www.jpg`
24. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/d8182-xxx.jpg`
25. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/2ec84-yyy.jpg`
26. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2015/12/8fe04-zzz.jpg`

The Soul is a Living and Self-Existing Being. (2019-12-30 05:44)

[1]

[2]The Red Book: A Reader's Edition (Philemon)

[The Soul is a Living and Self-Existing Being.]

"The spirit of the depths forced me to say this and at the same time to undergo it against myself since I had not expected it then.

I still labored misguidedly under the spirit of this time, and thought differently about the human soul.

I thought and spoke much of the soul.

I knew many learned words for her, I had judged her and turned her into a scientific object.

I did not consider that my soul cannot be the object of my judgment and knowledge; much more are my judgment and knowledge the objects of my soul.

Therefore the spirit of the depths forced me to speak to my soul, to call upon her as a living and self-existing being.

I had to become aware that I had lost my soul.

From this we learn how the spirit of the depths considers the soul: he sees her as a living and self-existing being, and with this he contradicts the spirit of this time for whom the soul is a thing dependent on man, which lets herself be judged and arranged, and whose circumference we can grasp.

I had to accept that what I had previously called my soul was not at all my soul, but a dead system.

Hence I had to speak to my soul as to something far off and unknown, which did not exist through me, but through whom I existed." Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 232.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/93df4-soul.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1CTA0ECDD45XF&keywords=jung+red+book+readers+edition&qid=1577717307&sprefix=jung+`

It is hard to believe that this teeming world is too poor to provide an object for human love

(2019-12-30 06:25)

[1]

[2]Symbols of Transformation (Collected Works of C.G. Jung Vol.5)

It is hard to believe that this teeming world is too poor to provide an object for human love - it offers boundless opportunities to everyone.

It is rather the inability to love which robs a person of these opportunities.

The world is empty only to him who does not know how to direct his libido towards things and people, and to render them alive and beautiful.

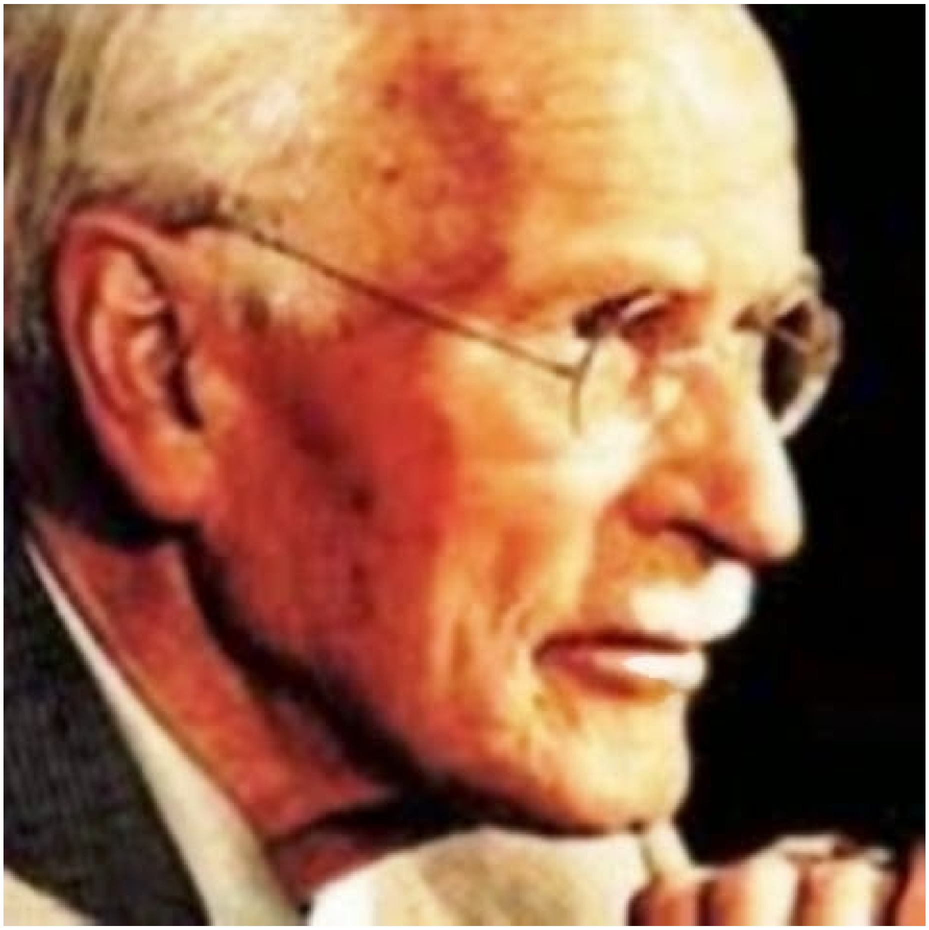
What compels us to create a substitute from within ourselves is not an external lack, but our own inability to include anything outside ourselves in our love.

Certainly the difficulties and adversities of the struggle for existence may oppress us, yet even the worst conditions need not hinder love; on the contrary, they often spur us on to greater efforts. - Symbols of Transformation (1952). CW 5: P.253

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2013/12/05426-eros.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Symbols-Transformation-Collected-Works-Vol-5/dp/0691018154/ref=sr_1_1?crid=1RUVNOXSY2VWO&keywords=carl+jung+symbols+of+transformation&qid`

Carl Jung on the “Loss of the Ego.” (2019-12-30 06:34)

[1]



[2]Children's Dreams: Notes from the Seminar Given in 1936-1940 (Philemon Foundation Series)

The fact that deity and devil belong together also plays a great role in alchemy.

There the devil appears in the form of the serpens Mercurii, which, however, is at the same time the serpent of the Nous.

For the Naassenes, too, the nachash, the serpent, is the Nous, or the Logos.

Psychologically speaking, the fact that the Logos at first manifests itself as a poisonous snake means that whenever a powerful content emerges from the unconscious, which we cannot yet grasp with our consciousness, there is a danger that the whole ego-consciousness will be pulled down into the unconscious and dissolved.

This introversion process can eventually lead to mental illness.

Consciousness is completely emptied, because its contents are attracted by the unconscious as by a magnet.

This process leads to a complete loss of the ego, so that the person in question becomes a mere automaton.

Such a person is actually no longer there.

He makes the impression of a piece of wood that lets itself be pushed around.

He has completely lost his initiative and spontaneity, because his consciousness has been dissolved by a content of the unconscious.

In the process of individuation, too, new contents can announce themselves in this devouring form and darken consciousness; this is experienced as a depression, that is to say, as being pulled downward.

As the unconscious has a tendency to project itself into the outer world, there is a danger that one might get dissipated in the environment, instead of staying with oneself.

That's why the alchemists stress again and again that the alchemical vessel has to remain hermetically closed during the opus.

If the lid springs open, vapor will escape and the process will be disrupted.

Only when we bear our situation and accept our depression will it be possible for us to change internally.

Then the devouring animal will be deprived of its power, and the new content can be grasped by consciousness. Carl Jung, Children's Dreams Seminar, Page 373.

1. https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2014/12/6a0b3-1.jpg
2. https://www.amazon.com/s?k=jung+children+dreams&crid=1HPTYN05PZYXX&sprefix=jung+child%2Caps%2C174&ref=nb_sb_ss_i_2_10

Thus your soul is your own self in the spiritual world (2019-12-30 06:46)

[1]

[2]The Red Book: A Reader’s Edition (Philemon)

But where is the God after his creation and after his separation from me? If you build a house, you see it standing in the outer world.

When you have created a God whom you cannot see with your own eyes, then he is in the spiritual world that is no less valuable than the outer physical world.

He is there and does everything for you and others that you would expect from a God.

Thus your soul is your own self in the spiritual world. As the abode of the spirits, however, the spiritual world is also an outer world.

Just as you are also not alone in the visible world, but are surrounded by objects that belong to you and obey only you, you also have thoughts that belong to you and obey only you.

But just as you are surrounded in the visible world by things and beings that neither belong to you nor obey you, you are also surrounded in the spiritual world by thoughts and beings of thought that neither obey you nor belong to you.

Just as you engender or bear your physical children, and just as they grow up and separate themselves from you to live their own fate, you also produce or give birth to beings of thought which separate themselves from you and live their own lives. Just as we leave our children when we grow old and give our body back to the earth,

I separate myself from my God, the sun, and sink into the emptiness of matter and obliterate the image of my child in me. This happens in that I accept the nature of matter and allow the force of my form to flow into emptiness. Just as I gave birth anew to the sick God through my engendering force, I henceforth animate the emptiness of matter from which the formation of evil grows.

Nature is playful and terrible. Some see the playful side and dally with it and let it sparkle.

Others see the horror and cover their heads and are more dead than alive.

The way does not lead between both, but embraces both. It is both cheerful play and cold horror. Carl Jung, The Red Book, Page 288.

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2012/12/18957-creation.jpg`
2. `https://www.amazon.com/Red-Book-Readers-Philemon/dp/0393089088/ref=sr_1_1?crid=KHI9VI7YKVBI&keywords=jung+red+book+readers+edition&qid=1577716978&sprefix=jung+r`

Wolfgang Pauli: Space and time were virtually turned by Newton into God's right hand ... (2019-12-31 03:30)

[1]

Dear Professor Jung, Zollikon-Zurich, 23 December 1947

In reply to your letter of 9 Dec., I should once again like to confirm in writing that I truly welcome your wish to found an institute with the objective of cultivating and promoting the field of research that you have inaugurated; and I give my consent to my name being on the list of sponsors.

The way your research and alchemy coincide is to me serious evidence that what is developing is indicative of a close fusion of psychology with the scientific experience of the processes in the material physical world.

It is probably a long journey, one we are only just setting out on, and it will especially entail, as a modifying factor, constant criticism of the space-time concept.

Space and time were virtually turned by Newton into God's right hand (oddly enough, the position made vacant when he expelled the Son of God from there), and it needed an extraordinary mental effort to bring time and space back down from these Olympian heights.

Going hand in hand with this, apparently, is the criticism of the basic idea of classical natural science, according to which it describes objective facts to such an extent that there is absolutely no link between them and the researcher (objectifiability of the phenomena independently of the way in which they are observed).

Modem micro physics turns the observer once again into a little lord of creation in his microcosm, with the ability (at least partially) of freedom of choice and fundamentally uncontrollable effects on that which is observed.

But if these phenomena are dependent on how (with what experimental system) they are observed, then is it not possible that there are also phenomena (extra corpus) that depend on who observes them (i.e., on the nature of the psyche of the observer)?

And if natural science, in pursuit of the ideal of determinism since Newton, has finally arrived at the stage of the fundamental "perhaps” of the statistical character of natural laws (what enantiodromia!), then should there not be enough room for all those oddities that ultimately

Rob the distinction between “physics” and “psyche” of all its meaning (as with the distinction between “physics” and “chemistry”)?

I hope that the continuation of the research you have inaugurated in this field will bring solutions to these problems, and thus I also hope for closer contact between this field of research and the natural sciences than has hitherto been the case.

It was a great pleasure to talk to you again, especially as at the moment my attention is focused strongly on the influence of the archetypal concepts (or, as you once said, the “instinct of imagination”) on scientific definitions.

For me, the best way to make something clear to myself has always been to announce a lecture or a speech on the subjects in questions; and with this in mind, I hope that one or two lectures on Kepler (as an example(in the Psychologcal Club will get me off to a good start.

I shall look further into the sources your were kind enough to give me. I hope that I can bring alive for the public the collision between the magic-alchemistic and the)new in the 17th century) scientific way of thinking (a collision that I believe recurs on a higher level in the unconscious of modern man).

Once again, many thanks and kind regards.

Yours truly,

sincerely, W. PAULI Wolfgang Pauli, Atom and Archetype, Pages 32-33

1. `https://carljungdepthpsychologysite.blog/wp-content/uploads/2016/12/02c92-12bpauli.jpg`

BLOGBOOKER

BlogBook v1.1,
LaTeX 2$_\varepsilon$ & GNU/Linux.
`https://www.blogbooker.com`

Edited: December 31, 2019